PREFACE

TO THE

SECOND VOLUME.

HAVING now accompliſhed this undertaking, and having completely gone over this DICTIONARY, the Editor deems it his duty to add to its uſefulneſs, by remarking,

I. That owing to ſeveral words of preciſely the ſame import being uſed in our tranſlation, it has happened, that their articles have occaſionally been inſerted under that letter of the alphabet which refers to the latter word, of two or more; the reader, therefore, will do well, when he wiſhes for information on a ſubject which he does not find under the word he firſt examines, to ſeek it 1. under another word of a ſimilar meaning; as for inſtance, ANOINT, ſee UNCTION: or 2. when the word is a privative, look under the original word; as, for UNLEAVENED ſee LEAVEN: or 3. when the ſound of the word may lead to a different vowel; as for OIL ſee OYL; for CHEMARIM ſee CHAMARIM: to aſſiſt in which, we ſubjoin a number of ſynonyms with references to the article under which information may be expected.

II. The early ſheets of this work being printed off before the inaccuracies of the former edition were fully known, they contain ſeveral errors in references to texts;—but ſince the firſt ſix or ſeven ſheets, every text has been referred to in the Bible itſelf; and will generally anſwer to our public tranſlation, except a very few which depend on readings of the Vulgate verſion.

III. We have exerted great diligence in our attention to the preſs, and many ſheets have been read ſix times, none leſs than five times, before they were printed off; nevertheleſs, in a work ſo long, and ſo multifarious, ſome errors muſt have eſcaped us, which we intreat the reader to excuſe, and to correct: thoſe which we have ourſelves diſcovered we have noticed in the following liſt.

IV. In the chronological dates CALMET has always marked the year of Chriſt four years earlier than the Vulgar Æra: we have carefully endeavoured to regulate theſe dates, in the DICTIONARY, to A. D. but if any place has eſcaped us, the Chronological Tables will eaſily determine the period intended.

V. The

V. The reader will conſider the inſertions between [ ] as not belonging to CALMET: they occaſionally correct his opinion, but much more frequently, are adapted to the opinions, and opportunities of Britiſh readers. We have alſo inſerted ſome intire articles, which we thought might be uſeful, and other ADDITIONS: the Editor's deference to the opinion of ſome of the greateſt ornaments of the church, who wiſhed that CALMET ſhould appear corrected, but not interpolated, withheld him from inſerting more; but his further thoughts on ſome articles may be ſeen in the additional (or ſecond) Volume of FRAGMENTS.

This alſo, is a proper place to ſay, that though this work is complete in three Volumes, two of the DICTIONARY, and one of FRAGMENTS, yet a ſecond Volume of FRAGMENTS is in a courſe of publication, and will, we hope, be completed by the cloſe of the year. It contains ſubjects intended for the former Volume, for the moſt part arranged in alphabetical order; with many original articles adapted to words which occur in our public tranſlation, and which, as it is probable they would have been inſerted in a SECOND EDITION, will demonſtrate our endeavours to render the preſent Edition as perfect as poſſible.

VI. Many of the FRAGMENTS being written, and delivered to the preſs, but not printed off, when thoſe articles in the Dictionary to which they refer, were publiſhed, it has proved impoſſible to mark their pages: this inconvenience the reader is deſired to correct, by means of the following liſt. The ſame remark applies to the Plates, many of which were publiſhed before their appropriate FRAGMENT; but, by means of the INDEX of PLATES, a black-lead pencil will eaſily ſupply this omiſſion.

We conclude by returning our grateful acknowledgements for the patronage we have received during the courſe of the work, for the opinions favourable, or corrective, with which we have been gratified, and for that ſteady attention which has intereſted itſelf on our behalf, among the liberal of all denominations. Theſe conſiderations will animate our further endeavours in proſecuting the ſame principles, and the ſame purpoſes: may thoſe purpoſes be fully anſwered in the promulgation of truth, in the ſpread of Scripture knowledge and of Chriſtian piety, to the laſting benefit of mankind, to the increaſe of genuine Religion, and to the honour and glory of its divine Author!

CALMET's

GREAT

HOLY BIBLE.

K.

THE letter K. anſwers to the Hebrew ק koph, and ſometimes to כ caph too. Many words which might be expected under K, may be ſought under C. according to their ſounds, independent of their mode of ſpelling.

KABZEEL, קבצאל, congregation of God; from קבצ kabatz, to aſſemble, and אל el, God.

KABZEEL, a city in the ſouthern part of Judah, Joſh. xv. 21.

KADESH, קדש, holy, or holineſs. Numb. xx. 22.

KADESH-BARNEA, קדש-ברנע, holineſs of the inconſtant ſon; from קדש kadeſh, בר bar, a ſon, and נע nuah, who moves about: otherwiſe, holineſs of the corn, or of purity, and בר bar, or ברר barar, pure, corn.

KADESH, or Kadeſh-barnea, otherwiſe the fountain of judgment. Gen. xiv. 7. At Kadeſh, Miriam died. Numb. xx. 1. Here Moſes and Aaron, diſtruſting God's power, when they ſmote the rock at the waters of ſtrife, were appointed to die, without the ſatisfaction of entering the promiſed land. Numb. xxvii. 14. The king of Kadeſh was killed by Joſhua. Joſh. xii. 22. This city was given to Judah, it was about eight leagues ſouth from Hebron.

It is, perhaps, the Cadytis, mentioned by Herodotus, lib. 2. chap. 5. whoſe ſituation he thus deſcribes. The country of the Syrians, called Paleſtine, reaches from Phœnicia to the mountains of Cadis. Now Cadis [or Cadytis,] is a city, in my opinion, not much leſs than Sardis. From Cadis, the trading places which lie upon the ſea, as far as the city Jenyſus, belong to Arabia: And from Jenyſus to the lake Sirbon, they again belong to Syria. Paleſtine extends therefore from Phœnicia, which ends about mount Carmel, to the mountains of Kadeſh-barnea, which lie ſouth, from Kadeſh to Jenyſus, (a place quite unknown to us) the maritime powers belong to the Arabians; and from Jenyſus to the lake Sirbon they again belong to the Paleſtines, or Syrians of Paleſtine. This ſeems to be pretty clear. Herodotus in another place, lib. 2. ſays, that Nechos king of Egypt, having attacked the Syrians at Magdolum, defeated them, and took Cadytis from them, which is a large city in Syria. Some believe that he means the battle between Necho and Joſiah king of Judah, who was wounded mortally. 2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30. that this battle was fought at Megiddo, which has ſome reſemblance to Magdolum, mentioned by Herodotus. Scaliger was of this opinion. Others have thought, that Cadytis ſignified Jeruſalem, called Cadyta or Cadyſcha, q. d. the holy city. But we do do not read expreſly in ſcripture, that Necho took this city, either before, or after his expedition to Carchemiſh. We were of opinion formerly, that the Cadys, of Herodotus, is Kadeſh or Kedeſh of Nephtali, in Upper-Galilee, which Necho might have taken after his victory over Joſiah at Megiddo, near the foot of mount Carmel. His road to Carchemiſh, upon the Euphrates, lay in the neighbourhood of Kedeſh of Nephtali.

[It is certain, notwithſtanding our author's aſſertion, and we are aſſured of it from ſcripture, that after the battle of Megiddo, Necho did take Jeruſalem; for he was there when he made Jehoiakim king. And although there is no mention of the name of Kadytis, in either the ſcriptures, or Joſephus, yet that it was ſo called by the Syrians and Arabians in Herodotus's time, appears from this; that by them and all the eaſtern nations, it is even to this day, called by no other name than one of the ſame original and ſignification. Jeruſalem is now a name as ſtrange to them, as Kadytis to us. They call it Al-kuds, which ſignifies the ſame as Kadytis, 'The Holy.' The inſcription on the Jewiſh ſhekels was Jeruſalem Keduſhah, whence the neighbouring nations for brevity ſake, called it Keduſhah, in the Syriac dialect Kedutha; whence Herodotus giving it a Greek termination, called it Kadytis. See Prid. Connect. &c. Part I. Book 1.] Vide FRAGMENT, No. LIV. page 102.

KADMIEL, קדמיאל, the antiquity of God; from קדם kedem, antiquity, and אל el, God: or the God of the eaſt, or God is my riſing, or eaſt.

KADMIEL, one of the children of Hodoviah, who returned from Babylon. Ezra ii. 40.

KADMONITES, קדמני, ancient, firſt men, orientals; from קדם kedem.

KADMONITES, i. e. eaſtern people, ancient inhabitants of the promiſed land, deſcended from Canaan ſon of Ham. Their habitation was beyond Jordan, eaſt of Phœnicia, about mount Libanus. The celebrated Cadmus, the founder of Thebes in Bœotia, has been conjectured to have been originally a Kadmonite, and his wife Hermione to have been named from mount Hermon. The Kadmonites were Hivites; the word Hivites is derived from a root which ſignifies a ſerpent. The fable ſays, that Cadmus ſowed ſerpent's teeth, and that from thence ſprung up armed men; becauſe he ſettled at Thebes, his Hivites, or Kadmonites, who were valiant and martial, [rather, the name of his tribe was ſerpent.]

KAIN, הקין, ἐνὲν, the name of a city. Joſh. xv. 57. Poſſeſſion; from קנה kanah, whence מקנה mikanah, purchaſe, enjoyment: otherwiſe, a neſt; from קנן kinen.

KAIN, father of the Kenites. Numb. xxvi. 22. See KENITES.

KALENDS, the firſt day of the month, according to the ſtyle of the Latins. [It was a cuſtom among the Romans, for the high-prieſts to call together the people on the day of the calends, (from whence the name of Calends a calando plebem,) and inſtruct them in the divine duties which they were to perform that month. Macrob. 1. Saturnal.] The Greeks had no kalends; hence proverbially and illuſively people are referred—to the Greek kalends; i. e. to an unknown and uncertain time. The Hebrews obſerved particular ceremonies on the firſt day of every month. See Neomenia, which is analagous in Greek to Kalends.

KALLAI, קלי, καλλαι, a man's name, Nehem. xii. 20. To be nimble; from קלל kalal: otherwiſe, roaſted; from קלה kalah: otherwiſe, my voice; from קול kol, a voice, and the pronoun י i, my.

KANNA, or Canna, ſee CALAMUS.

KAPHARSALAMA, Καφαρσαραμὰ, a city, 1 Macc. vii. 31. Field, or city of peace; from כפר caphar, and שלם ſhalom, peace.

KAPHELETHA, Καφενατθὰ, the name of a wall. The hand of the gift; from כף caphaph, the hand, and נתן nathan, a gift. This name is not Hebrew.

KARAITES, a ſect of the Jews, who adhere to the literal ſenſe of ſcripture. See CARAITES.

KARKAA, קרקעה, to cover, or covering againſt the cold; from קרם karam, covering, and קרח karach, cold: otherwiſe, a beam; from יקע jakah, to ſuſpend.

KARKAA, a town on the confines of the tribe of Judah, ſouthward. Joſh. xv. 3. Euſebius places a caſtle called Carcaria, at the diſtance of a day's journey from Petra.

KARNION, Καρνίον, 2 Macc. xii. 21. The horn, from קרן keren: perhaps, the ſame as Carnaim.

KARTAH, קרתה, a city, Joſh. xxi. 34. City; from the word קרת kereth: or occaſion, lecture, leſſon, meeting; from קרא kara, to call, to read.

KARTAN, קרתן, a city, Joſh. xxi. 32. city, vocation, &c. ſee Kartah: otherwiſe, which cauſes cold; from קרר karar, cold.

KASBON, Κασφὼν, a city, 1 Macc. v. 36. The ſame as Heſhbon.

KASIB or Kaſbi, a city of Judah. Gen. xxxviii. 5. See CASBI.

KEDAR, קדר, blackneſs, or ſorrow. Iſa. xvi. 7.

KEDAR, the ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 13. the father of the Kedarenians, mentioned by Pliny, who dwelt in the neighbourhood of the Nabathœans in Arabia Deſerta. Theſe people living in in tents, we cannot ſhew the place of their habitation, becauſe they often change it.

Arabia-Deſerta is ſometimes called in ſcripture Kedar; but the Kedarenians dwelt principally in the ſouth of Arabia-Deſerta, or the north of Arabia-Petræa: There were ſome, as far as the Red Sea. Cant. i. 5. Jerem. xlii. 11.

KEDEM. קדם, an Hebrew word, which is generally tranſlated Eaſt. It is ſaid, Gen. xi. 1, 2. the ſons of Noah—departed from the Eaſt, and came into the land of Shinar. Here difficulties have been raiſed; for the land of Shinar is not weſt of Armenia, where the ark reſted, and Armenia is not eaſt of the land of Shinar; i. e. Babylonia. On the contrary, we are ſure it is north of that country. To diſengage theſe perplexities, interpreters have imagined different explanations of this paſſage.

Some by Kedem have underſtood the country afterwards peopled by Kedemah, the youngeſt ſon of Iſhmael: Capellus apud Boch. Phaleg. lib 1. cap. 7. Others, the beginning; and that Moſes intended to note the time, at which, after the deluge, men ſpread themſelves in different countries. Others, Bochart. loc cit. that Moſes ſpoke according to the cuſtom of the Aſſyrians, who called their provinces beyond the Tigris, Kedem or Eaſt; and thoſe on this ſide that river, Arab or Weſt. Druſius, inſtead of they departed from the Eaſt, tranſlates, they departed eaſtward: [and this ſeems to be the import of the paſſage by the uſe of the word Kedem in other places, as Gen. ii. 8. a garden in Eden eaſtward—and thus the idolatrous Jews are deſcribed, Ezek. viii. 16. with their backs toward the temple of the Lord, and their faces toward the eaſt, worſhipping the ſolar light towards the eaſt, i. e. the riſing ſun: as the Gaurs, or Gabres, in Perſia and India do to this day. Nevertheleſs, this is not the only ſenſe in which Kedem may be taken.]

It appears from many places in the Old, and in the New Teſtament, that the ſacred writers called the provinces beyond the Tigris and Euphrates, (Meſopotamia, Armenia, and Perſia,) Kedem, or the Eaſt. Moſes, who was educated in Egypt, and lived long in Arabia, might probably follow this cuſtom. Eſpecially as Babylonia, Chaldæa, Suſiana, Perſia, much of Meſopotamia, and the rivers of Euphrates and Tigris, are for the greateſt part of their courſe eaſt of Paleſtine, Egypt, and Arabia.

Beſide this, as thoſe who came from Armenia, Syria, Media, and Upper Meſopotamia, entered Paleſtine and Egypt on the eaſt ſide, it was ſufficient for the Hebrews to ſay, that theſe people lay eaſt of them. Laſtly, theſe countries were known among the Hebrews under the name of eaſt, as appears by the following paſſages. Numb. xxiii. 7. Balaam ſays, Balak king of Moab had brought him from the mountains of the Eaſt; i. e. from Pethor upon the Euphrates. Iſaiah ſays, xli. 2. that Abraham came from the Eaſt into the land of Canaan: We know he came from Meſopotamia and Chaldæa. The ſame prophet ſays, xlvi. 11. that Cyrus ſhould come from the Eaſt againſt Babylon Chap. ix. 12. he places Syria eaſt of Judæa. Daniel ſays, xi. 44. Antiochus ſhould be troubled with the news which he ſhould receive of the revolt of the Eaſtern provinces; i. e. the provinces on the other ſide of the Euphrates. St. Matthew ſays, that the wiſe men who came to worſhip Jeſus, came from the Eaſt. Matt. ii. 1.

All this confirms the opinion, that in the ſcripture ſtyle, the Eaſt is often uſed for the provinces which lie eaſterly though perhaps inclining to the north of Judæa and Egypt. [And thus thoſe who worſhipped the riſing ſun muſt in ſome part of his courſe, i. e. in Midſummer, have ſeen him riſe conſiderably to the north of the eaſt: while yet nobody would ſcruple to ſay he roſe in the eaſt, or eaſtward: which ſtrengthens this idea.]

KEDEMAH, קדמה, or Kedem, oriental; from קדם kedem, the Eaſt.

KEDEMAH, Iſhmael's youngeſt ſon, who dwelt, as did his brethren, eaſt of the mountains of Gilead. Gen. xxv. 15. The town of Kedemoth might at firſt, perhaps, belong to his deſcendants. But we cannot conſider him as father of the Kadmonites or Kedmonites, Gen. xv. 19. For theſe were ancient inhabitants of Canaan, and already powerful in the time of Abraham.

KEDEMOTH, קדמות, antiquity, old age; from קדם kedem: otherwiſe, orientals; from קדמים kademim.

KEDEMOTH, a town of Reuben, eaſt of the brook Arnon, Joſh. xiii. 18. One of the ſtations of the Hebrews in the wilderneſs, Deut. ii. 26. given to the ſons of Merari, the Levite, 1 Chron. vi. 79.

KEDESH, קדש, holineſs. See Kadeſh.

KEDESH NEPHTALI. Joſephus calls it Cadeſa or Cædeſa, and the Greek of Tobit, i. 2. Cadis: It lay in Upper Galilee above Naaſſon, having Sephet to the left, or north. Kedeſh was given to Nephtali, and afterwards ceded Joſh. xix. 37. to the Levites of Gerſham's family; it was a city of refuge, Joſh. xx. 7.

KEHELATHAH, קהלתה, μανελλαὼθ, aſſembly; from קהל kahal, to aſſemble.

KEHELATHAH, an incampment of Iſrael in the wilderneſs; Numb. xxxiii. 22. probably the ſame as Keilah, a town ſouth in Judah.

KEILAH, קעילה, ſhe that divides or cuts.

KEILAH, a town of Judah, Joſh. xv. 44. Euſebius places it ſeventeen miles from Eleutheropolis, on the ſide of Hebron: St. Jerom makes it only eight miles from Hebron. It is ſaid that the prophet Habbakuk's tomb was ſhewn there. Sozomen. Hiſt. lib. 8. cap. 29.

KELAIAH, קליה, κωλία, the voice of the Lord; from קול kol, a voice, and יה jah, the Lord; otherwiſe, lightneſs of the Lord, from קלל kalal.

KELITAH, קליטה, κωλίτας, refuge, or retired; from קלט kalat: otherwiſe, voice that declines; from קול kol, a voice, and נטה natah, to incline.

KELITAH or Kelaiah, a Levite. Ezra x. 23.

KEMUEL, קמואל, God is riſen; from קום kum, to ariſe, and אל el, God: otherwiſe, God has raiſed him.

KEMUEL, third ſon of Nahor, the father of the Syrians; rather, of Aram. Gen. xxii. 21. He had a ſon, who was ſurnamed the Syrian or Aramite; for the Syrians were derived from Aram, a ſon of Shem. Kemuel may have given name to the Kamilites, a people of Syria lying weſt of the Euphrates. Strabo lib. 16.

KEMUEL, ſon of Shiphtan of Ephraim, a deputy appointed to make a partition of the promiſed land. Numb. xxxiv. 24.

KENATH, קנת, purchaſe, poſſeſſion; from קנה kanah: or lamentation; from קון kun.

KENATH, a town of Manaſſeh, beyond Jordan. Numb. xxxii. 42. It was named Nobah, after Nobah an Iſraelite had conquered it. Nevertheleſs, it is now known by the name of Kenath. Euſebius ſays, it is in the Trachonitis, about Bozra. Pliny places it in the Decapolis, lib. 5. cap. 18.

KENAZ, קנז, this neſt; from קנן kinan, to make a neſt, and the pronoun זו ze, this: otherwiſe, this lamentation, this poſſeſſion, this purchaſe.

KENAZ, father of Othniel and Caleb. Joſh. xv. 17. Judg. i. 13.—iii. 9, &c.

KENAZ, fourth ſon of Eliphaz, the ſon of Eſau. One of the dukes, or chiefs, of Edom. Gen. xxxvi. 15.

KENITES, קני, poſſeſſion, or purchaſe, or lamentation, or neſt; from קנה kanah, or ken, or kun.

KENITES, people who dwelt weſt of the Dead-Sea, and extended themſelves pretty far into Arabia Petræa; Jethro, Moſes's father-in-law, and a prieſt of Midian, was a Kenite; and in Saul's time the Kenites were mingled with the Amalekites. 1 Sam. xv. 6. Although the Kenites were among thoſe people, whoſe lands God had promiſed to the deſcendants of Abraham, nevertheleſs, in conſideration of Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes, all of them who ſubmitted to the Hebrews, were ſuffered to live in their own country: The reſt fled, in all probability, to the Edomites and Amalekites. The lands of the Kenites were in Judah's lot.

Balaam when invited by Balak king of Moab, to curſe Iſrael, he ſtood on a mountain, from whence addreſſing himſelf to the Kenites, he ſaid, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou putteſt thy neſt in a rock; nevertheleſs the Kenite ſhall be waſted, until Aſhur ſhall carry thee away captive. Numb. xxiv. 21. The Kenites dwelt in mountains and rocks, almoſt inacceſſible. Ken ſignifies a neſt, a hole, a cave; and Kinnim, in Greek, may be tranſlated Troglodytes: (or Cave-ites.) The Kenites were conquered and carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar. After Saul the Kenites are not mentioned; but they ſubſiſted, being mingled among the Edomites, and other nations of Arabia-Petræa. We have elſewhere ſpoken of Heber the Kenite.

KENIZZITES, ancient people of Canaan, whoſe land God promiſed to the deſcendants of Abraham. Gen. xv. 19. It is believed they dwelt in the mountains ſouth of Judæa. Kenaz, the ſon of Eliphaz, probably took his name from the Kenizzites, among whom he ſettled.

KEPHA, Kaipha or Keipha, or Hepha, a town at the foot of mount Carmel, on the north, oppoſite Ptolemais, likewiſe called Sycaminon, the city of wild fig-trees. See SYCAMINON.

KEREM, חרם, Anathema. See Cherem.

KERIOTH, קריות, πόλεις, a city, Joſh. xv. 25. The cities, the callings. See Kiriath.

KEROS, קרוס, κορὲς, who is bent, or made low; from קרס karas: otherwiſe, buckle, or hook, Keres; from the ſame word, differently read.

KEROS, a Nethinim. Ezra xi. 44.

KESITAH. This word occurs Geneſis xxxiii. 19. LXX. Εκατὸν ἀμνῶν. Vulg. centum Agnis. Joſh. xxiv. 13. and in Job xli. 11. Unus quiſque ovem unam, and is tranſlated, each brought to Job—ſheep, or lambs: implying that Jacob bought the field, where he had ſet up his tents, for the price of an hundred lambs; and every one of Job's friends and relations, after his recovery, made him a preſent of a lamb or young ewe. But the rabbins and modern interpreters are generally of opinion, that Keſitah ſignifies rather a piece of money; for to give ſuch a man as Job a young ewe, ſeems to be a preſent unworthy of the generoſity of his friends and relations, and no way ſuitable ſuitable to his wants, or to his and their quality. But may we not make the ſame objection, if we admit that Keſitah ſignifies a piece of money? Unleſs it was of gold, and of conſiderable value; for ſome make it very ſmall. David Kimchi explains Keſitah by מצה, which ſignifies no more than the Hebrew Gerah, worth an Obolos, or a little more in value than a penny and half-penny. The Hebrews had no piece of money ſmaller than the Gerah, which in the Chaldee is tranſlated Mehah. 1 Sam. xi. 37. Bochart and Eugubinus ſuppoſed that the LXX meant Minæ, not lambs; in Greek hecaton mnôn, inſtead of hecaton amnôn: Now a Mina was worth ſixty Hebrew ſhekels, or 6l. 17s. ſterling. [Or nine pounds Engliſh, ſuppoſing, as Dr. Prideaux does, that a ſhekel is worth three ſhillings.] M. Le Pelletier of Roan, is of opinion, that the Keſitah was a Perſian coin, ſtamped on one ſide with an archer, (Keſitah or Keſeth, in Hebrew ſignifies a bow) on the other with a lamb; i. e. a daric, in value about half a guinea. [A Daric is a piece of gold worth, as Dr. Prideaux ſays, five and twenty ſhillings Engliſh. Connect. part I. p. 101.] Several learned men, ſay it was a ſilver coin, whoſe impreſſion was a ſheep; for which reaſon the LXX. and Vulgate tranſlate it by this name. It is our opinion, that Keſitah was a purſe of gold or ſilver. In the eaſt they reckon at preſent by purſes. A purſe in Perſia conſiſts of fifty Tomans, which make 2518 penny pieces of French money. The word Kiſta, in Chaldee, ſignifies a meaſure, a veſſel. And Euſtathius ſays, that Kiſta is a Perſian meaſure. Jonathan and the Targum of Jeruſalem tranſlate Keſitah, a pearl.

KETURAH, קטורה, he that burns, or makes the incenſe to fume; from קתר kathar: otherwiſe, perfumed, or odoriferous: otherwiſe, to bind; from the ſame. Gen. xxv. 1, 2.

KETURAH, Abraham's ſecond wife. The Jews ſay, that Keturah and Hagar, whom Abraham after the death of Sarah invited again to his houſe, are the ſame: Others think, ſhe was a Canaanite. But we know nothing of the matter. It ſurprizes ſome, that Abraham aged an hundred and forty years, ſhould marry a wife, perhaps a Canaanite, and have children by her. Some ſay, as Auſtin, that God miraculouſly prolonged his prolifick virtue, in order to his begetting Iſaac. Others, that he married Keturah long before Sarah's death, and that he kept her in the quality of a wife of the ſecond rank, till after Sarah's death; and then, gave her the rank and quality of matron and wife of the firſt order; that he had children by her, a little after the birth of Iſaac, and the expulſion of Hagar: her ſons are Zimran, Jokſhan, Medan, Midian, Iſhbak, and Shuah. Abraham gave preſents to theſe, and ſent them eaſt in Arabia Deſerta.

KEY. Is frequently mentioned in ſcripture, as well in a natural, as in a figurative ſenſe. The keys of the ancients were very different from ours; becauſe their doors and trunks were cloſed generally with bands, and the key ſerved only to looſen or faſten theſe bands in a certain manner. The keys uſed in the eaſt are very unlike ours. Chardin ſays, that a lock in the eaſt is like a little harrow, which enters half way into a wooden ſtaple, and the key is a wooden handle with points at the end of it, which are puſhed into the ſtaple, and ſo raiſe this little harrow. See likewiſe Dandini's voyage to mount Libanus, chap. 14.

KEY in a moral ſenſe has many ſignifications. Iſai. xxii. 22. And the key of the houſe of David will I lay upon his ſhoulders: He ſhall open and none ſhall ſhut; he ſhall ſhut and none ſhall open. He ſhall be grand maſter and principal officer of his prince's houſe. Jeſus Chriſt gives St. Peter authority in his church, Matth. xvi. 19. the key of the kingdom of heaven, the power of binding and looſing, i. e. of opening and ſhutting; for this frequently conſiſted only, as we have ſaid, in tying and untying. Iſaiah remarks, that Eliakim ſhould wear his key upon his ſhoulder, as a mark of diſtinction. Theſe keys were of wood, and pretty long and large, as they are at preſent in the eaſt. Callimachus ſays, that Ceres carried a key upon her ſhoulder.

[This cuſtom of carrying keys upon ſhoulders is very ſtrange to us. The ancients had their keys made very large, and in the form of a ſickle, and the weight and ſhape of them was ſuch, that they could no otherwiſe be carried conveniently, but as we ſee our reapers carry their ſickles. Homer having ſaid, that Penelope took ſeveral things out of her ſtore-room, adds,

Ἔιλετο ταὶ κληῖδ' ευκαμπὲα χειρὶ παχείη,
Καλευ, χαλκείευ. Κώπη δ' ἐλέφαντ@ ἐπῆεν.
ODYSS. 21.

Whereby he ſeems to repreſent, that it required ſome ſtrength to lift up. For the ſame reaſon therefore they were called Καλωμαδία. See Huet. Demonſtr. Evang. Prop. ix. cap. cv.

Jeſus Chriſt reproaches the ſcribes and phariſees with having taken away the key of knowledge; i. e. with reading and ſtudying the ſcriptures, without advantage to themſelves, and without diſcovering to others the truth, which in ſome ſort they held captive in unrighteouſneſs. Rom. i. 18.

Jeſus

Jeſus Chriſt Rev. i. 18. ſays, that he has the key of death and hell, i. e. it is in his power to bring to the grave, or, to deliver from it; to appoint to life or to death. The rabbins ſay, that God hath reſerved to himſelf four keys, with which he hath entruſted no one, not even the angels; the key of rain, the key of the grave, the key of fruitfulneſs, and the key of barrenneſs.

KEZIA, קציעה, ſuperficies, or angle; from קצע katſah: otherwiſe, caſſia, an aromatick plant, or kind of perfume, different from what is called כדה kidda, or kadda, Exod. xxx. 24.

KEZIA, the ſecond daughter of Job after his misfortunes, Job xlii. 14.

KEZIZ, קציץ, end, extremity; otherwiſe, to cant off; from קץ kutz, or קצה katzah, or קצץ katzaiz, to cut off the extremities.

KIBERATH-HAARETZ, Geneſis xxxv. 16.—xlviii. 7. 2 Kings v. 19. St. Jerom in two ſeveral paſſages tranſlates it—ſpring, verno tempore; and in the third, the fineſt ſeaſon in the year, electo terræ tempore. The LXX keep to the Hebrew word Chaphrata, and join it with Hippodromus, intending perhaps to ſhew, that Kiberath Haaretz was the ſpace which a horſe run in the Hippodrom, i. e. two furlongs or three hundred paces. Aquila tranſlates it along the ways; others, Chald. Syr. Vatab. an arm of land; others, the way which a man might go from meal to meal. It is our opinion, that Kiberath comes from the Hebrew, Kerab, or Kabar, to plough; and that Kiberath-Haaretz ſignifies a ridge of land, or the length of a piece of ground which two oxen might plough in a day, about half an acre. Jugum vocabatur, ſays Pliny, quod uno jugo boum in die arari poſſet. Actus, in quo boves aguntur cum aratro, uno impetu juſto. Hic erat cxx pedum; duplicatuſque in longitudine jugegerum faciebat. Compare Columella. lib. 5. cap. 1. Iſidor. Origin. lib. 15. cap. 15. See likewiſe 1 Sam. xiv. 14, where it is ſaid, that Jonathan and his armour-bearer killed twenty-men, within as it were half an acre of land, which a yoke of oxen might plough.

KIBEROTH-AVAH or Kiberoth-hattaavah, the graves of luſt. Numbers xi. 34, 35. Heb. קברות התאוה. One of the incampments of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, where they deſired of God fleſh for their ſuſtenance, declaring they were tired with manna, God ſent them quails in great quantities, but while the meat was in their mouths, Pſal. lxxviii. 30. God ſmote ſo great a number of them, that the place from thence was called the graves of luſt.

KIDRON, the brook Kidron, in the valley eaſt of Jeruſalem, between the city and the mount of Olives, diſcharges itſelf into the Dead Sea. It has generally but little water, and often none. But after ſtorms, or great rains, it ſwells exceedingly, and runs with much impetuoſity. Some ſuppoſe the name Cedron, or Kidron, came from the abundance of cedars which ſay they were formerly planted on its banks: but there is no proof of this; the name is derived rather from the obſcurity of this brook, which runs in a deep vale; or from the common ſewers of the city which empty themſelves into it. For on the branch of the valley of Kidron, i. e. the ſouthern, was the ſink of Jeruſalem: The kings Aſa, Hezekiah, and Joſiah burnt there the idols and abominations of the apoſtate Jews. 2 Kings xxiii. 4.

KIKAJON. Jonah iv. 6. St. Jerom tranſlate Hedera, Ivy. The LXX. Gourd. Aquila, Ivy. Jerom confeſſes, that ivy does not anſwer the Hebrew Kikajon; but as he could not find Latin words proper to it, he choſe rather to uſe Hedera, than to leave Kikajon, which might be taken for a monſtrous animal in the Indies, or mountains of Bœotia. His account of Kikajon is this. It is a ſhrub which grows in the ſandy places of Paleſtine, and encreaſes ſo ſuddenly, that within few days it comes to a conſiderable height. The leaves of it are large, and almoſt like thoſe of the vine. It is ſupported by its trunk, without being upheld by any thing elſe, and furniſhes a very agreeable ſhade under the thickneſs of its leaves.

Modern interpreters almoſt all agree, that the Hebrew Kikajon ſignifies the Palma Chriſti, or Ricinus, in Egypt called Kiki, in Greek, Selicyprion. It is a plant like a lilly, the leaves ſmooth, ſcattered here and there, and ſpotted with black ſpots: the ſtem round and gloſſy: It produces flowers of divers colours. Dioſcorides ſays, that one ſort of it grows large like a tree, and as high as a fig-tree. The leaves of it are like thoſe of the plum-tree, though broader, ſmoother and blacker. The branches and trunk of it are hollow like a reed. Jonah in all probability ſpeaks of this laſt ſpecies. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. LXXVIII. page 135.

St. Auſtin relates, that an African biſhop appointing St. Jerom's tranſlation to be read to his people, in the congregation all who were preſent were offended, when they heard an Ivy named inſtead inſtead of a Gourd, which they were uſed to hear; that they found it neceſſary to refer themſelves hereupon to the Jews reſiding in the city, who out of malice or ignorance declared, that the Hebrew ſignified a Gourd: So that the biſhop, to appeaſe his people, and prevent their leaving his communion, was forced to ſay, that St. Jerom's tranſlation was faulty in this place.

KIN or KAIN, קין, κωνία, the father of the Kenites, Numb. xxiv. 22. Poſſeſſion, purchaſe; from קנה kanah: otherwiſe, neſt; from קנן kinen: otherwiſe, lamentation; from קון kun.

KINAH, a town of Judah, Joſh. xv. 22.

KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, an expreſſion uſed in the New Teſtament, to ſignify the kingdom of Jeſus Chriſt, the calling of his people to the faith, the preaching of the goſpel. The old prophets, when deſcribing the characters of the Meſſiah, ſcarce ever failed of inſerting the name of king and deliverer; and when they ſpoke of his humiliations and ſufferings, they interſperſed ſome touches which ſhewed his power, his reign, his divinity. As Zachary foretelling Jeſus Chriſt's entry at Jeruſalem: Behold, thy king cometh unto thee. He is juſt and having ſalvation, lowly and riding upon an aſs, and upon a colt the foal of an aſs. The Jews and the apoſtles, accuſtomed to theſe ways of ſpeaking, expected the kingdom of the Meſſiah, to reſemble that of a temporal king, exerciſing power on his enemies, making conqueſts, reſtoring the monarchy of the Jews, and the throne of David to all its ſplendor, ſubduing the nations, and rewarding his friends and faithful ſervants, in proportion to their fidelity and ſervices. Hence the apoſtles had ſo often conteſts about precedency in this kingdom; and the ſons of Zebedee deſired the two chief places in it; and Jeſus Chriſt to prove that he was the true Meſſiah, declared often, that the kingdom of heaven was come, or was at hand; and when he ſpoke of what was to happen after his reſurrection, that ſuch a thing would be ſeen in the kingdom of heaven. He frequently began his parables, "The kingdom of heaven is like unto—a rich man, a father of a family, a treaſure, &c."

We therefore may obſerve ſeveral acceptations of this phraſe—the kingdom of heaven.

1. For the coming of the Son of God, for his temporal birth, his preaching, his manifeſtation to the world. As Luke xi. 20. If I with the finger of God caſt out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come upon you. Matthew ſays, that Jeſus Chriſt went about all the cities and villages preaching the goſpel of the kingdom.

2. To ſhew the vengeance which God was to exerciſe on the incredulous Jews, and which accordingly he did exerciſe after the death of our Saviour, on Jeruſalem, by the Roman arms, which deſtroyed that city and the temple, and committed ſuch cruelties, as occaſioned the laſt ſiege of it to be looked upon, as one of the moſt lively images of the final judgment. In this ſenſe the kingdom of heaven is taken, Matth. iii. 2. Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. See likewiſe the parable of the ten virgins, Mat. xxv. 1, 2, 3. and that of the ſervants with whom the father of the family left a certain number of talents to be improved by them. Matt. xxv. 23, 24, &c. The fooliſh virgins excluded from the wedding, and the unprofitable ſervant caſt into a dungeon, denote the incredulous Jews forſaken by God, and given up to the vengeance of their enemies.

3. For eternal bliſs; He who doth the will of the father which is in heaven, ſhall enter into the kingdom of heaven. Matt. vii. 21. Suffer little children to come unto me, for of ſuch is the kingdom of heaven. Matt. xix. 14.

4. To ſignify the calling of the Gentiles, excluſive of the Jews. Jeſus Chriſt having ſpoken of the centurion's faith, foretells the calling of the Gentiles, and rejection of the Jews in theſe words: The children of the kingdom ſhall be caſt out. Matt. viii. 12. In the ſame ſenſe are the parables of the feaſt which ſtrangers were called to, upon the refuſal of thoſe friends, whom the father of the family had invited to it; Matth. xxi. 2. and that of the huſbandmen who drove their maſter's ſervants out of the vineyard, and killed his ſon. Mark xii. 2.

5. Moſt frequently the church of Jeſus Chriſt, the preaching of the goſpel; God's conduct towards the elect in order to bring them to the faith, and afterwards to happineſs. In this ſenſe Jeſus Chriſt ſays, that the kingdom of heaven is like unto a treaſure hid in a field, which a man diſcovers, and purchaſes at the price of his whole fortune; and unto goodly pearls, for which a merchant gives all that he is worth. Mat. xiii. 44. By this treaſure, and theſe pearls, meaning faith in Jeſus Chriſt. In another place he compares the kingdom of heaven to a field, where tares are found mixed with the good ſeed, to a net with which good and bad fiſh are gathered; by which the church is meant, that containing always, in this world, good and bad Chriſtians. Mat. xiii. 47, 48. He ſays frequently, that his reign will begin after his reſurrection, that the goſpel will be preached then, principally, and his elect called by him to the faith.

The

The kingdom of God is often ſynonymous with the kingdom of heaven. But in the Old Teſtament the kingdom, or the reign of God ſignifies his infinite power, his ſovereign authority over all creatures, over the kingdoms of the world, over the hearts of mankind. Wiſdom ſays, x. 10. that God ſhewed his kingdom to Jacob: he opened the kingdom of heaven to him in ſhewing him the myſterious ladder by which the angels aſcended and deſcended; and Eccleſiaſticus xlvii. 13 that God gave unto David, Teſtamentum Regni, the covenant, aſſurance, the promiſe of the kingdom for him and his ſucceſſors.

The kingdom of hell, the kingdom of Satan, ſignifies either the empire which the devil exerciſes over other devils, or that which he exerciſes over the wicked in this life; or laſtly, that which he has over the ſouls of the wicked who are in hell. The author of the book of Wiſdom ſays, that the kingdom of hell was not upon the earth before the ſin of the firſt man, Nec infernum regnum in Terra. Or according to the Greek, That Pluto had not then his royal palace upon the earth. Wiſd. i. 14. Ουδὲ Ἅδου βασίλειον ἐπὶ γῆς. He did not exerciſe his dominion over mankind. And our Saviour in the goſpel, Every kingdom divided againſt itſelf is brought to deſolation; and if Satan caſt out Satan, he is divided againſt himſelf. How then ſhall his kingdom ſtand? He anſwers the accuſation of the Phariſees, who ſaid, that he caſt out devils in the name of Belzebub prince of the devils. He ſhews the impoſſibility of this, becauſe it muſt then be ſaid, that Satan endeavours to deſtroy his own dominion, and that the kingdom of hell is at variance with its own ſubjects.

KINGS. The Iſraelites had no national king till Saul. Before him, they were governed, firſt, by elders, as in Egypt, then by rulers of God's appointment, as Moſes and Joſhua; then by judges, as Othniel, Ehud, Shamgar, Gideon, Jephthah, Samſon, Eli, Samuel; laſtly, by kings, as Saul, David, Solomon, &c. For the ſucceſſion of the KINGS, Vide the CHRONOLOGICAL TABLES.

The Jews, after their return from captivity, A. M. 3468, lived under the dominion of the Perſians one hundred and four years, till Alexander the Great, who came to Jeruſalem in 3672. After his death, in 3681, Judæa at firſt ſubmitted to the kings of Egypt, then to the kings of Syria; but Antiochus Epiphanes having forced the Jews to take arms for the defence of their religion in 3836, the Maccabees recovered by degrees their ancient liberty, and lived independent, from the government of John Hircanus, in 3874, till Judea was reduced into a province by the Romans.

BOOKS OF KINGS. We have four books in our Bibles which are thus called. Anciently there were but two in the Hebrew bibles, the firſt called Samuel, the ſecond Kings or Kingdoms. At preſent in the Hebrew copies, as well as in the Greek and Latin, there are four books, the two firſt in the Hebrew called Samuel, the two laſt Kings. The Greeks cite them all four as the Books of Kingdoms, the Latins as the Books of Kings.

The firſt Book of KINGS contains the hiſtory of an hundred years; from the birth of Samuel A. M. 2849, to the death of Saul, in 2949. Herein we have an account of the birth of Samuel, the war between the Philiſtines and Hebrews, wherein the ark of the Lord was taken; the death of Eli the high prieſt, and his ſons Hophni and Phineas, the reſtitution of the ark by the Philiſtines; of Samuel's being acknowledged judge of Iſrael; of Saul's election to be king, his ſucceſsful beginning, his wars and victories, his rejection; the anointing of David, his brave actions, his misfortunes, his flight; the war between Saul and the Philiſtines, and the death of that prince.

The ſecond Book of KINGS contains the hiſtory of thirty-nine years; from the ſecond anointing of David at Hebron, A. M. 2949, to 2428, wherein David appointed Solomon to be his ſucceſſor, two years before his death, in 2990. Here we have an account of David's being acknowledged king by the tribe of Judah, while the other tribes of Iſrael obeyed Iſhboſheth, the ſon of Saul. Iſhboſheth being killed ſeven years after, in 2956, David was acknowledged king of all Iſrael. He received the royal unction a third time; took Jeruſalem from the Jebuſites, brought back the ark from Kirjathjearim to the city of David, had the advantage of the Philiſtines, Moabites, Syrians, and Edomites, upon ſeveral occaſions. Hanun, king of the Ammonites, having inſulted David's ambaſſadors, this prince made war upon his country, and brought it under his obedience. During this war David lived with Bathſheba, and procured the murder of Uriah. Nathan reproved him for his adultery and murder; David repented of them; God puniſhed him with the rebellion of Abſalom. After this war, wherein his unnatural ſon periſhed miſerably, David being quiet in his dominions, ordered the people to be numbered. The Lord puniſhed his curioſity with a plague. Laſtly, David prepared every thing neceſſary for erecting the temple.

The Third Book of KINGS compriſes the hiſtory of an hundred and twenty-ſix years, from Solomon's being anointed, and his admiſſion as a partner with David, A. M. 2989, to the death of Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, in 3115. Here we have an account of Adonijah's aiming at the crown, of Solomon's aſſociation in the throne, of David's death, of Adonijah's, Joab's and Shimei's; of the building the temple by Solomon, of his riches, wiſdom, reputation, fall, and death; of his ſon Rehoboam's alienating the minds of the Iſraelites by his imprudence, of the ſchiſm of the ten tribes, and their choice of Jeroboam for their king. Of Rehoboam's ſucceſſors Abijam, Aſa, and Jehoſhaphat, who died A. M. 3115. Of Jeroboam's ſucceſſors Nadab, Baaſha, Elah, Zimri, Omri, Tibni, Ahab and Ahaziah, who died in 3078.

The fourth Book of KINGS includes the hiſtory of two hundred and twenty ſeven years; from the death of Jehoſhaphat, and the beginning of Jehoram in 3115, to the beginning of the reign of Evilmerodach king of Babylon, who delivered Jechoniah out of priſon in 3442. We have here a long ſucceſſion of wicked princes in the kingdom of Iſrael; Ahaziah, Jehoram the ſon of Ahab, Jehu, Jehoahaz, Joaſh, Jeroboam, Zechariah, Shallum, Menahem, Pekaiah, Pekah, Hoſea, the ſon of Elah, in whoſe reign Samaria was taken by Salmanezer; and the ten tribes carried captive into Aſſyria. There are ſeveral eminent prophets named during this interval in the kingdom of the ten tribes: Iddo, Oded, Ahijah, Eliſha, Hoſea, Amos, Jonah, &c.

In the kingdom of Judah we find ſome few pious princes among many who were corrupt. Jehoſhaphat was ſucceeded by Jehoram, Ahaziah, Athaliah, Joaſh, Amaziah, Uzziah, otherwiſe Azariah, Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, Manaſſeh, Amon, Joſiah, Jehoahaz, Eliakim, or Jehoiakim, Jechoniah, or Jehoiachin, Mattaniah, or Zedekiah, in whoſe reign Jeruſalem was taken by the Chaldæans, the temple burnt, and the people carried in captivity to Babylon, A. M. 3416. After this we read of the ſad death of Gedeliah, whom the Chaldæans had left in the country to govern the remains of the people, the retreat of this people into Egypt, and the favour ſhewn by Evilmerodach king of Babylon to Jehoiachin or Jeconiah king of Judah, whom he took out of priſon, and placed in his palace.

In the interval God raiſed up many prophets in Judah; ſuch as Iddo, Ahijah, Shemaiah, Hanani, Azariah, Jehu, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Zephaniah, Huldah, Micaiah, Joel, and many others. The fourth book of Kings has preſerved ſeveral particulars of the lives of theſe great men, as well as of the prophets who lived at the ſame time in the kingdom of Iſrael, or the ten tribes.

As to the author of the four books of Kings, the world is not agreed. Many aſcribe the two firſt to Samuel, whoſe name we read in the front of theſe books in the Hebrew. The Jews allow him the honour of only twenty-ſeven chapters in the firſt, which include the hiſtory of his life, and a recital of what was done by Saul and David, while he was living. The reſt they believe was continued by Gad and Nathan, according to 1 Chron. xxix. 29. Now the acts of David the king, firſt and laſt, behold they are written in the book of Samuel the Seer, and in the book of Nathan the prophet, and in the book of Gad the Seer. This opinion is very probable; but it labours under great difficulties, ſince there are certain remarks, which could not have any place in the time of Samuel, or even in the time of Nathan: e. gr. it is ſaid, 1 Sam. iii. 1. that while Samuel was living, Prophecy was rare in Iſrael; which intimates, that when the author wrote, it was more frequent. 1 Sam. xiv. 23. Bethel is called Bethaven, or the Houſe of Iniquity; a name whereby it did not go till Jeroboam had ſet up there one of his golden calves.

The author obſerves likewiſe on David's invading the Geſhurites and Gezrites, that this country of old was well peopled, from Shur even unto the Land of Egypt, 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. i. e. it was ſo in David's time, but not when the author was living. 1 Sam. ix. 9. they who formerly were called ſeers, were in his time termed nabi or prophets. Now in Samuel's time the name of ſeer was common; the author therefore of theſe books is more modern than that prophet. He ſpeaks of Samuel as of a perſon dead long before, and praiſes him. 1 Kings xii. 15. He takes notice that the city of Ziklag belonged to the kings of Judah, ever ſince the ceſſion which Achiſh made of it to David, 1 Sam. xxvii. 6. This remark muſt have been made ſince the ſeparation of the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael; conſequently this author lived not only after Samuel, but after David and Solomon.

From ſeveral other obſervations of this nature, ſome have been perſuaded, that David, Hezekiah, Jeremiah, or Ezra, compiled theſe books from memoirs made in the time of Samuel and the prophets of David and Solomon; and if we compare the different characters of theſe two books, we ſhall on one ſide ſee that circumſtances, facts, and remarks, are moſtly the ſame. The uniformity of the ſtyle, and the ſequel of the narration prove likewiſe, that there was but one author of them, and he contemporary with the perſons of whom he ſpeaks: but on the other ſide, there are ſome few circumſtances, which make us think, that a more modern writer had a hand in them, and added ſome particulars, and certain terms, proper to explain what the diſtance of time had rendered obſcure. Now, if we ſuppoſe that Ezra, who was an inſpired author, had in his hands the original writings of Samuel, and the ancient writers of Saul and David's times, and that he digeſted them into order, and connected them, all difficulties are eaſily reſolved, and the ſeeming contradictions are reconciled.

That theſe works are authentic and canonical is is not diſputed; both the Jewiſh and the Chriſtian church unanimouſly receive them as inſpired ſcripture, and Jeſus Chriſt quotes them in the goſpel. Matt. xii. 2. Mark ii. 25. Luke vi. 3.

There are the ſame difficulties almoſt with relation to the author of the third and fourth books of Kings, and the time when they were compoſed. Some have been of opinion, that David, Solomon, and Hezekiah, wrote the hiſtory of their own reigns. Others, that the prophets took this care upon them, who lived under their government in Iſrael and Judah, as Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Gad, and Nathan. We know that ſeveral of the prophets wrote the lives of thoſe kings who reigned in their times; and the names and writings of theſe prophets are mentioned in ſeveral places of the books of Kings and Chronicles. Beſides, the memoirs and annals of the kings of Judah and Iſrael are cited almoſt every moment, and theſe included the particulars of thoſe princes' actions, whereof the Sacred Books have handed down to us ſummaries only, and abridgements.

It muſt be confeſſed therefore, that two ſorts of writers were concerned in penning the Books of Kings. (1) Thoſe original, primitive and contemporary authors, who wrote the annals, journals, and memoirs of their own times; from whence the matter and ſubſtance of our ſacred hiſtory has been formed; and from whence the authors which came afterwards have taken what they record. Theſe ancient memoirs have not deſcended down to us, but were certainly in the hands of thoſe ſacred penmen, whoſe writings are in our poſſeſſion, ſince they cite them, and refer to them: but (2) who compiled and digeſted theſe ancient writings? and when did they live?

It is generally believed that Ezra is the author [rather Editor] of the Books of Kings, and Chronicles, as we have them at preſent; the proofs are theſe. 1. The author lived after the captivity of Babylon. At the end of the fourth Book of Kings he ſpeaks of the return from the captivity. 2 Kings xxv. 22, 23, &c. 2. He ſays, that in his time the ten tribes were ſtill captive in Aſſyria, whither they had been carried as a puniſhment for their ſins. 3. In the xviith chapter of the fourth Book of Kings, he makes ſome reflections on the calamities of Judah and Iſrael, which demonſtrate that he wrote after the event. 4. He refers almoſt every where to ancient memoirs, which he had before him, and abridged. 5. The author, as far as we are able to judge of this matter, was a prieſt, and very much attached to the houſe of David. Now all theſe marks ſuit very well with Ezra, a learned and very curious prieſt, who lived during the captivity, and after it, who might have collected an infinite number of documents, which time and the perſecutions ſuffered by the Jews, have deprived us of.

I confeſs, that there are ſome particulars in theſe books which do not agree with the time of Ezra: he ſays, that in his time the ark of the covenant was ſtill in the temple; that the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael were ſtill ſubſiſting. 1 Kings viii. 8. 1 Kings xii. 19. 1 Kings vi. 1, & 28. He ſpeaks of the months Sif and Bul, names, which in the time of Ezra were no longer in uſe. Laſtly, he expreſſes himſelf throughout as a contemporary, and as an author, who had been a witneſs of what he wrote. But this pretended contradiction may be eaſily reconciled. Ezra generally tranſcribes word for word the memoirs which he had in poſſeſſion; without giving himſelf the trouble to reconcile them. This is a proof of his exactneſs, his fidelity and honeſty. In other places, ſome reflexions or illuſtrations are inſerted by him, which ariſe naturally from his ſubject. This ſhews he was maſter of the matter which he had in hand, and that being inſpired by God, he was not afraid of intermixing his own words with thoſe of the prophets, whoſe writings lay before him. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

The King's Rights. The Iſraelites having deſired Samuel to give them a king, ſuch as other nations had round about them: he hereupon replied to them, the king who ſhall govern you will have the following prerogatives: "He will take your ſons to guide his chariots, &c." 1 Sam. viii. 11. Conſult the paſſage.

There is a queſtion whether Samuel only foretold what ſhould happen to the Iſraelites from their king; or whether he declared to them the real privileges of a king, and the lawful uſe of his authority: commentators for the moſt part think, that the prophet here deſcribes in what manner the prince would abuſe his power, and what would would be his exceſſive pretenſions, rather than the juſt and legal exerciſe of his rights. See Grotius De jure Belli & Pacis, lib. 1. cap. 1. & cap. 4. Art. 3. & 4, and Schicardus de Jure Regni.

KINGS of the FEAST. Vide ARCHITRICLINUS.

KINGS. Idolatrous nations, and even the Hebrews, called their gods kings. Moloch, Milchom, Adramelech, and Anamelech, are names of deities derived from thoſe of kings. The words of Iſaiah xxxvii. 13, Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arphad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Henah and Ivah? ſeem parallel to thoſe of chap. xxxvi. 19, Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? Where are the gods of Sepharvaim? And, Amos i. 15. God threatens Milchom, the god of the Moabites, with ſending him and his princes into captivity. In the Scripture God is called in every page almoſt, the king of the Hebrews.

[KINGS. This word does not always imply the ſame degree of power, or the ſame degree of importance: neither does it imply the magnitude of the dominion or territory of this officer. Many perſons are called kings in ſcripture, whom we ſhould rather denominate chiefs or leaders; and many ſingle towns, or at moſt, together with their adjacent villages, are ſaid to have had kings.

Being unaware of this lower ſenſe of the word king, or unwilling to adopt it, many perſons have been embarraſſed by the paſſage Deut. xxxiii. 5. "Moſes commanded us a law—he was king in Jeſhurun—or king among the upright" i. e. he was the principal among the aſſembly [in colligendo] of the ſuperiors of the Iſraelites. (Some refer this to Jehovah). Moſes was the chief, the leader, the guide of his people, fulfilling the duties of a king: but he was not king in the ſame ſenſe as David, or Solomon, was afterwards. Which remark reconciles the obſervation Gen. xxxvi. 31. "Theſe kings reigned in Edom, before there reigned any king over the children of Iſrael:"—for, Moſes, though he was king in an inferior ſenſe, yet did not reign, in the ſtronger ſenſe, over the children of Iſrael, their conſtitution not being monarchical under him.

Moreover, we find, in Joſhua, that almoſt every town in Canaan had its king; and, we know, that the territories of theſe towns muſt have been little extenſive, becauſe, otherwiſe, ſo ſmall a country as Canaan could never have contained thirty-one kings, who being conquered, are enumerated, Joſh. xii. 9-24.—beſide many kings of the ſame nature, who, no doubt, eſcaped the arms of Joſhua. Vide alſo Gen. xiv. 9. alſo Judges ii. 7. where Adonizedek, himſelf no very powerful king, mentions ſeventy kings, whom he had ſubdued and mutilated. 1 Kings iv. 20. Benhadad and thirty two kings with him, (i. e. regents in towns under his dominion, tributary allies, kings in the lower, perhaps even, in the loweſt ſenſe of the word king) are mentioned.

KING is uſed metaphorically, by Job, chap. xviii. 14. "the king of terrors" i. e. death; the ruler, and commander of terrors: ſo chap. xli. 34. "the Leviathan is king, i. e. chief, principal, ſuperior, over all the children of pride."—thoſe who moſt pride themſelves on their ſtations, or qualities, are nevertheleſs compelled to acknowledge, that the Leviathan is their ſuperior; and to refrain from comparing, or equalling, their powers to thoſe of that tyrant of the waters.

KING is alſo uſed figuratively by our Lord, John xviii. 37. Pilate ſaid, "Art thou a king then?" Jeſus anſwered, "Thou ſayeſt—thou expreſſeſt what is the fact; I am a king,"—but not of this world. Accordingly Rev. i. 15. we read, Jeſus Chriſt the prince of the kings of the earth—i. e. ſuperior to all earthly monarchs.—1 Tim. i. 17. "The king eternal, immortal, &c." vi. 15. "Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the bleſſed and only potentate: King of kings and Lord of lords"—Vide alſo Rev. xvii. 14. and FRAGMENT, No.

N. B. This application of the title king to Jeſus Chriſt, ſubjected the primitive Chriſtians to many inconveniencies; as appears among other places, from Acts xvii. 7. where they are accuſed of acting "contrary to the decree of Cæſar, ſaying, there is another king, one Jeſus."

KING ſignifies government, ſuch as a king uſually exerciſes; even though it be not conducted under one perſon, Rev. xvii. 10. "There are, (rather, have been) ſeven kings—forms of government; five are fallen—one is, the other is not come"—ſo ver. 12.

KINNERETH, or Cinnireth, a lake. See Tiberias.

KINOTH, קינות, θρῆνοι, lamentation, 2 Chron. xxxv. 25. The Septuagint tranſlate it θρῆνοι.

KIR-HARESETH, קיר־חרשת or קיר־חרש, a city, Iſai. xvi. 7. The Vulgate has put the ſignification for the name, urbs cocti lateris. The word kir ſignifies a city, and חרש hareſh, or chareſh, or kereſh, ſignifies brick, baked, made, or built.

KIR-HARESHETH. See AREOPOLIS, the capital of the Moabites.

KIRIATH, קריה, πόλις, city; from קרת kereth:

otherwiſe, vocation; from קרא kara, to call: otherwiſe, leſſon, reading, or meeting; from the ſame verb, which ſignifies to read, &c.

KIRJATH. This word ſignifies a city; hence we ſo often meet with it in the names of places. There was a Kirjath near Gibeon in Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 28.

KIRIATHAIM, קריתים, καριαθιαεμ, the two cities, the callings, &c. See Kiriath. Kiriathaim is the dual number.

KIRJATHAIM or Cariada, a town beyond Jordan, ten miles from Medaba, weſt. Joſh. xiii. 19.

KIRJATHAIM, a city of Nephtali, 1 Chr. vi. 76.

KIRIATH-ARBA, קרית־ארבע. πόλις ἀρβὸν, the city of four; from Kiriath, and ארבע arbah, four.

KIRJATH-ARBA. A city of Judah. Joſh. xv. 13.

KIRIATH-ARIM, קרית־ערים, καριαθιαρειμ, the name of a city, Ezr. ii. 24. City of cities, or of villages; from Kiriath, and עיר hir, a city: otherwiſe, the city of thoſe that watch; from עור hur, to watch.

KIRIATH-BAAL, קרית־בעל, a city, Joſh. xv. 60. The city of Baal, or of thoſe that command, or that poſſeſs; from Kiriath, a city, and baal, a maſter, or huſband.

KIRIATH-JEARIM, קרית־ערים, πόλις ἰαριμ, a city, Joſh. xv. 9. The city of woods, or foreſts; from Kiriath, a city, and יער jahar, a foreſt.

KIRJATH-JEARIM, or Kirjath-Baal, or Baale of Judah or Bela, a city of Judah on the confines of Benjamin, where the ark was lodged for many years in the houſe of Abinadab, till David removed it to Jeruſalem. See BALA.

KIRIATH-SANNAH, קרית־סנה, a city, Joſh. xv. 49. The city of the buſh; from סנה ſenah, a buſh: or, according to the Hebrew and the Syriac, the city of enmity.

KIRJATH-SANNAH, a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 49.

KIRIATH-SEPHER, קרית־ספר, πόλις γραμμάτων, the city of letters, or of the book; from קרית kiriath, a city, and ספר ſepher, a letter, or a book.

KIRJATH-SEPHER, i. e. the city of letters, or of books, otherwiſe Debir, Kirjath-debir (the city of words) a city in the tribe of Judah, which fell by lot to this tribe, afterwards given to Caleb. It was taken by Othniel, to whom Caleb for his reward gave his daughter Achſah in marriage. Joſh. xiv. 6, 7. and Judg. i. 10, 11, 12, 13.

[This city was ſo called long before Moſes; at leaſt it ſhould ſeem ſo by the manner of mentioning it, which proves that books were known before this legiſlator, and that he is not the oldeſt writer that ever was, as the Fathers have aſſerted; a character which it is to be obſerved he never aſſumes. It is poſſible the Canaanites might lodge their records in this city, and thoſe few monuments of antiquity which they had remaining, or it might be ſomewhat like the cities of the prieſts in Iſrael, the reſidence of the learned, or a kind of college.]

KISH, קיש, hard, difficult; from the word קשה kaſhah: otherwiſe, ſtraw, or forage; from קשש kaſhaſh: otherwiſe, cucumber; from קשא kaſha.

I. KISH, ſon of Abi Gibeon and Maachah, 1 Chr. viii. 30.

II. KISH, ſon of Ner, father of king Saul, 1 Sam. ix. 1. and 1 Chr. viii. 33. ix. 38, 39.

III. KISH, ſon of Abdi, a Levite of Merari's family, 2 Chron. xxix. 12.

KISHION, קשיון, hardneſs; from קשה kaſhah. See Kiſh.

KISHION, of the tribe of Iſſachar, was yielded to the Levites of Gerſhom's family. Joſh. xix. 20.

KISHON, קישון, a brook; Judith iv. 7. From the ſame root as Kiſh.

KISHON. Judges v. 21. The brook Kiſhon riſes in the valley of Jezreel. It runs along this valley, to the ſouth of mount Tabor, and diſcharges itſelf into the Mediterranean Sea at Acco, otherwiſe called Ptolemaïs.

KISS. There are in the ſcripture ſtyle kiſſes of friendſhip, adoration, homage and reſpect; kiſſes of peace and reconciliation. Saint Paul ſpeaks frequently of the kiſs of peace, which was in uſe among believers, and was given by them to one another, as a token of charity and union, publicly in their religious aſſemblies. Salute each other with an holy kiſs. Rom. xvi. 16. We have already ſpoken of the kiſs of adoration under the word Adore. Joſeph coming to viſit his father Jacob, who was on his death-bed, the good old man kiſſed the end of his ſtaff of command, (ſays the Vulgate.) Eſther kiſſed the end of king Ahaſuerus's ſcepter, in the way of homage and adoration. Adoravit faſtigium virgæ ejus. Vide LXX. in Gen. xlvii. 31. Eſth. v. 2. Pſ. ii. 12. juxta Heb. The pſalmiſt exhorts us, to kiſs the Son of God, and acknowledge his dominion. We kiſs the text of the holy goſpels, out of reſpect, and with a kind of relative worſhip, which we pay them: with the ſame ſpirit the converted adultereſs kiſſed our Saviour's feet, waſhed them with her tears, and wiped them with her hair. Luke vii. 38.

[KISS. Pharaoh tells Joſeph, "Thou ſhalt be over my houſe; and upon thy mouth ſhall all my people kiſs:" our tranſlation reads, "according to thy word ſhall all my people be ruled;" but places in the margin, "at thy word ſhall all my people people kiſs." Under the article ADORE we have ſhewn, that, thoſe who were ſaid to kiſs idols, kiſſed their own hands, and transferred the action to the idol, or profeſſed to do this to its honour: i. e. they expreſſed their ſenſe of veneration by this action, but we read Prov. xxiv. 26. "The lips ſhall be kiſſed that give right words in anſwer"—as this ſeems to allude to the ſame action as is referred to Joſeph, it may be proper to examine the import of the expreſſion.

It is probable, that this refers, ultimately, to the mode of kiſſing the roll of the decree, or, the writing, which contains the orders of a ſovereign prince, as is ſtill the cuſtom of the eaſt—i. e. the written orders of Joſeph ſhould be treated with the ſame reſpect, by inferior officers, as thoſe of the king uſed to be.—The paſſage in Proverbs is rendered by LXX. "Lips ſhall kiſs thoſe things that anſwer to right words:"—i. e. thoſe writings—thoſe decrees—which correſpond to principles of equity and juſtice, ſhall be treated with the utmoſt reverence—even to kiſſing. The mode of honoring a writing from a ſovereign in the eaſt, is, by kiſſing it, and then putting it up to the forehead. On a late trial in the Court of King's Bench, in England, in which ſome Mahometans were ſworn, they honored the Koran, on which they were ſworn, by this expreſſion of reſpect.

It deſerves notice, that, occaſionally, various parts of the perſon, were kiſſed, and ſtill are, in the eaſt; probably according to the degree of intimacy of the parties, or, to their relative ſtations—as the lips—the hands—the feet—the garments—the earth where the feet had trod. &c.—and in many inſtances, things ſent by a ſuperior to an inferior. So, Iſaac ſays to his ſon, "Come near and kiſs me," Gen. xxvii. 26; ſo, Joſeph fell on his father's face, and kiſſed it, Gen. l. 1. ſo, Joab took Amaſa by the beard, to kiſs it, 2 Sam. xx. 9. (Vide FRAGMENT, No. XCIII) and ſo, the woman kiſſed the feet of Chriſt, Luke vii. 45.]

[We ſhould remark alſo that not only men who were related to each other kiſſed each other, as Laban kiſſed Jacob, Gen. xxix. 14, and Eſau kiſſed Jacob, Gen. xxxiii. 4. and Joſeph kiſſed all his brethren, but Samuel kiſſed Saul, 1 Sam. x. 1. as a token of reſpect to the king elect; in like manner, when the Son is declared king, Pſalm li. 12. the kings and judges of the earth are directed to kiſs him: no doubt, to ſhew their ſubmiſſion, veneration, and affection. Jonathan and David kiſſed each other, 1 Sam. xx. 41. and, "Abſalom kiſſed any man—of whatever rank, or ſituation—that came nigh to him," 2 Sam. xv. 5. And this cuſtom long continued: for "the brethren fell on Paul's neck, and kiſſed him," Acts xx. 37. This accounts, very eaſily, for the cuſtom of the kiſs of peace, among the primitive Chriſtians; which, however it might ſeem to us, to be unadviſable, yet was in thoſe days eſteemed merely as one mode of expreſſing affectionate honour. It ſhould be remembered, that the ſexes ſat apart in Jewiſh, and in Chriſtian, places of worſhip; notwithſtanding which, the heathen took occaſion from the uſe of this ſalutation, to raiſe reports injurious to Chriſtian purity; and it did not therefore long continue to be practiſed in public aſſemblies. Moſt probably it was gradually relinquiſhed; but, I ſuſpect that it continued among ſeveral of the ſects denominated heretics: where it gave occaſion to the ſame reports of promiſcuous embraces, as it had done when in general uſe among Chriſtians. I think this is the moſt liberal way of accounting for reported behaviour ſo utterly inconſiſtent with any reception of the Chriſtian doctrine.]

KITE, a bird of prey, in Latin called Milvus, and in Hebrew Daah: ſome tranſlate this word Magpye; and others Vulture. The Hebrew Daah, ſignifies to fly. The Kite flies very ſwiftly and very high. Moſes places it among the unclean birds.

KITHLISH, כתליש, καθαλὶν, a city, Joſh. xv. 40. Wall; from כתל cathal: according to the Syriac and Hebrew, a troop of lions: or, according to the Syriac, ſqueezing to the lion.

KITHLISH, a town belonging to the tribe of Judah. Joſhua xv. 40.

KITRON, קטרון, κεπρὼν, Vulgate, cetron, bonds: otherwiſe, he that perfumes, that makes to ſmoke; from קטר catar, to burn incenſe: otherwiſe, the ſong of him that is weary; from קוט cut, to be weary, and רנה ranah, a ſong.

KITRON, a city of Zebulun, which they of that tribe could not take from the Canaanites. Judg. i. 30.

KITTIM, כתים, κίτοι, they that bruiſe; from כתת cathath: otherwiſe, gold; from כתם cethem: otherwiſe, colouring.

KITTIM, the ſon Javan, and grandſon to Noah. We have ſhewn in the comment upon Geneſis x. 4. that Kittim peopled Macedonia. Joſephus by Kittim underſtands the Iſle of Cyprus; others the Iſle of Chios; others Cilicia; others again Achaia. But the author of the firſt Book of Maccabees underſtands it as we do, of the Macedonians; for he calls Alexander King of the Kittims, and ſays, that Perſeus King of the Kittims was overcome by the Romans. Daniel ſpeaks of the ſhips of the Kittims, which Bochart takes to be meant of the Roman fleet. 1 Mac. i. 1 Mac. viii. 5. Dan. pi.

20. He will have it, that Kittim ſignifies Italy. It is true Daniel ſpeaks in this place of the Roman fleet, but he calls it the fleet of the Kittims, becauſe it laid in the harbours of Macedonia, when it departed to attack Antiochus, under the conduct of Caïus Popilius; and of this event Daniel was ſpeaking in the paſſage cited by Bochart. Thus the fleet of the Kittims and Macedonia is in this circumſtance the Roman fleet alſo.

KNIVES of Stone, uſed in circumciſion. See STONE.

TO KNOW. I know thee by name, Exod. xxxiii. 12, 17. I know thee very particularly, I know who thou art: thou art my peculiar ſervant, whom I have named. It is God who ſpeaks thus to Moſes. Otherwiſe; I have called thee to my ſervice by name.

To know: kill every woman that hath known man: Numb. xxxi. 17. All the married women, and thoſe who are not virgins. Thus; Adam cognovit uxorem ſuam; Virum non cognoſco; Rex non cognovit eam. All theſe expreſſions deſcribe in a decent manner the act of marriage.

To know the Lord, Jer. xxxi. 34. to know the way and judgments of the Lord. And in a contrary ſenſe, they have not known the Lord, Hoſea xiii. 4, &c. nor his ways, does not ſignify a mere ſpeculative knowledge, but a practical knowledge accompanied with pious actions, and with charity. The Ox knoweth his Maſter, but Iſrael doth not know him. Iſ. i. 3.

I did know thee in the Wilderneſs, Hoſea xiii. 5. I choſe thee for my people, and gave my law to thee in the wilderneſs. And you only have I known of all the families of the Earth. Amos. iii. You only have I taken for my people. And again; they have made princes, and I knew it not. Hoſea viii. 4. They have ſet themſelves over my people without my miſſion or conſent.

I do not know thee, I know not who thou art; that is to ſay, I have nothing to do with thee, I deſign to treat thee as a ſtranger, as an indifferent perſon, as one whom I have never ſeen.

To know denotes frequently the view of any thing with approbation, eſteem and friendſhip. The Lord knoweth the ways of the righteous, Pſ. i. 6. The Lord knoweth the days of the upright, Pſ. xxxvii. 18. And, the Lord knoweth the ways which are on the right hand, he approves, he loves them, Prov. iv. 27. [The author cites from the Vulgate, wherein the 27th verſe is inſerted with additions which the tranſlator has copied from the Septuagint, which are not in the Hebrew; which concludes, as the Engliſh verſion does, with, remove thy foot from evil.]

KNOWLEDGE. God planted in Paradiſe the tree of knowledge of good and evil; i. e. of the knowledge of all things; for to know good and evil ſignifies a general knowledge, at leaſt in morals. Some are of opinion that this tree of knowledge was different from the tree of life, and that Eve was inclined to eat the fruit of knowledge, with the hopes of becoming a little deity, abounding with light and knowledge; ye ſhall be as gods, knowing good and evil. Gen. iii. 5.

The Lord is a God of knowledge, ſays Hannah 1 Sam. ii. 3, in her thankſgiving ſong: He ſees, perceives, and knows every thing; paſt, preſent, and to come, lies open to its view; he penetrates our deepeſt thoughts, and moſt concealed inclinations.

Thy knowledge, Lord, is infinitely too high for me, I cannot attain unto it. Pſalm cxxxix. 6. It would not only be ridiculous for man to pretend to equal the knowledge of God, but even to believe that he can form a juſt idea of it. We may eaſily apprehend, that our notices of things are very limited and imperfect, and that the knowledge of God is without defect; but to ſeek, to learn its extent, is to aim at numbering the drops of water in the ſea.

The knowledge of God, of ſalvation, of the ſaints, may denote thoſe ſerious and uſeful notices of religious things, which guide us to God and holineſs; or the knowledge which is given and inſpired by God, and has things holy for its object.

There is no knowledge or wiſdom in the grave whither thou goeſt—in the other life: Eccleſ. ix. 10. Thoſe qualities of wiſe and learned which procure you ſome honour and reputation in this life, will diſappear at death. There will then be no queſtion but of a good life and good works. Theſe are the only advantages at the hour of death. It may be taken likewiſe as an objection offered by libertines, Let us enjoy preſent pleaſure, for every thing periſhes with the body; in the other life there will be neither work, nor reaſon, nor wiſdom, nor knowledge.

Knowledge puffeth up, but charity edifieth. 1 Cor. viii. 1. The knowledge of ſpeculative and uſeleſs things, which tend only to gratify curioſity and vanity, and contribute, neither to our own ſalvation nor to our neighbour's, neither to the public good, nor to God's glory; ſuch knowledge is much more dangerous than profitable. The true ſcience is that of ſalvation, to employ our knowledge in ſanctifying ourſelves, in glorifying God, and edifying our neighbour, this is the only ſound knowledge.

St. Paul ſays, that he was rude in ſpeech, but not in knowledge; his knowledge was not oſtentatious impoſing on others with pompous, ſublime and eloquent eloquent diſcourſes; but was humble, ſolid, elevated, pure, and ſuited to the capacity of thoſe who heard him with holy diſpoſitions, and with the deſire of being edified and inſtructed.

Our Saviour reproaches the Phariſees with having taken away the key of knowledge, and neither entering in themſelves, nor ſuffering others to enter into the kingdom of heaven. Luke xi. 52. The Phariſees made particular profeſſion of ſtudying the law. They paſſed for the moſt learned of the Jews. They could not endure that others ſhould be in any reputation for learning. In a word they ſeized on the key of knowledge; but what did they do with it? They did not live the better for it; they did not enter into the kingdom of heaven: their lives were nothing but oſtentation and hypocriſy. The traditions, wherewith they had overloaded the law, were rather a corruption than a fair explanation of the will of God. So that they not only did not follow the way which leads to the kingdom of heaven, but further led others out of it by bad explanations.

KNOWLEDGE. To conſider this word fully, would make a very extenſive article: ſometimes it imports—to underſtand—to have acquired information reſpecting a ſubject.

Knowledge implies diſcernment, judgment, diſcretion: the power of diſcrimination.

Knowledge may be partial; we ſee but in part, we know but in part.

To have aſcertained by experiment Gen. xxii. 12.

It implies, diſcovery, detection; by the law is the knowledge of ſin, Rom. iii. 20.

Knowledge, natural, is acquired by the ſenſes; by ſight, hearing, feeling, &c. by reflection; by proper uſe of our reaſoning powers; by natural genius; dexterity improved by aſſiduity and cultivation into great ſkill. So of huſbandry, Iſai. xxviii. 36. of art and elegance, Exod. xxxv. 31. in the inſtance of Bezaleel.

Knowledge, ſpiritual, is the gift of God; but may be improved by ſtudy, conſideration, &c.

The prieſt's lips ſhould keep knowledge, Mal. ii. 7. not keep it to themſelves, but keep it in ſtore for others: to communicate knowledge is the way to preſerve it.

Knowledge is ſpoken of as an emblematical perſon, as riches, and treaſures, as excellency, and as the gift of God.

Knowledge does not always add to the happineſs of its poſſeſſor; but too often he that increaſeth knowledge increaſeth ſorrow, Eccl. i. 18.

God is the ſource, and fountain of knowledge; who knows all things; at all times, and in all places. Jeſus Chriſt is poſſeſſed of univerſal knowledge; knows the heart of man, and whatever appertains to his mediatorial kingdom. Men know progreſſively; and ought to follow on to know the Lord: what we know not now we may know hereafter. Holy angels know in a manner much ſuperior to man; and, occaſionally, reveal part of their knowledge to man. Unholy angels may know many things, of which man is ignorant.

The great diſcretion of life, and of godlineſs, is, to diſcern what is deſirable to be known, and what is beſt unknown: leſt the knowledge of "good loſt and evil got," as in the caſe of our firſt parents, ſhould prove the lamentable ſource of innumerable evils.

Knowledge of God is indiſpenſable, ſelf knowledge is important, knowledge of others is deſirable; to be too knowing in worldly matters is often acceſſory to ſinful knowledge; the knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt is a mean of eſcaping the pollutions which are in the world; workers of iniquity have no knowledge; no proper conviction of the divine preſence. Some men are brutiſh in their knowledge; e. gr. he knows that a wooden image is but a ſhapely-formed ſtump of a tree, yet he worſhips it: he boaſts of his deity, which, in fact, is an inſtance of his diſcernment degraded even to brutality. Some are wicked in their knowledge, "knowing the depths of Satan, as they ſpeak." Rev. ii. 20. Strange indeed! that men ſhould boaſt of what is to their detriment, and pride themſelves on knowing that—whoſe abſence were their greateſt felicity!

Where ignorance is bliſs
Tis folly to be wiſe."

KOHATH, קהת, congregation; from קוה kavah: otherwiſe wrinkle, plait; from קמט camat: otherwiſe, to make blunt; from קהה cahah: otherwiſe, obedience; from יקה jakah, to obey.

KOHATH, ſon of Levi, and father of Amram, Jehar, Hebron and Uzziel, Gen. xlvi. 11. Kohath's family was appointed to carry the ark and ſacred veſſels of the tabernable, while Iſrael marched through the wilderneſs. Exod. vi. 18. Numb. iv. 4, 5, 6, &c.

KOHELETH, קהלת, Vulg. Eccleſiaſtes; Eccleſ. i. 1. preacher: otherwiſe, he [ſhe] that aſſembles.

KOLAIAH, קוליה, κωλέια, a man's name, Nehem. xi. 6. The voice of the Lord; from קול kol, a voice, and יה jah, the Lord. Alſo the father of Ahab, Jerem. xxix. 21.

KORAH, קרח, ſon of Izhar, Exod. vi. 21. bald, frozen, icy; from קרח karak, or kerek.

I. KORAH, ſon of Eſau and Aholibamah, ſucceeded Kenaz in part of the kingdom of Edom, and was ſucceeded by Gatam. Gen. xxxvi. 15, 16.

II. KORAH, (Vide DATHAN and ABIRAM,) ſon of Jehar, of the race of Levi, and father of Aſher, Elkanah and Aliaſaph, and head of the Korites, a celebrated family among the Levites. Korah being diſſatisfied with the rank he held among the ſons of Levi, and envying the authority which Moſes and Aaron enjoyed, formed a party againſt them; wherein he engaged Dathan, Abiram, and On, with two hundred and fifty of the principal Levites, Numb. xvi. 1, 3, &c. Korah, at the head of the rebels, went to Moſes and Aaron, and complained that they alone arrogated to themſelves all the authority over the people of the Lord. Moſes, falling with his face upon the earth, anſwered them: "To-morrow in the morning the Lord will diſcover who are his. Let every one of you take therefore his cenſer, and to-morrow he ſhall put incenſe into it; and offer it before the Lord; and he ſhall be acknowledged prieſt whom the Lord ſhall chooſe and approve."

The next day Korah with two hundred and fifty of his faction, preſenting themſelves with their cenſers before the Lord, the glory of the Lord appeared viſibly over the tabernacle; and a voice was heard to ſay, Separate yourſelves from among this congregation, that I may conſume them in a moment. Moſes and Aaron hereupon falling with their faces to the ground, ſaid, O God, the God of the ſpirits of all fleſh, ſhall one man ſin, and wilt thou be wrath with all the congregation? And the Lord ſaid unto Moſes, Command all the people to depart from about the tents of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. When therefore the people were retired, Moſes ſaid, If theſe men die the common death of all men, then the Lord hath not ſent me; but if the earth open and ſwallow them up quick, then ye ſhall know that they have blaſphemed the Lord. As ſoon as he had ſpoken, the earth opened from under their feet, and ſwallowed them up with what belonged to them.

But one thing there was which added to this ſurpriſing wonder, which was, that when Korah was thus ſwallowed up in the earth, his ſons were preſerved from his misfortune. We do not know the year particularly when the death of Korah and his companions happened. The ſons of Korah continued as before, to ſerve in the tabernacle of the Lord. David appointed them their office in the temple, to guard the doors, and ſing the praiſes of God. There are ſeveral pſalms aſcribed to them, which go by the name of Korah: As the 42, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, and the 84, 85, 86, 87; that is to ſay, eleven pſalms.

The Mahometans have ſeveral traditions relating to Korah, which it may be proper to produce here, though no great account is to be made of them: They ſay Korah, whom they call Karum, was the ſon of Maſaah, couſin-german to Moſes. Moſes ſeeing he was poor, taught him chemiſtry, by which means he acquired ſuch immenſe riches, that forty camels were neceſſary to carry his gold and ſilver. There are ſome who aſſert, that he had ſeveral camels loaded only with the keys of his ſtrong boxes.

Moſes having commanded the Iſraelites to pay the tythe of all their fortunes, Korah refuſed to obey him, he even rebelled againſt his benefactor, and ſpread ſeveral calumnies againſt him, which had ſuch an effect as to deſtroy almoſt all his authority with the people. Moſes hereupon made his complaint to God, who permitted him to puniſh Korah as he ſhould think proper. He therefore curſed him, and commanded the earth to open and ſwallow him up; which was immediately executed.

The Mahometans have another tradition, that Korah, ſeeing his treaſure ſunk under ground, then that his tent was ſwallowed up, after that his family, and laſtly diſcerning himſelf to be already as high as his knees in the earth, begged of Moſes four ſeveral times to pardon him, but found him inflexible. Some time after God appeared to this prophet, and ſaid to him: Thou couldeſt not forgive Korah, though he four times deſired it of thee; had he addreſſed himſelf to me once only, I ſhould not have refuſed him my pardon.

KORE, קורא, father of Shallum, 1 Chron. ix. 19. He that binds, or calls: or partridge; from קרא korah, or kore.

KORITES, קרתים, κορίται, or Koriſhites, 1 Chron. ix 19. The children of Kore; from קרה korach, before.

KOZEBAH, a city of Moab. See Heb. 1 Chron. iv. 22. or Kiſhi the ſon of Abdi.

KUSHAIAH, קושיהו, κοσαίας, his hardneſs, his importunity; from קשה caſhah, and the pronoun ו o, his: otherwiſe, the chaining of the Lord; from יקש jakaſh, chaining, and יה jah, the Lord.

KUSHAIAH, or Kiſhi, the ſon of Abdi, and father of Ethan, a Levite of Merari's family, 1 Chron. xv. 17. He was a ſinger, and ſtood always before the ark. 1 Chron. vi. 44.

LAADAH, לעדה, for ornament, or for to paſs; from the prepoſition ל l, for, and עדה hadah, ornament, or paſſage: otherwiſe, for witneſſing, or for ſpoiling; from the ſame prepoſition, and עיד hud, to witneſs, &c.

LAADAH, ſon of Shelah, and father of Mareſhah, of Judah, 1 Chr. iv. 21.

LAADAN, לעדן, for pleaſure: from the prepoſition ל, for, and עדן hadan, pleaſure: or for ornament, or for witneſs; ſee above: otherwiſe, he that devours judgment; from לוע luah, to devour, and דין dun, judgment: according to the Syriac, according to time.

LAADAN, ſon of Gerſhon, 1 Chr. xxiii. 7, 8.—xxvi. 21. He had ſeveral ſons.

LABAN, לבן, white: otherwiſe, a brick. Alſo a place.

LABAN, ſon of Bethuel, and grandſon of Nahor, brother to Rebekah, and father to Rachel and Leah. When Jacob came into Meſopotamia, A. M. 2245, ante A. D. 1759, he was well received by his uncle Laban. Gen. xxviii, &c. A month after his arrival, Laban ſaid to him, muſt you, becauſe you are my nephew, ſerve me without recompence? Jacob propoſed to ſerve him ſeven years, for his youngeſt daughter Rachel, and Laban conſented. (Many are of opinion, that Jacob ſerved him ſeven years, before he married Rachel; but others aſſert the contrary, and think that the words, My time is accompliſhed, ſignify, I am of age to think of ſupporting my family, of marrying. Jacob was then ſeventy years of age.) Jacob ſaid to Laban, give me my wife, for my time is accompliſhed. Laban therefore made a wedding feaſt, but conveyed Leah into Jacob's chamber, ſo that Jacob perceived nothing of the fraud. The next morning he complained ſharply of it: But Laban replied, that it was unlawful to marry the younger daughter before the elder, but if he would ſerve ſeven years more, he would give him Rachel: to this Jacob conſented. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXVI. page 40, 41.

When Jacob had ſpent fourteen years in the ſervice of Laban, he was deſirous to return to Canaan. But Laban wiſhing to continue him in his ſervice, ſaid, "Aſk what recompence you pleaſe," Jacob demanded all the young which his flocks ſhould produce that were of a brown colour, ſpotted and ſpeckled: i. e. that ſeemed leaſt deſirable for their wool, and their fleece. Laban agreed, and committed all that were ſpotted and of divers colours, to the keeping of his own ſons; fearing, in all probability, leſt Jacob ſhould uſe art to produce cattle of divers colours, by mixture of ſpotted ſheep and goats, with thoſe which were not ſo. But Jacob accompliſhed an increaſe another way.

After ſtaying twenty years with Laban, Jacob perceiving that Laban did not regard him with the ſame kindneſs as formerly, reſolved to depart without Laban's knowledge, who ſet out in purſuit of him, and overtook him at Mount-Gilead. God appeared over-night to Laban, and forbad him to ſay any thing harſh to Jacob; ſo that when he ſaw Jacob, he only complained of his ſudden retreat, of his not giving him the comfort of embracing his daughters and grand-children, and of conducting them on their journey with chearful muſic. But on the ſubject of his ſtealing from him his gods, or Teraphim (See TERAPHIM) he made great complaints; Jacob replied with ſome vehemence, and agreed, that whoever had committed this theft ſhould be put to death; not knowing that Rachel was that perſon. Laban ſearched all the tents of Jacob in vain, for Rachel concealed theſe images under her. See RACHEL.

Jacob in his turn remonſtrated with Laban reſpecting his conduct towards him, and his having changed the rewards due to him. Laban anſwered, "Behold my daughters and my grandchildren? All that is your's is as dear to me as what belongs to myſelf. Let us make a covenant together, and ſet up a monument of it. (Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXIX. page 50.) They ſwore therefore reciprocal friendſhip and alliance: Laban called this pile of ſtones Jagar-Sahadutha, the heap of teſtimony; Jacob called it Galeed, the heap of witneſs, each according to his language, Laban uſing the Chaldee. Having offered ſacrifice, they ate and drank together; and the next morning Laban took leave of his daughters and grand-ſons, and returned to Haran. This is all we know of him.

LABAN, a place beyond Jordan, in Moab. Deut. i. 1.

LABOSARDACH or Laboroſoarchod, king of Babylon, ſon of Nerigliſſar, reigned nine months; according to Beroſus. (He was ſlain by his own people, and ſucceeded by Nabonidas, ſays Beroſus, or Nabannidoch, according to Abydenus; or Labynitus according to Herodotus.) Many are of opinion, that this is the Belſhazzar of Daniel. The ſucceſſion of Nebuchadnezzar's ſons is extremely perplexed. See NIGLISSAR.

LABOUR. Is ſometimes uſed for ſin, iniquity, falſhood, the puniſhment of ſin: e. gr. Sub Lingua ejus labor & dolor, Pſ. x. 7. under his tongue ungodlineſs and ſorrow; according to Heb. [and Eng.] miſchief and iniquity, or vanity: He thinks only of doing miſchief, of injuring and afflicting his neighbour. Pſ. lv. 11. Labor in medio ejus & injuſtitia; ſin and injuſtice are in the midſt of the city. And Pſ. cxli. 9. Labor labiorum ipſorum operiet eos. Let the miſchief of their own lips cover them: Let the puniſhment of their ſin, of their evil diſcourſes, fall upon them. Iſaiah lix. 4. Conceperunt laborem & peperunt iniquitatem: They have conceived miſchief, and brought forth iniquity. Theſe words were in a manner proverbial. They occur in Pſ. vii. 14. and Job xv. 35. And Habakuk i. 3. Quare oſtendiſti mihi iniquitatem & laborem: i. e. iniquity and the crimes of the wicked. [The Latin labor may anſwer to our Engliſh word TROUBLE.]

Labour is often uſed for all ſorts of misfortunes, fatigues and troubles. Noſti omnem laborem qui apprehendit nos. Numb. xx. 14. All the evils which we have ſuffered. Narravit univerſum laborem qui accidiſſet eis in itinere; Exod. xviii. 8. the uneaſineſs which attended their journey.

Labour is alſo taken for the fruit of labour. Pſ. cv. 44. Labores populorum poſſederunt. They poſſeſſed the labours of the people. And elſewhere, let the ſtrangers ſpoil his labour, and the firſt fruits of their labours; i. e. what they have acquired by their labours.

Labour is ſometimes uſed for the uneaſineſs we give others. Labor labiorum ipſorum operiet eos. Pſ. cxli. 9. The miſchief they do others will fall upon themſelves; or, the pain occaſioned by their evil diſcourſes and calumnies will overwhelm them. Labor ſtultorum affliget eos. Eccleſ. x. 15. The wicked ſhall be puniſhed with thoſe very evils which they would inflict on others; and the Pſalmiſt, Numquid adhæret tibi ſedes iniquitatis, qui fingis laborem in præcepto? Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowſhip with thee, which frameth miſchief, iniquity, by its precepts? for the Hebrew reads finget in the third perſon, and not fingis. The throne of iniquity are the wicked, they who abuſe the power which God hath put into their hands; they frame miſchief by a law, they overwhelm the weak with their authority; they afflict, oppreſs them.

LABOUR. See Gen. iii. 17, 18, 19. Pſalm cxxvii. 1, 2, 3, 4. And Prov. vi. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. Eccluſ. xxix. 28, 29, 30, 31. Acts xviii. 1, 2, 3, 4. and xx. 33, 34, 35. And 1 Theſ. xi. 9, 10, &c.

LACEDEMONIANS, Λακεδαίμονες, the lake of dæmons; a Greek compound of λακκος, a lake, and δαίμονες, demons, or bad genii: otherwiſe happy.

LACEDÆMON, otherwiſe called Sparta, a celebrated and very ancient city in the Peloponneſus: ſaid to have been called at firſt Lelegia, from Lelex, its firſt king, who was, they ſay, contemporary with Creon and Erichthonius. It afterwards took the name of Lacedæmon from Lacedæmon, the ſon of Jupiter and Semele: Laſtly, that of Sparta, from queen Sparta, wife to Lacedæmon.

The Lacedæmonians were always diſtinguiſhed by their valour. Lycurgus formed their government and gave them laws. He ſettled a council compoſed of thirty-two, of whom the king was the firſt. This council could conclude nothing without the conſent of the people. Many of Lycurgus's laws reſemble thoſe of Moſes; e. gr. equality in partition of lands, reſpect to old men and magiſtrates, frugality, abhorrence of drunkenneſs and intemperance; they brought up their ſons and even their daughters in the laborious exerciſes of war; they inſpired them with a love of liberty and independency, they ſpoke little, and ſaid much in few words. The Laconic ſtyle grew into a proverb for its brevity.

The intercourſe between the Jews and the Lacedæmonians, does not appear to have been eſtabliſhed till the time of the Maccabees, when Jonathan Maccabæus having ſent deputies to Rome, directed them alſo to Lacedemon, Macc. vii.

It was probably Areus, or Arius I. king of Lacedæmon, who wrote to Onias I. high-prieſt of the Jews. This prince was certainly contemporary with Onias, and hiſtory agrees well with this opinion. The beginning of Onias I. we fix to A. M. 3682, his death to 3702.

As to the relation between the Jews and Lacedæmonians, it may be proper to remark, firſt, that according to the Greek text, the Lacedæmonians firſt firſt wrote to the Jews, and certified them, that they had found in ſome old books, that they were relations, and had the patriarch Abraham, for their common father. The Jews, though proud of their noble origin, did not reject this pretenſion of the Lacedæmonians. Both believed they were related. We have Arius's letter to Onias, but we do not find Onias's anſwer to Arius; it appears however, by the ſequel of the hiſtory, that the matter was very well received in Judæa, and that both people maintained ſincerely their alliance and relation.

The high-prieſt Jaſon being obliged to quit Judæa, his country, and Arabia, whither he had retired, went to Lacedæmon, and there deſired protection. 2 Macc. v. 9. The high-prieſt Jonathan, brother to Judas Maccabæus, wrote to the people and ſenate of Lacedæmon, to renew their ancient alliance; 2 Macc. xii. 6. their relation was not conteſted. It muſt be confeſſed, nevertheleſs, that if this were founded only on the documents remaining in ſcripture, or in prophane authors, their belief was ill grounded. But they might at that time have proofs and monuments in their poſſeſſion which are unknown to us.

Some have advanced, that Ebal the ſon of Joktan, Gen. x. 28. (Vide apud Scal. Iſagog. lib. 3. p. 382.) was the ſame with Ebalus, the father of Tyndarus, and grandfather of Caſtor, Pollux, and Helena; but chronology rejects this opinion; and beſides, this would not prove that the Lacedæmonians and Jews had Abraham for their common father, ſince Ebal is ſix or ſeven generations older than Abraham.

Others believed, D. Thom. ſeu alius in Libb. Mac. that the Lacedæmonians were ſprung from Hagar, or Keturah, by Abraham; but this is uncertain, and a mere conjecture. Grotius imagines, that the Lacedæmonians being deſcended from the Dorians, and the Dorians from the Pelaſgians, who were originally of the countries adjacent to Syria or Arabia, it has been ſaid at random, that the Lacedæmonians and Jews were of the ſame race; this is one of thoſe agreeable opinions which will not abide rigid examination.

Eutychius patriarch of Alexandria, deduces this relation from Eſau's ſide: He believes, that Eſau married not only Canaanite women, but, likewiſe Greek women; from whence proceeded the alliance between the Jews and Greeks: but it were to be wiſhed, that this ſuppoſed marriage between Eſau and theſe Grecian women were even probable.

Some derive it from Cadmus, who being a Phœnician, and coming into Greece with ſome Arabians, occaſioned this report. The foundation of the city of Lacedæmon is attributed to Cadmus, and the etymology of the name Sparta, which ſignifies ſown, is borrowed from Cadmus's having ſown the ſerpent's teeth, which ſprung up men. Diodorus Siculus relates, that a multitude of ſtrangers ſettling in Egypt, and beginning to alter the laws and cuſtoms of it, the natives of the country drove them out, and obliged them to retire where they could: part of them withdrew into Greece under the conduct of Danaus and Cadmus; the others, having Moſes at their head, made themſelves maſters of Judæa, which at that time was intirely deſolate. Here ariſes a conjecture concerning the common origin of the Lacedæmonians and Jews.

The foundation of Sparta is by ſome authors attributed to a man whoſe name was Sparton, and who accompanied Bacchus in his wars and travels; others attribute it to Spartus the ſon of Phoroneus. Some will have it, that this Sparton, Bacchus's companion, was a Jew; if this were well proved, there would be no other foundation wanting to affirm, that the Jews and Lacedæmonians were derived from the ſame father. But Pauſanias remarks, (Corinth.) that the Lacedæmonians knew of no ſuch man, and did not acknowledge him to be the founder of their city.

The ancients believed, that the Jews were originally of the iſle of Crete. This opinion was common in the time of Tacitus: Judæos Creta inſula profugos noviſſime Lybiæ inſediſſe, &c. Tacit. Hiſt. lib. v. initio. Mount Ida, not very different from that of Juda; the Idæi not much unlike Judæi; the river Jarden having the ſame name as the Jordan in Paleſtine; the laws of the Cretans given by Minos, thoſe of the Lacedæmonians by Lycurgus, thoſe of the Jews by Moſes: All this in the moſt remote antiquity. The Cretan people ſent colonies into Paleſtine: The Philiſtines were originally Cretans. Lycurgus the Lacedæmonian legiſlator long dwelt in Crete, and borrowed his laws from thence. All this might have ſuggeſted the belief, that the Jews and Lacedæmonians were of the ſame original.

Joſephus Antiq. lib. xii. cap. v. took the paſſage of Jonathan's letter to the ſenate of Lacedæmon in a ſenſe different from what we read in the Maccabees. Theſe books import, that, Albeit we need none of theſe things, for that we have the holy books of Scripture to comfort us. Joſephus makes Jonathan ſay, that the Jews, wanted not the teſtimony of ſtrangers to be perſuaded, that the Jews and Spartans were brethren, having the ſacred writings in their hands which furniſhed them with proofs of it, &c. This explanation of Joſephus is followed by many interpreters; but where are theſe paſſages of ſcripture which demonſtrate this relation? Except we ſuppoſe, what is very uncertain, that the Lacedæmonian came from the Edomites or Iſhmaelites.

LACHISH, לכיש, ſhe walks, ſhe goes; from ילך jalac, and יש jeſh, to be: otherwiſe, who exiſts of himſelf; from the pronoun כ c, and the prepoſition ל l, and יש jeſh, to be, to exiſt.

LACHISH, a city ſouth of Judah, Joſhua x. 23. xv. 39. Euſebius and St. Jerom mention a village called Lachiſh, ſeven miles from Eleutheropolis, ſouth: Sennacherib beſieged Lachiſh, but did not take it; from thence he ſent Rabſhakeh againſt Jeruſalem, 2 Kings xviii. 17. xix. 8. 2 Chr. xxxii. 9.

LAEL, לאל, To God himſelf, or to the ſtrong and mighty; from the prepoſition ל l, to, and אל el, God: or the ſtrong.

LAHAD, להד, who praiſes and gives commendations; from ידה jadah, to praiſe.

LAHMI, לחמי, λαχμὶ, or Bethlehemite. My bread, or my war; the ſame as lechem, and the pronoun י i, my.

LAHMAS, or Lahmam, לחמם, λαμμὰς, their bread, or their war (See LEHEM,) and the pronoun מ am, theirs.

LAHMAS, a town of Judah. Joſhua xv. 40. Heb. Lachma.

LAISH, ליש, lion.

LAISH, or Laiſa, ליזה, a city, Iſai. x. 30. lioneſs.

LAISH, father of Phalti, of the town of Gallim. 1 Sam. xxv. 44.

LAIS, or Leſem, otherwiſe Paneas, afterwards Cæſarea Philippi, and laſtly Neronias. Many ſuppoſe it was the ſame as Dan. But Dan was different from Leſem and Paneas. Dan was four miles from Paneas, towards Tyre. See PANEAS.

LAKE. There were three chief lakes in Judæa; the lake Aſphaltites, the lake of Tiberias, and the lake Semechon: alſo towards Egypt, the lake Sirbon. Beſides theſe, ſome pools were alſo called lakes: as that of Cendervia, from whence the little river Beleus flowed, eaſt of Ptolemais; that near Cæſarea Paleſtine, the lake Phiala, at the foot of Libanus; the lake Jazer, and that of Heſebon beyond Jordan. Iſaiah xxii. 11. ſpeaks likewiſe of a lake which Manaſſeh cauſed to be made, between the two walls of Jeruſalem.

The lake Aſhan is mentioned 1 Sam. xxx. 30. there was a lake probably near the city of Aſhan, which belonged to Judah. See Joſhua xv. 42. The Hebrew reads Cor Aſhan, the town of Aſhan. It was given firſt to Judah, and afterwards to Simeon. Joſhua xix. 7. St. Jerom read Bebor-Aſan, "in Lacu Aſan," inſtead of Becor-Aſan.

Lacus is often uſed for a ciſtern. Conſider the hole of the lake from whence they were taken out, ſays Iſaiah li. 1. i. e. the covenant of your fathers and mothers. And as their tombs were generally holes in rocks, or under ground, wherein the bodies of the dead were diſpoſed in a ſort of niches, the ſcripture often calls tombs, lakes; ſo (Vulgate) Lacum aperuit & effodit eum, & incidit in terram, quam fecit, Pſ. vii. 16. And again, Unto thee will I cry, O Lord, my rock, be not ſilent to me, anſwer me, leſt, if thou be ſilent to me, aſſimulabor deſcendentibus in lacum, I become like thoſe who go down into the grave, the pit. Pſ. xxviii. 1.

The Hebrew בור Bor ſignifies a pit, a ciſtern, a lake, a ſepulchre, a hollow deep place, wherein wild beaſts are ſhut up, (ſuch as lions,) or ſlaves, as ſtill practiſed in Africa, and other places. Zachary ſays, ix. 11. Emiſiſti vinctos tuos de lacu, out of priſon. Jeremiah was caſt into priſon, in which priſon was a well of mud, without water, Jer. xxxviii. 6, 7, 8. Lacus noviſſimus ſignifies the deepeſt, the furtheſt part of the tomb or priſon: Invocavi nomen tuum, Domine, de lacu noviſſimo, Jer. Lam. iii. 55. And Ezekiel xxxii. 23. ſpeaking of the king of Aſſyria's ſepulchre ſays, that it is placed in the deepeſt part of the cave: quorum ſepulcra data ſunt in noviſſimis laci.

In Paleſtine wine and oil were preſerved in great tubs or ſubterranean ciſterns, in the manner almoſt wherein water is preſerved by us; theſe are likewiſe called lakes: For this reaſon, when talking of a preſs, they ſay, they dig a lake, or ſubterraneous great tub, for receiving the wine. Mat. xxi. 33. Vineam plantavit homo & circumdedit ſepem, & fodit lacum. And St. John, Rev. xiv. 19, 20. ſays, that the Angel gathered the grapes to put into the lake of God's wrath, &c. [i. e. a reſervoir.] See WINE-PRESS.

LAKUM, לקום, λακὰμ, to confirm, or to raiſe up; from the prepoſition ל l, to, and קום kum, to raiſe, or confirm.

LAKUM, a city of Nephtali. Joſhua xix. 33.

LAMB. This word in ſcripture ſometimes comprehends the kid: the Hebrews at the paſſover were at liberty to chuſe either for a victim. The original Seh in general ſignifies a youngling whether of a goat or ewe. Agnus anniculus, a lamb of a year old, may likewiſe be interpreted a lamb of the year, born in the year, but which does not ſuck: for to ſacrifice the paſchal lamb while it uſed the teat, or to ſeethe it in the milk of its dam, was prohibited. Exod. xii. 5. Lev. xxiii. 12. On other occaſions the law required, that the young ſhould be left eight days with its dam before it was offered. Exod. xxiii. 30. Lev. xxii. 27.

The prophets repreſent the Meſſiah, in meekneſs, like a lamb which is ſheared, or is carried to the altar, without a complaint. If. liii. 7. Jerem. xi. 19. St. John Baptiſt deſcribes our Saviour by by the name of the lamb of God. John i. 29, 36. and in the Revelations he is pointed out as a lamb that had been ſacrificed. Iſaiah xii. 6. ſays, that in the time of the Meſſiah, the lamb and the wolf will feed peaceably together; in the Goſpel the wicked at the judgment are compared to goats, the righteous to lambs. Our Saviour ſent his diſciples to preach the Goſpel to the Gentiles like lambs amidſt wolves. Luke x. 3.

LAMB OF GOD. By this name John the Baptiſt called Jeſus Chriſt, John i. 29, 36, when he ſaw him coming to him, to ſignify the innocence of this divine Saviour, and his quality as a victim to be offered for the ſins of the world. Laſtly, he might allude to theſe words of the prophet: He is brought as a lamb to the ſlaughter, and as a ſheep before his ſhearers is dumb, ſo he openeth not his mouth. Iſaiah liii. 7. [But if it was a little before the paſſover—then the ſight of a number of lambs going to Jeruſalem to be ſlain as ſacrifices might ſuggeſt this idea: q. 'Behold the true, moſt excellent, lamb of God,' &c.]

LAMECH, לֶמֶךְ, Poor, made low; from מכך macac; or who is ſtruck; from naca.

I. LAMECH, ſon of Methuſelah, and father of Noah. He was an hundred eighty two years old at the birth of Noah; and he lived after it five hundred and ninety-five years; his whole life was ſeven hundred ſeventy-ſeven years, being born A. M. 874, dying 1651.

II. LAMECH, of the race of Cain, was the ſon of Methuſael, and father of Jabal, Jubal, Tubal-cain, and Naamah. Gen. iv. 18, 19, 20, &c. Lamech is celebrated for his polygamy, whereof he is thought to be the author. He married Adah and Zillah. Lamech ſaid to his wives, "Hear me, ye wives of Lamech; have I ſlain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt! If Cain ſhall be avenged ſevenfold, truly Lamech ſeventy-ſeven-fold." Theſe words are a difficulty. There is a tradition among the Hebrews, that Lamech growing blind, killed Cain a hunting, ignorantly, and believing that he killed ſome beaſt; and that afterwards he ſlew his own ſon Tubal-Cain, who had been the cauſe of this murder, becauſe he had directed him to ſhoot at a certain place in the thicket where he heard ſomething ſtir. Several other ſuppoſitions are produced to explain this paſſage all almoſt equally uncertain and abſurd. Joſephus ſays, Lamech had ſeventy-ſeven ſons by his two wives; but the ſcripture mentions only three ſons and one daughter. A book entitled Polygamia Triumphatrix, makes Lamech his hero, and aſſerts, that ſcripture mentions his Polygamy, in order to commend it!!!

LAMENTATIONS. A mournful poem, compoſed by Jeremiah, on occaſion of the pious king Joſiah's death; it was a long time uſed by the ſinging men and ſinging women of Iſrael. 2 Chr. xxxv. 25. This famous poem is believed to be loſt, but we have another of the ſame prophet remaining, compoſed on the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar. Proofs of this occur in every chapter of the Lamentations. The preface, which is very ancient, expreſſes it; Jeremiah ſpeaks throughout of Jeruſalem and the temple, as of things deſtroyed, and prophaned; Eccleſiaſticus ſays, that after the taking of Jeruſalem, the enemies made the ways which lead to it quite deſolate, alluding to this paſſage in the Lamentations, the ways of Zion do mourn, becauſe none come to the ſolemn feaſts.

The two firſt chapters of the Lamentations principally deſcribe the calamities of the ſiege of Jeruſalem. The third deplores the perſecutions which Jeremiah himſelf had ſuffered. The fourth adverts to the ruin and deſolation of the city and temple, and the misfortune of Zedekiah. The fifth is a kind of form of prayer for the Jews in their captivity. At the end he ſpeaks of the cruelty of the Edomites, who had inſulted Jeruſalem in her miſery, and contributed to aggravate it; and he threatens them with the wrath of God.

The four firſt chapters of the Lamentations are in acroſtic verſe, and abecedary; every verſe or couplet beginning with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet, ranged in alphabetical order. The firſt and ſecond chapters contain twenty-two verſes, according to the letters in the alphabet. The third chapter has three verſes together, which begin with the ſame letter; and includes in all ſixty-ſix verſes. The fourth chapter is like the two firſt, and has only twenty two verſes; the fifth is not an acroſtic.

It is particular in the ſecond, third, and fourth chapters, that the letter Pe is before Ain; whereas in the firſt chapter, and in all the acroſtic and abecedary pſalms, Ain always goes before Pe. The reaſon of this is not known; copyiſts have attempted to repair this ſuppoſed defect, but the connection of the diſcourſe requires, that things ſhould be left as they are.

The Hebrews call the Book of Lamentations Echa, from the firſt word of it; or Kinnoth, i. e. Lamentations. The Greeks call them threnoi, which ſignifies the ſame thing. The ſtyle of Jeremiah's Lamentations is lively, tender, pathetic and affecting. It was the talent of this prophet to write melancholy and moving elegies. Never was a ſubject more worthy of tears, nor written with more more tender and affecting ſentiments. The Hebrews uſed to compoſe Lamentations or mournful ſongs on the death of great men, princes, and heroes, and on occaſion of public miſeries and calamities. See 2 Chr. xxxv. 25. Behold they are written in the Lamentations. We alſo have thoſe which were compoſed by David on the death of Abſalom and Jonathan. The prophets Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, having foretold the deſolations of Egypt, Tyre, Sidon, and Babylon, made Lamentations on their fall. It ſeems by Jeremiah, that they had women hired to weep. Call for the mourning women, and ſend for cunning women, and let them take up a wailing for us, &c. Vide Iſ. xiv. 4, 5. and xv. xvi. Jer. vii. 29. ix. 10. xlviii. 32. Ezek. xix. 1. xxviii. 11. xxxii. 2. Jerem ix. 17.

LAMMA, למה, λαμὰ, wherefore, from the prepoſition ל l, for, and the pronoun מה mah, why.

LAMNATZEACH, למנצח, to him that preſides; from נצח natzach, to preſide, to have the overſight of any thing.

LAMNATZEACH. This Hebrew word is read in the beginning of many pſalms. The LXX and Vulgate tranſlate, in finem, for the end, or for eternity. Many refer this word to the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, who appeared in the world at the end of the times and ages, preordained for that purpoſe. Others interpret it of the calling of the Gentiles and reprobation of the Jews: others of eternity, or the laſt judgment; but theſe explanations are rather myſtical than literal. Some conſtrue, in finem, by always. q. d. a pſalm which deſerves to be eternally in the mouths and memories of the faithful.

The Greek interpreters Aquila, Symmachus and Theodotion, render the Hebrew, Lamnatzeach, victorious, or who giveth victory, or a ſong upon ſome victory. But if we examine the text of the pſalm bearing this title, we ſeldom find any thing relating to victory. They who ſuppoſe theſe titles to relate to the victories of Jeſus Chriſt, open a larger field, ſince our Saviour overcame the world, death, and the devil, by his ſufferings, humiliations, and death, as well as by his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and glorious myſteries; but we deſire a grammatical and literal explanation.

The generality of modern interpreters maintain with the Rabbins, that Lamnatzeach, ſignifies to the maſter of the muſick, to him who preſides over the claſs of ſingers, or muſicians, in the temple. The verb Natzach, whence Lamnatzeach is derived, ſignifies to direct workmen; to preſide over ſingers; or muſicians. [Thus in 2 Chr. xi. 2. where Solomon's workmen are numbered, there are alſo מנצחים עלרהם, which the LXX there render rightly by words ſignifying to order—to direct work—to overſee or inſpect, ἐπιςάτας ἀυτῶν, and ver. 18. ἐργοδιώκπας, and chap. xxxiv. 12. ἐπίσκοποι. And this word is particularly uſed of muſicians, 1 Chr. xv. 21. where Mattathiah, &c. are appointed, to excel, in the margin—to overſee, i. e. to order the muſic. The paſſages wherein the word Lamnatzeach occurs, may eaſily be explained in this ſenſe: which therefore is probably its true ſignification.]

A great number of Levites in the temple, were employed in ſinging praiſe to God. Each company had its preſident, or maſter, Natzach. A long enumeration of them 1 Chronicles vi. 31. concludes with theſe words: theſe are they whom David ſet over the ſervice of the ſong in the houſe of the Lord. The principal were Aſaph, Heman, Ethan, and Jedathan. The companies of ſingers were diſtinguiſhed not only by their families, and their rank in the temple, but likewiſe by the muſical inſtruments they uſed. Chenaniah was celebrated for ſtrength and ſweetneſs of voice; 1 Chron. xv. 22. and Chenaniah chief of the Levites was for ſong: he inſtructed about the ſong, becauſe he was ſkilful. When the ark was removed to Jeruſalem, Nenaiah preſided over the band of young women who ſung in that ceremony. 1 Chro. xv. 18, 20. In the titles of the pſalms we ſee ſome, for example, which are addreſſed to the preſident of the eighth, or of the third, band, Pſ. xi. xii. 1. Others were ſet over thoſe who played upon Neginah, a muſical inſtrument played on by the fingers. Pſ. iv.

Some of theſe Menatzeachs, or muſic-maſters, preſided in the courts of princes, directing the companies of muſicians of both ſexes which were employed there, as well as elſewhere in religious ceremonies. On feſtivals and rejoicings, alſo on ſolemn and mournful occaſions, thoſe who ſung and played on inſtruments were all directed methodically. Among the women alſo who were hired to mourn, was a female preſident, who directed the whole company, and tuned their lamentations. When David had compoſed any pieces of ſacred poetry, he gave them to Aſaph, to be ſet to muſic, and ſung in the temple. So we underſtand 1 Chr. xxv. 2. Aſaph propheſied according to the order of the king; and we find ſeveral pſalms addreſſed to Aſaph, preſident of the muſic. David himſelf did not think it below him ſometimes to preſide over the muſicians, and direct the band; this we infer from the Pſalms entitled, to David the ſervant of God, preſident of the muſic. Pſ. xi. and xxxvi. or to David head of the muſic.

LAMPS. Are frequently mentioned in ſcripture, and and it may be worth obſerving what their form was anciently. The ancients did not commonly uſe wax or tallow, but rather oil in their lamps. The lamp or candleſtick with ſeven branches which Moſes placed in the Holy, and thoſe which Solomon placed afterwards in the temple of Jeruſalem, were cryſtal glaſſes filled with oil, and put on the branches of the candleſtick. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXXIII. p. 55. The lamps or candleſticks uſed in houſes were commonly put on a pretty high ſtand on the ground. The lamps of Gideon's ſoldiers, Judg. vii. 16. and thoſe of the fooliſh and wiſe virgins, Matt. xxv. 1, 2, &c. were of another ſort. They were a ſort of torches made of iron or potters earth, wrapped about with old linen, which was moiſtened from time to time with oil. M. Bernier ſays, (Letter to M. de Merville, p. 34) that in the Indies they ſtill uſe lamps of this kind. They are, ſays he, a piece of iron let into ſticks, the ends whereof are wound about with old rags, which from time to time are moiſtened with oil. He that carries the light moiſtens it out of a veſſel of braſs or tin, with a long neck, which he carries in his hand. Gallonius de cruciatib. Martyr. cap. vi. ſays, that ſome of theſe ancient lamps are ſtill found in the ruins of Rome. They were veſſels made of iron or potter's earth, large, and with holes on the top about four inches wide, or ſomething more, ending in a point below, and grafted into a piece of wood, as an handle. Into theſe veſſels they put oil, or other combuſtible matter, to maintain the fire or light. In Homer they light up a fire with a ſort of oily, ſweet ſmelling wood upon high candleſticks, placed in the middle of the chamber. Homer Odyſſ. Σ. ver 106. Notwithſtanding, we muſt acknowledge, that anciently they uſed wax candles, flambeaux, and lights coated with wax, and other combuſtible materials, and even oily, gummy woods, in particular ceremonies: Jaſon, high-prieſt of the Jews, received king Antiochus at Jeruſalem by torch light, with great acclamations. 1 Macc. iv. 22.

Beſides the common ſignification of the word Lamp, it denotes in a figurative ſenſe, the hope, heir, reſource, and guide of the people. After the danger of David, when attacked by the giant Iſhbibenob, the Iſraelites ſaid to him; Thou ſhalt go no more out to war with us, leſt thou extinguiſh the Lamp of Iſrael, 2 Sam. xxi. 17. God would not ſuffer all the tribes to ſhake off the yoke of Rehoboam, that David might have a Lamp always before the Lord in Jeruſalem, 1 Kings xi. 36. that there might be always a prince of his family. See 1 Kings xv. 4. and 2 Kings viii. 19. and 2 Chr. xxi. 17. Prov. xxiv. 20. and Pſalm cxxxii. 17. are to be underſtood in the ſame ſenſe.

The Lord is called the Lamp of his ſervants, their hope, their ſuccour: 2 Sam. xxii. 29. and Pſalm xviii. 28. And Job ſpeaking of his firſt proſperity, ſays, xxix. 3. Oh that I may again ſee thoſe days of old, wherein his Lamp ſhined upon my head, and by his light I walked through darkneſs! And Solomon; Prov. xiii. 9. The light of the righteous rejoiceth; but the lamp of the wicked ſhall be put out. And Prov. xx. 20. Whoſo curſeth his father or his mother, his lamp ſhall be put out in obſcure darkneſs: which may be underſtood either of the death of ſuch ſons, or of their abandoned hopeleſs ſtate.

Lamps ſometimes ſignify lightning, and fire from heaven. Populus videbat voces & lampades; Exod. xx. 18. the thunder and lightning.

The people received Holofernes cum coronis & lampadibus, Judith iii. 10. in order to do him honour. They obſerved the ſame cuſtom in their compliments to new married people, as appears by the parable of the ten virgins, Matt. xxv. 1, &c.

The commandments of God are, as it were, a lamp to guide the righteous: Lucerna pedibus meis verbum tuum, Pſ. cxix. 105. And Prov. vi. 23. (See Light.) St. John Baptiſt is called a burning and a ſhining light, John v. 35. And our Saviour is the Lamp of the New Jeruſalem, Rev. xxi. 22.

LAND. Denotes often the country of the Iſraelites, or the country, or diſtrict, which is ſpoken of; the land of Canaan, the land of Egypt, the land of Aſſur, the land of Moab. Behold my land is before thee, Gen. xx. 15. ſettle yourſelf where you think proper. The Hebrews ſent to view the promiſed land, reported, that it was a land which devoured its inhabitants. Numb. xiii. 33. it was encompaſſed with enemies, expoſed to continual dangers. [Rather it did not feed, but ſtarved its inhabitants.]

The land of the living, the habitation of the bleſſed in the other life; or Paleſtine, in oppoſition to the land of captivity, where the Jews conſidered themſelves as being, as it were, in the grave. See Pſalm xxvi. 13. li. 7. lv. 23. cxli. 6. Iſai. xxxviii. 11. liii. 8, &c.

The land of forgetfulneſs, of obſcurity; the grave. Pſalm lxxxvii. 13. Job x. 21, 22. Pſalm lxii. 10, &c.

LANGUAGE. Several queſtions are propoſed on this ſubject, as 1. Whether God was the author of the firſt language; whether Adam received it from him by infuſion; or formed and invented it by his own induſtry and labour? 2. Whether this language is ſtill in being? 3. Which is it?

It

It is diſputed by ſome, whether mankind have a natural language, as birds have a natural way of ſinging, and animals of crying: Dogs bark, wolves howl, and aſſes bray, naturally: Thus in ſimilarity ravens croak, pigeons coo, and other birds emit other ſounds. Some cry, others chirp, each according to its nature and ſpecies. Thus ſhould man have ſome natural language, which all men ſhould ſpeak, and probably did ſpeak before the deluge. And as men groan when they are ſorrowful, and chuckle when they are glad; as they threaten and cry aloud when they are angry; and all this naturally, and uniformly, it is preſumed by ſome, that they would all ſpeak the ſame primitive language, which was Adam's, did not education change our natural notions, and did not the habits we contract when young, ſtifle the voice of nature in us.

The ancients, who were unacquainted with the true hiſtory of the world's creation, reported, that under the happy reign of Saturn, not only all men, but even all terreſtrial animals, birds, and even fiſhes, ſpoke the ſame language: That mankind, not ſufficiently ſenſible of their happineſs, ſent a deputation to Saturn, deſiring immortality, repreſenting, that it was not juſt that they ſhould be without a prerogative granted by him to ſerpents, which are yearly refreſhed by ſhedding their old ſkin, and aſſuming a new one. Saturn in great rage not only refuſed their requeſt, but puniſhed their ingratitude, by depriving them of that unity of language, which kept them aſſociated. He confounded their language, and thereby put them under a neceſſity of ſeparating. Plato in politico. Philo de confuſ. ling. p. 310. [N. B. Tower of Babel.]

Others have believed, that Nature produced men and animals of different ſpecies in different places, and gave them certain ſounds and accents to expreſs their paſſions, as joy, grief, aſtoniſhment, and deſire: That afterwards neceſſity prompted them to invent diſtinct words and expreſſions, to ſignify things whereof they ſtood in need. Horat. Satyr. lib. i. ſtan. 3, ver. 99, 100. Diodor. Sicul. lib. I.

> Putare aliquem tunc nomina diſtribuiſſe
> Rebus, & inde homines didiciſſe vocabula prima > Deſipere eſt. Lucret. lib.. v. ver. 10, 49.

Nature produced ſounds, and neceſſity taught men to invent language.

> Ac varios linguæ ſonitus natura ſubeg'it
> Mittere, & utilitas expreſſit nomina rerum.

Vitruvius ſays, lib. ii. de Architectura, cap. 1. that the firſt men continued for a long time, like beaſts, in caves under ground, without ſpeech; making themſelves underſtood by one another by repeated poſtures, and ill-articulated voices; that by ſignifying the ſame thing by the ſame ſounds, they accuſtomed themſelves to ſpeak, and ſtruck out a language.

Pſammetichus king of Egypt, adopting this theory, ſays, Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 2. was curious to know what nation was the original. He took two new-born infants, and had them brought up ſeparately, that no one might ſpeak to them. He believed that the language which theſe children ſhould ſpeak would be the natural and primitive language of man, and that he might from thence infer, that the people who ſtill ſpeak it were the oldeſt upon the earth. When the children were of age to talk, the ſhepherd who had the care of them obſerved, that as often as he ſaw them, they cried out to him beccos. Upon enquiry it was found, that among the Phrygians beccos meant bread: Whereupon it was concluded, that the Phrygians were the moſt ancient people.

This way of reaſoning was on many accounts erroneous: for ſuppoſing the Phrygians to have been the moſt ancient people in the world, had they preſerved their primitive language in its purity? Might not chance have produced beccos, as it does abundance of other words in all languages? Might not theſe two children, having been bred up among ſheep, learn ſuch a ſound from their bleatings?

If there were any language natural to man, all men would have a great propenſity, and diſpoſition to ſpeak it, and many traces of it would remain among the different people of the world. Children that were abandoned and expoſed, or deaf, would ſpeak this language; which is contrary to experience. Let any one leave a child without talking to it, and it will never ſpeak any language, either known, or unknown. Melabdin Echebas, king of Indoſtan, or Great Mogul, (Purchaſe, lib. 1. cap. 8. apud Walton, proleg. 1. note 3.) having appointed a child to be brought up ſecluded from the company of men, the child continued without ſpeaking. There were two boys of about nine years old found in 1661, amidſt a troop of bears in Poland, one of which was taken, and great endeavours were uſed to teach him to ſpeak; but this could never be accompliſhed: he ſhould, however, have ſpoken the language natural to man, there having been no defect in his tongue. [Thoſe who remember Peter the wild boy, who was taken in a wood in Germany, and who had a penſion from the king, and who long lived in Hertfordſhire, will confirm this account.]

We

We muſt conclude therefore, that there is no national language peculiar to man. He has indeed certain natural ſounds, motions, and ſigns to expreſs his paſſions, joy, pleaſure, grief, deſire; but he has no ſpeech or articulate ſound, whereby to ſignify his thoughts. The induction which ſome draw from animals, who have, they ſay, a kind of language, is many ways falſe and defective. Animals have certain cries and ſounds, whereby they declare their joy, their appetite, or pain: ſo man expreſſes his joy by laughing, his grief by ſighing; but this is very different from ſpeech. It is ſaid farther, that birds have a language which is underſtood among them, and which ſome men have pretended to underſtand. But if we take a young ſinging bird that has not learned a note from the old ones, it will imitate the note or chirp of any other kind of birds, or even the tunes of muſical inſtruments [witneſs the piping bullfinches.] And if it were poſſible to breed it up ſo that it ſhould hear nothing, it would produce only uncertain, indeterminate, and chance-medley ſounds.

So that taking the matter rightly, neither men nor animals have any natural language: and certainly the ſyſtem which ſuppoſes men and beaſts to have been produced by chance in different places of the world, and to have formed each ſeparated by itſelf, a particular language after its own fancy, neceſſity, and conveniency, is not maintainable. Chance is not a cauſe capable of producing a living organized body, much leſs a reaſonable animal; to put matter in motion requires a moving cauſe different from matter; and to impreſs a regular motion on bodies, requires a reaſonable and intelligent cauſe; and although man may now invent words, and form additional language, yet it does not follow, that the firſt men ſo formed their language, nor that any nation made one for itſelf: There is a great diſtance between poſſibility and fact.

Moſes repreſents Adam and Eve as the ſtock from whence all nations ſpring. He deſcribes them as reaſonable and intelligent, ſpeaking, and giving names to things. There is a neceſſity for ſuppoſing the almighty power of God, not only to derive beings out of nothing, but likewiſe to give them form, life, and reaſon; and if we admit God as the creator, there is no difficulty in owning him to be the author of the language of the firſt man.

What was the firſt language which God taught Adam? In diſcuſſing this queſtion ſeveral difficulties ariſe. The generality believe, that this primitive language was the Hebrew; others ſay the Syriac, Chaldee, Æthiopian, or Armenian. There is ſcarce any Eaſtern Language which has not pretended to this honour. Beccanus maintained, that it was the Flemiſh, and derived etymologies from it: Adam he derived from Haasdam, i. e. who hateth the heaps; Eve, from Euvat, veſſel of the age; Abel, from Haas-Belg, who hateth war; Cain, from Quaat-Ende, bad end; Methuſelah, from Machtuſalig, ſave yourſelves, (ſupply, from the Deluge.) Other learned men aſſert, that the firſt language is irrecoverably extinct. Others believe that it ſubſiſts in the Hebrew tongue, and its derivatives, but greatly impaired and changed.

If we refer to the Sabians, the diſpute would be ſoon decided; ſince they ſhew a book which they aſcribe to Adam; the character of it is very ſingular, but the language is almoſt entirely Chaldee. Upon this notion the language of this book muſt prevail, and Chaldee be acknowledged to come neareſt to the language of Adam; but we know how far we may truſt the pretenſions of the Sabians.

The generality of criticks have declared for the Hebrew before all others. The conciſeneſs, ſimplicity, energy, and fertility of it, and its relation to the moſt ancient oriental languages, which ſeem to derive from it the etymologies of the names borne by the firſt of mankind, which naturally occur in this language; the names of animals, which are all ſignificant in Hebrew, and deſcribe the nature and property of theſe animals, particulars which are not obſerved in other languages, theſe characters uniting incline us very much in favour of its primacy and excellency; it has another privilege, that the moſt ancient and venerable books in the world are written in Hebrew.

Nevertheleſs very able critics, (Grot. ad Geneſ. xi. 1. & not. in. lib. de verit. Relig. Chriſt. n. 16. Huet. demonſtr. prop. 4. cap. 3. Cluver. German. Antiq. lib. 1. p. 74. Georg. Horn. not. in Sulp. Sev. lib. 1. Henric. Kippeng de lingua primæva, &c.) are of opinion, that the Hebrew tongue, as at preſent in the Bible, or as it was in the time of Moſes, is not the primitive language, pure, and uncorrupted; they obſerve many words in the Bible, the originals whereof are not in Hebrew. They allow, that there is more of Adam's language preſerved in the Hebrew, than in any other tongue; but this they ſay has undergone changes and alterations, and in the many ages from Adam to Moſes, many native roots of it have been loſt, and others of foreign extraction received.

Theodoret. (qu. 60, 61. in Geneſ. Georg. Arnira præfat. in Gram. Syr. Myricæus præf. in Gram. Chald.) and the Maronites maintain, that the Syriac or Chaldee, is the true language of Adam. This aſſertion they found on the roots and etymologies of the names Adam, Eve, Abel, &c. in the Syriac and Chaldee tongues; and upon Abraham's ſpeaking Chaldee as his natural language, before he ſpoke Hebrew, this being the language of Canaan. It is replied, that as to etymologies, the Hebrew tongue has the ſame advantage as the Chaldee, and is preferable in reſpect to ſimplicity and energy, and ſeems to be rather the parent than the child of the Chaldee: and laſtly, there is ſo much affinity between theſe two languages, that it is very credible Abraham ſpoke both, and that Hebrew, as the moſt ſimple and ancient, was preferred by this patriarch and his deſcendants.

The Eaſtern languages are moſtly derived from the Hebrew. Noah, probably, ſpoke the ſame language as Adam, and Noah's language was preſerved among his deſcendants till the confuſion at Babel, Gen. xi. 1, 2. The whole earth was of one lip.

It is queſtioned, in what manner this confuſion happened? 1. Some believe that the words juſt cited, may be underſtood as ſignifying only the agreement and union of opinions, among men at that time, who were reſolved by their joint labours to build a tower, in order to make their names celebrated. Others think, that God by his extraordinary power wrought a ſudden change in their memory and imagination, producing a forgetfulneſs of their natural language, and teaching them a new one; or putting them under a neceſſity of learning another.

St. Gregory of Nyſſa is of opinion, that this account of Moſes intends ſomething very ſimple and natural, i. e. that while men were diſperſed in different places of the earth, it happened, as a natural conſequence of their diſperſion, that each making ſome alteration in the language received from his forefathers, in proceſs of time it became ſo diſtinct, that they were no longer able to underſtand one another. But the generality of critics have not approved of this ſyſtem, becauſe the miracle recorded by Moſes of the confuſion at Babel, is reduced by it to nothing. We need only read his text to be ſatisfied, that he intended to deſcribe a miraculous event.

Another queſtion relates to the number of languages formed at the confuſion of Babel. The ancients, for the moſt part, were of opinion, that the number of languages was equal to the number of thoſe who undertook the edifice; ſo that, as there were at that time ſeventy heads of families, there were likewiſe ſeventy languages. But where have they intelligence of theſe ſeventy heads of families?

Some reckon them thus, Japheth had fourteen ſons, Ham thirty, and Shem twenty-ſix, in all ſeventy. Some reckon ſeventy two, becauſe the Septuagint add two perſons to thoſe enumerated by Moſes; namely, Eliſa to the genealogy of Japheth, and Caïnan to that of Ham. Euphorus, cited in Clemens Alexandrinus, reckoned ſeventy five languages, Clem. Alex. lib. 1. Strom. and Pacianus, biſhop of Barcelona, reckoned an hundred and twenty. Ep. contra Novatianos.

But the names Caïnan and Eliſa, added by the Septuagint to the text of Moſes, no way concern thoſe who adhere to the Hebrew; and are content with ſeventy. They who believe that Arphaxad, Salah, and Eber were not concerned in the tower of Babel, nor in the puniſhment that followed it, leſſen the number ſeventy by three; Joktan the ſon of Eber, and his ſons, to the number of thirteen, in all probability, were not born at the time of that tower, conſequently here is a new diminution.

Some reckon but twenty ſorts of languages in ſcripture, which were more perhaps than were formed at the confuſion of Babel. Others think, that at firſt there were but three languages, thoſe of the families of Shem, Ham, and Japheth. The number of ſeventy languages appears too large, and was not neceſſary for God's deſign; three would not have been ſufficient to oblige men to a ſeparation, but ten or twelve languages were more than were requiſite for ſuch a purpoſe.

St. Luke, Acts ii. 4, 5, &c. relates, that the Holy Ghoſt having deſcended on the apoſtles on the day of Pentecoſt, they began to ſpeak all ſorts of languages; ſo that ſtrangers, who came to Jeruſalem from all parts, were amazed when they heard them ſpeaking each in his own language.

In Daniel, the peoples under the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar were diſtinguiſhed by languages, tribes and nations. In Revelations (v. 9, alibi, &c.) in like manner the kingdom of the Meſſiah is diſtributed by people, nations, tribes and languages, Thou haſt redeemed us out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. Moſes relating the diſtribution of the ſeveral countries of the world among the ſons of Ham, Shem, and Japheth, ſays, that they were divided in their lands every one after his tongue, after their families, and after their nations.

LAODICEA, Λαοδικεία, Gr. juſt people; compound of λαὸς, people, and δίκαιος, juſt.

LAODICEA. There are ſeveral cities of this name, but ſcripture ſpeaks only of that in Phrygia, gia, on the river Lycus, near Coloſſæ. Its ancient name was Dioſpolis: afterwards Rhoas. Laſtly, Antiochus the ſon of Stratonice rebuilt it, and called it Laodicea, from the name of his wife Laodice. St. Paul never was in this city, and the Laodiceans had never ſeen his face in the fleſh, Col. ii. 1. Notwithſtanding, upon information from Epaphras their apoſtle, that falſe teachers had propagated pernicious doctrines in Laodicea and Coloſſæ, he wrote to the Coloſſians, and deſires them, when they had read his letter, to ſend it to the Laodiceans; and writes in the like manner that the Laodiceans would ſend their letter to the Coloſſians. And when this epiſtle is read among you, cauſe it to be read alſo in the church of the Laodiceans, and that ye likewiſe read the epiſtle from Laodicea, και την Λαοδικείας ἵνα και ὑμεῖς ἀναγνωτε. Coloſſ. iv. 16.

St. Paul's expreſſion, And ye likewiſe read the epiſtle from Laodicea, is ambiguous. It may either ſignify the letter, which he wrote to Laodicea, or that which the Laodiceans wrote to him. Interpreters have been divided; ſome, Greg. Magn. lib. xxxv. cap. 15. Moral. in Job. Philaſtr. de hæreſ. cap. 88. Haymo. Hervæus, &c. taking it in the former, others in the latter ſenſe. We have extant a letter under the name of St. Paul to the Laodiceans. Theodoret, in Coloſ. iv. and St. Jerom had ſeen one with this title, Hieronym. in Catalog. legunt quidam & ad Laodicenſes Epiſtolam; ſed ab omnibus exploditur. The fathers of the ſeventh council ſay, Septima Synod. Œcumen. an. 787. ſeu Nicena xi. Act. 6. that their predeceſſors had likewiſe a knowledge of one. But both rejected it as falſe and ſpurious; and all men of learning are convinced that is a counterfeit, which is cited under St. Paul's name, and is inſerted in ſome ancient bibles printed in Germany and Antwerp. We find it likewiſe in ſome old MSS. There is reaſon alſo to queſtion whether that which the ancients ſpeak of be the ſame with this, ſince we have it not in Greek; that publiſhed by Hutter in that language having been tranſlated by him from a Latin copy. Beſides, Philaſter ſays, that the heretics have added ſomething to the epiſtle to the Laodiceans; and Timotheus, prieſt of Conſtantinople, libell. de his qui ad Eccleſiam accedunt, apud Meurſ. Var. divin. p. 117. tells us, that it was forged by the Manichees; now there are no footſteps of manicheeiſm, nor of any other hereſy in that which we have in our hands, and which runs thus: —Paul an apoſtle not of men, nor by man, but by Jeſus Chriſt, to the brethren who are in Laodicea, grace and peace to you from God our Father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. I thank God in all my prayers, that you are firm and perſevering in good works, waiting for the promiſe of God at the day of judgment. Suffer not yourſelves to be moved by the vain talk of thoſe who accuſe the truth, that ſo they may perſuade you to forſake the goſpel which I have preached. I truſt that God will ſo order things, that my diſciples may continue fixed to the perfection of the truth of the goſpel, and in the practice of good works, whereby they will deſerve eternal life. The bonds which I bear for Jeſus Chriſt are known of all the world, I rejoice at them, aad take pleaſure in them; and this will be of uſe to me in procuring eternal ſalvation, by the help of your prayers, aad the aſſiſtance of the Holy Spirit, whether in life or death: for to me to live in Chriſt is life, and to die is joy. He will grant you through his mercy to be always united with the moſt perfect love. Wherefore, dearly beloved brethren, as ye have learned that the Lord muſt come, continue in the ſame ſentiments, and guide yourſelves in his fear, and ye ſhall have eternal life, for it is God that worketh in you. Do therefore every thing that you do without ſin, and practiſe continually that which is moſt perfect. My deareſt brethren, rejoice in our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, and ſhun all ſordid gain. Direct all your petitions to God; remain firm in the opinion that ye have of Jeſus Chriſt, and practice always that which is moſt perfect, true, pure, juſt, and lovely. Retain in your hearts what ye have learned, and ye ſhall have peace. All the ſaints ſalute you. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with your ſpirit, Amen. Cauſe this to be read to the Coloſſians, and read that which is directed to the Coloſſians.

But, if this epiſtle be ſpurious, as is agreed, what was that of the Laodiceans, which St. Paul requires the Coloſſians to read in their aſſembly? Marcion, (apud Tertul. lib. v. contra Marcion. cap. 11, & 17.) pretended that this was the epiſtle to the Epheſians; Grotius is of the ſame opinion, as are le Clerc and Hammond. They ſay St. Paul having writ an epiſtle to the Epheſians and Laodiceans, conceived in the ſame terms, he deſired that theſe ſhould be looked on as circular letters throughout all Aſia Minor, and ſhould be ſent from one church to another. Now as Laodicea was nearer to Coloſſæ than Epheſus, St. Paul choſe rather, that the Coloſſians ſhould addreſs themſelves to the Laodiceans, than to the Epheſians, in order to receive this letter.

Others in great number, both ancients and moderns, tell us, that this was an epiſtle, which the Laodiceans had written to St. Paul, and which that apoſtle was deſirous the Coloſſians ſhould read. There is ſome probability in this hypo-theſis; but we cannot deliver it as a true one. St. Paul, one would think, ſhould rather have ſent from Rome the letter which he received from the Laodiceans, if he had a mind, that it ſhould be read by the Coloſſians, than refer the Coloſſians to thoſe of Laodicea for a copy of it, when it was uncertain whether they had preſerved one or not.

Others affirm, that St. Paul wrote a letter to the Laodiceans at the ſame time with that to the Coloſſians, which letter is not come to our hands. But there is indiſputable proof, that St. Paul did not then write to Laodicea; for he deſires the Coloſſians to ſalute the brethren of Laodicea in his name, chap. iv. 15. We had better therefore ſuppoſe, that St. Paul ſpeaks of the letter he received from Laodicea, which is loſt. This fact indeed, is not certain; but it is the moſt plauſible ſuppoſition, to explain the paſſage in queſtion.

LAPIDOTH, לפידות, enlightned, or lamps; from לפד lephad.

LAPIDOTH, the propheteſs Deborah's huſband, Judg. iv. 4. Some are of opinion, that Lapidoth was the place of her birth or habitation. Others conſidering the ſignification of lapidoth, which ſignifies lamps, have imagined, that Deborah employed herſelf in making wicks for the candleſtick in the tabernacle. [others read lapidoth ſplendors—i. e. "a woman of ſplendors"—a woman of a magnificent eſtabliſhment, &c.]

LAPWING, in Latin, upupa, a bird by Moſes declared to be unclean. Lev. xi. 19. A lapwing is about as large as a thruſh; its beak long, black, thin, and a little hooked; its legs are grey and ſhort. On its head a tuft of feathers of different colours, which it raiſes or lowers as it pleaſes. Its neck and ſtomach are ſomething reddiſh. Its wings and tail black with white ſtreaks. The Hebrew name of this bird is dukipha, דוכיפה. The LXX. and St. Jerom tranſlate it lapwing.

It is very beautiful, but does not ſing. Pliny calls the lapwing trimeſtris, becauſe it is to be ſeen only three months. It retires, in all probability, betimes into warmer countries. It lives generally in old ruins, or along the highways. The male has a fuller and higher tuft than the female, and the colours of his feathers are brighter and more lively. There are abundance in Germany.

LASHA, לשע, Vulgate, leſa. For crying: from the prepoſition ל l, for, and שוע ſhuah, to cry: otherwiſe, to ſave; from ישע jaſhah: otherwiſe, to anoint.

LASHA. Moſes deſcribing the limits of the land of Canaan ſays, that it reaches ſouth to Laſha. Gen. x. 19. The Chaldee and St. Jerom think Laſha to be Callirhoe, which lies north of the Dead Sea, and diſcharges itſelf into it. But it is much more natural to underſtand it of the city of Laſha, Luſa, or Eluſa, which was at pretty near an equal diſtance between the Dead Sea, and the Red Sea. Ptolemy mentions this city of Luſa, and ſo do Joſephus, and Stephens the geographer. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 2.

LASTHENES, Λασθένης, the force of the ſtone; from λαᾶς. or λίθος, a ſtone, and σθένος, ſtrength.

LASTHENES, prince of Crete, who ſettled Demetrius Nicator, the ſon of Demetrius Soter, on the throne of Syria, by his troops. Demetrius, in acknowledgment, gave Laſthenes the government of Syria, and the principal authority in his kingdom; he called him his father and couſin. But Laſthenes abuſing his power, involved king Demetrius in great perplexities, out of which he never could diſengage himſelf perfectly. A. M. 3856, ante A. D. 148. See 1 Macc. x. 67, 68. Joſeph. lib. xiii. cap. 8. Juſtin. lib. xxxv.

LAVERS, of Solomon's Temple. Vide TEMPLE.

LAUGHTER, riſus. Laughter is an indication of joy, inſult, mockery, aſſurance, or admiration. Sarah in her tranſport of joy called her ſon—Iſaac, i. e. laughter. Gen. xxi. 6. Woe unto them that laugh now, ſays our Saviour, for they ſhall weep. Luke vi. 25. At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh; thou ſhalt not fear it, thou ſhalt be perfectly ſecure againſt thoſe evils. God laugheth at the wicked; he deſpiſes their vain efforts. Iſhmael laughed at Iſaac, he inſulted him, he vexed him according to St. Paul's explanation. Gal. iv. 29.

Laughter in general implies rejoicing. There is a time to laugh, and a time to weep, i. e. a time to rejoice, and a time to be afflicted. Eccl. iii. 4. Bleſſed are ye who weep now, for ye ſhall laugh, Luke vi. 21, 25. I ſaid of laughter, of joy, pleaſure, it is mad, Eccleſ. ii. 2. Your laughter ſhall be turned into mourning, your joys ſhall terminate in ſorrow, in repentance, in remorſe. James iv. 9.

Laughter does not become a wiſe man. A fool lifteth up his voice with laughter, but a wiſe man doth ſcarce ſmile a little. The laughter of a fool is as noiſy as the crackling of thorns, Eccluſ. viii. 8.

Abraham's laughter, when God promiſed him a ſon, was a mark of admiration and gratitude, not of doubt: the ſcripture which relates it, does not diſapprove of it, as it does of Sarah's. Gen. xvii. 17.

LAW. This word, when alone, is taken for the law of Moſes, or ſometimes, for the religion of the Jews in oppoſition to the goſpel. Joſephus remarks, that the Greek legiſlators were modern in compariſon of Moſes, and that the ancient Greeks were unacquainted with the very term nomos, (law) it is not in Homer, the moſt ancient writer, as many think, of the Greeks.

Greeks

The Rabbins pretend, that Noah's ſons received certain laws which compoſe the law of nature, and bind all people, in all countries. Maimonides believes, that the ſix firſt were given to Adam, and that God added a ſeventh to Noah. Of theſe precepts the firſt, ordains ſubmiſſion to judges and magiſtrates; the ſecond, forbids—blaſphemy againſt God; the third,—idolatry and ſuperſtition; the fourth—inceſt, ſodomy, beſtiality, and ſins againſt nature; the fifth—murder, and all effuſion of blood; the ſixth—theft; the ſeventh—the eating of the limb of any animal while living, i. e. eating of crude blood, &c.

A diſtinction is generally made between the law of nature, and poſitive laws. The law of nature is impreſſed on our hearts, ſuch as our obligation to worſhip the ſupreme Being, to honour our parents, and thoſe in dignities, to obey ſuperiors, to do that to no man which we would not have done to us, &c. Poſitive laws are of ſeveral kinds: moral, civil and political, or ceremonial. Moral laws are, generally, only conſequences, or explanations, of the laws of nature. Judicial, civil, and political laws regard principally the duties of men in ſociety, the order and polity of the ſtate; they reſtrain the violence of wicked men, they defend the weak from the oppreſſion of the ſtrong, and regulate duties, rights and powers. Ceremonial laws reſpect the external worſhip of God, the duties of miniſters and people towards God, and their reciprocal obligations to one another, with relation to the divine Being.

The Law was given to the Hebrews, by the intervention of Moſes, on Mount Sinai, fifty days after their departure out of Egypt, A. M. 2513, ante A. D. 1491. The principal laws are thoſe of the Decalogue, vide Exod. xx. 1, 2, &c.

Some learned men have been of opinion, that Moſes in moſt of his laws intended—either to imitate thoſe of the Egyptians, or—to reverſe their cuſtoms and maxims, or—to circumſcribe the Hebrews, whereby to prevent their falling into thoſe errors, idolatries and ſuperſtitions, which they had ſeen in Egypt. Others on the contrary have aſſerted, that the Egyptians imitated, in part, at leaſt, the Hebrew laws. In this diverſity of opinions, we think we ought ingenuouſly to confeſs, that the Hebrews often imitated the Egyptians, and that, reciprocally, the Egyptians ſometimes copied the Hebrews: that the Egyptians having a different turn of mind, on many occaſions kept at a diſtance from the Hebrews; in like manner that the practices of the Moſaic laws, which oppoſe the ſuperſtition of Egypt, were not inſtituted without deſign, and that the legiſlator of the Jews intended to cure the Iſraelites of their proneneſs to idolatry, and to reſtrain the evil habits which they had contracted in Egypt.

As to laws, judicial or ceremonial, we may believe that Moſes acted according to his prudence, in retaining what might be uſeful among thoſe of Egypt, in rectifying ſuch as might be made good, and, by contrary laws, endeavouring to ſuppreſs what was oppoſite to juſtice, charity, reaſon, or to the true intereſt of his people.

The law of Moſes being the ſhadow only of things to come, but bringing nothing to perfection, as St. Paul ſays, Heb. x. 1. vii. 19. it was neceſſary that Jeſus Chriſt ſhould complete what was imperfect in it, ſhould reform what abuſes it tolerated, and ſhould fulfil what it only promiſed and typified: and this he has executed with great preciſion. He declares in the goſpel, Math. v. 17, that he came not to deſtroy the law, but to perfect it. He has explained, modified, and reſtrained the law of Moſes, more particularly the explanations which the Rabbins, and maſters in Iſrael, had given of it; explanations, which were rather corruptions, than illuſtrations.

St. Paul hath, in ſome ſort, finiſhed what our Saviour had begun; or rather he hath ſet in their full light, the purpoſes of his Maſter. E. gr. that, the law of Moſes is, in ſome ſort, abrogated by the goſpel, that ſince the death of the Meſſiah the legal ceremonies are of no longer obligation; that, we are no longer under the yoke of the law, but under grace; Rom. vi. 14. that Jeſus Chriſt hath procured for us the liberty of ſons, inſtead of the ſpirit of bondage, which reigned under the Old Teſtament: in a word, that it is neither the law nor the works of it, that juſtify us, Rom. viii. 1, 2, &c. but faith animated by charity, and accompanied with good works, Gal. iv. 31. v. 13. When we ſay, that the goſpel hath reſcued us from the yoke of the law, we underſtand only the appointments of the ceremonial and judicial law, and not thoſe moral precepts, whoſe obligation is indiſpenſable, and whoſe obſervation is much more perfect, and extenſive in the law of grace, than it was under the old law.

As to the particular laws of Moſes, they who would ſee them more particularly may conſult the articles of this dictionary, where they are treated of; for example, Paſſover, Sabbath, Blaſphemy, Adultery, Sacrifices, Burnt-Offerings, &c.

ORAL LAW, or tradition, which the Jews ſay they they have received by tradition from their anceſtors. They affirm, that Moſes received equally the written, and the oral law, on Mount Sinai: that the latter was given only by word of mouth, and hath been tranſmitted by the elders. Thus they attribute equal authority to both, both having the ſame origin, and flowing equally from God. Nay, they give a preference to the oral, before the written law; for this they ſay is in many places obſcure, imperfect, and defective, and could not be uſed as a rule without the aſſiſtance of the oral law, which ſupplies all that is wanting in the written law, and removes all difficulties.

Wherefore they add to the written law the explanations, modifications, and gloſſes of the oral law, and it is a ſort of maxim among them, that the covenant which God made with them at Sinai, conſiſts leſs in the precepts of the written law, than in thoſe of the oral law; and to the latter they generally give the preference. They ſay, for example, that the words of the Levites are more lovely than thoſe of the law; that the words of the law are ſometimes weighty and ſometimes light; whereas thoſe of the doctors are always of weight: that the words of the elders were of greater weight than thoſe of the prophets. They compare the ſacred text with water, and the Miſhna or Talmud, which contains their tradition, with wine: or, the written law is ſalt, but the Miſhna and Talmud are moſt exquiſite ſpices: the law is only, as it were, the body, but the oral law or tradition, is the ſoul of religion. Ever ſince our Saviour's time they have been reproached with making the word of God of no effect by their traditions. Mark vii. 13. See CABBALA.

LAW. This word often implies the whole ſcripture of the Old Teſtament. The Mahometans, after their leader Mahomet, maintain, that the Jews have corrupted the law, as the Chriſtians, they ſay, have corrupted the goſpel. This accuſation means to diſcredit the ſcriptures, and thereby diſarm both Jews and Chriſtians of the weapons neceſſary to deſtroy Mahometiſm, which is founded properly on this chimerical ſuppoſition only, and the diabolical calumny of that infamous impoſtor. Directly as he had perſuaded his followers of this, he put both Jews and Chriſtians under a neceſſity of proving their copies authentic, free from corruption, and written by the inſpired authors; in the mean while Mahomet impudently advances what he thinks fit, corrupts the hiſtories of the Old and New Teſtament, makes the patriarchs, Moſes, and Jeſus Chriſt ſpeak to ſuit his intereſts and ſyſtem; and when we cry out againſt impoſture and corruption, he ſays, that we ourſelves have altered the ſacred writings, and that we have neither the law nor goſpel intire and pure.

And wherein have the Jews falſified the books of the Old Teſtament? Why, ſay the Mahometans, by adding vowels, which before they had not. It is true, the vowel points are of pretty modern invention; but this is no corruption of the text, it is a determination of the manner wherein we are to read certain words, which without this might admit of diverſe meanings. But theſe vowel points deprive no one of the liberty of reading otherwiſe, if he can find a better ſenſe without them. They add farther, that in the books of Moſes there is no precept which obliges the Jews to praying, faſting, almſgiving, or pilgrimage to Jeruſalem, which is manifeſtly falſe: but inſtead of examining the matter, the conteſt may be ſoon ended by ſaying with Mahomet, when they who have books preſent them to you, neither believe nor reject them; but ſay only, we believe in God, in his books, and in his meſſengers. On this principle the Muſſulmen think themſelves forbidden to tranſlate, or to cite, any thing out of the law or goſpel.

LAZARUS, Λάζαρος, aſſiſtance of God; from עזר hazar, help, and אל el, God: probably the ſame as Eleazar.

I. LAZARUS, i. e. Eleazar, brother to Martha and Mary, dwelt with his ſiſters at Bethany, near Jeruſalem; and Jeſus Chriſt ſometimes lodged with him, when he came to that city. While Jeſus was beyond Jordan with his apoſtles, Lazarus fell ſick; his ſiſters ſent information of this to our Saviour, telling him, that he whom he loved was ill. Jeſus ſaid, this ſickneſs is not unto death, but for the glory of God. After two days he ſaid to his diſciples, that Lazarus was aſleep, but that he would go and awake him: meaning that he was dead, and he would reſtore him to life. Jeſus on his arrival found, that he had been already four days in the grave. Martha having got intelligence that Jeſus was coming, went to meet him, and expoſtulated on his delay. Within a little time after Mary likewiſe went to meet Jeſus, who ſeeing her weeping, groaned in the ſpirit, and was himſelf troubled. Then he aſked, Where have ye laid him? When he was come thither, he ſaid: Take away the ſtone, and Jeſus having returned thanks unto his Father for that he had always heard him, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. Then he who was dead came forth bound hand and foot, with grave-clothes, and his face wrapped up in a napkin. This miracle which was wrought, wrought, as we may ſay, at the very gates of Jeruſalem, made a great noiſe; and the prieſts reſolved on the death of Jeſus. John xi. 1, 2, &c. Six days before his laſt paſſover, Jeſus came again to Bethany, where he had raiſed Lazarus from the dead: and Lazarus was one of thoſe who reclined at table with him. The Jews obſerving, that the reſurrection of Lazarus had made a great impreſſion on the peoples' minds, took a fooliſh reſolution to procure the death of both. That part of their wicked deſign, which related to our Saviour, they executed; but ſcripture does not tell us what became of Lazarus. St. Epiphanius ſays, that there was a tradition of Lazarus's being thirty years of age, when Jeſus Chriſt raiſed him from the dead, and that he lived thirty years longer. So that he died by this account A. D. 63. The Greeks ſay, that he died at Citium, a town in Cyprus, where his ſepulchre was to be ſeen near the walls of the city; and that there were churches in the ſame iſland dedicated to his honour. The emperor Leo the Wiſe, having built a church at Conſtantinople in honour of St. Lazarus, about the year 890, ſent to Cyprus, when his body was found near the town of Citium, in a marble tomb, the inſcription whereof imported, that this was Lazarus beloved by Jeſus Chriſt, and raiſed again by him. Grec. apud Lanoi de Magdalen, p. 222.

II. LAZARUS. Luke xvi. 19. ſpeaks of a poor man, named Lazarus, who lay at a rich man's gate full of ſores, and deſired the crumbs which fell from his table, without finding relief or pity; while the rich man enjoyed great plenty, was cloathed in purple and fine linen, and fared magnificently every day. Lazarus being dead, was carried by angels into Abraham's boſom: but the rich man died alſo, and while he was in hell amidſt his torments, he ſaw Lazarus afar off, and cried out; Father Abraham have pity on me, and ſend Lazarus, that he may dip the end of his finger in water to refreſh my tongue. But Abraham anſwered him, Son, thou in thy life time receivedſt thy good things, and Lazarus his evil things: now he is happy, thou art miſerable, &c. Interpreters are divided, whether this be an hiſtory or a parable. St. Irenæus, St. Ambroſe, Gregory the Great, Tertullian, Euthymius, Luke of Bruges, and others, thought it an hiſtory, ſuppoſing the name of Lazarus, and other particulars, intimate ſomething more than a parable. But St. Chryſoſtom, St. Cyril of Alexandria, Theophylact, and moſt modern interpreters, conſider it as a parable. Others obſerve a medium, i. e. that the ſubſtance is hiſtorical, and that our Saviour has embelliſhed it with parabolical circumſtances. Lazarettoes or hoſpitals for the relief of lepers are dedicated to this St. Lazarus. There were abundance of them in France dedicated to St. Lazarus, St. Martha, and St. Magdalen. Among the French, as formerly among the Hebrews, they who were ſeized with a leproſy, were ſeparated from other people: and the cauſes of lepers were committed to the eccleſiaſtical court.

LEAH, לאה, λεία, weary, tired.

LEAH, wife of Jacob, and Laban's eldeſt daughter. Her father introduced her into Jacob's chamber, on the wedding night; Jacob took her to be Rachel, whom he had really married. When he complained of this cheat, Laban anſwered, that the cuſtom of that country forbad to marry the younger daughters before the elder. Gen. xxix. 23, &c. [Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXXVI. page 41.] The Lord obſerving Jacob to have more inclination for Rachel than for Leah, made Leah the mother of ſix ſons and one daughter, viz. Reuben, Simeon, Levi, Judah, Iſſachar, Zebulun, and Dinah: we know not the year of Leah's death; but ſhe died in the land of Canaan, and was buried in the ſame cave with Sarah, Abraham, and Iſaac. Gen. xlix. 31.

LEAVEN; in Greek, Ζύμα, zyme; in Latin, fermentum; in Hebrew, שאר ſeor. The Hebrews were forbidden by the law to eat leavened bread, or any food with leaven in it during the ſeven days of the paſſover, Ex. xii. 15, 19. Lev. ii. 11. And they were very careful in purifying their houſes from all leaven, before this feaſt began. God forbad either leaven or honey to be offered to him in his temple; i. e. in cakes, or in any baked meats. But on other occaſions they might offer leavened bread, or honey. [The ſeveral caſes of conſcience relating to this matter are very numerous, and ſeem to be the principal ſtudy of the Jewiſh doctors. Deciſions of the moſt remarkable may be ſeen in the Miſhnah. [Ordo Feſtorum; tom. ii. p. 138.] See Numb. xv. 20, 21. where God requires them to give the firſt-fruits of the bread, which was kneaded in all the cities of Iſrael, to the prieſts and Levites. St. Paul, 1 Cor. v. 7, 8. expreſſes his deſire, that the faithful ſhould celebrate the Chriſtian paſſover with unleavened bread, 'in azymis,' which, figuratively, ſignifies ſincerity and truth; wherein he teaches us two things. Firſt, that the law which obliged the Jews to a literal obſervance of the paſſover, is no longer in force; and ſecondly, that by unleavened bread, truth and purity of heart were denoted.

OF UNLEAVENED BREAD.

But leavened bread was not uſed at all times: the Hebrews,

Hebrews, in the paſſover, uſed unleavened bread ſeven days, in memory of what their anceſtors did, when they went out of Egypt: they being then obliged to carry unleavened meal with them, and to make bread in haſte; the Egyptians preſſing them to be gone.

The Jews began to cleanſe their houſes from all leaven on the 13th of Niſan, every place was carefully examined, leſt any thing leavened ſhould remain in corners, or in cupboards: ſo, that on the 14th of Niſan, at noon, there was none in the houſe. The Jews at this day, religiouſly obſerve this practice; to which St. Paul in ſome places alludes, ſaying, "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump:" i. e. if there were but a ſmall portion of leaven in a quantity of bread or paſte, during the paſſover, it was thereby corrupted, and rendered unclean: it was to be thrown away and burned. He ſays, elſewhere (1 Cor. v. 7, 8.) that the Chriſtian paſſover conſiſts, not in abſtaining from leavened bread, but in purity, ſincerity, and innocency of conduct; and our Saviour in the goſpel (Matt. xvi. 11) warns his apoſtles to take care of the leaven of the Phariſees, Sadducees, and Herodians, meaning their doctrine.

The practice of the Jews at this day, with relation to unleavened bread, is this: they are forbidden to eat, or to have in their houſes, or in any place belonging to them, either leavened bread, or any thing elſe that is leavened. That they may the better obſerve this rule, they ſearch all the corners of their houſes, with moſt ſcrupulous exactneſs, for all bread or paſte, &c. that is leavened. Having thus well cleanſed their houſes, they whiten them, and furniſh them with kitchen and table utenſils all new, or with others to be uſed only on that day. If they are of metal, they have them poliſhed, and put into the fire to cleanſe all impurity, which they may have contracted by touching any thing leavened. All this is done on the 13th of Niſan, on the eve of the paſſover, which begins the 15th, or, rather, on the 14th in the evening; the Hebrews reckoning their day from evening to evening. Leo of Modena's Ceremonies of the Jews, part iii. cap. 3.

LEBANAH, לבנה, λαβανὼ, or λαβανὰ, white, whiteneſs.

LEBANON. See LIBANUS.

LEBAOTH, לבאות, λαβαὼθ, otherwiſe, the ſign of the heart; from לבב lebab, the heart, and אות oth, a ſign.

LEBAOTH, a town in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 32.

LEBBÆUS, Λεββαῖος, a man of a heart; from לב leb, or לבב lebab, the heart.

LEBBÆUS, otherwiſe Judas or Thaddæus, brother to St. James the Leſs, ſon of Mary, ſiſter to the bleſſed Virgin, and of Cleophas, brother to St. Joſeph. He was married, and had children; for Hegeſippus, as Euſebius relates, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 20. ſpeaks of two martyrs, his grandſons. Nicephorus calls his wife Mary, lib. i. cap. 33. At the laſt ſupper, he aſked Jeſus Chriſt how he would manifeſt himſelf to them, and not to the world? John xiv. 22. The Muſcovites believe, that they received the faith from him. See JUDE.

LEBNAH, לבנה, moon, whiteneſs, brick, or incenſe.

LEBONAH, לבונה, white.

LEBONAH. From Judg. xxi. 19. we learn Shiloh lies north of Bethel, and ſouth of Lebonah. Maundrell takes it for Chan-Leban, four leagues from Sichem ſouthward, and two leagues from Bethel.

LECAH, לכה, λαχὰ, who walks out, or goes away; from ילך jalac.

LECAH, ſon of Er, and grandſon of Judah, 1 Chr. iv. 21.

LECHI, לחי, jaw-bone.

LECHI. Signifies the jaw; Samſon having vanquiſhed the Philiſtines with the jaw-bone of an aſs, after the conflict threw away the jaw which had been his weapon; and called the place where it fell, "the place of the lifting up of the jaw-bone—Ramath Lechi": becoming quickly very thirſty, he cried unto the Lord and ſaid, It is thou, Lord, who haſt given this great deliverance into the hand of thy ſervant: and now ſhall I die for thirſt, and fall into the hand of the uncircumciſed. Hereupon God opened one of the large teeth in lechi, the jaw-bone, and a fountain ſprung out of it, to allay Samſon's thirſt, and the place retained the name of Lechi, or the jaw-bone. Judges xv. 18.

The Hebrews ſometimes called naked, ſharp, and ſteep rocks, teeth. 1 Sam. xiv. 4, 5. Job xxxix. 28. Now, God opened a rock called Machtes, or the cheek-tooth, which was at the place where Samſon obtained his victory, and which, for this reaſon, he called Lechi, or the jaw-bone. This fountain iſſuing out of a rock called the Cheek-Tooth, at a place named the Jaw-bone, has perſuaded ſome perſons, that this fountain came immediately out of a tooth-hole in the aſſes' jaw-bone, which would be a very ſurprizing miracle. But as we have now explained the matter, the miracle of the fountain iſſuing out of the rock at Samſon's prayer is acknowledged, and wonders are not to be multiplied without neceſſity. This opinion is followed by Joſephus, by the paraphraſt Jonathan, and many commentators. This fountain ſubſiſted long, and ſtill ſubſiſts, probably, in Paleſtine. Glycus, and the martyr Antoninus, ſpeak of it, as to be ſeen in the ſuburbs of Eleutheropolis. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. v. cap. 10. Arias, Mont. Druſ. Piſc. Amama, Caſtell. Cleric. Schmid. Glycas Annal. part. ii. p. 164. Antonin. Martyr. in itinerario.

[Perhaps this fountain was opened at the very place where the jaw-bone of the aſs fell, when thrown away by Samſon:—whereby, though the water really iſſued from the rock, it might ſeem to come from under the jaw-bone.]

LEEK, porrum, a pot-herb generally known. The Hebrews complained in the wilderneſs, that manna grew inſipid to them; they longed for the leeks and onions of Egypt. Travellers aſſure us, that in Greece and Africa raw onions are excellent. The Egyptians are reproached with ſwearing by the leeks and onions of their gardens: allium cepeſque inter Deos in jurejurando habet Egyptus, ſays Pliny. Juvenal ridicules that ſuperſtitious people, who did not dare to eat leeks, garlic, or onions, for fear of injuring their gods.

Porrum & cepe nefas violare aut frangere morſu;
O ſanctas gentes, quibus hæc naſcuntur in hortis Numina!

JUVEN. SAT. XV.

'Tis mortal ſin an onion to devour!
Each clove of garlic is a heav'nly pow'r:
O holy nations, and O ſacred clods,
Where ev'ry fruitful orchard teems with gods!

LEES, fæces. To drink up the cup of God's wrath, even to the lees. To drink the whole cup to the bottom. See Pſalm lxxv. 8. Iſaiah li. 17. Ezek. xxiii. 34. The Rabbins ſay, that Zedekiah, the laſt king of Judah, drunk the lees of all the foregoing ages.

The lees of the people, ſignifies the vileſt part of them: the lees of Iſrael ſhall return from captivity, and be converted to the Lord. Iſ. xlix. 6, 7. God threatens by Zephaniah, to viſit thoſe who are ſettled on their lees, defixos in fæcibus ſuis, hardened in their ſins. Zeph. i. 12.

LEGIO, a town in Paleſtine, celebrated in Jerom and Euſebius. It lay at the foot of mount Carmel, fifteen miles weſt from Nazareth: in all probability the place ſtill called Legune. It was a camp, where the Romans kept a legion of ſoldiers, to defend the paſſage from Ptolemais to Cæſarea Paleſtine.

LEGION. The Roman legions were compoſed each of ten cohorts, a cohort of fifty maniples, a maniple of fifteen men; conſequently, a legion contained ſix thouſand ſoldiers. Our Saviour cured one who called himſelf legion, as if poſſeſſed by a legion of devils; Mark v. 9. and ſaid to Peter, who drew his ſword to defend him in the olive garden: thinkeſt thou that I cannot now pray unto my Father, who ſhall preſently give me more than twelve legions of angels? Matth. xxvi. 53.

LEHABIM, להבים, flames, or which are inflamed: otherwiſe, the points of a ſword; from להב lehab.

LEHABIM, third ſon of Mizraim. Some think Lehabim denotes the Lybians, one of the moſt ancient people in Africa. Some of them dwelt near Egypt, weſt of Thebaïs; others along the Mediterranean. Lehabim ſignifies inflamed, Lehabah, flame. Lybia is very much ſcorched by the heats of the ſun.

LEHEM, לחם, bread; from לחם lechem: otherwiſe, war, fighting; from מלחמה milkamah, battle.

LEMUEL, למואל, ὑπὸ θεῷ, God with them, or with him; from the prepoſition ל l, with, the pronoun מ am, them, and the word אל el, God.

LENTIL, a ſort of pulſe mentioned in ſcripture. Eſau ſold his birthright to Jacob for a meſs of lentils. Gen. xxv. 30. The lentils of Egypt were very much eſteemed among the ancients St. Auſtin ſays, they were carried into ſeveral parts of the world.

LENTISK, or maſtic-tree, in Latin, Schinus, in Greek, ſchinos; the leaves are always green, the bark reddiſh, gummy, and pliable. It produces a kind of grape; and ſhoots out little hulls like the ſhell of a pea, containing a clear liquor. Maſtic is taken from the lentiſk-tree, by making inciſions in it. There is much of it in the iſlands of Chio and Candia, in Egypt, and the Indies.

There is mention made in [the apocryphal] Daniel of the lentiſk-tree; one of the elders, who accuſed Suſanna, ſaid—he ſaw her talking with a young man under a lentiſk-tree, ſub ſchino. Daniel alluding to the ſound of ſchinus, anſwers him: the angel of the Lord will cut thee in two, ſchiſei ſe meſon. From this alluſion ſome have imagined, that the ſtory of Suſanna could have been written only in Greek; conſequently that Daniel was not the author of it. In anſwer, it is ſaid, perhaps the Greek tranſlator changed the Hebrew name of the tree, and ſubſtituted ſchinos, which furniſhed him with this alluſion; or, that there really was an alluſion between the Hebrew name of the tree, and the puniſhment threatened by Daniel. Vide MASTIC.

LENTULUS. There has been often printed a letter from Lentulus, the ſuppoſed proconſul of Judæa, to the Roman ſenate. Vide Fabric. oper. N. T. tom. i. p. 301. tom. ii. p. 486, 487. The following is a tranſlation of it. "There has a man appeared here, who is ſtill living, named Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe power is extraordinary. He has the title given him of the great Prophet; his diſciples call him the Son of God. He raiſes the dead, and heals all ſorts of diſeaſes. He is a tall, well proportioned man; there is an air of ſerenity in his countenance, which attracts at once the love and reverence of thoſe who ſee him. His hair is of the colour of new wine from the root to his ears, and from thence to the ſhoulders it is curled and falls down to the loweſt part of them. Upon the forehead it parts in two, after the manner of the Nazarenes. His forehead is flat, and fair, his face without any defect, and adorned with a very graceful vermilion: his air is majeſtic and agreeable. His noſe and his mouth are very well proportioned, and his beard is thick and forked, of the colour of his hair; his eyes are grey, and extremely lively; in his reproofs he is terrible, but in his exhortations and inſtructions amiable and courteous: there is ſomething wonderfully charming in his face, with a mixture of gravity. He is never ſeen to laugh, but he has been obſerved to weep. He is very ſtrait in ſtature; his hands are large and ſpreading, and his arms very beautiful; he talks little, but with great gravity, and is the handſomeſt man in the world."

We look on this letter as a piece not to be regarded, but the reader perhaps will not be diſpleaſed to find it here.

LEOPARD, pardus, a fierce and cruel animal, its ſkin is ſpotted with a diverſity of colours; it has ſmall white eyes, wide jaws, ſharp teeth, round ears, a large tail; five claws on its forefeet, four on thoſe behind. It is ſaid to be extremely averſe to man. Its name leopard, implies that it has ſomething of the lion and the panther; the word leopard is not met with in Latin authors till after the fourth century. The ancients read pardus in Latin, and pardalis or panther in Greek: the Vulgate uſes always pardus, never leopardus.

Ignatius, biſhop of Antioch, in his epiſtle to the Romans, uſes the word leopard; which was a reaſon with Bochart for regarding that epiſtle as ſpurious, and not compoſed till the fourth century; but Pearſon and Voſſius acknowledge that epiſtle to be genuine, and reject the remark, that the word leopard was not known before Spartian, who uſes it in the life of Geta.

The Eaſtern people call the leopard ſometimes pars; the Arabians, beber; the Turks, jos; the Cathaians, jem; the ancient Greeks, jos, which the Latins ſometimes tranſlated lynx, or lupus-cervarius. The Perſians, Turks, and Indians uſe a kind of leopard in hunting antelopes and hares. Thamarath, king of the firſt dynaſty of the Perſians, is ſaid to have been the firſt who tamed this creature, and had it taught to hunt antelopes. Togrul-Ben-Arſlan, ſultan of the race of the Selgimides, brought up four hundred of thoſe animals for hunting, having all gold chains, and ſcarlet coverings.

It ſeems from ſcripture, that this animal could not be rare in Paleſtine. We find a town there called Beth-nemrah, or ſimply Nemrah, or Nemrin, a leopard's houſe, or ſimply leopard, or leopards; Numb. xxxii. 3. 36. Iſ. xv. 6. Iſaiah deſcribing the happy reign of the Meſſiah ſays, chap. xi. 6. that the leopard ſhall lie down with the kid, and the calf, and the young lion, and the fatling together. Jeremiah ſays, chap. v. 6. that the leopard lies in ambuſcade near the cities of the wicked; that all they who go out thence ſhall be torn in pieces by this animal. And Hoſea, chap xiii. 7. that the Lord will be unto them as a lion, and as a leopard, lurking in the way of the Aſſyrians, to devour thoſe who paſs by.

The Hebrew, nemor, a leopard, denotes ſomething ſpeckled with a variety of colours. [נמר nemor. LXX. Πάρδαλις. vulg. pardus] Jeremiah ſpeaks of the leopard's ſpots. Can the Æthiopian change his colour, or the leopard his ſpots? The ſcripture often joins the leopard and the lion, as animals of equal fierceneſs. Habakkuk ſays, i. 8. that the Chaldean horſes are ſwifter than leopards. The ſpouſe in the Canticles ſpeaks of the mountains of the leopards, Cant. iv. 8. that is to ſay, of mountains ſtocked with wild beaſts; ſuch as Libanus, Shenir, and mount Hermon. Brocard ſays, that the mountain called by the name of Leopards is two leagues from Tripoli northwards, and one league from Libanus. I can ſcarce believe that Solomon in the Canticles had this mountain in view. See Bochart de animalib. Sacr. lib. iii. cap. 7. p. 785.

LEPER. The law excluded lepers from the converſation of mankind. It baniſhed them into the country, and places uninhabited: Lev. xiii. 45. 46. Many perſons attacked with this diſeaſe often got together, and compoſed a kind of ſociety. We inſtance the four lepers without the city of Samaria, while Ben-hadad king of Syria beſieged it; 2 Kings vii. 3, &c. and the ten lepers who came to Jeſus Chriſt, and deſired to be healed. Luke xvii. 12. This was obſerved ſo punctually, that even kings, under this diſeaſe, were expelled their palaces, ſhut out of ſociety, and deprived of the government, as Uzziah, or Azariah, king of Judah, who was afflicted with this this malady, for attempting to offer incenſe in the temple. 2 Kings xv. 5, 2. Chr. xxvi. 20.

When a leper was cured he appeared at the city gate, and the prieſt examined whether he was truly healed or not. Lev. xiv. 1, &c. After this he went to the temple, took two pure birds, made a wiſp with a branch of cedar, and another of hyſſop, tied together with a ſcarlet ribbon made of wool; an earthen veſſel was filled with water, and one of theſe birds faſtened alive to the wiſp which we have mentioned. The leper who was cured killed the other bird, and let the blood of it run into the veſſel filled with water. Then the prieſt took the wiſp with the live bird, dipped both in the water tinged with the blood of one of the birds, and ſprinkled the leper with it. After this the live bird was let looſe, and the perſon healed and purified in this manner, was again admitted to the ſociety of the healthy, and to the uſe of things ſacred.

Lepers were formerly frequent in Europe. Some are of opinion, that the Jews, who abounded in this quarter of the world, contributed to the ſpreading of leproſies. Others, that they proceeded from the frequent voyages made to Paleſtine in the time of the Croiſades. Theſe lepers were called ladres in French, and many lazarettoes were built for them, conſecrated to St. Ladre, or Lazarus, brother to Mary and Martha; or to St. Job. Matthew Paris ſays, there were nine thouſand hoſpitals in Europe for theſe people. They were ſeparated from the converſation of others, and obliged to keep cloſe in their lazarettoes; they had marks fixed upon them whereby they might be known. They generally carried clappers about them, that they might be diſtinguiſhed and avoided.

For theſe laſt two hundred years leproſies have almoſt entirely ceaſed in Europe, or this diſeaſe has changed its name; and people have found out remedies for it. The ableſt phyſicians have believed, that it differed only in name from the venereal diſeaſe. M. Tournefort, who ſaw ſeveral lepers in the Levant, makes no doubt of it: ſome are incurable, becauſe their diſtemper is inveterate, and has corrupted the whole maſs of blood and humors; others are capable of being healed, by anti-venereals. Many are of opinion, that Job's diſeaſe was a leproſy, but in a degree of malignity which rendered it incurable, and ſo produced a complication of other diſeaſes.

Manetho the Egyptian, Lyſimachus, Molon, Appion the grammarian, Tacitus, and Juſtin, affirm ſeriouſly, that the Jews left Egypt becauſe of their leproſy. Each of theſe hiſtorians relates the matter after his own manner, and adds to it ſome circumſtances of his own: but they all agree, that the Hebrews, who departed from Egypt, were attacked with a leproſy. Appio apud Joſeph. lib. i. contra Appion. lib. ii. initio & Tacit. lib. v. Hiſt. Juſtin. lib. xxxvi.

Tacitus's account of the matter is as follows: Hiſt. lib. iii. "Several authors agree, that the diſtemper of the leproſy having ſpread itſelf very much in Egypt, king Bocchoris conſulted the oracle of Ammon, to learn a remedy for this indiſpoſition. The oracle told him, that he muſt purge the kingdom of this ſort of people, and remove them out of the country as hateful to the gods. Bocchoris thereupon gathered all thoſe together who had this diſeaſe upon them, and ordered them to be conducted into a vaſt wilderneſs, there to periſh with want. Theſe unhappy wretches being reduced to this condition, and not knowing what to do, were continually weeping and bemoaning themſelves; but Moſes, who was more reſolute and conſiderate than they, told them that it was to no purpoſe to implore aſſiſtance from either gods or men, becauſe they were deteſtable to one and the other; but if they would have confidence in him, and follow him, as a guide ſent from heaven, they might under his conduct come into a place of reſt; they followed him therefore at all hazards. And as they were extremely incommoded with thirſt, and expected nothing but death, Moſes perceived a company of wild aſſes, which had juſt been feeding, he followed them, and having met them in a place covered with green graſs, he conjectured that underneath it there might be a ſpring of water; he ordered them to dig, and found enough to ſatisfy the thirſt of all the multitude which followed him.

"After ſeven days march they came into Judæa, and made themſelves maſters of it: ſo they obſerved reſt upon the ſeventh day, as the end of their journey and calamities; and they honoured an aſs, as that which had ſaved their lives by ſhewing them the ſpring of water. They preſerved a great averſion to hog's fleſh, in memory of the leproſy with which they had been afflicted, to which this animal is ſaid to be very ſubject."

There are almoſt as many miſtakes as words in this recital of Tacitus: nevertheleſs other authors, who have diſcourſed of the origin of the Jews, ſpeak of it in a ſtill more wretched manner. The leproſy wherewith they are ſaid to have been attacked, has engaged us to notice it. But if they had been all lepers, how came they to have ſo great an averſion to thoſe who had this diſeaſe? See Joſephus againſt Appion.

LEPROSY. Moſes mentions three ſorts of leproſies; In 1. men; 2. Houſes; and, 3. Cloaths. [The Jewiſh doctors diſtinguiſh ſeveral ſpecies of this diſeaſe. Chanina reckons ſixteen only, R. Doza thirty-ſix; but Ahiba multiplies them to ſeventy-two. See Miſhnah, tom. iv. Tractatus de plagis lepræ, cap. i. pag. 213, 215.]

1. A leproſy in men; this diſeaſe affects the ſkin, and ſometimes increaſes in ſuch a manner, as to produce ſcurf, ſcabs, and violent itchings, and to corrupt the whole maſs of blood. At other times it is only a deformity, and nothing more, as Hipponetus informs us, and as the fathers ſay, where ſpeaking of the lepers in the goſpel cured by Jeſus Chriſt. The Jews looked on a leproſy as a diſeaſe ſent from God, and Moſes preſcribes no natural remedy for the cure of it. He requires no more, than that the diſeaſed perſon ſhould ſhew himſelf to the prieſt, and that the prieſt ſhould judge of his leproſy; if it appeared to be a real leproſy, capable of being communicated to others, he ſeparated the leper from the company of mankind. He appoints certain ſacrifices and particular ceremonies for the purification of a leper, and for reſtoring him to civil ſociety, to the participation of things holy, and to the converſation of other men.

The marks which Moſes gives for the better diſtinguiſhing a leproſy, are ſigns of the increaſe of this diſeaſe. An outward ſwelling, a pimple, a white ſpot, bright, and ſomewhat reddiſh, created juſt ſuſpicions of a man's being attacked with it. When a bright ſpot, ſomething reddiſh or white appeared, and the hair of that place was of a pale red, and the place itſelf ſomething deeper than the reſt of the ſkin; this was a certain mark of a leproſy. They who have treated of this diſeaſe, have made the ſame remarks, but have diſtinguiſhed a recent leproſy, from one already formed and become inveterate. A recent leproſy may be healed, but an inveterate one is incurable. Travellers who have ſeen lepers in the Eaſt ſay, that this diſeaſe attacks principally the feet. Proſper Alpinus ſays, de medicina Ægypt. lib. i. cap. 13. that it is very common in Egypt. Maundrell, who had ſeen lepers in Paleſtine ſays, that their feet are ſwelled like thoſe of elephants, or horſes' feet, ſwelled with the farcy. M. Tournefort, who had obſerved ſeveral lepers in his travels, believes a leproſy to be nothing but an inveterate venereal diſtemper; and that the generality might recover, if helped in time.

The common marks whereby phyſicians tell us an inveterate leproſy may be diſcerned are theſe. It makes the voice hoarſe, like that of a dog who has been barking a long time, and the voice comes through the noſe rather than the mouth: the pulſe is ſmall and heavy, ſlow and diſordered: the blood abounds with white and bright corpuſcles, like millet ſeeds: it is all a ſcurfy ſerum, without due mixture; ſo that ſalt put into it does not melt. It is ſo dry, that vinegar mixed with it bubbles up; it is ſo ſtrongly knit together by imperceptible threads, that calcined lead thrown into it ſwims eaſily on the ſurface of it. The urine is undigeſted, ſettled, aſh-coloured, and thick; the ſediment like meal mixed with bran. The face is like a coal half extinguiſhed, ſhining, unctuous, bloated, full of very hard pimples, with ſmall kernels round about the bottom of them: the eyes are red and inflamed, and ſparkle like thoſe of a cat, they project out of the head, but cannot be moved either to the right or left. The ears are ſwelled and red, corroded with ulcers about the root of them, and encompaſſed with ſmall kernels. The noſe ſinks, becauſe the cartilage rots. The noſtrils are open, and the paſſages ſtopped with ulcers at the bottom. The tongue is dry, black, ſwelled, ulcerated, ſhortened, divided in ridges, and beſet with little white pimples. The ſkin of it is uneven, hard and inſenſible; even if a hole be made in it, or it is cut; inſtead of blood, a putrified liquor iſſues out of it.

The nature and cauſes of a leproſy have been much debated. The generality are of opinion, that the cauſe is internal, in the blood and humors; and that it does not appear outwardly, till it has corrupted every thing within. Others are of opinion, that it is owing to ſome outward cauſe. I think it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh two ſorts of leproſies, one proceeding from inward corruption, the other received by outward communication. Corruption of the blood may be in different reſpects, the cauſe, and the effect of a leproſy. It is the cauſe of it, when the blood being inwardly corrupted, either by bad diet, or other cauſes, produces external effects. Corruption of the blood is the effect of this diſeaſe when it has been caught by touching any perſon infected with it, or any thing belonging to him; for a leproſy is very eaſily communicated; for which reaſon Moſes has taken ſo much precaution to prevent lepers from any communication with perſons in health. And his care extended even to dead bodies thus infected, directing that they ſhould not be buried with others.

We have endeavoured to ſhew that leproſies, and other diſeaſes related to it, are cauſed by imperceptible animalculæ, between the ſkin and fleſh, which gnaw the epidermis and cuticula, and afterwards terwards the extremity of the nerves and fleſh. We are of opinion likewiſe, that the venereal diſeaſe is a kind of leproſy, which the ancients were but too well acquainted with, though they have not given it the ſame name, nor aſcribed the ſame origin to it, as we do to the French diſeaſe. See our Remarks on Job's Diſtemper.

2. The leproſy of houſes, mentioned Leviticus xiv. 34, &c muſt have been known to the Iſraelites, who had lived in Egypt, and muſt have been common in the land of Canaan, whither they were going, ſince Moſes ſays to them: When ye come into the land of Canaan which I give you for a poſſeſſion, if there be an houſe infected with a leproſy, he to whom the houſe belongs, ſhall give notice of it to the prieſt, who ſhall go thither. If he ſees as it were little holes in the wall, and places diſfigured with pale or reddiſh ſpots, which in ſight are lower than the wall, he ſhall go out of the houſe, and direct it to be ſhut up for ſeven days. At the end of this time, if he finds that the leproſy is increaſed, he ſhall command the ſtones infected with the leproſy to be taken away, and thrown without the city into ſome unclean place. New ſtones ſhall be put in the room of thoſe which were plucked out, and the wall ſhall be again rough-caſt. If the leproſy does not return, the houſe ſhall be thought clean; but if it returns, it is then an inveterate leproſy; the houſe ſhall be declared unclean, and immediately be demoliſhed: all the wood, ſtone, mortar, and duſt, ſhall be caſt out of the city into an unclean place.

The Rabbins and ſome others believed, that this leproſy of houſes was not natural, but was a puniſhment inflicted by God on wicked Iſraelites. But we believe this kind of leproſy to be cauſed by animalculæ which erode the ſtones: [Journal des ſçavans A. D. 1668.] Theſe animalculæ are black, about two lines in length, and three quarters of a line broad, incloſed in a greyiſh ſhell, with a very large head, ten very black and very round eyes, four kind of jaws diſpoſed like a croſs, which they are continually ſtirring, and open and ſhut like a pair of compaſſes with four branches. The mortar is eaten by an infinite number of little worms, which are ſomewhat black, about the ſize of mites in a cheeſe, and like mites, have four pretty long feet on each ſide. [Query, the dry rot in timber?]

3. The leproſy in clothes is likewiſe noticed by Moſes, as common in his time: he ſays, if any greeniſh or red ſpots be obſerved upon any woollen or linen ſtuffs, or upon any thing made of ſkin, they ſhall be carried to the prieſt, who ſhall ſhut them up for ſeven days; and if at the end of this time theſe ſpots increaſe, and ſpread, he ſhall burn them, as infected with a real leproſy. If theſe ſpots are not increaſed, the prieſt ſhall command the clothes to be waſhed; and if he afterwards obſerve nothing extraordinary in them, he ſhall declare them to be clean. If the greeniſh or red ſpots remain, he ſhall order the garments ſo ſpotted to be burnt, as unclean: or, if they ſpread and increaſe, he ſhall order the garment to be burnt; or, if the place ſuſpected of a leproſy be in colour like a ſinged garment, and deeper than the reſt; this part of the garment ſhall be taken away, and the reſt preſerved.

To explain the nature and cauſes of this leproſy in clothes, we are of opinion, and experience confirms it, that wool ill ſcowered, ſtuffs kept too long, and ſome particular tapeſtries in Auvergne, are ſubject to worms and moths which eat them. It is very credible, that the leproſy in clothes and ſkins mentioned by Moſes, was cauſed by vermin. In hot countries, and in times when arts and manufactures were not ſo perfect as now, woollen ſtuffs and works were probably more expoſed to vermin, than in our cooler climates, and in the preſent times.

We know not who was the inventor of letters and writing. All agree that it is an admirable and divine art. To paint ſpeech, and ſpeak to the eyes, and by tracing out characters in different forms to give colour and body to thoughts.

Some have been of opinion, that God when he inſpired man with reaſon and ſpeech, communicated to him likewiſe writing. Joſephus ſpeaks of certain columns, erected before the deluge, by the ſons of Seth, upon which they had written aſtronomical obſervations and inventions. Adam and Enoch have been reputed authors of certain books, by ſome, who conſequently ſuppoſed that they had the uſe of writing.

Others maintain, that the uſe of letters is much more modern: ſome give the honour of them to Abraham; others to Moſes; others to the Phœnicians, others to Saturn, others to the Egyptians. Others, more rationally, divide the honour of this invention among ſeveral, and acknowledge that it began among the Eaſtern people, and much later among thoſe in the Weſt; that ſome invented, and others perfected the invention: that letters in the beginning were uncommon in their uſe, and imperfect in their forms; that afterwards they were perfected, and their uſe rendered more familiar.

Crinitus ſays, that Moſes invented the Hebrew letters; Abraham the Syriac and Chaldee; the Phœnicians theirs', which they communicated to the Greeks, who carried them into Italy; Nicoſtratus thoſe of the Latins, Iſis the Egyptian, Ulphila thoſe of the Goths. But all this is probably affirmed at random; for it is beyond queſtion, that the Hebrew and Phœnician letters were anciently the ſame, or differed very little. The Greek and Latin letters are no new invention; the Greek are taken from the Phœnician, and the Latin from the Greek. The writing uſed by Ulphila is taken from the Greek or Latin.

The Egyptian writing, we are aſſured, was in the beginning hieroglyphics, or figures of animals, and other things, engraven on ſtone, or painted on wood, by help whereof the Egyptians preſerved the memory of great events. This way of writing is perhaps the moſt ancient. We ſtill ſee many inſtances of it on Egyptian obeliſks and marbles. Marſham is of opinion, that this way of writing was invented by the ſecond king of Memphis, Thauth, whom the Greeks call the firſt Mercury; another Thauth, or the ſecond Mercury, put into common characters what the firſt had written in hieroglyphic letters. All which was in times of the moſt remote antiquity, if Menes the firſt king of Memphis, was Ham the ſon of Noah.

Lucan affirms, that the Phœnicians invented the common letters before the Egyptians were acquainted with the uſe of paper, and knew nothing of the art of writing in hieroglyphical characters.

> Phœnices primi, famæ ſi creditur, auſi
> Manſuram rudibus vocem ſignare figuris.
> Nondum flumineas Memphis contexere biblos
> Noverat, & laxis tantum volucreſque feræque
> Sculptaque ſervabant magicas animalia linguas.
> LUCAN. lib. iii.

It was probably therefore in imitation of the Phœnicians, that the Egyptians uſed letters in their writing. We cannot be certain that the Egyptians borrowed them from the Phœnicians or Canaanites their neighbours; but two things we know certainly, firſt, that there were great reſemblances in the ancient characters of the two people; ſecondly, that Moſes, who was inſtructed in all the learning of Egypt, wrote in Phœnician characters. The old Egyptian letters are at preſent unknown, though many of them remain. This people loſt the uſe of their writing when under the dominion of the Greeks, and the Coptic or modern Egyptian character is formed from the Greek.

The Phœnicians ſpread the uſe of their letters throughout all their colonies. Cadmus carried them into Greece; the Greeks perfected them, and added others to them. They communicated them to the Latins, and, after the conqueſts of Alexander, extended them over Egypt, and Syria: ſo that the Phœnician writing, which is ſo ancient, and the parent of ſo many others, would at this day be entirely forgot, had not the Samaritans preſerved the Pentateuch of Moſes, written in the old Canaanite or Hebrew character; by the help whereof medals, and the ſmall remains of Phœnician monuments, have been deciphered.

What I have ſaid of the old characters of the Samaritan Pentateuch, is not aſſented to by all. Some learned men, as Poſtellus, Buxtorf the ſon, and certain Talmudiſts, maintain, that the ſquare Hebrew character of the Jews at this day, is the ſame as was uſed by Moſes. Others in greater number, as Origen, Euſebius of Ceſarea, Jerom, Bede, Genebrard, Bellarmin, many of the Rabbins, and the moſt learned critics ſuppoſe, that the Jews gradually quitted their old characters while in captivity at Babylon, and ſubſtituted the Chaldee, which are uſed at this day; while the Samaritans preſerved their Pentateuch written in old Hebrew, or Phœnician characters. Laſtly, other men of learning, as Rabbi Azarias,

Abdias

Abdias de Bartenora, Poſtellus, Buxtorf, Conringhius, and father Sghambati, diſtinguiſhed two ſorts of characters among the old Hebrews, civil and ſacred. The civil is that of the Samaritans, the ſacred that of the Jews; but of this diſtinction there is no proof produced.

It is generally ſaid, that the Hebrews have no vowels, and that to ſupply the want of them, they invented the vowel points, ſometimes uſed by them in their books. But it is certain, that they have vowels, though they do not always expreſs them in their writing; and that the ſound, powers, and quantity of theſe vowels are not always the ſame, as happens likewiſe in other languages. א Aleph, ו Vau, י Jod, and ע Hain are vowels; ה He is an aſpirate only. The vowel points are modern, and the invention of the Maſſorets, about the middle of the ninth, or the beginning of the tenth century. The honour of them is aſcribed principally to the Rabbins Aſher and Nephtali, who lived at that time. The vowel points are ten in number, and expreſs the five vowels according to their different changes and pronunciations. See F. Morinus's Exercitations, Walton's Prolegomena, &c. [The inquiſitive reader may find the ſubſtance of the diſpute for and againſt the antiquity of the vowel points clearly and conciſely repreſented by Dr. Prideaux in the firſt part of his Connection, &c. Book V. and from thence may have a diſtinct view of the chief arguments produced pro and con in this controverſy, by thoſe eminent antagoniſts Capellus, and the two Buxtorfs, &c.] Vide MASSORA, MASORETS.

The Hebrews have certain acroſtick verſes, which begin with the letters ranged in alphabetical order: they may be called likewiſe alphabetical, as if they had been compoſed with deſign of teaching children their alphabet, and the order of the letters. The moſt conſiderable is pſalm cxix. which contains twenty-two ſtanzas of eight verſes each, all acroſtics; i. e. the eight firſt begin with Aleph, the next eight with Beth, and ſo on. Other pſalms, as the twenty-fifth and thirty-third, have but twenty-two verſes each, beginning with one of the twenty-two letters of the alphabet. Others, as the hundred and eleventh, and the hundred and twelfth, have one half of the verſe beginning with one letter, and the other half with another. Thus:

. . . . Bleſſed is the man who feareth the Lord,
. . . . Who delighteth greatly in his commandments.

The firſt half of the verſe begins with Aleph, and the ſecond with Beth. The Lamentations of Jeremiah are likewiſe in acroſtic verſe, as well as the thirty-firſt chapter of Proverbs, from the eighth verſe to the end.

The Jews uſe their characters not only for writing, but for numbers, as did the Greeks, who in their arithmetical computations fixed a numerical value on their letters. But I do not believe the ancient Hebrews did ſo, nor that letters were numerical among them. I ſee no evidence of this in ſcripture. The ſacred authors always write the numbers intire and without abbreviation. I know ſome learned men have attempted to rectify dates, or ſupply years, upon a ſuppoſition that the letters ſerved for numerals in the text of ſcripture; but it was incumbent on them firſt, to prove that the ancient Hebrews uſed that manner: as the preſent Jews do.

The cabaliſts have refined much on the letters of the Hebrew alphabet. Other Rabbins have likewiſe found myſteries in certain letters of the Hebrew text, ſome whereof are turned topſy turvy, others ſuſpended, others cloſed; all which, according to theſe doctors, is myſterious, and deſerves particular conſideration; but be this done deſignedly or accidentally, we may affirm, that the letters in themſelves, ſeparately from the word which they compoſe, have no ſenſe, and include no myſtery. If any will refine on their order and forms, and diſcover in them morality, or, myſtery, let them; provided they do not pretend to uſe their ideas or reflections as proofs of any thing. See CABALA.

Our Saviour ſays, Mat. v. 18. That not one jot or one tittle of the law ſhall paſs away till all be fulfilled: this is a proverbial way of ſpeaking, that all, whatſoever is written, ſhall, without exception, be accompliſhed. The ſame may be ſaid of theſe words of St. Jerom. Quæ minima putantur in lege Domini, plena ſunt ſacramentis.

Some of the ancients have ſpoken of the book of Heaven, legi in tabulis cæli, and the letters as it were ingraved there, by the help whereof they who underſtood it, diſcovered what was to come, and ſaw into ineffable myſteries. Picus of Mirandola, in aſtrolog. lib. viii. cap. 5. who had ſtudied the Cabaliſts, ſaid, that as the aſtrologers ſaw certain images in heaven, from whence they drew their conſequences; ſo the Jewiſh maſters have their alphabet in heaven, and maintain, that they find there the elements and characters of their language. Agrippa affirms the ſame thing, de occult. philoſoph. lib. iii. cap. 20.

Poſtellus ſays he made the experiment. Perhaps, ſays he, I may paſs for an impoſtor, if I affirm, that I have read in the heavens in Hebrew characters, whereof Ezra left the key, whatſoever there is in in nature; nevertheleſs God and his Son are my witneſſes that I do not lie; I will only add that I ſo read it implicitly only. I do not queſtion but an imagination powerfully ſtruck, may read what it pleaſes, and in what characters it pleaſes in the heavens and in the ſtars. To ſupport this whimſical opinion, theſe doctors miſapply the words of Pſalm xix. 1, 5. The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament ſheweth his handy work: their ſound is gone out into all lands, &c.

The letter contrary to the ſpirit. A way of ſpeaking in St. Paul's epiſtles; very common in the eccleſiaſtical ſtyle, Rom. ii. 27, 29. vii. 6. 2 Cor. iii. 6, 7. God hath made us miniſters of the new Teſtament, not by the letter, but by the ſpirit: for the letter killeth, but the ſpirit quickeneth. i. e. the law of Moſes is incapable of giving life to the ſoul, and juſtifying before God thoſe who continue ſervilely addicted to the literal obſervances of it. To obtain holineſs we muſt join with it the ſpirit of faith, hope, and charity; muſt ſupply what is deficient in literal obſervances, by ſpiritual actions of a more ſublime, perfect, and excellent nature; for example, inſtead of bloody ſacrifices, the ſacrifice of an humble and contrite heart: the mortification of our paſſions; death unto ſin, &c.

LETUSHIM, לטושים, λαττυσεῖμ, who work with the hammer, or who poliſh, or are poliſhed; from לאש lataſh.

LETUSHIM, ſecond ſon of Dedan, the ſon of Abraham and Keturah. Gen. xxv. 3. Letuſhim is rendered by ſome, workers in braſs and iron. Hieronym. qu. Hebr. in Geneſ.

LEVI, לוי, who is ty'd and aſſociated.

LEVI, third ſon of Jacob and Leah, born in Meſopotamia, A. M. 2248, ante A. D. 1756. Gen. xxix. 34. After Sichem, the ſon of Hamor had violated Dinah, Jacob's daughter, and ſiſter to Levi and Simeon: theſe two brethren fraudulently engaged Sichem to receive circumciſion, and, on the third day, when the pain was greateſt, they entered the town of Sichem, ſlew all the males, retook their ſiſter Dinah, and pillaged the place. Gen. xxxiv. 25, 26. This action was very diſpleaſing to their father Jacob; Simeon and Levi replied, "Should they violate our ſiſter?" &c.

Levi went down into Egypt with his father, having three ſons, Gerſhom, Kohath, and Merari. When Jacob bleſſed his ſons, he ſaid to Simeon and Levi: "Ye are brethren, and too much united in doing miſchief; ye are the inſtruments of an unjuſt war. God forbid that I ſhould be a partaker in their evil deſigns, and that my honour ſhould be concerned in their combinations; for in their fury they killed a man, and in their reſentment they pierced a wall. Curſed be their anger for it was fierce, and their wrath for it was cruel. I will divide them in Jacob, and ſcatter them in Iſrael." Gen. xlvi. 11. xlix. 5, 6.

Accordingly, Levi was ſcattered over all Iſrael, having no ſhare in the diviſion of Canaan; but only ſome cities in the portions of other tribes. Nevertheleſs, he was not the worſe provided for, ſince God choſe the tribe of Levi for the ſervice of his temple, and for the prieſthood, beſtowed many privileges on it, above the other tribes, in dignity, and in the advantages of life; all the tithes, firſt-fruits, and offerings, preſented at the temple, and ſeveral parts of all the victims, &c.

The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, an ancient, but apocryphal book, informs us, that the prieſthood ſhould be ſettled in the family of Levi; and that the Saviour of the world ſhould be born of his tribe, and that of Judah. It was the opinion of many of the ancients, that the bleſſed Virgin was of the two tribes of Levi and Judah; of Judah by her father, and of Levi by her mother. Levi, as this book ſays, died in Egypt, aged an hundred and thirty-ſeven years, and his ſons, at their return into the land of Canaan, buried him in the cave of Hebron.

LEVIATHAN, לויתן, δράκων, a great fiſh faſtened; from תן than, a great fiſh, and לוי levi, fixed, or faſtened.

LEVIATHAN. This word the fathers underſtand generally, in a moral ſenſe, of the devil, the enemy of mankind, the ſerpent. 2 Eſdras vi. 47, 51. The word Leviathan, according to its etymology, ſignifies a large fiſh, or ſea monſter. לוית leviath may ſignify what is joined, faſtened, or tied together; and תן than, a great fiſh; q. "the great fiſh covered with ſcales, ſtuck cloſe one upon another." The crocodile we know is very long and large, and has ſcales ſo ſtrong, and ſo thick, that the darts of huntſmen and the hooks of fiſhermen cannot penetrate them. In our opinion, Leviathan ſignifies a crocodile.

Job gives an admirable deſcription of the Leviathan in chap. xli. which may be very naturally explained of the crocodile. Others interpret it of the whale, or what the French call the mulart, which is a very large fiſh in the Mediterranean: others, by Leviathan, underſtand, generally, all large fiſh and ſea monſters. Bochart, de anim. ſacr. part. i. lib. i. cap. 7. & part. ii. lib. v. cap. 16, 17, ſhews at large that it is the crocodile. He quotes the Talmud, in the treatiſe on the Sabbath, Sabbath, where it is ſaid, that the calbit, or ſea dog, is the terror of the Leviathan.

Job ſpeaks of the Leviathan in the manner following, Canſt thou draw out Leviathan with an hook, or his tongue with a cord which thou letteſt down? Is the crocodile one of thoſe fiſh which is to be caught with an hook, and faſtened by the tongue; or ſtrung through the mouth and gills, to be carried up and down as one pleaſes? He aſks this, as of a thing impoſſible, which no one could attempt without great temerity. Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 70. relates a way of taking the crocodile with an hook; but this probably was not invented in the time of Job. That hiſtorian ſays, they threw a piece of hog's fleſh upon a large ſtrong hook, into the Nile. The fiſhermen ſtood on the ſhore, where they made a pig cry: the crocodile immediately came forward, and ſwallowed the hog's fleſh with the hook; the fiſhermen drew it on ſhore, threw mud into its eyes, (which are very ſmall in proportion to the reſt of the body) and then killed it.

Canſt thou put a hook through his noſe, or bore his jaws through with a thorn? As they did beaſts of ſervice, ſuch as camels and buffaloes, which were guided in this manner, and directed at pleaſure. Is the crocodile one of thoſe gentle and tractable animals? See Iſai. xxxvii. 29. where he ſpeaks of piercing in this manner the muzzles of beaſts of burden. I will put my hook in thy noſe, and my bridle in thy mouth. The Hebrew of Job may be otherwiſe interpreted: Wilt thou put light into his noſtrils, or pierce his jaw with a thorn? As thoſe ſmall fiſh which are carried to market, ſtrung together in this manner. Shall the companions make a banquet of him? Shall they part him among the merchants? Or as others will have it, Shall the inchanters cut him up, and the Canaanites divide him in pieces for ſale? Shall they charm him like a ſerpent, and cauſe him to burſt with their inchantments?

Lay thine hand upon him, remember the battle, and talk no more; or according to the Hebrew, Lay thine hand upon him and never think of the battle: behold, the hope of him is in vain, ſhall not one be caſt down even at the ſight of him? The crocodile is a very dreadful creature; the hardieſt warrior will not dare to appear before him. Heliodorus Æthiopic. lib. i. tells of one Artemidorus, who lighting by chance on a crocodile while he was ſleeping on the ſands, was ſo ſcared, that he inſtantly loſt both his underſtanding and memory. Job continues, None is ſo fierce that dare ſtir him up. It would be very great raſhneſs to attempt it. Nevertheleſs, the inhabitants of Tentyrus deſtroyed crocodiles wherever they could find them.

Who can diſcover the face of his garment, or who can come to him with his double bridle? The crocodile ſleeps in the day time on the ſand, with his mouth open; but notwithſtanding his being aſleep, who will dare to harneſs him? His body is like ſhields of caſt braſs; it is covered with ſcales preſſed cloſe one upon another. The crocodile is one of the largeſt river fiſh we know of; there have been ſome ſeen five and twenty, or thirty feet in length: the ſkin of its back is ſo hard, there is no piercing it. Under the belly the ſkin is tender, and this is the only place wherein it may be wounded. Who ſhall open the entrance of his jaws? Terror dwells about his teeth. The head of this animal is oblong, and the mouth of it extremely large. It has thirty-ſix very ſolid, ſharp teeth, in its upper jaw, and as many in the lower. His teeth ſhut one within another like the teeth of a ſaw. When he opens his mouth, the opening is ſo wide, that he could ſwallow a man, or even an heifer intire. His head is oblong, and divided almoſt up to his ears. There have been ſome ſeen in India ſo large, that a tall man might ſtand upright between their jaws. They are ſaid to move the upper jaw, whereas other animals move the lower jaw only.

By his neeſings a light doth ſhine, and his eyes are like the eyelids of the morning. But of his mouth go burning lamps, and ſparks of fire leap out. Out of his noſtrils goeth ſmoke, as out of a ſeething pot or cauldron: his breath kindleth coals, and a flame goeth out of his mouth. This poetical deſcription admirably expreſſes the vivacity of the crocodile's eyes, when he ſprings out of the water, the rapidity wherewith he purſues his prey, and the rapacity with which he devours it. Strength is in his neck, and famine walketh before him. The crocodile is in ſhape almoſt like a lizard. His ſtrength conſiſts principally in his neck and head. He ravages every thing; he kills animals of all kinds, and lays waſte the fields; which cannot be expreſſed better than by ſaying, famine walketh before him.

The flakes of his fleſh are joined together, they are firm in themſelves, they cannot be moved. His body is all nerve and muſcle; it is, as it were, impenetrable and invulnerable. His heart is as firm as a ſtone, yea as hard as a piece of the nether millſtone. Theſe expreſſions deſcribe in a lively manner the ſtrength, courage, and intrepidity of the crocodile. Nothing frightens him. Neither ſwords, darts, nor breaſt-plates, can ſtand before him. Travellers agree, that the crocodile's ſkin is proof againſt ſwords, darts, arrows, and fire-arms: if any would pierce him, he muſt ſtrike him under the belly. He eſteemeth iron as ſtraw, and braſs as rotten wood. The arrows cannot make him flee; ſlingers are turned with him into ſtubble.

He maketh the deep to boil like a pot: he maketh the ſea like a pot of ointment.

In the oriental ſtyle, great rivers and lakes are called ſeas. There are crocodiles not only in the Nile, but in lakes. Thoſe of the lake Mœris were adored in Egypt; they carefully prepared proviſion for them, they put rich pendants in their ears, and coſtly bracelets on their legs. When the crocodile ſtirs himſelf with impetuoſity, or caſts up water through his mouth, he makes the lake or river he is in, to boil like a cauldron; his odour is like that of muſk; not only while he is alive, but his fleſh after his death retains this ſcent.

He beholdeth all high things, he is a king over all the children of pride; which ſome explain by ſaying, that the crocodile is the king of other fiſh; but it may be better underſtood of the Egyptians, who are often called in ſcripture children of pride; or proud. Exek. xxxii. 12. Pſa. lxxxix. 10. Iſ. li. 9. Job xxvi. 12. The crocodile was their king, their god. In Hebrew the word king often means the god of any nation; every one knows, that the Egyptians worſhipped the crocodile, and that the crocodile was the emblem or figure of Egypt.

In chapter iii. 8. he ſays; Let them curſe it that curſe the day, who are ready to raiſe up a Leviathan. He means, in our opinion, the Atlantes, and the people of Upper Egypt, who curſe the ſun, becauſe they are burnt with the exceſſive heat of it, Vide Strabo. lib. xvii. p. 563, Plin. lib. v. cap. 8, Herodot. lib. iv. cap. 184; and who are ſo daring, as to wake the crocodile in order to attack, kill and eat him. Pſ. lxxiv. 14. Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 69. Plin. lib. viii. cap. 25. & lib. xxviii. cap. 3. Ezekiel deſcribes the king of Egypt by the name of great Than, or great dragon; great fiſh. Iſaiah, xxvii. 1. Viſitabit dominus ſuper Leviathan, ſerpentem vectem, & ſuper Leviathan ſerpentem tortuoſum, threatens leviathan the piercing ſerpent with death; i. e. the king of Babylon; and leviathan, the crooked ſerpent, i. e. the king of Egypt. The royal prophet ſays, that the Lord created the leviathan to play in the waters. Pſalm civ. 26.

LEVIR, LEVIRATE. We uſe this term, as other authors have done, to denote particularly the law of Moſes, which obliges one brother to marry the widow of another, who died without children; and to raiſe up ſeed to him. From levir, which ſignifies in Latin the huſband's brother, the brother-in-law; the word levirate has been formed. See Deut. xxv. 5. [Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. LXXVI, p. 133. CXXV. p. 39, 40.]

This law is an exception to that which condemns marriages between brothers and ſiſters, and between brothers-in-law and ſiſters-in-law. This law ſeems to have been uſed among the Hebrews and Canaanites, before Moſes; ſince Judah gives his firſt born Er, and Onan his ſecond ſon, to Tamar, and obliges himſelf to give her likewiſe Shelah his third ſon.

The inſtance of Ruth, who married Boaz her huſband's relation, is an evidence of this practice under the Judges. Boaz was neither the father of, nor the neareſt relation to, Elimelech, father-in-law to Ruth, the wife of Mahlon, and yet he married her after his refuſal, who was the neareſt relation. The Rabbins ſuggeſt many exceptions and limitations to this law; as, that the obligation on the brother of marrying his ſiſter-in-law, regards only brothers born of the ſame father and mother; that it has a reſpect only to the eldeſt brother of the deceaſed; and farther, ſuppoſes that he was not married: for if he were married, he might either take or leave his brother's widow. If the deceaſed brother had left a natural or adoptive ſon or daughter, a grandſon or grand-daughter, the brother was under no obligation to marry his widow. If the dead perſon left many wives, the brother could marry but one of them: if the deceaſed had many brothers, the eldeſt alone had a right to all his eſtate, and enjoyed the property which his wife had brought him.

They add, that the marriage of the widow with her brother-in-law was performed without ſolemnity; becauſe the widow of the brother who died without children, paſſed for the brother-in-law's wife, without any occaſion for more ceremony. Notwithſtanding, cuſtom required that this ſhould be done in the preſence of two witneſſes, and that the brother ſhould give a piece of money to the widow. The nuptial bleſſing was added, and a writing to ſecure the wife's dower. Some believe, that this law was not obſerved after the Babyloniſh captivity, becauſe ſince that time there has been no diſtinction of the inheritances of the tribes. The preſent Jews do not practice this law, or at leaſt very rarely.

Leo of Modena deſcribes it in the following manner. "Three Rabbins and two other witneſſes the evening before, chooſe a place where the ceremony may be performed. The next day when they come from morning prayers, they all follow the Rabbins and witneſſes, who in the appointed place, ſit down, and order the widow and her brother-brother-in-law to appear before them, who declare that they there preſent themſelves, in order to be free. The principal Rabbin propoſes ſeveral queſtions to the man, and exhorts him to marry the widow, then, ſeeing him perſiſt in his refuſal, after ſome other interrogatories, the man puts on one of the Rabbin's ſhoes, which is fit for any foot; and the woman in the mean time draws near to him, and aſſiſted by the Rabbin, ſays to him in Hebrew, My huſband's brother will not continue the poſterity of his brother in Iſrael, and refuſes to marry me, as being my brother-in-law. The brother-in-law anſwers, I have no mind to take her. Hereupon the woman ſtoops down, looſens and pulls off the ſhoe, throws it upon the ground, ſpits before him, and ſays in Hebrew to him, with the help of the Rabbin. So ſhall it be done unto that man who will not build up his brother's houſe; and his name ſhall be called in Iſrael the houſe of him that hath his ſhoe looſed. Theſe words ſhe repeats three times, and they who are preſent anſwer as often, He that hath his ſhoe looſed. Hereupon the Rabbin immediately tells her, that ſhe may marry again; and if ſhe requires any certificate of what is done, the Rabbins deliver one to her." Leo of Modena, p. 4. cap. 7.

From this it appears, that the Rabbins do not underſtand Moſes's words literally, that the woman ſhall ſpit in his face; but explain it, ſhe ſhall ſpit in his preſence, ſhe ſhall ſpit on the ground before him; but the text is expreſsly for the former meaning, and Joſephus took it literally in the hiſtory of Ruth, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. v. cap. 11. (πτύειν εἰς τὸ πρόσωπον, inſtead of τύπλειν.) To ſpit in any one's face is a mark of the higheſt contempt. Numb. xii. 14. Vide FRAGMENT, No. LXXVI, page 133.

What is ſaid of his giving his brother's name to the eldeſt ſon which he ſhall have by her, may be underſtood two ways. 1. He ſhall bear the name of the deceaſed; if that was Abraham, the ſon ſhall be called Abraham. 2. He ſhall bear the name of the deceaſed; he ſhall paſs for his ſon; ſhall ſupport his name and family, &c. The Hebrew literally ſays, Deut. xxv. 6. יקום עלושם אחיו. He ſhall be raiſed upon his brother's name, he ſhall be like a young ſucker ſhooting out of his father's name. The example of Ruth, who called her ſon by Boaz, Obed, not Mahlon, the name of her firſt huſband, proves, that it was not neceſſary the child ſhould receive the name of his mother's firſt huſband.

Leo of Modena obſerves, that the Jews ſometimes from avarice, keep their ſiſters-in-law long in ſuſpence, without declaring whether they will marry them or no, to tire their patience, and draw money out of them: wherefore ſome fathers, if they marry their daughters to men who have ſeveral brothers, ſtipulate, that they ſhall ſet the widow at liberty gratis. Others oblige the huſband, in caſe he falls ſick, and is in danger, to divorce his wife, that ſhe may not come into the power of her brother-in-law. The marrying a ſiſter-in-law the Jews call ibum, and the pulling off the ſhoe and ſetting a woman at liberty, chaleza.

LEVITE, לוי, λευίτης, who is faſtened, or joined. See LEVI.

LEVITES. All the deſcendants of Levi may be comprized under this name: but principally, thoſe who were employed in the loweſt miniſtries of the temple, whereby they were diſtinguiſhed from the prieſts, who being deſcended from Aaron, were likewiſe of the race of Levi by Kohath, but were employed in higher offices.

The Levites were deſcendants of Levi by Gerſhom, Kohath, and Merari, excepting the family of Aaron; for the children of Moſes had no part in the prieſthood, and were only common Levites. God choſe the Levites inſtead of the firſt-born of all Iſrael, for the ſervice of his tabernacle and temple. Numb. iii. 6, &c They obeyed the prieſts in the miniſtrations of the temple, and brought to them wood, water, and other things neceſſary for the ſacrifices. They ſung, and played on inſtruments, in the temple, &c. They ſtudied the law, and were the ordinary judges of the country; but ſubordinate to the prieſts.

God provided for the ſubſiſtence of the Levites, by giving them the tythe of corn, fruit and cattle: but they paid to the prieſts the tenth of their tythes; and as the Levites poſſeſſed no eſtates in land, the tythes which the prieſts received from them, were looked on as the firſt-fruits which they were to offer to the Lord. Numb. xviii. 21, 22, 23, 24.

God aſſigned them for their habitations forty-eight cities, with fields, paſtures, and gardens. Numb. xxxv. 1, 2, 3, &c. Of theſe, thirteen were given to the prieſts, ſix whereof were cities of refuge. Joſhua xx. 7. xxi. 19, 20, &c. While the Levites were actually employed in the temple, they were ſubſiſted out of the proviſions in ſtore there, and out of the daily offerings made there; and if any Levite quitted the place of his abode, to ſerve the temple, even out of the time of his half-yearly, or weekly, waiting; he was received there, kept and provided for, in like manner as his other brethren, who were regularly in waiting, Deut. xviii. 6, 7, 8. The conſecration of Levites was without much ceremony.

They wore no peculiar habit to diſtinguiſh them from other Iſraelites, and God ordained nothing particularly for their mourning. 2 Chr. xxix. 34. The manner of their conſecration may be ſeen, Numb. viii. 5, 6, 7, &c.

Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 8, ſays, that in the reign of Agrippa king of the Jews, about A. D. 62, ſix years before the deſtruction of the temple by the Romans, the Levites deſired permiſſion from that prince to wear the linen tunic like the prieſts; which was granted. This innovation was diſpleaſing to the prieſts; and the Jewiſh hiſtorian remarks, that the ancient cuſtoms of the country were never forſaken with impunity: adding, that Agrippa permitted likewiſe the families of the Levites, whoſe office it was to guard the doors, and perform other troubleſome offices, to learn to ſing, and play on inſtruments, that they might be qualified for the temple ſervice as muſicians.

The Levites were divided into different claſſes; the Gerſhomites, Koathites, Merarites, and Aaronites, or prieſts. See Numb. chap. iii. &c.

The Gerſhomites were in number 7,500. Their office in the marches through the wilderneſs was to carry the veils and curtains of the tabernacle. Eliaſaph, the ſon of Lael, was their chief.

The Koathites were in number 8,600, they were employed in carrying the ark and ſacred veſſels of the tabernacle. Elizaphan, the ſon of Uzziel was their chief.

The Merarites were in number 6,200. They carried the ſeveral pieces of the tabernacle which they could not place upon the chariots; Zariel, the ſon of Abihail, was their chief.

The Aaronites were the prieſts who ſerved the ſanctuary; Eleazar, the ſon of Aaron, was their chief.

When the Hebrews incamped in the wilderneſs, the Levites were placed round about the tabernacle. Moſes and Aaron at the Eaſt, Gerſhom at the Weſt, Kohath at the South, Merari at the North. Moſes ordained, that the Levites ſhould not begin ſervice at the tabernacle till they were five and twenty years of age, Numb. viii. 24, 25, 26. or, as he ſays elſewhere, from thirty to fifty years old. Numb. iv. 3. But David finding they were employed no longer in thoſe groſſer offices, of tranſporting the veſſels of the tabernacle, appointed them to enter on ſervice at the temple at twenty years of age. The prieſts and Levites waited by turns, weekly, in the temple. They began their weeks on one ſabbath day, and on the ſabbath day in the following week went out of waiting. 1 Chr. xxiii. 24. 2 Chr. xxxi. 17. and Ezra iii. 8. When an Iſraelite made a religious entertainment in the temple, God required, that the Levites ſhould be invited to it. Deut. xii. 18, 19.

LEVITICUS. The third book in the Pentateuch: called Leviticus, becauſe it contains principally the laws and regulations relating to the prieſts, the Levites, and ſacrifices; for which reaſon the Hebrews call it the prieſt's law. The Jews term it likewiſe Vajicra, becauſe in Hebrew it begins with this word, and he called. The ſeven firſt chapters of Leviticus preſcribe the ceremonies to be obſerved in offering of burnt ſacrifices, of meat-offerings, of bread and cakes, of peace-offerings or thankſgivings, and of ſin-offerings; they regulate what parts were to be conſumed on the fire of the altar, and what were to be given to the prieſt, who offered them. After this are related in what manner the prieſts were conſecrated, and what ſacrifices were offered on that occaſion; alſo, the puniſhment of Nadab and Abihu, for attempting to offer incenſe to the Lord with ſtrange fire. On this occaſion Moſes appoints the mourning of the prieſts, and forbids them to drink wine while waiting in the temple.

Chapter xi. to xv. give rules for diſtinguiſhing beaſts clean and unclean; the leproſy of men, of houſes and of habits; for the purification of men indiſpoſed with a gonorrhæa, and of women after child-birth. After this, the ceremonies on the day of ſolemn expiation are regulated; alſo the degrees of relation, permitted or forbidden in marriage. Then prohibitions of alliances with the Canaanites, of idolatry, theft, perjury, calumny, hatred, the ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles, magic, divinations, ſoothſaying, proſtitutions, and adultery; explaining the blemiſhes which unfitted animals for ſacrifice. Chapter xxii. notices the principal feſtivals in the year, the Paſſover, Pentecoſt, the Feaſt of Tabernacles, the Great Day of Expiation, the Feaſt of Trumpets, or beginning of the civil year, (including the ſtory of a man who was ſtoned to death for having blaſphemed the name of the Lord) the ſabbatical, and the jubilee years: alſo of vows, and tythes.

All agree, that Leviticus is a canonical book, and of divine authority. It is generally held to be the work of Moſes, as well as the reſt of the Pentateuch (but ſee FRAGMENT, No. 1.) It contains the hiſtory of the eight days of Aaron's and his ſons' conſecration, A. M. 2514, ante A. D. 1490. The laws preſcribed in it upon other ſubjects beſides ſacrifices, have no chronological marks, whereby we may judge at what times they were given.

LEUMMIM, לאמים, λααμιεὶμ, Vulgate, loomim. Gentiles;

Gentiles; from לאם, leum, people, nation: otherwiſe, without water; from the adverb לא lo, without, and מים majim, waters.

LIBANUS, לבנון, λίβανος, Hebrew, Lebanon. white; from לבן laban: otherwiſe, incenſe; from לבנה, libnah.

LIBANUS, a famous mountain which ſeparates Syria from Paleſtine. It forms a kind of horſeſhoe in its length, beginning three or four leagues from the Mediterranean above Smyrna, and going from north to ſouth towards Sidon, from thence bending from weſt to eaſt, towards Damaſcus; and returning from the ſouth northward, from the ſtreight of Damaſcus, as far as Laodicea Scabioſa. The weſtern part of this chain of mountains is properly called Libanus. The other part, eaſtward, extends from ſouth to north, and is called by the Greeks, Antilibanus. Between theſe two mountains is a long valley called Cœle-Syria, or hollow Syria; the valley of Lebanon, Joſh. xi. 17. at preſent Betkah, from the Hebrew, Bekah, a plain. For the cedars of Libanus, vide CEDARS. Libanus is from the Hebrew, Leban, white: this name was given it, in all probability, by reaſon of the ſnow, with which it is always covered in many places. Jeremiah ſpeaks of the ſnow of Libanus; Jer. xviii. 14. and Tacitus, mirum dicitur tantos inter ardores opacum, fidumque nivibus. Tacit. lib. v. Hiſt. cap. 6. The ground, Maundrell tells us, where not concealed by the ſnow, appeared to be covered with a ſort of white ſlates, thin and ſmooth. Mount Libanus in M. de la Roque's opinion, who viſited it in his travels, is higher than either the Alps or Pyrenees. Voyage au Mont. Liban. tom. i. p. 90.

Libanus is about an hundred leagues in circumference. It has Meſopotamia eaſt, Armenia north, the Holy Land ſouth, and the Mediterranean weſt. Four rivers iſſue out of Libanus, Jordan, Rocham, Nahar-Roſſien, and Nahar-Cadicha. It is compoſed of four encloſures of mountains, which riſe one on the other. The firſt is very rich in grain and fruits; the ſecond is barren, abounding in thorns, rocks and flints; the third, though higher than this, enjoys a perpetual ſpring, the trees being always green, and the orchards filled with fruit: it is ſo agreeable and fertile, that ſome have called it a terreſtrial paradiſe. The fourth is ſo high, that it is almoſt always covered with ſnow; and is uninhabitable by reaſon of the great cold.

The temple of Jeruſalem is alſo called Libanus. Open thy doors O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedars, ſays Zachary, xi. 1. ſpeaking of the future deſolation of the temple by the Romans. And Ezekiel, xvii. 3. a great eagle with large wings came unto Lebanon, and took the higheſt branch of the cedar: meaning Nebuchadnezzar, who took the temple, burnt it, and carried away its treaſures.

Laſtly, the palace built by Solomon at Jeruſalem, was called the houſe of Libanus, domus ſaltus Libani, probably by reaſon of its height, or the whiteneſs of its walls; or rather by reaſon of the great quantity of cedar wood and pillars which were in it.

TOWER OF LIBANUS. Solomon in the Canticles, vii. 4. compares his ſpouſe's noſe to the Tower of Libanus, which looketh towards Damaſcus. Travellers ſpeak of a tower to be ſeen upon Libanus on the ſide of Damaſcus, which ſeems to have been very high. Benjamin of Tudela aſſures us, that the ſtones of this tower, the remains whereof he had ſeen, were twenty palms long, and twelve wide. Gabriel Sionita ſays, that this tower was an hundred cubits high, and fifty broad. Maundrell ſpeaks likewiſe of the ſame, but he ſaw it only at a diſtance.

LIBATION. This word is uſed in ſacrifical language, to expreſs the effuſion of liquors, poured upon the victims to be ſacrificed to the Lord. The quantity of wine for a libation was the fourth part of an hin; rather more than two pints.

Libations among the Hebrews were made upon the victim after it was killed, and the ſeveral pieces of it were laid upon the altar, ready to be conſumed by the flames. See Leviticus vi. 20. viii. 25, 26. ix. 4. xvi. 12, 20. xxiii. 13. Theſe libations conſiſted in offerings of bread, wine and ſalt; vide BREAD, CAKES, &c.

Libations were offered among the Greeks and Latins, with the ſacrifices, but they were poured upon the head of the victim, while it was living. So Æneid ii. ver. 130, 131. Sinon relating in what manner he was to be ſacrificed, ſays, "he was in the prieſt's hands ready to be ſlain, was loaded with bands, and garlands; that they were preparing to pour upon him the libations of grain and ſalted meal.

> Jamque dies infanda aderat, mihi ſacra parari,
> Et ſalſæ fruges, & circum tempora vittæ.

And Dido, Æneid iv. beginning to ſacrifice, pours wine between the horns of the victim.

> Ipſa tenens dextra pateram pulcherrima Dido,
> Candentis vaccæ media inter cornua fudit.

St. Paul ſays, that he is, as it were, a victim about to be ſacrificed, and that the accuſtomed libations of meal and wine were already, in ſome manner poured upon him: 2 Tim. iv. 6. for I am am ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand.

LIBERTINUS, Λιβέρτινοι, Lat. a freed man. Or,

LIBERTINE: Synagoga libertinorum, Acts vii. 9. See SYNAGOGUE.

LIBERTY, as oppoſed to ſervitude and ſlavery, denotes the condition of a man, who may act independently of the will of another. There is frequent mention of this liberty in ſcripture. The Hebrews valued themſelves mightily on their liberty; they boaſted in our Saviour's time, that they had never been deprived of it: we were never in bondage to any man, John viii. 33. This from them was ridiculous: ſince we know that they were often ſubject to foreign powers under the Judges, and afterwards to the kings of Aſſyria, Chaldæa and Perſia; and Tacitus obſerves of them, that under the Aſſyrians, Medes, and Perſians, they were the meaneſt and moſt abject of ſlaves: Dum Aſſyrios penes, Medoſque & Perſas oriens fuit, deſpectiſſima pars ſervientium fuere. Tacit. Hiſt. lib. v. n. 8. N. B. They were at this very time ſubject to the Romans.

It is however true, that the Iſraelites, according to the intention of Moſes, were never to be reduced intirely to a ſtate of bondage. They might be ſold, or fall into ſervitude among their brethren; but always had a power of redeeming themſelves, or procuring themſelves to be redeemed by their relations, or of being liberated in the ſabbatical year, or in the jubilee year, which reſtored all Hebrews to their liberty, and to their inheritances. Probably it was on this account they boaſted, that they never had been reduced to ſlavery. Their whole nation was equally free and noble; Saul, David, and Jeroboam, who aſcended the throne, were of no better quality than the meaneſt ſhepherd in Iſrael. Vide SABBATICAL YEAR, JUBILEE, and SLAVE.

LIBERTY, freedom, is likewiſe applicable to people living according to their own laws, independent on any other ſtate. The kings of Syria, after they had long perſecuted the Jews, granted them liberty, when Simon Maccabæus was high prieſt: 1 Macc. xiv. 26. they ſuffered them to live according to the law of Moſes, and freed them from tributes and other ſervices, which before they paid to the kingdom of Syria: 1 Macc. xv. 6.

Domus libera, an houſe ſeparated from the commerce of other men. King Azariah being ſmitten with a leproſy, was ſeparated from mankind, and reduced to the condition of a private perſon. Habitavit in domo liberâ ſeorſum. 2 Kings xv. 5.

The Pſalmiſt ſays, lxxxviii. 5, that he is as one deſtitute of all help, free among the dead, inter mortuos liber. This is explained of our Saviour ſhut up in the grave; nevertheleſs, having it abſolutely in his power to iſſue forth from thence when he pleaſed, by his reſurrection. The Hebrew may be tranſlated: I am as theſe dead men of liberty, like thoſe who are dead of their wounds, and ſleeping in the grave; or otherwiſe, like thoſe men of liberty, thoſe ancient heroes, who boaſted of liberty and independency, and are nevertheleſs dead of their wounds, and ſleep in the grave.

LIBERTY of the goſpel, in oppoſition to the ſervitude of the law. St. Paul ſpeaks of this liberty; We are not the children of the bond-woman, but of the free, Gal. iv. 31. We are not derived from Hagar, who and her deſcendants are ſlaves, meaning the Jews; but we are the ſons of Sarah the free woman: we enjoy the liberty of God's children, by virtue of the adoption procured for us by Jeſus Chriſt. Which liberty delivers us from the yoke of legal ceremonies, from the obligation of obſerving purifications and diſtinctions of meats, and many other troubleſome and uneaſy practices, to which the Jews were ſubjected. See Rom. viii. 21. and 1 Cor. x. 29. and 2 Cor. iii. 17. and Galat. ii, 4, 5. and James i. 25. ii. 12.

LIBERTY to righteouſneſs, in oppoſition to the bondage of ſin. This is part of the juſtification which Jeſus Chriſt hath procured for us, which we acquire by faith in him, and preſerve by a good life, the practice of Chriſtian virtues, &c.

LIBERTY, and free-will, in oppoſition to conſtraint and neceſſity: man is at liberty to do good or evil, Eccluſ. xv. 14, &c. God hath made man from the beginning, and left him in the hand of his counſel. If thou wilt, to keep the commandments, and to perform acceptable faithfulneſs. He hath ſet fire and water before thee: ſtretch forth thy hand unto whether thou wilt. There is however a great difference between our liberty of doing good and of doing evil. We have in ourſelves the unhappy liberty of doing evil, we are prompted to it by our concupiſcence, which indeed we ought always to reſiſt, yet ſhall not really and effectually reſiſt, without the aſſiſtance of God's grace; whereas, as to good, though we have the liberty of doing or not doing it, we cannot perform it as it ſhould be, and advantageouſly to ſalvation, without the help of a particular grace, which without violating our liberty, incites us agreeably, gently, (nevertheleſs efficaciouſly) to prefer what is pleaſing to God before what ſelf-love and concupiſcence deſire.

The Rabbins conſider liberty and free will, very differently from Chriſtian authors. They acknowledge, that man has liberty, without which he would not be man: if he loved good, and followed followed evil, without knowledge, or by inſtinct, he would ceaſe to be reaſonable. What would become of the rewards and puniſhments, the threats, promiſes, and precepts, of the law, if it were not in the power of men to fulfil, or to violate them? They admit liberty of indifference in its full extent; they are perſuaded that people diſſemble their opinion as often as they take any thing of its liberty from free will.

Maimonides confutes the fatality of aſtrologers, but he makes every thing to depend on conſtitution: as God, ſays he, has created man upright in ſtature, and with hands and feet, ſo hath he likewiſe given him a will to move and act as he pleaſes; and it is the goodneſs of his conſtitution which makes things eaſy or difficult to him. The fear of God, he ſays, is not in the hand of heaven; i. e. it is in the power of man to obſerve, or not to obſerve, the law, and precepts. The fear of God is of this claſs; it depends not on God, but on the will of man.

Manaſſeh Ben Iſrael, another famous Rabbin, maintains, that the preventing grace acknowledged by ſome Rabbins, is an opinion that does not agree with tradition. That if the will were prevented by grace, it would ceaſe to be free. He allows but two ſorts of aid from God, one, whereby he produces favourable opportunities of executing the good deſigns which any man has formed; the other in aſſiſting man when he has begun to live well. He ſays farther, that we ſtand in need of the concurrence of Providence in all virtuous actions; and as a man, who is going to take a heavy burden on his ſhoulders, calls ſomebody to help him up with it: ſo the juſt man firſt endeavours to fulfil the law, and God like the arm of another perſon, comes to his aſſiſtance, that he may be able to execute his reſolution.

LIBNAH, לבנה, λεβανὰ, white, whiteneſs.

LIBNAH, a city of Judah, in the ſouthern part, Joſh. xv. 42. given to the prieſts, and declared a city of refuge, 1 Chr. vi. 54, 57. Euſebius and Jerom ſay, it was in the diſtrict of Eleutheropolis. It is the Libna or Lebna, in the neighbourhood whereof (between Rimmon-Parez and Riſſah) the Iſraelites encamped, on their journey through the wilderneſs. Numb. xxxiii. 20.

LIBNATH, לבנת, white, or whiteneſs.

LIBNATH, a city of Aſher. Joſhua xix. 26. We believe it to be the whole promontory, between Ecdippa and Tyre. Plin. lib. v. cap. 19. The Hebrew reading, Sihor & Labaneth, in the Vulgate is Shicor-Libenath. Which induces us to think, that theſe two words denote the ſame place, and that Shichor is the name of a rivulet; q. d. the rivulet of foul water which is on the white promontory. [Eng. tranſl. Shihor-libnath.]

LIBNI, לבני, λόβενι, white.

LIBNI. Son of Gerſhom, Numb. iii. 18.

LIBRA, a weight. The Roman pound was twelve ounces: the Hebrews, at leaſt in the Old Teſtament, and before the empire of the Greeks in the Eaſt, never calculated by pounds. The word libra occurs only in the New Teſtament, John xii. 3. xix. 39. The ancient Hebrews uſed the word ſiclus, when mentioning common weights; and talent, when ſpeaking of large weights. A ſhekel weighed an ounce, or four Roman drachms.

LICE, pediculi. The Hebrew, Ex. viii. 16. כנים, chinnim, in the LXX. and Vulgate tranſlated ſciniphes, ſignifies lice according to the Rabbins, and the generality of modern interpreters. See SCINIPHES.

Swarms of lice were one of the Egyptian plagues. The word for them in the LXX. is Κνίπες. And Heſychius ſays, Κνιψ is ζωον πληνὸν ὅμοιον κώνωπι: Diodorus Siculus, lib. iii. cap. 3. ſpeaking of the Acridophagi, or eaters of locuſts, ſays, that when they grow old, their bodies breed a kind of winged lice, by which they are devoured. It is the conjecture of Pererius, and approved by Rivet, that it was ſome new kind of creature, called analogically by an old known name.

LIFE, future, eternal life, or ſimply life, ſignifies the ſtate of happineſs of the righteous after death in heaven.

Narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, ſays our Saviour, Matth. vii. 14. If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments: Maſter, what good thing ſhall I do that I may have eternal life? Matt. xix. 16, 17.

Jeſus Chriſt is ſometimes called the life: John xiv. 6. I am the way, the truth, and the life. And again: I am the reſurrection and the life. John xi. 25. And elſewhere: In him was life, and the life was the light of men: John i. 4. And, He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son, hath not life. 1 John v. 12. Jeſus Chriſt is the life of the ſoul, he enlightens it, fills it with graces, leads it to eternal life: he is himſelf the life of it, the ſuſtenance, light, and happineſs of it.

The book of life. See BOOK.

The tree of life. See TREE.

In the Old Teſtament God promiſes thoſe who obſerve his laws, long life, and temporal proſperities, which were the figure and ſhadow of eternal life, and thoſe future bleſſings whereof God aſſures us more clearly in the New Teſtament. The carnal Jews confined their hopes to theſe tranſitory bleſſings; but the holy patriarchs, the prophets, prophets, and more enlightened Hebrews, carried their views and expectations farther. Moſes ſays to the Iſraelites, Deut. xxx. 15, 19, 20. See I have ſet before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; and a little lower: I have ſet before you life and death, bleſſing and curſing: therefore chooſe life that thou and thy ſeed may live; that thou mayeſt love the Lord thy God; for he is thy life, and the length of thy days. Hence it is that Baruch calls the law of God, the commandments of life: Hear, O Iſrael, the commandments of life. Baruch iii. 9. And the Pſalmiſt, the path of life. xvi. 11. [rather here hinting at the reſurrection of the dead: or that of J. C. Vide Acts ii. 28.]

Wiſdom, knowledge of truths relating to ſalvation, a wiſe and regular conduct, are called likewiſe, the way of life, the truth of life, the fountain of life; life ſimply. As life is the firſt of advantages belonging to the body, ſo wiſdom is the ſupreme happineſs of the ſoul; it procures a happy life for us in this world; and is the ſource of felicity to eternity. The principal wiſdom, the moſt ſerious ſtudy of the Hebrews conſiſted in the knowledge of their law: wherefore the Holy Spirit terms the law as well as wiſdom, life; and the ſource of life; becauſe, both the one and the other produce the ſame effects for time, and for eternity.

Life is ſometimes uſed for ſubſiſtence; initium vitæ hominis aqua & panis, Eccl. xxix. 26. And again, panis egentium pauperum eſt vita, Eccl. xxxiv. 25. In theſe paſſages vita is ſynonimous to victus; it is ſaid Mark xii. 44. that a poor widow who put two very ſmall pieces of ſilver, duo minuta, into the treaſury of the temple, gave more than any of the reſt, becauſe it was all ſhe had, omnem victum ſuum, that which was even neceſſary to her ſupport, Luke xxi. 4.

In a figurative ſenſe, it is ſaid ſometimes, that God reſtores life, or revives from the dead thoſe whom he delivers from great danger. This expreſſion is frequent in the Pſalms; where captivity is repreſented, as death, and liberty as life.

Life is alſo taken for conduct. We fools accounted his life madneſs, Wiſd. v. His life (courſe of conduct) is different from that of others. Your life is hid in God. Coloſ. iii. 3.

We find an expreſſion in Moſes and in Job, which requires explanation, Deut. xxviii. 66. Job xxiv. 22. Thy life ſhall hang in doubt before thee, and thou ſhalt fear day and night, and ſhalt have none aſſurance of thy life. Some of the fathers underſtood this of Jeſus Chriſt, crucified in the ſight of the unbelieving Jews, who rejected the belief of that Saviour who was their life and ſalvation. Ye ſhall be under perpetual fear and uneaſineſs, and ſhall have no aſſurance of your own lives. The following words of Job muſt be interpreted in the ſame ſenſe. Cum ſteterit non credet vitæ ſuæ. When the wicked man appears moſt reſolute, he ſhall not be aſſured of his life; or acccording to the Hebrew, when he riſeth in the midſt of his guards, he ſhall not be ſure of his life.

LIFE, to live: theſe words, as well as death and to die, are equivocal, and underſtood properly for the life of the body, or in a figurative ſenſe, for the life of the ſoul; for the life of faith, grace and holineſs, for temporal life, and life eternal. A living ſoul ſignifies a living animal, a living perſon: my ſoul ſhall live becauſe of thee, Gen. xii. 13. My life will be preſerved in conſideration of thee. No man ſhall ſee me and live, Ex. xxxiii. 20. i. e. the man who has a ſupernatural viſion of God, is in danger of loſing his life. No man can be able to ſuſtain the ſplendor of my majeſty, if beheld by his bodily eye. As the Lord liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, 1 Sam. xx. 3. I ſwear by the life of God and by thine. The Lord ſwears by his own life; I lift up my hand to heaven and ſay, I live for ever. Deut. xxxii. 40.

The Lord is called the living God in oppoſition to the gods of the Gentiles, who were but dead men, ſtars, or animals, whoſe lives are tranſitory; whereas the Lord is living, immortal, and the author of life, to every thing; in him we live; from him we derive motion, and exiſtence, Acts xvii. 28.

The juſt man lives by faith, ſays St. Paul, Rom. i. 17. Faith gives life to the ſoul, but this faith muſt be animated by charity, and accompanied with works; for faith without works is dead, Gal. v. 6. James ii. 20. Even they who are dead in ſin riſe again, and lead a new life, when they believe in Chriſt; and they who have a lively and intire faith never die, or rather after death enjoy eternal life, John xi. 25, 26. I am the reſurrection and the life, he that believeth in me, though he was dead, yet ſhall he live; and whoſoever liveth and believeth in me ſhall never die. The widow who lives in delights is dead, though ſhe appear to be alive, 1 Tim. v. 6. Jeſus Chriſt, ſays St. Paul, is my life, Phil. i. 21. To me to live is Chriſt: I deſire nothing paſſionately but his glory, I live only for him, and if I can lay down my life for him I ſhall be happy: To die is gain.

LIFE, to make alive, to raiſe to life, is taken literally, 1 Sam. ii. 6. For example, the Lord deſtroys, or raiſeth to life: he ſends down to the grave, or bringeth up from it: and Hoſea, vi. 2. He will reſtore us to life, after two days; he will raiſe us up on the third day. Eliſha had reſtored the widow's ſon to life: 2 Kings viii. 5.

Alſo

Alſo for preſerving life: David ſpared neither man nor woman of thoſe he took in the enemy's country; he gave life to none. 1 Sam. xxvii. 11. Pharaoh commanded the Iſraelites to expoſe their children, and not to bring them up, nor to preſerve their lives: Acts vii. 19. When the wicked ſhall be converted, and do that which is right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive. Ezek. xviii. 27. Let the Lord preſerve him, and vivify him; may he grant him health and long life. Pſal. xl. 3.

In a figurative ſenſe, to give life is uſed for delivering from a great danger, to bring out of captivity, to heal of a great ſickneſs, to defend in a great peril. The captives of Babylon often aſked of God in the Pſalms to reſtore them to life, to deliver them from a ſtate of death, of oppreſſion, of trouble, under which they groaned: by thy mercy, reſtore me to life, &c. Pſ. cxix. 25, 107.

To reſtore to life, is uſed in the Hebrew to expreſs the repairing of a city, a houſe, or a wall: for example, Nehem. iv. 2. Will they revive the ſtones out of the heaps of the rubbiſh which are burnt? Will they rebuild the walls of Jeruſalem? David built the walls of Jeruſalem from Millo all round: 1 Chron. xi. 8. and Joab repaired (or revived) the reſt of the city, ויואב יחיה את שאר העיר. Habakkuk iii. 2. deſires the Lord to cauſe his old wonders to be ſhewn forth anew. In medio annorum vivifica illud. And St. Paul ſays, Thou fool, that which thou ſoweſt is not quickened except it die. 1 Cor. xv. 36.

In the writings of the apoſtles, to vivify, to quicken or to revive, is often uſed for giving life to the ſoul, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; which life conſiſts in faith, charity, juſtice, grace, holineſs, &c. He that would ſave his life at the expence of truth, will loſe his ſoul; and he that ſhall loſe his life to preſerve his faith, and to maintain the truth, ſhall ſave his ſoul: Luke xvii. 33. vivificabit eam. The letter kills, but the ſpirit makes alive. 2 Cor. iii. 6. The law cannot make alive: Galat. iii. 21. It cannot communicate righteouſneſs, without goſpel faith, and charity.

TO LIFT UP ONES HANDS, is the geſture of a man taking an oath: I have lift up mine hand unto the Lord, ſays Abraham, that I will not take the leaſt thing that belongs to you. Gen. xiv. 22. And: I will bring you into the land concerning which I lift up my hand, Ex. vi. 8. which I promiſed with an oath.

To lift up one's hand againſt any one, to attack him, to fight him. Bleſſed be the Lord thy God which hath delivered up the men that lift up their hand againſt my Lord the king. 2 Sam. xviii. 28. And; Sheba, the ſon of Bichri, hath lift up his hand againſt David, rebelled againſt him: the ſcripture ſpeaking of the revolt of Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat, uſes the ſame expreſſion. 1 Kings xi. 26.

TO LIFT UP ONE'S FACE in the preſence of any one, to appear boldly in his preſence. I ſhould not dare to hold up my face to Joab thy brother. 2 Sam. ii. 22. And Eſdras; O Lord my God I am aſhamed and bluſh to lift up my face to thee, Ezra ix. 6. See alſo Job x. 15. xi. 15.

To lift up one hands, eyes, ſoul, or heart unto the Lord, are ways of ſpeaking common in ſcripture, to deſcribe the ſentiments and emotion of one who prays earneſtly, and beſeeches God with all his heart to impart the aſſiſtance he needs. Lifting up the eyes frequently means no more than barely looking: I lift up mine eyes and ſaw.

To lift up one's ſoul to any thing, to deſire it with ardor. But to the land whereunto they lift up their mind to return, thither ſhall they not return. We find this expreſſion in the Pſalms. Lord I lift up my ſoul unto thee. I beſeech thee with all the ardor of my ſoul.

To lift up one's eyes towards idols, to honour, to invoke them, to put one's truſt in them, to worſhip them.

To lift up one's heel againſt any one, to kick, to riſe up againſt one.

To lift up one's horn, to be exalted with pride, to threaten one with blows, to inſult. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXIV, page 21.

To lift up or take up a lamentation, to begin a mournful ſong.

To lift up a prayer, to addreſs one's prayers to God.

To be lifted up, to riſe, ſurgere: there aroſe a new king in Egypt, a new king reigned, Exod. ii. 8.

In the ſcripture men generally roſe early in the morning, and even before day, like the heroes in Homer.

Surgere, to riſe, ſignifies frequently ſimply to begin an action. Ariſe and go, riſe and do this, &c.

To riſe againſt any one, is ſaid of accuſers and falſe witneſſes; two falſe witneſſes aroſe and accuſed Jeſus, Mark xiv. 57.

LIGHT. Moſes ſays, that God having created heaven and earth, and darkneſs being ſpread over the chaos, God ſaid, let there be light, and there was light; and God ſaw the light that it was good, and he ſeparated the light from the darkneſs. This made the firſt day. Some demand, what this light of the firſt day could be, different from the ſun, which was not created till the fourth day? Certain Rabbins maintain, that it was the light of the ſun, and that what is ſaid afterwards concerning the creation of the ſun, moon, and ſtars on the fourth day, is a recapitulation. Others believe, that God on the firſt day created a lumi-a luminous body, much like that which gave light to the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs, in the night time. Something like this muſt of neceſſity be admitted, if we would maintain a ſucceſſive creation.

Light is often put for proſperity, as night is for adverſity. The light ſhall ſhine upon thy ways, God ſhall favour thy conduct. Thou haſt lifted up on us the light of thy countenance. Thou haſt heaped thy favours on us.

The light of the living, literally ſignifies a happy life, great proſperity; but in a moral and ſpiritual ſenſe, it ſignifies the felicity of eternal life; as the miſery of the wicked is deſcribed by the darkneſs of death, Pſ. lvi. 13. cxxix. 12. cxlviii. 3. and Job xxxiii. 30. God is ſtyled the Father of lights, James i. 17. the author of all graces; and Jeſus Chriſt is called the Light of the world, a light to light the Gentiles, the light of righteouſneſs, the light of life, John viii, 12. i. 8.

The apoſtles are the light of the world, St. Matth. v. 14.

LIGURIUS, a precious ſtone; in Hebrew, leſchem. Theophraſtus and Pliny deſcribe the ligurius to be a ſtone like a carbuncle, of a brightneſs ſparkling like fire: Epiphanius and Jerom took it for a kind of hyacinth. Some have aſſerted, that it is the ſame as lyncurius, or the lynx-ſtone, formed, as was ſaid, of the lynx's urine, congealed into a ſhining ſtone, as ſoon as it comes out of that creature's body: but this is fabulous, as Pliny himſelf obſerves, lib. viii. cap. 38. and lib. xxxvii. cap. 3. Ælian de animal. lib. iv. cap. 17. The ligurius was the firſt ſtone in the third row upon the high prieſt's pectoral, and the name of God was inſcribed on it.

LIKHI, לקחי, λοχεῖ, law, doctrine; from לקח lacach: otherwiſe, taking away; from the ſame, and the pronoun י i, my.

LILITH, לילית, the night. Lamia, Jerom.

LILITH. This, as the Rabbins ſay, was Adam's firſt wife. See CIRCUMCISION.

Some Jewiſh doctors are of opinion, that Lilith is the moon, and is ſo called from לילי lil, which ſignifies night, the influences whereof may be beneficial or hurtful to new-born children; herein intimating the ſuperſtition of the Heathens, who invoke the goddeſs Lucina, or the moon, at the time when women are in labour.

> Montium cuſtos nemorumque Virgo,
> Quæ laborantes utero puellas
> Tervocata audis, adimiſque letho,
> Diva triformis.
> HORAT. CARM. lib. iii. Ode xii.

We are of opinion that this word ſignifies a bird of night, and of bad omen, ſuch as the ſcreech-owl, bat and lapwing. Lilith in Hebrew ſignifies the night. Iſaiah ſays, "that Edom will be reduced to a frightful ſolitude, wherein there will be nothing to be ſeen but wild and ominous beaſts, demons, ſatyrs, ſcreech owls, &c."

LILLY, שושן; lilium, Hebrew, ſuſan, or ſchuſchan, perhaps by reaſon of the number of its leaves, which are ſix, in Heb. ſes, or ſcheſch. There are lilies of different colours, white, red, yellow, and orange coloured. They were common in Judæa, and grew in the open fields. Conſider the lillies of the field, ſays Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. vi. 28. how they grow, they toil not, neither do they ſpin; yet I ſay unto you that Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of theſe. Wherefore if God ſo clothe the graſs of the field, which to day is, and to morrow is caſt into the oven, ſhall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith? Luke xii. 27.

Father Souciet a Jeſuit affirms, that the lilly mentioned in the ſcripture by the name of שושן, ſouſan, is the crown imperial, this is the Perſian lilly, the tuſaï of the Perſians, the royal lilly, or lilium baſileium of the Greeks. In reality it appears from the Canticles, that the lilly ſpoken of by Solomon was red, and diſtilled a certain liquor: Cant. v. 13. There are crown imperials with yellow flowers; but thoſe with red are the moſt common. They are always bent downwards, and diſpoſed in the manner of a crown at the extremity of the ſtem, which has a tuft of leaves at the top. At the bottom of each leaf of this flower, is a certain watery humor, forming, as it were, a very white pearl, which gradually diſtils very clear and pure drops of water. This water is probably what the ſpouſe in the Canticles calls myrrh: labia ejus lilia diſtillantia myrrhum.

Judith ſpeaks of an ornament belonging to the women, which was called lilly: Judith x. 3. Aſſumpſit dextraliola, & lilia & inaures. Græc. χλιδωνας καὶ τὰ ψέλια, καὶ τὰς δακτυλίους. What theſe lilies were we cannot tell. In the judgment of Grotius, they might be ſomething which hung about the neck. Perhaps lilia may be a fault of the copyiſt, who inſtead of monilia, bracelets, which he did not underſtand, might inſert lilia. The Greek ſays pſelia, and the Syriac the ſame. [Chains, necklaces, or bracelets.]

LIMITS, bounds. Moſes forbids any one's altering the bounds of his neighbour's inheritance, Deut. xix. 14. Thou ſhalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which they of old time have ſet on thine inheritance which thou doſt inherit, &c. All the people curſe the man who ſhould remove the bounds planted by their anceſtors, Deut. xxvii. 17. Job, xxiv. 2. reckons thoſe who are guilty of this crime crime among thieves and robbers, and oppreſſors of the poor. Boundaries are ſacred things, and matters of public right. Siculus Flaccus de conditionib. agrorum ſays, that when they were ſettled, they were anointed and crowned, and covered with rich veils: unguento velaminibuſque & coronis eos coronabant. The Jewiſh doctors condemn thoſe who transfer their neighbour's bounds, to be ſcourged twice; firſt becauſe of ſtealing another's inheritance, and ſecondly by reaſon of their violation of the law, which expreſsly forbids touching it.

Joſephus, Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 8. has interpreted this law of Moſes in a very particular ſenſe, "He ſays, that it is not lawful to change the limits, either of the land belonging to the Iſraelites, or that of their neighbours, with whom they are at peace; but that they ought to be left as they are, having been ſo placed by the order of God himſelf: for the deſire which avaricious men have to extend their limits, is the occaſion of war and diviſion; and whoſoever is capable of removing the boundaries of lands, is not far from a diſpoſition to violate all other laws."

Among the Romans, if a ſlave with an evil deſign, changed any boundary, he was puniſhed with death. Men of condition were ſometimes baniſhed, and private perſons were puniſhed according to the circumſtances of their crime, by pecuniary fines, or corporal puniſhments. The reſpect of the ancients for boundaries proceeded almoſt to adoration. Numa Pompilius, king of the Romans ordained, that offerings ſhould be made to boundaries, with thick milk, cakes, and firſt-fruits. Ovid ſays, that a lamb was ſacrificed to them, and that they were ſprinkled with blood.

Spargitur & cæſo communis terminus agno.
OVID. FAST.

Juvenal ſpeaks of cake and pap, which were laid every year upon the ſacred bounds.

Et ſacrum effodit medio de limite Saxum,
Quod mea cum patulo coluit puls annua libo.
JUVENAL SATYR. xvi.

LIMITS of the ſea. The ſcripture reckons it among the effects of God's omnipotency, to have fixed bounds to the ſea: Pſ. civ. 9. thou haſt ſet a bound that they may not paſs over, neither turn again to cover the earth. And Job. xxvi. 10. He hath compaſſed the waters with bounds until the day and night come to an end. And Solomon introduces Wiſdom, ſaying, When he gave to the ſea his decree, that the waters ſhould not paſs his commandments; when he appointed the foundation of the earth, then I was by him, Prov. viii. 29. And in Jeremiah, v. 22. the Lord ſays, that he has made the ſands to be a boundary to the ſea: poſui arenam terminum mari.

LINE, to extend a line over a city, to deſtroy, to raze it. Perpendiculum extenditur ſuper Jeruſalem, ſays Zachary i. 16. And Jeremiah in his Lamentations, ii. 8. The Lord hath propoſed to deſtroy the wall of the daughter of Zion, he hath ſtretched out a line.

LINNEN, in Hebrew בד, bad, a plant well known, whoſe bark being prepared, ſerves to make fine, and much eſteemed, linnen clothes. [FLAX.]

Another ſort of linnen the ſcripture calls שש, ſheſch; which we believe to be cotton. See COTTON.

Under the name of linnen, בוץ byſſus is included; but this was ſomething different from both linnen and cotton. It was a kind of ſilk yielded by a fiſh of the muſſel kind, which Rondelet calls pinna magna. See BYSSUS.

The plant linum is in Hebrew named phiſhtah, Ex. ix. 31. הפשתה happiſhtah, linum vivens, as well as that whereof clothes were made. [Flax-ſtalks: under flax-ſtalks Rahab hid the ſpies, Joſh. ii. 6.]

LINUS, Λίνος, nets.

LINUS, mentioned by St. Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 21. Linus and Claudia, and all the brethren greet thee. Linus, ſay ſome, was the ſon of this Claudia. Irenæus, Euſebius, Optatus, Epiphanius, Auſtin, Jerom, and Theodoret, affirm that Linus ſucceeded Peter as biſhop of Rome. He governed twelve years and ſome months. The apoſtolical conſtitutions ſay, that Linus was ordained biſhop of Rome by St. Paul, long before the death of St. Peter. Ruſinus aſſerts, that Linus and Anacletus having governed the church of Rome, while the apoſtles Peter and Paul were living, but in their abſence, Peter a little before his death choſe Clement to ſucceed him at Rome: and Epiphanius will have it, that Clement out of modeſty refuſed to exerciſe this office, till after the deaths of Linus and Cletus. From all which we may eaſily conclude, that we are very imperfectly acquainted with the hiſtory of Linus. The Greeks keep his feſtival Nov. 5. the Latins, Sept. 23.

LION, a beaſt well known; and frequently ſpoken of in ſcripture. The lion is eſteemed the king of four-footed beaſts. His hair is inclining to red. The forepart of his head is ſquare, his noſe flat and large, his eyes terrible, his mouth wide, his neck covered with a buſhy mane, his belly ſlender, his legs and thighs large and nervous, his tail long, large and very ſtrong. He has five claws on his fore-feet; four on thoſe behind. The lion is the fierceſt and moſt courageous of beaſts. It was very common in Paleſtine; the ſacred authors frequently mention it, and borrow ſimilitudes and compariſons from it. Its tongue is ſharp, and ſtuck thick with points of a very hard ſubſtance like that of nails, whereof it has likewiſe the figure. Theſe points are about two lines in length. There is no animal that more reſembles a lion than a cat. The paws, teeth, eyes, and tongue of a lion are of the ſame figure with thoſe of a cat. He throws his urine behind him, and copulates with the lioneſs like hares and camels. His bladder is ſmall, becauſe he drinks very little. The female differs from the male in that ſhe has no mane or long hair upon her neck. It is a popular miſtake to think, that lions are afraid of cocks. There have been tame lions ſeen. It is likewiſe a fable, that lions ſleep with their eyes open. Lions were conſecrated to the ſun, and the Heathens repreſent the chariot of Cybele as drawn by them.

The Hebrews have ſeven words to ſignify the lion in his different ages. 1. גור gur or gor, a young lion, a lion's whelp. 2. כפיר chephir, a young lion. 3. ארי vel אריה ari, or arieh, a young and vigorous lion. 4. שחל ſchachal, a lion in the full ſtrength of his age. 5. שחץ ſchachaz, a vigorous lion. 6. לביא lebi, an old lion. 7. ליש laiſch, a decrepit lion worn out with old age. But theſe diſtinctions are not always uſed in ſpeaking of the lion.

The Lion of the tribe of Judah, Rev. v. 5. is Jeſus Chriſt, who ſprung from the tribe of Judah, and the race of David, and who overcame death, the world, and the devil.

The lion from the ſwelling of Jordan, Jer. l. 44. is Nebuchadnezzar marching like a lion againſt Judæa. He is compared to a lion by reaſon of his ſtrength and fierceneſs: to a lion ſallying from the pride of Jordan, i. e. which is driven from the neighbourhood of Jordan, where he had laid amidſt the thickets which cover the banks of that river, and falls with fury upon every thing he meets with in the fields. The ſcripture ſpeaks in ſeveral places of this ſwelling of Jordan, thereby deſcribing the inundations of that river. See Jer. xii. 5. xlix. 19. l. 44. Zach. xi. 3. Vide JORDAN.

Samſon going to Timnath, tore a young lion to pieces with his hands, Judg. xiv. Some time after, he noticed as he paſſed by, that bees had made their honey in the mouth of this lion, which was then dried up. This furniſhed him with a riddle which he propoſed to the young men of the company at his wedding: the devourer furniſhed meat, and the ſtrong yielded ſweetneſs.

David boaſts, that he had killed both a lion and a bear, 1 Sam. xvii. 34, 35. Eccleſiaſticus ſays, xlvii. 3. that this prince played with bears and lions, as he would with lambs.

The two lions of Moab, 2 Sam. xxiii. 20. denote, in all probability, the city of Ar, the capital of the Moabites, deſcribed under the name of the two lions of Moab; Ariel in Hebrew, ſignifies the lion of God, 1 Chr. xi. 22. Vide AR.

Iſaiah, xi. 6, deſcribing the happy time of the Meſſiah ſays, the calf, the young lion and the fatling ſhould lie down together, and a little child ſhould lead them; and that the lion ſhould eat ſtraw like the ox, ſignifying the peace and happineſs of the church of Chriſt.

The roaring of the lion is terrible, Amos iii. 8. The lion roars, who ſhall not be afraid? The king's wrath is as the roaring of a lion: whoſo provoketh him to anger ſinneth againſt his own ſoul, Prov. xix. 12. xx. 2. He ſeeketh his own death. The lion, when angry, beats his ſides with his tail, briſtles up his mane, and roars dreadfully.

A living dog is better than a dead lion, Eccl. ix. 4. ſays the wiſe man: death renders thoſe contemptible who otherwiſe were the greateſt and moſt terrible.

There is great perplexity about the reading of Pſalm xxii. 17. In the Hebrew כארי ſicut Leo, כארו foderunt. LXX. ωρυξαν, foderunt. Aquila, ησχυναν fœdaverunt. The LXX. and Vulgate read: They pierced my hands and my feet. The Hebrew, as it ſtands in our printed bibles, and the generality of manuſcripts, reads; like a lion my hands and my feet, which makes no ſenſe; but in order to render it intelligible, the Rabbins diſtribute the verſes of this Pſalm, thus: ver. 17. The aſſembly of the wicked have encloſed me, like a lion my hands and my feet; ver. 18. They tell all my bones. Kimchi and Abenezra ſay, that the lion encompaſſes the hands and feet of the Jews, in the preſent ſtate to which they are reduced, that their enemies encloſe them on every ſide, and hinder them not only from defending themſelves, but from flying too.

Kimchi hereupon relates a fable. The lion, ſays he, when he is hunting deſcribes a large circle with his tail upon the ground; all the wild beaſts which are within this circle continue there ſhut up, as if they were encompaſſed with nets. They roll about with their feet gathered under their belly, without daring to fly or to defend themſelves; thus the lion devours them, and that without reſiſtance. Such, adds he, is our condition ſince our laſt diſperſion. We are, as it were, ſhut up within a circle among our enemies the Iſhmaelites on one ſide, and the uncircumciſed on the other; there we continue detained by our fears, without being able to make make uſe of our hands for our defence, or of our feet for our eſcape.

But, it is to no purpoſe to rack our brains for a literal ſenſe to a bad reading. The LXX. Aquila, and other old Greek tranſlations of the ſcripture, read in the Hebrew, caru, "they pierced:" Origen, Jerom, Juſtin, and other ancient fathers read ſo too, and never made any difficulty of the paſſage. The Rabbins themſelves own that in the old manuſcripts, caru was in the text, or, at leaſt, in the margin. And ſome we have at this day with the ſame reading. It makes very good ſenſe, and is authorized by all antiquity. This therefore ſhould be followed, and that of the Jews given up, which is modern, and makes no good ſenſe.

LIP, is ſometimes uſed for the bank of a river, and the border of a veſſel, (or table, Ex. xxv. 24.) 2 Chron. iv. 2. ſpeaking of the Brazen Sea—from lip to lip. Lip ſignifies likewiſe language; they have all but one language, one lip, Gen. xi. 6. I am of uncircumciſed lips, Ex. vi. 12. I cannot eaſily explain myſelf, I have an imperfection in my ſpeech. That which cometh forth out of his lips, Lev. v. 4. Deut. xxiii. 23. that which he hath promiſed, the vow which he pronounced. Job hath not ſinned with his lips, Job i. 22. ii. 10. God removeth the lip of the faithful, does not always give them eloquence, and a facility of ſpeaking. Job xii. 20.

The fruit of the lips. Iſaiah lvii. 19. God giveth peace which is the fruit of his promiſes; otherwiſe, he giveth peace which is a new occaſion of praiſe to him. A man's belly ſhall be ſatisfied with the fruit of his mouth, and with the increaſe of his lips ſhall he be filled, Prov. xviii. 20. A man ſhall be more or leſs eſteemed, according as he governs his tongue. We will render thee the calves of our lips, ſays Hoſea, xiv. 2. i. e. ſacrifices of praiſe, inſtead of bloody victims. Ezekiel, xxxvi. 3. you have been expoſed to the raillery and injurious tongues of your enemies. Stultus cædetur labiis, Prov. x. 8, 10, the fool ſhall be puniſhed becauſe of his defamatory diſcourſes; otherwiſe, he whoſe lips are fooliſh, who cannot govern his tongue, ſhall be chaſtiſed. Prov. xvi. 10, 15. The lips of the king pronounce oracles. A little after: kings love righteous lips. I do not ſend thee, ſays the Lord to Ezekiel, iii. 6. to a people deep of lip, of an unknown language. He who anſwers uprightly kiſſes the mouth of him he ſpeaks to, Prov. xxiv. 26. [Vide to KISS.] The Hebrews uſed in times of mourning to cover their lips, or the lower part of their face. See Ezekiel xxiv. 22. and Mich. iii. 7.

LITHOSTROTOS, Λιθόστρωτος, paved with ſtones; from two Greek words, λιθος, ſtone, and στρωτός, paved.

LITHOSTROTOS, a pavement of ſtone. See GABBATHA.

LITURGY, Λειτουργία, ſervice, miniſtry.

LIVIAS, a city beyond Jordan, before called Betharamphta, Herod the Great named it Livias, or Libias, in honour of Livia the wife of Auguſtus. Euſeb. in loc. Hierom. in Bethara.

LIZARD. Moſes names two ſorts of lizards among the unclean creatures, ſtellio and lacerta. There are ſeveral ſorts of lizards which are well known. There are ſome in Arabia, of a cubit long; but in the Indies they ſay are ſome of twenty-four feet in length. In America they eat lizards. Probably, they were eaten ſometimes in Arabia and Judæa, ſince Moſes forbids them as food.

We find ſeveral ſorts of lizards in ſcripture; לטאה letæa, חמט chomet, תנשמת tinſchemeth, and שממת ſemamith. They occur Lev. xi. 30: the two former are tranſlated ſtellio and lacerta. The third is tranſlated a mole; but Bochart maintains it is a chamelion (which is a kind of lizard.) The fourth in Prov. xxx. 28. is rendered ſtellio a lizard. The ſame Bochart, to whom we have a great regard in theſe matters, maintains the verſion of the Vulgate and the LXX. againſt thoſe who tranſlate—an ape, a leech, or a ſpider. See his work de Animal. Sacris, prima parte, lib. iv. cap. 4, 5, 6, 7.

LOAMIM, third ſon of Dedan, and grandſon to Abraham and Keturah. Loamim might be the father of the Omonians, whoſe country extended from Petra to Charax. Petra is the capital of Arabia Petræa, and Charax lies on the Euphrates, Plin. lib. vi. cap. 28.

LOCUSTS. The Hebrews have many names for locuſts, probably indicating ſeveral ſorts. God ſmote Egypt with locuſts, which ravaged every thing in the fields of that country. Hiſtorians and travellers remark, that locuſts are very numerous in Africa, and in many parts of Aſia; they ſometimes fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing: the quantity of them is ſo large, that they obſcure the Sun; and the people diſcerning them in the air, are in a conſternation, being uncertain whether they will fall or not upon their lands. The prophet Joel, i. 6, 7, &c. ii. 3, 4, 5, &c. ſpeaking of a great dearth which happened in Judæa, after it had been laid waſte by a multitude of locuſts, ſpeaks of them as of an enemy's army, which had committed dreadful devaſtations. Iſaiah remarks, xxxiii. 4, 5. that when the locuſts were carried away into the ſea, and were afterwards thrown up in heaps upon the ſands, great holes were dug in the earth to bury them; or elſe they were burnt, to prevent infection: in reality, it has happened, that great plagues have been occaſioned by them. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

Moſes declares all creatures that fly and walk on four feet, to be impure, but he excepts thoſe which having their hind-feet longer than the others, ſkip, and do not crawl upon the earth. Afterwards he deſcribes four ſorts of locuſts, called in Hebrew, Lev. xi. 22. ארבה arbeh, סלעה ſalah, הרגול chargol, and החגב hachagab, which Jerom tranſlates bruchus, attacus, ophiomacus, and locuſta. See Bochart de Animal. Sacr. part ii. lib. iv. cap. 1—8.

There are reckoned thirty ſeveral ſorts of locuſts, ſome in India (if we dare believe Pliny*) three feet long. Gregatim ſublatæ vento in maria aut ſtagna decidunt. Deorum iræ peſtis ea intelligitur, &c. Plin. Nat. Hiſt.* lib. xi. cap. 29.

As theſe creatures were, [and are] commonly eaten in Paleſtine, and in the neighbouring countries, there is no difficulty in ſuppoſing, that the word acrides uſed by St. Matthew, iii. 4. ſpeaking of the food on which St. John ſubſiſted, might ſignify locuſts. The ancients affirm, that in Africa, Syria, Perſia, and almoſt throughout Aſia, the people did commonly eat theſe creatures. Some nations were called acridophagi, or eaters of locuſts, becauſe that was their principal food. Clenard, in a letter from Fez, A. D. 1541, aſſures us, that he ſaw waggon-loads of locuſts brought into that city for food. Kirſtenius in his notes on Matthew, ſays, he was informed by his Arabic maſter, that he had often ſeen them on the river Jordan, that they were of the ſame form as ours, but larger; that the inhabitants pluck off their wings and feet, and hang the reſt at their necks till they grow warm and ferment; and that then they eat them, and think it very good food. A Monk who had travelled into Egypt, aſſures us, that he had eat of theſe locuſts, and that in the country they ſubſiſted on them four months in the year.

Ludolphus in his Comment on the Hiſtory of Æthiopia pretends to ſhew, that what is explained of the quails ſent by God for the ſuſtenance of his people, Ex. xvi. 13. Numb. xi. 31. ſhould be underſtood of locuſts. See QUAILS.

LOD, לוד, Vulgate, Lud. Birth, generation; from ילד jalad.

LOD. See LYDDA; and 1 Chr. viii. 12. where it is ſaid, that Elpaal had three ſons, Eber, Miſham, and Shamed, and that he built Ono and Lod.

LODEBAR, לודבר. To him the word; from דבר dabar, the word, and the pronoun ו o, him, and the prepoſition ל l, to: or the loſs, and the word; alſo from דבר deber.

LODEBAR. Mephiboſheth, the ſon of Jonathan, dwelt at Lodebar, after the death of his father, when David ſent for him to court. Lodebar was probably beyond Jordan, 2 Sam. ix. 4, 5.

Lodebar, may ſignify Lod on the other ſide, in oppoſition to Lod on this ſide, which is Dioſpolis.

LOG, an Hebrew meaſure, which held a quarter of a cab; conſequently five ſixths of a pint. A log, 2 Kings vi. 25. is called a fourth part of a cab, Lev. xiv. 12. xii. 24. The word log ſignifies that meaſure of oil, which lepers were to offer at the temple after their cure.

Log, ſays Dr. Arbuthnot, was a meaſure of liquids; the 72d part of the bath or ephah, and 12th part of the hin, according to all the accounts of the Jewiſh writers. Tables of ancient coins, &c.

LOIS, Λωὶς, better; from the Greek λωίων, better.

LOIS, Timothy's grandmother. St. Paul commends her faith, 2 Tim. i. 5.

LONGINUS. The ſoldier who pierced our Lord's ſide with his ſpear, John xix. 34. is called by this name. We have many ſtories of Longinus, but none very authentic. That which the Bollandiſts have publiſhed, in the Acts of the Saints on March 15, imports, that Longinus was one of the ſoldiers appointed to guard the croſs, and the perſons crucified; that obſerving the miracles which happened at the death of Jeſus Chriſt, he was converted, and acknowledged him to be a juſt man; afterwards, having been ſet as one of the guard over our Saviour's ſepulchre, he refuſed the money, offered by the prieſts to corrupt him; which provoked Pilate to reſolve on his deſtruction, but he did not accompliſh his deſign. In order to his devoting himſelf intirely to Jeſus Chriſt, he renounced a military life without Pilate's leave, and retired to his own houſe in Cappadocia, with two of his fellow ſoldiers, who followed his example. In Cappadocia he began to preach the goſpel, whereupon the Jews ſolicited Pilate that theſe deſerters might be puniſhed. Pilate accordingly ſent ſoldiers into Cappadocia, who cut off their heads, and brought them to him.

Chryſoſtom tells us, in Matth. homil. 89, that in his time ſome people maintained, that the centurion mentioned Matth. xxvii. 54. who gave glory to God, ſaying "of a truth this was the Son of God;" was ſo confirmed in the faith, as to ſuffer martyrdom, and that the acts of his martyrdom were extant. But he does not affirm that this was he who pierced our Saviour's ſide; much leſs that his name was Longinus. The Greeks aſſert, that Longinus ſuffered martyrdom at Andrales or Sandrales, near Thyane in Cappadocia, and they honour him October 6. The Latins believe Longinus not to be the centurion, but the ſoldier who pierced the ſon of God. They keep his feſtival March 15. See Bollandus on Mar. 15; and M. de Tillemont's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, tom. 1. note 38.

LOOKING-GLASSES. Moſes ſays, that the devout women who ſat up all night at the door of the tabernacle in the wilderneſs, offered chearfully their looking-glaſſes to be employed in making a brazen baſon for the purifications of the prieſts, Exod. xxxviii. 8. Theſe looking-glaſſes were, without doubt, of braſs, ſince the baſon was made out of them. Nevertheleſs ſome interpreters are of opinion, that they were of glaſs, with only a border of braſs. Others, that they were placed about this brazen veſſel, that the prieſts might therein behold themſelves: but to have recourſe to theſe explanations is needleſs, ſince we know, that looking-glaſſes were formerly made of braſs, tin, ſilver, and a mixture of braſs and ſilver. The laſt of theſe were the moſt valued: optima apud majores fuerunt Brunduſina ſtanno & ære miſtis, Plin. lib. xxiii. cap. 9. There are ſome ſtill extant of metal, which are much eſteemed. St. Cyril of Alexandria, de adorat. in Spiritu. lib. ii. ſays, that when the Ægyptian women went to the temple dreſſed in linen, they carried a looking-glaſs in their right hands, and a ſiſtrum in their left.

The looking-glaſſes of the ancients were generally round. Seneca inveighs againſt the luxury of the women in his time, which was arrived to ſuch a height, that looking-glaſſes were as large as human bodies, and coſt more than formerly was required to endow the daughter of a Roman general. Do you believe, adds he, that Scipio's daughters had looking-glaſſes ſet in gold? they, to whom the ſenate gave a moderate portion, which now would not be ſufficient to purchaſe a looking-glaſs for the daughter of a freed-man.

Sophocles, according to the citation in Athenæus, lib. xv. repreſents Venus viewing herſelf in a looking-glaſs, after having perfumed her whole body. This ſhews the antiquity of looking-glaſſes among the Greeks. Pauſanias, lib. vii. cap. 21. ſpeaks of another looking-glaſs, uſed to know whether ſick perſons were recoverable or not. It was faſtened to a packthread, and let down gently to the ſurface of water, ſo that the circle, extremity, or edge of it touched the water; then they preſented their prayers with burning incenſe to the goddeſs, and in the looking-glaſs they ſaw the ſick perſons in the condition wherein they were to be after their ſickneſs, whether dead, or in health.

Magicians ſometimes uſed looking-glaſſes in their ſuperſtitious and diabolical operations; and ſome affirm, that Solomon and Alexander had ſuch, by whoſe help they knew all things, natural, and ſometimes even ſupernatural. The way of divining by looking-glaſſes was known among the ancients. They would hoodwink, they ſay, the eyes of a child, yet, notwithſtanding, he ſhould ſee in the looking-glaſs what people had a mind to know. The ſorcerers of Theſſaly who boaſted that they could draw down the moon, wrote the particulars reſpecting which they were conſulted, on a looking-glaſs; and he who conſulted them, read the anſwer, not on the looking-glaſs, but in the moon, which, as was ſaid, they procured to deſcend from heaven, lunam deducere. Spartian in Severo. [N. B. It is conjectured they uſed ſome kind of teleſcope; as alſo our Druids.]

LORD, Dominus; in Greek, κυριος, kyrios; in Hebrew, אדוני Adoni, or Adonai; Elohim, or Jehovah; for the Greek and Latin interpreters often put Dominus, Lord, for all theſe names.

I. The name of Lord belongs to God in the way of eminency, and in this ſenſe ought never to be given to any creature. Jeſus Chriſt as Son of God, equal to the Father, is likewiſe oftentimes called Lord in the ſcriptures of the Old and New Teſtament.

II. This name is ſometimes given to angels; whether repreſenting the perſon of God, as in thoſe viſions of the Old Teſtament, wherein the patriarchs and prophets ſpeak to them in the ſame terms as to God himſelf; or whether eſteemed as angels ſent by God. Daniel, x. 16, 17. ſays to the angel, or, as he calls him, to one who ſpoke to him under an human form; O my Lord, by the viſion my ſorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no ſtrength. For how can the ſervant of this my Lord talk with this my Lord?

III. When we ſpeak to princes, great men and perſons, to whom we would ſhew reſpect; it is met with in this ſenſe, at every turn in ſcripture. But generally the word, my, is joined with it: My Lord; and, though ſometimes the words Adoni, and Elohim, are attributed to a creature, yet Jehovah never is.

LOT, לוט, wrapped up, hidden, covered: otherwiſe, myrrh, roſin.

LOT, ſon of Haran, and nephew to Abraham. He followed his uncle from Ur, and afterwards from Haran, to ſettle in the land of Canaan, Gen. xi. 31. In the year of the world 2082, and 2083, ante A. D. 1917, 1918, ante A. D. Vulgar Æra 1921, 1922. Abraham had always a great tenderneſs for him. He took him with him into Egypt, Egypt, and brought him back to Canaan. But they could not continue longer together: they were obliged to ſeparate, becauſe as they both had large flocks, their ſhepherds ſometimes quarrelled, Gen. xiii. 6, 7. Lot therefore choſe Sodom for his abode, the country around it being very beautiful.

About eight years after, king Chederlaomer and his allies having attacked the kings of Sodom, and the neighbouring cities, routed them, pillaged Sodom, took many captives, and Lot, Abraham's nephew. Abraham being informed of it, armed his ſervants, purſued the confederate kings, overtook them near the ſprings of Jordan, recovered the ſpoil which they had taken, and brought back the captives; including his nephew Lot.

Some years after, the ſins of the Sodomites and of the neighbouring cities being at their height, God ſent three angels to puniſh and deſtroy them: Vide ABRAHAM.

Towards the evening, two of theſe angels being come to Sodom, Lot, who was ſitting at the city gate, perceived them, and intreated them very earneſtly to lodge in his houſe. The angels at firſt refuſed; but Lot preſſing them, they went in, and he provided an entertainment for them. But before they were retired to reſt, all the inhabitants of the city beſieged Lot's houſe, exclaiming, "Where are theſe men, who came to you this evening? Produce them, that we may know them." "Do not, I beſeech you, my brethren," ſaid Lot, "commit any thing ſo wicked. I have two daughters, both virgins; I will bring them to you; uſe them as you pleaſe, provided you injure not theſe men who are come to my houſe, as to a place of ſecurity." But they ſaid; "Be gone; you came a ſtranger hither, and now pretend to be our judge." As they were on the point of breaking open the door, the two angels ſtretched out their hands to Lot, drew him into his houſe, and ſhut the door; and ſtruck all thoſe with blindneſs who were aſſaulting it.

Then ſaid the angels to Lot, direct all who belong to you to quit this city; for we are going to deſtroy it. Lot went and informed his ſons in law who had married his daughters. But this intelligence they received as an idle fancy. In the morning, as ſoon as it was day, the angels took Lot, his wife, and daughters, by the hand, and carried them forcibly, as it were, out of their houſe: ſaying, "ſave yourſelves with all haſte, look not behind you, get as faſt as you are able to the mountain, leſt you be involved in the misfortune of the reſt." Lot intreated the angels, who conſented, that he might retire to Zoar, which was one of the five cities doomed to be deſtroyed, But Lot's wife looking behind her, was overtaken in the flame, which fell from heaven, and which conſumed Sodom, with the country about it; whereby ſhe was changed into a pillar of ſalt.

Lot having beheld the ſad calamity of Sodom, had not courage to abide in Zoar; but left it, and retreated with his two daughters to a cave in ſome mountain near it. They, imagining that all mankind was deſtroyed, and that the world would have an end, unleſs they provided new inhabitants for it, made their father drink, and the eldeſt lay with him without his perceiving it; ſhe conceived a ſon by him, whom ſhe called Moab. The ſecond daughter did the ſame, and had Ammon by him.

St. Peter ſays, 2 Pet. ii. 7. that God delivered righteous Lot from the oppreſſion and vexation of the Sodomites.

The Mahometans have added many circumſtances to the hiſtory of Lot: as that, he was ſent by God to Sodom, and the four cities, in order to reclaim them from their abominable crime; the Arabians call him Louth, or Laouth. Lot acquitted himſelf of the duty of a preacher for twenty years; reproaching them with being the firſt of all mankind who fell into this abomination, and perverted the order of nature; but his ſermons and remonſtrances were in vain. God therefore ſent the angel Gabriel, with two others to exterminate them. He paſſed by Abraham's abode, and diſcovered God's reſolution to him. Abraham conteſted a great while with him, ſaying, that perhaps there were an hundred righteous men in the five cities, and that God was too juſt to confound the innocent with the guilty. He afterwards deſcended by degrees ſo far as to make the angel promiſe, that he would not deſtroy theſe cities if he found but one righteous perſon in them. Hereupon Abraham obſerved to him, that Lot was there with his family; the angels replied, we will deliver him; therefore ſay no more, for the ſentence of their condemnation is irrevokable.

The angels on their arrival near the city found Lot at work in the fields; he ſaluted them, and underſtanding that they intended to paſs that night in the city, he was much afflicted at it, apprehending leaſt ſome inſult might be offered them by reaſon of their beauty. He told them, that probably they did not know what ſort of people the inhabitants of Sodom were; that there were not more wicked men under heaven; which he repeated to them four times, modeſty reſtraining him from explaining himſelf farther: they did not however yield to his reaſons, but went into the city with him. They were no ſooner entered his houſe, but the people of Sodom came and beſieged them. Lot went out, and offered his daughters, if they would ſpare his gueſts: but their anſwer was, thou knoweſt we have nothing to do with thy daughters, and art not ignorant of what we demand. Lot replied to them, I have not indeed ſtrength enough to reſiſt you, but God is my refuge, who will be able to defend me and my gueſts from your outrages.

Then the angels encouraged him, declared to him who they were, and told him that they were ſent to deſtroy theſe wretches. At the ſame time they blinded them by only drawing their hands over their own faces. This chaſtiſement diſperſed them, and they cried out, that theſe ſtrangers were ſorcerers. The angels immediately directed Lot and his daughters to depart out of the city. But his wife, who had been debauched by her converſation among the inhabitants of Sodom, choſe to ſtay and periſh with them.

The angel Gabriel going under the foundations of theſe cities, raiſed them up in the air to ſuch an height, that the inhabitants of heaven who were neareſt to the earth, heard the muſic of their horns, and the barking of their dogs; then he let them fall down upon the earth, and all who dwelt in them were cruſhed to pieces under their ruins, God intending that their puniſhment ſhould have ſome proportion to their crime. After this overthrow God ſhowered down upon them, hot burning ſtones baked in the furnaces of hell; upon each whereof the names of the guilty were written, ſo that even they who were without the compaſs of their city, were burnt and knocked on the head by them. It is ſaid that one of them being at that time by chance in the temple of Mecca, built by Abraham, continued there ſecure for forty days; but that he no ſooner ſet his foot out of it, but he was ſtruck down and killed like the reſt of his countrymen.

[N. B. Romantic as this account appears, it preſerves traces of an earthquake, and a volcano, which were, in all probability, the natural, ſecondary cauſes of the overthrow of Sodom, and of the formation of the Dead Sea.]

LOTAN, לוטן, from the ſame.

LOTAN, ſon of Seir, Gen. xxxvi. 20.

LOT's WIFE, is called Hedith by the Rabbins: this word ſignifies witneſs: as if they would denominate this woman a witneſs, or proof of the puniſhment, which God inflicts on the unbelief and imprudence of thoſe, who obey not his word and threatenings. The ſcripture ſays, Gen. xix. 26. that ſhe looked back from behind him, and was changed into a pillar of ſalt. This phraſe, to look back behind one, is taken ſometimes for delaying, deferring, ſtaying; it was, probably, the angel's intention to haſten Lot and his family; to convince them that they had reaſon to fear the worſt conſequences from their delays.

Several difficulties are propoſed concerning her being changed into a pillar of ſalt. Some are of opinion, that it ſignifies only, that, being ſurprized and ſuffocated with fire and ſmoak, ſhe continued in the ſame place, as ſtiff and immoveable as a rock of ſalt: others, that a column or monument of ſalt ſtone was erected on her grave: others, that ſhe was ſtifled in the flame, and became a monument of ſalt to poſterity, i. e. a permanent and durable monument of her imprudence. Others, that ſhe was overpowered with the ſulphur and flame, and fell down dead on the earth, where her body became ſtiff and dry like mummies, which have been ſalted and embalmed: ſo that a ſtatue of ſalt ſignifies the ſame as a body dried, and ſalted.

But the common opinion is, that this woman was ſuddenly petrified and changed into a ſtatue of rock ſalt; which not only is not melted by rain, but is as hard as the hardeſt rocks. Some travellers in Paleſtine relate, that Lot's wife was ſhewn to them; i. e. the rock into which ſhe was metamorphoſed, But what renders their teſtimony very ſuſpicious is, that they do not agree about the place where it ſtands; ſome ſaying weſtward, others eaſtward; ſome northward, others ſouthward, of the Dead Sea; others in the midſt of its waters; others in Zoar, others at a great diſtance from that city. Some of the ancients, as Irenæus, lib. iv. cap. 51. and the author of a poem on Sodom, aſcribed to Tertullian, aſſure us, that this pillar retained the form of a woman. They add ſomething more incredible, viz. that ſhe retained alſo, the infirmities natural to her ſex.

Our Lord in the goſpel admoniſhes his diſciples, to remember Lot's wife in their flight, and not to imitate her tardineſs, Luke xvii. 32.

LOT, ſors; in Hebrew, גורל goral; in Greek κλῆρος in Perſian, pur; whence the feaſt Purim, or the Feaſt of Lots. We ſee lots uſed in many places of the ſcripture. God commanded, that lots ſhould be caſt upon the two goats, offered for the ſins of the multitude, on the ſolemn day of expiation; to aſcertain which of the two ſhould be ſacrificed, and which ſet at liberty. He required alſo, that the land of promiſe ſhould be divided by lot. Numb. xxvi. 55, 56. xxxiii. 54. xxxiv. 13, &c. The prieſts and Levites in like manner had cities given them by lot, Joſhua xiv, xv, xvi. In the time of David, the twenty-four classes of the priests and Levites were distributed by lot, to determine their order of waiting in the temple, 1 Chr. vi. 54, 61. In the division of the spoil after victory, lots were cast likewise, to distribute to each his portion, 1 Chr. xxiv. xxv. In the New Testament the soldiers cast lots for Jesus Christ's garments, as had been foretold by the prophet. After the death of Judas, lots were cast to decide which of the persons should succeed that traitor, Acts i. 26.

The manner of casting lots, we do not find described clearly in the scripture; and interpreters disagree about it: several methods were used. Solomon in the Proverbs, xvi. 33. points out one, The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord. Lots therefore were cast either into some person's lap, into an helmet, or an earthen vessel, or a vessel of some other matter; there they were shaken together, and afterwards cast, or drawn: but all this, it is very probable, might depend on the inclination of those concerned.

The use of lots is not prohibited, for God even enjoins it on some occasions, and the most holy persons of the Old and New Testament practised it. The wise man acknowledges the usefulness of this custom in these words, Prov. xviii. 18. The lot causeth contentions to cease, and parteth between the mighty. But it cannot be denied that casting lots is sometimes forbid; as, when it is practised without necessity; or with superstition; or with a design of tempting God; or, in things wherein there are other natural means of discovering truth; lastly, when reason and religion furnish other ways to guide us. Haman, Esther iii. 7, &c. used lots not only out of superstition, but likewise in an unjust and criminal matter, when he undertook to destroy the Jews. Nebuchadnezzar did so in a superstitious manner, when being on the way to Jerusalem, and Rabbath of the Ammonites, he cast lots to determine to which of the two cities he should go, Ezek. xxi. 18, &c. The mariners who had Jonah in their vessel, tempted God, by drawing lots to know whence the tempest originated with which they were overtaken, Jonah, i. 7. The storm might be natural, and it is possible that all of them were culpable. Lastly, God was not obliged to discover the guilty person to them by lots.

Lot, is taken likewise for inheritance. For example, Come up with me into my lot, into my inheritance, Judg. i. 3. Lord, thou maintainest my lot, Ps. xv. 5. And again, The rod of the wicked shall not rest upon the lot of the righteous, Ps. cxxv. 3: upon the inheritance of God's faithful servants.

The Feast of Lots. See PURIM.

LUBITH, לוחית, or luith, table, area, floor; from לוח luac: otherwise, verdure, from לחה lacac.

LUBITH, a place or district in the Moabites country, Isai. xv. 5. Jerem. xlviii. 5. Eusebius and Jerom say, Lubith is situated between the cities of Ar and Zoar, and consequently east of the Dead Sea.

LUCIFER. This word is taken (1) for the morning star, (2) for Jesus Christ, who is the light of the world; (3) for the devil, who by the fathers is often called Lucifer. Zophar says to Job, If thou art innocent, when thou shalt think thyself lost, thou shalt shine forth as the morning star, Job xi. 17. כבקר, boker. And God speaking to Job, says, Canst thou produce the morning star at the time when it should appear? Job xxxviii. 32. כימה, chima. And the eternal Father speaking of the word; I have begotten thee in my womb before the morning, Ps. cx. 3. שחר, schachar.

[Our author follows the Vulgate in his translation of this passage, ex utero ante Luciferum genui te. In the original Hebrew it stands thus, מרחם משחר לך טל ילדתיך, which our English version renders after this manner. The dew of thy birth is of the womb of the morning. Grotius expresses the sense of the Hebrew in these terms. Ros (id est, semen) prolis tuæ (id est, unde proles tibi nascetur) erit ut ros ab utero Auroræ. Thy seed shall be as fruitful as the morning dew.]

Isaiah xiv. 12, &c. speaks of the fall of Lucifer, How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning? Thou that appearest so bright at the break of day. In this sense several fathers explained it, and many commentators do explain it. But others are of opinion that it literally refers to the king of Babylon, who fell from his state of glory and elevation, and was cast headlong into hell. [into hades, the state of the dead.]

St. Peter, 2 Pet. i. 19. tells the faithful, that they have the word of prophesy whereunto they do well that they take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in their hearts. This morning-star, this light, set in opposition to the oracles of the preceding prophets, and over which they have so much advantage by their clearness, denote the gospel and doctrine of Jesus Christ. St. Peter in this passage hints at three degrees of light. 1. The oracles of the prophets, which shine in obscurity; this is the state of the Jews. 2. The morning-star, the dawn of day, to those who seriously search for Jesus Christ in the books of the Old Testament. 3. The sun, the state of those who have embraced the faith. Some translate the Greek, Ἕως οὗ ἡ ἡμέρα διαυγάσω καὶ Φώσφόρος ἀνατείλῃ, till the day appear, and the sun rises in their hearts.

They

They pretend, that Phoſphorus and Lucifer ſometimes ſignify the ſun. The Arabians call Lucifer, Eblis, likewiſe Azazel, which is the name of the ſcape-goat that was driven into the wilderneſs, loaded with the ſins of the Jewiſh people. They relate, that the angels having God's order to fall proſtrate before Adam immediately after his creation, all complied, except Eblis, who obſtinately refuſed, alledging, that he and his companions having been derived from the element of fire, which is much purer and more excellent than that of earth, whereof Adam was formed, it was not juſt that they ſhould be obliged to pay ſubmiſſions to their inferior. Whereupon God ſaid to him, Be gone from hence, for thou ſhalt be deprived for ever of my peace, and ſhalt be curſed to the day of judgment. Eblis deſired of God that he would grant him reſpite till the time of the general reſurrection; but all the delay he could obtain was till the ſound of the firſt trumpet, which is that at which all men ſhall die, in order to riſe again at the ſecond ſound of the trumpet; that is to ſay, forty years after. Eblis therefore died according to the Mahometans, but he will hereafter riſe with all men, in order to be plunged into the flames. I relate all theſe idle traditions for no other reaſon but to ſhew, that the theology of the Eaſtern people is but a corruption of Chriſtianity.

LUCIUS, Λούκιος, light; from the Latin lux.

I. LUCIUS of Cyrene, mentioned Acts xiii. 1. was one of the prophets of the Chriſtian church at Antioch. While employed in his miniſtry with the other prophets, the Holy Ghoſt ſaid to them; ſeparate me Paul and Barnabas, &c. Some believe Lucius to have been one of the Seventy. Uſuard and Ado aſſert, that the apoſtles ordained him firſt biſhop of Cyrene. The Latins honour him, May 6.

II. LUCIUS, mentioned Rom. xvi. 21. and ſtyled St. Paul's kinſman, is, ſay ſome, the ſame as Lucius the Cyrenian, of whom we have been ſpeaking: but, the generality do with more reaſon diſtinguiſh them. We know nothing of this Lucius; unleſs he and St. Luke be the ſame perſon; which, ſeems very credible. Vide LUKE.

LUD, לוד, λαδ, birth, generation; from ילד jalad.

LUD, fourth ſon of Shem, Gen. x. 22. peopled, ſay the generality of ancients and moderns, Lydia, a province of Aſia the Leſs. Arias Montanus places the Ludim where the Tigris and Euphrates meet, and M. le Clerc, between the rivers Chaboras, and Saocoras or Maſca.

LUDIM, לודים, λαδιείμ, births; from ילד jalad.

LUDIM, the ſon of Mizraïm, Gen. x. 13. Joſephus affirmed, that the deſcendants of Ludim had been long extinct, having been deſtroyed in the Ethiopian wars. The Jeruſalem paraphraſt tranſlates Ludim, the inhabitants of the Mareotis, part of Egypt: but Bochart maintains, that we ſhould read Meroitis, or the land of Meroe. The paraphraſt Jonathan tranſlates it, thoſe of the canton of Neut, or Neout, in Egypt; the Arabic, the inhabitants of Tenezus, near Peluſium. Ezekiel places the Ludim with Cuſh and Phut, and elſewhere with Phut and Pharas, or perhaps Pathros. Theſe people were in Egypt: but it is not eaſy to ſhew exactly where the Ludim dwelt.

LUKE, Λουκας, from the Latin, lux, luminous.

LUKE. St. Luke the Evangeliſt is by ſome ancient authors called Lucas, Lucius, or Lucanus. He was a Syrian, a native of Antioch, and by profeſſion a phyſician. They who believe him to be called Lucius, Rom. xvi. 21. muſt acknowledge likewiſe, that he was St. Paul's kinſman: Lucius and Jaſon—my kinſmen. It is not agreed whether he was by birth a Jew or a heathen. They who maintain that he was one of the Seventy, muſt believe that he was alſo a Jew, both by religion and extraction. Epiphanius thinks, he was one of thoſe who left Jeſus Chriſt, on hearing thoſe words: He who eateth not my fleſh, and drinketh not my blood, is not worthy of me; but that he returned to the faith on hearing St. Paul's ſermons at Antioch. Gregory the Great, moral. lib. i. cap. 1. and ſome others in Theophylact, believe St. Luke was Cleophas's companion, and went with him to Emmaus, when Jeſus Chriſt joined them. In an addition, found at the end of St. Jerom's treatiſe of Eminent Men, we find that St. Luke lived always a ſingle life, having neither wife nor children.

He was St. Paul's companion in ſeveral journeys, when he went about preaching the goſpel, 2 Tim. iv. 11. Philemon, 23, 24. Coloſſ. iv. 14. but in what place, or at what time they firſt came together, we cannot tell. They who maintain that he was converted by St. Paul at Antioch, believe that after that time, he never forſook him: others, that they met at Troas; and St. Luke himſelf favours this opinion, when he expreſſes himſelf in the Acts, xvi. 8, 9, 10: Immediately WE endeavoured to go into Macedonia from Troas. He begins in this place to ſpeak in the firſt perſon plural, as being then one of St. Paul's company. It is commonly believed, that St. Luke was a painter, and in ſome places there are pictures of the Virgin ſhewn as of his drawing, or, at leaſt, as copies taken from originals by him. The ancients knew nothing of St. Luke's being qualified in this manner, and Nicephorus is the firſt author who mentions it. But if he did not paint the Virgin's and her ſon's faces, he has left us many particulars concerning the Bleſſed Virgin, and the infancy of Jeſus Chriſt, from which we may judge, that he had ſeen, and was acquainted with, that admirable perſon, and that he had even a ſhare in her confidence, Vide Grot. ad Luc. ii. 51. [As he, more than either of the other evangeliſts notices the Virgin Mary, this was perhaps the origin of the notion that he had painted her: i. e. he deſcribed, delineated, &c. that holy mother.]

Epiphanius believes, hæreſ. 5. that he preached the goſpel in Dalmatia, Gaul, Italy, and Macedonia. Metaphraſtes, that he preached in Egypt, Libya, and Thebäis. Some are of opinion that he ſurvived St. Paul many years, and died in Achaia, being eighty, or eighty-four years old. Hieronym. de Viris illuſtr. Gaudent. Brixiens, homil. xvii. Nicephorus, lib. ii. cap. 43. ſays, that he died at Thebes in Bœotia, where is ſhewn a tomb, believed to be St. Luke's. Hippolytus. in MS. Bodlei. apud Mill. Præfat. in Luc. informs us, that he was crucified at Elèa in the Peloponneſus. Dorothæus in his Synopſis, tells us, that he died and was buried at Epheſus. Bede, Uſuard, Ado and the Roman calendar agree, that he died in Bithynia. There are ſeveral opinions concerning what kind of death he died. Some believe that he ſuffered martyrdom; the modern Greeks affirm, that he was crucified on an olive-tree. Elias of Crete, on the contrary, is very clear, that he did not die a violent death; and many of the moderns are of this opinion. Elias Cretenſ. in orat. iii. Greg. Nazianz.

Beſides the goſpel of St. Luke, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, ſome other works are aſcribed to him; ſuch as the tranſlation, or even the compoſition, as to the ſtyle, at leaſt, of the Epiſtle to the Hebrews. Clemens of Alexandria, apud Euſeb. lib. vi. Hiſt. Eccl. and Hieronym. de viris illuſtr. believe him to be the author of the diſputation between Jaſon and Papiſcus; which is now loſt. Others inform us, that the goſpel of Luke was properly St. Paul's goſpel; who dictated it to St. Luke, and that when St. Paul ſpeaks of his goſpel, Rom. ii. 16. & xvi. 25. & 2 Theſſ. xi. 13. he means the goſpel of St. Luke. Vide Euſeb. lib. iii. cap. 4. & lib. vi. cap. 25. Hiſt. Eccl. ex Origine. But Irenæus ſays no more, than that St. Luke digeſted into writing what St. Paul preached to the Gentiles; and Gregory Nazianzen, that the evangeliſt wrote with the help of St. Paul. It is certain, that St. Paul generally quotes the goſpel according to St. Luke, compare 1 Cor. xi. 23, 24. 25. with St. Luke xxii. 18, 19, 20. and 1 Cor. xv. 5. compared with St. Luke xxiv. 24. but St. Luke no where ſays that he was aſſiſted by St. Paul. He addreſſes the Goſpel and the Acts to one Theophilus, of whom we have no knowledge; and many of the ancients themſelves took this name in an appellative ſenſe, for one who loves God. The Marcionites received only the goſpel of St. Luke; and even this they curtailed in many places, as Tertullian, contra Marcion. lib. v. and Epiphanius, hæreſ. 42. obſerved.

As to the Acts of the Apoſtles, ſee ACTS.

St. Luke's ſtyle is generally purer Greek than that of the other evangeliſts; notwithſtanding, ſeveral expreſſions are remarked in it peculiar to the Helleniſtical Jews, ſeveral which have ſome reſemblance to the genius of the Syriac; and, in Grotius's judgment, even to the Latin tongue. See M. de Tillemont.

LUNATICS, Matt. iv. 24. Σεληνιαζόμενους, lunatici. Thus thoſe ſick perſons are called, who are attacked principally in the changes of the moon; for example, epileptical perſons, or thoſe who have the falling ſickneſs, inſane perſons, or thoſe who are tormented with fits of diſmal melancholy; and laſtly, perſons poſſeſſed by the devil, for thoſe have often been believed to have really been poſſeſſed by the devil, who were tormented only with great degrees of melancholy. St. Jerom, on Matt. iv. 24. is of opinion, that the lunatics in the goſpel were poſſeſſed perſons, whom the people through miſtake called lunatics, becauſe they ſaw them moſt tormented during the change of the moon; the devil affecting to make them ſuffer moſt in theſe circumſtances, that ſimple people might impute the cauſe of it to the moon, and from thence take occaſion to blaſpheme the Creator. Others maintain, that all the difference between an epileptic and a lunatic was, that one was more diſordered than the other. Perſons ſubject to epilepſies are not all equally attacked. Some fall more frequently, others more rarely. Some fall every day. Lunatics are affected only on the declenſion of the moon. Matt. xvii. 15.

LUNULA. God threatens the daughters of Sion, Iſaiah iii. 18. that he would take away the rich ornaments which they wore about their legs, their little moons or creſcents. The Roman ſenators wore about their ankle-bone above the heel, a ſort of buckle which they called moon, becauſe it was in the form of a ereſcent: patriciâ clauſit veſtigia Lunâ. Some have believed, that they wore it before, and at the lower part of the leg; but this opinion is ſingular; the ancient figures repreſent it otherwiſe. Bruduas, brother to Herod Atticus, wore this little moon above his heel upon the ankle-bone. It was of ivory, and in the form of a creſcent. The He- Hebrew word, השחרנים LXX. μηνίσκας, which Jerom has tranſlated Lunulas, ſignifies in reality moon; and Meniſcos made uſe of by the Septuagint may ſignify the ſame. Scripture uſes the ſame word, Judg. viii. 21, 26. where there is mention of the chains of gold or precious ſtones, hung upon the necks of the camels belonging to the Midianites: they were golden creſcents.

LUST. A word uſed by St. John, 1 Epiſt. ii. 6. to ſignify the irregular love of pleaſure, riches, and honours; all that is in the world, the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life. Luſt is not a ſin; but is the effect and cauſe of ſin:—the effect of original ſin; and the cauſe of all the evils committed in the world. As in both teſtaments, evil deſires, as well as evil actions, are equally proſcribed, ſo the firſt care of every man who would pleaſe God, is to bridle his luſt.

LUST, GRAVES OF; in Hebrew, Kiberothavah; an incampment of the Hebrews in the wilderneſs, whither they arrived, after having decamped from Sinai: called the Graves of Luſt, becauſe 23,000 Iſraelites died there, who were ſmitten by God for murmuring, and eating with exceſs of thoſe quails, which God in his anger had cauſed to fall about the camp. See Numb. xi. 34. Deut. ix. 20, 22.

LUTE. Vide MUSIC.

LUZ, לוז, ſeparation, departure; from לז luz, called afterwards Bethel, Gen. xxviii. 19.

II. LUZ, Judg. i. 25, 26. a city in Arabia Petræa, built by a man of Bethel, who while the tribe of Ephraim beſieged Bethel, ſhewed a ſecret entrance to them, whereby they took the city: for which reaſon they ſpared him and his family. He retired into the land of the Hittites, and there built Luz, otherwiſe called Leſa, Laſa, or Luſſa.

LYBIA, לבים, λίβυες, Hebrew, lubim, the heart of the ſea; from לבב lebab, the heart, and ים jam, the ſea: otherwiſe, a nation that has a heart; from lebab: otherwiſe hearts, in the plural; from לבים lebim, hearts.

LYBIA, a province of Egypt, which, in our opinion, was peopled by the deſcendants of Lehabim, ſon of Mizraim, Gen. x. 13. This province reached from Alexandria to Cyrene, and perhaps farther, Nahum. iii. 9.

LYBIA. Sometimes all Africa is called Lybia: but I do not believe it occurs in this ſenſe in ſcripture.

LYCAONIA, Λυκαονία, ſhe-wolf; from the Greek λυκαινὶς.

LYCAONIA, a province of Aſia Minor, and part of Cappadocia, having Galatia north, Piſidia ſouth, Cappadocia eaſt, and Phrygia weſt. St. Paul preached in Lycaonia, in the cities of Iconium and Lyſtra, Acts xiv. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

LYCAONIAN language. St. Paul preaching at Lyſtra, cured a man who had been lame from his mother's womb, and had never walked. Whereupon the inhabitants of Lyſtra ſaid, in the ſpeech of Lycaonia, "the Gods are come down to us in the likeneſs of men. And they called Barnabas, Jupiter; and Paul, Mercurius, becauſe he was the chief ſpeaker." The queſtion is, what this ſpeech of Lycaonia was? It is generally believed to have been a corrupt Greek; and it is certain that Greek was ſpoken in Aſia Minor; but, as is common in remote provinces, languages vary from the politeneſs of large cities and places, where ſtudies flouriſh.

Paul Erneſt Jablonſki has written a learned diſſertation on the Lycaonian tongue; he ſuppoſes it was the ſame with the Cappadocian, i. e. Greek mingled with a great deal of Syriac; an opinion, which has been followed by Grotius, and is very probable, by reaſon of the neighbourhood of Syria, Cappadocia, and Lycaonia; and if there had been no more in it, than the ſignifying a difference of dialect, St. Luke never would have ſaid, that theſe people cried in the ſpeech of Lycaonia; a dialect is no particular language.

LYCIA, Λυκία, belonging to a wolf.

LYCIA, a province of Aſia Minor, having Aſia proper north, the Mediterranean ſouth, Pamphilia eaſt, and Caria, weſt, Acts xxvii. 5. St. Paul landed at the port of Lyſtra in Lycia, when he went to Rome, A. D. 60.

LYDDA, Λύδδη, or Lyda. See LUDIM.

LYDDA, in Hebrew, Lud or Lod, by the Greeks and Latins called Lydda or Dioſpolis, in the way from Jeruſalem to Cæſarea Philippi. It lay eaſt of Joppa; four or five leagues from that city. Lydda belonged to Ephraim. It ſeems to have been inhabited by the Benjamites, at the return from the Babyloniſh captivity, Neh. xi. 35. Lydda is one of the three toparchies which were diſmembered from Samaria, and given to the Jews, 1 Macc. xi. 34. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 8. St. Peter coming to Lydda, cured a man there ſick of the palſy, whoſe name was Æneas, Acts ix. 33, 34.

The Jews inform us, that after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, they ſet up ſeveral academies in different places of Paleſtine, and in particular at Lydda, where the famous Akiba was a profeſſor for ſome time. Gamaliel ſucceeded him, and was obliged to retire to Japhna. After them appeared Taſpho or Trypho, another famous Rabbin, whom ſome have confounded with Trypho the Jew, who has a part in Juſtin's dialogue.

LYDIA,

LYDIA, Λυδία. See Lud, or Lod.

LYDIA, a woman of Thyatira, a ſeller of purple, who dwelt in the city of Philippi in Macedonia, Acts xvi. 14, 40. She was converted by St. Paul's preaching, and was baptized, ſhe and all her family. She offered her houſe to St. Paul ſo earneſtly, that he was prevailed on by her intreaties. This woman was not by birth a Jeweſs, but a proſelyte. The Roman martyrology commemorates her Auguſt 3. Lydia is perhaps the name of her country, and ſhe might be commonly called the Lydian, Lydia.

LYDIA, a province of Aſia Minor peopled by the ſons of Lud, the ſon of Shem, Gen. x. 23. We have very little notice of theſe Lydians in ſcripture. They are mentioned Iſaiah, lxvi. 19, or, perhaps, the Lydians in Egypt, and 1 Maccabees, viii. 8.

LYDIA, a province of Egypt, peopled by Ludim, the ſon of Mizraim, Gen. x. 13. Jeremiah xlvi. 9. Ezekiel xxvii. to xxxv. We do not know diſtinctly the ſituation or extent of their country. See LUDIM.

LYDIANS, לודים, λύδοι, mydii. See Ludim.

LYING, is condemned in many places. Ex. xxiii. i. 7. Lev. xix. 11. Prov. xii. 22. xiii. 5. xix. 22. Wiſd. i. 11. Eccl. vii. 13. xx. 10. xxv. 23. Hoſea iv. 1. Acts v. 4: Epheſ. iv. 25, James v. 12. Our Saviour requires his diſciples to be ſo plain and ſincere, that their word might be equivalent to the moſt ſolemn oaths; and that in all their aſſertions, they ſhould ſay only, it is, or, it is not: Matt. v. 37. James v. 12. It is in vain therefore to attempt to juſtify ſome particular perſons who have told lies; which perſons are in other reſpects commended in ſcripture. The ſcripture never praiſes their lying, but their other good actions. That which is in itſelf evil, never can become good. When Abraham ſays, that Sarah is his ſiſter, and not his wife; and Iſaac ſays the ſame of Rebekah; when Jacob by a lie defrauds his father of his bleſſing, to the prejudice of Eſau; when the Egyptian midwives declare, that the Hebrew women are delivered without their aſſiſtance; and when the Hebrews before their departure out of Egypt borrow things which they have no thoughts of returning; they are not any of them in this particular to be commended: but the evil which they committed might be mitigated by circumſtances not known to us. When we condemn lying, we do not condemn ſtratagems, hyperboles, or certain railleries and diſcourſes, which cuſtom and general conſent do not rank among lies. See St. Auſtin in his books of lying, and againſt lyars.

God puts a lying ſpirit into the mouths of falſe prophets; i. e. he permits them to follow the impreſſions of the evil ſpirit, and that others ſhould hearken to them, Kings xxii. 23. Prov. xxiii. 3. the bread of lying, or of lyars, in Heb. one who talks of the entertainment of which he has been partaker at a prince's table: or be not deſirous of his good cheer, for it is the bread of lying; it is food that pleaſes the taſte, but does not nouriſh; it is deceitful bread, good only in appearance. In another place he calls that deceitful bread, or bread of lying, which is acquired by injuſtice; Prov. xx. 17. We have placed our confidence in falſhood: in deceitful allies, or in the deluſive promiſes of falſe prophets; or laſtly, in the aſſiſtance of idols, whom they call vanity and lying; and afterwards, the hail ſhall ſweep away the refuge of lies, Iſ. xxviii. 17; the vain hopes mentioned by him a little higher. And in another paſſage, A deceived heart hath turned him aſide, that he cannot deliver his ſoul, nor ſay, is there not a lie in my right hand? perhaps I am in the wrong thus to adore wood, Iſ. xliv. 20. Jerem. viii. 8. The pen of the doctors of the law has written nothing but falſhood. They have promiſed you peace, and behold it is war. Their promiſes are vain and deluſive. Waters that are not ſure, are thoſe only that flow part of the year; they may be ſaid to be falſe, for they ſhould flow perpetually. My grief which ſhould paſs away like waters that dry up in ſummer, continues and increaſes every day. Jer. xv. 18.

Lying hills, Jer. iii. 24. are thoſe which after they have made a fine appearance to the eye, produce nothing. Hoſea ix. 2. The vine ſhall lie to them, the vintage ſhall fail. Habakkuk, iii. 17. The olive trees ſhall fail. The Latins have the ſame way of ſpeaking. Horace Epiſt. lib. i. Spem mentita ſeges.

To lie is alſo placed for rebellion: Pſalm vii. 46. and lxxx. 16.

LYSANIAS, Λυσανίας, that deſtroys, or drives away ſorrow; from the Greek λύσις, ſolution, and ἀνία, ſorrow.

LYSANIAS, or Lyſias, Tetrarch of Abilene, Luke iii. 1. This Lyſanias was probably the ſon or grandſon of another Lyſanias known in hiſtory, Dio. lib. xlix. p. 44, and put to death by Mark Antony, who gave part of his kingdom to Cleopatra.

Lyſanias, the ſon or grandſon of this firſt Lyſanias, poſſeſſed Abilene, when John Baptiſt began his miſſion; for Luke places him among the princes who governed in Judæa, or the country round about. But either he muſt have made no great figure figure in the world, or his government muſt have been of ſmall extent, ſince profane hiſtorians make no mention of him. Abilene was a ſmall province, ſituated between Libanus and Antilibanus, the capital whereof was Abila. See ABILA. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 4.

LYSIAS, Λυσίας, that diſſolves, or ſcatters: from λύσις.

LYSIAS. A friend and relation of king Antiochus Epiphanes. That prince going beyond the Euphrates, to collect money, left the regency of Syria to Lyſias, with orders to make war on the Jews, and utterly deſtroy them: Lyſias therefore ſent Ptolemy, the ſon of Dorymenes, Nicanor, and Gorgias, into Judæa with a powerful army. But Judas Maccabæus having routed it, he came himſelf the year following with greater forces; but was overcome, his army put to flight, and he himſelf obliged to retire to Antioch. The ſame year Antiochus Epiphanes dying beyond the Euphrates, Lyſias took upon himſelf the regency of the kingdom, under the minority of young Antiochus, though king Antiochus Epiphanes had given the government of the kingdom, and the tuition of his ſon, to Philip one of his friends, who was at that time with him, 1 Macc. vi. 14, 15, &c. Notwithſtanding the king's laſt will, Lyſias kept the government of Syria, and continued by his generals the war againſt the Jews, and came a ſecond time into the land of Judah, as far as Bethſura: but the Jews beat him, and obliged him to fly. He ſent propoſals of an accommodation to Judas Maccabæus, and peace was concluded on conditions very advantageous to the Jews. A. M. 3481, ante A. D. 163.

This peace was of ſhort duration. Judas Maccabæus having been obliged to take arms, againſt the particular enemies of the Jews, in ſeveral places of the country, and to repulſe the general of the Syrian troops, which were continually moleſting his brethren the Jews, Lyſias returned towards the cloſe of the year, and brought the young king Eupator with him, with the choice of all his troops. They laid ſiege to Bethſura, and advanced to Jeruſalem, the ſiege whereof was formed by them. The city, or rather the temple wherein Judas was ſhut up, was very much ſtraitened; for as this was the ſeventh year, there was a great want of proviſions. It happened, as Providence particularly would have it, that at the ſame time Philip, who had been left regent of the kingdom by Epiphanes, came into Syria, to take upon him the exerciſe of his employment. Lyſias upon receiving this intelligence, made propoſitions of peace to the Jews, which were accepted. Eupator and Lyſias entered Jeruſalem, honoured the temple, and promiſed the Jews, that they ſhould be permitted to live according to their own laws. But they falſified their word by demoliſhing the wall which ſecured the temple from the inſults of the citadel, which was in the poſſeſſion of the Syrians. They afterwards retired in haſte to Antioch, where they found Philip had fortified himſelf: but they attacked him, took the city by force, and killed him.

The next year, Demetrius the ſon of Seleucus, king of Syria, to whom the kingdom of right belonged, being returned from Rome, where he had remained an hoſtage ever ſince the death of the king his father; and coming into Syria, was received at Tripolis, a city of Phœnicia, and having gathered ſome troops, he marched directly to Antioch, entered the city, ſeized young Eupator and Lyſias, and killed them both. Such was the end of Lyſias, who had governed the kingdom of Syria about five years.

LYSIMACHUS, Λυσίμαχος, who diſperſes an army, and puts it to flight; from κυσις, diſperſion, and μαχη, battle.

I. LYSIMACHUS, the fifth ſon of Ptolemy, a Jew of Jeruſalem, who tranſlated the book of Eſther out of Hebrew into Greek. His tranſlation was carried from Jeruſalem to Alexandria by Doſitheus, who called himſelf a prieſt of Levi's family, and by Ptolemy his ſon, in the fourth year of Ptolemy's reign, ſurnamed Philometor, A. M. 3827, ante A. D. 177. Eſth. apoc. xi. 1.

II. LYSIMACHUS, brother of Menelaus, high-prieſt of the Jews. Menelaus purchaſed the high-prieſthood with a large ſum of money, which he promiſed Antiochus Epiphanes, but he took no care to pay it, and thereupon was cited to appear at Antioch. In his abſence he left his brother Lyſimachus at Jeruſalem, who in order to raiſe the ſums for which his brother was indebted, began to pillage the treaſury of the temple, 2 Macc. iv. 39, 40, &c. The people roſe and would have prevented him; but he ſet three thouſand men upon them, who killed a great number. The people arming themſelves with whatever they could lay hands on, ſome taking ſtones, others clubs, and others throwing handfuls of duſt, which was in the court of the temple, at Lyſimachus; this ſacrilegious man was himſelf killed near the temple treaſury. He is ſometimes reckoned among the high-prieſts, becauſe he was vicegerent to his brother Menelaus: but he never himſelf poſſeſſed the high-prieſthood.

III. LYSIMACHUS, Alexander Lyſimachus, Alabarch of Alexandria. See ALEXANDER XIV.

LYSTRA, Λύςρα, that diſſolves, or diſperſes; from λύσις.

LYSTRA, a city of Lycaonia, whereof Timothy was a native. Paul and Barnabas having preached there, A. D. 45. and healed a man who had been lame from his birth, were taken for gods; Paul for Mercury, and Barnabas for Jupiter. Theſe apoſtles had a great deal of difficulty to prevent the people from offering ſacrifices to them: but very ſoon after, certain Jews of Iconium and Antioch in Piſidia coming thither, animated the populace againſt them, who thereupon began to throw ſtones at Paul and Barnabas, and dragged them out of the city, ſuppoſing they were dead, Acts xiv. 6, 7, 8. Vide LYCAONIAN language.

MAACAH, Maachah, Maachati, or Beth-Maacha, a little province of Syria, eaſt and north of the ſources of Jordan, toward Damaſcus. Abel or Abela was in this country, whence it was called Abel-beth-maacha. Joſhua tells us, xiii. 13. that the Iſraelites would not deſtroy the Maachathites, but permitted them to dwell in the land. The king of Maachah aſſiſted the Ammonites againſt David, 2 Sam. x. 8, 9. Sheba the ſon of Bichri, took refuge in Abel of Beth-maachah, 2 Sam. xx. 15, 16, &c. The lot of the half tribe of Manaſſeh beyond Jordan extended to this country, Deut. iii. 14. Joſh. xii. 5.

MAACHAH, מעכה, to ſqueeze; from מעך mahac.

MAACHAH. There are ſeveral perſons in ſcripture of this name.

I. MAACHAH, ſon of Nahor, and of his concubine Reumah, Gen. xxii. 24. This Maachah may be father of the Macetes in Arabia Felix. There is a city called Maca, towards the ſtreights of Ormus.

II. MAACHAH, daughter of Talmai, king of Geſhur, wife of David, and mother of Abſalom and Tamar, 2 Sam. iii. 3.

III. MAACHAH, daughter of Abiſhalom, wife of Rehoboam, king of Judah, and mother of Abijam his ſucceſſor, 1 Kings xv. 2. But in 2 Chron. xiii. 2. ſhe is called Michaïah, daughter of Uriel of Gibeah. In Kings the mother may eaſily have been miſtaken for the daughter, by aſcribing to each Abiſhalom as a father. [but, vide FRAG. XVI.]

IV. MAACHAH, daughter of Abiſhalom, wife of Abijam, king of Judah, and mother of Aſa his ſucceſſor, 1 Kings xv. 10, 13, 14. Aſa took from his mother Maachah the office of prieſteſs of the groves.

V. MAACHAH, concubine of Caleb, and mother of Sheber and Tirhanah, 1 Chron. ii. 48.

VI. MAACHAH, wife of Machir, and mother of Pereſh, 1 Chron. vii. 16.

VII. MAACHAH, father of Achiſh, king of Gath, 1 Kings ii. 39.

VIII. MAACHAH, ſiſter of Machir, 1 Chron. vii. 15.

IX. MAACHAH, father of Shephatiah, head of Simeon in the time of David, 1 Chron. xxvii. 16.

MAACATI, מעכתי, μααχαθὶ, Machati, or the Maachathite, bruiſed, or the bruiſing of the belly; from מעה mahah, the belly, and כתת cathath, to bruiſe.

MAACATI, father of Jaazaniah; Vulgate, Jezonias, 2 Kings xxv. 23. [Our Engliſh tranſlation reads, Jaazaniah, the ſon of a Maachathite.]

MAADAI, מעדי, μοοδίας, Vulgate, Maaddi, feaſt, ornament, paſſage; from עדה hadah: otherwiſe, that wavers; from מעד mahad: otherwiſe, that lifts me up; from עוד hoded: or that takes away my ornament; from מעדי mahadi.

MAADAI, ſon of Bani, one who at the return from the captivity diſmiſſed their wives, taken contrary to the law. Ezra x. 34.

MAADIAH, מעדיה, μααδίας, ſolemnity, feaſt, or ornament, or paſſage of the Lord; from עדה hadah: and יה jah, the Lord: otherwiſe, teſtimony; from עוד hud.

MAAI, מעי, μαία, bowels; from מעה mahah: otherwiſe, heap, or maſs; from עי hi, or עיה haiah.

MAAI, a prieſt, a muſician, Nehem. xii. 36.

MAARAH-SIDONIORUM, מערה, σιδόνιοι, cavern; from מער mahar: otherwiſe, who diſcovers himſelf, or ſpreads himſelf; from ערה harah: or that awakes; from עור hur.

MAARATH, מערת, cavern; from ערה harah: otherwiſe, that diſcovers, ſpreads, awakes; from עור hur.

MAARATH, Maaret, or Mareth, a city of Judah, Joſhua xv. 59.

MAASEIAH, מעשי, my work; from עשה haſhah, to do, or make, and the pronoun י i, my.

MAASEIAH, מעשיה, or Maaſias, the work of the Lord; from עשה haſhah, to make, and יה jah, the Lord.

MAASEIAH, מחזיה, μασαῖος, confidence of the Lord, or hope of the Lord; from חסה chaſah, hope, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. MAASEIAH, or Maaſai, ſon of Adiel a Levite, 1 Chron. xv. 18.

II. MAASEIAH, ſon of Ahaz king of Iſrael: aſſaſſinated by Zichri. 2 Chron. xxviii. 7.

III. MAASEIAH, ſon of Adaiah, one to whom the high-prieſt Jehoiadah diſcovered his deſign, of ſetting Joaſh upon the throne of Judah. 2 Chron. xxiii. 2.

MAAZ, מעץ, wood; from עץ hetz: otherwiſe, council; from עוץ huts.

MAAZIAH, מעזיהו, μααζίας, ſtrength of the Lord; from עז hazaz, to be ſtrong, and יה jah, the Lord.

MAAZIAH, chief of the twenty-fourth family of the prieſts. 1 Chron. xxiv. 18.

MABARTHA; this is the name that in the time of Joſephus was given by the inhabitants to the city of Shechem, otherwiſe called Neapolis, or Naplouſe. Joſeph de Bello, lib. v. cap. 4.

MABDAI, ſon of Maani, perhaps the Maadai beforementioned, Ezra x. 34.

MACCABEES. This name may be derived, 1. From the Hebrew word caba, I extinguiſh; q. d. one that deſtroys, one that extirpates, the enemies of the Lord. 2. Others derive it from the Hebrew macha-bi, מכה בי, plaga in me, the wound is in me; God has ſtruck me; humbled me. See Iſaiah liii. 3, 4, where the Meſſias is called (Iſh Macoboth) a man of ſorrows, and (Muccah Elohim) ſmitten of God. See alſo 1 Chron. xii. 13. where Machbanai is a proper name. 3. We may alſo derive Maccabæus, or Maccabaïhu, according to the Hebrew pronunciation, from makkà ba-jah מכה ביה, percutiens in Deo, macchabaïah, one that ſmites in the name of the Lord. 4. Others derive it from the Heb. מחבה machabeh, abſconſus. See 1 Sam. xiv. 22. Or by deriving it from נקב, which alſo ſignifies to dig, to make hollow, מקבת, is uſed for a ſubterraneous cell or cave, whence mechubbeh, or muchabeh, ſecret, hidden. The Maccabees at firſt hid themſelves in caverns, to avoid perſecution; but afterwards they came forth, and withſtood their perſecutors. 5. It may alſo be a derivative from נקב nakab, to pierce: makkebah is taken for an hammer. 6. Makkabei may ſignify, thoſe that ſupplant, from עקב akab, to ſupplant or undermine. 7. Laſtly, the moſt popular opinion is, that they inſcribed on their enſigns, or on their bucklers, theſe four Hebrew letters, מ Mem, כ Caph, ב Beth, י Jod, which begin theſe words, Mi, Camoca, Be-elohim, Jehovah; מכבי, Maccabei, מי כמכה באלים יהוה. Who is like-unto thee, O Lord, among the gods? Exodus xv. 11. After the manner that the Romans put on their enſigns, S. P. Q. R. i. e. Senatus Populuſque Romanus. This etymology is certainly the moſt probable.

It is well known that the Hebrews compoſe ſuch artificial words, by uniting the initial letters. So, inſtead of ſaying Rabbi Levi Ben Gerſon, they ſpoke it, Ralbag, and wrote it R, L, B, G. Inſtead of Rabbi Moſes Ben Maimoni, they pronounced Rambam, and wrote R, M, B, M. Nothing is more frequent among them than this cuſtom, and without a key to theſe abbreviations, it would be impoſſible to underſtand the books of the Rabbins. To facilitate this ſtudy, Buxtorf compoſed his book, De abbreviaturis Hebraicis.

What raiſes a doubt whether the word Maccabee was ſo derived, is, that Judas Maccabæus bore this name before the beginning of the war; for at the beginning of the firſt book of Maccabees, ſpeaking of Mattathias and his five ſons, the writer gives to each the ſurname he then went by. John, ſurnamed Gaddis; Simon, ſurnamed Thaſis; and Judas, ſurnamed Maccabæus. 1 Macc. ii. 4.

The tradition of the Orientals, related by Abulfarage, is, that the mother of the ſeven brethren, martyred under Antiochus Epiphanes, was called Aſhmunah, or Shamunah, from the Hebrew Chaſhmanim, or Kaſhmenim, which ſignifies great men or princes, given to the Maccabees, as to the princes of their nation. Hence the Greeks and the Latins formed the word Aſmoneans.

But whatever was the etymology of this name, it was given to Judas, ſon of Mattathias, from whom it paſſed to his brothers Simon and Jonathan; and in general, to all, who, under the perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, ſignalized their zeal and conſtancy, in defence of the liberty and religion of their country. Thus the ſeven brethren are called Maccabees, who ſuffered death with their mother, for the defence of their law; and the name the Books of the Maccabees is given to thoſe books which contain the hiſtory of thoſe times. It is alſo given (but certainly very improperly) to the book which gives an account of the perſecution of Ptolemy Philopator, againſt the Jews of Egypt, which was ſeveral years before the perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria.

Maccabeus is applied chiefly to Judas Maccabeus; and this name when alone, means that general. Vide JUDAS MACCABEUS.

For the catalogue of the Maccabean or Aſmonean princes, Vide the CHRONOLOGICAL TABLES.

The hiſtory of the martyrdom of the ſeven brethren of the Maccabees, A. M. 3837, is related in 2 Maccabees, vii. and more at large in the book of the Government of Reaſon. The martyrdom of Eleazar is in 1 Macc. vi. 18. See ELEAZAR.

The ancient Latin tranſlation of the book concerning the Government of Reaſon, which we ſhall mention preſently under the name of the fourth book book of the Maccabees, names the ſeven brethren, (1) Maccabæus, (2) Aber, (3) Machiri, (4) Judas, (5) Achus, (6) Areth, (7) Jacob. They have other names in ſome ancient MSS. but the original Greek text of the ſecond and fourth books of the Maccabees, makes no mention of them. Joſephus, and ſome others believe they ſuffered at Jeruſalem; but it is much more likely it was at Antioch, where their tombs were ſhewn in the time of St. Jerom, in loc. verbo modin; and where was a church dedicated under their name, in the time of St. Auſtin, Serm. 1. de Maccab.

The firſt of the ſeven brethren having declared to the king, that he would die ſooner than violate the laws of God, was ſeized by the executioners, had his tongue cut out, and the extremities of his hands and feet cut off, and the ſkin of his head torn off. While yet alive, he was thrown into a burning pan, which was heating over a great fire. Thus it is told 2 Maccabees vii. 2, 7; the Government of Reaſon declares, that the executioners having ſtripped off his clothes, tied his hands behind his back, and whipped him to pieces with ſcourges, without his ſhewing the leaſt ſign of pain. Afterwards they fixed him upon a wheel, where having his limbs broke to pieces, he expoſtulated with Antiochus, reproached him with his barbarity, and inſulted him upon the unſucceſsfulneſs of all his attempts. Then the executioners raiſing the wheel upon which he was extended, and lighting a fire under it, conſumed him thus by a new torture. He died exhorting his brethren to ſhew the like conſtancy.

The other brothers ſuffered alſo by the moſt cruel tortures the king could inflict: the particulars are too horrid to repeat, and the variation in the hiſtory of them between the books of the Maccabees and the Government of Reaſon, are of little importance and leſs entertainment to the reader.

The mother of theſe holy martyrs ſuffered death alſo. The ſecond book of the Maccabees ſays nothing by what means. But the book of the Government of Reaſon mentions, that ſome of Antiochus's attendants having ſuggeſted to this prince, that he ought to put her to death alſo, and to deal with her as he had dealt with her children; ſhe had no ſooner heard theſe words, but ſhe caſt herſelf into the fire, to prevent thoſe miniſters of cruelty from laying their hands on her. In ſome ancient Manuſcripts this holy woman is called Salome, or Salamonis: the tradition of the orientals, related by Abulfarage, calls her Aſhmunah, or Shamunah; but her name is not to be found in any certain or authentic document. The church of Rome celebrates the feaſt of theſe ſeven brethren, and of their mother, Auguſt 1. They were the firſt, and for a long time the only martyrs of the Old Teſtament, in honour of whom altars and temples were ſet up; they are the only ſaints of that kind, for whom there remains an office or commemoration in the Roman Breviary.

THE BOOKS OF THE MACCABEES. There are four books of the Maccabees, of which the two firſt are canonical, and the other two apocryphal, in the church of Rome. [Among Proteſtants the two firſt are eſteemed pretty good hiſtorical authority, the two laſt are little known: the third is ſometimes ſeen among us: the fourth never.] In order of time, the third book of the Maccabees ought to be placed firſt, and the firſt, to be placed third.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE MACCABEES, was writ originally in Hebrew, or in Syriac. The ſtyle and turn of expreſſion proves this, as well as the title mentioned by Origen: apud Euſeb. lib. vi. cap. ult. Sarbet ſar-bané el, the ſcepter of the prince of the children of God, or, the ſcepter of the rebels of the Lord. As if hinting that the Maccabees held the ſcepter and government of the Lord in Iſrael, againſt all who oppoſed them. St. Jerome ſays alſo, prolog. Galeato, that he had found the firſt book of the Maccabees in the Hebrew: but, the Greek is now held for an original.

It is probable, this book might be compoſed from public memoirs, kept by the Jews, of remarkable occurrences among them. Judas Maccabeus made a collection of them, 2 Macc. ii. 14. and this firſt book towards the concluſion refers to the Memoirs of Johannes Hircanus, 1 Macc. xvi. ult. which has occaſioned ſome to believe, that Johannes Hircanus might be the author.

This book contains the hiſtory of forty years, from the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, to the death of Simon the high-prieſt; A. M. 3829, to A. M. 3869. ante A. D. 135. The author is unknown, and he muſt have lived after the pontificate of Johannes Hircanus, becauſe he quotes the Memoirs of his Government. In his chronological computations he uſes the Hebrew manner of reckoning, beginning at the month Niſan, the firſt month of the holy year; whereas the Syrians, or the Greeks who reigned in Syria, began it ſix months later; about the beginning of October.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE MACCABEES is an abridgment of a larger work, compoſed by one Jaſon, which contained the hiſtory of the perſecutions of Epiphanes and Eupator againſt the Jews. The author of this abridgment is not known, and the intire work of Jaſon is not extant. They were both Greeks, and followed manner of reckoning of the Seleucidæ, according to the cuſtom of the Syrians, who began their year about the month of October. The two laſt chapters contain events under the reign of Demetrius Soter, the ſucceſſor of Antiochus Eupator; and contain ſuch varieties in their ſtyle, as render it doubtful whether they had the ſame author as the reſt of the work. This book contains the hiſtory of about fifteen years, from the execution of Heliodorus's commiſſion, to fetch away the treaſures of the temple, to the victory of Judas Maccabæus over Nicanor; from A. M. 3828, to A. M. 3843, ante A. D. 157.

At the beginning of this book are two letters; one from the Jews of Jeruſalem to thoſe of Alexandria, to inform them of the celebration of the feaſt of purification, and of the dedication of the temple of Jeruſalem, by Judas Maccabæus. The other from the ſenate of Jeruſalem, and from Judas, to Ariſtobulus preceptor to king Ptolemy, on the ſame ſubject. This laſt letter being writ A. M. 3880, there is reaſon to believe, that the book itſelf was compoſed about the ſame time, under the pontificate of Hircanus. The elegance of ſtyle in this piece has induced ſome to aſcribe it to Joſephus or Philo. Serrarius believed it was the work of Judas the Eſſenian, mentioned by Joſephus. Leo Allatius conjectures, that Simon Maccabæus, brother of Judas, might be the author of it. But all this is very uncertain.

THE THIRD BOOK OF THE MACCABEES. This book contains the hiſtory of the perſecution of Ptolemy Philopater king of Egypt, againſt the Jews of his kingdom. This prince after his victory over Antiochus the Great, went to Jeruſalem, and there offered ſacrifices of thankſgiving in the temple of the Lord. But, afterwards, thinking to enter into the ſanctuary, he was hindered by the prieſts and people. Perſiſting in his deſign, of entering into this holy place, he was ſtruck down to the ground, by a divine power; ſo that not being able to ſtir, they were forced to carry him out of the temple. After his return into Egypt, his reſentment broke out againſt the Jews in that country, where there was a great number. He endeavoured to make them forſake their religion; but not being able to accompliſh that, he aſſembled them at Alexandria, and ſhut them up in the Hippodrome, that they might be trod to death by his elephants. God delivered them from this danger, by making the king forget the orders he had given. Afterwards, God ſent two angels to their aſſiſtance, which ſo terrified the king, that he honourably diſmiſſed them. A. M. 3787, ante A. D. 217.

The name of the third of the Maccabees has been given to this book improperly enough, ſince it has no relation to Judas Maccabeus, nor to any of his brethren, or to the perſecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes king of Syria; the ſtory related having happened in Egypt, fifty years before the perſecution of Epiphanes. Joſephus in his hiſtory makes no mention of this perſecution; he juſt ſpeaks of it in his firſt book againſt Appion; but what he ſays of it, agrees but little with what we read in this third book of the Maccabees.

The Greeks and Latins at this day reject this book as apocryphal. The ancient Latin writers no where quote it, as I remember, and do not ſeem to have known it. But it was known to the Greeks. Athanaſius in his Synopſis, and Nicephorus at the end of his chronology, put this in the number of controverted books, as well as the two firſt books of the Maccabees: Grotius believes it was writ after the two firſt books, and ſhortly after the book of Eccleſiaſticus; which is the reaſon it had the name of the third book of Maccabees.

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE MACCABEES is ſo uncommon among the Latins, that we do not clearly know what it is. In the ancient Greek manuſcripts of the bible, and in ſome Greek editions, we find the book concerning the Government of Reaſon, aſcribed to Joſephus, placed after the three firſt books of the Maccabees. But the learned have much doubted, whether this was the book known to the ancients, as the fourth book of the Maccabees. However, ſeveral manuſcripts, and ſome printed Greek bibles, call it the fourth of the Maccabees. Philoſtratus, Euſebius, and St. Jerom, knew the book of the Government of Reaſon, and aſcribed it to Joſephus, by the name of the book of the Maccabees. St. Gregory Nazianzen, St. Ambroſe, and St. Chryſoſtom, in the characters they have given of the ſeven Maccabees, and of old Eleazar, have plainly followed what we find in this book. Marinus Victorinus Africanus, who taught rhetorick at Rome under the emperor Conſtantius, in his poem of the Maccabees, appears alſo to have had this book before him.

The author has enlarged and adorned the hiſtory of the holy old man Eleazar, and of the ſeven brothers the Maccabees, who ſuffered martyrdom at Antioch with their mother, as related 2 Mac. vi. vii. One might ſuſpect that this piece is a fragment of Jaſon's performance, before it was abridged, if the author had not put a long preface before it, which ſhews that this is a ſeparate and independent work. He ſuppoſes, that the ſcene of the martyrdom of the ſeven brethren was at Jeruſalem. He ſays that Apollonius, governor of Syria and Phœnicia, was ſent to Jeruſalem by king Seleucus Nicator, to take away the treaſures from the temple; whereas the true hiſtory informs us, that it was Heliodorus who was ſent for this purpoſe by Seleucus Philopator. This work is found among the works of Joſephus, and it bears his name in the printed books, and in ſeveral manuſcripts. But I can hardly believe him to be the author; not only becauſe of the difference of ſtyle, but alſo becauſe of the accounts of ſome facts differing from Joſephus, in ſeveral paſſages of his hiſtory.

MACCABÆUS, מכבאי, μακκαβαῖος, he that ſtrikes; from מקה maca: according to the Greek, he that fights; from μάχη, battle. Vide MACCABEES.

MACEDONIA, Μακεδονία.

MACEDONIA, a kingdom of Greece, having Thrace to the north, Theſſaly ſouth, Epirus weſt, and the Ægæan ſea eaſt. We believe that Macedonia was peopled by Kittim ſon of Javan, Gen. x. 4. and that by Kittim in the Hebrew text, Macedonia is to be underſtood. See Kittim.

Alexander the Great, ſon of Philip king of Macedonia, having conquered Aſia, and ſubverted the Perſian empire, the name of the Macedonians became very famous throughout the eaſt; and is often given to the Greeks, the ſucceſſors of Alexander in the monarchy. Eſther xvi. apoc. 10, 14. and 2 Mac. viii. 20. And in like manner the name of Greeks is often put for the Macedonians, 2 Mac. iv. 36.

St. Paul was invited by the angel of this province, (ſay ſome) which appeared to him at Troas, to preach the goſpel in Macedonia. St. Paul concluded that God had called him to that country, and the ſucceſs that attended his preaching there confirmed him in his opinion. There he founded the churches of Theſſalonica and Philippi, and had the ſatisfaction of ſeeing them flouriſhing, numerous, and abounding in ſpiritual gifts and graces. Acts xvi. 9, &c. A. M. 55, ante A. D. 52.

MACEDONIANS, Μακεδόνες, כתים, cethim, bruiſing, or fine gold.

MACEDONIAN, Μακεδὼν, a native of Macedonia, 1 Macc. i. 1. Adoration, proſtration; according to the Hebrew: but elevated, eminent; from the Greek μακεδνὸς.

MACEDONIAN, in the apocryphal books written in Greek, this word is ſometimes uſed as an appellative, for an enemy to the Jews. Thus in the additions to the book of Eſther; it is ſaid, Haman was a Macedonian by nation and inclination; that he was deſirous to transfer the empire of the Perſians to the Macedonians; i. e. to the greateſt enemies of the ſtate, taking matters as they were when theſe additions were written, which was evidently after the overthrow of the empire of the Perſians, by Alexander the Great. For before this time the Macedonians gave but little umbrage to the Perſians; and in the time of Eſther and Mordecai, they were not much feared at Shuſhan. [N. B. This ſurely looks very like a mark of late and ill-conceived ſuppoſitious hiſtory.]

MACHÆRA. General of the Roman forces in the army of Marc-Anthony; was ſent to aſſiſt Herod againſt Antigonus, with two legions and a thouſand horſe. But being corrupted by Antigonus, he not only declined to aſſiſt Herod, but joined his troops to thoſe of his enemy. Yet Antigonus did not truſt him, but the contrary. This ſo exaſperated Machæra, that he retired to Emmaus, and put to the ſword all the Jews that he found in his march. After this he took part with Herod, and, joining his own troops to thoſe commanded by Joſeph, Herod's brother, they made war together againſt Antigonus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 27. A. M. 3965, ante A. D. 39.

MACHBANAI, מכבני, μαχαβανὶ, my ſon, poor, or miſerable; from מכך macac, miſery, poverty, and בן ben, a ſon, and the pronoun י i, my: otherwiſe, poverty of the underſtanding, or of the building; from מכך macac, poverty, and בנה banah, to build, or בינה binah, underſtanding.

MACHBANAI, or Machabanai, a valiant man in David's army, 1 Chr. xii. 13.

MACHBENAH, מכבנה, μαχβανὰ, beating of the underſtanding, or of the building; from בנה banah, or בינה binah: or the humiliation, the poverty of the daughter.

MACHBENAH, or Machabena, ſon of Shevah, and father of Gibea, 1 Chr. ii. 49.

MACHÆRUS, or Macheronte, a city and fort beyond Jordan, in the tribe of Reuben, north and eaſt of the lake Aſphaltites, two or three leagues from Jordan, and not far from where that river diſcharges itſelf into the Dead Sea. This caſtle had been fortified by the Aſmonians. Gabinius demoliſhed it, and Ariſtobulus fortified it anew. Herod the Great made it much ſtronger than before. Either here, or in the neighbourhood, was a ſpring of hot waters, very ſalutary. John the Baptiſt was put in priſon, and beheaded at Machærus, by the order of Herod Antipas. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 10.

MACHI, מכי, he that ſtrikes, or is poor and miſerable.

MACHINES of war: ſuch as are proper for beſieging of cities and fortreſſes, are of late invention, in reſpect of early antiquity. There is no mention of them in Homer; and Diodorus Siculus obſerves, lib. ii. p. 80. that Sardanapalus, king of Aſſyria, ſuſtained a ſiege of ſeven years in Niniveh, becauſe at that time machines fit for demoliſhing and taking cities, were not invented. But about the ſame time we read, that Uzziah king of Judah, had laid up in his magazines, ſhields, and ſpears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and ſlings to caſt ſtones. And that he made in Jeruſalem engines invented by cunning men, to be on the towers, and upon the bulwarks, to ſhoot arrows and great ſtones withal; and his name ſpread far abroad, for he was marvellouſly helped till he was ſtrong. 2 Chr. xxvi. 14, 15. Here we ſee perhaps the firſt inſtance of machines of war: or at leaſt, of a collected armory of them.

About ſeventy years after, A. M. 3416, and 3419. in the ſieges of Tyre and Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar, he uſed battering rams and ſlings. The Hebrew word car, כר, Ezek. iv. 1, 2. xxi. 22. Græc. Κριὸς, krios, Aries, which ſcripture uſes to expreſs this warlike machine, ſignifies a real ram; by a metaphor, a machine, by which they battered down gates, and walls of cities. The prophet Ezekiel ſpeaking of the ſiege of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, inſinuates the ancient manner of beſieging places. He ſhall ſlay with the ſword thy daughters in the field, and he ſhall make a fort againſt thee, and caſt a mount againſt thee, and lift up the buckler againſt thee. And he ſhall ſet enſigns of war againſt thy walls, and with his axes he ſhall break down thy towers. Ezek. xxvi. 8, 9.

When the ancients beſieged a place, they uſually ſurrounded it with mounds, towers, and trenches, that the beſieged might neither make any ſallies, nor receive ſuccours from without. To lift up the buckler may intimate what the Romans called facere teſtudinem, to make a tortoiſe; when they cauſed their ſoldiers to approach near to each other to join their bucklers, in the form of a tortoiſe, in order to ſap the walls, or to beat down gates, or to burn them. The engines of war here mentioned, or machines of cords, were the Baliſtæ or Catapultæ, uſed for hurling ſtones or darts; or thoſe great hooks which were faſtened to cords, and thrown on the tops of walls, to tear them down. Of theſe iron hooks or fangs, may be underſtood 2 Sam. xvii. 13. If he be got into a city, then ſhall all Iſrael bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not one ſmall ſtone found there.

MACHIR, מכיר, he that ſells, or that knows; from מכר macar.

I. MACHIR, ſon of Manaſſeh, and grandſon of Joſeph; chief of the family of the Machirites. Numb. xxvi. 29. His ſons were Pereſh and Shereſh, his daughter married Hezron of Judah. She was mother to Segub, and grandmother to Jair. 1 Chron. ii. 21, 22. vii. 16.

II. MACHIR, ſon of Ammiel, of the city of Lodebar, with whom Mephiboſheth was brought up, 2 Sam. ix. 5.

MACHNADEBAI, מכנדבי, poor: otherwiſe, he that ſtrikes; from מכך macac, poor, and naca, that ſtrikes: otherwiſe, the prince, or he that vows, or that acts of his own motion; from נדב nadab, that acts voluntarily, or that vows and makes a preſent; or from נדיב nadib, a prince.

MACTESH, מכתש, jaw-tooth, mortar, peſtle.

MACHPELAH, or Macphela, in Hebrew ſignifies double; the vulgate takes it in this ſenſe, ſpeaking of the cave that Abraham bought of Ephron, wherein to bury his wife Sarah. Gen. xxiii. 9. But others with more probability think, that in this place Machpelah is the name of the plain wherein this cave was ſituated, q. "The cave which is at Machpelah." And verſe 17. The field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah; [as in the Engliſh tranſlation.] A perſon of ſkill in the Arabic has informed us, that in that language Machpelah ſignifies ſhut up, or walled up. He believes that the cave called Machpelah, was a tomb hewn into a rock, and cloſed up, or walled up, that no one might enter therein, or that thieves might not make it a retreat; or that it might not be violated or prophaned. Tombs thus ſhut or walled up, are ſtill uſed in the eaſt. This conjecture is at leaſt very probable; ſo that it might be tranſlated, "the cave that was ſhut up," inſtead of the cave of Machpelah. Vide FRAGMENTS.

MACRON, Μάκρων, 1 Mac. iii. 38. tall.

MADAI, מדי, meaſure; from מד mad, meaſure: otherwiſe, covering, or clothes; from the ſame.

MADAI, third ſon of Japheth, Gen. x. 2. It is commonly thought he was the father of the Medes; but beſide that Media is too diſtant from the other countries peopled by Japheth; it cannot be comprehended under the name of The Iſles of the Gentiles, which were the diviſion of the ſons of Japheth. Theſe reaſons have induced ſome learned men to ſuggeſt, that Madai was the father of the Macedonians. Macedonia was otherwiſe called Æmathia, as if from the Hebrew Ei, an iſland, and Madai; q. d. the iſle of Madai; אי מדו, inſula Madai, Αιὰ Μαδαι: or from the Greek Aia-madai, the land of Madai. Near this country is mentioned a people called Mædi or Madi, Ariſtot. de mirabil. Ptolem. cap. xi. tab. 9. Europ. and in Macedonia a king called Medus.

The name Media given to the country beyond the Euphrates, ſeems not to be more ancient than Medea, or the voyage of Jaſon to Colchis. See MEDES.

MADMANNAH, מדמנה, meaſure of number; from מר mad, meaſure, and מנה manah, to number: otherwiſe, preparation of clothing; from מנה manah, preparation, and מד mad, clothing, or covering: otherwiſe, dung; from מדמנה madmenah: or ordure; from דמן domen.

I. MADMANNAH, or Madmena, ſon of Shaaph, 1 Chr. ii. 49.

II. MADMANNAH, or Medemene, a city of Simeon, (Joſh. xv. 31.) firſt given to Judah; it was very far ſouth of Judah. Euſebius places it towards Gaza. See Iſai. x. 31. and 1 Chron. ii. 49.

MADON, מדון, proceſs, diſpute; ſee Madan: otherwiſe, his meaſure; from מד mad, meaſure, and the pronoun ן an, his, or theirs.

MADON, a city of the land of Canaan. Jobab, king of Madon, confederated with Jabin, king of Hazor, and others, againſt Joſhua; but was taken and killed, and his city deſtroyed. The ſituation of Madon is unknown, it is mentioned only in Joſh. xi. 1. and xii. 19. I believe the true reading is Maron, inſtead of Madon; we know a place called Maronia in Syria, about thirty miles from Antioch, north of mount Libanus. Meron or Meroon is in Heb. Joſhua, xii. 19.

MAGBISH, מגביש, height, eminence; from gabiſh.

MAGBISH, or MAGPIASH, 156 of his children returned from the captivity, Ezr. ii. 30.

MAGDALA, Μαγδαλὰ, tower, or greatneſs; according to the Hebrew.

MAGDALEN, Μαγδαλήνη, tower: from מגדל migdal: otherwiſe, grand, elevated, magnificent; from גדל gadol: in Syriac, curling; from גדל gadal, to curl.

MAGDALEN. See MARY MAGDALEN.

MAGDIEL, מגדיאל, who publiſhes, or proclaims God; from הגיד higgid, who proclaims, and אל el, God: otherwiſe, fruits of God, or God is the moſt precious thing I have; from מגד meged.

I. MAGDIEL, five miles from Dora, toward Ptolemais. We think it to be Megiddo, or Magdolos.

II. MAGDIEL, prince of the Idumeans: ſucceeded Mibzar. Gen. xxxvi. 43.

MAGDOLOS, mentioned by Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 159. probably the ſame as Megiddo, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30, &c.

MAGED, Μαχὲδ, a preſs; from גת gath.

MAGED, or Mageth, a city beyond Jordan, taken by Judas Maccabæus, 1 Mac. v. 36. Maked in the Greek, and is probably the ſame as Maucath, מעכת.

MAGEDAN, or Majedan. Maiedan may ſignify the waters of Dan.

MAGEDAN, or Majedan, or Medan, in Dalmanutha. See DALMANUTHA.

MAGHBIS, or Magbiſh, or Megbis, Ezr. ii. 30. 1 Eſd. v. 21. His children returned to the number of 150. Megbis is probably the ſame as Megabyſes, which is a Perſian name.

MAGI, Μάγοι, Greek; interpreters of ſacred myſteries. Others think this word comes from the Perſian. The Hebrew may ſignify, thoſe that inſpire fear or diſcouragement; from מוג to be diſcouraged, to melt away: or, deriving it from הגה hagah, to meditate, thoſe that apply themſelves to the ſtudy of holy things.

MAGI, or Magians. The Magi of Perſia are the worſhippers of fire, and diſciples of Zoroaſter, whom they confound with Abraham. They have three books, which contain the whole of their religion, Bibl. Orient, p. 11. Abeſta, & alibi. Theſe they call Zend, Pazend, and Abeſta. They aſcribe them to Abraham; Abeſta is a commentary on the other two. The Magi ſay, that Abraham read books in the midſt of the furnace, into which Nimrod ordered him to be thrown. After their maſter, Zoroaſter, the Magi maintain the exiſtence of two principles; one of good, which they call Oromazd, and the other of evil, named Aherman, which are the authors of good and evil. They worſhip fire: in temples called Ateſch-kanah, or Ateſch-kade; i. e. the houſe of fire, where they carefully maintain the fire. There was formerly many of theſe buildings on the mountain Alborz, in the province of Adherbigran, (Media.) To fire they give the name of bab, q. part, becauſe they acknowledge this element as the principle of all things; which ſyſtem was embraced by Anaxagoras among the Greeks.

The Magi obſerve a myſterious ſilence, when they waſh or eat, having firſt ſaid certain words. This ſilence makes a part of their religion. Pythagoras, very likely, might imitate this ſilence of the Magi; as well as their reverence for fire, which he inculcated to his diſciples. To every month of the year, to every day, to every ſtar, to mountains, mines, waters, trees, they aſcribe particular genii, ſome of thoſe angels, created before man, who fell into infidelity and diſobedience, and therefore were confined to what they call the country of Genii, not unlike to our notions of Fairy-Land. (See ZOROASTER.) The three books which the Guebres, or fire-worſhippers, aſcribe to Abraham, but which really belong to Ibrahim Zerdouſt, (Zoroaſter) are very rare, and unknown, becauſe the Guebres keep them religiouſly ſecret among themſelves. They are written in the ancient Perſian language

It is pretended the word Magi ſignifies a man whoſe ears are cut off. And indeed, in the language then uſed in Perſia, Mige-guſch had that ſignification, at the time when the falſe Smerdis, one of the Magi, uſurped the throne of Cyrus. That uſurper had no ears, and by that token he was diſcovered. The Magi went by another name before, and their reputation was very great in Perſia; but was diminiſhed by this accident of Smerdis.

Theſe philoſophers maintained two principles, one good, the other evil; the firſt being repreſented by light, the other by darkneſs; they owned both as gods, and addreſſed them with prayers and adorations; yet they were divided in their opinion, becauſe ſome thought both had exiſted from all eternity; others that only the good principle was eternal, and the evil one was created: as we believe, that the devil is a creature, fallen from his original dignity.

Theſe two principles, ſay they, are in continual oppoſition to each other, which will continue to the end of the world, when the good principle will prevail: after which, each will have his own diſtinct world; the good will reign with all good people; and the bad, with all the wicked. The Magi paid divine honours to light, to the ſun, to the conſecrated fire in their temples, and even to the fire in their houſes. Vid. Th. Hyde Hiſt. Relig. veter. Perſar. Hottinger Hiſt. Orient. lib. iv. cap. 8, &c.

On the contrary, they held darkneſs in the greateſt horror, which they conſidered as the ſymbol of the evil principle, as we do the devil. In their writings, when they found the name Aherman, (the evil principle) they writ it backwards; and when Xerxes heard that the Athenians had baniſhed Themiſtocles, he directed his prayer to this evil deity, (not to Oromazdes, or the good God) beſeeching him to inſpire his enemies always with that reſolution, of driving out all brave men from among them. Plutarch. in Themiſtocle.

Such were the antient Magi of the Perſians; and ſuch are ſtill the Guebres, or worſhippers of fire, among the Perſians and Indians; which probably are the ſame as thoſe intended by St. Matthew, by the word Magi.

MAGI, or Wiſe-men, who came to adore Jeſus Chriſt, at Bethlehem, Matt. ii. 1. Many queſtions have been ſtarted concerning theſe Magi. Who they were? Whence they came? How many there were? At what time they arrived at Jeruſalem? And what was the ſtar that appeared to them.

I. It is commonly thought, the Magi were philoſophers, who had the knowledge of future events, and whoſe chief ſtudy was aſtronomy. That thoſe who came to worſhip Jeſus Chriſt were diſciples and deſcendants of Balaam, who had prophecied ſeveral ages before, of a ſtar out of Jacob, and a ſcepter out of Iſrael, Numb. xxiv. 17. This opinion is founded on ſcripture, which ſays, wiſe men came from the Eaſt, i. e. (from Arabia Deſerta, or from Meſopotamia,) which the ſacred authors expreſs by the word Eaſt. Balaam himſelf ſays, he came from Aram, out of the mountains of the Eaſt, i. e. from the city of Pethora, on the Euphrates, Numb. xxiii. 7. Iſaiah ſpeaking of Abraham's coming into the Land of Promiſe, ſays, who brought the juſt from the Eaſt, vide 1 Kings iv. 30. Iſ. xlix. 7. Obadiah vi. 8. Vide KEDEM.

II. The Arabians, Idumæans, Chaldæans, all eaſtern people in reſpect of Judæa, valued themſelves on their wiſdom. The name of Magus in thoſe countries ſignified a philoſopher, a man who ſtudied wiſdom. Tertullian, cont. Judæos, & lib. iii. contra Marcion. Juſtin Martyr, Dial. cont. Tryph. Epiphanius, Epitom fidei Cathol. and among the moderns, Toſtat, Mariana, Barradius, Grotius, Cornelius à lapide, and others, as well as ourſelves, ſuppoſe the Magi came from beyond the Euphrates, or from Meſopotamia, i. e. from the eaſt of Judæa. But ſome pretend that the Magi came from Perſia, or from Armenia; or from Africa, or from Æthiopia: or from the three ſeveral parts of the world, Aſia, Africa, and Europe!

III. Some of the ancient fathers ſeem to have thought, that the Magi were three in number, and that they were kings. Tertullian ſeems zealous to maintain their royalty, but his proofs are inſufficient. He ſuppoſes that the Orientals had commonly Magi for their kings, which is far from certain. St. Ambroſe, or rather Cæſarius of Arles, gives them the names of kings; but it is ſuſpected that this word has been foiſted into the text, ſerm. 139, in append, 5 tom. S. Aug. nov. edit. St. Cyprian is quoted, in a ſermon on baptiſm, who ſays they were kings; but this ſermon belongs to an abbot of Bonnevalle, named Arnold, who lived in the time of St. Bernard, Cyprian. ſeu Arnold. Abb. Bonævall. Ser. ii. de 7 cardin. operibus. Paſchaſius Radbertus, who lived in the ninth century in the abbey of Corbie, affirms, that nobody acquainted with profane hiſtory, can be ignorant that the Magi were kings. Laſtly, Theophylact. on Matt. ii. among the Greeks has expreſsly contended that they were kings. This is all that has been delivered by the ancients with any aſſurance; as to the moderns, their authority can be of no moment, in a matter of this nature. What has contributed moſt to give the Magi the title of kings, is Pſalm lxxii. 10. The kings of Tarſhiſh and of the iſles, ſhall bring preſents; the kings of Sheba and Seba ſhall offer gifts.

IV. Opinions are as much divided as to the profeſſion of the Magi. Some have imagined, that they exerciſed curious, and diabolical, arts of divination, judicial aſtrology, and inchantment. The ancient goſpel of the infancy of our Saviour affirms, that they were diſciples of Zoroaſter. Others have a more favourable opinion of them, thinking their magic was natural, and lawful. Epiphanius believes that they were of the race of Abraham and Kethura. Abbot Rupert calls them prophets and inſpired perſons. Origen, lib. i. contra Celſum, imagines, that the Magi having perceived by their magical operations, that the power of the devil was much weakened, they were inquiſitive to diſcover the cauſe of it; and obſerving at the ſame time a new ſtar in the heavens, they judged it was that of which Balaam had ſpoke; which was to mark the birth-place of a new king of Iſrael. This made them reſolve to ſeek him, to pay him their adoration. Baſil, de human. Chriſt. gen. and Ambroſe, in Luc. lib. ii. have pretty nearly the ſame thoughts. Jerom on Iſaiah xix. ſays, that they had learned from demons, or rather from the prophecy of Balaam, that Chriſt was born; and Tertullian ſeems to ſay, that they found out the birth of the Meſſiah by aſtrology, ſince (as he maintains) this ſcience was allowed till the time of Chriſt, but afterwards was forbidden, that no one thenceforward might take upon him to calculate nativities by the ſtars. Tertull. de Idololat.

V. The number of the Magi has long been fixed to three. Leo ſuppoſes it in ſeveral places, Cæſarius affirms it. The ſame is ſaid in two ſermons, formerly aſcribed to St. Auſtin, but one of which is Leo's, and the other is found under the name of Euſebius Emeſius. Bede, abbot Rupert, and after them a multitude of commentators, ſay the ſame. This opinion ſeems chiefly to be founded on the three ſorts of preſents mentioned in the goſpel: gold, myrrh, and frankincenſe. Their names are ſaid to have been Gaſpar, Melchior, and Balthaſar; but theſe names were unknown to antiquity, as well as other names given to them in ſome writings, which are modern enough. As likewiſe the Greek names, Apellius, Amerus, and Damaſcus; or the Hebrew, Magalat, Galgalat, Saraim: or Ator, Sato, Paratoras. The author of the imperfect work on Matthew, (Homil. ii.) quotes ancient apocryphal books, which bear the name of Seth: theſe ſay, that the Magi were twelve in number, choſen out of all their nation, and ſucceeding each other from father to ſon, for ſeveral ages, to obſerve the moment of the appearance of the ſtar, that had been foretold by Balaam. For this purpoſe they uſed to aſcend a mountain, whence they obſerved the riſing of the ſtars. At laſt the ſtar appeared to them, having a young child in the middle of it, and a croſs over it. The child ſpoke to them, and bid them go into Judæa. St. Thomas went into Perſia, and there inſtructed and baptized the Magi; after which they preached the goſpel with him: and ſuffered martyrdom in a city of Arabia. The author of the common Gloſs contents himſelf with ſaying there were ſeveral Magi. The Armenians maintain that they preached and ſuffered in their country, Chardin's Voyage to Perſia, tom. iii. p. 131. The governor of Armenia ſent word to king St. Lewis, that they came from Tangat in Armenia, Spicileg. tom vii. p. 217. An. 1249.

VI. The time which the Magi took in their journey to Judæa, has much exerciſed chronologers. Thoſe who ſuppoſe they came from the remoteſt parts of Perſia, allow them two years for the journey; ſuppoſing the ſtar appeared to them two years before the birth of our Saviour. The text is ſomething favourable to them, Matt. ii. 16. ſaying, that Herod ſlew the children of Bethlehem, from two years old and under, according to the time that the Magi had ſhewed him. Others believe, that departing from home at the time of our Saviour's birth, they did not arrive at Bethlehem till two years after. Others make them ſet out at our Saviour's birth, and arrive at Bethlehem thirteen days after, ſupplying them with ſwift dromedaries for greater ſpeed. Some believed that the ſtar appeared from the time of the conception of John the Baptiſt, or from the time of Chriſt's incarnation. Moſt have agreed that their arrival at Bethlehem ſhould be on the thirteenth day from our Lord's birth. If they came from the banks of the Euphrates, I believe they they might arrive at Jeruſalem in leſs than twenty days, croſſing Arabia Deſerta on camels, as the common way of travelling. From the Euphrates to Jeruſalem, is two hundred leagues.

VII. As to the ſtar that appeared to the Magi: ſome ancient authors aſſerted, that it was a new ſtar purpoſely created, to declare the birth of the Meſſiah. Origen in his firſt book againſt Celſus, Maldonat, and Grotius, take it for a kind of comet, which appeared preternaturally in the air. Lightfoot thinks, that the ſame light which appeared to the ſhepherds near Bethlehem, might alſo be viſible afar off to the Magi, hanging over Judæa, and ſo guide them to our Saviour. Others think, it was an angel clothed with a luminous body in form of a ſtar, who taking his courſe toward Judæa, determined the Magi to follow him. The author of the treatiſe de mirabilibus ſacræ Scripturæ, publiſhed in St. Auſtin's name, aſſures us, that ſome writers believed this ſtar was the Holy Ghoſt, which appeared to the Magi under the form of a ſtar, as it appeared at the baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, under the form of a dove.

Chalcidius, in Timæum Plat. p. 19. [It is not known when this philoſopher lived, but it is well known that he was a Chriſtian.] a Platonic philoſopher, who compoſed a commentary on Plato's Timæus, ſpeaks thus of this phænomenon: We muſt obſerve another hiſtory much more holy, and more worthy of veneration; which tells us of the appearance of a ſtar, which foretold neither diſeaſes nor mortality, but the deſcent of God upon earth, to live among men, and to heap his favours upon them. Wiſe men of Chaldæa having perceived this ſtar in the night, as they were ſkilful in the ſcience of aſtronomy, they betook themſelves to find out the new-born God; and having found him, they offered him preſents ſuitable to ſo high a majeſty.

It is diſputed whether this ſtar was ſeen generally, or by the Magi alone. Some believe is was ſeen only by the Magi, others that they ſaw it only twice or thrice, firſt in their own country, and again at quitting Jeruſalem for Bethlehem. Chryſoſtom, Ambroſe, Auſtin, Bernard, and the author of the imperfect commentary on Matthew, maintain that they ſaw it conſtantly, from the time it firſt appeared to them, till it diſappeared on their arrival at Jeruſalem, and ſo put them under a neceſſity of inquiring the place where the Meſſiah ſhould be born.

Ignatius the martyr, and the Goſpel of the Infancy, ſuppoſe it appeared in the face of the whole world, that all people ſaw it, and that it was their own fault if they did not follow it. The Magi on their arrival at Jeruſalem ſeem to ſuppoſe, that every one had ſeen it. Where is he that is born king of the Jews? for we have ſeen his ſtar in the Eaſt, and are come to worſhip him.

As for ourſelves, we believe that this ſtar was an inflamed meteor, in the middle region of the air, which having been obſerved by the Magi with miraculous and extraordinary circumſtances, was taken by them for the ſtar ſo long foretold by Balaam; and that, afterwards, they reſolved to follow it, and to ſeek the new-born king, whoſe coming it declared. It was therefore a light that moved in the air before them, ſomething like the pillar of clouds in the deſert. Inward inſpiration, the light of the Holy Ghoſt, the ſolicitation of grace, were the motives which engaged them to follow this phænomenon.

MAGICIANS. Magician, Magus, Magi, occurs pretty often in ſcripture. Generally it ſignifies a diviner, a fortune-teller, &c. Moſes forbids to conſult ſuch on pain of death, Levit. xix. 31. xx. 6. The ſoul that turneth after ſuch as have familiar ſpirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even ſet my face againſt that ſoul, and will cut him off from among his people. The Hebrew words אל־האבות ואל־הידענים, Oboth and Jedonim ſignify literally—the firſt, thoſe poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of Python, or a demon that foretels future events; the ſecond—Knowers, they who boaſt of the knowledge of ſecret things. It was ſuch ſort of people that Saul extirpated out of the land of Iſrael, 1 Sam. xxviii. 3.

Daniel alſo ſpeaks of magicians, and the diviners in Chaldæa, under king Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. i. 20, &c. החרטמים, ואשפים, ולכשדים ולמכשפים, He names four ſorts: Chartumim, Aſaphim, Mecaſphim, and Caſdim.

The firſt, Chartumim, according to Theodotion, ſignifies enchanters; according to the LXX. ſophiſts; according to St. Jerom, Ariolos, diviners, fortune-tellers, caſters of nativities.

The ſecond word Aſaphim, has a great reſemblance to the Greek word ſophos, wiſe men; whether the Greeks took this word from the Babylonians, or vice verſa. Theodotion and St. Jerom have rendered it, Magicians, the LXX. Philoſophers.

The third word, Mecaſphim, by St. Jerom and the Greeks, is tranſlated Malefici, enchanters, ſuch as uſed noxious herbs and drugs, the blood of victims, and the bones of the dead, for their ſuperſtitious operations.

The fourth word, Caſdim, or Chaldæans, has two ſignifications: firſt, the Chaldæan people, who had then Nebuchadnezzar for their monarch: the ſecond, a ſort of philoſophers, who dwelt in a ſeparate part of the city, who were exempt from all public offices and employments: their

ſtudy was phyſic, aſtrology, divination, the foretelling of future events by obſervation of the ſtars, the interpretation of dreams, the ſcience of augury, the worſhip of the gods, &c. Diodor. Sicul. lib. i. Biblioth. lib. ii. Strab. lib. vi.

All theſe inquiſitive and ſuperſtitious arts were prohibited among the Iſraelites; and, to reſtrain their inclination of imitating the other Eaſtern people, who all had their diviners, enchanters, and magicians, God ſent them prophets, who diſcovered future events in a ſure, clear, and eaſy manner; whereas the predictions of diviners were always obſcure, enigmatical, doubtful, and dangerous, as well in reſpect of thoſe who conſulted them, as of thoſe who were conſulted; for the law condemned both parties to death. See JANNES and JAMBRES, PYTHON, &c.

MAGIC. There are ſeveral ſorts of magic. All thoſe are forbidden by the law of God, wherein any conjurations or invocations of the devil are uſed; the black art; ſuperſtitious ceremonies of magicians, ſorcerers, inchanters, witches, wizards, necromancers, exorciſts, aſtrologers, ſoothſayers, interpreters of dreams, fortune-tellers, caſters of nativities, &c. in practiſing their diabolical arts, whether to hurt or to benefit mankind. God has forbid to conſult magicians on pain of death, Levit. xix. 31. He threatens to deſtroy thoſe who conſult them in ſecret, Levit. xx. 6. Saul did what he could to extirpate them from Iſrael: yet many remained, and the Iſraelites were always much addicted to theſe ſuperſtitions, 1 Sam. xxviii. 3. Pharaoh's magicians counterfeited the miracles of Moſes. See JANNES and JAMBRES.

MAGIC ROD, or Wands. It is ſaid Ezekiel xxi. 21. The king of Babylon ſtood at the parting of the way, at the head of the two ways, to uſe divination; he made his arrows bright, he conſulted with images, he looked in the liver. St. Jerom, Theodoret, Grotius, and moſt modern interpreters, on this paſſage, tell us, that the Chaldæans had a cuſtom, when they went on any undertaking, or journey, to write on wands or arrows, which they mingled together in a quiver, the names of the cities whither they intended to go, or the things they were to undertake; afterwards, drawing the arrows out of the quiver, at a venture, they were decided in their undertaking by the inſcription of the arrow that came forth. This cuſtom of divining by rods or arrows is very ancient. The Scythians, Herodot. lib. iv. cap. 67. and the Alans, Ammian, lib. xxxi. divined by certain branches of willow or myrtle. The modern Arabians uſe arrows incloſed in a bag. On one they write, Lord command me; on another, Lord prevent me; on a third they write nothing. If the firſt arrow drawn out of the ſack has the inſcription, Lord prevent me, it ſets aſide the thing in queſtion, D'Herbelot. Biblioth. Orient. under the word AIDAD. We find ſomething like this among the Turks, Thevenot's Journey to the Levant, chap. xxvi. the Chineſe, Gonzal. & Mendoza, lib. ii. cap. 4. and anciently among the Medes, Dio Chryſoſt. and Hebrews, Hoſea iv. 12. Maimon. tract. de Idololat. cap. 6. Tacitus obſerves it alſo among the ancient Germans. They cut into ſeveral pieces a bough of ſome fruit-tree, which they marked with certain characters, and threw them at hazard on a white cloth: the father of the family took up theſe pieces one after another, and took auguries by inſpection of their marks. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , page .

MAGOG, מגוג, roof, or that covers; from גג gag: otherwiſe, that diſſolves; from מוג mug.

MAGOG, ſon of Japheth, Gen. x. 2. father of the Scythians or Tartars, as is believed. The name Scythian was heretofore of great extent, comprehending the Getæ, the Goths, the Sarmatians, the Sacæ, the Maſſagetæ, and others. The Tartars and Muſcovites poſſeſs the country of the ancient Scythians, and have ſtill ſeveral traces of the names Gog and Magog. They were formerly called Mogli, and in Tartary are the provinces Lug, Mongug, Cangigu, and Gigui; Engui, Corgangui, Caigui, &c. St. Ambroſe was of opinion, that Gog and Magog were the Goths, who in the fifth and ſixth centuries ravaged the Roman empire, Ambroſ. lib. ii. ad Gratian. cap. 4. Gog and Magog have in a manner paſſed into a proverb, to expreſs a multitude of powerful, cruel, barbarous, and implacable enemies, to God and his worſhip. See GOG.

MAGPIASH, מגפיעש, μαγαβ, clothing, or body that periſhes; from גף gaph, a body, and עשש haſhaſh, to periſh, to decay: otherwiſe, the moth of the body; from עש haſh, a moth: otherwiſe, aſſembly; from עיש huſh.

MAHALAH, מחלה, choir of ſingers; from מחל machol: or an inſtrument of muſic: or infirmity; from חלל chalal. Vide MAHALATH.

MAHALAH, or Mohola, ſon of Rakem, 1 Chron. vii. 18.

MAHALALEEL, מהללאל, he that praiſes God; from הלל hillel, or halul, to praiſe: otherwiſe, illumination of God; from hillel, and אל el, God.

MAHALALEEL, or Malaleel, ſon of Canaan of the race of Seth, Gen. v. 15, 16, &c. He begat Jared at the age of 65 years. He lived afterwards 800 years, in all 865 years; died A. M. 1290, ante A. D. 2714

The Orientals affirm, that this patriarch was the first who dug mines in the earth, in ſearch of metals: that he firſt built houſes: and founded the cities Shuſter and Babel. Some confound him with the giant Dondaſh, who entered into the ſervice of Seth, whom they acknowledge as the prophet and univerſal monarch before the flood. They ſay the giant Dondaſh uſed no weapons, offenſive or defenſive, but fought by the ſtrength of his arms only. Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 532.

MAHALATH, wife of Rehoboam, king of Judah, 2 Chron. xi. 18.

II. MAHALATH, Maheleth, or Baſemath, daughter of Iſhmael, and wife of Eſau, Gen. xxviii. 9.

III. MAHALATH, Maheleth, or Maeleth, title of Pſalm liii. and lxxxviii. "To the chief muſician upon Mahalath:" ſome ancient copies read Amalech. למנצח על־מחלת משכיל לדיד. Aquila, Ἐπὶ χορείαι. Theodot. ὑπερ της χορείας for the dance. Sym. διὰ χόρε. by the choir. Some think Mahalath ſignifies a muſical inſtrument, but this has no foundation: we rather think it is put for dancing, which is certainly its proper ſignification in Hebrew: as if the title of the Pſalm imported to be, "An inſtructive Pſalm of David, for the chief maſter of dancing; or, for the chorus of ſingers and dancers.

MAHALI, מחלי, choir of ſingers; from מחל machol. See MAHALAH.

MAHALI, or Moholi, eldeſt ſon of Merari, chief of a family, Ex vi. 19. Numb. iii. 33.

MAHANAIM, מחנים. The two fields; from מחנה mochanah.

MAHANAIM, or Manaim, a city of the Levites of the family of Merari, in the tribe of Gad, on the brook Jabok, Joſh. xxi. 38. xiii. 29, 30. 1 Chron. vi. 80. Jacob gave it this name, becauſe here he had a viſion of angels, Gen. xxxii. 2. Mahanaim was the ſeat of the kingdom of Iſh-boſheth, after the death of Saul, 1 Sam. ii. 9, 12. To this place David retired, during the uſurpation of Abſalom, who was ſubdued and ſlain not far from hence. 2 Sam. xvii. xviii. &c. In the Vulgate it is ſometimes called ſimply Caſtra, or the camp, Gen. xxxii. 2. 2 Sam. ii. 8, 12, 29. xvii. 24. xix. 32.

MAHARAI, מחרי, μαναῤαί, he that haſtens, or urges; from מהר mahar: otherwiſe, my mountain, or portion; from הר har, and the pronoun י i, my.

MAHARAI, or Marai, a Netopathite, of the race of the Zarhites, chief of the 24,000 men who attended David as guards in the tenth month, (January) 2 Sam. xxiii. 28. 1 Chron. xxvii. 13.

MAHATH, מחת, He that blots out, or ſuppreſſes; from מחה mahah: or that breaks, or dreads; from חתת chathath.

MAHAVITE, מחויבי, he that declares, from חוה chivah: otherwiſe, that blots out, or ſuppreſſes; from מוה machah: otherwiſe marrow; from מוח moach.

MAHAZIOTH, מחזיאת, who ſees a ſign, or the letter; from חזה chazah, to ſee, and אות oth, a ſign or letter.

MAHAZIOTH, ſon of Heman, chief of the twenty-third family of the Levites, 1 Chr. xxv. 4.

MAHLAH, מחלה, dance or ſong; from מחול machol: otherwiſe, infirmity; from חלה chalah, or מחלה machalah, diſeaſe.

MAHLAH, Maala, or Mahala, a daughter of Zelophehad, who with her ſiſters received their diſtribution in the land of Canaan, becauſe their father died without male iſſue. Numb. xxvi. 33. xxvii. 1. Joſh. xvii. 3. 1 Chron. vii. 15.

MAHLON, מחלון, ſong, or infirmity.

MAHLON, or Mahalon, ſon of Elimelech and Naomi. Ruth i. 2, 3, &c. In the country of Moab he married Ruth a Moabitiſh woman, but died without children; his widow Ruth followed her mother-in-law Naomi to Bethlehem, where ſhe married Boaz.

MAHOL. מחול, ſong, choir, infirmity: otherwiſe, ſandy; from חול chol, ſand.

MAHOL, or Machol, father of Ethan, Heman, Chalcol, and Darda. 1 Kings iv. 31. Some conjecture that Mahol was the mother, and not the father of Ethan, &c. or, that Mahol is a generical name, ſignifying the choir. In which ſenſe Ethan, Heman, and Chalcol would be ſons of the choir, alluding to their profeſſion as ſingers or muſicians.

MAKAZ, מקץ, end, extremity; from קץ ketz: otherwiſe, to ſhorten; from קצץ katſatz: otherwiſe, trouble: or ſummer, thorn, watch; from קוץ kutz.

MAKAZ, or Macces, a city probably of Dan, 1 Kings iv. 9. I ſuppoſe it to be the Makteſh, the jaw-tooth, or En-hakkore, Judges xv. 19. Zephaniah i. 11. Vulg. Habitatores Pilæ. in Heb. מכתש ישבי makteſh.

MAKELOTH, מקהלות, μακελλὼθ, rods, or wands; from מקל makel: otherwiſe, voices; from קל kol; or lightneſs, or contempt; from קלל kalal, to deſpiſe. But with a ה he, macheloloth ſignifies aſſembly, congregation; from קהל kahal.

MAKHELOTH, or Maceloth, an encampment of Iſrael in the deſert, Numb. xxxiii. 25, 26. Probably Malathis, which Euſebius and Jerom place twenty miles from Hebron, in the ſouth of Judah. See MALATHA. Ptolemy places Maliatha near Eluza or Luza.

MAKKEDAH,

MAKKEDAH, מקדה, adoration, or proſtration, according to the Hebrew: otherwiſe, raiſed, eminent; from the Greek word μακεδνὸς.

MAKKEDAH, or Maceda, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 41. Euſebius ſays, this city is eight miles from Eleutheropolis, eaſt. Joſhua marched from Libnah towards Makkedah, Joſh. x. 29.

MALACHI, מלאכי, ἄγγελος, my angel, or my ambaſſador or envoy; from לאך laac, or from מלך malac, an angel, or meſſenger.

MALACHI, the laſt of the twelve minor prophets, and ſo little known, that it is doubted whether his name be a proper name, or only a generical name, ſignifying the angel of the Lord, a meſſenger, a prophet. It appears by Haggai i. 13. and by this prophet Malachi, iii. 1. that in theſe times the name of Malach-Jehovah, or the meſſenger of the Lord, was given to prophets. The LXX. have rendered Malachi, his angel, inſtead of my angel, as the original expreſſes: and ſeveral of the fathers have quoted Malachi under the name of, the angel of the Lord. The ſecond book of Eſdras and Tertullian unite the name of Malachi, and angel of the Lord. Origen thought, that Malachi was an angel incarnate, rather than a prophet; but this opinion is inſupportable. It is much more probable that Malachi was Eſdras; and this is the opinion of the ancient Hebrews, of the Chaldee paraphraſt, of St. Jerom, Præfat. in Malach. & Comment. in eundem pluribus locis; and of abbot Rupert.

The author of the lives of the prophets, under the name of Epiphanius Dorotheus, and the Chronicon Alexandrinum, ſay, that Malachi was of the tribe of Zebulun, and native of Sapha; that the name of Malachi was given him becauſe of his angelical mildneſs, and becauſe an angel uſed to appear viſibly to the people, after the prophet had ſpoke to them, to confirm what he had ſaid. He died very young, as they ſay, and was buried near the place of his anceſtors.

It appears certain that Malachi propheſied under Nehemiah, and after Haggai and Zechariah, at a time of great diſorder among the prieſts and people of Judah, which he reproves. He inveighs againſt the prieſts; he reproaches the people with having taken ſtrange wives; he reproves them for inhumanity to their brethren; for too frequently divorcing their wives; for neglect of paying tythes and firſt-fruits. He ſeems to allude to the covenant that Nehemiah renewed with the Lord, together with the prieſts and the chief of the nation. Malachi is the laſt of the prophets of the ſynagogue, and lived about four hundred years before Jeſus Chriſt. He propheſied of the coming of John the Baptiſt, and of the twofold coming of our Saviour in very expreſs terms. Mal. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. He ſpeaks of the ſacrifice of the new law, and of the abolition of ſacrifices under the Old. Mal. i. 10, 11, 12, 13. iv. 5, 6.

The Jews maintain, that in the time of Darius Hyſtaſpes, was held a general aſſembly of the heads of their nation, to determine the canon of ſcripture: That Daniel, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi preſided in this council, and that Eſdras was their ſecretary. But it is very dubious whether there ever was ſuch an aſſembly, and it is certain that Daniel could not have lived to this time. The death of Malachi is put in the Roman martyrology January 14.

MALACHIM, מלכים, otherwiſe, Melachim, kings; plural of מלך malac, a king.

MALATHA, a caſtle in Idumæa, to which the younger Agrippa retired, after he had at Rome ſquandered his eſtate. We think Malatha may be the Makheloth, of Numb. xxxiii. 25, 26. Euſebius ſpeaks of Malatha, and by comparing the paſſages in which it is mentioned, it appears that this city was in the ſouth of Judah, about twenty miles from Hebron. See MOLADAH or NOLATHA, Joſh. xv. 26. xix. 2.

MALCHAM, מלכם, their king; from מלך melech, and the pronoun מ am, theirs.

MALCHAM, or Molchom, ſon of Bela and Hodeſh, 1 Chron. viii. 9.

MALCHIAH, מלכיה, the Lord is my king, or the Lord rules me; from מלך melec, a king, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. MALCHIAH, or Melchias, chief of the fifth family, of the twenty-four ſacerdotal families. 1 Chron. xxiv. 9.

II. MALCHIAH, of the Levites, ſon of Ethni, and father of Baaſeiah, 1 Chron. vi. 40.

III. MALCHIAH, ſon of Maaſiai, and father of Paſhur, 1 Chron. ix. 12.

IV. MALCHIAH, a Jew who put away his wife, becauſe ſhe was a foreigner. Ezra. x. 25.

V. MALCHIAH, ſon of Harim; aſſiſted at the building of half a ſtreet of Jeruſalem, after the Babyloniſh captivity, Neh. iii. 11.

VI. MALCHIAH, ſon of Rechab, chief or lord of Beth-haccerem; rebuilt the gate in Jeruſalem, called the dung-gate, Neh. iii. 14.

VII. MALCHIAH, ſon of a goldſmith; built ſeveral houſes, &c. in the rebuilding of Jeruſalem. Neh. iii. 31.

VIII. MALCHIAH, ſon of Enan, father of Achitob, and grandfather of Judith, Judith viii. 1. Vulg.

IX. MAL-

IX. MALCHIAH, father of Peſhur: a conſiderable man at Jeruſalem, Jerem. xxi. 1.

X. MALCHIAH, ſon of Ham-melech, was keeper of the priſons of Jeruſalem. By his orders Jeremiah was let down into a ciſtern in which there was no water, but mud only, and in which he was in danger of his life, had he not been quickly delivered by Ebed-melech, Jerem. xxxviii. 6, &c.

MALCHIEL, מלכיאל, the king my God, or God is my king; from מלך melec, a king, the pronoun י i, my, and אל el, God.

MALCHIEL, or Melchiel, ſon of Beriah, ſon of Aſher; chief of the family of the Machielites, in the time of Moſes, Numb. xxvi. 45.

MALCHIJAH. See MALCHIAH.

MALCHIRAM, מלכירם, my king is exalted; from מלך melec, a king; and רמם ramam, to exalt.

MALCHIRAM, or Melchiram, ſon of king Jeconiah, 1 Chron. iii. 18.

MALCHISHUA, מלכישוע, μελχιζȣὲ, my king is a ſaviour; from מלך melec, king, or council, and ישע jaſhah, a ſaviour: otherwiſe, magnificent king; from שוע ſhuah.

MALCHISHUA, or Melchiſua, third ſon of Saul, killed with his father, and brethren, in the battle of Gilboa, 1 Sam. xxxi. 2.

MALCHOM, מלכום, or Molech, their king; from מלך melec, a king, and the pronoun ם am, theirs.

MALCHOM, or Melchom, a God of the Ammonites. See MOLOCH. 1 Kings xi. 33.

MALCHUS, Μάλχος, king, or kingdom; from מלך malac.

I. MALCHUS, or Malichus. Joſephus ſpeaks of Malchus king of the Arabs, who received great obligations from Herod ſon of Antipater, afterwards king of the Jews. Antigonus, by the aſſiſtance of the Perſians having forced Herod to retire from Jeruſalem, he had a mind to take refuge with Malchus; but this prince forbad him to enter his dominions. This obliged Herod to go to Egypt, from whence he proceeded to Rome. Ante A. D. 40.

II. MALCHUS, or Malichus; aſſaſſinated Antipater the father of Herod. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 10.

III. MALCHUS, a ſervant of the high-prieſt Caiaphas, who in the garden of olives among thoſe ſent to apprehend Jeſus, was ſmote by St. Peter, and had his right ear cut off. John xviii. 10. Though it is not certain whether it was entirely ſeparated from his head, or was only cut off in part: the latter is moſt probable, becauſe Jeſus only touched it to heal it. Luke xxii. 51, 52. Some believe that Peter ſtruck this ſervant in his own defence, and to prevent him from ſeizing him alſo. There is great probability, that Peter intended to cut off his head, and not his ear. Cornelius à Lapide thinks that Malchus became a convert; but others think, it was he who ſtruck our Saviour on the face, and aſked him, Doſt thou anſwer the high-prieſt thus? But St. John does not favour this opinion, for he ſays, John xviii. 22. he that ſtruck our Saviour was one of the officers belonging to the high-prieſt Annas; without inſinuating that it was Malchus, of whom he had ſpoke a little before.

MALICE, Malitia. This Latin word expreſſes not only that evil diſpoſition of the mind and heart, which we call malice, but alſo puniſhment and correction; ſo 1 Sam. xx. 7. Scito quia completa eſt malitia ejus. Be ſure that evil (or puniſhment) is determined by him: (thus David ſpeaks to Jonathan) literally, know that evil is compleated by him, Saul has reſolved that I ſhall periſh. Alſo 1 Sam. xxv. 17. the ſervants of Nabal tell their miſtreſs Abigail, that David had reſolved upon the deſtruction of her huſband, Quoniam completa eſt malitia adverſus virum tuum. See alſo Iſaiah xl. 2.

Solomon Eccleſ. xi. 10. ſays, Amove malitiam à carne tua, put away evil from thy fleſh. The wiſe man in this place, by the term evil, or Malitia, according to St. Jerom, means all ſhameful pleaſures. So Eccleſ. vii. 3. Per triſtitiam vultûs corrigitur animus delinquentis. The Hebrew has Malitia vultûs lætificat cor. By the ſadneſs of the countenance the heart is made better, i. e. That ſeverity of countenance, with which we behold any one who departs from his duty, renders him ſenſible of his fault, and amends his heart. Our Saviour ſays, Matth. vi. 34. Sufficit diei malitia ſua; Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof, or the penalty and calamity thereof. St. Paul requires, that the faithful ſhould be children in malice, but men in prudence and wiſdom. 1 Cor. xiv. 20.

In ſome paſſages of Eccleſiaſticus, as xi. 29. Malitia is taken in the ſame ſenſe as Pœna. Malitia horæ oblivionem facit luxuriæ magnæ. The evil of a moment makes us forget the greateſt pleaſures. And chap. xii. 9. In malitia viri amicus agnitus eſt. A friend is known in adverſity. And chap. xxx. 14. Melior eſt pauper ſanus, quam dives flagellatus malitiâ. A poor man in health is preferable to a rich man afflicted with diſeaſes.

MALLE, a city beyond Jordan. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 12.

MALLOTÆ, Μαλλώται, he that fills or finiſhes, or is filled; from מלא malle, full.

MALLOTES, the inhabitants of Mallos, a city of Cilicia, on the river Pyramus. They revolted from Antiochus Epiphanes, becauſe he had given them, them, with the city of Tarſus, to one of his miſtreſſes named Antiochis. 2 Macc. iv. 30. In this manner the kings of Perſia uſed to give whole cities ſometimes to their miſtreſſes, to find them in necklaces, girdles, &c.

MALLOTHI, מלותי, fulneſs, circumciſion; from מול mul: otherwiſe, my words; from מלל malal, to ſpeak, and the pronoun י i, my.

MALLOTHI, or Mellothi, ſon of Heman, chief of the tenth family of the Levites, 1 Chron. xxv. 4, 26.

MALLUCH, מלוך, μαλὼχ, Vulgate, Maloch, he that reigns; from מלך malac, to govern.

I. MALLUCH, or Maloc, a Levite of the family of Merari, father of Abdi, and ſon of Haſhabiah, 1 Chron. vi. 44.

II. MALLUCH, or Mellus. One who ſeparated from their ſtrange wives, at the return from Babylon, Ezra x. 29.

MALTA, Μελίτη, affording honey, from whence honey diſtills; from μέλι, honey.

MALTA, or Melita, a famous iſland in the Mediterranean ſea. It is thought to have been named Melita, from the great quantity of honey found there formerly. Its length is from eaſt to weſt, and its breadth from north to ſouth. Its circumference is about ſixty miles, or twenty leagues. This iſland is aſcribed to Africa by geographers, becauſe if we draw a line from eaſt to weſt, it will be included in the African ſea. Its ſoil is ſtony and barren, yet it bears excellent fruits, melons and cotton. St. Paul ſuffered ſhipwreck on Malta, and with his companions was well uſed by the people, who gave them ſhelter, and lighted a fire, to dry them by. Acts xxviii. 1, 2, 3, &c. A. D. 63. St. Paul taking up a faggot of twigs to throw into the fire, a viper that lurked therein feeling the heat of the fire, ſeized him by the hand: he, without any fear, ſhook it into the fire. The people expected every moment to ſee him fall down dead; but finding that did not happen, they changed their ſentiments, and began to take him for ſome deity.

Publius, the governor of the iſland, received St. Paul courteouſly. His father being ſick of a fever, and of a bloody flux, St. Paul went and healed him. Then all who had any ſick, brought them to St. Paul, who reſtored them to health. When St. Paul and his company ſailed from thence, the people abundantly ſupplied them with neceſſaries for their voyage.

We are aſſured, that ſince the landing of St. Paul at Malta, there are no vipers, or other venomous animals; and that if any are brought thither from other places, they die preſently. Several of the Malteſe were converted at the preaching of St. Paul, and the houſe of Publius, the firſt biſhop of Malta, was changed into a church. St. Paul continued there three months. Vid. Chryſoſt. Homil. 54, in Acta.

A native of this iſland being a religious belonging to la Charité, has ſent me information, that Malta was an ancient colony of the Carthaginians, and had always ſpoke the language of Africa, as it continues to do. For this reaſon thoſe of St. Paul's company, being Greeks or Latins, called the Malteſe, Barbarians. That the Romans never introduced their language among this people; that ſtill the ordinary people ſpeak Arabick; that at Vallette they ſpeak Italian, becauſe of the knights who reſide there, but that the country people underſtand not this tongue; that indeed at Vallette there are two Greek churches, but they are for the Grecians who quitted Rhodes with the knights, and followed their fortune to Malta.

Beſides which, he acquaints me, that the place where St. Paul came aſhore, is a neck of land waſhed by the ſea on all ſides, lying to the north of the iſland, and extending towards the weſt, which has ever ſince been called St. Paul's road: That there is a tradition in the iſland, that St. Paul was really bit by a viper, and that when he ſhook it off into the fire, he curſed all the vipers of the iſland, and all that have been ſeen there ſince are without poiſon; for ſome are ſtill found there, but not dangerous. Some of them, out of curioſity, have been tranſported into Sicily, and immediately upon their arrival have become as venomous as others; and being then carried back to Malta, have preſently loſt their venom.

MALTHACE, wife of Herod the Great, and mother of Archelaus king of Judæa. Malthace died while her ſon was at Rome, endeavouring to have his father's will confirmed by the emperor Auguſtus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 12.

MAMMON, ממון, μαμωνᾶ, A Chaldee or Syriack word, ſignifying riches. The true reading is Matmon, avarice, deſire, riches.

MAMMON. This word is properly Syriac, and ſignifies riches. Our Saviour ſays, we cannot at the ſame time ſerve God and riches; Matth. vi. 24. that we ought not to make ourſelves adherents of Mammon, or of the riches of unrighteouſneſs, i. e. of worldly riches, which are commonly the inſtruments of iniquity, and are acquired but too often by ways of unrighteouſneſs and iniquity. Some have aſſerted, that Mammon ſignified the God of riches, but there is no proof of this. Matmon in Hebrew ſignifies concealed, and and Mammona riches. St. Auſtin obſerves, de Serm. Dom. in monte. lib. ii. cap. 14. n. 47. that in the Punick or African tongue, Mammona ſignifies gain. Mammona apud Hebræos divitiæ appellari dicuntur. Congruit & Punicum nomen; nam lucrum Punicè Mammon dicitur.

MAMRE, ממרא, rebellions; from מרה marah: otherwiſe, bitter; from מרר marar: otherwiſe, that changes, that barters; from מור mur: otherwiſe, fat, or elevated; from מרא mara.

MAMRE, or Mambre, an Amorite, brother of Aner and Eſchol, and friend of Abraham. With theſe three perſons, their domeſtics, and his own, he purſued and overcame the kings, who had ſpoiled Sodom and Gomorrah. Gen. xiv. 13.

MAMZER, ממזר, εκπορνῆς, illegitimate, or a baſtard; from מזר mazer.

MAMZER. God forbids the admittance of Mamzers, or baſtards, into the congregation of his people, to the tenth generation. Deut. xxiii. 2. Non ingredietur Mamzer (ממזר) id eſt, de ſcorto natus, in Eccleſiam Domini. LXX, Ἐκ πορνῆς. Zech. ix. 6. Αλλογενης, an alien. Vulg. ſeparatos.

The Rabbins diſtinguiſh Mamzers into three kinds. 1. Thoſe born in marriage, of parents contracted in caſes prohibited by the law. 2. Thoſe born from a criminal conjunction, puniſhable by the judges, as are the children of adulterers. 3. Thoſe born in inceſt, and condemned by the law. They alſo diſtinguiſh between Mamzers certain and uncertain. The firſt are thoſe whoſe birth is notoriouſly corrupted, and who without difficulty are excluded from the congregation of the Lord. Doubtful Mamzers are thoſe whoſe birth is uncertain. Theſe could not be excluded in ſtrictneſs, yet the Scribes would not admit them, for fear that any certain Mamzers ſhould ſlip in among them.

But the Vulgate, the LXX, and the authors of the canon law, take Mamzer for the child of a proſtitute. Theſe three verſes ſhew the diſtinction between the different ſorts of baſtards, as acknowledged by the law.

Mamzeribus ſcortum, ſed mœcha nothis dedit ortum.
Ut ſeges à ſpica, ſic ſpurius eſt ab amica.
Dant naturales, quæ nobis ſunt ſpeciales.

Some interpreters take Mamzer for a generic term, which ſignifies illegitimate children, whoſe birth is impure in any manner whatever. Others believe the Hebrew word Mamzer rather ſignifies a ſtranger or foreigner, than a baſtard. Jephthah, who was the ſon of a publick woman, Judg. xi. 1. בן אישה זונה Vulg. Filius mulieris meretricis, was head and judge in Iſrael. Pharez and Zerah, the ſons of Tamar, conceived from a kind of inceſt, are reckoned among the anceſtors of David. Among the Hebrews the children followed the condition of the mother. How then could a baſtard-ſon, born of a mother who was an Iſraelite, be excluded the congregation of Iſrael to the tenth generation, ſince the Egyptians and Idumæans might be admitted after the third generation? So that there is great probability Mamzer means more than barely a baſtard, perhaps a baſtard born of a woman, a ſtranger and an idolater. The LXX. render the word Mamzer, Zech. ix. 6. a ſtranger, or alien; and Deut. xxiii. 2. the ſon of a proſtitute. The Hebrew word occurs only in theſe two places, and its ſignification is by no means certain. The author of the traditions concerning the books of Samuel, Kings and Chronicles, believes that Solomon was of the number of the Mamzers; and that when Bathſheba ſays to David, 1 Kings i. 21. I and my ſon Solomon ſhall be counted offenders, or ſinners; ſhe means, my ſon ſhall be treated as a Mamzer, and myſelf as a proſtitute. And that David, deſirous to ſecure them from this diſgrace, declared his ſon Solomon his ſucceſſor.

The words, They ſhall not enter into the congregation of the Lord, even to the tenth generation, cannot mean that this ſort of children may not be converted, or be admitted into Judaiſm, till after ten generations; but that they ſhall have no ſhare in the imployments, dignities, or privileges of the true Hebrews, till the blemiſh of their birth is entirely obliterated.

MAN. It is ſaid, Gen. i. 27. that man was created male and female; ſay ſome, an hermaphrodite; or that the man and woman were united together at their ſides; but the moſt ſimple and moſt natural meaning, is, that God created man and woman as he created animals, by pairs or couples, male and female: But whereas other animals were created together, and by one fiat alone, God created man and woman ſeparately. The woman was created in paradiſe, and taken out of Adam's ſide while he was aſleep.

Man was created after the image and likeneſs of his creator: conſiſting chiefly in the qualities of his ſoul; free, intelligent, immortal, capable of virtue, juſtice, wiſdom and happineſs: by ſin he loſt much of this reſemblance. Alſo, man has ſome reſemblance to God, by the dominion God has given him over the creatures: as it were, a vice-God upon earth. See ADAM.

Man is ſometimes taken for mankind in general; ſometimes particularly for Adam.

A man of God, generally ſignifies a prophet; a man devoted to God; to his ſervice. Moſes is called peculiarly the man of God. Deut. xxxiii. 1. Joſh. xiv. 6. David, Shemaiah, and the other prophets, &c.

Son of man denotes man in general, Pſal. viii. 4. The ſons of men are taken in the ſame ſenſe. The Lord or the angels ſpeaking to men, often gives them the name of ſon of man. Thus the Lord calls Ezekiel, ii. 1 & paſſim. The angel Gabriel ſpeaks thus to Daniel, viii. 17. Jeſus Chriſt frequently calls himſelf ſon of man.

MANACHAS. Joſephus, Ant. lib. iii. cap. 8. p. 84. b. c. gives this name to the high-prieſts breeches, which the Hebrew calls Michneſim, or Machnes, Exod. xxviii. 42. מכנסים LXX. Περισκελῆ, Vulg. Fœminalia. Joſephus ſays, they were breeches of twiſted thread, put about the legs, and joined together on the ſide, being there divided half their length. [a kind of drawers.]

MANAEN, or Manahem, a Chriſtian prophet, foſter-brother of Herod Antipas, Acts xiii. 1. A. D. 44. He was at Antioch with other prophets, when the Holy Ghoſt ſaid, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them. It is thought Manaen was one of the Seventy diſciples. The Latin martyrologies put his feaſt May 24, and ſay that he died at Antioch. No particulars of his life are known.

MANAHATH, מנחת, gift or preſent; from מנחה minchah, or מנה manah: otherwiſe, reſt; from נוח nuach: otherwiſe, fear or breaking prepared; from מנה minah, preparation, and כתת chathath, fear, or breaking.

MANAHEM, מנחם, comforter; from נחם nacham: or he that conducts them; from נחה nachah, to conduct, and the pronoun מ am, them: or preparation of heat; from מנה mincha, preparation, and חמם chamam, heat.

MANAHEN, or Manahem, the ſixteenth king of Iſrael. He was ſon of Gadi, and revenged the death of his maſter Zachariah, by that of Shallum, ſon of Jabeſh, who had uſurped the crown of Iſrael, A. M. 3232, ante A. D. 772. See 2 Kings xv. 13.

Manahem, general of the army of Zachariah, was at Tirzah, when he had news of his maſter's death. He immediately marched againſt Shallum, who had ſhut himſelf up in Samaria, killed him, and reigned in his ſtead. He returned to Tirzah; but that city ſhutting its gates againſt him, he vented his paſſion on Tiphſah, a town in the neighbourhood of Tirzah, and probably ſharers in its reſolution. Afterwards he took Tirzah, ruined it intirely, and exerciſed many barbarities in it. He reigned in Samaria ten years, and did evil in the ſight of the Lord.

Pul, king of Aſſyria, probably the father of Sardanapalus, having invaded Iſrael during the reign of Manahem; this prince was obliged to pay him a thouſand talents. To raiſe this ſum, Manahem was forced to tax all perſons fifty ſhekels a head; after which Pul returned into his own country. Hoſea ſays, chap. v. 13. Ephraim ſaw his ſickneſs, and Judah ſaw his wound, then went Ephraim to the Aſſyrian, and ſent to king Jareb: miſit ad regem ultorem, Vulg. But the ſcripture ſeems to inſinuate, that the king of Aſſyria came into the country as an enemy, 1 Chron. v. 26, and the God of Iſrael ſtirred up the ſpirit of Pul, king of Aſſyria, &c. and ſo Joſephus thinks, Antiq. lib. ix. cap. 11. This is eaſily reconciled by ſuppoſing, that, at firſt Pul invaded Iſrael as an enemy, but that Manahem bought him over to his intereſt by this great ſum. Manahem ſlept with his fathers, and his ſon Pekahiah reigned in his ſtead, 2 Kings xv. 22.

II. MANAHEM, of the ſect of the Eſſenians: was vicegerent to Hillel. Manahem was a learned man for that age, and of great conſideration among his ſect. He foretold Herod the Great, being then a young ſcholar, that he ſhould one day be king, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 13. At the ſame time recommending to him the virtues of juſtice and moderation; yet foretelling that he ſhould tread thoſe under foot, with all the duties of religion and humanity; nevertheleſs, he would live in great glory and proſperity: but, added he, "You cannot conceal yourſelf from the eyes of God, who will chaſtiſe you at the end of your life, for all the evils committed by you."

Herod at firſt ſlighted theſe predictions, but, when raiſed to the regal dignity, he ſent for Manahem, and inquired of him, how long he ſhould reign? Manahem not anſwering directly, the king aſked, Shall I reign ten years? Manahem replied, not ten only, but twenty, yea thirty; without explaining himſelf any farther. Herod ſent him away, giving him his hand as a token of friendſhip, and always ſhewed much eſteem for the ſect of the Eſſenians. Afterwards, Herod out of gratitude, and favour, took him into his own ſervice, from his ſituation in the Sanhedrim.

The Jews ſpeak of one Manahem, vicegerent of the Sanhedrim under Hillel. I believe it to be the ſame perſon, Lib. in Chaſim. fol. 19. apud Lightfoot.

III. MANAHEM, or Manaim, ſon of Judas the Galilean, or the Gaulonite. He drew to his party ſome perſons of quality; ſeveral robbers, and others who had nothing to loſe, having taken the caſtle of Maſſada, he pillaged the magazines of the late king Herod the Great, armed his people, and went to Jeruſalem; of which making himſelf maſter, he drove out the Romans, and cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed king. He put to death the high-prieſt Ananias, and ſoon became inſupportable by his cruelties and exceſſes. Two men of the party of Eleazar encouraged the people to free themſelves from his tyranny; Manahem was aſſaulted, and after ſome reſiſtance, was forſaken by his adherents, and forced to hide himſelf in a place called Ophlas. From whence he was taken the day following, and led to puniſhment, Joſeph. de bello, lib. ii. cap. 32. in Græco, p. 811. A. D. 66.

MANASSEAS, ſon of Addi, one who after the return from Babylon, ſeparated themſelves from their ſtrange wives, Ezr. x. 30.

MANASSEH, מנשה, forgetfulneſs, or he that is forgotten; from נשה naſhah, to forget.

I. MANASSEH. Eldeſt ſon of Joſeph, and grandſon of the patriarch Jacob, Gen. xli. 50, 51. Manaſſeh was born A. M. 2290, ante A. D. 1714. The name Manaſſeh ſignifies forgetfulneſs; becauſe Joſeph ſaid; God has made me forget all my toil, and all my father's houſe. When Jacob was going to die, Joſeph brought his two ſons to him, that his father might give them his laſt bleſſing, Gen. xlviii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Jacob having ſeen them, adopted them; made them come to his bed-ſide, and kiſſed them. Joſeph having placed Ephraim at Jacob's left hand, and Manaſſeh at his right, Jacob put his right hand on Ephraim, and his left on Manaſſeh; which Joſeph obſerving, would have had him altered this diſpoſition. But Jacob told him, "I know what I am doing, my ſon, the eldeſt ſhall be father of a great people, but his younger brother ſhall be greater than he." He continued to bleſs them, and ſaid; in thee ſhall Iſrael be bleſſed, and it ſhall be ſaid, God make thee as Ephraim and as Manaſſeh.

The tribe of Manaſſeh came out of Egypt, in number 32,200 men, upwards of twenty years old, under the conduct of Gamaliel, ſon of Pedahzur, Numb. ii. 20, 21. This tribe was divided in the Land of Promiſe. One half tribe of Manaſſeh ſettled beyond the river Jordan, and poſſeſſed the country of Baſhan, from the river Jabbok, to mount Libanus; and the other half tribe of Manaſſeh ſettled on this ſide Jordan, and poſſeſſed the country between the tribe of Ephraim ſouth, and the tribe of Iſſachar north, having the river Jordan eaſt, and the Mediterranean ſea weſt, Joſh. xvi. xvii. Vide the MAP.

II. MANASSEH. Fifteenth king of Judah, ſon and ſucceſſor of Hezekiah, 2 Kings xx. 21. xxi. 1, 2. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 1, 2, &c. A. M. 3306, ante A. D. 968. He was twelve years old when he began to reign, and reigned fifty-five years. His mother's name was Hephzibah. He did evil in the ſight of the Lord; worſhipped the idols of the land of Canaan; rebuilt the high places that his father Hezekiah had deſtroyed; ſet up altars to Baal, and planted groves to falſe gods. He raiſed altars to the whole hoſt of heaven, in the courts of God's houſe; made his ſon paſs through the fire in honour to Moloch; was addicted to magic, divinations, auguries, and other ſuperſtitions; ſet up the idol Aſtarta in the houſe of God: finally, he involved his people in all the abomination of the idolatrous nations, to that degree, that Iſrael committed more wickedneſs than the Canaanites, which the Lord had drove out before them. To all theſe crimes Manaſſeh added cruelty; and he ſhed rivers of innocent blood in Jeruſalem.

The Lord being provoked by ſo many crimes, threatened him by his prophets: "I will blot out Jeruſalem as a writing is blotted out of a writing-tablet, and I ſhall often draw the pen over and over that nothing may remain of it. I ſhall forſake my inheritance, &c."

It is believed, the prophet Iſaiah raiſed his voice loudly againſt theſe enormities: this prophet was father-in-law to the king: had been in great credit at court, in the reign of Hezekiah: and was of high birth, being of the blood royal. He thought it incumbent on him to endeavour to reclaim the king; but this ſo exaſperated him, he cauſed Iſaiah to be apprehended, and put him to death, by ſawing him in two with a wooden ſaw, Origen. in cap. xxiii. in Matt. & Ep. ad Jul. Afric. & Homil. in Iſa. Tert. lib. de patient. cap. xiv. & ſcorpiac. cap. iii. Juſtin. Cont. Tryph. Chryſoſt. ad Cyriac. Hier. in Iſai. lib. xv. Aug. lib. xviii. de Civit. cap. 24.

The calamities which God had threatened began towards the twenty-ſecond year of this impious prince. The king of Aſſyria ſent his army againſt him, who ſeizing him among the briars and brambles where he was hid, fettered his hands and feet, and carried him to Babylon, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11, 12, &c. We think it was Sargon or Eſar-haddon, king of Aſſyria, who ſent Tartan into Paleſtine, and who taking Azoth, attacked Manaſſeh, put him in irons, and led him away, not to Nineveh, but to Babylon, of which Eſar-haddon had become maſter, and had re-united the empires of the Aſſyrians and the Chaldæans.

Manaſſeh, in bonds at Babylon, humbled himſelf before God; who heard his prayers, and brought him back to Jeruſalem; and Manaſſeh acknowledged the hand of the Lord. We have a prayer which, it is pretended, he made in priſon. The church does not receive it as canonical, but apocryphal. It is in the Euchologium, or book of prayers, of the Greeks. The Rabbins relate, that that Manaſſeh was caſt into a brazen veſſel full of holes, and expoſed to a great fire. That in this extremity he had recourſe to all his falſe deities; but receiving no aſſiſtance from them, he found the vanity of his hopes. Then he remembered what he had heard his father king Hezekiah ſay, "When you ſhall invoke me in your misfortunes, and convert yourſelves to me, I will hear you." Deut. iv. 29, 30. He therefore was converted to the Lord, was delivered, and carried in a moment into his kingdom; like as the apocryphal Habakkuk was tranſported from Judæa to Babylon, and back again from Babylon to Judæa. Vide Tradit. Hebr. in lib. Paralip. & Targum in 2 Chron. xxxiii. 11. The author of the imperfect comment on St. Matthew ſays, Manaſſeh being in bonds, had only a little barley-bread daily, and water mixed with vinegar, juſt enough to keep him alive. In the midſt of his affliction he had recourſe to the Lord, when a miraculous flame encompaſſed him ſuddenly, and melting his chains, ſet him at liberty. Fables!! [rather hyperbolic expreſſions of ſpeedy deliverance.]

Manaſſeh was probably delivered out of priſon by Saoſduchin, the ſucceſſor of Eſar-haddon, 2 Chr. xxiii. 13, 14, &c. Being returned to Jeruſalem he reſtored the worſhip of the Lord; broke down the altars of the falſe gods; aboliſhed all traces of their idolatrous worſhip; but he did not deſtroy the high places: which is the only thing ſcripture reproaches him with, after his return from Babylon. He cauſed Jeruſalem to be fortified; incloſed with a wall another city, which in his time was erected weſt of Jeruſalem, and which goes by the name of the ſecond city, ſince his reign, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14. He put garriſons into all the ſtrong places of Judah.

The reſt of the actions of Manaſſeh, his prayer, the manner in which God was pleaſed to anſwer his prayer; in a word, his ſin and his reformation, were related in full in the book of the prophet Hozaï; who is the ſame as Iſaiah according to ſome: the LXX take this in a general ſenſe; in the writings of the Seers: the Syriac calls him Hanan; the Arabic Saphan. Manaſſeh died at Jeruſalem, and was buried in the garden of his houſe, in the garden of Uzza, 2 Kings xxi. 18. His ſon Amon ſucceeded him, A. M. 3361, ante A. D. 643.

Many believe that the hiſtory of Judith and Holofernes happened under Manaſſeh. See JUDITH.

III. MANASSEH. Huſband of Judith, who lived but a little while with her. He had been dead three years, when Holofernes's war began. Manaſſeh was of the tribe of Simeon, and died in the time of barley-harveſt, of a diſeaſe cauſed by the too great heat of the ſun, which had ſhone upon his head. He left all his eſtate to his wife Judith, and was buried in his own country in Bethulia, Judith viii. 2, 3.

IV. MANASSEH. High-prieſt of the Jews, ſon of John, and brother of Jaddus. He ſucceeded Eleazar his great uncle, and was ſucceeded by Onias II. his nephew. Manaſſeh had married Nicaſo, daughter of Sanballat, governor of Samaria. The Jews and prieſts, diſpleaſed at this marriage, (ſhe being of another religion) declared he muſt either quit his wife, or renounce his prieſthood. Manaſſeh ſeeing himſelf become ſo obnoxious, withdrew to his father-in-law, and told him, that though he had a great affection for Nicaſo his wife, yet it troubled him that on her account he was excluded from the prieſthood, his birthright. Sanballat promiſed that he would procure him a chief prieſthood, and the firſt place of the province; that he would build him a temple upon mount Gerizim, like to that of Jeruſalem, and there he ſhould be the firſt high-prieſt.

Manaſſeh thus flattered, ſettled with his father-in-law Sanballat; ſeveral other Iſraelites engaged in like marriages, ſettled with him; and Sanballat gave them houſes and lands. When Alexander the Great came into Syria, and beſieged Tyre, Sanballat aſſiſted him with eight thouſand men, and ſubmitted to him the whole province of Samaria. He obtained a permiſſion from Alexander, to build a temple on mount Gerizim; and gave the chief prieſthood of it to his ſon-in-law Manaſſeh. The ſame God was worſhipped in this temple, as in that of Jeruſalem, and many who frequented it were Jews as well as Manaſſeh. But this temple was held in deteſtation by the prieſts and Jews of Jeruſalem, who looked on thoſe as ſchiſmatics who worſhipped here. Therefore it muſt needs be, that Manaſſeh had renounced his ſchiſm, when after the death of his great uncle Eleazar, he ſucceeded in the high prieſthood, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. iii. p. 401. Joſephus does not acquaint us how this change and ſucceſſion was brought about, and what he does relate on this matter appears very hard to believe, and includes a contradiction not eaſy to reconcile.

Nehemiah, xiii. 28. mentions Sanballat the Heronite, who had given his daughter in marriage to a ſon of the high-prieſt Joiada, ſon of Eliaſhib; and acquaints us, that Nehemiah was obliged to drive away from Jeruſalem this ſon-in-law of Sanballat, becauſe he had taken a ſtrange woman to wife. It does not mention his name, or what became of him; but Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xi.

cap. 7, 8, calls him Manaſſes, and aſſures us, that he withdrew to his father-in-law at Samaria, under the reign of Darius Codomannus, the laſt king of Perſia. Here is a manifeſt anachroniſm. Nehemiah could not live under Darius Codomannus; he came the ſecond time into Judæa, A. M. 3555, under Artaxerxes Longimanus, and died A. M. 3580. Darius Codomannus did not come to the throne till about A. M. 3670.

Some learned men have been of opinion, that we muſt admit two Sanballats and two Manaſſehs, of which the firſt lived under Nehemiah, and the other under Darius Codomannus. Others have thought, that Joſephus has perplexed this hiſtory, by confounding the years, and referring facts to the time of Alexander the Great, and the later Darius, which happened long before under Nehemiah. Dr. Prideaux is of this opinion. Connect. vol. iii. lib. 6. He maintains that Joſephus has confounded the high-prieſt Joïada with his grandſon Jaddus, and that his hiſtory ought to be corrected by that of Nehemiah. On this footing, alſo, it muſt be allowed, that Manaſſeh the high-prieſt, who ſucceeded Eleazar, was a different perſon from the ſon-in-law of Sanballat, whoſe name Nehemiah does not mention.

Manaſſeh is allowed a pontificate of twenty-ſix years, from A. M. 3745 to 3771, ante A. D. 233.

V. MANASSEH, ſon of Aſom, one who, after the return from Babylon, ſeparated themſelves from their ſtrange wives, 1 Eſdras ix. 33.

MANDIA, the name, in Joſephus, of a certain place near Bethlehem, where Johanan ſon of Kareah overtook Iſhmael the murderer of Gedaliah, Jerem. xli. 17. Jeremiah calls it Gheruth Chimham: Vulgate, Peregrinantes in Chamaham.

MANDRAKES, a plant that ſtupifies, and ſometimes cauſes phrenzy: is ſaid to be a provocative, and uſed in philters. There are two ſorts: one is black, called the female mandrake, having leaves not unlike lettuce, though ſmaller and narrower, which ſpread on the ground, and have a diſagreeable ſcent. It bears berries ſomething like ſervices, pale, and of a ſtrong ſmell, having kernels within like thoſe of pears. It has two or three very large roots, twiſted together, white within, black without, and covered with a thick rind. The other kind, or the male mandrake, is called Morion, or folly, becauſe it ſuſpends the uſe of the ſenſes. It produces berries as big again as thoſe of the female, of a good ſcent, and of a colour approaching towards ſaffron. Its leaves are large, white, broad, and ſmooth, like the leaves of the beech-tree. Its root reſembles that of the female, but is thicker and bigger. This plant ſtupifies thoſe that uſe it; ſometimes depriving them of underſtanding; and often cauſes ſuch vertigoes and lethargies, that if thoſe who have taken it have not preſent aſſiſtance, they die in convulſions.

What has given to mandrakes the name of Anthropomorphos, or man-ſhaped, is only becauſe moſt of the roots are forked from the middle downwards, which makes a kind of thighs and legs: Matthiolus adds, that the roots made like a man's body, and called mandrakes, or hands of glory, which quacks pretend to be of ſingular virtue to aſſiſt barren women, are made of the roots of reeds, white briony, &c. He tells us alſo, that theſe impoſtors put grains of barley or millet into theſe figures when ſo cut, in the places where hair grows in men, and then bury them in the ground, till the barley or millet begins to ſhoot (about three weeks) then digging them up, and adjuſting the ſmall fibres, they appear to have a beard on the chin, and hair on the head.

Moſes informs us, that Reuben, ſon of Leah, being in the field, happened to find mandrakes, which he brought to his mother. Rachel deſired them, and obtained them from Leah, on condition that Jacob ſhould viſit her the night following. Of the term Dudaim, uſed by Moſes, the Jews at this day do not underſtand the true ſignification. Some tranſlate it violets, others lillies, or jeſſamin; Junius calls it agreeable flowers, Codurquus truffle, or muſhroom. We have conjectured it might be citrons. It appears by ſcripture, that the dudaim are a fruit, ripe about wheat harveſt, have an agreeable ſcent, may be preſerved, and are placed with pomgranates. Thoſe who would ſupport the tranſlation of mandrakes remark that Rachel having very great deſire for children, it may be preſumed ſhe coveted Leah's mandrakes with that view. The ancients named mandrakes the apple of love, and Venus, Mandragoritis. The emperor Julian, in his epiſtle to Calixenes, ſays, he drinks the juice of mandrakes to excite amorous inclinations. The Hebrew דוד dod, whence dodaïm, or dudaïm, ſignifies love, or nipples. See Bauhin. Hiſt. of Plants, tom. iii. p. 614, &c. Matthiolus on Dioſcorides, and Brodeus on Theophraſt.

Ludolff, in his hiſtory of Ethiopia, maintains, that Dudaïm ſignifies a certain fruit which the Syrians call mauz, whoſe figure and taſte greatly reſembles the Ficus Indica, or Indian fig. This fruit is as big as a ſmall cucumber, and ſometimes upwards of forty hang on the ſame ſtalk. As to the mandrake, the Perſians call it Abronzanam, the human figure, becauſe the Orientals, and in particular the Jews, ſo artificially dreſs up the root of the mandrake with hairs and filaments, that it appears to have the figure of a man or woman, as we have remarked above.

Joſephus calls this plant Baaras. He ſays it was found in a valley north of the caſtle of Macherus. That towards evening it appeared glittering like the ſun; that when any one came near it in order to pull it up, it withdrew itſelf and ſeemed to fly, unleſs there were thrown upon it any menſtruus blood, or the urine of a woman. That even then it was not ſafe to pluck it up, unleſs he that undertook it had a root of the ſame plant hanging on his arm; without which precaution he expoſed himſelf to certain danger of dying.

There is however a way of taking it up without danger. They dig all round the root, ſo that it ſticks to the earth only by its extremities. Then they faſten a dog to the root by a ſtring, and the dog ſtriving to follow his maſter who calls him away, eaſily tears up the plant, but then he dies upon the ſpot, and the maſter can take this wonderful root in his hand without any danger. Now the uſe that is made of this root deſerves well that they ſhould take all this trouble to obtain it. For thoſe devils or evil ſpirits that had animated the greateſt profligates, if they enter into the body of a man, and ſeem ready to choak him if he be not preſently aſſiſted; theſe demons, I ſay, cannot bear the ſmell, nor the preſence of this plant. They fly immediately if it be applied to the body of the poſſeſſed. Such is the relation of Joſephus! I have alſo read a traveller who confirms the greateſt part of this relation. P. Eugen. Roger Recolet, Deſcription of the Holy Land, in Quarto.

The Arabians ſometimes call mandrake by the name of Serag-al-coſhrob, or the Devil's Candle, becauſe in the night time it appears luminous. The cauſe of this brightneſs is glow-worms, who are fond of this plant, and love to be about it. Lutfalla-al-halimi, (Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 141,) who was a phyſician, aſſures us, that all the wonderful things that have been written of this plant are fictions. That he has often gathered them without danger, that the cry attributed to them when gathered is none at all; and that all the uſes to which they are applied are vain and ſuperſtitious.

Some think the Ginſeng of the Chineſe is a ſpecies of the mandrake, and they ſay it ſo wonderfully reſtores the ſinking ſpirits of dying perſons, that there is, often, time for the uſe of other means, and thereby of recovering them. F. Tachard ſays, that this root has ſometimes ſomething of the human ſhape; others ſay it has the name of Ginſeng, becauſe it reſembles the figure of a man who puts his legs in a ſtradling poſture, which the Chineſe call Gin. Another author derives the name Ginſing from the Chineſe word Gin, ſignifying a man, and Sem which ſtands for a plant; q. the human plant, or the plant with a human ſhape. [The Ginſeng which has been imported into England, and uſed medicinally, has not juſtified the reputation of this plant in its own country: perhaps the long voyage, or its being dried, injures its virtues.]

MANETHO. This author was an Egyptian, and prieſt of Heliopolis in Egypt. Being often quoted by Joſephus, it is proper to give ſome account of his work. He had written in Greek the hiſtory of the ſeveral Egyptian dynaſties, from the foundation of the monarchy to the time of Nectanebus, the laſt king of the Egyptian race, and to the time that Darius Ochus invaded and conquered this country, fifteen years before the expedition of Alexander the Great againſt Perſia. Manetho was ſecretary, or writer, to the temples of Egypt; he lived under Ptolemy Philadelphus, to whom he dedicated his work: therefore he was far from being cotemporary with the things he treats of. He admits thirty dynaſties, of one hundred and thirty generations, to have reigned in Egypt, from the beginning of the Egyptian government to Nectanebus. He places in this ſucceſſion, gods, demigods, and men; and aſſigns to each a certain number of years, whoſe total amount far exceeds the number of years which appears in Scripture.

We are obliged to Syncellus for the abſtract of this ancient hiſtorian, which he has preſerved. His work was divided into five parts. The firſt containing the hiſtory of the gods; the ſecond that of the demigods of Egypt; the third that of the kings of that country. In the abridgement which yet remains, we only find the names of the princes, and the years of their reigns. Nor muſt we imagine that they all reigned ſucceſſively; they were princes of different parts of Egypt, and ſometimes reigned as cotemporaries in ſeveral provinces of that country. Joſephus, in his firſt book againſt Appion, makes large extracts from this author, in which he diſtinguiſhes what Manetho had taken out of the antient records of the temples of Egypt, from what he ſays of his own, or what he borrows from the fabulous reports of the Egyptians. He found in the ſacred monuments of this kingdom, that the Hebrews had penetrated into Egypt with a great army, and had ſubdued this country; that being afterwards driven out again, they had conquered

Judea,

Judæa, where they had built Jeruſalem and its temple. So far is agreeable to truth. But, what he adds, that under the reign of a king called Amenophis, they were expelled Egypt with a multitude of lepers, and other diſeaſed perſons, deſerves no credit, as having no foundation but common fame and vulgar tradition. Vide LEPER.

MANGER, wherein was laid the infant Jeſus after his birth. Luke relates, ii. 7. that the holy virgin and Joſeph could not have any accommodation at the public inn, and therefore were obliged to take up with a ſtable, where the virgin Mary brought forth Jeſus Chriſt, and having ſwaddled him up, ſhe laid him in a manger. The antient fathers, who ſpeak of the birth of our Saviour, all concur that he was born in a cave dug in a rock, Origen in Celſ. lib. i. Athanaſ. Ambroſe in Luc. p. 27. Epiphan. hæreſ. 51. Nyſſen. de ſancta Chriſti Nativ. Theodoret. lib. viii. de Græc. affect. curatione. Juſtin, (Dialog. p. 304.) and Euſebius ſay, that this place is not in the city of Bethlehem, but in the country, and near to that city. Euſeb. demonſt. lib. vii. cap. 4. & vita Conſtantini, lib. iii. cap. 41. They ought to know this circumſtance better than others, becauſe Juſtin was a native of that country, and Euſebius had dwelt there. Jerom places this cave in the ſuburbs of the city of Bethlehem, ſouth. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , page .

MAN-HU, מן־הוא, τὶ ἔϛι τᾶτο; What is this? Thus the Vulgate, and the LXX. otherwiſe, it is a gift, or it is manna; from מנה mincha, a preſent or gift, and הוא hu, this. See MANNA.

MANIATH, מניח, reckoned, prepared.

MANNIATH, or Manabat, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 60. Heb. Minnith. Judg. xi. 33. Jephthah beat the Ammonites from Aroer to Maniath.

MANNA. This is generally put for the manna, wherewith the children of Iſrael were fed in the wilderneſs. See the following article. In Baruch i. 10. it is a corruption uſed for an offering, in Hebrew, mincha, as in the Engliſh margin.

MANNA was the food of the children of Iſrael, which God gave them in the deſarts of Arabia during forty years, from their eighth encampment in the wilderneſs of Sin. Manna began to fall on Friday morning, the ſixteenth day of the ſecond month, which from thence was called Jiar, which according to Uſher was on Friday the fifth of June. Exod. xvi. 14, 15. It continued to fall daily in the morning, except on the Sabbath, till after the paſſage over Jordan, and to the paſſover of the fortieth year from the Exodus, i. e. from Friday the fifth of June, A. M. 2513, to the ſecond day of the paſſover, Wedneſday the fifth of May, A. M. 2553, ante A. D. 1451.

The manna was a little grain, white, like hoar-froſt, round, and of the bigneſs of coriander-ſeed. Exod. xvi. 14. Numb. xi. 1. It fell every morning with the dew, and when the dew was exhaled by the heat of the ſun, the manna appeared alone, lying on the rocks, or the ſand, Ex. xvi. It fell every day except the Sabbath, and only about the camp of the Iſraelites. It fell in ſo great quantities during the whole forty years of their journey in the wilderneſs, that it was ſufficient to feed the whole multitude, of above a million of ſouls, every one of whom gathered, for his ſhare every day, the quantity of an omer, which is about three quarts. It maintained all this multitude, and yet none of them found any inconvenience from the conſtant eating of it. Every Friday there fell a double quantity of it, Exod. xvi. 5. and though it putrified and bred maggots when it was kept any other day, yet on the Sabbath it ſuffered no ſuch alteration. And the ſame manna that was melted by the heat of the ſun, when left in the field, was of ſo hard a conſiſtence when brought into the houſe, that it was beat in mortars, and would even endure the fire, was baked in pans, made into paſte, and ſo into cakes. Numb. xi. 5.

The Scripture gives to manna the name of the bread of heaven, and the food of angels: whether it would inſinuate to us, that the angels ſent, and prepared, this food, or that angels themſelves, if they had need of food, could not have any that was more agreeable than manna, Pſalm lxxviii. 25. Wiſdom ſays, xvi. 20. that the manna ſo accommodated itſelf to every one's taſte, that every one found it pleaſing; that it included every thing agreeable to the palate, and fit for nouriſhment: which expreſſions ſome have taken literally; others underſtand them figuratively. Some even think, that it took the form of ſuch things as a man liked beſt. Joſephus underſtood it more ſimply: ſaying, that thoſe who eat of it found it ſo delicious, that they deſired nothing elſe; and St. Auſtin obſerves very diſcreetly, that the ſacred author only ſays, manna had the quality to conform itſelf to the taſte of thoſe who ate it, in favour of the children of God: Ut dulcedinem tuam in filios demonſtrares. And how could the Iſraelites complain, that manna was nauſeous to them, if it had been always accommodated to their taſte at their own will? Numb. xi. 6.

At this day manna falls in ſeveral places: In Arabia, in Poland, in Calabria, in Mount Libanus, and elſewhere. The moſt common and the moſt famous is that of Arabia, which is a kind of condenſed condenſed honey, found in the ſummer time on the leaves of trees, on herbs, on the rocks, or the ſand of Arabia Petrea. It is of the ſame figure as Moſes deſcribes. That which is gathered about Mount Sinai has a very ſtrong ſmell, which it receives from the herbs on which it falls. It eaſily evaporates, inſomuch that if thirty pounds of it were kept in an open veſſel, hardly ten would remain at the end of fifteen days. This Arabian manna is ſold by the apothecaries at Grand Cairo. Salmaſius thinks, that the manna wherewith the Iſraelites were fed was like that now found in Arabia. Several moderns are of the ſame ſentiment. It is true, the Arabian manna has a medicinal quality, and is rather purgative and weakening, then nouriſhing or ſtrengthening. But they pretend, that by uſe the ſtomach might be accuſtomed to it, as people may be brought to a diet, which naturally is but little conducive to health. But we ought alſo to acknowledge, that the manna of Moſes had miraculous qualities, not found in common manna, and which probably ſubſiſted only while the Iſraelites were fed with it. Conſult the diſſertations of M. Saumaiſe, Buxtorf, and Bochart; our commentary on Exodos, and Altomare's Treatiſe of Manna.

Critics are divided about the origin of the word manna. Some think man is put inſtead of the Hebrew mah, What is this? And that the Hebrews on firſt ſeeing this new food which God had ſent, cried to one another, man-hu, inſtead of mah-hu, What is this? Others maintain, that the Hebrews well knew what manna was, and ſaid to one another, manhu, this is manna. Mr. Saumaiſe, and ſome other moderns, are of this opinion. They imagine that the manna was ſimply a fat and thick dew, which ſtill falls in Arabia; which was quickly condenſed, and ſerved for food: that it is the ſame with the wild honey, Matth. iii. 4. on which John the Baptiſt fed; and that the miracle of Moſes did not conſiſt in producing a new ſubſtance, but in the exact and conſtant manner in which it was diſpenſed by providence, and in the quantity of it that fell daily, for ſo long time.

On the contrary, the Hebrews and orientals believe, that the fall of the manna was wholly miraculous. The Arabians call it The Sugar Plumbs of the Almighty, and the Jews are ſo jealous of this miracle, that they pronounce a curſe againſt all who preſume to deny the interpoſition of a miraculous power. Akiba contends, that manna was produced by the condenſation of the heavenly light, which became material, and proper for the nouriſhment of man. Vid. Buxtorf. de Manna, cap. 2. p. 351. But Rabbi Iſhmael rejected this opinion, and oppoſed it on the principle, that Scripture calls manna the bread of Angels. But Angels, ſays he, are not nouriſhed by light become material, but by the light of God himſelf!

That which is ſold in apothecaries ſhops, and commonly called manna of Calabria, is a white and ſweet liquor, which diſtils of itſelf, or by inciſion made in the branches and leaves or keys of the aſh-tree, both common and wild. In the dog-days, or a little before, it is found on the trees. It is gathered in the open ſun-ſhine, which hardens and dries it. In July it iſſues freely out of the tree; in Auguſt they make inciſions in the tree, which then affords a certain quantity: and when this has left off to run, a third ſort exſudes out of the nervous part of the leaves. Manna purges moderately. Fuſchius ſays, that the country people about Mount Libanus eat the manna found there, as others would eat honey.

MANOAH, מנוח, μανωέ, reſt; from נוח nuach: otherwiſe, preſent; from מנחה mincha.

MANOAH, or Manueh, father of Samſon, of the tribe of Dan, and of the city of Zorah. Judg. xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c. An Angel of the Lord having appeared to the wife of Manoah, and having promiſed her a ſon; Manoah, whether moved by jealouſy, ſo ſays Joſeph. Ant. lib. v. cap. 10. or by gratitude, ſays Ambroſe Ep. 70. deſired of the Lord that he might ſee him who had thus appeared, that he might know from him how to treat this ſon when born. The Lord heard his prayer, and the Angel appeared again to his wife, being then in the fields: who ran to acquaint her huſband. Manoah went to him, and obtained from him directions reſpecting his ſon. Manoah then ſaid, My lord, I pray you be pleaſed to let us prepare you a kid. The angel replied, I muſt not eat any food; but you may offer it for a burnt-ſacrifice to the Lord. Manoah ſaid to him, (not knowing him to be an angel) What is your name? that we may pay you honour and acknowledgment, if that ſhall happen which you have foretold. He anſwered, Why aſk you my name? which is a ſecret. Judg. xiii. 18. למה זה תשאל לשמי והוא־פלאי Which may be tranſlated, Why do you aſk my name, which is Peli? Or, why do you aſk my name? And it was admirable; or elſe, and God is admirable.

Manoah therefore took the kid, with the wine for the libations; and put them on the fire which he had lighted on a ſtone. Joſephus, who is followed by moſt commentators, believes that the Angel touched the fleſh with a rod in his hand, on which there iſſued a flame that conſumed the burnt-ſacrifice: which circumſtance is not mentioned tioned in Scripture. As the ſmoke began to aſcend, the angel alſo aſcended in the midſt of the flame, towards Heaven. Then Manoah perceived that it was an angel, and ſaid to his wife, "We ſhall certainly die ſince we have ſeen the Lord." But his wife anſwered him, "If the Lord would have killed us, he would not have conferred ſuch favours on us; he would not have received our burnt-offering, nor would have predicted to us the birth of a ſon." This happened A. M. 2848, and Samſon was born in 2849, ante A. D. 1155.

MAOCH, מעוך, He that is preſſed and bruiſed; from מעך mahac.

MAOCH, father of Achiſh, king of Gath, 1 Sam. xxvii. 2.

MAON, מעון, houſe, or habitation: otherwiſe, crime; from עון havon: otherwiſe, by ſin; from the ſame, and the prepoſition מ m.

MAON, a city of Judah, in the moſt ſoutherly part. Joſh. xv. 55. See alſo 1 Sam. xxiii. 24, 25. xxv. 2. Nabal the Carmelite had great poſſeſſions in the deſert of Maon, and David dwelt a good while hereabouts. We think Maon to be the capital of the Meonians, Heb. 1 Chron. iv. 40, 41. and 2 Chron. xx. 1. The Vulgate in this laſt place reads Ammonites inſtead of Maonim; and in the other paſſage Habitatores; the LXX. Minæs. The city of Maon, which gave name to the deſart, is probably the Mænois, or Mæonis, which Euſebius places in the neighbourhood of Gaza, Onomaſtic. voce Μινεβηνὰ; and as Menæum in the Codex Theodoſianus, which is near Beerſheba, or Verſabinum Caſtrum. It is called Minois in the ſubſcriptions of the council of Chalcedon, in A. D. 451. See Cellarius and Reland under Minois or Menois.

MARAH, מרה, μερρᾶ, or πικρια, bitter, or bitterneſs; from מרר marar.

I. MARAH, or Mara. This word ſignifies bitterneſs. When the Iſraelites coming out of Egypt, were arrived at the deſart of Etham, they there found the waters ſo bitter, that neither themſelves nor their cattle could drink of it. Exod. xv. 23. Therefore they named the place Mara or bitterneſs. Then they began to murmur againſt Moſes, ſaying, What ſhall we drink? Moſes praying to the Lord, he ſhewed him a kind of wood, which being thrown into the water, made it potable. Vide ALVAH.

II. MARAH; Naomi, after her return from Moab, ſaid to thoſe who called her Naomi, which ſignifies handſome; call me rather Marah, or bitterneſs, becauſe the Lord has overwhelmed me with affliction, Ruth i. 20.

MARALAH, מרעלה, bitterneſs of elevation, or of the leaf; from מרר marah, bitterneſs, and עלה halah, elevation, or leaf: otherwiſe, the holocauſt of myrrh; from מור mor, myrrh, and עלה halah, holocauſt: otherwiſe, drunkenneſs, or ſtupidity, or conſternation; from רעל rahal.

MARALAH, or Merela, a city of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 11.

MARAN-ATHA, Μαρὰν-ἀθὰ, The Lord comes. compounded of two Syriac words; maran, ſignifies the Lord, or maſter, and atha, ſignifies to come. מרנ אתה

MARAN-ATHA. Theſe words are Syriac, and ſignify, The Lord comes, or The Lord is come. It was a form of threatening, curſing, or anathematizing among the Jews. St. Paul pronounces Anathema Maran-atha againſt all who love not Jeſus Chriſt. 1 Cor. xvi. 22.

Commentators inform us, that Maran-atha is the greateſt Anathema among the Jews, and equivalent to Sham-atha, or Shem-atha, the name comes, or the Lord comes: q. d. "Mayeſt thou "be devoted to the greateſt of evils, and to "the utmoſt ſeverity of God's judgments; may "the Lord come quickly to take vengeance of "thy crimes." But Selden and Lightfoot maintain, that Maran-atha is not found in this ſenſe among the Rabbins. Maran-atha may be underſtood in an abſolute ſenſe, Let him that does not love our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be Anathema. The Lord is come, the Meſſiah has appeared; evil to whoſoever receives him not. He particularly addreſſes the unbelieving Jews. Conſult Selden de Synedriis, lib. i. cap. 8. Lightfoot, &c. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXX. p. 54.

MAREON. So the Greeks call Samaria, ſays Joſephus Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 7. Compare Joſh. xii. 19. where it is called Shimron-meron, or Shomeron-maron.

MARESHAH, מראשה, from the head, or from the beginning; from the prepoſition מ m, from, and ראש roſh, head, or beginning: otherwiſe, bitter woman; from מרר marar, bitter, and אשה iſhah: otherwiſe, inheritance; from ירש jaraſh, to inherit.

MARESHAH, מרשתה, μαρίσσα, from the ſame root. Moraſthi, Mic. i. 1.

I. MARESHA, or Mareſa, ſon of Laadah; perhaps Laadah is called father of Mareſha, becauſe he peopled this city with his family. 1 Chron. iv. 21.

II. MARESHAH, or Mariſſa, a city of Judah. Alſo called Moreſheth and Moraſthi. The prophet Micah was a native of this city. In the time of Euſebius it was forſaken, being two miles from Eleutheropolis. Near Mareſhah, in the vale of Zephathah, was fought the famous battle between

Aſa

Aſa king of Judah, and Zerah king of Chus, in which Aſa defeated an army of a million of men, which he purſued to Gerar. In 1 Macc. v. 66. is read Samaria inſtead of Mariſſa. In the later times of the Jewiſh commonwealth, Mareſhah belonged to Idumæa, as did ſeveral other ſoutherly cities of Judah. It was peopled by the Jews, and their allies, in the time of John Hyrcanus. King Alexander Jannæus took it from the Arabians. Pompey reſtored it to its firſt inhabitants. Gabinius rebuilt it, and laſtly, the Parthians deſtroyed it in the war of Antigonus againſt Herod. Joſeph Antiq. lib. xiii. xiv.

I. MARIAMNE. Daughter of Alexander, ſon of king Ariſtobulus, and of Alexandra, daughter of Hyrcanus high-prieſt of the Jews, was the fineſt princeſs of her age. She married Herod the Great, by whom ſhe had two ſons Alexander and Ariſtobulus, and two daughters, Salampſo and Cypros; alſo a ſon called Herod, who died young, during his ſtudies at Rome. Herod was exceſſively fond of Mariamne, who made but ſmall returns to his paſſion. Nay, ſhe began to hate him, after he had put to death Ariſtobulus her brother, to whom he had given the high-prieſthood but a year before.

After the victory of Auguſtus over Marc Antony, Herod who had ſent ſuccours to Antony, was forced to ſolicit Auguſtus's clemency. When he left Jeruſalem, he gave ſecret orders to Joſephus and Sohemus, whom he deputed to govern in his abſence, that if they ſhould hear of any misfortune befalling him, they ſhould put Mariamne to death, and her mother Alexandra. Mariamne having cunningly got this ſecret out of Sohemus, conceived an implacable hatred againſt Herod. At length Herod could no longer ſupport her contempt; being otherwiſe exaſperated by the ill reports continually circulated reſpecting her, and by the accuſations of Salome, Herod's ſiſter, her ſworn enemy, who ſuborned a cupbearer of the king to depoſe, that Mariamne had ſolicited him to give a potion to the king, on pretence to render her more beloved by him.

Herod believing that Mariamne could never have got his ſecret out of Sohemus, if there had not been other correſpondence between them, cauſed Sohemus to be ſeized, and led to puniſhment. After this he called his friends together, and accuſed the queen in ſuch bitter terms, that they eaſily perceived he deſired her death. This therefore they voted unanimouſly, and Mariamne walked to her execution with ſuch an air of grandeur and intrepidity, as aſtoniſhed all that ſaw her. After her death Herod's affection for her was renewed, and became ſtronger than ever. Often he called her by her name, as if ſhe were ſtill living. He bewailed her in a manner little agreeing to his high ſtation, and whatever he did to endeavour to divert himſelf, he could never get her out of his mind. He was even compelled to relinquiſh the care of his affairs, and delivered himſelf up ſo much to his grief, that ſometimes he ordered his attendants to call Mariamne, as if ſhe had been ſtill alive. Joſeph Antiq. lib. xv. Joſephus mentions a tower that Herod built in Jeruſalem, to which he gave the name of Mariamne. It was the fineſt and beſt adorned of all that he built. It was fifty-five cubits high, and had a ſquare baſe of twenty cubits wide. Joſeph de Bello, lib. vi. cap. 6. ſeu 17. Gr. Vide HEROD.

II. MARIAMNE. Daughter of the high-prieſt Simon, and wife of Herod the Great: ſhe had a ſon by him called Herod-Philip, who married firſt, the famous Herodias, who afterwards took for her huſband Herod Antipas, who put to death John the Baptiſt. Mark vi. 17, &c. Matth. xiv. 3, &c.

MARK, Μάρκος, Polite, ſhining; from מרק marak.

I. MARK. St. Mark the Evangeliſt, according to Papias, apud Euſeb. lib. ii. c. 14. Hiſt. Eccl. Irenæus, lib. iii. cap. 1. and the greater part of both ancients and moderns, was the diſciple and interpreter of St. Peter; and ſeveral ancients believe, that St. Peter ſpeaks of him in his firſt epiſtle, v. 13. calling him his ſon, in the ſpirit; probably becauſe he had converted him. It is thought he was of the number of the ſeventy diſciples; ſome of the fathers add, that Mark was one of thoſe who forſook our Saviour. John vi. 66. But after St. Peter had recovered him to the faith, he continued ſtedfaſt in it, and went to Rome with him, where he wrote his goſpel.

Some have not diſtinguiſhed him from John Mark, mentioned Acts xii. 12. 25. xv. 29. and by St. Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 11. but this notion is now almoſt intirely given up. Others maintain, that St. Mark was of the race of the prieſts, and wore their bonnet. This is affirmed by the anonymous author of his Acts. It is alſo ſaid that he was nephew to St. Peter, being a ſon of one of his ſiſters. Niceph. Calliſt. lib. iii. cap. 43. This apoſtle going to Rome about A. D. 44, Mark accompanied him thither, where he writ his goſpel, at the requeſt of the brethren, who deſired that he would give them in writing what he had learned from St. Peter by word of mouth. When that apoſtle was informed what his diſciple had done, he commended his undertaking, and gave out his goſpel to be read in the churches as an authentic work. Clem. Alex. apud Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 15. Epiphan. hæreſ. 51. Nazian, car. 34. & orat. 25. Hieron. de viris illuſt. &c. Tertullian, lib. iv. cont. Marcion. aſcribes this goſpel to St. Peter, and the author of the Synopſis imputed to Athanaſius will have this goſpel to be dictated to Mark by St. Peter. Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria aſſerts, that St. Peter writ it himſelf. Some mentioned by Chryſoſtom were of opinion, that Mark writ it in Egypt. Others affirm, that he writ it after St. Peter's death. Chryſ. Homil. i. in Matt. i. 5. Theſe different ſentiments are enough to prove, that the circumſtances of time and place are uncertain, when and where St. Mark compoſed his goſpel.

As to the language in which it was writ, ſome ſay it was compoſed in Greek; others ſay in Latin. The ancients, and moſt of the moderns, ſupport the Greek, which at this day paſſes for the original of St. Mark. But ſome MS. Greek copies inſinuate, that it was writ in Latin. The Syriac and Arabic concur in this. It ſhould ſeem probable, that writing it at Rome, and for the uſe of Romans, he might write it in their language. Baronius and Selden have declared for this opinion, which, however, has few followers. They ſhew at Venice ſome looſe ſheets, which they pretend to be the original in St. Mark's own hand. If this were certain, and if the manuſcript could be read, it would decide the diſpute; but it is doubted whether this be St. Mark's original writing; and it is ſo periſhed by its antiquity, that ſcarce a letter can be made out. Montfaucon affirms that it is writ in Latin, and that he never ſaw ſo ancient a manuſcript. It is written on Egyptian paper, very thin and fine. He thinks that it may fairly be attributed to the fourth century. In 1564 it was put into a vault, in marſhy ground, the roof of which was lower than the neighbouring ſea. So that the water perpetually drops upon thoſe who have the curioſity to go thither. It was legible when it was depoſited there, in 1564. An author that had ſeen it before Montfaucon, believed that he had obſerved Greek characters in it.

Several of the moderns think, that Mark was ſent by St. Peter from Rome to Aquileia, where he continued two years and a half, and founded a church; but this has no proofs from antiquity. It is thought that A. D. 49, the ninth of the emperor Claudius, the Jews being expelled Rome, St. Peter and St. Mark were expelled alſo. St. Peter ſent Mark into Egypt. He firſt went to Cyrene in Pentapolis, where he made many converts. From thence he went to Alexandria, where he converted Anianus, whom he ordained firſt biſhop of that city. The number of Chriſtians there increaſed, and they lived in ſo exemplary a manner, that in the judgment of ſeveral, Philo the Jew, was willing to give the honour of it to his own nation, by deſcribing the manner of life of the primitive Chriſtians, under the name of Therapeutes. See THERAPEUTES, or ESSENES. Vide alſo ANIANUS.

The number of Chriſtians increaſing, the pagans oppoſed Mark, who was come to overthrow the worſhip of their gods. He returned to Cyrene; two years after which he came back to Alexandria. There he beheld with joy, that the faithful were increaſed both in grace and number, and then he departed. Probably he went to Rome, if it be true as the Chronicon Alexandrinum affirms, that there he was preſent at the death of St. Peter and St. Paul, A. D. 66. He returned to Alexandria, where the pagans provoked by the great number of his miracles, and by the reproaches of the Chriſtians, ſought him to put him to death. They found him celebrating the holy communion, on the Lord's Day, April 24, A. D. 68. They put a rope about his neck, and drew him along the whole day, ſaying, they muſt lead this ox to Bucoles, which was a place near the ſea, full of rocks and precipices. At evening they put him into priſon, where in the night he had two viſions. One of an angel, aſſuring him that his name was written in the book of life; and another of our Saviour, to give him peace and tranquillity of mind. The day following, the infidels again dragged him through the ſtreets till he gave up his ſoul to God. Several have ſaid, that he ended his life by fire; probably they burnt his body after death. Eutych. Alex. in Chronic. Hyppolyt. in MS. Bodlei. & Anonym. apud Mill. in cap. Evang. ſecundum Maro.

Several ancient hereticks, as Ireneus reports, received only the goſpel of St. Mark. Among the catholicks ſome rejected the twelve laſt verſes of this goſpel. Now when Jeſus was riſen early, &c. Probably becauſe they ſuppoſed that in one place St. Mark was oppoſite to St. Matthew, and related circumſtances contrary to the other evangeliſts. The ancient fathers, the old oriental verſions, and almoſt all the old copies, whether printed or manuſcript, Greek or Latin, read theſe twelve laſt verſes, and acknowledge them as genuine.

So far as may be judged by comparing the goſpels of Mark and Matthew, the firſt is an abridgment of the ſecond. Mark often uſes the ſame terms, relates the ſame facts, and notices the ſame circumſtances. He ſometimes adds particulars, which give great light to St. Matthew's text. There are alſo two or three miracles in Mark, which are not in Matthew. See Mark i. 23 and chap. i. v. ix. xvi. What is moſt remarkable is, that though he follows Matthew in almoſt every thing elſe, yet he forſakes him in the order of his narration, from chap. iv. 12. to chap. xiv. 13. of Matthew. In theſe places he purſues the order of time as noted by Luke and John. This has induced chronologers to follow Luke, Mark, and John, rather than Matthew. He begins his goſpel with the preaching of John the Baptiſt, and omits ſeveral parables related by St. Matthew, chap. xx. xxi. and xxv. and ſeveral diſcourſes of our Saviour to his diſciples, and to the Phariſees, chap. v. vi. vii. xvi. xviii.

II. MARK. John Mark couſin of Barnabas. See JOHN MARK.

MARRIAGE, Wedding, and the nuptial feſtivity. The Hebrews commonly uſed the word miſhtheh, משתה, nuptiæ, convivium, (Gr. Γάμος) which comes from the verb ſhathah, to drink, to ſignify a feaſt in general, and a marriage-feaſt, or a marriage, in particular. The Greeks uſed gamos in the ſame ſenſe, for a marriage, a wedding, and the feaſting that uſually accompanies it. Sometimes this word ſeems to be put for a feaſt in general. See Luke xii. 36. xiv. 13.

Marriage is among the Hebrews a matter of ſtrict obligation. They underſtand literally, and as a precept, thoſe words uttered to our firſt parents, Gen. i. 28. Be fruitful, and multiply, and repleniſh the earth. They believe that he who does not marry his children deprives God of the glory due to him, becomes in ſome ſort a homicide, deſtroys the image of the firſt man, and is a reaſon why the Holy Ghoſt withdraws himſelf from Iſrael. This queſtion is moved in the Talmud. Who is he that proſtitutes his daughter? It is anſwered, "The father that keeps her too long in his houſe, or that marries her to an old man." The age at which wedlock becomes an obligation is at twenty years. But generally the Jews marry their children ſooner. However, if a father marry his daughter before the age of puberty, which is at twelve years and an half, ſhe may be ſeparated from her huſband for any ſlight diſguſt.

In the firſt ages, marriages between brothers and ſiſters were neceſſary, becauſe of the ſmall number of perſons then in the world. After mankind was become numerous, they were unlawful, and were prohibited under great penalties. However, the patriarchs long eſpouſed their near relations, even after the world was greatly peopled, intending by this to avoid alliances with families corrupted by the worſhip of falſe gods; or, to preſerve in their own families the worſhip of the true God, and the maintainance of the true religion, of which they were the depoſitaries. For this reaſon Abraham married his ſiſter, or niece, Sarah; and alſo ſent his ſteward Eliezer, to fetch a wife for his ſon from among the daughters of his nephews; and Jacob eſpouſed the daughters of his uncle. Vide ABRAHAM III.

The Hebrews generally married young. According to the Rabbins, men ſhould marry at eighteen. Whoever is not married at this age, offends againſt the commandment given by God to increaſe and multiply. They may anticipate this age, but not exceed it. After thirteen years they may marry; and they think a man cannot live in celibacy without ſin, or at leaſt without great danger of ſin. The virgins are contracted very early; but not married till after twelve years complete. From whence come theſe expreſſions, the ſpouſe of one's youth, Prov. ii. 17. or, one eſpouſed in our youth, and the guide of one's youth, expreſſing a huſband married young.

From theſe principles it is eaſy to account why celibacy and barrenneſs was a reproach in Iſrael; and why the daughter of Jephthah went to bewail her virginity, Judges xi. 37. i. e. to deplore her condition, becauſe ſhe was to die unmarried, and childleſs. From hence proceeds their exactneſs, in cauſing the brother of a huſband who died without iſſue, to marry the widow; and the diſgrace that attended him who ſhould refuſe this duty. Gen. xxxviii. 11. Ruth iv. 5. From hence thoſe threatenings of the Lord by Iſaiah iv. 1. And in that day ſeven women ſhall take hold of one man, ſaying, We will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach. That we may have it to ſay—ſuch an one is our husband; and that we may no longer be regarded with contempt. See alſo Jeremiah xxxi. 22. A woman ſhall compaſs a man, or women ſhall apply themſelves to men for husbands. And Cant. viii. 1. I ſhould not be deſpiſed, or I ſhould be delivered from the diſgrace of living ſingle.

Maids before their marriage ſeldom appeared in public. They were called alma, virgin, ſecret, ſhut up. Oftentimes they were ſought in marriage, without having ſeen the perſons who deſired them. Jeſus the ſon of Sirach ſays, Eccleſiaſticus xlii. 2. The father waketh for the daughter when no man knoweth, and the care for her taketh away ſleep: when ſhe is young, leſt ſhe paſs away the flower of her age; and being married, leſt ſhe ſhould be hated. See alſo St. Paul, 1 Cor. vii. 36. If any man think that he behaveth himſelf uncomely toward his virgin, if ſhe paſs the flower of her age. It is a kind of ſhame to a father, if he does not marry his daughter in due time.

One may ſee the manner in which a daughter was demanded in marriage, in the inſtance of Hamor, the father of Shechem, and by Shechem himſelf, when he demanded Dinah of Jacob. Gen. xxxiv. 8, 9, &c. "The ſoul of my ſon Shechem longeth for your daughter; I pray you give her him to wife. Let me find grace in your eyes, and what ye ſhall ſay unto me I will give. Aſk me never ſo much dowry, and gift, and I will give according as ye ſhall ſay unto me; but give me the damſel to wife." See alſo Geneſis xxiv. 33. the manner in which Eliezer makes a demand of Rebekah for Iſaac; and Tobit vii. 10, 11. the demand that Tobias made of Sara the daughter of Raguel. And laſtly, Cant. viii. 8. What ſhall we do for our ſiſter in the day when ſhe ſhall be ſpoken for? In that day when her family ſhall be ſpoken to, in order to her marriage.

The huſband uſed to give a dowry to his wife; it was a kind of purchaſe made by the man, of the perſon whom he deſired to marry. Before the contract, they agreed on what portion the huſband ſhould give his bride, and his preſents to her father and brethren. So Hamor, father of Shechem, tells Jacob and his ſons, that they might aſk what portion and what preſents they pleaſed, and they would gladly give them, for Dinah. Vide DOWRY. Jacob ſerves ſeven years for Rachel, and ſeven years more for Leah; Gen. xxix. and the two ſiſters complain ſome years after, that their father Laban had applied their portions to his own uſe. Gen. xxxi. 15. Saul did not give his daughter Michal to David, till after he had received one hundred foreſkins of the Philiſtines. When it was inſinuated to David, that he might be the king's ſon-in-law, he anſwered that he was not rich enough to aſpire to that honour. But it was told him, the king required no dowry, but an hundred foreſkins of the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. xviii. 25. However, the Rabbins aſſure us, that the father was uſed to give his daughters certain preſents for cloaths, and other neceſſaries. This was fixed at fifty Zuzim, which was a piece of money of one fourth part of a ſhekel. Selden. Uxor Heb. lib. ii. cap. 10.

The betrothing was performed, either by a writing, or by a piece of ſilver given to the bride, or by cohabitation and conſummation. This is the form of the writing: On ſuch a day, of ſuch a month, in ſuch a year, N. the ſon of N. has ſaid to N. the daughter of N. be thou my ſpouſe according to the law of Moſes and the Iſraelites, and I will give thee for the portion of thy virginity the ſum of two hundred Zuzims, as is ordained by the law. And the ſaid N. has conſented to become his ſpouſe upon theſe conditions, which the ſaid N. has promiſed to perform upon the day of marriage. To this the ſaid N. obliges himſelf, and for this he engages all his goods, even as far as the cloak that he wears upon his ſhoulder. Moreover he promiſes to perform all that is generally intended in contracts of marriage, in favour of the Iſraelitiſh women. Witneſſes N. N. N.

The promiſe by a piece of ſilver, and without writing, was made before witneſſes, when the young man ſaid to his miſtreſs; Receive this piece of ſilver as a pledge that you ſhall become my ſpouſe. Laſtly, the engagement by cohabitation, according to the Rabbins, was allowed by the law, Deut. xxiv. 1. but it had been wiſely forbid by the ancients, becauſe of the abuſes that might happen, and to prevent clandeſtine marriages. After the marriage was contracted, the young people had the liberty of ſeeing each other, which was not allowed them before. If during this time the bride ſhould treſpaſs againſt that fidelity ſhe owed her bridegroom, ſhe was treated as an adultreſs. Selden. Uxor Heb. lib. ii. cap. 1. Thus the holy virgin, after ſhe was betrothed to Joſeph, and having conceived our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, might have been puniſhed as an adultereſs, if the angel of the Lord had not ſatisfied Joſeph. The Jewiſh doctors teach, that if thoſe that are betrothed ſhould make an ill uſe of their liberty of ſeeing each other, they are condemned to the puniſhment of the whip. Often between the time of being eſpouſed and married, there paſſed a conſiderable time; whether becauſe of the under-age of the perſons eſpouſed, or for other reaſons of neceſſity or decency.

When the parties were agreed on the terms of marriage, and the time fit for completing it, they drew up the contract.

The FORM of the CONTRACT of MARRIAGE among the HEBREWS.

Upon ſuch a day of ſuch a month, in ſuch a year, and upon the banks of ſuch a river, [for they commonly married in the open air, and by the ſide of ſome river], N. ſon of N. ſaid to N. daughter of N. be thou my wife according to the rites of Moſes and the Iſraelites. And with the help of God I will honour thee, maintain thee, cloath thee, and feed thee, according to the cuſtom of other huſbands huſbands of our nation; who honour, maintain, cloath, and feed their wives, as they ought to do. I give thee for a portion, and for the price of thy virginity, two hundred Zuzims of ſilver. [Theſe two hundred Zuzims make about fifty ſhekels of ſilver,] which are due to thee according to the law. Beſides which, I engage myſelf to provide thee with cloaths, and convenient food, as alſo to diſcharge that conjugal duty which is due to thee, according to the cuſtom of all nations.

And the ſaid N. has conſented to become his ſpouſe. Moreover, the ſaid bridegroom has promiſed by way of augmentation of dowry, that beſides the principal ſum he will give ——. And what the ſaid bride has brought with her is eſtimated at the value of ——, which the ſaid bridegroom acknowledges to have received and to charge himſelf with, and has made us the declaration following. I accept and receive under my care and keeping all that is abovementioned, as well for dowry, as upon any other account; and oblige myſelf and my heirs, under the ſecurity of all my goods, whether moveable or not, preſent or to come, even to the cloak that I wear upon my ſhoulders, to give a true and faithful account to my ſaid ſpouſe, of all that ſhe has brought me as a dowry, or upon any other account, during my life, or at my death. All which I promiſe to put in execution, according to the form and tenor of the uſual contracts of marriage, in uſe among the children of Iſrael, and according to the rules of our Rabbins of pious memory. In teſtimony of which we have ſigned theſe preſents, &c.

Leo of Modena ſays, that the Jews marry on a Wedneſday or Friday, if the ſpouſe be a maid, on a Thurſday if ſhe be a widow. The evening before the ſolemnity, ſeveral women lead the bride to the bath by the ſound of muſical inſtruments. There is ſome diſagreement between Selden, Buxtorf, and Leo of Modena, on the ſubject of marriage-ceremonies; which ſhews that cuſtoms vary according to places and perſons. The bride is adorned with every thing fine and rich, and is led into the open air, either on the banks of a river, into a court, or a garden. Sometimes this is performed in a hall, adorned on purpoſe. The bridegroom and bride are placed under a canopy, each covered with a black veil. On their heads is put another ſquare veil, having four tufts hanging at the four corners. This veil the Hebrews call Taled.

Then the Rabbin of the place, or the chanter of the ſynagogue, or the neareſt relation of the huſband, takes a cup of wine, and having pronounced this benediction, Bleſſed be thou, O Lord, who haſt created man and woman, and ordained marriage, &c. he preſents the cup to the bridegroom, and then to the bride, who taſte it. Afterwards the bridegroom puts a ring on the finger of his bride, in preſence of two witneſſes, ſaying, By this ring thou art my ſpouſe, according to the cuſtom of Moſes and the children of Iſrael. Buxtorf ſays, that this ring ought to be of plain gold; and that the bridegroom takes the company to witneſs, that it is good gold, and of a due value. After this they read the contract of marriage, which the bridegroom delivers to the bride's relations. Then they bring wine again in ſome brittle veſſel, they rehearſe ſix bleſſings, they make the married couple drink, and they throw the reſt on the ground in token of chearfulneſs. The bridegroom takes the veſſel, and throws it with violence againſt the ground, or againſt the wall, and breaks it in pieces in memory, they ſay, of the deſtruction of the temple.

The Rabbins inform us, that before the temple of Jeruſalem was laid in ruins, the bridegroom and bride wore crowns on their marriage; but not ſince that time. In ſcripture we ſee the crown of the bridegroom, but not that of the bride: and indeed, the head-dreſs of the women was by no means convenient for wearing a crown. Iſai. lxi. 10. Vulg. Quaſi ſponſum decoratum coronâ. And Cant. iii. 11. Go forth, O ye daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his eſpouſals, and in the day of the gladneſs of his heart. The modern Jews in ſome places throw handfuls of wheat on the married couple, particularly on the bride, ſaying, Increaſe and multiply. In other places they mingle pieces of money with the wheat, which are gathered up by the poor.

We ſee by the goſpel, that the bridegroom had a Paranymphus, or brideman, called by our Saviour the Friend of the Bridegroom, John iii. 29. A number of young people kept him company during the days of the wedding, to do him honour; as alſo young women kept company with the bride all this time. The companions of the bridegroom are expreſsly mentioned in the hiſtory of Samſon, Judg. xiv. and in the Canticles, v. 1. viii. 13. and the companions of the bride, Cant. i. 4. ii. 7. iii. 5. viii. 4. and Pſalm xlv. 9, 14, 15. The office of the brideman was to perform the ceremonies of the wedding inſtead of the bridegroom, and to obey his orders. He that has the bride is the bridegroom, ſays John the Baptiſt, ſpeaking of Jeſus Chriſt; but the friend of the bridegroom, which ſtandeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly, becauſe of the bridegroom's voice, John iii. 29. Some think that the Architriclinus, or or governor of the feaſt, mentioned in the marriage of Cana, was the brideman, Paranymphus, or friend of the bridegroom, who preſided at the feaſt, and had the care of providing for the gueſts, John ii. 9. The friends and companions of the bride ſang the Epithalamium, or wedding-ſong, at the door of the bride the evening before the wedding. Pſalm xlv. is an Epithalamium, intitled, A ſong of rejoicing of the well-beloved. The ceremony of the wedding was performed with great decency, the young people of each ſex being ſeparate, in diſtinct apartments, and at different tables. The reſervedneſs of the Eaſtern people towards their women required this. We ſee proofs of this in the marriage of Samſon, in that of Eſther, and in the Canticles. The young men diverted themſelves ſometimes in propoſing riddles, and the bridegroom appointed the prize to thoſe that could explain them, Judg. xiv. 14. The ſtory of Samſon is well known, and his riddle.

The wedding ceremonies commonly held ſeven days for a maid, and three days for a widow. So Laban ſays to Jacob reſpecting Leah—"fulfil her week." Gen. xxix. 27. The ceremonies of Samſon's wedding continued alſo ſeven whole days, Judg. xiv. 17, 18. as alſo that of Tobias, Tob. xi. 19. The Rabbins acquaint us that the term of ſeven days was of indiſpenſible obligation to all married men; and that they were to allow ſeven days for the marriage of every wife they took, though they ſhould marry ſeveral the ſame day. In this caſe they made ſo many wedding weeks ſucceſſively as they married wives. Theſe ſeven days of rejoicing were commonly ſpent in the houſe of the woman's father, after which they conducted the bride home, to her huſband's houſe, with great ſolemnity.

This part of the ceremony was generally performed with great pomp, according to the circumſtances of the married couple; and for this they often choſe the night. Hence, in the parable of the ten Virgins that went to meet the bride and bridegroom, Matt. xxv. it is ſaid the virgins were aſleep; and at midnight being awaked at the cry of the bridegroom's coming, the fooliſh virgins found they had no oil to ſupply their lamps; which while they went to buy, the bridegroom and his attendants paſſed by. We read 1 Macc. ix. 37. that the children of Jambri having made a magnificent wedding at Medaba or Nadabatha, a city beyond Jordan, as they were bringing the bride with great ſolemnity to the dwelling of the bridegroom, and as the relations and friends of the huſband went before her with inſtruments of muſic and with arms, the Maccabees fell upon and diſperſed them.

In the ceremonies of marriage, the Hebrews pretend that they chiefly imitate Tobias's wedding, which they juſtly look on as a model of a regular and happy marriage. However the ceremonies we have deſcribed are different enough from what was then practiſed. Firſt, Raguel conſents that Tobias ſhall have his daughter, and at the ſame time puts Tobias's hands into thoſe of his daughter Sara, and gives them his bleſſing. This is the eſſential ceremony of the marriage. After this, Raguel calls for paper, writes the contract, and has it ſigned by the witneſſes. Then the feaſt begins, which is kept a whole fortnight; though according to the rules of the Rabbins, they ought to have held it but three days, becauſe Sara was the widow of ſeveral huſbands, Tob. x. 7.

When the married couple and their relations are come into the houſe, they ſit down at table, and the bridegroom begins to ſing, as muſically as he can, a long bleſſing in Hebrew, Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. cap. 28. After ſupper the moſt honourable perſon in the company takes the bridegroom by the hand, and the reſt all round, and they begin to dance together. The women likewiſe do the ſame, but ſeparately from the men. This dancing is a very ancient tradition among them; they call it the dance of the commandment, pretending that God himſelf commanded it, in the ceremony of marriage.

The leading the bride into the marriage chamber, is, in the opinion of the Rabbins, what compleats the marriage. The woman is then a compleat bride, as ſoon as ſhe is entered into this chamber, even though the marriage has not been yet conſummated: as it happens when the woman is under the inconveniencies attending her ſex. Before the leading of the bride into the marriage-chamber, they rehearſe this bleſſing, in the preſence of ten perſons of age ſufficient, and free. Be thou bleſſed, O Lord our God, king of the world, who haſt created all things for thy glory. Be thou bleſſed, O Lord our God, creator of man. Be thou bleſſed, O Lord our God, who haſt created man in thy own image and likeneſs, and haſt provided him a companion for ever. Be thou bleſſed, O Lord our God, creator of man. She that was barren ſhall rejoice, in gathering her children into her boſom. Be thou bleſſed, O Lord our God, who makeſt Sion rejoice in the multitude of its children. Repleniſh with joy theſe two ſpouſes, as thou didſt repleniſh man and woman in the garden of Eden. Be thou bleſſed, O Lord our God, who heapeſt pleaſure upon the the bridegroom and bride, and haſt prepared for them joy, ſongs, gladneſs, dancing, love, friendſhip, peace, and brotherly kindneſs. Grant, O Lord, as ſoon as may be, that in the cities of Judah and in the places of Jeruſalem may be heard ſongs of joy, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, the voice of the mutual love of ſpouſes, and the voice of ſinging children. Be thou bleſſed, O Lord our God, who repleniſheſt with joy the bridegroom and the bride.

As to the marriage of Chriſtians, Chriſt has reſtored it to its firſt perfection, by baniſhing polygamy, and forbidding divorce, except in the caſe of adultery, Mat. v. 32. nor leaving to the parties ſo ſeparated, the liberty of marrying again, Luke xvi. 18. And this is very different from what the law allowed. Our Saviour bleſſed and ſanctified marriage by being preſent himſelf at the wedding of Cana, John ii. 1, 2. St. Paul declares the excellence of a Chriſtian marriage, when he ſays, Eph. v. 32. Let every one of you ſo love his wife, even as himſelf, and the wife ſee that ſhe reverence her huſband. And a little above, So ought men to love their wives, as their own bodies; he that loveth his wife, loveth himſelf. For this cauſe ſhall a man leave his father and mother, and ſhall be joined unto his wife, and they two ſhall be one fleſh. This is a great myſtery; but I ſpeak concerning Chriſt and the church. The union of huſband and wife repreſents the ſacred and ſpiritual marriage of Chriſt with his church. The ſame apoſtle aſſures us, Heb. xiii. 4. that marriage is honourable in all, and the bed undefiled; but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. The ſacred books of the New Teſtament preſcribe no particular ceremony for the ſolemnizing of matrimony; but it is certain that in the church a bleſſing has always been given to the married couple. We ſee by Tertullian, de veland. Virg. cap. 11. that they put a veil over the married couple, and that in imitation of Tobias and Sara, they gave each other their hands. St. Ambroſe ſays, that marriage ought to be ſanctified by the veil, and by the bleſſing of the prieſt. Ignatius the martyr would have marriage to be contracted by the advice of the biſhop, that it may be according to God, and not according to the fleſh. The ceremony of eſpouſals is very ancient, as may be ſeen by ſeveral councils; Concil. Ancyr. Can. xi. xxiv. Carthag. iv. Citat. iii. Pars cap. xxvii. q. ii. cap. 45, 50, 51. and by St. Auſtin; Inſtitutum eſt ut jam pactæ ſponſæ non tradantur ſtatim ne vilem habeat maritus datam, quam non ſuſpiravit ſponſus dilatum. Aug. lib. viii. Confeſ. cap. 3. Heretofore in ſeveral churches the married people communicated the day of their marriage, and abſtained that night from the uſe of the marriage-bed. This practice is ſtill in uſe in ſome places, as I am informed.

MARSENA, מרסנא, bitterneſs, or myrrh of the buſh; from מרר marar, and מור mur, and from סנה ſenah, buſh: otherwiſe, that ſhews the buſh, or the enemy.

MARSENA, or Marſana, one of the ſeven principal officers of king Ahaſuerus, Eſther i. 14.

MARTHA, Μάρθα, who becomes bitter; from מרר marar: according to the Syriac, miſtreſs, or that teaches.

MARTHA, ſiſter of Lazarus and Mary, and miſtreſs of the houſe where our Saviour was entertained, in the village of Bethany. Vide LAZARUS and MARY. Martha is always named before Mary, probably becauſe ſhe was the elder ſiſter. Once, when our Saviour viſited them, Martha was very buſy in preparing ſupper, while Mary ſat at our Saviour's feet, hearing his doctrine with great aſſiduity and attention, Luke x. 38, 42. Martha complained to our Saviour, deſiring him to bid Mary riſe and aſſiſt her. But Jeſus made anſwer, Martha, Martha, you are very buſy and in much trouble to provide indifferent or unneceſſary things; there is but one thing neceſſary, and Mary has choſen the better part, which ſhall not be taken from her.

Some time after Lazarus falling ſick, the two ſiſters ſent word of it to Jeſus, then beyond Jordan; but he departed not from thence till he knew Lazarus was dead. Being come almoſt to Bethany, Martha went out to meet him; expoſtulated with him on his delay; and profeſſed her faith in him. Jeſus bid them bring him to Lazarus's tomb, where he raiſed him from the dead. John xi. 20, &c.

Six days before his paſſion, Jeſus being come to Bethany for the feaſt of the paſſover, was invited to eat by a Phariſee, called Simon the leper, John xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Martha waited, Lazarus was one of the gueſts, and Mary poured a box of precious perfume on the head and feet of Jeſus, Matth. xxvi. 6, &c. This is all that ſcripture informs us of Martha. The ancient Latins and modern Greeks maintain, that ſhe died at Jeruſalem, as alſo Mary and Lazarus, and that they were all buried there. Several ancient martyrologies put their feaſt January 6. Others December 17. The Latins now place it July 29.

I. MARY, the mother of Jeſus, and a virgin at the ſame time, daughter of Joachim, and Anna, of the tribe of Judah, married to Joſeph of the ſame tribe. The ſcripture mentions nothing of her parents, not even their names, unleſs Heli, Luke iii. 23. be the ſame as Joachim. All that is ſaid concerning the birth of Mary, and her parents, is only found in apocryphal writings: which however are ancient. Vide JOACHIM. Mary was of the royal race of David, as alſo was Joſeph her huſband; and ſhe was alſo couſin to Elizabeth, the wife of Zacharias the prieſt, Luke i. 5, 36.

Mary very early made a vow of chaſtity, and engaged herſelf to a perpetual virginity, ſay the apocryphal goſpels, which tell us, ſhe was conſecrated to the Lord, and offered in the temple, from her earlieſt youth, and that the prieſts gave her Joſeph for a ſpouſe, who was an holy and venerable old man, whom providence appointed for this purpoſe by a miracle; the rod which he commonly carried having grown green and flouriſhed, as Aaron's did formerly. He eſpouſed Mary, not to live with her as a wife, but to be the guardian of her virginity. See the goſpel of the birth of the Virgin, and the Protevangelium. Though theſe circumſtances are evidently fictitious, yet Mary's virginity is atteſted by the goſpel; for, ſpeaking to the angel, who told her ſhe ſhould become the mother of a ſon, ſhe ſays, ſhe knew not a man, Luke i. 34. For which reaſon, when Joſeph perceived her pregnancy, he was extremely ſurpriſed and ſcandalized at it, and reſolved to put her away.

The Greek text, Matth. i. 18. imports that Mary was eſpouſed, as well as the Latin. Cùm eſſet deſponſata Mater Jeſu Maria Joſeph. Μνηςευθείσης γὰρ τῆς Μήτρος ἀυτῦ Μαριὰς τῷ Ἰωσὴφ. And is ſo taken by Origen in diverſ. Evang. locis Homil. ii. S. Hilary in Matt. i. 18. St, Jerom upon St. Matt. i. 16, 18, 20. St. Baſil. de human Chriſti gener. p. 507. St. Epiphan. hæreſ. 78. St. Chryſoſtom Homil. iv. in Matt. v. 20. St. Bernard upon miſſus eſt. Homil. ii. N. 12, and many others. I ſay, in this ſenſe they underſtand it of a true marriage, and hold that Mary had actually married Joſeph. Among the Hebrews eſpouſals were underſtood to be as firm as marriage among us. The man had the ſame power over his ſpouſe, as if ſhe were his wife. To compleat the marriage no more was wanting than a few formalities, and to take the bride home to her huſband. The faults ſhe committed againſt her honour were puniſhed as adultery.

The Virgin Mary being eſpouſed to Joſeph, the angel Gabriel appeared to her, to acquaint her, that ſhe ſhould be the mother of the Meſſiah, Luke i. 26, 27, &c. Mary aſked him how this could be, ſince ſhe knew no man? The angel replied, that "the Holy Ghoſt ſhould come upon her, and the power of the Higheſt ſhould overſhadow her," ſo that ſhe ſhould conceive without the concurrence of a man. And to confirm his meſſage, and to ſhew that nothing is impoſſible to God, he added, that her couſin Elizabeth, who was both old and barren, was then in the ſixth month of her pregnancy. Mary anſwered, Behold the hand-maid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word: and preſently ſhe conceived. She ſet out for Hebron, a city in the mountains of Judah, to viſit her couſin Elizabeth: as ſoon as Elizabeth heard the voice of Mary, her child, (John the Baptiſt) leaped in her womb, ſhe was filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and cried out: Bleſſed art thou among women, &c. Then Mary filled with acknowledgment and ſupernatural light, praiſed God, ſaying, My ſoul doth magnify the Lord, and my ſpirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour, &c. Mary continued with Elizabeth about three months, and then returned to her own houſe.

When Mary was ready to lie in, an edict of Cæſar Auguſtus decreed, that all ſubjects of the empire ſhould go to their own cities, to regiſter their names, according to their families. Joſeph and Mary, who were both of the lineage of David, went to the city of Bethlehem, from whence ſprung their family. But while they were here, the time being fulfilled in which Mary was to be delivered, ſhe brought forth her firſt-born ſon. She wrapped him in ſwaddling clothes, and laid him in the manger of the ſtable or cavern whither they had retired; as they could find no place in the public inn, becauſe of the great concourſe of people at Bethlehem on this occaſion. Or, they were forced to withdraw into the ſtable of the inn, not being able to get a more convenient lodging. Vide MANGER. It is commonly believed, that Jeſus was born the night after their arrival at Bethlehem, December 25. Such is the ancient tradition of the church. [this ſeems contrary to Luke ii. 6.]

Angels made this event known to ſhepherds, who were in the fields near Bethlehem, and who came in the night to ſee, Mary and Joſeph, and the child lying in the manger, and to pay him their adoration. Mary took notice of all theſe things, and laid them up in her heart. Luke ii. 19. A few days after the Magi or wiſe-men came from the eaſt, and brought to Jeſus the myſterious preſents of gold, frankincenſe, and myrrh; Matth. ii. 8, 9, 10, 11, &c. The time of Mary's purification being come, i. e. forty days after the birth of Jeſus, Mary went to Jeruſalem, to preſent her ſon in the temple, and there to offer the ſacrifice appointed by the law, for the purification of women after child-birth. Luke ii. 21. There was then at Jeruſalem an old man named Simeon, Simeon, full of the Holy Ghoſt, who had received a ſecret aſſurance that he ſhould not die, before he had ſeen Chriſt the Lord. He came then into the temple by the influence of the Spirit of God, and taking the little Jeſus in his arms, he bleſſed the Lord, &c.

Afterwards, when Joſeph and Mary were about to return to their own country, Nazareth, the angel of the Lord appeared to Joſeph in a dream, bidding him retire into Egypt with Mary and the child, becauſe Herod deſigned to deſtroy Jeſus. Matth. ii. 13, 14. Joſeph obeyed the admonition, and continued in Egypt till after the death of Herod. Tradition ſays, that Joſeph and the Virgin abode at Hermopolis; and between Cairo and Heliopolis is ſhewn a fountain and a garden of balm plants, in a place called Matarea, where they ſay the holy virgin ſtopped and waſhed her ſons' linen in the fountain. This place is in great veneration in Egypt. After the death of Herod, Joſeph and Mary returned to Nazareth.

Mary and Joſeph went every year to Jeruſalem to the paſſover; and when Jeſus was twelve years of age, they took him with them. When they were returning, the child Jeſus continued at Jeruſalem, without their perceiving it; and thinking he might be with ſome of the company, they went on a day's journey. Then, not finding him among their acquaintance, they returned to Jeruſalem to ſeek him. Three days after, they found him in the temple, ſitting among the doctors, hearing them and aſking them queſtions. When they ſaw him they were filled with aſtoniſhment; and Mary ſaid to him, 'Son why have you ſerved us thus? Your father and myſelf, have ſought you in much affliction.' Jeſus anſwered them, "Why did you ſeek me? Did not you know that I muſt be employed about my father's buſineſs?" Luke ii. 49. (Ὅτι ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός μου δεῖ εἶναι με; I muſt be in the houſe of my father; or, I muſt be employed in the affairs of my father.) Afterwards, he returned with them to Nazareth; and lived in filial ſubmiſſion to them. But his mother laid up all theſe things in her heart. Luke ii. 51, 52, &c. The goſpel ſpeaks nothing more of the virgin Mary, till the marriage of Cana of Galilee, at which ſhe was preſent with her ſon Jeſus.

In the thirty-third year of Jeſus Chriſt, A. D. 30, our Saviour reſolving to manifeſt himſelf to the world, went to the baptiſm of John, from thence into the wilderneſs, then to the wedding at Cana of Galilee, where he had been invited with his mother and his diſciples. John ii. 1, 2, 3, &c. The wine beginning to fail, Mary ſaid to Jeſus, "they have no wine;" to which Jeſus anſwered; "Woman, what have I to do with thee? Mine hour is not yet come." St. Chryſoſtom, and thoſe who have been uſed to follow his explications, believe that on this occaſion the holy virgin's vanity, was tempted with a deſire of ſeeing her own credit raiſed by the miracles of her ſon. And this made our Saviour give her this anſwer, which ſeems indeed ſomething harſh. But other fathers and commentators impute what was ſaid by the holy virgin, to her charity; and the anſwer of our Saviour they impute, not to Jeſus as man, but to Jeſus as God: q. d. I know when I ought to ſhew forth my power, nor does it belong to you to appoint me the time of working miracles. Nevertheleſs, on this occaſion, Jeſus turned ſix pitchers of water into wine.

After this Jeſus went to Capernaum with his mother and his brethren, i. e. with his parents and his diſciples; and this ſeems to be the place where the holy virgin afterwards chiefly reſided. Epiphanius thinks, that ſhe followed him every where, during his preaching; but we do not find that the evangeliſts mention her, when they ſpeak of the holy women who followed him.

One day, as Jeſus Chriſt was in the houſe at Capernaum, there was ſo great a croud about him, that neither he nor his diſciples had time to eat. This cauſed a report that he had fainted away. (The words in Greek Ἐλεγον γὰρ ὅτι ἐξέστη. Mark iii. 21. [See JESUS CHRIST,] might inſinuate, that he was become mad, or had loſt his underſtanding. And the Vulgate reads, Dicebant enim quoniam in furorem verſus eſt. The mother of Jeſus and his brethren wiſhed to take him out of the crowd. It was not they, certainly, who made ſo wrong a judgment of Jeſus, but the ignorant people, or the Phariſees, who had ſaid, he was poſſeſſed by a devil.) The virgin, the brethren, (or the parents) of Jeſus came to ſee what had occaſioned this report. Jeſus being informed of their coming, looking upon thoſe around him, ſaid; "whoever does the will of God, he is my mother, my ſiſter, and my brother."

The Virgin was at Jeruſalem, at the laſt paſſover our Saviour celebrated there. There ſhe ſaw all that was tranſacted, ſhe followed him to Calvary, ſhe ſtaid at the foot of his croſs, with an admirable conſtancy and courage. Jeſus ſeeing his mother, and his beloved diſciple near, he ſaid to his mother, "Woman, behold thy ſon;" and to the diſciple, 'Behold thy mother'. And from that hour the diſciple took her home to his own houſe. It is not to be doubted that our Saviour appeared to his holy mother immediately diately after his reſurrection, and that ſhe was among the firſt, to whom he vouchſafed that conſolation. She was with the apoſtles at his aſcenſion, and continued with them at Jeruſalem, waiting the coming of the Holy Ghoſt. After this ſhe dwelt with John the evangeliſt, who took care of her as of his own mother, Epiphan. hæreſ. 78, cap. 10, 11. Nazian. Tragæd. p. 281. Cyrill. Alex. in Johan. lib. xii. p. 1065. It is thought he took her with him to Epheſus, where ſhe died in an extreme old age. Andr. Cretenſ. Hom. ix. p. 123, c. There is a letter of the œcumenical council of Epheſus, importing, that in the fifth century it was believed ſhe was buried there. Concil. Epheſ. Homil. iii. Concil. Lab. p. 574, a.

Yet this opinion was not ſo univerſal, but that ſome authors of the ſame age, think the Virgin Mary died and was buried at Jeruſalem. The emperor Marcian and Pulcheria being anxious to tranſlate the body of the holy Virgin to the church called Blachernus at Conſtantinople, applied to Juvenal, biſhop of Jeruſalem, who told them her ſepulchre was at Gethſemane, near to Jeruſalem; which ſepulchre Marcian ordered to be tranſported to Conſtantinople. Johan. Diac. de Aſſumpt. B. M. Serm. ii. p. 394. Nicephor. lib. ii. cap. 23. & lib. xv. cap. 14. It is added, that the figure of the body of the Virgin was engraved on the ſtone, and not by the work of any man's hand. From this time they have continued to ſhew the Virgin's tomb at Gethſemane, in a church dedicated to her name; where it is ſhewn to this day.

Some have believed that the holy Virgin finiſhed her life by martyrdom, from thoſe words of old Simeon, A ſword ſhall pierce through thy own ſoul alſo, Luke ii. 35. But this is generally referred to her affliction, at the ſight of her ſon's crucifixion: no hiſtory mentions her martyrdom. Epiphanius declares, that he could not affirm whether ſhe died or continued immortal, whether ſhe was buried or not. Epiphan. hæreſ. 78. cap. 11. 23. In a word, that no one knew what was her end. The ſentiments of the church, at this day, are, that ſhe is dead; but they are divided as to her riſing again, or whether ſhe awaits the general reſurrection, at Epheſus, or at Jeruſalem, or elſewhere.

As to the age at which ſhe died, and the year of her death, nothing can be ſaid but what is very doubtful. Nicephorus Caliſtus, an author of the fourteenth century, gives us the following deſcription of the holy Virgin; "She was of a moderate ſtature, or according to ſome, rather below the ordinary ſtature of women: her complexion was of the colour of wheat, her hair fair, her eyes lively, the eye-ball yellowiſh, or olive-colour, her eyebrows black and ſemicircular, her noſe pretty long, her lips red, her hands and fingers large, her air grave, ſimple, and modeſt, her clothes neat, without pride or oſtentation, and of the natural colour of the wool." It has been pretended, that St. Luke had drawn her picture, and in ſeveral places they ſhew pictures of her, which they affirm to be copies from St. Luke's original. But the ancients have no where informed us, that St. Luke was a painter, or that he had painted the holy Virgin. But Theodorus, lecturer of the church of Conſtantinople, who lived in the ſixth century, ſays that Eudocia ſent from Jeruſalem to Conſtantinople, to the empreſs Pulcheria, a picture of the holy Virgin painted by St. Luke. Certain it is that this holy evangeliſt has acquainted us with ſome particulars of the life of the holy Virgin, that could hardly be learned from any one but herſelf; which inclines us to believe, that he had the happineſs of her acquaintance, and of her confidence. Vide LUKE.

The Jews have vented many falſities againſt her, in their book called Toledoth Jeſu, or the Life of Jeſus Chriſt. Vide JESUS CHRIST.

They pretend that Mary was a milliner, and married to one Johanan; that ſhe ſuffered herſelf to be corrupted by one Panderus, who had a ſon by her called Joſhua, or Jeſus; that Panderus, or Pantherus, withdrawing to Babylon, Mary was forced to keep her ſon. Akiba took a journey to Nazareth, on purpoſe to inform himſelf concerning the birth of Jeſus; who from his childhood diſtinguiſhed himſelf at ſchool. He found from Mary herſelf, that ſhe had been guilty of adultery. At his return, Jeſus was ſeized, was ſhaved, and his head was waſhed with a water, which prevented the hair from growing again. Hence it is that his diſciples ſhave their heads. (Inſinuating by this, the cuſtom that has obtained among Roman catholic prieſts and religious, of the tonſure.) They add, that at Mary's death they ſet up a ſtately monument for her at Jeruſalem, with an inſcription upon it, which coſt the lives of an hundred Chriſtians of Jeſus's relations, who had diſtinguiſhed themſelves on this occaſion.

The Mahometans on the contrary entertain great ſentiments of reſpect and eſteem for her. But they do not confine themſelves within the limits of truth and ſobriety: they ſay, for example, that Ann the mother of Mary, and wife of Amram, being with child of her, vowed to the Lord whatever child ſhould be born, whether male male or female. That God gave the name of Mary to the child; that Ann gave the child to keep to Zacharias the prieſt, who ſhut her up in one of the chambers of the temple, the door of which was ſo high, that they went up to it by a ladder, and he always carried the key about him. Zacharias made her frequent viſits, and whenever he came he always found with her all the moſt exquiſite fruits of Paleſtine, even ſuch as were moſt out of ſeaſon. This put him on enquiring how ſhe came by ſuch fine fruits? To which Mary anſwered, 'Whatever you ſee here comes from God, who provides for thoſe that pleaſe him all good things, without meaſure or number.' As to the purity of the holy Virgin, in her birth, in the conception of the Word, &c. they ſpeak very explicitly.

Abulfarage writes in his dynaſties, that it was a tradition among the oriental Chriſtians, that the holy Virgin was but thirteen years of age when ſhe brought forth Jeſus Chriſt, and that ſhe lived to be fifty-one. Some Muſſulmen falſly impute to Chriſtians, that they acknowledge the Virgin Mary as the third perſon of the Holy Trinity; which miſtake proceeds from hence, that the Chriſtians of the Eaſt give her the name of Al-ſeidai, which ſignifies the Lady; and among the Greek fathers St. Cyril has called her, The Supplement or Completion of the moſt holy Trinity; but other Mahometans vindicate us from this calumny.

II. MARY, the mother of James and John. She was not called Mary, but Salome; though ſhe is commonly named Mary, the mother of James and John. St. Matthew xxvii. 56. calls her the mother of the ſons of Zebedee; and St. Mark, xv. 40. calls her Salome. She was therefore wife to Zebedee, and mother to James and John.

III. MARY, mother of Mark. She had a houſe in Jeruſalem, whither it is thought the apoſtles retired, after the aſcenſion of our Lord, and where they received the Holy Ghoſt. This houſe was on mount Sion. Epiphanius ſays, it eſcaped the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus, and was changed into a very famous church, which continued ſeveral ages. After the impriſonment of St. Peter, the faithful aſſembled in this houſe, there praying inſtantly; when Peter delivered by the miniſtry of an angel, knocked at the door of the houſe. Acts xii. 5, 12. See JOHN MARK.

IV. MARY of Cleophas. Jerom ſays, ſhe bore the name of Cleophas, either becauſe of her father, of her family, or ſome other reaſon not known. Chryſoſtom in Galat. p. 801. Theodoret in Galat. p. 268. And others, believe, with greater probability, that ſhe was wife of Cleophas, and mother of James the Leſſer, and of Simon, brethren of our Lord. Theſe authors take Mary, mother of James, and Mary, wife of Cleophas, to be the ſame perſon. St. John gives her the name of Mary, wife of Cleophas, and the other evangeliſts the name of Mary, mother of James. Cleophas and Alpheus are the ſame perſon, as James ſon of Mary, wife of Cleophas, is the ſame as James ſon of Alpheus. Alpheus and Cleophas differ only as a Hebrew name, and the ſame in Greek.

We know very few particulars of the life of Mary of Cleophas. It is thought ſhe was ſiſter to the holy Virgin; and the mother of James the Leſs, of Joſes, of Simeon, and of Judas, who in the goſpel are named brethren of Jeſus Chriſt, i.e. his couſin-germans. She believed early on Jeſus Chriſt, and accompanied him in ſome of his journeys, to miniſter to him. She was preſent at the death of our Saviour; ſhe followed him to Calvary, and was with the Virgin at the foot of his croſs. She was alſo preſent at his burial, and prepared perfumes to embalm him. But going to his tomb on Sunday morning very early, with other women, they learned from an angel that he was riſen, of which they informed the apoſtles. By the way Jeſus appeared to them, and they embraced his feet, worſhipping him. The year of the death of Mary the wife of Cleophas is not known, but the Greeks keep April 8, in memory of the holy women who brought perfumes to embalm the body of Chriſt; and pretend to have their bodies at Conſtantinople, in a church of the holy Virgin, built by Juſtin II. The Roman martyrology places the feſtival of St. Mary the wife of Cleophas, April 9.

V. MARY SALOME, daughter of Mary, wife of Cleophas; ſiſter of James the Leſs, and others, called the brethren of our Lord. She was couſin-german to Jeſus Chriſt according to the fleſh, and niece to the holy Virgin. She was properly called Salome, and without any reaſon received the name of Mary, which belongs to her mother. Others pretend that Salome was the daughter of Joſeph, the huſband of the Virgin Mary; and this is the opinion of the modern Greeks, founded on the teſtimony of Epiphanius. Hæreſ. 78. cap. 8. p. 1040. a. See SALOME.

The Roman martyrology gives the name of Mary Salome to the mother of St. James the Leſs. It is not known what grounds they had for this, for it cannot be found in Scripture, or in any good author, that ſhe was called Mary, but was certainly called Salome. Compare Matth. xxvii. 56. with Mark xv. 40. And ſee Origen on St. Matthew, p. 206. c. and the other interpreters.

VI. MARY, a Chriſtian woman mentioned by St. Paul, Romans xvi. 6. of whom he ſays, that ſhe laboured much for the faith, and for the church at Rome.

VII. MARY, ſiſter of Lazarus, who has been prepoſterouſly confounded with that woman ſinner, mentioned Luke vii. 37, 39. whoſe name is not noticed, but who was probably Mary Magdalen. Mary the ſiſter of Martha and Lazarus, lived with her brother and ſiſter at Bethany, a village near to Jeruſalem. Jeſus Chriſt had a particular affection for this family, and often retired to their houſe. One day, and perhaps the firſt time that Jeſus went thither, Martha having received him with great affection, and thinking to make much of him, ſhe prepared a handſome entertainment; while Mary her ſiſter remained at our Saviour's feet, hearing his converſation, with great attention. Wherefore Martha ſaid to Jeſus, Do you not obſerve, Lord, that my ſiſter leaves me to miniſter alone? Bid her come to help me: but Jeſus took occaſion to juſtify Mary, ſaying, that Mary had choſen the better part, which ſhould not be taken from her.

Some time after, their brother Lazarus fell ſick, and his ſiſters acquainted Jeſus with it; but he did not come till after Lazarus was dead. He arrived at Bethany, and preſently Martha came to him. Then he ſent to acquaint Mary with his being there, who immediately came to him, making her complaint of Lazarus's death, &c. Jeſus reſtored him to his ſiſters. Six days before the paſſover, Jeſus came to Bethany with his diſciples, and was invited to ſupper at Simon's the leper. Martha attended, and Lazarus was one of the gueſts. Mary, taking a pound of ſpikenard (the moſt precious perfume of this kind, ſee SPIKENARD) poured it on the head and feet of Jeſus. She wiped his feet with her hair, and the whole houſe was filled with the ſcent of the perfume. Judas Iſcariot murmured at this, but Jeſus undertook Mary's defence, ſaying, that by this ſhe had anticipated his embalmment, and, in a manner, had declared his death and burial at hand. From this time the ſcripture does not mention Martha and Mary; but thoſe who diſtinguiſh not between Mary ſiſter of Martha, and Mary Magdalen, ſay, that ſhe was preſent at the crucifixion of our Saviour, and went to his ſepulchre to embalm him. The Roman ordinal, apud Baron. an. 34. n. 182, and one Nicephorus, quoted by M. Cotelier, affirm, that Martha and Mary went to our Saviour's tomb to embalm him: but we find nothing of this in the ſacred authors.

The ancient Latins, and modern Greeks believe, that Mary and Martha remained at Jeruſalem, and died there. Several ancient martyrologies put their feaſt January 19. The Greeks put her feaſt March 18, becauſe of the perfumes ſhe poured that day on Jeſus Chriſt. John xi. xii.

VIII. MARY MAGDALEN, who has been confounded with Mary the ſiſter of Martha and Lazarus, but very improperly, was probably that ſinner mentioned by Luke, vii. 36, 37, &c. whoſe name he does not tell us. But circumſtances incline one to believe, that ſhe is that Mary Magdalen from whom Jeſus drove out ſeven devils, chap. viii. 2. Jeſus having healed the widow's ſon of Nain, entered into that city, and was there invited to eat by a phariſee named Simon. While he was at table, a woman of a ſcandalous life came into the houſe, having an alabaſter-box full of perfume; and ſtanding upright behind Jeſus, and at his feet, (for he was lying at table on a couch after the manner of the ancients,) ſhe poured her perfume on his feet, kiſſed them, watered them with her tears, and wiped them with her hair, &c.

In the following chapter St. Luke tells us, that Jeſus in company with his apoſtles, preached the goſpel from city to city; accompanied by ſeveral women, whom he had cured of their infirmities, among whom was Mary called Magdalene, out of whom went ſeven devils. I own this is no proof, that the ſinner mentioned before was Mary Magdalene; but this is all we can have for the ſupport of that opinion.

Mary Magdalene took her ſurname, either from the town of Magdala in Galilee, beyond Jordan, and not far from Gamala, Joſephus de vita ſua, p. 1007, probably the ſame mentioned Matth. xv. 39. or from Magdolos, a town on this ſide Jordan, at the foot of mount Carmel, the Megiddo of Joſhua xvii. 11. 2 Kings ix. 27. xxiii. 29. Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 159. The Rabbins ſpeak of a Mary Magdalene, wife of Rabbi Papus, ſon of Judah, and of another Mary Magdalene, wife of Hamchuna, the father of Nazareen, who was ſurnamed Magdala, not becauſe of her country, but becauſe by profeſſion ſhe was a tire-woman or ſeamſtreſs; as if it were inſinuated by the term Magdala, which ſignifies a tower, that Magdalene in preparing headdreſſes for the women, built as it were towers on their heads.

Lightfoot believes, Chronic. p. 23. & Horæ Hebraæ in Matth. xxvi. 56. p. 388. that it is this Mary Magdalene that St. Luke and the other evangeliſts geliſts ſpeak of, and whom this author does not diſtinguiſh from Mary the ſiſter of Lazarus. Magdalene is mentioned by the evangeliſts among the women who followed our Saviour, to miniſter to him, according to the cuſtom of the Jews. St. Luke viii. 2. and St. Mark xvi. 9. obſerve, that this woman had been delivered by Jeſus Chriſt from ſeven devils. This ſome underſtand literally: others figuratively, for the crimes and wickedneſſes of her paſt life. Others maintain, that ſhe had always lived in virginity, and conſequently was a different perſon from the ſinner mentioned by St. Luke, and by the ſeven devils of which ſhe was poſſeſſed, they underſtand a real poſſeſſion, which is not inconſiſtent with a recluſe life. She followed Chriſt in his laſt journey from Galilee to Jeruſalem, and was at the foot of the croſs with the holy Virgin. She continued on Mount Calvary till our Saviour's death, and ſaw him put into his tomb. After which ſhe returned to Jeruſalem, to prepare perfumes to embalm him after the ſabbath was over, John xix. 25. Mark xv. 47.

All the ſabbath day ſhe remained in the city, and the next day early in the morning ſhe went to the ſepulchre, with Mary the mother of James and Salome, Mark xvi. 1, 2. Luke xxiv. 1, 2. Being come to his tomb, they ſaw two angels, who informed them that Jeſus was riſen. On this, Mary Magdalene runs to Jeruſalem, to acquaint the apoſtles. Returning to the ſepulchre, and ſtooping forward to examine the inſide of the tomb, ſhe there ſaw two angels ſitting, one at the head, and the other at the bottom of the tomb. They aſked her, why ſhe wept? To which ſhe replied, They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. At the ſame time turning about, ſhe ſaw Jeſus Chriſt, who aſked her, what ſhe looked for? She anſwered, Sir, if you have removed my Maſter, let me know it, that I may take him away. Jeſus ſays to her, Mary! immediately ſhe knew him, and caſt herſelf at his feet, to kiſs them. But Jeſus ſaid to her, Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended to my father. q. d. You ſhall have leiſure to ſee me hereafter: go now to my brethren, my apoſtles, and tell them, I ſhall aſcend to my God, and to their God; to my Father, and to their Father. Thus had Mary the happineſs of firſt ſeeing our Saviour after his reſurrection. She returned then to Jeruſalem, and told the apoſtles that ſhe had ſeen the Lord. But they did not believe her, till her report was confirmed by other teſtimony.

This is what the goſpel informs us concerning Mary Magdalene, different from Mary the ſiſter of Martha, though ſhe has been often called by this name. There is a pretended hiſtory of Mary Magdalene, ſaid to have been written in Hebrew by Marcella, ſervant of Martha; but this can only relate to Mary ſiſter of Martha, and beſides, is a mere forgery. Modeſtus, apud Phot. cod. 275. archbiſhop of Conſtantinople, in the ſeventh century, ſays, that Mary Magdalene, from whom Jeſus had caſt out ſeven devils, went to Epheſus after the death of the Virgin Mary, and abode with St. John, as long as ſhe lived: and that ſhe there ended her life by martyrdom. Her acts were then in being, but they are not now. The commentary on St. Mark, aſcribed to St. Jerom, ſays, that Mary Magdalene was a widow. Gregory of Tours, as alſo Modeſtus, juſt cited, ſays, her tomb was at Epheſus, and had not then been opened. They had her relics in great reverence there, in 745, when Villebeaud paſſed that way. The Greek annals inſinuate, that ſhe died and was buried there. The emperor Leo the Wiſe, who began to reign A. D. 886, cauſed her relics to be brought from Epheſus to Conſtantinople. Codinus, who ſpeaks of this tranſlation, underſtands it of Mary ſiſter to Lazarus; but Cedrenus underſtands it of Magdalene.

MASCHIL, משכיל, that inſtructs.

MASCHIL. This term is found as a title in the Pſalms, and ſignifies he that inſtructs, or makes to underſtand. Some interpreters think, but without reaſon, that it ſignifies an inſtrument of muſic. Much more probably it ſignifies an inſtructive ſong. Some ancient Rabbins believe, that in repeating the Pſalms with this inſcription, they always added an explication to it. Some Fathers think, that the word intellectus, in Hebrew Maſchil, expreſſes the profound meaning of the Pſalm. Others on the contrary, that it ſhews the clearneſs and perſpicuity of the Pſalm, and that it needs no explication.

MASELOTH, Μασαλὼθ, parables, ſimilitudes, governments. A city, 1 Macc. ix. 2.

MASH, מש, μοσόχ, otherwiſe meſheck, 1 Chron. i. 17. He that takes away, or touches; from משש maſhaſh, to touch, to take away.

MASH, or Mes, fourth ſon of Aram, Gen. x. 23. called Meſhech, 1 Chron. i. 17. and Moſoch in the LXX. Bochart believes he inhabited Mount Maſius in Meſopotamia, and gave his name to the river Mazecha, whoſe ſource is there. Stephanus names the inhabitants of this diſtrict Maſieni, or Maſiani.

MASHAL, משל, μασὰλ, or Miſhal, 1 Chron. vi. 74. Parable, or he that governs.

MASHAL, Miſhal, or Maſal, a city of Aſher, yielded yielded to the Levites of the family of Gerſon, 1 Chron. vi. 74. Euſebius ſays, it was bordering on Mount Carmel near the ſea.

MASREKAH, משרקה, μασιωκᾶς, whiſtling or hiſſing; from שרק ſharak: otherwiſe, who touches vanity, or emptineſs; from משש maſhaſh, to touch, and רקק rakak, that brings to nothing: otherwiſe, vine; from שרק ſhorek.

MASREKAH, or Maſreca, captain or duke of Edom, ſucceſſor of Hadad, Gen. xxxvi. 36.

MASSA, משא, burden, or elevation; in a metaphorical ſenſe, unfortunate prophecy; from נשא naſha, to carry, to lift up.

MASSA, ſeventh ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 14. There is a city named Meſa in Arabia Petræa: alſo one named Meſada.

MASSA, מסה, Vulgate. Temptation; from נסה naſſah, temptation.

MASSA, or Maſſah, a Hebrew word ſignifying temptation. This name was given to the encampment of the Hebrews at Rephidim, when the people wanting water began to murmur againſt Moſes, and to tempt the Lord, as if they had doubted of his preſence among them, Ex. xvii. 2, 3, 4, &c.

MASSADA, a caſtle or fortreſs in the tribe of Judah, weſt of the Dead Sea, or the lake Aſphaltites, not far from Engedi, ſituated on a ſteep rock, and of very difficult acceſs. But at the top of the rock is a plain of ſufficient extent, which may be even cultivated, and afford ſubſiſtence. Jonathan the Aſmonean, brother of Judas Maccabæus, and high-prieſt of the Jews, fortified this place againſt the kings of Syria. Herod the Great fortified it anew, and made it impregnable. As it had no water, he cauſed ſeveral ciſterns to be made, and ſtored up there a vaſt quantity of proviſions, that if any misfortune ſhould happen to him, or if the country ſhould revolt, he might there find a retreat.

After the laſt war of the Jews againſt the Romans, Eleazar ſon of Jair, and grandſon of the famous Judas the Gaulonite, at the head of the Sicarii, or aſſaſſins, ſeized the fort of Maſſada. Flavius Sylva, whom Titus had left in Judæa, to reduce what yet held out in that province, beſieged Eleazar. He began by putting garriſons into all the neighbouring places, to ſecure the country, and ſurrounded the place with a wall of circumvallation, with bodies of guards at convenient diſtances, that no one might eſcape. Then he carried on the ſiege with great vigour, and works almoſt incredible. Eleazar defended himſelf very courageouſly, and ſeeing that he could hold out no longer againſt the Roman army, he perſuaded all the Jews that were with him to kill one another, and the laſt that ſurvived was to ſet fire to the caſtle. This counſel they put in execution, and voluntarily flew one another. Two women, who with five young children had hid themſelves in the aquæducts, the day following informed the Romans of what had been done. This happened A. D. 71.

MASSORA. This Hebrew word ſignifies tradition: derived from the verb מסר maſar, which ſignifies to give, preſent, or offer. Thoſe Hebrew doctors are called Maſſorites, who have fixed the reading of the ſacred text, by adding pointed vowels to it, and who made the notes in the margins of the printed Hebrew bibles; who have counted with moſt ſcrupulous exactneſs all the words, verſes, and letters of every book, that in following ages no further change might be made, and that the reading of the bible might be fixed for ever. As the Hebrews often write their words without vowels, a tradition from father to ſon, is their rule for reading certain conſonants, which have a variety of ſignifications, according to the nature of the vowel ſupplied. E. gr. theſe three letters, D B R, may be pronounced dabar—a word, or he ſpoke; daber,—death, or, the plague; dabir—a court; dabber, —ſpeak; daber, —he that ſpeaks: and ſo of others. As tradition teaches the Jews how to pronounce this word, in the ſeveral places in which it is found, in conſequence of this tradition, the Maſſorites invented pointed vowels, to fix the reading. For this reaſon they are called Maſſorites, and their work Maſſora, or tradition.

Theſe pointed vowels are inſtead of the real vowels where they are wanting, and they denote what ſound is to be given them, when they are in the text; and whether they are to be pronounced or not, whether long or ſhort, whether with a full ſound, or ſlightly. Theſe pointed vowels are commonly put under the letters, but ſometimes above. They are thirteen in all, five long, five ſhort, and three very ſhort. Vide the Hebrew grammars. It is an error to think, that the Hebrew tongue has no vowels; for it has its vowels as well as other languages, but they are not always marked in writing. See LETTERS.

The Maſſorites have alſo marked the accents, and the points. The accents ſerve for pronunciation, for ſinging, and reading of the words. The points ſerve for diſtinction of ſentences and verſes.

The Maſſorites have been exact in marking letters that are either deficient or redundant in the text; whether a word is writ in a regular manner; whether one letter be put for another; if it be larger, or ſhorter, or inverted, or ſuſpended.

For

For the Hebrews have ſuch a vaſt reſpect for the ſacred books, that they make a ſcruple of changing the ſituation of a letter, that is plainly out of its place. They incline to ſuppoſe that ſome myſtery has occaſioned the alteration. Their anceſtors it is very plain were not ſo ſcrupulous, ſince we find many miſtakes in the text, that could proceed only from the negligence or ignorance of tranſcribers.

Laſtly, when there are various readings of the text, or any palpable fault, they put the true reading in the margin, without daring to alter the text. That which is found in the text they call Chetib, i. e. written; what they put in the margin they call Keri, i. e. read or reading. q. d. "write in this manner, but read in that manner." For example, when they find certain words, they ſubſtitute others. Inſtead of the ſacred name Jehovah, they ſubſtitute Adonaï, or Elohim; and inſtead of certain terms not very decent, they pronounce others leſs indelicate, or more agreeable to good manners.

As to the Maſſorites, or authors of the Maſſora, and the age they lived in, and to the value of their performance, there is a great variety of ſentiments. Some have very much commended this undertaking, and have looked on the work of the Maſſorites as an admirable invention, to deliver the text from a multitude of equivocations and perplexities to which it was liable, to ſtop the unbounded licentiouſneſs and raſhneſs of tranſcribers and critics, who often made alterations in the text on their own private authority, according to their own underſtanding or humour. Others have blamed the deſign, ſuſpecting the Maſſorites corrupted the purity of the text, ſubſtituting inſtead of the ancient and true reading of their fathers, another reading more favourable to their prejudices, and more oppoſite to Chriſtianity, whoſe teſtimonies and proofs they would weaken as much as they could. This is very certain, that they often follow and authorize readings, very different from thoſe followed by the ancient Greek interpreters, who lived before Jeſus Chriſt. Sometimes they even depart from the reading of the Chaldee, which is the moſt ancient author of any that has interpreted the original text, in a language of near affinity to the Hebrew. Laſtly, it may be ſhewn, that the ancient Rabbins do not always agree with the Maſſorites. Whence it is eaſy to infer, that their tradition has not always been uniform, as to the manner of reading and interpreting the text, or that they have not been very faithful in repreſenting it to us in their Maſſora.

Some among the Jews pretend, that the Maſſora is derived even from Moſes; who communicated to the elders of Iſrael this manner of reading and explaining the ſacred text. Others refer it to Eſdras, and to the men of the great ſynagogue in his time. Others go no higher than to the beginning of the fifth century, and think the maſters of the ſchool at Tiberias were the authors of it. But it cannot be ſaid with reaſon, that Moſes was the author of the Maſſora of all the books of the Old Teſtament, ſince ſome of them were compoſed long after his time. Nor that by Eſdras the manner of reading and dividing the bible was fixed, ſince there have been many varieties in the readings, and in the explanation of it, for ſeveral ages after his time; in the LXX. for example, in Aquila, in Symmachus, and in Theodotion, who often differ from each other, only becauſe the manner of reading the text varied in their time. Nor was it ſettled in the time of Origen, or St. Jerom, as may be gathered from ſeveral paſſages of that father.

Moreover, Jerom, who lived in the fourth century, and died about A. D. 420, and who affirms expreſsly, that the manner of reading the Hebrew text was unfixed in his time, renders very ſuſpicious what the Rabbins would perſuade us, concerning the invention of the points by the doctors of Tiberias. The Talmud not being finiſhed according to ſome, (Rab. Gedalias, fol. 35. Abr. Levit. Tzemah David) till A. D. 500; according to others, (Abravanel. Præf. in Pirkeavoth Moſ. Ægypt. Præfat. in Jad. Chazakah) not till A. D. 645, furniſhes more proofs that the pointed vowels were not then in uſe. It never ſpeaks a word of them, though it had ſo many occaſions. It relates ſeveral hiſtories, which imply that the manner of reading the text was not determined. For example, Joab, general of the armies of David, returning from an expedition againſt the Amalekites, the king aſked him why he had not entirely exterminated that people? Joab anſwered, that he had fulfilled all that the Lord had commanded againſt Amalek, ſaying, deſtroy all the males of Amalek; in Hebrew Sacar: David inſiſted that it ought to be read Secher, exterminate the memory of Amalek. But Joab replied, that his maſter had always taught him to read Sacar. This narrative is a mere fable, but it ſufficiently proves, that the reading of the Hebrew was then unaſcertained.

They produce the book called Cozri, which contains a conference between king Cozar and ſome Jews, and in which the uſe of the pointed vowels is ſuppoſed as known. And it is ſaid there, that words compoſed of conſonants without vowels are like women undreſſed, who ought not to appear in public. It is pretended this conference was held A. D. 740, but the moſt able critics take both the book and the conference for a fable, and maintain this work called Cozri was compoſed at leaſt four hundred years after the ſeventh century: but nobody denies that then the points were in uſe.

The Jews have alſo commentaries on Scripture, which they call Midraſchim, compoſed ſince the Talmud, and which contain a multitude of grammatical obſervations, and niceties about letters and words, and the manners of reading and writing. But in theſe commentaries there is not a word of the pointed vowels, or of any of the labours of the Maſſorites. The book of the ſcribes, or Sopherim, which is alſo ſince the Talmud, (for the Talmud is there quoted as a work of antiquity, and as being univerſally approved) contains a vaſt number of particulars about the text and writing of the ſacred books. In this are ſhewn the nature, the qualities, the meaſure of the parchment, on which theſe books ought to be written; what ſpace ſhould be left between each line, how many words every line ſhould have, and how many lines ſhould be in every page; how many raſures will make a volume prophane, which letters ſhould be capitals, and ſuch like. In a word, this work contains even the moſt inconſiderable niceties relating to the text, and yet there is not a word about the points, or other obſervations of the Maſſorites.

Beſides, among the Jews are two other works, later than the above, i. e. The various lections of the Hebrew text, collected by the eaſtern and weſtern Jews. The weſtern Jews firſt began to collate the text from manuſcripts, to count the letters, to take notice of words, &c. This work having been communicated to the oriental Jews at Babylon, and beyond the Euphrates; they examined it, and in their turn compared their text with this manuſcript. They obſerved two hundred and ſixteen paſſages, in which their manuſcripts differed from thoſe of Jeruſalem. This difference produced two parties among them, the Jews of Jeruſalem, and thoſe of Babylon, each maintaining the fidelity of their manuſcripts and their text. This was about the end of the eighth century, or the beginning of the ninth. Neither ſide appealed to the authority of the Maſſorites, or to their remarks, which they would hardly have failed to have done, had they been then extant: ſo that there is great probability they were not then known.

But a little while afterwards, in the diſpute between the Rabbins Aaron-Ben-Aſer, chief of the weſtern ſchool, and Moſes-Ben-Naphtali, chief of the eaſtern ſchool; much mention is made of points, accents, and other obſervations about the manner of reading the words of Scripture: which gives room to conclude, that in this interval of an hundred years, between the years 840, in which the various readings of the weſtern Jews appeared, and 940, or perhaps 1030, in which flouriſhed the Rabbins Ben-Aſer, and Ben-Naphtali, that the Maſſorites began their work. But it was not preſently finiſhed: it required a conſiderable time to perfect it. As Aaron-Ben-Aſer preſided at the ſchool of Tiberias, this gave occaſion to ſay that the Maſſora took its origin from that city. Vide Exercitations of P. Morin, in Walton's Prolegomena, in Capellus's Arcanum punctuationis revelatum, in Buxtorf, &c.

Iſaac Voſſius affirms, that he has had in his hands more than two thouſand Hebrew manuſcripts, and that he ſaw none of them pointed, that were more than ſix hundred years old. He challenges all the partiſans of the pointed vowels, to produce any manuſcripts older than this, with the points of the Maſſorites. That if any of them are found pointed, it is eaſily diſcoverable, that the pointing has been added to the manuſcript. Laſtly, a convincing proof of the novelty of this invention is, that the copies of the bible kept in rolls in the ſynagogues, are to this day without points. Therefore, there is great probability, that this invention has been in uſe, only ſince the Jews began to have grammars of their language, which was but in the ninth century. Then to make the reading of Hebrew eaſy to beginners, they invented the pointed vowels, in order to aſcertain the reading.

MASSORITES, they imagined that they performed a very conſiderable ſervice to their nation, and religion, by counting even the very letters of their ſacred books. In Geneſis, for example, they found twelve great ſections, or Paraſchoth; forty-three orders, or Sedarim; fifteen hundred and thirty-four verſes, and ſeventy-eight thouſand one hundred letters. They diſtinguiſhed the degrees of certainty, which they attributed to their corrections, by three words: Keri, read; Chetib, write; and Sbbir, conjecture. When a reading in the text was manifeſtly corrupt, they ſubſtituted another: this was Chetib. If the word was one whoſe pronunciation they uſed to forbear out of reſpect, as Jehovah, they uſed another whoſe pronunciation was allowable, as Elohi, or Adonai. In like manner, if the word was indelicate, they put one more reſerved: this is Keri, read. Laſtly, if the reading was doubtful, they marked it Sbbir, or conjecture.

Heretofore all theſe remarks were put at the end of of bibles; but now they are placed in the margin. Vide POINTED VOWELS, and the foregoing article.

II. MATTANIAH, or Mathanias, otherwiſe Zedekiah, king of Judah. See ZEDEKIAH.

III. MATTANIAH, or Mathanian, ſon of Heman a Levite, 1 Chron. xxv. 4.

MATTATHAH, מתתה, Vulg. Mathata, his gift; from מתת mathath, a gift, and the pronoun ה a, his.

I. MATTATHA, or Mathata, ſon of Nathan, and father of Menan, anceſtor of Jeſus Chriſt, Luke iii. 31.

II. MATTATHA, ſon of Haſhum, one who at the return from the Babyloniſh captivity put away his ſtrange wife, Ezr. x. 33.

MATTATHIAS, מתתיה, ματταθίας, gift of the Lord; from mathath, a gift, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. MATTATHIAS, ſon of John, of the family of Joarib, and of the race of the prieſts, made himſelf very famous during the perſecution by Antiochus Epiphanes, 1 Mac. ii. 1, 2, &c. He was at Jeruſalem when Apollonius arrived there, with the wicked orders of Antiochus. Mattathias retired to Modin, his own country, to let this tempeſt blow over, or, expecting there, till God ſhould give occaſions of ſignalizing his zeal for religion and his country, A. M. 3837, ante A. D. 167. Mattathias was not there long, before the officers ſent by king Antiochus came thither, to compel the people of Modin to renounce the law of God. Several complied; but Mattathias and his ſons ſtedfaſtly refuſed, and when they came to urge him to ſacrifice, becauſe he was the chief man of the city, he lifted up his voice and declared, that though all the nations of the world, and the whole people of Judah, ſhould obey Antiochus, he alone would never obey him in a thing of this nature. And when he had ended ſpeaking, a certain Jew advancing to ſacrifice to idols before the whole aſſembly, Mattathias was ſo tranſported with grief, indignation, and zeal, that he killed him, even on the altar on which he was going to offer incenſe. At the ſame time he ſlew the officers ſent by the king, to compel the people to ſacrifice; and having overthrown the altar, he cried out—"Whoever is zealous for the law, and will continue firm in the covenant of the Lord, let him follow me."

Mattathias had five ſons, Joannan called Caddis, or Gaddis, Simon ſurnamed Thaſſi, Judas called Maccabeus, Eleazar called Avaran, Avaron, or Abaron, and Jonathan ſurnamed Apphus. He retired into the mountains with his five ſons, and was followed by many Iſraelites, who withdrew from the perſecution, chuſing rather to forſake all their ſubſtance, than the law of their God. The king's officers and troops at Jeruſalem having heard of the oppoſition of Mattathias, and the other Jews of Modin, marched immediately againſt them, deſigning to attack them on the Sabbath day. This deſign they executed on the poor Iſraelites, who ſuffered themſelves to be maſſacred without reſiſtance, becauſe they would not violate the repoſe of the Sabbath. Mattathias being informed of this, made a great mourning for it, and calling his ſons and friends together, they deliberated on this matter, and they came to a reſolution of defending themſelves on the Sabbath day.

Mattathias and his ſons joined the Aſſideans, the moſt religious and moſt valiant of Iſrael. They fell on the apoſtates of Iſrael, killed a great number of them, and drove the reſt for ſhelter among the infidels. After this, Mattathias marched through the country, deſtroying the altars dedicated to falſe gods, circumciſed the children that had not received circumciſion, humbled the children of pride, and delivered the law from its ſubjection to ſtrangers, and from the power of the king.

Mattathias apprehending that the time of his death drew near, he called his ſons together, and obſerved to them, that the kingdom of pride was ſtrengthened, that this was a time of correction and ruin, of wrath and indignation. "Therefore, my children," continued he, "be truly zealous for the law, and ſacrifice your lives for the covenant of your anceſtors, &c."

After this he bleſſed them, and was gathered to his fathers. He was buried at Modin in the ſepulchre of his family, and all Iſrael made a great mourning for him. He had not been above one year at the head of the people. Some have pretended, that Mattathias had been high-prieſt of the Jews: they found their opinion on his deciſion, that in caſe of neceſſity they might fight on the Sabbath day. But his deciſion is not ſufficient to prove this. Beſides, Menelaus and Alcimus were then alive, and though they were intruders and very wicked men, yet they were high-prieſts.

II. MATTATHIAS, ſon of Simon Maccabæus, and grandſon of Mattathias. He was killed treacherouſly with his father and one of his brethren, by Ptolemy, ſon-in-law of Simon, in the caſtle of Docus. 1 Mac. xvi. 14, 15, 16.

MATTENAI, מתני, my gift, my offering.

MATTENAI, or Mathanai, ſon of Haſhum, Ezra x. 33.

MATTHAN. See MATTAN.

MATTHAT, Ματθὰν, gift, or he that gives; from נתן nathan, to give.

MATTHAT, or Mathat, ſon of Levi, and father of Heli. This Heli is probably the ſame as Joachim, father of the virgin Mary. Luke iii. 24.

MATTHEW, Ματθαῖος, given; from מתת mathath, a gift.

MATTHEW. St. An apoſtle and Evangeliſt, was ſon of Alpheus, a Galilean by birth, a Jew by religion, and a Publican by profeſſion. (Vide PUBLICAN.) Mark ii. 14. Luke v. 27. The other evangeliſts call him only Levi, which was his Hebrew name; but he calls himſelf always Matthew, which probably was his name as a publican, or officer for gathering taxes. He does not diſſemble his former profeſſion, that he may the more exalt the grace of Jeſus Chriſt, which raiſed him to the apoſtleſhip. His ordinary abode was at Capernaum, and his office was out of the town, at the ſea of Tiberias, which was near. Here he was when called by Jeſus Chriſt to follow him. Matt. ix. 9. Mark ii. 14. Luke v. 27.

Porphyry, and Julian the emperor, accuſe St. Matthew of inconſiderateneſs, in raſhly following a man whom he knew nothing of. But St. Jerom anſwers, that it is very probable St. Matthew had a previous knowledge of the miracles and doctrine of Jeſus Chriſt, whom he might have heard preach. Beſides, the brightneſs of the divinity of our Saviour, though concealed under his humanity, was capable of drawing to him at once, all thoſe who had but a glimpſe of it. St. Auſtin ſays, that on this occaſion St. Matthew found himſelf livelily touched by an inward attraction, which determined him gently and agreeably, but powerfully and irreſiſtibly.

St. Matthew invited our Saviour to eat at his houſe. Jeſus came with his diſciples, when ſeveral publicans, with other perſons of St. Matthew's acquaintance, ſat down to eat with him, Matt. ix. 10, 11, &c. The Phariſees obſerving this, ſaid to our Saviour's diſciples, 'Why does your maſter eat with publicans and ſinners?' Jeſus, hearing them, made anſwer, "Not the ſound, but the ſick have need of the phyſician." This is all that the Goſpel acquaints us with concerning St. Matthew.

What the Scripture ſays, that he was ſon of Alpheus, has given occaſion to ſome ancients, (Chryſoſt. in Matt. Homil. 33. p. 381. Theodoret. in Pſal. lxvii. 28, p. 659. vid. Bolland, 21 Maii, p. 19,) and all the modern Greeks, to ſay, that he was brother of James, ſon of Alpheus, or James the Leſs, otherwiſe named the brother of our Lord; but this is not probable. See CLEOPHAS and ALPHEUS. He was an apoſtle the ſame year he was converted, and, conſequently, he was called to the apoſtleſhip the firſt year of the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt. He is ſometimes named the ſeventh among the apoſtles, and ſometimes the eighth.

Clemens Alexandrinus, Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 1. ſays, he abſtained from eating fleſh, and that his diet was fruits, roots, and herbs. The moſt general opinion of both ancients and moderns is, that he preached and ſuffered martyrdom in Perſia, or among the Parthians, or in Carmania, which then was ſubject to the Parthians. Rufinus, Socrates, the counterfeit Obadiah, and ſeveral others, affirm that he preached and died in Ethiopia. Clemens Alexandrinus, lib. iv. Strom. quotes Heracleon, racleon, a diſciple of Valentine, ſaying, that St. Matthew departed out of this world by a natural death; and this the menology of Baſil, and ſome Greek authors, ſeem to follow. But other Greek authors ſay ſometimes, that he ended his life by fire. Nicephorus ſays, that having by his prayers extinguiſhed the fire that was lighted round him, he gave up the ghoſt in tranquillity. Adon and other Latin writers ſay, he died by martyrdom; and Obadiah, an author of little credit, ſays, that Hyrtacus, king of Ethiopia, brother and ſucceſſor of Æglippus, deſired to marry Iphigenia, the daughter of the king his brother, who had already been conſecrated to God; the apoſtle repreſenting to him, that he could not do this without being guilty of a great crime, the prince ſent one of his officers, who beheaded him. Afterwards he endeavoured to burn Iphigenia in her houſe, but the flames were driven by a violent wind againſt Hyrtacus's own houſe, and entirely conſumed it.

The Latin church celebrates the feaſt of St. Matthew September 21, on which day it is marked in Bede, and in the Sacramentary of St. Gregory. The Martyrologies of St. Jerom, which place it on the ſame day, mark it alſo October 7, and May 6, on which the Roman Martyrology now celebrates the tranſlation of his body. We are aſſured that it was tranſported from Ethiopia to Bretany, or to Bithynia, and from thence to Salernum in Naples, A. D. 954, where it was found A. D. 1080; duke Robert there built a large church bearing his name, where his body was put in the time of Gregory VII.

Some of the ancients, as Clemens Alexandrinus, and Origen, and ſome of the moderns, as Grotius, diſtinguiſh St. Matthew from Levi ſon of Alpheus, mentioned Mark ii. 14, Luke v. 27. Theſe are their reaſons: 1. St. Matthew is never named Levi, nor Levi Matthew, in the New Teſtament. 2. Heracleon, cited by Clemens Alexandrinus, ſpeaks of St. Matthew and Levi as of two different perſons, and Clemens by not refuting this opinion, does as good as concur in it. 3. Origen writing againſt Celſus, ſays that Levi the publican, who followed Jeſus Chriſt, is not of the number of the apoſtles, but only according to ſome copies of the goſpel of St. Mark, and indeed ſome copies of St. Mark, and among others the Cambridge manuſcript, read Mark ii. 14. Jeſus ſaw James, ſon of Alpheus. Others read, he ſaw Matthew the publican, inſtead of Levi the publican, as in the Vulgate, in moſt of the Greek manuſcripts, and in all the printed books. Grotius ſays, that Levi might be the head of the office, and Matthew one of the clerks, or ſubordinate officers; and that the feaſt at which our Lord was preſent might be in Levi's houſe, and not in Matthew's.

But can theſe reaſons be ſufficient to invalidate ſo ancient an opinion, ſo well grounded, and ſo univerſally received by the church? The particular opinion of Heracleon, the doubt of Origen, the ſilence of Clemens, the reading of a few manuſcripts, ought they to overthrow the authority of all other copies, printed or manuſcript, againſt the conſent of all other fathers, and of all eccleſiaſtical writers from the apoſtles to our time? Add, that Origen himſelf, in the preface to his commentary on the epiſtle to the Romans, and in a fragment quoted in the Catena on St. Matthew, confirms the general opinion. Add alſo, that M. Cotelier, and Dodwell, believe, that Levi diſtinguiſhed from St. Matthew by Heracleon, is not Levi the publican, but Lebbeus, who is St. Thaddeus the apoſtle.

St. Matthew wrote his goſpel before he departed from Judæa; the believers in Paleſtine having deſired him to leave in writing what he had taught them while preſent. Some fathers tell us, that he was alſo deſired to do this by the apoſtles. He wrote it at Jeruſalem in the Hebrew or Syriac language, then common in Judæa. It is thought he began this work about A. D. 41, the eighth year after our Saviour's reſurrection. Almoſt all the old Greek manuſcripts have it thus at the end of his Goſpel. The author of the unfiniſhed commentary on St. Matthew, followed by Baronius and Cornelius à lapide, pretends that he wrote it on occaſion of the diſperſion of the apoſtles, after the death of St. Stephen, about the third or fourth year after the reſurrection. Iræneus thinks, that he compoſed it while St. Peter and St. Paul were preaching at Rome, about A. D. 61. But if it be true, as is commonly believed, that St. Matthew was the firſt who committed the Goſpel to writing, and that St. Mark made his abridgment of it about A. D. 43, it follows plainly, that it muſt be placed before the year 61.

The Hebrew or rather Syriack Goſpel of St. Matthew, Chaldaico Syroque ſermone, ſed Hebraicis literis ſcriptum, as St. Jerom ſpeaks, lib. iii. adv. Pel. cap. 1. was long in uſe among the Jewiſh converts to Chriſtianity: and when they retired to Pella, before the Romans beſieged Jeruſalem, they carried it with them. From thence this goſpel was diffuſed into Decapolis, and the countries on the other ſide Jordan, where the Judaizing Chriſtians uſed it in the time of Epiphanius and of Euſebius of Cæſarea. Epiphan. hæreſ. 29. cap. 7. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 25. Nevertheleſs, theſe Chriſtians did not pre-ſerve this ſacred truſt with due fidelity, but added to it ſeveral particulars, which perhaps they might have heard from the apoſtles, or from their diſciples; which at firſt made it ſuſpected by other believers. Afterwards the Ebionites corrupted it by additions or omiſſions favourable to their own errors, ſo that it was given up by other churches, which perſevered in ſound doctrine, and adhered to the ancient Greek verſion, made from the Hebrew or Syriac, a little after St. Matthew's time.

In Origen's time the Hebrew goſpel of the Judaizing Chriſtians was no longer eſteemed authentic; Euſebius puts it among the ſpurious writings, and extracts from it among the ancient fathers, very different from the preſent Greek, ſufficiently prove it was corrupted. As examples, It was there mentioned, that the man to whom Chriſt ſaid, Go, ſell all that thou haſt, give it to the poor, and follow me;—went his way, ſcratching his head, Orig. in Matt. Hom. iii. ed. Lat. Clemens Alexandrinus, lib. i. Stromat. quotes from the ſame goſpel, He that will admire, ſhall reign, and he that ſhall reign ſhall be at reſt. And this, lib. v. Strom. My ſecret belongs to me, and to thoſe of my houſe. Origen, on John. tom. ii. makes Jeſus Chriſt ſay, according to this Hebrew goſpel, My mother the Holy Ghoſt has taken me by one of my hairs, and has ſet me upon the high mountain of Tabor. In the Hebrew, ruach, which ſignifies ghoſt or ſpirit, is of the feminine gender; from whence he ſays, My mother the Holy Ghoſt. Elſewhere it was read, that the Holy Ghoſt ſpeaking to Jeſus Chriſt, after his baptiſm by John, ſaid thus, My ſon, I expected thy coming in all the prophets; thou art my well beloved ſon, who reigneſt eternally. And again, The mother of Jeſus and his brethren ſaid to him, there is John who baptizes for the remiſſion of ſins, let us go and be baptized by him. But he anſwered them, what evil have I committed, that I have occaſion to be baptized by him? If even this that I have now ſaid be not perhaps a ſin of ignorance.

The Hebrew goſpel of St. Matthew, though corrupted by the Ebionites, continued in purity in the hands of the Nazarenes, or the firſt believers of Paleſtine. There were ſome of theſe Nazarenes remaining to the time of St. Jerom, (on Iſai. viii. 9. xxix. 20. xxxi. 6.) who does not reproach them with any error like that of the Ebionites. They made no defalcations from the goſpel, and rejected with contempt the traditions of the Phariſees, though otherwiſe very zealous for the obſervance of the law.

The true Hebrew goſpel of St. Matthew, is no longer in being, ſo far as can be diſcovered; for thoſe printed by Sebaſtian Munſter, and du Tillet, are only modern, tranſlated into Hebrew from the Latin or Greek. Others have maintained, that the Syriac goſpel of St. Matthew, which is printed by itſelf; and in the Polyglots, was the original of St. Matthew. But they who have carefully examined this matter obſerve, that this tranſlation is from the Greek. See Mill's Prolegomena.

Our Greek verſion of St. Matthew's goſpel, which paſſes for the original, was made even in the apoſtolical times. The tranſlator is unknown. Some aſcribe it to St. Matthew himſelf, others to St. James the Leſs, biſhop of Jeruſalem, Athanaſ. ſeu alius addit. ad Synop. others to St. John the evangeliſt, Theophyl. præf. in Matth. or to St. Paul, or to St. Luke, Anaſtaſ. Suait. Serm. viii. in Gen. or to St. Barnabas, Papias in Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. iii. cap. 39. ſays, that many joined to tranſlate it into Greek. The Latin tranſlation was made from the Greek, and is almoſt as ancient as the Greek itſelf. But the author of it is equally unknown, and it is impoſſible to trace either the time or occaſion of it.

Some moderns have thought fit to doubt of what we have advanced, according to the teſtimony of all the ancients, that St. Matthew wrote his goſpel in Hebrew characters, and in the Hebrew language; i. e. in Syriac, with a mixture of Hebrew and Chaldee. They maintain, (1) that St. Matthew wrote it in Greek, and that what is ſaid of the pretended original Hebrew is a fiction, or is ill underſtood. (2) The fathers, as Origen, Epiphanius, and Jerom, do not directly aſſert it; they quote it indeed, but as a book of no authority, which they would not have done had they been convinced, that this was the genuine original of St. Matthew's goſpel. (3) If the church had ever entertained this notion of it, would they have ſuffered it to have been loſt? (4) If St. Matthew had wrote in Hebrew, ſhould we have ſeen in this work the Hebrew names interpreted into Greek? Would he have cited the Old Teſtament according to the LXX. as he has always done? The Greek language was then very common in Paleſtine, in all the Eaſt, in the whole Roman empire, and in Rome itſelf. St. Paul writes to the Romans in Greek; St. Peter and St. James write in the ſame language to the Jews diſperſed through the Eaſtern provinces; and St. Paul to the Hebrews of Paleſtine. (5) Since all the other authors of the New Teſtament wrote in Greek, why muſt St. Matthew alone write his goſpel in Hebrew?—But it is not difficult to anſwer theſe reaſons.

1. The uniform teſtimony of the ancients, who aſſert aſſert that St. Matthew wrote his goſpel in Hebrew, is certainly of very great weight. They did not ſpeak at random; they had ſeen and had conſulted this goſpel, as written in that language. It is true, they have not always ſpoken of it in a ſimple and uniform manner, but that was becauſe there were two goſpels, one pure and uncorrupted, of which they have ſpoken with eſteem; the other depraved by heretics, which they have condemned.

2. However common the Greek tongue might be, yet it is certain, the generality of the Jews ſpoke commonly Syriac and Chaldee, mixed with Hebrew words. This may be ſeen even by the goſpel itſelf, which has preſerved ſome Hebrew words pronounced by Jeſus Chriſt, and which are not taken notice of as any ſingularity, from whence it might be concluded it was not familiar to him: on the contrary it appears, that it was his ordinary language. And when St. Paul was ſeized in the temple, Acts xxi. 40. xxii. 2. he deſired to ſpeak to the Jewiſh populace, and made a ſpeech to them in Hebrew.

3. The Hebrew names interpreted in Greek, in this goſpel of St. Matthew, prove the direct contrary from what they would infer from them. For this demonſtrates that the tranſlation was Greek, and that the original was in Hebrew.

4. It is not true, that St. Matthew quotes ſcripture according to the LXX. Of ten paſſages of the Old Teſtament that he has cited, ſeven of them approach nearer to the Hebrew than to the LXX. and only three agree with them: but in theſe paſſages the Seventy and the Hebrew agree. St. Jerom maintains in general, that this evangeliſt follows the Hebrew in his quotations. But it is plain that commonly he quotes by memory, and relates not ſo much the words as the ſenſe of the paſſages.

5. Though St. Paul, St. Peter, and St. James wrote in Greek to the Jews of Paleſtine, and to thoſe in the Eaſt, it cannot follow but that St. Matthew might write in Hebrew. We do not affirm that he was obliged to write in this language, we only inquire whether he really did or no? But this fact is atteſted by the ancients, many of whom had ſeen his original, and were very capable of judging of it; particularly Origen, Euſebius, and St. Jerom. To account how this ancient goſpel has been loſt, cannot be expected: but it is eaſy to conceive, that having been groſsly corrupted by the Ebionites, it might fall into contempt, and then, by degrees, into oblivion. The Greek tranſlation was valued and preſerved, becauſe it retained its primitive integrity, and is now become as authentic as the original.

St. Matthew in his goſpel had chiefly in view, according to St. Auſtin, lib. i. de Conſenſ. Evang. vide & Theophyl. proæm. in Matth. to manifeſt the royal deſcent of Jeſus Chriſt, and to repreſent the life of his humanity, in his converſation among men. St. Ambroſe obſerves, that no evangeliſt enters ſo far into particulars of the actions of Jeſus Chriſt, as St. Matthew, or has given us ſo many rules for the conduct of life, ſo many leſſons of morality ſuitable to our neceſſities, and to the deſign of Chriſt. Petrus Damianus ſays, that St. Matthew holds the ſame place among the evangeliſts, as Moſes does among the authors of the Old Teſtament; having been the firſt writer of the new law, as Moſes was of the old. When he began to write, the great queſtion among the Jews was, whether Jeſus Chriſt was the Meſſiah, or no? St. Matthew undertakes to demonſtrate it. He ſhews by his miracles that he was the Chriſt, that Mary his mother was a virgin, that Jeſus was not come to deſtroy the law but to accompliſh it, that his miracles were no magical operations, nor the effects of human power, but inconteſtable proofs of the power of God, and of the miſſion of Jeſus Chriſt.

If we compare St. Matthew with the three other evangeliſts, we may obſerve a pretty remarkable difference in the order and ſucceſſion of the actions of the life of our Saviour, from chapter iv. 22. to chapter xiv. 13. This diverſity has perplexed chronologers and interpreters. Some have pretended that St. Matthew has followed the order of time, and that we ought to abide by his narration. Others have ſubmitted to the authority of the three other evangeliſts; and in truth it is more natural to aſſent to the teſtimony of three witneſſes, than to that of one; and eſpecially ſince St. Mark forſakes him in this, who is uſed to follow him in other things. Some have imputed to mere chance this want of order in St. Matthew; others to choice and deſign. However this matter be, it can be no prejudice to the truth of the facts, which are the eſſential part of the goſpel; and as to the order of time, the ſacred authors are not always ſolicitous about it.

There are certain apocryphal works imputed to St. Matthew, as the book of the infancy of Jeſus Chriſt, condemned by pope Gelaſius. The Ebionites alſo fathered ſome writings on this apoſtle: they had mangled his Hebrew goſpel: they aſcribed to him alſo an Ethiopic liturgy. The Ebionites, the Cerinthians, and other heretics, quoted the goſpel of St. Matthew under the name of "The goſpel according to the Hebrews." It is alſo probable that this was the goſpel known by the name of The goſpel of the Twelve Apoſtles,

The

The goſpel of the Nazarenes, and The goſpel according to St. Peter. Euſebius relates, that Pantenus a Chriſtian philoſopher, who lived at Alexandria about A.D. 184, found in the Indies a goſpel of St. Matthew, which was ſaid to have been carried thither by St. Bartholomew. St. Jerom, de Vir Illuſ. cap. 36. and Rufinus ſay, that he brought it to Alexandria. The ſame St. Jerom ſays, that there was a copy of the Hebrew text of St. Matthew in the library of Cæſarea in Paleſtine. In the third century Count Joſeph found at Tiberias an Hebrew copy of St. Matthew, in a private place, where the Jews kept alſo the goſpel of St. John, and the Acts of the Apoſtles, tranſlated from Greek into Hebrew. Epiphan. hæreſ. 30. n. 6. Ου μεν ἀλλὰ καὶ το κατα Ματθαῖον Ἑβραϊκὸν φυτὸν, &c. Non Genealogiam, Hebraicam, ut vult Petavius, ſed genuinum opus Matthæi nativ. linguâ, non è Græco verſum, ut errant Evangel. Joan. & Act. Apoſt.

The Mahometans maintain, that St. Matthew wrote his goſpel at Alexandria; but the oriental Chriſtians ſay only, that St. Bartholomew carried the goſpel of St. Matthew into Egypt, and thence into Ethiopia. Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria ſays, that St. John the evangeliſt, beſides his own goſpel that he wrote, tranſlated alſo that of St. Matthew out of Hebrew into Greek: [which is not impoſſible.]

MATTHIAS, Ματθίας, an abridgment of Mattathias; which ſee before.

I. MATTHIAS, the Apoſtle, was firſt in the rank of our Saviour's diſciples, and one of thoſe who continued with him from his baptiſm to his aſcenſion. Acts i. 21, 22. It is very probable he was of the number of the Seventy, as Clemens Alexandrinus, and other ancients inform us, lib. iv. Strom. p. 488. Beda Retract. in Act. tom. vi. p. 3. Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. i. cap. 2. Epiphan. de Chriſto, cap. 4. We have no particulars of his youth or education, for we may reckon as nothing what is read in Abdias (or Obadiah) concerning this matter. After the aſcenſion of our Lord, the apoſtles retiring to Jeruſalem in expectation of the effuſion of the Holy Ghoſt, as had been promiſed, Peter ſtood up in the midſt of the brethren, and propoſed to fill up the place of Judas: to this the diſciples agreed. Then they preſented two perſons, Joſeph called Barſabas, and ſurnamed Juſtus; and Matthias. The lot falling on Matthias, he was from that time aſſociated to the eleven apoſtles.

The Greeks believe that St. Matthias preached and died at Colchis. His life was publiſhed by a monk of St. Matthias of Treves, who ſays he had the original Hebrew from a Jew, who explained it to him in the vulgar tongue: in the twelfth century. Vide apud Bolland. loco citato, p. 441, &c.

This life expreſſes, that St. Matthias was of Bethlehem, of the tribe of Judah, of an illuſtrious family; that in his youth he was well inſtructed by an excellent man called Simeon, that after Pentecoſt he had Paleſtine for his diſtrict, where he preached with great ſucceſs, and did many miracles. That thirty-three years after our Lord's paſſion, Ananus the younger having put to death James the Leſs at Jeruſalem, St. Matthias at the ſame time was apprehended in Galilee, and brought before Ananus, who ſeeing him perſiſt in confeſſing Chriſt, he condemned him to be ſtoned. This was preſently executed upon him, and afterwards his head was cut off. But this hiſtory is not regarded as authentic, and many of the learned look on it as a pious fable. The Greeks place his feaſt Auguſt 9, the Latins February 24.

The ancient heretics have trumped up a falſe goſpel of St. Matthias, and the fathers have mentioned it only to reject it.

II. MATTHIAS, ſon of Theophilus, high-prieſt of the Jews, ſucceeded Simon ſon of Boëthus, A.M. 3999, and four years before A.D. He was high-prieſt but one year. His ſucceſſor was Joazar, ſon of his predeceſſor Simon. Herod the Great depoſed Matthias, becauſe he thought him engaged in the confederacy with Matthias ſon of Margaloth, and Judas ſon of Saripheus, who pulled down from over the gate of the temple the golden eagle that prince had ſet up. Joſephus relates, Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 8, that Matthias happening to have a pollution the night before the day of the ſolemn expiation, he commiſſioned Joſeph the ſon of Ellem his kinſman in his place, to exerciſe the office of high-prieſt for that day only. Vide JOSEPH.

III. MATTHIAS, ſon of Ananus, high-prieſt of the Jews, ſucceeded Simon Cantharus A.M. 4044, A.D. 41. He had for ſucceſſor Ælioneus, ſon of Citheus, A.M. 4045, having held this dignity but one year.

IV. MATTHIAS, ſon of Theophilus, high-prieſt of the Jews, ſucceeded Jeſus, ſon of Gamaliel, A.M. 4068, A.D. 65. He was depoſed three years afterwards, to make way for Phannias, ſon of Samuel, the laſt high-prieſt of this nation; under whom the temple was taken and burnt by the Romans, A.D. 70. Under Matthias the war broke out between the Jews and the Romans. Matthias perſuaded the people to let Simon Gioras come into Jeruſalem, to ſet him up againſt John, and by that means to balance his power. But

Simon

Simon ſeeing himſelf maſter of the city, ſoon forgot his obligations to Matthias, and put him to death, with three of his ſons, without a hearing: for they were accuſed of being in the intereſt of the Romans. Joſephus de Bello Judaico, lib. v. cap. 33.

V. MATTHIAS, or Mattathias, a Jew, of the party of the Macedonians, or of the Syrians; ſent by Nicanor to Judas Maccabæus, with propoſals of peace. The name Matthias is an abridgement of Matthanias, or Matthathias, which ſignifies the gift of God. 2 Macc. xiv. 19. A. M. 3843, ante A. D. 161.

MATTHITHIAH, מתתיה, ματταθίας, gift of the Lord. See MATTATHIAS.

I. MATTHITHIAH, or Mathatias, ſon of Shellum, of the race of Korah, head of the fourteenth family of the Levites, 1 Chron. xxv. 21.

II. MATTHITHIAH, or Matthathias, ſon of Nebo; he ſeparated himſelf from his ſtrange wife, Ezra x. 43.

MAUZZIM. מחוזים, the ſtrength, or the fortified; from עז hazar, ſtrong, or powerful: or fortreſſes; from מעז mahoz.

MAXIMIANOPOLIS, a city of Paleſtine; the ſame as Hadad-Rimmon, in the valley of Jezreel, and in the country of Megiddo. An ancient traveller places it ſeventeen miles from Cæſarea, and ten from Jezreel. Hieronym. ad Zach. xii. & ad Hoſea i.

MEARAH, מערה, σιδόνιοι, or Maara-Sidoniorum, cavern; from מער mahar: otherwiſe, he that diſcovers himſelf, or ſpreads himſelf; from ערה harah: or that awakes; from עור hur.

MEARAH, or Maara, of the Sidonians, Joſh. xiii. 4. Some underſtand it of a city, others of a cave, or a meadow, in the country of the Sidonians. But it is better to underſtand it, with Junius, of the river Magoras, which falls into the Mediterranean ſea, between Sidon and Berytus. The Hebrew word Mearah, or Maara, may very eaſily be pronounced Magora. Plin. lib. v. cap. 18.

MEASURE. We ſhall give a general table of the weights, meaſures, and money, of the Hebrews. Beſide which ſee the particular names of each. Shekel, Talent, Bath, Ephah, &c.

MEN OF MEASURE, of extraordinary ſtature, proceræ ſtaturæ, as St. Jerom tranſlates: Numb. xiii. 33. אנשי מדות. Thou feedeſt them with the bread of tears, and giveſt them tears to drink in great meaſure. Heb. in three meaſures, Thou ſhalt drink alſo water by meaſure ſcantily: Ezek. iv. 11. Vide Judith. vii. 11. The ſcant meaſure is abominable, Mic. vi. 10. Heb. an ephah. The ephah was a meaſure of capacity.

Our Saviour ſays, John iii. 34. that God giveth not the Spirit by meaſure, i. e. to his Son, whereas to others he giveth it by meaſure, as St. Paul ſays, Rom. xii. 3. According as God hath dealt to every man the meaſure of faith. And Epheſ. iv. 7. But unto every one of us is given grace, according to the meaſure of the gift of Chriſt. And 2 Cor. x. 13. But we will not boaſt of things without our meaſure, but according to the meaſure of the rule which God hath diſtributed to us, a meaſure to reach even unto you. And Epheſ. iv. 13. Till we all come—unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fullneſs of Chriſt. Till we all arrive at the meaſure of the age of the fullneſs of Jeſus Chriſt. Many have thought that the age of the fullneſs of Jeſus Chriſt was the age at which he died, and that the dead ſhall ariſe at that age. St. Jerom ſays, this was the tradition of the churches. Others underſtand it of that perfection, at which we ought to endeavour, i. e. to form in ourſelves Jeſus Chriſt in a perfect age: a mature, complete, full ſtature.

Iſaiah ſays, xxviii. 17. Judgment alſo will I lay to the line, and righteouſneſs to the plummet. God will proportion his corrections according to the greatneſs of ſins; and when crimes are exceſſive, he will break the criminals to pieces with the weight of his judgments, and juſtice. And Iſa. xxvii. 8. In meaſure when it ſhooteth forth thou wilt debate with it. God has rejected the enemies of his people, and has judged and puniſhed them with a full and ſuperabundant meaſure.

MEATS. The Hebrews had ſeveral kinds of animals which they refuſed to eat. Vide ANIMALS. Among domeſtic animals they only ate the cow, the ſheep, and the goat. Alſo the hen and the pigeon, among domeſtic birds: beſides ſeveral kinds of wild animals. To eat the fleſh with the blood was forbid them, much more to eat the blood without the fleſh. We may form a judgment of their taſte by what the ſcripture mentions of Solomon's table, 1 Kings iv. 22, 23. Thirty meaſures of the fineſt wheat-flour were provided for it every day, and twice as much of the ordinary ſort; twenty ſtall-fed oxen, twenty paſture-oxen, an hundred ſheep, beſides the veniſon of deer, roebucks, does, and wild-fowl. The lamb and kid were eſteemed delicious. Rebekah prepared ſome for Iſaac, to procure his bleſſing for Jacob. Moſes appointed it for the feaſt of the paſſover. Manoah offered a boiled kid to the angel, who foretold the birth of Samſon. Samſon carried a kid to his wife to make a reconciliation between them.

It does not appear that the ancient Hebrews were very nice about the ſeaſoning and dreſſing of their food. We find among them roaſt-meat, boiled-boiled-meat, and ragouts. They roaſted the paſchal lamb; meats that were offered were boiled in a pot; for the ſons of Eli the high-prieſt took fleſh out of the pots of thoſe who offered ſacrifices, ſaying they would have it raw, that they might dreſs it to their own palates, 1 Sam. ii. 15. Rebekah made a ragout, or ſtewed meat, for Iſaac, and ſerved it up to him in the manner ſhe knew he loved, Gen. xxvii. 4, 14. Salt was the only ſeaſoning that I can find ordered, in the meat prepared in the temple. The greater part of our preſent ſpices, were unknown to the ancient Hebrews. At this day in Paleſtine they uſe honey in many of their ragouts: oil, and perhaps ſome aromatic herbs, were alſo added. The paſchal lamb was eat with bitter herbs, perhaps muſtard.

Moſes, Exod. xxiii. 19. xxxiv. 26. forbids to ſeethe a kid in its mother's milk, which may be underſtood as forbidding to ſacrifice it while it ſucked; or literally, that it ſhould not be boiled in the milk of its dam; as the Hebrews explain it. They never mingle milk in any ragout or haſhed meat, and eat not at the ſame meal firſt meat, then milk, or butter, or cheeſe, for fear that any remains of the meat ſhould ſtick in their teeth, and mix with the cheeſe. But they eat cheeſe ſome time before, and meat afterwards. They are ſo cautious of dreſſing meat with any thing made of milk, that they do not uſe the ſame implements for meat, and for butter, milk, or cheeſe: but have different knives, ſpoons, and plates for each; and if by miſtake, either of theſe foods has been dreſſed by the utenſils belonging to the other; they not only refuſe to eat of it, but if the veſſel be an earthen one, they make no farther uſe of it. Leo of Modena, part i. cap. 6.

They eat no cheeſe of which they have not ſeen the making, for fear the milk of any unclean animal may have been mixed with it; or that ſome part of the ſkin may be mixed with the curd, which might be taken for fleſh or cheeſe; or that it may have been warmed in a kettle, wherein forbidden meat has been boiled. They mark that cheeſe which they have ſeen made. In the mountains of Voſges I have ſeen Jews, who came themſelves to make their own cheeſes in the houſes of Chriſtians, where cows were kept.

They might not kill a cow and its calf in the ſame day; nor a ſheep, or goat, and its young one at the ſame time. They might not cut off a part of a living animal to eat it, either raw or dreſſed. If any lawful beaſt or bird, ſhould die of itſelf, or be ſtrangled, and the blood not run away, they were not allowed to taſte of it. Alſo, if in birds was found any thorn, pin, or needle, that had gored them, or in beaſts any impoſthume, or that their entrails were affected, or that they had been bitten by any beaſt, they were not to eat of them by the expreſs law. Exod. xxii. 31. Levit. v. 2. vii. 24. xvii. 15. xxii. 8. He that by inadvertence ſhould eat of an animal that died of itſelf, or that was killed by any beaſt, was to be unclean till the evening, and was not purified till he had waſhed his cloaths.

If an animal, though alive, yet ſhould have a bone broke in one of the limbs mentioned by the Rabbins, or was wounded and in danger of dying; it was not to be eat, for fear of eating, unawares, the fleſh of ſome impure animal. They ate of nothing dreſſed by any other than a Jew, nor dreſſed their victuals with the kitchen implements of any but one of their own nation; nor did they uſe another man's knife.

The Rabbins had appointed, that at the ſame meal they were not to eat of fiſh and fleſh, under pretence of its not being wholeſome; but now this is not obſerved. As to fiſh, they eat indifferently all that are allowed to be eaten according to the law, without any ſcruple as to the blood, or the fat, or rejection of ſuch as are dead or imperfect; becauſe the law is ſilent in theſe matters.

The prohibition of eating blood, or animals that are ſtrangled, has been always rigidly obſerved by the Jews. They do not ſo much as eat an egg, if there appears the leaſt ſtreak of blood in it. When an animal is to be killed, it muſt be performed by a ſkilful perſon, becauſe of the circumſtances to be obſerved. For, the time muſt be proper for the action, the knife muſt be very ſharp, and without notches, that the blood may run without interruption: they let it run out on the ground, or on aſhes, and take it up again afterwards. And the better to perform this, they put the meat into ſalt for an hour, before they put it into the pot, that the blood may quite run out; otherwiſe they muſt not eat the meat, except they roaſt it. And as the liver abounds with blood, they muſt broil it on the coals before they boil it.

They take great care to cut away the ſinew of the thigh of ſuch animals as they intend to eat, according to Gen. xxxii. 32. And in ſeveral places of Germany and Italy, the Jews will not eat any of the hinder quarter, becauſe great nicety is required in taking away this ſinew as it ſhould be done, and few know how to do it exactly.

They forbear eating any fat of oxen, ſheep, goats, and animals of this kind, according to Levit. vii. 23. &c. But other kind of fat, they think is allowed them. Vide FAT.

Very good commentators maintain, that the fat of clean clean animals was not forbid to the Jews, only when offered in ſacrifice; and that the fat that is intermixed with the fleſh was not forbid in any caſe, except where the fleſh itſelf was forbid.

In the Chriſtian church, the cuſtom of refraining from things ſtrangled, and from blood continued a long time. In the council of the apoſtles, held at Jeruſalem ſome years after the aſcenſion of our Saviour, Tertull. Apolog. cap. 9. it was declared, that the converts from Paganiſm ſhould not be ſubject to the legal ceremonies, but that they ſhould refrain from idolatry, from fornication, from eating of blood, and from ſuch animals as were ſtrangled, and thereby the blood retained in their bodies; which decree was obſerved for many ages by the church. Tertullian, Athenagoras, Minutius Felix, Juſtin Martyr, in their apologies for the Chriſtian religion, the holy martyr Biblis, who ſuffered about A. D. 79, in anſwer to the Pagans, who accuſed the Chriſtians of killing children and drinking their blood in their aſſemblies, made this defence, "that the Chriſtian religion would not ſo much as allow them to drink the blood of any animal whatever." [a fortiori, not human blood.]

The council of Gangre A. D, 324, the council of Trullo, A. D. 692, the ſecond council of Arles, A. D. 533, that of Wormes, A. D. 868, the fifty-eighth conſtitution of the emperor Leo; pope Zachary, Ep. xiii. writing to Boniface in 751, unanimouſly relate, that the prohibition of eating blood and things ſtrangled, was obſerved in their times. St. Jerom notices, that in his time alſo they religiouſly abſtained from things ſtrangled and blood in all the Oriental and Roman churches. Under pope Leo the ninth in the eleventh century, cardinal Humbert, legate from the holy See to Conſtantinople, making reply to the Grecians, declares, that in the church they refrained from creatures that were ſtrangled by the negligence of men, dead of themſelves, or drowned; and that they impoſed a ſevere penance on ſuch, who without any preſſing neceſſity acted contrary to theſe rules.

But at the ſame time he acknowledges, that they made no ſcruple of eating birds taken in hunting, and wild fowls caught with dogs. That in all this they only followed the precepts of the apoſtles, who appointed that men ſhould eat indifferently of all things ſold in the ſhambles, and of every thing fit to eat, not aſking any queſtions for conſcience ſake, 1 Cor. x. 27. St. Auſtin, who was much more ancient than cardinal Humbert, affirms, that in the church they obſerved the diſtinction of certain foods, ſo long as the wall of ſeparation was kept up between the Jews and the converted Gentiles, and that the Chriſtian church compoſed of theſe two ſorts of people, was not yet intirely formed. But after that there were no longer any Iſraelites according to the fleſh, there were no longer any perſons who ſcrupled eating of animals that were killed without letting the blood run out; and thoſe who retain any ſuperſtition in this matter, are expoſed to the raillery of others. Aug. Cont. Fauſt. lib. xxiii. cap. 13.

This ſhews the ſentiments of this father, and the practice of the church of Africa in his time. In many other places they obſerved the canon of the apoſtles, down to the tenth and eleventh century. The Greeks to this day will not eat the blood after it is parted from the fleſh; and more learned men than one in the laſt century contended, that this prohibition ought ſtill to be in force. Of this opinion were Salmaſius, Blondell, de Courcelles, Gerard Voſſius, and Grotius.

Many of the ancients, ſpeaking of the prohibition made by the apoſtles at the council of Jeruſalem, notice only what is forbid as to the eating of blood, without mentioning any thing of ſtrangled animals. St. Auſtin, and Gaudentius of Breſs, look on the words á ſuffocato as a gloſs added to the text, to explain what was meant by forbidding the eating of blood. But the Greek and Latin copies, both printed and manuſcript, almoſt all, as well as the fathers, take them as two different prohibitions, (1) that of eating things that have been ſtrangled, (2) that of eating blood. Some ancients, by the words à ſanguine, would have murder to be forbidden, or the effuſion of blood; but ſuch a prohibition by the council of Jeruſalem muſt have been needleſs. Several Greek manuſcripts, and ſome Latin, after theſe words, á ſuffocato & ſanguine, add, and do not to another what you would not have done to yourſelf: which is a gloſs added without neceſſity.

Meats offered to idols, called in Greek, 1 Cor. viii. 7, 10, Εἰδωλόθυτα ἐσθίειν, Idolothyta: at the firſt ſettling of the church there were great diſputes concerning the uſe of meats offered to idols. Some newly converted Chriſtians, convinced that an idol was nothing, and that the diſtinction of clean and unclean creatures was aboliſhed by our Saviour, they ate indifferently of whatever was ſerved up to them, even among Pagans, without enquiring whether theſe meats had been offered to idols. They took the ſame liberty in buying meat ſold in the markets, not regarding whether it was pure or impure, according to the Jews, or whether it had been offered to idols. For among the heathen, as well as among the Jews, there there were ſeveral ſacrifices, in which only a part was offered on the altar, the reſt belonging to him who offered it, which he diſpoſed of at his pleaſure, or ate with his friends.

But other Chriſtians, weaker, or leſs inſtructed, were offended at this liberty, and thought that to eat of meat that had been offered to idols, was a kind of partaking of that wicked and ſacrilegious offering. This diverſity in opinion produced ſome ſcandal, to which St. Paul thought it behoved him to provide a remedy, Rom. xiv. 20. Tit. i. 15. He determined therefore, that all things were clean to ſuch as were clean, and that an idol was nothing at all. That a man might ſafely eat of whatever was ſold in the ſhambles, and need not ſcrupulouſly enquire from whence it came. That if an unbeliever ſhould invite a believer to eat with him, the believer might eat of whatever was ſet before him, &c. 1 Cor. x. 25, 26, 27, &c.

But at the ſame time he enjoins, that the law of charity and prudence ſhould be obſerved; that men ſhould be cautious of ſcandalizing or offending weak minds; and that, though all things may be lawful, yet all things are not always expedient. That no one ought to ſeek his own accommodation or ſatisfaction, but that of his neighbour. That if any one ſhould ſay to us, "this has been offered to idols," we may not then eat of it, for the ſake of him who gives the information, not ſo much for fear of wounding our own conſcience, but his: in a word, that he who is weak, and thinks he may not indifferently uſe all ſorts of food, ſhould forbear, and eat herbs, Rom. xiv. 1, 2.

And yet it is certain, that generally Chriſtians abſtained from eating meat that had been offered to idols. See Revelations ii. 20. where the Holy Ghoſt reproves the angel of Thyatira for ſuffering a Jezebel in his church, who called herſelf a propheteſs, ſeduced the ſervants of God, prevailed with them to commit impurity, and to eat of meat that had been conſecrated to idols. Tertullian ſays, de jejunio, that St. Paul has put the key of the fleſh-market into our own hands, by allowing us the uſe of all ſorts of meat, except that which has been offered to idols. We know that in the perſecutions of the Roman emperors, they often polluted the fleſh ſold in the ſhambles, by conſecrating it to idols, that they might reduce the Chriſtians to the neceſſity of purchaſing that, or of totally abſtaining from fleſh, Theodoret Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. iii. cap. 11. & 13.

MEBUNNAI, מבני, μεβθναὶ, 2 Sam. xxiii. 27. ſon, or filiation; from בן ben: otherwiſe, a building; from בנה banah, to build: or underſtanding; from בינה binah.

MEBUNNAI, or Mobanai, the Huſhathite, a valiant man of David's army, 2 Sam. xxiii. 27. The ſame as Sibbecai of Huſhah, or the Huſhathite, 1 Chron. xi. 29.

MECHERATH, the place of the nativity of Hepher, a valiant man of David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 36.

MECHERATHITE, מכרתי, μεχωραθὶ, ſale: from מכר macar, to ſell: or knowledge; from נכר nicar, to know.

MEDAD, מידד, μωδάδι, he that meaſures; from מדד madad: otherwiſe, the water of love, or of paps, or of the uncle; from מי mi, waters, and דוד dud, uncle, or friendſhip; or from דד dad, pap or nipple.

MEDAD and Eldad: theſe two men were among thoſe, whom God inſpired with his holy Spirit, to aſſiſt Moſes in the government, Numb. xi. 26, 30. They happening to continue in the camp, and not going to the tabernacle with the reſt, to receive the Spirit of God; did, however, receive it in the camp, where they propheſied. Preſently a young man ran to Moſes, (whom the Jews believe was his ſon Gerſhon) and informed him that Eldad and Medad propheſied in the camp. Joſhua immediately addreſſed Moſes, deſiring him to reſtrain them. But Moſes anſwered him, Envieſt thou for my ſake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his Spirit upon them. The Jews pretend, that Eldad and Medad were brothers by the mother's ſide to Moſes, and ſons of Jochebed and Elizaphan. Others will have it, that Amram the father of Moſes, having divorced his wife Jochebed, married another wife, by whom he had Eldad and Medad, Vid. Tradit. Hebr. in 1 Paralip. iv. 17. St. Jerom ſays they continued in the camp out of humility, thinking themſelves unworthy the honour intended them. Some ancient impoſtor compoſed a book under the name of Eldad and Medad, of which a fragment is preſerved in Hermas. The Lord is near to thoſe who are converted, as it is written in Heldam and Modal, who propheſied to the people in the wilderneſs. The Rabbins are divided about the ſubject of their propheſies. Some ſay they propheſied concerning Gog and Magog; others about the quails that the Iſraelites were quickly to receive; others that they foretold the death of Moſes, and the exaltation of Joſhua. Hieron. Ep. cxxvii. Manſione 13. Ita & Hebræi tract. Sanhedr. cap. 1.

MEDALAH, כדעלא, Vulgate, Meralaa. This word is thought to be corrupted by copiers, and that it ought to be read Medaba. See MEDEBA, and MERALAH.

MEDALAH, a city of Zebulun, Joſh. xv. 51.

MEDAN, מדן, μαδαλ, judgment, proceſs; from דין din:

dun: otherwiſe, meaſure, habit, covering; from מד mad.

I. MEDAN. Some write that Medan is the Magedan, Matthew, xv. 39. and that this word ſignifies the waters of Dan, or the fountain from whence riſes the river Jordan.

Others think that Medan in Arabic ſignifies a fair, and that this name is given to the lake Phiala, and the country round about, becauſe during the ſummer ſeaſon there is in this place a perpetual fair, Vide Reland. Palæſt. lib. i. cap. 41. Sanutus ſecret. fidel. crucis, p. 246, 251. Hegas, p. 107. Vide DALMANUTHA.

II. MEDAN, or Madan, third ſon of Abraham and Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2. There is much probability, that Medan and Midian his brother, peopled the country of Midian or Madian, eaſt of the Dead Sea, Euſeb. & Hieronym. locis Hebr. very different from another country of Midian to the eaſt of the Red Sea.

MEDEBA, מידבא, the waters of trouble, or of force; from מי mi, water, and דבא daba, and from דאב daab, trouble, by a tranſpoſition of letters: or, according to the Syriac and Hebrew, running waters.

MEDEBA, or Medaba, Madaba, Medava, a city beyond Jordan, in the ſouthern parts of Reuben, Joſh. xiii. 16. Euſebius ſays, that Medeba was not far from Heſhbon or Cheſbon. Iſaiah, xv. 2. attributes it to Moab, becauſe the Moabites took it from the Iſraelites. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 2. and ſome others aſcribe it to the Arabians, becauſe the Arabians made themſelves maſters of it towards the concluſion of the Jewiſh monarchy. The inhabitants of Medaba having killed John Gaddis, brother of Judas Maccabæus, as he was paſſing to the country of the Nabatheans: quickly afterwards Simon and Jonathan his brethren revenged his death on the children of Jambri, as they were conducting a bride to her huſband, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 1. 1 Macc. ix. 36, &c. Vide MOAB.

MEDES, מדי, μῆδοι.

MEDES, inhabitants of Media. It is commonly thought, that Media was peopled by the deſcendants of Madai, ſon of Japheth, Geneſ. x. 2. Eſther, (i. 3, 14, 18, 19. x. 2.) and Daniel, (v. 28. vi. 3, 12, 15. viii. 20.) commonly put Madai for the Medes, and ſo interpreters underſtand it. The Greeks maintain, that this country takes name from Medus the ſon of Medea; and truly if what has been ſaid under the article MADAI may be relied on, or if this ſon of Japheth peopled Macedonia, we muſt then ſeek another original for the people of Media, Strabo, lib. i. & lib. xi. And indeed it is pretty difficult to comprehend, that Japheth, who, as Scripture ſays, Gen. x. 5. is the father of thoſe who peopled the iſlands of the nations, ſhould ſend Madai very far into Aſia, beyond the Euphrates, to a country ſo very diſtant. But if Madai and his immediate deſcendants did not people Media, yet ſome of his poſterity might have carried his name thither, ſince we find it ſo often given to Media, from the time of the prophets Iſaiah and Jeremiah, and from the tranſportation of the ten tribes, and the deſtruction of Samaria, under Salmanaſſer, A. M. 3283, ante A. D. 721. The expedition of the Argonauts, in which was the rape of Medea, happened A. M. 2760, about forty years before the taking of Troy; ſo that there is nothing impoſſible in this conjecture of the Greeks, that Media has taken its name from Medus the ſon of Jaſon and Medea; and nothing contrary to Scripture, which ſpeaks of the Medes from the time of Salmanaſſer, A. M. 3283. From the expedition of the Argonauts, to the taking of Samaria, are 523 years.

Media has been taken in ſometimes a larger, and ſometimes a narrower, extent. Ptolemy makes its limits to the north to be a part of the Caſpian ſea, and the mountains of the ſame name, and the Caduſians; the greater Armenia weſt, the countries of the Parthians and Hyrcania, eaſt, Perſia, Suſiana, and a part of Aſſyria ſouth. The capital of Media was Ecbatane, Judith i. 1. The author of this book makes king Arphaxad, whom we take to be the ſame as Phraortes, to have at leaſt improved and adorned this city, if not to have been the founder of it. Yet Herodotus, lib. i. ſays expreſsly, that Dejoces firſt undertook this work. But as the undertaking was very great, it is probable he left enough to his ſucceſſor Phraortes to compleat, ſo as to entitle him to be called the builder of it, and to verify what is ſaid in Judith. See ECBATANE. Rages was alſo in Media; Tob. i. 14. iii. 7, &c. and Salmanaſſer made the ten tribes of Iſrael, which he carried beyond Euphrates, to inhabit the cities of Media, 2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 11.

Iſaiah deſcribes the Medes to us, as the inſtruments and executioners of God's decrees againſt Babylon. Behold I will ſtir up the Medes againſt them, Iſai. xiii. 17, 18. See alſo chap. xxi. 2, 3. Jeremiah, xxv. 25. ſpeaks of the misfortunes which were to happen to the Medes. He foretels, that they alſo in their turn were to drink of the cup of the wrath of God; and it is likely Cyrus made them ſuffer the evil, they were here threatened with. But Darius the Mede ſucceeded to the kingdom of Belſhazzar, king of Chaldæa, and Cyrus ſucceeded Darius. Daniel, who informs us of this ſucceſſion, chap. v. 31. xiii. 65. tells us no particulars of it; though the other prophets, who ſpeak of the affairs of the Medes and of Babylon, ſufficiently ſhew that theſe revolutions were not effected without war. However this be, ſince Darius the ſucceſſor of Belſhazzar, all the kings of Babylon aſſume the title of kings of the Perſians and Medes, or kings of the Medes and Perſians.

A Chronological Liſt of the KINGS of the MEDES

A. M.

3294. Dejoces is choſen king of the Medes, ante A. D. 710. before the beginning of Cyrus 150; according to Herodotus, thirty ſeven years after Arbaces had ſet the Medes at liberty. Dejoces reigned fifty-three years.

3347. Phraortes his ſon ſucceeded him, ante A. D. 657. He reigned twenty-two years, and died at the ſiege of Niniveh.

3369. Cyaxares, ſon of Phraortes, forty years. While he was at the ſiege of Niniveh, the Scythians made an irruption into

3370. his dominions, and continued maſters of them twenty-eight years. At length

3398. Cyaxares drove them out of Media.

3409. Aſtyages his ſon, named Ahaſuerus, Daniel ix. 1. ſucceeded him, ante A. D. 595. and reigned thirty-five years.

3444. Darius the Mede ſucceeded him in the kingdom of the Medes, ante A. D. 560. He is called Cyaxares in Xenophon, and Aſtyages in the Greek of Daniel. He ſucceeded Belſhazzar his nephew in the kingdom of Babylon, or of the Chaldees, in 3448, and died in 3466. He left the kingdom to 3466. Cyrus his nephew, who re-united the monarchies of the Perſians and Medes, ante A. D. 538.

MEDIA, Μεδία, meaſure, habit, or covering; from מד mad: otherwiſe, abundance; from מאד meod.

MEDIA, Medene, Medena Provincia, Ezr. vi. 2. The country of the Medes, in Hebrew Madai. In Media, in the caſtle or palace of Ecbatana, was found the original grant or inſtrument of Cyrus the Great to the people of the Jews, allowing them to return and ſettle in their own country.

MEDIATOR. In covenants between man and man, wherein the holy name of God is uſed, God is witneſs and mediator of all reciprocal promiſes and engagements. Thus Laban and Jacob made a covenant on mount Gilead or Galead, Gen. xxxi. 49—54; and when the elders of Gilead made a covenant with Jephthah, they called on the name of the Lord, Judg. xi. 10.

When God gave his law to the Hebrews, and made a covenant with them at Sinai, a mediator was neceſſary, who ſhould relate the words of God to the Hebrews, and their anſwer to God; in order that the articles of the covenant being agreed to by each party, they might be ratified and confirmed by blood, and by oath. Moſes on this occaſion was the mediator between God and man, as St. Paul ſays, Galat. iii. 19. The law was added becauſe of tranſgreſſions—, and was ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator.

In the new covenant that God has been pleaſed to to make with the Chriſtian church, Jeſus Chriſt is the mediator of redemption between God and man. He was the ſurety, the ſacrifice, the prieſt, and the interceſſor of this covenant. He has ſealed it with his blood, has propoſed the terms and conditions of it in his goſpel, has inſtituted the form of it in baptiſm, and the commemoration of it in the ſacrament of his body and blood. St. Paul in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews enlarges on this office of mediator of the New Covenant, which was exerciſed by Jeſus Chriſt, Heb. viii. 6. ix. 25. xii. 24. Vide alſo Tim. ii. 5.

MEDICINE, or phyſic: Jeſus, the ſon of Sirach, aſcribes the invention of phyſic to God himſelf, Eccluſ. xxxviii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Honour a phyſician with the honour due unto him, for the uſes which you may have of him; for the Lord hath created him, &c. The Scripture makes no mention of phyſicians before the time of the patriarch Joſeph: who commanded his ſervants, the phyſicians of Egypt, to embalm the body of his father Jacob, Gen. l. 2. The buſineſs of theſe phyſicians was to embalm the bodies of the dead, and to cure the diſeaſes living. The art of medicine was very ancient in Egypt. They aſcribed the invention of it to Thaut, or to Hermes, or to Oſiris or Iſis; and ſome of the learned have thought, (as Clem. Alex. lib. i. Stromat. Ἐπι τε ἰατρικην, ἅμα και μαντικην,) that Moſes having been inſtructed in all the learning of the Egyptians, he muſt alſo have known the chief ſecrets of medicine. They pretend alſo to prove it, by his indications concerning the leproſy, infirmities of women, animals clean and unclean, &c. It does not appear that phyſicians were common among the Hebrews, eſpecially for internal maladies. But for wounds, fractures, bruiſes, and external injuries, they had phyſicians, (i. e. ſurgeons) geons) who underſtood the dreſſing and binding up of wounds, and the application of certain medicaments. Vide Jerem. viii. 22. xlvi. 11. Ezek. xxx. 21.

But in internal diſtempers, as fevers, gout, pains of the bowels, or of the head, the plague, &c. we hear neither of remedies nor phyſicians. Aſa being diſeaſed in his feet, and having applied to phyſicians, was upbraided with it, as contrary to that confidence which he ought to have had in the Lord, 1 Kings xv. 23. 2 Chron. xvi. 12. Hezekiah having a boil, of which he was ready to die, was cured by Iſaiah, by the application of a cataplaſm of figs. 2 Kings xx. 7. Iſai. xxxviii. 21. There was no remedy known for the leproſy, or for thoſe diſtempers which are the conſequences of incontinence. When Job was ſtruck with a very terrible diſtemper, we hear no mention of recourſe to phyſic or to phyſicians; his malady was looked on as an immediate ſtroke from the hand of God, his friends reaſon about it according to their prejudices, and undertake to prove, that it viſited him as a juſt puniſhment for paſt ſins.

The little uſe made of the art of medicine, and the perſuaſion that diſtempers were the effects of God's anger, and cauſed by evil ſpirits, the executioners of his vengeance, was the reaſon that in extraordinary maladies the ſufferers applied to diviners, magicians, enchanters, or to falſe gods. Sometimes they applied to the prophets of the Lord for cure, or, at leaſt, to know whether they ſhould recover or not. When Ahaziah, king of Iſrael, by a fall from the roof of his houſe, was greatly hurt, he ſent to conſult the falſe god Baal-zebub at Ekron, a city of the Philiſtines, 2 Kings i. 2, &c. Jeremiah, viii. 17. ſpeaks of enchantments uſed againſt the biting of ſerpents, and other venomous animals, Hazael was ſent by the king of Syria to conſult Eliſha the prophet about his diſtemper, 2 Kings viii. 8. Naaman the Syrian came into the land of Iſrael, to obtain from Eliſha a cure for his leproſy, 2 Kings v. 5, 6. When our Saviour appeared in Paleſtine, no doubt there were phyſicians in that country; but it appears that the people made little uſe of them, and placed but little confidence in them. They brought to our Saviour and his apoſtles multitudes of diſeaſed people from all parts.

The Jewiſh authors ſpeak of phyſicians in a manner not at all favourable to them, Vide Buxtorf. Lexicon. in רפא rapha, mederi.

Though the Scripture does not make expreſs mention of phyſicians or of medicine before the time of the patriarch Joſeph, we are not to conclude from thence that the art of medicine was a novelty. Adam had received a perfect and extenſive knowledge of natural things, of the powers of ſimples, of the virtues of juices, liquors, and minerals; and could not fail to cultivate and improve his knowledge, when he found himſelf condemned to diſeaſes and death. The neceſſity he experienced of recruiting his ſtrength, and of preſerving his health, laid him under a neceſſity of having recourſe to natural remedies, and conſequently of ſtudying their nature, their effects, and their properties.

A ſcience ſo uſeful could not fall into oblivion; Adam taught it his children, they cultivated it, and tranſmitted it to their poſterity. The ancients ſpeak highly of the knowledge of the Egyptians in phyſic. Homer tells us, that the Egyptians were the moſt ſkilful phyſicians in the world, and that every one of them underſtood phyſic, Homer. Odyſſ. Δ. Ἰητρὸς δὲ ἕκαστος ἐπιστάμενος περὶ παντῶν Ἀνθρώπων. But this without doubt muſt be an hyperbole. Indeed Herodotus owns, lib. ii. cap. 24. that their country abounded with phyſicians, becauſe each part of the human body, and each diſtemper, had its particular phyſician. Some confined themſelves to diſeaſes of the eyes, others to the teeth, others to the head, Diodorus Siculus obſerves, lib. i. Biblioth. that theſe people had certain ſacred books, which contained the principles of medicine. In the management of their patients, it was not allowed them to depart from the rules preſcribed by theſe books; if they ſucceeded in the cure, well and good; if not, the phyſician could lie under no reproach, becauſe he had only followed the rules of his art. But if he did not conform himſelf to them, even though he ſhould cure his patient, he was to ſuffer death for mal-practice.

But I would not be underſtood to affirm that the ancient phyſicians of Egypt ſtudied the cure of internal diſeaſes, which are owing to an ill ſtate of the blood, or other fluids of the body. The moſt famous phyſicians of Greece, as Chiron, Machaon, Podalirius, Pæan, and Eſculapius himſelf, were no other than good ſurgeons. Their art did not go beyond the curing of a green wound, as Pliny himſelf obſerves. Celſus takes notice, that Podalirius and Machaon, the ſons of Eſculapius, who accompanied king Agamemnon to the wars of Troy, were never made uſe of to cure the plague, nor internal maladies, but only wounds and external injuries.

Phyſic among the Hebrews was hardly in any greater perfection. Solomon who knew the ſecrets of nature, and the virtues of ſimples; who had wrote treatiſes on beaſts, birds, fiſhes, trees and plants, from the cedar of Libanus to the hyſſop hyſſop on the wall. 1 Kings iv. 33. This prince might have given us great light into theſe matters, if God had permitted his works to have come down to us.

Pindar tells us, Pyth. Od. iii. that Eſculapius cured all ſorts of fevers, ulcers, wounds, and pains, by ſoothing enchantments, ſweetening potions, topical and external remedies, or, by inciſion. Homer relates, that by enchantments the blood was ſtopped that iſſued out of Ulyſſes's wound, Odyſſ. τ. Cato has preſerved certain verſes, uſed in reducing a diſlocated member, de re Ruſt. art. 160. Plato tells us, that the midwives of Athens had a ſecret by means of certain drugs and certain charms, to cauſe women in travail eaſily to bring forth children, Plato Theæteetr. p. 149.

The Hebrews were neither leſs curious, nor leſs ſuperſtitious than other people. Among them, charms, enchantments, curious arts, taliſmans, phylacteries, the ſound of inſtruments, and ſuch like, were uſed to cure or relieve the ſick, or to ſecure them againſt the bitings of ſerpents, and faſcinations. Saul's ſervants provided muſic to relieve their maſter: the Jews aſcribed to Beelzebub the miracles of Jeſus Chriſt. The angel Raphael drove away the devil by the ſume of the broiled liver of a fiſh, &c.

Joſephus, de Bello, Jud. lib. vii. cap. 25. ſpeaks of a wonderful root called Baaras, which expelled demons; and we find other ſuperſtitious methods of cure among the ancient Hebrews. Scripture ſpeaks of charms uſed in the bitings of ſerpents, and enchantments to lay aſleep or enchant thoſe animals, and to ſuſpend their venom. See Jeremiah viii. 17. Job xl. 25. Pſalm lviii. 5. Eccleſiaſticus xii. 13.

MEDITATION; the chief employment of the juſt is to meditate on the law of God day and night, Pſal. i. 2. This is the principal and moſt uſual acceptation of the verb to meditate; to think cloſely and ſeriouſly on any thing. We alſo ſay, to meditate, when we ſpeak indeed, but low and indiſtinctly, as when learning any thing by heart, or rehearſing in a low voice any thing in which the thoughts are deeply engaged. Job ſays, xxvii. 4. My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs, nor my tongue utter (or meditate) deceit. The Pſalmiſt ſays, xxxv. 28. My tongue ſhall ſpeak (or meditate) of thy righteouſneſs. And xxxvii. 30. The mouth of the righteous ſpeaketh (or meditateth) wiſdom. And Solomon ſays, Prov. viii. 7. My mouth ſhall ſpeak (or meditate) truth.

Iſaiah, xxxviii. 14. compares the groanings of an afflicted man to thoſe of a dove; and he uſes the word to meditate, to expreſs them both. And Iſai. lix. 11. Sicut columba meditantes gememus.

Pretty nearly in the ſame ſenſe Virgil ſays,

Silveſtrem tenui Muſam meditaris avenâ.

ECLOG. i.

MEGIDDO, מגדו, that declares: otherwiſe, his precious fruit; from מגד magad: otherwiſe, that ſpoils; from גדד godad: or fortune; from גד gad.

MEGIDDO, or Magedo, a city of Manaſſeh, Joſh. xvii. 11. Judg. i. 27. famous for the defeat of king Joſiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30. who was overcome and mortally wounded by Pharaohnecho, king of Egypt. Herodotus ſpeaking of this victory, ſays that Necho obtained it at Magdolos, Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 159. The waters of Megiddo are mentioned Judges, v. 19.

MEGIDDON, מגדון, ἐν πεδίῳ ἐκ ὠπτομένῳ, a city, or camp, [or valley; in which had been a great mourning, &c. Zech. xii. 11.] See MEGIDDO.

MEGILLOTH, מגילת, a roll, or volume.

MEGILLOTH, or Megillat. The Hebrews give the name of Megilloth to Eccleſiaſtes, the Song of Songs, the Lamentations, Ruth, and Eſther. Theſe they call the five Megilloth.

MEHETABEL, מהיטבאל, how good is God! or has done good to us; from the conjunction מה mah, how much, or מן men, from, and טוב tub, good, or יטב jatab, to do good, and אל el, God.

MEHETABEL, or Metabeel, ſon of Delaiah, Nehem. vi. 10.

MEHIDA, מהידא, μειδὰ, enigma; from the Chaldean word אחידן achidan: otherwiſe, point; from חדד chadad: otherwiſe, that blots out, or ſuppreſſes the hand; from מחה macha, to blot out, and יד jad, the hand.

MEHIR, מחור, μαχὶρ, prized; from מחר machar, to prize, to eſteem.

MEHIR, or Mahir, ſon of Caleb, of Judah, 1 Chron. iv. 11.

MEHOLATHITE, מחלתי, who is of Meholathi, 1 Sam. xviii. 19.

MEHUJAEL, מחויאל, who proclaims God; from חוה chivah, to proclaim, and אל el, God: or God that blots out; from מחא macha, to blot out: or, according to the Syriac and Hebrew, who is ſmitten of God.

MEHUJAEL, or Maviael, ſon of Irad, and father of Methuſael, of the race of Cain, Gen. iv. 18.

MEHUMAN, מהומן, who is troubled; from המה amah, to trouble, or to make a tumult: otherwiſe, multitude; from המן chamon. A Perſian or Mediſh name.

MEHUMAN, or Mauman, chief of the eunuchs or officers, of king Ahaſuerus, Eſth. i. 10.

MEHUNIM, מעונים, houſes, abodes; from מעון mahon: otherwiſe, poor, afflicted; from עני auni: otherwiſe, that anſwer; from ענה aunah.

MEHUSHIM, מהשים, μεωσεὶμ, or Huſhim, father of of Ahitub, precipitated, who are in haſte, from חוש chuſh: otherwiſe, that hold their peace; from חשה chaſhah. 1 Chron. viii. 11.

ME-JARKON, מי־ירקון, the waters of Jarkon, waters ruſty, ſpoiled, &c. from מים maim, waters, and ירק jarak, ruſty, green.

ME-JARKON, or Mejarcon, the waters of Jarkon, a city of Dan, Joſh. xix. 46.

MEKONAH, מכנה, μαχνῆ, baſe; from כן ken: or preparation; from כנה canah, to diſpoſe, to found, to prepare.

MEKONAH, or Mochona, a city of Judah; Neh. xi. 28. probably the Mechanum, which St. Jerom places between Eleutheropolis and Jeruſalem, eight miles from Eleutheropolis.

MELATIAH, מלטיה, the deliverance of the Lord; from מלט malat, to deliver, and יה jah, the Lord.

MELCHI, Μελχὶ, my king, or my counſel; from מלך malac, and the pronoun י i, my.

I. MELCHI, ſon of Janna, and father of Levi, in the genealogy of Jeſus, Luke iii. 24.

II. MELCHI, ſon of Addi, and father of Neri, in the genealogy of Jeſus, Luke iii. 28.

MELCHIAH, מלכיה, the Lord is my king.

MELCHIAH, or Melchias, head of the fifth family of the twenty-four ſacerdotal families, 1 Chron. xxiv. 9. See MALCHIAH.

MELCHISEDEC, מלכי־צדק, juſtice; from מלך melec, a king, and צדק tzedec, juſtice.

MELCHISEDEC, king of Salem, and prieſt of the moſt high God. Scripture tells us nothing of his father, or of his mother, or of his genealogy, or of his birth, or of his death, Heb. vii. 1, 2, 3. And in this ſenſe he was a figure of Jeſus Chriſt, as St. Paul ſays, who is a prieſt for ever, according to the order of Melchiſedec; and not according to the order of Aaron, whoſe origin, life, and death are known.

When Abraham returned from purſuing the four confederate kings, who had defeated the kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. xiv. 17, 18, 19, &c. Melchiſedec comes to meet Abraham as far as the valley of Shaveh, (afterwards named the King's valley) and preſents him with the refreſhments of bread and wine; or, he offered bread and wine in ſacrifice to the Lord, for he was a prieſt of the moſt high God. Clem. Alex. lib. iv. Strom. Cyprian lib. ii. Ep. iii. ad Cæcil. Euſeb. Cæſar. Dem. lib. v. cap. iii. Ambroſ. lib. v. Sacram. cap. i. & alii plerique Patrum & Interp. Conſule ſi placet Bellarm. lib. i. de miſſa, cap. 6. And he bleſſed Abraham, ſaying, "Bleſſed be Abraham of the moſt high God, poſſeſſor of heaven and earth; and bleſſed be the moſt high God, who hath delivered thine enemies into thy hand." Abraham, deſirous to acknowledge in him the quality of prieſt of the Lord, offered him the tythes of all he had taken from the enemy. After this there is no mention made of the perſon of Melchiſedec; only the Pſalmiſt, cx. 4. ſpeaking of the Meſſiah, ſays, "Thou art a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec."

St. Paul, Hebrews v. 6, 10. unfolds the myſtery of Melchiſedec. Firſt, he exalts the prieſthood of Chriſt, as a prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedec, and who in this quality, in the days of his fleſh offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears, unto him that was able to ſave him from death; and was heard in that he feared, verſe 7, He alſo ſays, that our Saviour as a forerunner is entered for us into heaven, being made an high-prieſt for ever after the order of Melchiſedek. "For, he adds, to this Melchiſedec, king of Salem, and prieſt of the moſt high God, Abraham gave tythe. Now Melchiſedec is according to the interpretation of his name, firſt, king of (ſedek) juſtice; ſecondly, king of (Salem,) peace; who is without father, without mother, without genealogy, who has neither beginning nor end of life. Conſider therefore how great this Melchiſedec is, ſince Abraham himſelf gives him tythe, and receives his bleſſing. Moreover, Levi, who receives tythes from others, paid it himſelf, as one may ſay, in the perſon of Abraham, ſince he was ſtill in the loins of Abraham his anceſtor, when Melchiſedec met this patriarch."

An infinite number of difficulties have been ſtarted on the ſubject of Melchiſedec. St. Jerom thought that Salem, of which Melchiſedec was king, was not Jeruſalem, but the city of Salem near Scythopolis, where they ſtill pretended to ſhew the ruins of his palace, Hieronym. Ep. ad Evang. He thinks it was at this Salem Jacob arrived after his paſſage over Jordan, when returning from Meſopotamia, Geneſis xxxiii. 18. where the Vulgate mentions, that Jacob came ſafe and ſound to Sichem; but the Hebrew reads, he came to Salem near Shechem. Some believe that Salem, where Melchiſedec reigned, is the Salim of John, ch. iii. 23. Vid. Reland Palæſt.

From the time of Epiphanius there were names invented for the father and mother of Melchiſedec. To his father was given the name of Heraclas, or Heracles, and to his mother that of Aſtaroth, or Aſtaria. [i. e. the SUN and MOON.]

The Arabic Catena on the ninth chapter of Geneſis makes him deſcend from Shem by his father, and from Japheth by his mother. Heraclas or Heraclim, the father of Melchiſedec was, ſay they, ſon or grandſon of Phaleg, and ſon of Heber; and his mother named Salathiel, was daughter of Gomer, ſon of Japheth. Joſeph, ſon of Gorion, lib. vi. cap. 31. pretends that Melchiſedec was otherwiſe otherwiſe called Joram; that the ſtar that ruled at his nativity had the name of Sedec, or the planet Jupiter; that the city in which he reigned was firſt named Jebus, then Sedec, and laſtly Salem, or Jeruſalem.

Michael Glycas, Annal. p. 135, Georgius Cedrenus, lib. i. p. 27, and Simon Logothetes, apud Cang. ad Chron. Paſch. p. 500, derive Melchiſedec from Egypt. They ſay his father was called Sidon or Sida, and founded the city of Sidon, the capital of Phœnicia: and that Melchiſedek founded Salem on mount Sion, ruled there thirty years, and died without children. Suidas, in Melchiſedec, ſays he reigned there an hundred and thirty years, and died unmarried: that he was of the curſed race of Canaan, whence it comes to paſs, that Scripture does not mention his genealogy. Another Greek author, who has borrowed the name of Athanaſius, ſays that Melchiſedec was the ſon of an idolatrous king, called Melchi, and of a queen named Salem.

The author of the queſtions on the Old and New teſtament, printed among the works of St. Auſtin, had written, that Melchiſedec was the Holy Ghoſt, who appeared to Abraham in a human form. Evangelus (or Evangelius) ſent this writing to St. Jerom, deſiring his thoughts of it. St. Jerom having examined the ancient doctors of the church, found that Origen and Didymus took Melchiſedec for an angel; but that Hippolitus, Irenæus, Euſebius of Cæſarea, Euſebius of Emeſus, Apollinarius, and Euſtatheus of Antioch, all agreed, though in different terms, and by different ways of reaſoning, that this prince was a Canaanite by birth, and king of Salem, otherwiſe called Jebus, or Jeruſalem. This holy doctor ſhews, that Melchiſedec was an expreſs figure of Jeſus Chriſt, as king of Salem, or king of peace, being prieſt and king both together. And when it is ſaid by St. Paul, that he was without father, without mother, and without deſcent; this is not intended to acquaint us that he deſcended from heaven, or that he was formed immediately by the hand of God, but merely that he is introduced into the hiſtory of Abraham, without informing us who he was, or from whence he came, or at what time he was born, or when he died.

At the beginning of the third century, a hereſy was formed by Theodorus the banker, a diſciple of Theodorus the currier, called the hereſy of the Melchiſedecians. Vide Epiphan. hæreſ. 55. & Theodoret. hæret. Fab. lib. ii. cap. 6. Theſe heretics affirmed, that Melchiſedec was a heavenly power ſuperior to Jeſus Chriſt, ſince Melchiſedec was the interceſſor and mediator of the angels, and Jeſus Chriſt was ſo only for men. That Jeſus Chriſt was but the copy of Melchiſedec, and his prieſthood was formed only on the model of that of Melchiſedec, according to that of the Pſalmiſt, cx. 4. Thou art a prieſt for ever according to the order of Melchiſedec. They took literally what St. Paul ſays, that Melchiſedec had neither father, mother, nor deſcent. This hereſy was revived in Egypt by one Hierax, who maintained, that Melchiſedec was the Holy Ghoſt. Cedrenus and Zonarus ſpeak of another ſort of Melchiſedecians, otherwiſe called Autingani, as not daring to touch others, for fear of being defiled. They lived chiefly in Phrygia, and neither received circumciſion, nor obſerved the ſabbath. They gave nothing to any one with their hands, nor received any thing from any one, but they ſet it upon the ground when they offered any thing, and took it from thence when they received it. They had a profound veneration for Melchiſedec, but it is not known upon what this veneration was founded.

The Jews, according to the report of St. Jerom, and the Samaritans according to Epiphanius, maintained that Melchiſedec was the patriarch Shem, the ſon of Noah, which opinion has been followed by a great number of modern writers. M. Jurieu has undertook to prove, that Melchiſedec was Ham. A French author mentioned by F. Salien will have Melchiſedek to be Enoch. Another confuted by F. Petau, ſaid that the Magi who came to Bethlehem to adore Jeſus Chriſt, were Enoch, Melchiſedec, and Elias. Some Jewiſh authors have inferred, that Melchiſedec was a baſtard, becauſe Scripture ſays nothing of his parents or deſcent. Damian the heretic, of the number of the Melchiſedecians, affirmed that Melchiſedec who appeared to Abraham, was the Son of God, and that the patriarch worſhipped him as the Meſſiah. Peter Cunæus has revived this opinion, and ſupported it with much earneſtneſs. Peter du Moulin has alſo aſſerted it, and in 1686, James Gaillard undertook the defence of it.

MELEA, ſon of Menan, and father of Eliakim, Luke iii. 31.

MELECH, מלך, king. Son of Micah, and grandſon of Jonathan, ſon of Saul, 1 Chron. viii. 35.

MELICU, מילכו, his kingdom; from מלך melac, and the pronoun ו o, his.

MELOTHI, מלותי, filled up, my fulneſs.

MELOTHI, a city of Cilicia, taken by Holoferner, Judith xi. 13. Vulg. Perhaps the ſame as Wallos in Cilicia, on the river Pyramus. The inhabitants of Mallos, or the Mallotæ, revolted againſt Antiochus Epiphanes, becauſe this prince had beſtowed their city on one of his concubines. The Greek copy of Judith makes no mention of Melothi.

MELZAR, מלצר, this name is Chaldee; diſpenſer, or ſteward: otherwiſe, circumciſion of diſtreſs or miſery; from מול mul, circumciſion, and צרר tzarar, to be in bonds, to be in a ſtrait.

MELZAR, or Malazar, the governor of Daniel and his companions, when captives at Babylon, Dan. i. 16. The word melzar ſignifies rather an officer belonging to the kitchen, a caterer, or ſteward, than ſeems to be a proper name. Ita Kimchi, Jun. Tremel. Palan.

MEMMIUS. Quintus Memmius, and Titus Manlius, Roman legates, being ſent to Antiochus Eupator, king of Syria, wrote to the Jews, ſignifying, that they confirmed all that Lyſias, regent of the kingdom of Syria had granted them, and that they would ſpeedily ſend deputies to Antioch, who ſhould there take care of the intereſt of their nation. 2 Macc. xi. 34, 35, 36.

MEMORY. See REMEMBRANCE.

MEMPHIS, נף, Hebrew noph, diſtillation, or honey-comb, or ſieve, or elevation; from נוף nuph. OR,

MEMPHIS, מוף, moph in the Hebrew, by the mouth; from the prepoſition מ m, from, or by, and פה pe, the mouth. Memphis is an Egyptian name, and cannot take its etymology from the Hebrew.

[It is likely theſe two modes of ſpelling this name ſhould be united—MEN-NUPH: which is the Arabic pronunciation, at this day.]

MEMPHIS, in Hebrew, Noph, or Moph, a very famous city of Egypt, ſituate at about fifteen thouſand paces above the parting of the Nile, or where the Delta begins, Plin. lib. v. cap. 9. Vide & Strab. lib. xvii. p. 555. Above Memphis, ſouth, were the famous pyramids. Memphis was long the reſidence of the ancient kings of Egypt; till the times of the Ptolemies, who commonly reſided at Alexandria. Memphis is now deſtroyed. The prophets often ſpeak of Memphis. See Iſai. xix. 13. Jerem. xliv. 1. xlvi. 14, 19. Hoſea ix. 6. They foretel the miſeries it was to ſuffer from the kings of Chaldæa and Perſia, and they threaten the Iſraelites who ſhould retire into Egypt, or ſhould have recourſe to the Egyptians, that they ſhould periſh in that country. Ezekiel ſays, that the Lord will deſtroy the idols of Memphis, Ezek. xxx. 13, 16. In this city they fed the ox Apis.

This city is called Meſr, or Miſr, by the Orientals, as being the capital of Egypt, called Mezer or Mizraim. They alſo call it Monf, a name approaching to the Hebrew word Noph, or Moph, from whence the Greeks formed their Memphis. The ancient kings of Egypt took pleaſure in adorning it. It continued in its beauty till the Arabians conquered Egypt, under calif Omar, in the eighteenth or nineteenth year of the Hegira: A. D. 640. Amron Ben-as, who took it, built another city near it, which he called Fuſthat, becauſe of the tent of this general, which was long ſet up in this place. The califs Fatimites, who became maſters of Egypt, added another city near it, which they called Caherah, i. e. the victorious; which we know at this day by the name of Grand Cairo. Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 580. cap. 1.

The Mammeluc ſultans, of the dynaſty of the Circaſſians, having afterward built a very high and fortified caſtle, on the Eaſtern ſhore of the Nile, by little and little, the city of Cairo changed its place; ſo that what the Fatimites had built is now old Cairo. But it muſt be obſerved, that the ancient Meſr, or Memphis, ſtood on the weſtern ſhore of the Nile, and that which the Arabians have built is on the eaſtern ſhore.

So that at length, after a ſucceſſion of ages, is fulfilled what the prophets had predicted againſt Memphis, in the places referred to above. Vide EGYPT.

Nebuchadnezzar plundered Egypt, and ravaged Memphis, afterwards, Cambyſes king of Perſia, and ſon of Cyrus, made himſelf maſter of Egypt, having firſt taken Peluſium, which is as it were the key of Egypt, when Pſammenites, king of Egypt, marched out to meet him, at the head of a powerful army. Cambyſes defeated him, and thoſe that eſcaped took refuge in Memphis; whither Cambyſes purſued them, and ſent to the city by means of the Nile, a ſhip of Mitylene, with a ſummons to ſurrender. But the Egyptians in great rage fell upon the herald, and thoſe in the ſhip, and cut them all to pieces. When Cambyſes ſhortly after made himſelf maſter of the place, he ordered as many Egyptians to be publicly executed, as there were perſons in the ſhip of Mitylene, and thoſe of the chief of the nobility. The eldeſt ſon of king Pſammenites was one of this number. As for the king himſelf, Cambyſes ſaved his life, and even appointed him a ſufficient maintenance, but he did not enjoy it long. For it was found that he endeavoured to raiſe commotions in the kingdom, ſo they made him drink bull's blood, which killed him on the ſpot.

Egypt continued under the Perſians till the reign of Artaxerxes. Then they ſhook off the yoke, and choſe Inarus prince of the Libyans for their king. They called in the Athenians to their aſſiſtance; and Charitimis was intruſted with the conduct of this enterprize. Artaxerxes ſent Achæmenides, one of his brothers, againſt the rebels, at the head of 300,000 men. The Perſians were beaten, and loſt in one battle 100,000 men. Thoſe that eſcaped escaped retired to Memphis, whither the conquerors pursued them, and immediately made themselves masters of two parts of the city. But the Persians having fortified themselves in the third part, called the White Wall, which was the largest and strongest of the three; they held out a siege there of nearly three years, till they were relieved.

Alexander the Great having conquered Egypt from the Persians, and having built Alexandria, the kings of Egypt his successors studied the enlarging and beautifying Alexandria, till it became the capital city of Egypt. Memphis was then of small consideration, and after several revolutions in its fortune it was finally destroyed by the Arabians.

MEMRA. Vide WORD.

MEMUCAN, מכוכן, μεμεχὰν, impoverished; from טוך mue: otherwise, to prepare; from כין cun: otherwise, certain, true; from כן ken. This word is Persian.

MEMUCAN, or Mamucan, one of the seven principal councellors of the king of Persia. Esth. i. 14, 16.

MENAHEM, מנחם, comforter; from נחם nacham: or who conducts them; from נהה nachah, to conduct, and the pronoun מ am, them: or preparation of heat; from מנח mincha, preparation, and חמם chamam, heat.

MENAHEM. See MANAHEM.

MENAN, Μαινὰν, number, or recompence, or prepared; from מנה manah.

MENAN, or Menna, son of Mattatha, and father of Melea, ancestor of Jesus Christ, Luke iii. 31.

MENE, or Mane; מנא, a Chaldæan word, signifying he has numbered, or he has counted. At a feast which Belshazzar gave to his courtiers and concubines, he prophaned the sacred vessels of the temple of Jerusalem, which Nebuchadnezzar had carried to Babylon. Then there appeared on the wall like a hand writing these words, Mene mene, tekel, upharsin. (God) has numbered, has weighed, and divided. Daniel explained this ill-boding inscription to the king. Vide BELSHAZZAR. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

MENELAUS, Μενέλαος, the power or strength of the people; from μένος, strength, and λάος, people.

MENELAUS, otherwise Onias IV. succeeded Jason in the sovereign priesthood of the Jews, and had Alcimus for his successor. Vide ONIAS IV.

MENESTHEUS, or Mnestheus, father of Apollonius, 2 Macc. iv. 21. See APOLLONIUS.

MENI, מני. The goddess Meni is the moon. Jeremiah vii. 18. xliv. 17, 18. speaks of her by the title of Queen of Heaven, and Isaiah by the name of Meni, lxv. 11. Heb. Each of them shew, that her worship was frequent in Palestine, and among the Hebrews. Meni is probably Astarte, and Venus Cœlestis, honoured among the Phœnicians and Carthaginians. From the Phœnicians or Canaanites, Israel learned the worship of this false deity. Isaiah reproaches them with setting up a table to Gad, (the sun) and with making libations to Meni. Jeremiah says, that in honour of the Queen of Heaven, the fathers light the fire, the mothers knead the cakes, and the children gather the wood to bake them. Elsewhere the Israelites declare to Jeremiah, that notwithstanding his remonstrances, they would continue to honour the Queen of Heaven, by oblations, as their fathers had done before them; and that ever since they had left off to sacrifice to the Queen of Heaven, they have been consumed by the sword and by famine. We see by Strabo, lib. xii. that men, the month, or moon, had several temples in Asia Minor, and in Persia, and that they often swore by the men of the king, i. e. by his fortune. Vide ASTARTE, GAD.

MENOIS, probably the same as Minois, mentioned in the subscriptions to some of the councils. Concil. Calced. An. 451. Menois was not far from Gaza, says Eusebius. It is the Menoenum castrum, in the codex of Theodosius. It was the capital of the Maonians, or Mæonians, 1 Chron. iv. 40, 41. and 2 Chron. xx. 1. in the Hebrew. Vide MAON.

MEONOTHAI, מעונתי, my dwelling, my sin; from עון avon.

MEONOTHAI, or Maonathi, son of Othniel, and father of Ophrah, of Judah, 1 Chr. iv. 13, 14.

MEPHAATH, מפעת, appearance of the waters, or impetuosity; from יפע japhah, to appear, and מים majim, waters.

MEPHAATH, a city of Reuben, Josh. xiii. 18. yielded to the Levites of the family of Merari, Josh. xxi. 37. Eusebius says, that in his time the Romans kept a garrison here.

MEPHIBOSHETH, מפיבשת, out of my mouth proceeds reproach; from פה pe, a mouth, and בוש bosh, shame.

I. MEPHIBOSHETH, or Miphiboseth; son of Saul, and of his concubine Rizpah: delivered up by David to the Gibeonites, to be hanged before the Lord. 2 Sam. xxi. 8, 9.

II. MEPHIBOSHETH, son of Jonathan, otherwise named Meribbaal, (vide MERIBBAAL.) Mephiboseth was very young, when his father Jonathan was killed in the battle of Gilboa, 2 Sam. iv. 4. His nurse was in such consternation at this news, that she let the child fall, who from this accident was lame all his life. When David found himself in peaceable possession of the kingdom, he sought for all that remained of the house of Saul, that he might be kind to them in consideration of the friendſhip between him and Jonathan. He learned that there was a ſon of Jonathan's, called Mephiboſheth, in the houſe of Ziba, a ſervant of Saul. The king ſent for him, and told him, that for the ſake of Jonathan his father he would ſhew kindneſs to him, that he ſhould have his grandfather's eſtate, and eat always at his table. At the ſame time he told Ziba, that he had given Mephiboſheth all that belonged to Saul, 2 Sam. ix. 1, &c.

Some years after this, when Abſalom forced his father to leave Jeruſalem, Mephiboſheth ordered his ſervant Ziba to ſaddle him an aſs, that he might accompany David; for being lame, he could not go on foot. But Ziba went after David himſelf with two aſſes loaden with proviſions, and told him that Mephiboſheth ſtaid at Jeruſalem, in hopes that the people of Iſrael would reſtore him to the throne of his anceſtors. Then ſays David to Ziba, I give to you all that belonged to Mephiboſheth. But when David returned to Jeruſalem in peace, Mephiboſheth appeared before him in deep mourning, having neither waſhed his feet, nor ſhaved his beard, ſince the king went. When David ſaw him he learned the truth from him: nevertheleſs Ziba continued to poſſeſs half his eſtate. Mephiboſheth left a ſon named Micha. The time of his death is not known. 1 Chron. viii. 34. Vide MERIBBAAL.

MERAB, מרב, he that fights, or diſputes; from רוב rub: otherwiſe, that multiplies; from רבה rabah: or miſtreſs, according to the Syriac.

MERAB, or Merob, eldeſt daughter of king Saul. She was promiſed to David in marriage, in reward for his victory over Goliath; nevertheleſs, Saul gave her to Adriel, the ſon of Barzillai the Meholathite, 1 Sam. xiv. 49. xviii. 17, 19. Merab had ſix ſons by him, who were delivered to the Gibeonites, and hanged before the Lord. The text inſinuates, that the ſix men that were delivered to the Gibeonites, were the ſons of Michal, the daughter of Saul, and wife of Adriel. But there is great ſuſpicion, that the name of Michal is ſlipped into the text inſtead of Merob. For 1. Michal did not marry Adriel, but Phaltiel; and, 2. We no where read that Michal had ſix ſons. Others think, theſe ſix were ſons of Merob by birth, but of Michal by adoption.

MERAIAH, מריה, ἀμαρίας, bitterneſs; from מרר marar: otherwiſe, myrrh; from מור mor: otherwiſe, the Lord is my maſter; from מרה marah, which in Syriac ſignifies maſter, a title which the Jews gave their rabbins, and from יה jah, the Lord.

MERAIAH, or Maraia, ſon of Saraiah, of the race of the prieſts. He returned to Jeruſalem from Babylon, Nehem. xii. 12.

MERAIOTH, מריות, bitterneſs: otherwiſe, rebellions; from מרה marah; otherwiſe, permutations and changes; from the word מור mur.

I. MERAIOTH, or Maraioth, ſon of Ahitub, high-prieſt of the Jews. 1 Chron. ix. 11.

II. MERAIOTH, ſon of Zerahiah, is probably the ſame as before-mentioned; Ezra vii. 3.

III. MERAIOTH, Merajoth, a prieſt of the race of Aaron, ſon of Zerahiah, and father of Amariah, put among the high-prieſts, 1 Chron. vi. 6.

MERAN, or Merrha. Baruch iii. 23. ſpeaks of the merchants of Meran, whom he joins with the Hagarenes, and with the Inhabitants of Theman, who valued themſelves on their ſuperior underſtanding. All theſe people, without doubt, were Arabians, but we cannot ſay exactly where Meran was. We know Marana on the Red-Sea, Mariaba in Arabia Felix, and Marace, a place of trade in the ſame country.

MERARI, מררי bitter; from מרר marar: otherwiſe, to provoke.

I. MERARI, third ſon of Levi, and father of Mahali and Muſhi, Exod. vi. 19.

II. MERARI, ſon of Ox, and father of Judith, of the tribe of Simeon, Judith viii. 1.

MERCURY, Ἑρμῆς, from the Latin word mercari, to buy or ſell. In Greek, Hermes, orator, or interpreter.

MERCURY, ſon of Jupiter and Maia, a fabulous god of the ancient heathen, the meſſenger of the other gods, the deity that preſided over learning, eloquence, and traffick. The Greeks named him Hermes, an interpreter, becauſe they conſidered him as interpreter of the will of the gods. Probably for this reaſon the people of Lyſtra having heard St. Paul preach, and having ſeen him heal a lame man, would have offered ſacrifices to him, as if he had been Mercury; and to St. Barnabas as if he had been Jupiter, probably becauſe of his venerable aſpect. Acts xiv. 11.

MERCY, Miſericordia. This virtue inſpires us with compaſſion for our brethren, and inclines us to aſſiſt them in their neceſſities. That works of mercy may be acceptable to God, as Chriſt has promiſed us, Mat. v. 7. it is not enough that they proceed from a natural ſentiment of humanity, but they muſt be performed for the ſake of God, and from truly pious motives. In Scripture Mercy and Truth are commonly joined together, to ſhew the goodneſs that precedes, and the faithfulneſs that accompanies the promiſes; or, a goodneſs, a clemency, a mercy that is conſtant and faithful, and that does not deceive. Mercy is alſo taken for favours and benefits received from God or man: for probity, juſtice, goodneſs. Merciful men, in Hebrew, Charſdim, are men of piety and goodneſs. Mercy is often taken for giving of alms. Prov. xiv. 34. xvi. 6. Zach. vii. 9.

MERCY-SEAT, Propitiatorium, otherwiſe Oraculum; in Hebrew, capporeth, in Greek, hilaſterion. Vide ORACLE.

MERED, מרד, rebellious: from מרר marar: otherwiſe, that deſcends; from רדד radad: otherwiſe, that commands; from רדה radah.

MEREMOTH, מרמות, μαριμὼθ, bitterneſs, or myrrh of death; from מרר marar, bitterneſs, or מור mor, myrrh, and מות muth, death: otherwiſe, elevations; from רום rum: otherwiſe, deceit; from רמה ramah.

I. MEREMOTH, or Maremath, ſon of Urijah; one who put away his ſtrange wife. Ezra x. 36.

II. MEREMOTH, a prieſt, who returned from the captivity of Babylon, Nehem. iii. 44. and who ſet up the veſſels of gold and ſilver, which had been reſtored to the temple, by king Artaxerxes, when Ezra returned from Babylon to Judæa, Ezra viii. 33. A. M. 3537, ante A. D. 467.

MERES, מרס, μέρες, watering, diſtillation; from רסס raſas: or, according to the Syriack, bruiſing, or wound. This is a Perſian word.

MERES, or Mares, a chief prince of the court of Ahaſuerus, Eſth. i. 14.

MERIBAH, מרבה, diſpute, quarrel; from רוב rub. Exod. xvii. 7. Numb. xx. 13.

MERIB-BAAL, מריב-בעל, rebellion: or he that reſiſts Baal, and ſtrives againſt the idol; from רוב rub, to conteſt, and בעל baal, idol: or he that oppoſes him who governs or poſſeſſes; from the ſame.

MERIB-BAAL, or Meribaal, ſon of Jonathan, and father of Micah, 1 Chron. viii. 34. ix. 40. Merib-baal is Mephiboſheth, 2 Sam. iv. 4. and ix. 12. The Hebrews ſcrupled pronouncing the name of Baal; ſo that inſtead of Mephi-baal or Meri-baal, they choſe to ſay Mephiboſheth, or Meriboſheth. Boſheth in Hebrew, ſignifies ſhame, confuſion, filth; Baal ſignifies the Maſter, the huſband, the god Baal.

MERODACH, מראדך, bitter, contrition: from מרר marah, bitter, and דכה dacah, contrite, bruiſed: otherwiſe, bruiſed myrrh; from מור mor, myrrh, and דכה dacah, bruiſed: or according to the Syriack and Hebrew, very pure myrrh. According to the Syriack, the little Lord; from מרא mara, maſter, or Lord, and דך dac, little, poor. This is the name of one of the Chaldee deities, the true etymology of which is not to be found in the Hebrew.

MERODACH, an ancient king of Babylon, placed among the gods, and worſhipped by the Babylonians. Jeremiah l. 2. ſpeaking of the ruin of Babylon ſays, Babylon is taken, Bel, is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces, her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces. We find certain kings of Babylon, whoſe names compriſe that of Merodach, e. gr. Evil-merodach, and Merodach-baladan. Evil-merodach was the ſon of Nebuchadnezzar the Great. Merodach-Baladan, ſon of Baladan king of Babylon, having heard that Hezekiah had been cured miraculouſly, and that the ſun had gone backward in aſſurance of his recovery, ſent him preſents and compliments on the recovery of his health, Iſai. xxxix. 1. Ptolemy calls him Mardocempadus, and ſays he began to reign at Babylon twenty-ſix years after the Æra of Nabonaſſar: A. M. 3283, ante A D. 721.

MERODACH-BALADAN, or Merodach, ſon of Baladan, the ſame as Mardocempadus, ſon of Beleſis, or of Nabonaſſar. See the foregoing article, and USHER upon A. M. 3283.

MEROE, an iſland, or rather a peninſula, in the higher Egypt. It lies between two arms of the Nile. Its ancient name was Saba, and Joſephus believed, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. that from hence the queen of Sheba came to prove the wiſdom of Solomon. 1 Kings x. 1. Joſephus, Origin. Homil. ii. in Cant. Grot. in 3 Reg. 10. ſays, that Cambyſes changed its ancient name Saba into that of Meroe, having there built the city of Meroe in honour of his ſiſter. This country was uſually governed by queens. But theſe reaſons have not convinced others, who were of opinion that the queen of Sheba came from Arabia Fœlix.

MEROM, מרום, μερὼμ, waters, or rivers, Joſh. xi. 5. or, according to St. Jerome, a village called Merom, eminences, elevations; from רמם ramam, or רום rum.

MEROM, or Marom; the waters of Merom, Joſh. xi. 5. are the waters of Semechon, as is believed; ſince Hazor, where Jabin reigned, was on this lake, as Joſephus affirms, Antiq. lib. v. cap. 5. and Joſhua ſays, xi. 5. that Jabin, and the other confederate kings, met together on the waters of Merom. It ſhould ſeem then that Merom and Semechon are the ſame; but this conſequence does not neceſſarily follow. We agree with Joſephus, that the city of Hazor was on the lake Semechon; but where is it ſaid that it was on the waters of Merom? Where is it ſaid that the kings in alliance encamped at the waters of Semechon, and near Hazor, to fight with Joſhua? It is much more probable that they advanced as far as the brook Kiſhon, and to the paſs that led into their country, to hinder Joſhua from entering it, or even to attack him in the country he had had over-run, than that they waited for him in the midſt of their own country, leaving all Galilee, &c. at his mercy.

Our proofs that Merom and Merome, and the waters of Merom, were near Kiſhon, Carmel, Taanach, are theſe, 1. Euſebius places the city of Merom or Merus, at twelve miles from Sebaſte, towards Dothaim. 2. The tribes of Zebulun and Naphthali expoſed themſelves to great danger, in the battle againſt Siſera, in the plains of Merome, Judges v. 18. 3. This battle was certainly fought on the Kiſhon, at Taanach and Megiddo, Judges v. 19. But Taanach, Merom and Megiddo are ſituate on this ſide Kiſhon, and at the foot of Carmel. Here therefore not only the battle between Joſhua and Jabin was fought, but alſo that between Barak and Siſera. This paſs was of great importance, and it was very difficult to march an army any other way, either from Judæa into Phœnicia or Galilee, or from Phœnicia into Judæa.

MEROME, מרומי, ὕψη ἀρχῆ, the name of a place, Judg. v. 18. heighth, or elevation; from רום rum: otherwiſe, the bitterneſs of the waters; from מרר marar, bitterneſs, and מי mi waters.

MEROME. Mention is made of the country, or, according to the Hebrew, of the Fields of Merome, Jud. v. 13. Heb. & Vulg. It is there ſaid that Zebulun and Naphtali expoſed their lives to great danger in the fields of Merome, [in the high places of the Field, in our Engliſh tranſlation.] It is thought that Merome is the Merom mentioned by Joſhua, when Jabin, and the kings of the Canaanites in confederacy with him, were overcome at the waters of Merom. The greater part of commentators believe, that the waters of Merom are the lake Semechon in the higher Galilee. Joſephus has given occaſion to this opinion, but ſee the foregoing Article.

MERONOTHITE, מרונתי, μεραθὼν, my ſong? from רנן ranan, ſong, and the pronoun י my: otherwiſe, cry of joy, or of praiſe; from רנה ranah: or, according to the Syriack, he that governs.

MEROZ, מרוז, ſecret; from רז raz, according to the Chaldeans: otherwiſe, leanneſs; from רזה raſah.

MEROZ, Judg. v. 23. a place in the neighbourhood of the brook Kiſhon, whoſe inhabitants refuſing to aſſiſt their brethren when they fought againſt Siſera, were put under anathema. Curſe ye Meroz, ſays the angel of the Lord; curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof: becauſe they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord againſt the mighty. Some have thought that Meroz is the ſame as Merrus or Merom, above-mentioned; and this perhaps is the moſt probable opinion. Others will have it, that Meroz was a mighty man, who dwelt near the Kiſhon, who not coming to aſſiſt Barak and Deborah, was excommunicated by the angel of the Lord, with the ſound of four hundred trumpets, (Ita Rabbini Gemar. Babyl. ad Tit. Woed. Caton. i. 3. Jarchi, &c.) The angel of the Lord, according to ſome, was Barak, the general of the Lord's army: according to others he was the high-prieſt for the time being, or a prophet, or the angel Michael, or ſome other angel. Some believe that Meroz was the angel of the Canaanites, who was curſed by Michael, the guardian angel of Iſrael.

MESHA, משא, burden, elevation, raiſing of water.

MESHA, or Meſſa; Moſes ſays, Gen. x. 27, 28, 29, 30, that the children of Joktan inhabited the country from Meſha, as thou goeſt unto Sephar, a mountain of the eaſt. Maſh, the ſon of Aram, probably gave his name to Mount Maſius, which we underſtand here by the name Meſha; and the ſons of Joktan poſſeſſed the whole country between Mount Maſius, and the mountains of Sephar, or Sepharvaim.

MESHA, מישע, μεσὰ, ſalvation, or ſaved; from משה maſhah: otherwiſe, water of health, or he that looks upon the waters; from מי mi, the waters and משה maſha, to behold.

I. MESHA, or Moſa, ſon of Bela and Hodeſh, 1 Chron. viii. 9.

II. MESHA, or Meſa, king of Moab, 2 Kings iii. 4. He fed a great number of flocks, and paid the king of Iſrael a hundred thouſand lambs, and as many rams, with their fleeces. After the death of Ahab, he revolted againſt Jehoram king of Iſrael, who declared war againſt him, and called to his aſſiſtance Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, who with the king of Idumea, then in ſubjection to him, marched againſt Meſha, beat him, and forced him to retire to Areopolis, his capital. Here they beſieged him ſo cloſely, that not being able to eſcape through the camp of the Idumæans, which he attacked, he took his own ſon, the preſumptive heir to his crown, brought him upon the wall of the city, and was going to ſacrifice him. But the kings of Judah, Iſrael, and Edom, ſeeing this, retired without taking the town, vide FRAGMENT, No. CLVI. making a great ſpoil in the land of Moab. See JEHORAM and JEHOSHAPHAT, and MOAB.

III. MESHA, or Meſſa, or Meſſach. The high-prieſt Jehoiada, deſiring to ſet the young king Joaſh on the throne of Judah, placed armed men in different parts of the temple; particularly at the houſe of Meſha. Cuſtodietis excubias domûs Meſſa, 4 Reg. xi. 6. Vulgate. IV. MESHA, IV. MESHA, or Meſa, eldeſt ſon of Caleb, ſon of Heſron, different from Caleb, ſon of Jephunneh; he was father of Ziph, or of the Ziphians, in the tribe of Judah, 1 Chron. ii. 42.

MESHACH, מישך, in Heb. Miſael, Dan. i. 7. That draws with force; from משך maſhac: or that ſurrounds the waters; from מי mi, the waters, and שוך ſhuc, to ſurround, A Chaldee word.

MESHACH, or Miſac, the Chaldean name given to Miſhael, companion of Daniel. Daniel i. 7.

MESHECH, משך, who is drawn by force; from משך maſhac: otherwiſe, included, ſhut up, ſurrounded; from שוך ſhuc.

MESHECH, or Moſoc, ſixth ſon of Japhet, Gen. x. 2. is thought to be father of the Moſques, a people between Iberia and Armenia. Others believe that the Muſcovites are deſcended from Meſhech, which opinion to us ſeems likely. See Gen. x. 2. Ezek. xxvii. 13. xxxii. 26. xxxviii. 2, 3. xxxix. 1.

MESHELEMIAH, משלמיהו, peace, or perfection, or retribution of the Lord: or the Lord is my recompence, or my happineſs; from שלם ſhalam: otherwiſe, proverbs, or rule of the Lord; from משל maſhal, to govern, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. MESHELEMIAH, or Moſellamia, father of Zechariah, a Levite and porter of the temple, 1 Chron. ix. 21.

II. MESHELEMIAH, or Meſelemia, ſon of Korah, and father of Zachariah, Jediael, Zebadiah, Jathniel, Elam, Jehohanan, Elioenai, who had the office of guards or porters in the temple. 1 Chron. xxvi. 2, 9.

MESHEZABEEL, משיזבאל, that takes away the flowing of God; from מוש muſh, to take away, and זיב zub, flowing, and אל el, God, This is a Chaldee word, ſignifying, that God delivers, has delivered, or will deliver; from שיזב ſhezib, and אל el, God.

MESHILLEMITH, משלמית, μασελμὼθ, pacific, perfect, or that recompenſes; from שלם ſhalam: otherwiſe, parable, or power of death; from משל maſhal, parable, and מות muth, death.

MESHILLEMITH, or Moſollamith, father of Meſhullam, and ſon of Immer, 1 Chron. ix. 12.

MESHILLEMOTH, משלמות, ματαλμὼθ, from the ſame root.

I. MESHILLEMOTH, or Moſollamoth, father of Berachiah, 2 Chron. xxviii. 12.

II. MESHILLEMOTH, father of Ahaſaia, Nehem. xi. 13.

MESHOBAB, משובא, who is returned, or converted, from שוב ſhub.

MESHULLAM, משלם, μεσολὰμ, pacific, or perfect, or that recompences; from שלם ſhalam: otherwiſe, their parable, their power; from משל maſhal, and the pronoun מ am, theirs.

I. MESHULLAM, or Moſallam, ſon of Hodaviah, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. ix. 7.

II. MESHULLAM, ſon of Shephatiah. 1 Chron. ix. 8.

III. MESHULLAM, ſon of Abihail, 1 Chron. v. 13.

IV. MESHULLAM, ſon of Meſhillemith, 1 Chron. ix. 12.

V. MESHULLAM, deſcendant of Cohath, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.

VI. MESHULLAM, ſon of Beſodeiah, Nehem. iii. 6.

VII. MESHULLAM, ſon of Berechiah, Nehem. iii. 4.

MESHULLEMETH, משלמת, perfection, peace, recompence, parable, or dominion of death; from שלם ſhalam, or משל maſhal, and מות muth, death.

MESHULLEMETH, or Meſalemeth, wife of Manaſſeh king of Judah, daughter of Haruz, of the city of Jotbah, 2 Kings xxi. 19.

MESOBAH, מצביה, ſtation of the Lord; from מצב matzab, ſtation, and יה jah, the Lord, otherwiſe, צבע tſabah, a kid or goat.

MESOBAH, or Maſebia, the name of a place. 1 Chron. xi. 47.

MESOPOTAMIA, ארם־נהרים, in Hebrew, Aram-naharaim; i. e. Syria of the two rivers; from Aram, Syria, and נהרים neharaim, the two rivers; The Greek word Meſopotamia, alſo ſignifies between two rivers; from μέσος, middle, and ποταμος, river.

MESOPOTAMIA, a famous province, ſituated between the rivers Tigris and Euphrates. The Hebrews call it Aram Naharaim, or Aram of the rivers, becauſe it was firſt peopled by Aram, father of the Syrians, and is ſituated between two rivers. This country is celebrated in Scripture as the firſt dwelling of men after the deluge; and becauſe it gave birth to Phaleg, Heber, Terah, Abraham, Nahor, Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Leah, and to the ſons of Jacob. Babylon was in the ancient Meſopotamia, till by vaſt labour and induſtry the two rivers Tigris and Euphrates were re-united in one channel. The plains of Shinar were in this country. It was often called Meſopotamia Syriæ, becauſe it was inhabited by the Arameans, or Syrians: and ſometimes Padan-aram, Gen. xxviii. 2, &c. Heb. בדנה ארם, the plains of Aram: or Sede-aram, the fields of Aram; to diſtinguiſh them from the barren and uncultivated mountains of the ſame country. Balaam, ſon of Beor, was of Meſopotamia. Deut. xxiii. 4. Chuſhan-riſhathaim, king of Meſopotamia, ſubdued the Hebrews. Judg. iii. 8.

Beſide the country commonly called Meſopotamia in Greek, and Aram Naharaim in Hebrew, or Syria of the two rivers, Harduin, Chron. Vet. Teſt. p. 552, mentions another which was in Syria between the rivers Marſyas and Orontes. This

This opinion is founded on what follows. Firſt, the term Meſopotamia ſignifies ſimply a country lying between two rivers; ſo that this name may be given to any country in ſuch a ſituation, whatever rivers encloſe it. Secondly, the title of Pſalm lx intimates, that David burnt Meſopotamia of Syria, and Syria of Zobal. But it is known that David did not make war with king Zoba, but to enlarge his conqueſts as far as the Euphrates, and that Syria of Zoba was beyond this river. Thirdly, the book of Judith ſays, ii. 24. that Holofernes went over Euphrates, and went through Meſopotamia; and deſtroyed all the high cities. Certain it is, that this general came out of Aſſyria. Meſopotamia, properly ſo called, was in obedience to Nebuchadnezzar his maſter. He therefore paſſed over the Euphrates into the Meſopotamia of Syria of which we are ſpeaking; very different from that known to the Greeks and Latins between the Tigris and Euphrates.

To chuſe a ſide in this difficulty, we muſt enquire whether theſe objections are ſtrong enough to ſet aſide the general opinion of geographers; who acknowledge but one Meſopotamia, i. e. Aram-Naharaim. For if the texts on which the objection is founded can be explained, without the expedient of a ſecond Meſopotamia, we ought not to have recourſe to it. As to the title of Pſalm lx. it is of little authority, ſince the greater part of the titles of the Pſalms have been placed there long after the authors compoſed them. Beſides, it may be explained by ſaying, that David fought with Meſopotamia of Syria; i. e. that he conquered the auxiliary troops which came from Meſopotamia beyond the Euphrates, to the aſſiſtance of Hadarezar and the Ammonites, as expreſly ſaid, 2 Sam. x. 16, 19.

As to the paſſage of Judith, it may be ſaid, that Holofernes paſſed the Euphrates twice, by himſelf in perſon, or by his captains. The firſt time when he came into Syria and Cilicia, and reduced thoſe provinces. The ſecond time when he had conquered them, and when he repaſſed the Euphrates to reduce ſome other people. We do not affirm that he paſſed in his own perſon through all the countries mentioned in Judith. It is ſufficient if this was performed under his orders, and by his troops. Therefore nothing in the two texts objected obliges us to acknowledge this ſecond Meſopotamia.

MESSIAS, or MESSIAH, משיח, μεσσίας, χριστὸς, anointed; from משיח maſhiach. In Greek, Chriſtos, which ſignifies the ſame thing.

MESSIAH, or Meſſias. This word comes from the Hebrew (משה, maſhah, unxit: משיח meſhiah, unctus) to anoint. It is given principally, and by way of eminence, to that ſovereign deliverer formerly expected by the Jews, and expected by them to this day. They uſed to anoint kings, high-prieſts, and ſometimes prophets. Saul, David, Solomon, and Joaſh, kings of Judah, received the royal unction. Aaron and his ſons received the ſacerdotal unction, and Eliſha, the diſciple of Elijah, received the prophetic unction, 1 Kings xix. 16. But ſometimes the phraſe, to anoint for an employment, ſignifies ſimply a particular deſignation or choice for ſuch an employment. Vide Theodoret. in Iſai. xlv. 1. & in Pſal. cv. 15. It is ſaid, 2 Sam. xix. 10. that the Iſraelites had anointed Abſalom to be their king, yet it does not appear that he received the royal unction. The Lord commanded Elijah to anoint Hazael to be king over Syria, 1 Kings xix. 15. but we do not find that the prophet literally performed the order. His ſucceſſor Eliſha foretold to Hazael that he ſhould reign, 2 Kings viii. 11, 12, 13, 14. yet he gave him not the royal unction; at leaſt the Scripture mentions nothing of it; and probably it was not the cuſtom to give the unction to the kings of Damaſcus. Cyrus, who founded the empire of the Perſians, and who ſet the Jews at liberty, is called, Iſa. xlv. 1. the anointed of the Lord, Thus ſaith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus. In Ezekiel, xxviii. 14. the name of Meſſiah is given to the king of Tyre, Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth. In Eccleſiaſticus xlviii. 8. we read that Eliſha anointed kings for vengeance. He anointed Jehu king of Iſrael by the hands of a prophet whom he ſent, and he acquainted Hazael by word of mouth, that he ſhould reign over Damaſcus and Syria.

This is the name attributed by the Hebrews to that Saviour and deliverer whom they expected, and who was promiſed to them by all the prophets. As the holy unction was given to kings, prieſts and prophets, by deſcribing the promiſed Saviour of the world, under the name of Chriſt, Anointed, or Meſſiah, it was ſufficiently evidenced, that the qualities of king, prophet, and high-prieſt, would eminently center in him, and that he ſhould exerciſe them not only over the Jews, but over all mankind; and particularly over thoſe who ſhould believe in him, as their ſaviour, their king, their prieſt, and their prophet.

St. Peter and the other believers being aſſembled together, Acts iv. 27. ſay to God from Pſalm ii. Why did the Heathen rage, and the people imagine vain things? The kings of the earth ſtood up, and the rulers were gathered together againſt the Lord, and againſt his Chriſt. For of a truth againſt thy holy holy child Jeſus, whom thou haſt anointed, both Herod and Pontius Pilate, with the Gentiles and the people of Iſrael, were gathered together.

St. Luke ſays, iv. 18. that our Saviour entering a ſynagogue at Nazareth, opened the book of the prophet Iſaiah, where he read, The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, becauſe he hath anointed me to preach the goſpel to the poor. After which he ſhewed them, that this prophecy was accompliſhed in his own perſon. St. Peter ſpeaking to Cornelius the centurion, and to thoſe who were with him, Acts x. 36, 37. tells them that the Lord had ſent peace by Jeſus Chriſt, whom God had anointed with the Holy Ghoſt, and with power. St. Paul ſays to the Corinthians, 2 Cor. i. 21, 22. Now he which ſtabliſheth us with you, in Chriſt, and hath anointed us, is God; who hath alſo ſealed us, and given the earneſt of the Spirit in our heart.

It is not recorded, that Jeſus Chriſt ever received any external, official, unction. The unction that the prophets and the apoſtles ſpeak of, is the ſpiritual and internal unction of grace, and of the Holy Ghoſt, of which the outward unction, with which kings, prieſts, and prophets were anciently anointed, was but the figure and ſymbol. [Nevertheleſs, many have ſuppoſed, and I ſee no harm in it, that when the Spirit deſcended on Jeſus at his baptiſm, he then received a peculiar, ſolemn, and appropriate unction.] Jeſus Chriſt united in his own perſon the offices of king, prophet, and prieſt, and eminently included in himſelf whatever the law and the prophets had promiſed or figured, that was moſt excellent or moſt perfect. Chriſtians, his diſciples and his children, enjoy, in ſome ſenſe, the ſame prerogatives; but ye are a choſen generation, a royal prieſthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye ſhould ſhew forth the praiſes of him that hath called you out of darkneſs into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. ii. 9. But all this muſt be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe, of the grace of the Holy Ghoſt; his holy unction poured into our hearts.

The name Meſſiah, Anointed, or Chriſt, was given to the kings, and to the high-prieſts of the Hebrews. The Lord is witneſs againſt you, and his anointed, 1 Sam. xii. 3, 5. i. e. the Lord and the king whom he has eſtabliſhed. And David ſays in ſeveral places, God forbid that I ſhould lay my hand on the Lord's anointed. The patriarchs and prophets are alſo repreſented by the name of Meſſiahs, or the Lord's anointed. Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm, Pſal. cv. 15. But this name belongs to the Meſſiah by way of excellence, who was the object of the deſire and expectation of the ſaints. Hannah the mother of Samuel plainly alludes to him, when at the end of her hymn, and in a time that there was no king in Iſrael, ſhe ſays, 1 Sam. ii. 10. The Lord ſhall judge the ends of the earth, and he ſhall give ſtrength unto his king, and exalt the horn of his anointed; i. e. the glory, the ſtrength, the power of his Chriſt, or his Meſſiah. And the Pſalmiſt, ii. 2. The kings of the earth ſet themſelves againſt the Lord, and againſt his Meſſiah, or anointed. And Pſal. xlv. 7. Therefore God thy God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladneſs above thy fellows. And Jeremiah, Lam. iv. 20. The breath of our noſtrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits. Daniel foretels the death of Jeſus Chriſt under the name of Meſſiah the Lord. And after three ſcore and two weeks ſhall Meſſiah be cut off, but not for himſelf. Dan. ix. 26. Laſtly, Habakkuk ſays, iii. 13. Thou wenteſt forth for the ſalvation of thy people, even for ſalvation with thine anointed. It would be needleſs to bring any teſtimonies from the New Teſtament, to prove Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, ſince theſe occur in almoſt every line.

The Greek word Chriſtos, from whence comes Chriſt and Chriſtian, exactly anſwers to the Hebrew Meſſiah, which ſignifies him who has received unction; a king, a prieſt. The Greeks alſo uſe the term Eleimmenos, which has the ſame ſignification as Chriſtos.

The ancient Hebrews, being inſtructed by the prophets, had clear notions of the Meſſiah: but theſe were depraved by little and little, ſo that when Jeſus appeared in Judæa, the Jews entertained a falſe conception of the Meſſiah, expecting a temporal monarch and conqueror, who ſhould ſubject the whole world. Whence it came to paſs, they were ſcandalized at the outward appearance, the humility, and ſeeming weakneſs of our Saviour. The modern Jews, lying under ſtill greater miſtakes, form to themſelves chimerical ideas of the Meſſiah, utterly unknown to their forefathers.

The ancient prophets had foretold, that Meſſiah ſhould be God and man, exalted and abaſed, maſter and ſervant, prieſt and victim, king and ſubject, mortal and a victor over death, rich and poor: a king, a conqueror, glorious; a man of griefs, involved in infirmities, unknown, in a ſtate of abjection and humiliation. All theſe contrarieties were to be reconciled in the perſon of the Meſſiah: as they really were in the perſon of Jeſus. It was known that the Meſſiah was to be born (1) of a Virgin, (2) of the tribe of Judah, (3) of the race of David, (4) in the village of Bethlehem. That he was to continue for ever, that his coming was to be concealed, that he was the great prophet promiſed in the law, that he was both the ſon and Lord of David, that he was to perform great miracles, that he ſhould reſtore all things, that he ſhould die and riſe again, that Elias ſhould be the forerunner of his appearance, that a proof of his verity ſhould be, the cure of the lepers, life reſtored to the dead, and the goſpel preached to the poor. That he ſhould not deſtroy the law, but ſhould perfect and fulfil it; that he ſhould be a ſtone of offence, and a ſtumbling-block, againſt which many ſhould bruiſe themſelves; that he ſhould ſuffer infinite oppoſitions and contradictions; that from his time idolatry and impiety ſhould be baniſhed, and that a ſtrange people ſhould ſubmit themſelves to his authority.

David,

When Jeſus appeared in Judæa, theſe notions were common among the Jews. Our Saviour appeals even to themſelves, and aſks, if theſe are not the characters of the Meſſiah? and, if they do not ſee their completion in himſelf? The evangeliſts take care to put the Jews in mind of them, proving hereby, that Jeſus is the Chriſt whom they expected. They quote the prophecies to them, which then were acknowledged to belong to the Meſſiah, though they have been controverted by the Jews ſince. It may be ſeen in the early fathers of the church, and in the moſt ancient Jewiſh authors, that in the beginning of Chriſtianity, they did not call in doubt ſeveral prophecies, which their forefathers underſtood of the Meſſiah. But in after ages they began to deny, that the paſſages we quote againſt them ſhould be underſtood of the Meſſiah, endeavouring to defend themſelves from arguments out of their own ſcriptures. After this they fell into new ſchemes, and new notions concerning the Meſſiah.

Some of them, as the famous Hillel, who lived, according to the Jews, before Chriſt, maintain that the Meſſiah was already come in the perſon of king Hezekiah. Others, that the belief of the coming of the Meſſiah is no article of faith, and he that denies this doctrine makes but a ſmall breach in the law; he only lops off a branch from the tree, without hurting the root. This was affirmed by Joſeph Albo the Jew, in a conference held in Spain, in the preſence of pope Benedict XIII. Buxtorf ſays, Synag. Jud. cap. 36, that the greater part of the modern Rabbins believe, that the Meſſiah has been come, a good while, but keeps himſelf concealed in ſome part of the world or other, and will not manifeſt himſelf, becauſe of the ſins of the Jews. Jarchi affirms, that the Hebrews believed the Meſſiah was born on the day of the laſt deſtruction of Jeruſalem by the Romans. Some aſſign him the terreſtrial paradiſe for his habitation, others the city of Rome, where according to the Talmudiſts, he keeps himſelf concealed among the leprous and infirm, at the gate of the city, expecting Elias to come to manifeſt him.

A great number believe he is not yet come, but they are ſtrangely divided about the time and circumſtances of his coming. Some expect him at the end of ſix thouſand years. They ſuppoſe Jeſus Chriſt to be born A. M. 3761. Add to this number 1800, it will make 5561, conſequently they have 439 years to expect ſtill. Kimchi, who lived in the twelfth century, was of opinion, that the coming of the Meſſiah was very near. David the grandſon of Maimonides was adviſed with in this matter; Maimonides himſelf had been conſulted about it; but neither of them could ſay any thing to the purpoſe. Maimonides pretended to have received certain prophecies from his anceſtors, importing that the gift of prophecy ſhould be reſtored to Iſrael after the ſame number of years from the time of Baalam, as had paſſed from the beginning of the world to Baalam's time. According to him Baalam prophecied A. M. 2488. If we double this number, we find the reſtoration of the gift of prophecy ſhould be A. M. 4976, i. e. A. D. 1316. But this concluſion has been found falſe. Some have fixed the end of their misfortunes to A. D. 1492, others A. D. 1598, others A. D. 1600, others yet later. Laſt of all, tired out with theſe uncertainties, they have pronounced an anathema againſt all, who ſhall pretend to calculate the time of the coming of the Meſſiah. Gemarr. Tit. Sanhedr. cap. xi.

To reconcile thoſe prophecies that ſeem to oppoſe each other, ſome have had recourſe to an hypotheſis of two Meſſiah's, one in a ſtate of humiliation, in poverty and ſufferings; the other in ſplendor, glory, and magnificence; but both of them to be mere men. The firſt is to proceed from the tribe of Joſeph, and the family of Ephraim: his father is to be called Huziel, and himſelf Nehemiah. He is to appear at the head of an army, compoſed of the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, of Benjamin and part of Gad, and ſhall make war with the Edomites, (thus they call the Chriſtians and the Romans, whoſe empire they are to deſtroy) and bring back the Jews in triumph to Jeruſalem.

The ſecond Meſſiah is to be of the race of David, is to bring the firſt Meſſiah to life again, to aſſemble all Iſrael, to raiſe thoſe that are dead, to rebuild the temple of Jeruſalem, and to rule over the whole world. He is to marry ſeveral wives, and to have many children, who are to ſucceed him after his death; for he is to die like other men. On this ſubject vide two diſſertations of F. Charles Joſeph Imbonatus, at the end of tom. v. of the Bibliotheca Rabbinica, concerning the coming of the Meſſiah; and alſo what Bartolocci has gathered in tom. i. of his Bibliotheca Rabbinica; and Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, tom. iv.

Jeſus Chriſt gives warning to his diſciples, that falſe prophets and falſe Meſſiahs ſhould ariſe; Mark xiii. 22. That they ſhould perform ſigns and wonders, by which even the elect themſelves would be in danger. The event has verified his prediction. Every age among the Jews has produced falſe prophets, and falſe Chriſts, who have ſucceeded in deceiving many of that nation. One appeared even in the age of Chriſt himſelf; I mean Simon Magus, who reported at Samaria that he was the great Power of God, Acts viii. 9. In the following century Barchochebas by his impoſtures drew the moſt terrible perſecution on the Jews that they had ever ſuffered. See BARCHOCHEBAS, ADRIAN, AKIBA.

About A. D. 434, there appeared in the Iſle of Candia a falſe Meſſiah called Moſes, who pretended to be the ancient Legiſlator of the Jews, deſcended from heaven to procure a glorious deliverance for the Jews of that iſland, by making them paſs over the ſea, into the Land of Promiſe, Socrat. Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. ii. cap. 38. The Jews of Candia were fools enough to be perſuaded by him; many of them jumped into the ſea, in expectation that it would open to give them a ſafe paſſage. A great number were drowned, and the reſt got out again as well as they could; the impoſtor was ſought for to be puniſhed, but he diſappeared. This made it ſuſpected that he might be ſome demon, who had aſſumed a human ſhape to abuſe the Jews.

A. D. 530, there appeared in Paleſtine a falſe Meſſiah called Julian; he gave himſelf out to be a conqueror, and aſſured his followers, that he would deliver them from the oppreſſion of the Chriſtians by force of arms. Miſled by ſuch promiſes, the Jews took arms, and killed many Chriſtians. But the emperor Juſtinian ſending troops, Julian was taken and executed, and his party diſperſed.

A. D. 714, a Jew called Serenus, pretended to the Spaniſh Jews, that he would conduct them to Paleſtine, and ſet up his empire there. Several believed in this new Meſſiah, forſook their country and their buſineſs, and began to follow him. But they ſoon found him out to be a cheat, and had time enough to repent of their credulity, Marca Hiſt. de Bearn, lib. ii.

The twelfth century was very fruitful in this kind of impoſtures. One appeared in France, who brought on his followers a ſevere rebuke from king Louis le Jeune; he was taken and put to death, but his name and country are not known. He appeared about A. D. 1137. The year following another ſtarted up in Perſia; his army was numerous, and hardy enough to offer battle to the king of Perſia. That prince choſe rather to compel the Jews in his dominions, to oblige this man to lay down his arms; the falſe Meſſiah anſwered, that the preſent ſucceſs of his undertaking was a warrant to him of the future, and that they had nothing to fear. However, at laſt he promiſed to quit his arms, if he might be reimburſed the charges he had been at in preparing for war. The king complied with this propoſal, but no ſooner was his army diſarmed, but the king forced the Jews to repay him, what he had paid to the impoſtor, Maimon. Epiſt. de Auſtrali Regione apud Vorſtium, Not. in Zemath. Solomon Ben-virga Schever Juda, p. 169.

In the ſame century were ſeen no fewer than ſeven or eight falſe Meſſiahs, not only in Spain, but in Arabia, in Perſia, in Moravia. The Moravian was ſaid to have the ſecret of making himſelf inviſible when he pleaſed, and to charm the eyes of thoſe that followed him. Another, called David Al-roi, was a conjurer, who by ſome falſe miracles deceived a great number of Jews, whom he perſuaded to take up arms. The king, amazed at the rapidity of his conqueſts, and at the multitude of his followers, ordered him to appear at court, with a promiſe of ſubmitting to him, if he could prove himſelf to be the true Meſſiah. David attended on the king, was put in priſon, but he came out again; was purſued, but he diſappeared: his voice was heard, but nothing was ſeen of him. The king ſet himſelf at the head of his army in hopes to catch him, and arrived at the banks of the river Goran, where he heard him cry out, O Fools, but he was not ſeen. A moment afterwards he was obſerved dividing the waters of the river with his cloak, when he paſſed over. The army followed him, but he was no more to be found. The king then wrote to the Jews in his dominions, to deliver up David to him, on penalty of all being maſſacred without any quarter. Zaccheus the head of the captivity, wrote to the impoſtor to deliver himſelf up and ſave the nation, but he made a jeſt of this. However, at laſt, the father-in-law of David, gained over by a great ſum of money, tempted him into his power, made him drunk, and then cut off his head.

James Zieglern, who died A. D. 1559, loudly proclaimed the coming of the Meſſiah. He maintained that he had been born fourteen years, and that he had ſeen him at Straſburg. He kept a

ſword and a ſcepter to put into his hands, as ſoon as he ſhould arrive at an age proper for fighting. Then he ſhould pull down antichriſt, and the Turkiſh empire; ſhould extend his monarchy to the utmoſt limits of the world, ſhould aſſemble a council at Conſtance, which would hold for twelve years, and in which all diſputes about religion ſhould be finally determined. But the Meſſiah did not appear, and this impoſture was manifeſt. Another viſionary called Philip Zieglern aroſe in Holland, A. D. 1624, and promiſed a Meſſiah whom he had ſeen, and who only waited for the converſion of the hearts of the Jews, in order to manifeſt himſelf.

All theſe impoſtures, and their ill ſucceſs, have not been able to cure the Jews of their whimſical notions, concerning the Meſſiah whom they expect. One of their nation, born at Aleppo, in the laſt century, called Zabatai Tzevi, attempted about A. D. 1666 to be received as the Meſſiah. He had concerted this deſign very early, and learned whatever might be neceſſary in the better acting of his part. He preached in the fields before the Turks, who only derided him; but his diſciples were in great admiration of him. He bragged that he could raiſe himſelf above the clouds, as Iſaiah had foretold, xiv. 14. And having aſked his diſciples if they had not ſeen him do it, he reproached the blindneſs of thoſe who had ſincerity enough not to affirm it. He was ſummoned before the heads of the ſynagogue at Smyrna, where he then reſided, and was condemned to death; but no one would execute this ſentence, ſo that they were contented to baniſh him.

Tzevi was three times married, but did not conſummate his marriages. Having gone through Greece, he came to Alexandria, and thence to Gaza, where he found a Jew called Nathan-Levi, or Benjamin, whom he perſuaded to act the part of the prophet Elias, who was to go before the Meſſiah. They came to Jeruſalem, Nathan declared Tzevi to be him whom they expected. Part of the Jews of the country were ſeduced into the cheat, but the wiſer ſort oppoſed him, and excommunicated him. He withdrew to Conſtantinople, and thence to Smyrna, whither Nathan-Levi ſent four ambaſſadors to him, who acknowledged him for the Meſſiah. This embaſſy impoſed on the people, and even on ſome of the doctors; they owned him as a king, and brought him preſents, that he might ſupport his royal dignity. Thoſe of a better underſtanding oppoſed in vain. They even pronounced two ſentences of death againſt him, but he was not concerned at it, becauſe he knew they dared not put them in execution. He waited on the Cadi of Smyrna, and put himſelf under his protection. The whole diſcourſe of the public was of Tzevi; he had a throne ſet up for himſelf, and another for his ſpouſe. He called himſelf The king of the kings of Iſrael, and Joſeph Tzevi his brother The king of the kings of Judah. He cauſed the name of the Ottoman emperor to be eraſed out of the liturgy, and ſubſtituted his own. Before he began the conqueſt of the empire, he diſtributed the offices and employments among his favourites.

He departed for Conſtantinople. The Grand Seignior being informed of it, ordered his vizier to ſeize him, to put him in priſon, and give him the baſtonade. They laid hold of him, and aſked him, why he aſſumed the title of a king? He anſwered, the Jews had compelled him. The vizier ordered him to priſon at the Dardanelles. The Jews thought it was for want of power to hurt him that Tzevi was ſpared. They corrupted the governor by great preſents, ſo that even in his priſon the impoſtor was entertained with all poſſible honours. At length the Grand Seignior cauſed Tzevi to be brought to Adrianople, and ordered him to be run through with a ſword, to try if he was invulnerable: but Tzevi choſe rather to turn Mahometan, than thus to ſuffer death: and ſuch was the concluſion of this famous tranſaction, Baſnage's Hiſtory of the Jews, tom. iii. lib. v. cap. 18.

METEMPSYCHOSIS. The notion of a metempſychoſis, or tranſmigration of the ſoul from one body to another, whatever the modern Jews may ſay, is not taught, either in the Old or New Teſtament. On the contrary, it appears by the law, by the prophets, and the apoſtles, that the ſouls of men after their death are in a fixed ſtate, and have no longer any concern with this preſent life. The Jews quote the paſſage of Job, xxxiii. 29, 30. to ſupport their opinion concerning the metempſychoſis. Lo all theſe things worketh God oftentimes (Heb. twice and thrice) with man. To bring back his ſoul from the pit, to be enlightened with the light of the living. As if Elihu alluded to a threefold revolution, or meant a threefold return of the ſoul to a body. But the true ſenſe of this paſſage is, that God preſerves the man who puts his confidence in him, three times, i. e. repeatedly—many times. There is great probability that the Jews imbibed this notion, during their long captivity at Babylon, or from their intercourſe with the Greeks, who themſelves had borrowed it from the Orientals.

At the time of Jeſus Chriſt this opinion was common among the Jews: whence they ſay, ſome thought Jeſus to be John the Baptiſt, others Elias, others Jeremiah, or one of the old prophets, Matth. xvi. 14. And when Herod the Tetrarch heard reports of the miracles of Jeſus, he ſaid, that John the Baptiſt, whom he had beheaded, was riſen again. Joſephus and Philo, ſpeak of the metempſychoſis as an opinion common in their nation. The Phariſees held, according to Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2. de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 12. that the ſouls of good men might eaſily return into another body, after the death of that which they had forſaken. He ſays alſo, de Bello, lib. vii. cap. 25. that the ſouls of wicked men ſometimes enter into the bodies of living men, which they poſſeſs and torment. Philo ſays, de Somniis, p. 586. & de Gigantibus, p. 285. that the ſouls which deſcend out of the air into the bodies which they animate, return again into the air after the death of thoſe bodies; that ſome of them retain a great abhorrence for matter, and dread to be again plunged into bodies; but that others return with good will, and natural deſire, to renewed life.

The Jewiſh doctors that treat of the tranſmigration, wrap it up in obſcure and myſterious terms, R. Iſaac Lorien. de Revolution. anim. cap. 4. Cabbalæ denudatæ, par. iii. p. 258. They believe that God has determined for all ſouls a certain degree of perfection, to which they cannot attain in the courſe of one life only. They therefore return ſeveral times upon the earth, and animate ſeveral bodies ſucceſſively, that they may fulfil all righteouſneſs; and practice all the commandments, negative and affirmative, without which they cannot arrive at the ſtate, which God intends for them. Whence is it, ſay they, that ſome people die in the prime of their youth? It is becauſe they have already acquired their degree of perfection, and have nothing remaining to be done in a frail and mortal body. Others, like Moſes, die with reluctance, becauſe they have not accompliſhed all their duties. Others, like Daniel, die with ſatisfaction, and even deſire death, becauſe nothing remains for them to do in this world.

They ſay, the metempſychoſis, or revolution of ſouls, is after two manners. The firſt when a ſoul enters a body already animated. Thus it was that Herod the Tetrarch imagined, that the ſoul of John the Baptiſt, whom he had cauſed to be beheaded a little before, was entered into the body of Jeſus Chriſt, in order to work miracles. Souls enter into bodies already animated, to acquire ſome new degree of perfection, or to aſſiſt that ſoul already in the body, in the works which God requires of it. They ſay, for example, that the ſoul of Moſes is to be united to that of the Meſſiah, &c.

The ſecond manner of tranſmigration, ſay they, is, when a ſoul enters into a body newly formed, either to expiate ſome crime it had committed in another body, or to acquire a greater degree of ſanctity. The Jews think this revolution is performed at leaſt three or four times. They even extend this tranſmigration to brute beaſts, and to inanimate things; and the number is not ſmall that maintains this opinion. The moſt famous of the Jewiſh doctors hold it, and pretend that Pythagoras, Plato, Virgil, and the ancient philoſophers that eſpouſed it, derived it from the writings of the prophets.

This notion is very ancient in the Eaſt. The Chineſe teach, that Xekiah an Indian philoſopher, born about a thouſand years before Jeſus Chriſt, was the firſt broacher of this doctrine in the Indies, from whence it ſpread into China, A. D. 65. The Chineſe pretend, that Xekiah was born eight thouſand times, and that his laſt birth was in the form of a white elephant. On this principle the Indians and Chineſe are ſo little ſcrupulous of putting themſelves to death, and do ſo often kill their children, when they find any difficulty in maintaining them. It is related that a king of this country having had the ſmall-pox, and ſeeing his face much diſfigured, could not endure to live under ſuch a frightful figure, but ordered his brother's ſon to cut his throat, who was afterwards burned. The ſtory of the Indian philoſopher Calanus is well known, who burned himſelf in the time of Alexander the Great.

The Indians look upon death with indifference, being fully perſuaded of the metempſychoſis. This opinion has produced in the Eaſt a great number of impoſtors and falſe Meſſiahs, who pretended to be animated by the ſouls of Adam, or of Moſes. For example, Akem-Ben-Aſha, a famous impoſtor, who appeared in the year 162 of the Hegira, and affirmed, that after the death of Adam God appeared to men under the ſhape of ſeveral prophets, and other great men, till he took a human figure in the perſon of Abu-Moſlem, prince of Koraſan; after whoſe death the Deity had paſſed and deſcended into his own perſon. From the ſame ſource thoſe fanatics proceeded, who gave divine honours to Abon-Giaſar-Almanſor, the ſecond calif of the race of the Abaſſides; into whom they pretended that the ſoul of Mahomet, or of ſome ancient prophet, had paſſed. From hence it is that they abſtain from killing any living creature, for fear of violating the ſoul of their father, or of ſome near relation, inhabiting thoſe animals. They do not ſo much as defend themſelves againſt wild beaſts; and they charitably redeem animals out of the hands of ſtrangers, who are about to kill them. See SOUL, and RESURRECTION.

METHUSAEL, מתושאל, who demands his death; from שאלה ſhelah, to demand, and מות muth, death, and the pronoun ו o, his: otherwiſe, death is his hell, or grave; from שאל ſheol, hell, or the tomb: otherwiſe, man that demands; from מתים methim, man, and שאלא ſhala, to demand.

METHUSAEL, or Matthuſael, ſon of Mehujael; of the race of Cain. Gen. iv. 18. He begat Lamech the bigamiſt.

METHUSEL'AH, מתושלה, he has ſent his death; from מות muth, death, and שלה ſhalach: otherwiſe, the arms of his death; from muth, death, and ſhalac or ſhelec, according to different readings, and the pronoun ו o, his: otherwiſe, according to the Hebrew and Syriac, ſpoil of his death: otherwiſe, man that demands; from meth, mortal man, and ſhaal, to demand.

METHUSELAH, ſon of Enoch, Gen. v. 21, 22, &c. Methuſelah was born A. M. 687. He begat Lamech A. M. 874, and died A. M. 1656, aged nine hundred ſixty-nine years; the greateſt age attained by any mortal man. This ſame year, A. M. 1656, was the year of the deluge.

St. Jerome in his Hebraical queſtions on Geneſis, mentions a famous queſtion that uſed to be debated, which is, that Methuſelah, according to the LXX. muſt have lived fourteen years after the deluge; or according to other copies, he died ſix years before the deluge: in which both accounts recede from the Hebrew text, which ſays he died the very year of the deluge. Thus the Seventy read—Methuſelah being an hundred and ſixty-ſeven years old begat Lamech, after which he lived yet eight hundred and two years, (or according to other copies ſeven hundred fourſcore and two years) and the whole number of his years was nine hundred ſixty-nine years. But if Lamech was born in the year of Methuſelah 167, and if he begat Noah at the age of 188 years, which was the 355th year of Methuſelah, the deluge happening in the 600th year of Noah, as the Scripture affirms, that is, in the year of Methuſelah 955, it muſt follow that the year of the deluge was 14 years before the death of Methuſelah. But we may admit, that the copies of the Septuagint have been injured in this place.

The Rabbins pretend that Methuſelah was a very learned man, that he was an hundred years at the ſchool of his father Enoch, that he wrote ſeveral works, and three hundred and thirty proverbs or parables. Eupolemus in Euſebius, Præparat. lib. ix. cap. 17. acquaints us, that Methuſelah, by the miniſtry of angels, learned all kinds of knowledge. Solomon Jarchi thinks he died ſeven-days before the deluge, that his ſon Noah might have time to lament him; and the book of Jalkut ſays, that then a voice was heard from heaven, as if the angels themſelves bewailed the death of Methuſelah.

METRETA; this word comes from the Greek Metretes, a ſort of meaſure.

The Metreta of the Greeks was very near to the Bath of the Hebrews. St. John ſays, ii. 6. that at the marriage of Cana, there were ſix large urns, or ſtone water-pots, containing about two or three firkins (μετρητὰς) a piece; which Chriſt changed into excellent wine.

MEUZAL, מאוזל, μοοζιὴλ, that goes out, or goes away; from אזל azal. [Vide Eng. tranſ. Ezek. xxvii. 19. "going to and fro."—]

MEUZAL, or Moſel, a city mentioned by Ezekiel, xxvii. 19. מאוזל ודן ויון, whoſe ſituation is unknown. The Hebrew of Ezekiel may be tranſlated as the Vulgate has done, Dan & Græcia & Moſel; or Dan and Javan of Ozel or Uſal. Bochart, Phaleg, lib. ii. cap. 22. thinks that by Javan of Ozel or Uzal, are meant the deſcendants of Javan, whoſe habitation was at Uſal, a city of Arabia. Inſtead of Javan the LXX. read Jain, wine; alſo Aſel or Aſael, and not Moſel. The Syriac has Dan and Javan of Uzel; the Arabic, they brought to your fairs wine of aïl. The Chaldee, Dan and Javan brought you merchandizes in troops, &c. I ſuſpect ſome alteration in this paſſage. Dan and Javan are too far diſtant from each other, to be thus brought together.

MEZAHAB, מיזהב, μεζοὰβ, who is gilded; from זהב zahab, gold: otherwiſe, gilded waters; from מי mi, waters, and זהב zahab, gold: otherwiſe, what is gold; from the conjunction מי mi, what is, and זהב zahab, gold.

MEZAHAB, or Mezaab, mother of Matred, Gen. xxxvi. 39.

MEZUZOTH. This name the Jews give to certain pieces of parchment, that they fix in the door poſts of their houſes; taking literally what Moſes orders, Deut. vi. 9, 11, 13. Thou ſhalt never forget the laws of thy God, but thou ſhalt write them on the poſts of thy houſe, and on thy gates. They pretend, that to avoid making themſelves ridiculous, by writing the commandments of God without their doors, or rather to avoid expoſing them to prophanation, they ought to write them on parchment, and to encloſe it. Therefore they write theſe words on a ſquare piece of parchment prepared on purpoſe, with a particular ink, and a ſquare kind of character, Deut. vi. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, &c. Then they left a little ſpace, and afterwards went on, Deut. xi. 13.

And

And it ſhall come to paſs, if thou ſhall hearken diligently to my commandments, &c. as far as, thou ſhalt write them upon the door-poſts of thy houſe, &c. After this they roll up the parchment, put it into a caſe, and write on it Shadai, which is one of the names of God; they put it at the doors of their houſes, and chambers, to the knockers of the door on the right ſide, and as often as they paſs, they touch it in this place with their finger, which they afterwards kiſs. The Hebrew word mezuza properly ſignifies the door-poſts of an houſe; but it is alſo given to this roll of parchment now mentioned. Vide Leo of Modena, ceremonies of the Jews, part i. cap. 2. Vide plate of PHYLACTERIES.

MIAMIN, מימין, μειμὶν, Who is dextrous, or the right hand; from ימין jamin: otherwiſe, that prepares waters; from מי mi, waters, and מן min, preparation.

MIAMIN, ſon of Paroſh, of the race of the prieſts; one who divorced his ſtrange wife. Ezr. x. 25.

MIBHAR, מבחר, elected, or election, or youth; from בחר bachar, to chooſe, &c.

MIBHAR, or Mibahar, ſon of Haggeri, a valiant man of David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 38.

MIBSAM, מבשם, that perfumes; from בשם beſhem: otherwiſe, who confounds them; from בוש boſh, to confound, or put to ſhame, and the pronoun מ am, them.

I. MIBSAM, or Mabſam, ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 13.

II. MIBSAM, ſon of Shallum, and father of Miſhma, 1 Chron. iv. 25.

MIBZAR, מבצר, μαζὰρ, which is defended, or fortified: or that cuts, or has a vintage; from בצר batzar, bitzur, or bitſer, according to its different readings.

MIBZAR, or Mabſar; he ſucceeded Taman in the principality of Edom, Gen. xxxvi. 42.

MICAH. מיכא, poor, humble; from מכך macac: otherwiſe, who ſtrikes, or is ſtruck, from נכה nacah: otherwiſe, who is there? from the conjunction מי mi, and the word כה co, here, there: otherwiſe, the waters here; from מי mi, waters, and כה co, here.

III. MICAH, father of Achbor, 2 Kings xxii. 12.

IV. MICAH, of Reuben; ſon of Joel, 1 Chr. v. 5.

V. MICAH, ſon of Uzziel, 1 Chron. xxiii. 20.

VI. MICAH, the Moraſthite, or of Moreſa, a village near the city Eleutheropolis, in the ſouth of Judah, is the ſeventh in order of the twelve leſſer prophets. He propheſied under Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, about fifty years, from about A. M. 3245, or the beginning of the reign of Jotham, to A. M. 3306, or the laſt year of Hezekiah. Some have confounded him, but very improperly, with Micaiah, ſon of Imlah, who lived in the kingdom of the ten tribes, under the reign of Ahab. The ſpurious Dorotheus ſays, that Micah was buried in the burying place of the Anakim, whoſe habitation had been at Hebron. This prophet was nearly cotemporary with Iſaiah, and has ſome expreſſions in common with him; compare Iſaiah ii. 2. with Micah iv. 1. and Iſaiah xli. 15, with Micah iv. 13.

The prophecy of Micah contains but ſeven chapters. He firſt foretels the calamities of Samaria, afterwards he propheſies againſt Judah, then he exclaims againſt the iniquities of Samaria; he foretels the captivity of the ten tribes, and their return. The third chapter contains a pathetic invective againſt the princes of the houſe of Jacob, and the judges of the houſe of Iſrael; which in my opinion is levelled againſt the chiefs of the kingdom of Judah, the judges, the magiſtrates, the prieſts, the falſe prophets, &c. We are informed by Jeremiah, xxvi. 18, 19, &c. that this prophecy was pronounced in the time of Hezekiah, and that in the days of Jehoiakim it protected Jeremiah from death, who propheſied much the ſame things againſt Jeruſalem as Micah had done.

After theſe terrible denunciations, Micah ſpeaks of the reign of the Meſſiah. And as the peaceable times which ſucceeded the return from the Babyloniſh captivity, and which prefigured the reign of the Meſſiah, were diſturbed by a tempeſt of ſhort continuance; Micah foretold it in a manner, which agrees very well with what Ezekiel ſays, of the war of Gog againſt the ſaints, and which we think had relation to the reign of Cambyſes, or the war of Holofernes. Micah ſpeaks particularly of the birth of the Meſſiah v. 2, 3, &c. at Bethlehem, and that his dominion was to extend over the earth.

The two laſt chapters of Micah contain a long invective againſt the iniquities of Samaria; then he foretels the fall of Babylon, the re-eſtabliſhment of Iſrael, their happineſs, &c. and this in ſuch lofty terms, as chiefly agree with the ſtate of the Chriſtian church.

St. Jerome, Ep. 37. ſays, that Micah was buried at Moraſthi; and Sozomenes, lib. vii. cap. 29. Hiſt. Eccl. ſays, that his tomb was revealed to Zebennus, biſhop of Eleutheropolis, in the reign of Theodoſius the Great. He calls the place of his his burial Beretſate, which is probably the ſame as Moraſthi, ten furlongs from Eleutheropolis. The author of the Life and Death of the Prophets, printed under the name of Epiphanius, pretends that Micah was thrown headlong, and put to death by Jehoram, ſon of Ahab, becauſe he could not bear his freedom in reproving his vices. But this author, as ſeveral others, has confounded Micah the Moraſthite, with Micaiah, ſon of Imlah.

MICAH, מיכיהו, μιχαίας. In Hebrew, Michaihu, who is like to God?

VII. MICAH, or Michaihu, of the tribe of Ephraim, ſon of a rich widow, who became an occaſion of falling to Iſrael, Judges xvii, xviii. The mother of Micah had laid by a reſerve of eleven hundred ſhekels, about £. 125 10s. This money being miſſing, ſhe was in a great paſſion about it, and even uttered heavy imprecations againſt the thief. Whether Micah had taken it himſelf, or whether he recovered it from ſomebody who had taken it, he comes and tells his mother that it was in his cuſtody. The mother recovered her temper, and bleſſing her ſon for his diligence, told him it was dedicated to God, that ſhe would have an ephod made with it, and kept at their houſe, for the uſe of a domeſtic chapel. She immediately cauſes an ephod or prieſtly habit to be prepared with this money, and images of metal. He made one of his own ſons prieſt; and afterwards a young Levite.

It is believed this happened in the interval of time, after the death of Joſhua, and the elders that ſucceeded him, till Othniel judged Iſrael. During this time the tribe of Dan being ſtreightened in their inheritance, ſent ſix hundred men to ſeek a more convenient ſettlement. They paſſed by Micah's houſe, on the mountains of Ephraim, and deſired the Levite who reſided there, to enquire of the Lord about the ſucceſs of their expedition. He anſwered them, that the Lord would proſper their undertaking.

They came a ſecond time to the houſe of Micah; and having perſuaded the prieſt to their party, they took away the ephod, and the graven images, and went their way. Micah runs after them, crying out, but they threaten him, and oblige him to retire.

Having taken Laiſh, they there ſet up the idol purloined from Micah, and appoint Jonathan, ſon of Gerſhom, the ſon of Moſes, their prieſt. This idol continued here all the time the houſe of God was at Shilo, and to the captivity of the country; or, according to another verſion of the Hebrew, to the time of the deliverance of the country. Some underſtand it of the deliverance of the country by Samuel; and others, of the captivity of the ten tribes by the kings of Aſſyria, Salmanaſar, and Tiglath-pileſſer. During all this time the city of Laiſh, otherwiſe called Dan, was a place of idolatry and ſuperſtition; worſhipping either the Teraphim of Micah, or the golden calves of Jeroboam.

MICAIAH, מיכה, μιχαίας, from the ſame.

I. MICAIAH, mother of Abijah, king of Judah. See MAACHAH.

II MICAIAH, or Michaiah, מיכיהו, ſon of Imlah, of Ephraim, a prophet of the Lord. It is thought that it was Micaiah, though the Scripture does not mention his name, who directed one of his aſſociates to ſtrike him, and to wound him, which the other refuſing, Micaiah told him, a lion ſhould meet and kill him, which happened accordingly. Micaiah meeting another, deſired the ſame thing of him, which he performed. Thus the prophet being disfigured, threw duſt in his face, and went to meet king Ahab: complaining that being charged with a priſoner, he had eſcaped, but his ranſom was required of him. The king gave ſentence againſt him.—At which the prophet wiping the duſt off his face, and diſcovering himſelf to Ahab, ſaid, "Juſt ſo ſays the Lord to thee. Becauſe thou haſt let go a man deſerving of death, thy life ſhall anſwer for his life, and thy people for his people." He ſpoke of Ben-hadad king of Syria, whom Ahab had ſuffered to eſcape when he was in his power. 1 Kings xx. 35.

About three years after, when Ahab made war againſt Ben-hadad king of Syria, he invited Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, to accompany him in this expedition, 1 Kings, xxii. 3, 4, 5, &c. Jehoſhaphat, who was then at Samaria, conſented, but deſired that a prophet of the Lord might be conſulted about their ſucceſs For he would not rely on the prophets of Baal, who had aſſured Ahab of victory. Then they brought Micaiah, the ſon of Imlah before the kings, and deſired him by the way, that his words might agree with the words of the other prophets, who all had promiſed the king ſucceſs. Ahab having inquired of him, whether they ſhould march againſt Ramoth-Gilead or no? Micaiah anſwered, March on and proſper, the Lord ſhall deliver it into thy hands. The king replied, I adjure thee in the name of the Lord to anſwer only according to the truth. Then Micaiah ſays to him with a more ſerious countenance; I ſaw all Iſrael diſperſed upon the mountains, like ſheep that have no ſhepherd: and the Lord ſaid, they have no captain, let every one return in peace to his own houſe.

Micaiah added, "I ſaw the Lord ſitting on his throne, and and the heavenly hoſt on his right and on his leſt. And the Lord ſaid, Who ſhall ſeduce Ahab, king of Iſrael, to march againſt Ramoth-Gilead, that he may die there? One anſwered one thing, and another another. Then an evil ſpirit ſtepped forth and ſaid, I will ſeduce Ahab, by putting a lie into the mouth of all his prophets. The Lord ſaid to him, Go, and thou ſhalt ſucceed. Now has the Lord put a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all thy prophets, and has paſſed ſentence againſt thee." At the ſame time Zedekiah, ſon of Chenaanah, ſtepped up to Micaiah, and gave him a blow on the face, ſaying, which way went the Spirit of the Lord from me to ſpeak unto thee? To whom Micaiah replied, This thou ſhalt ſee, when thou ſhalt ſkulk from chamber to chamber to hide thyſelf. Then Ahab, king of Iſrael, ſaid to his people, Take Micaiah and carry him to Amon the governor of Samaria, and let him be fed with the bread of grief, and water of affliction, till I return in peace. (לחם לחץ ומים לחץ, bread and water in a little quantity. See 2 Chron. xviii. 26. where St. Jerom tranſlates, Date ei panis modicum, & aqua pauxillum. Compare Iſai. xxx. 20.) Micaiah anſwered, If thou return at all in peace, the Lord has not ſpoken by me. The event juſtified the prediction of Micaiah. We hear no more of Micaiah the ſon of Imlah.

III. MICAIAH, ſon of Gemariah, informed the princes of Judah, that Baruch had read the prophecies of the prophet Jeremiah in the temple before all the people. See Jerem. xxxvi. 11, 12, 13.

MICHAEL, מיכאל, who is like to God? From the conjunction מי mi, who, and כה co, the ſame, or like, and אל el, God: otherwiſe, humility, poorneſs of God; from מכך macac, poverty, and נכה nacah, to ſtrike, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. MICHAEL. It is believed that Michael is the head of the heavenly hoſt, as Lucifer is the head of the infernal; and that God has conſtituted him protector of Iſrael. St. Jude, ver. 9, 10. ſays, Yet Michael the archangel, when contending with the devil, he diſputed about the body of Moſes, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation, but ſaid, The Lord rebuke thee. St. Jude concludes from thence, that the faithful ought not to uſe ill words or execrations, like heretics and falſe prophets.

It is aſked, what ſtory St. Jude here alludes to? It is believed he alludes to an hiſtory related in the apocryphal book of the aſſumption of Moſes, that the archangel Michael after the death of Moſes, was urgent to have the body of this legiſlator buried and concealed from men, for fear that the Hebrews, or any other nation, ſhould think fit to idolize or worſhip him. But the devil on the contrary pretended, that the body ought to be left to the Hebrews, for a trial of their fidelity; meaning rather for a ſnare and occaſion of ſcandal to them, Vide Chryſoſt. Homil. v. in Matth. Theodoret, qu. 43. in Deut. Procop. in Deut. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. iv. cap. ult. Œcumenius, Comment. in Epiſt. Judæ. from another tradition advances, that Michael uſed all his power to procure an honourable funeral for Moſes, but the devil on the other hand was as importunate, pretending that the body belonged to him, and that he was unworthy of the honour of burial, as being guilty of the death of an Egyptian that was ſlain by him. Philo and Epiphanius believe, that the body of Moſes was buried by the hands of angels. We have at this day two books intituled, Petii-ath Moſhe, or the Aſſumption of Moſes; but we find nothing in them of this conteſt.

We read, Rev. xii. 7, And there was war in heaven, Michael and his angels fought againſt the dragon. From this place it has been concluded, that Michael the archangel was the tutelar angel and guardian of the Chriſtian church. He exerted his power chiefly at the time of the perſecutions of the Pagans againſt the believers. He reſtrained the power of Satan, he ſupported the faith of the Chriſtians, he defeated the deſigns of the perſecutors, &c.

Daniel alſo ſpeaks of Michael in two places, x. 13. He ſays, that the angel Gabriel having appeared to him, ſaid, The prince of the kingdom of Perſia withſtood me one and twenty days; but lo, Michael one of the chief princes came to help me, and I remained there with the kings of Perſia. It is commonly believed, that this angel of the kingdom of Perſia was he, to whom God had commited the care and ſuperintendance of this kingdom, who oppoſed Gabriel and Michael, becauſe he was deſirous to keep the Jews as long as he could in Perſia, where they did much good, and made many proſelytes. Others not readily aſſenting to this oppoſition of three good angels, imagined that the angel of the Perſians was a bad angel, who, jealous of the proſperity of the Jews, did his utmoſt to prevent Cyrus from coming to the empire of Perſia, that he might not ſet the Jews at liberty.

We find mention of Michael, Daniel xii. 1, 2. where ſpeaking of the perſecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes, he ſays, And at that time ſhall Michael ſtand up, the great prince which ſtandeth for the children of thy people, and there ſhall be a time of trouble, &c. Michael therefore was ſent of God to ſuccour his people, during theſe times of perſecution; perſecution; he inſpired the Maccabees with invincible courage, he ſtruck the wicked Antiochus, and delivered the Jewiſh church.

Some believe that Michael conducted the Iſraelites in the deſert, of whom it is ſaid, Behold, I ſend an angel before thee to keep thee in the way, &c. Ex. xxiii. 20, 23. xxxiii. 2. That is, he is my envoy, my ambaſſador, he acts in my name. It is believed alſo, that he appeared to Moſes in the burning buſh, was the guide of the people in the wilderneſs, and gave the tokens of his preſence in the pillar of a cloud. It is thought alſo, he appeared to Joſhua in the fields of Jericho, Joſ. v. 13. and to Gideon, and to Manoah the father of Samſon. In a word, to him are imputed the greater part of the moſt remarkable appearances, in the Old Teſtament or the New.

II. MICHAEL, father of Sethur, of Aſher. Sethur was one of the ſpies ſent by Moſes, Numb. xiii. 13.

III. MICHAEL, ſon of Jeſhiſhai, and father of Gilead, of Gad, 1 Chron. v. 13, 14.

IV. MICHAEL, ſon of Uzzi, of Iſſachar, 1 Chr. vii. 3.

V. MICHAEL, of Manaſſeh: a valiant man on the party of David, 1 Chron. xii. 20.

VI. MICHAEL, ſon of king Jehoſhaphat, was killed with his other brethren, by king Jehoram, after the death of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. xxi. 2.

MICHAL, מיכל, who is it that has all? from the conjunction מי mi, who is it, and כלל calal, all: otherwiſe, who is perfect, or compleat? from the ſame: otherwiſe, the whole is water; from מי mi, water, and כל col, the whole: otherwiſe, defence; from כלא cala.

MICHAL, or Michol, daughter of king Saul. The Hebrews think, ſhe was alſo named Eglah, and was mother of Ithream, 2 Sam. iii. 5. But this opinion has no foundation. Michal falling in love with David, and her father Saul being informed of it, he was not a little glad, ſaying, I will give her to David for a wife, that he may fall by the hands of the Philiſtines. Saul therefore bid his confidents inſinuate to David to improve his good fortune; David at firſt declined, but finding his valour might ſerve inſtead of a dowry, he doubled what Saul required as proofs of his victory over the Philiſtines, and Saul gave him his daughter Michal.

Some time after Saul ſent his guards after David, to ſeize him in his own houſe during the night, and to bring him with them on the morrow. But Michal let him down through a window, and he eſcaped. Michal then took a figure, (the Hebrew ſays, ſhe took teraphim. The LXX. κενοτάφια figures: as the repreſentation of a dead man, or an empty tomb) and laid it in David's bed, and put about its head the ſkin of a goat with the hair on, and covered it with a cloth. (Hebrew אח כבור העזים, a bolſter of goats hair. The LXX. Ἧπαρ των αιγων, a liver of goats. Aquil. Σιρογγύλωμον τρι χων, a bottom of hair) Saul ſent next morning to take David, and gave orders that he ſhould be brought in his bed; but they found nothing but a figure, and Michal excuſed herſelf by ſaying, that David threatened to kill her if ſhe did not favour his eſcape. Some time after Saul gave Michal to Phalti, (or Phaltiel,) ſon of Laiſh of Gallim.

But David, when he came to the crown, cauſed Michal to be reſtored to him again, and this was one condition that he ſtipulated with Abner. Then David ſent meſſengers to Iſh-boſheth, who ſent her back to David, and Phaltiel followed her weeping as far as Bahurim. The Hebrews pretend, that Phaltiel never came near Michal, who in ſtrictneſs could not be his wife, ſince ſhe never had been divorced from David. Others believe that Michal had five ſons by Phaltiel, which the Gibeonites executed, 2 Sam. xxi. 8, 9. See MERAB.

David from the very beginning of his reign had formed a deſign of tranſlating the ark of the covenant from Shilo to Jeruſalem, where he had fixed his habitation. This pious deſign he executed with great pomp and ceremony; he himſelf leaping and dancing for joy in this ſolemnity. Michal obſerving this at a window, where ſhe had placed herſelf to ſee the proceſſion, conceived no ſmall contempt for king David; and when he returned to his palace, ſhe upbraided him with deſcending to ſuch meanneſſes, as to dance and play among his ſervants, acting rather like a buffoon than a king. David vindicated himſelf by telling her, that he would dance and appear ſtill more vile before the Lord, who had preferred him to be king of Iſrael, before her father and all his family. Michal had no children to the day of her death, which the Scripture ſeems to impute to theſe reproaches made to David: the time of her death is unknown.

MICHMAS, מכמס, ſecret, concealed; from כמס camas: otherwiſe, tribute of the poor, or of him that is beaten; from מס mas, tribute, and מכך macac, poor; or from נכה nacah, to ſtrike. Ezra ii. 27.

MICHMASH, מכמש, μαγμὰς, he that ſtrikes; from נכה nacah: otherwiſe, poor who is taken away; from מכך macac, poor, and משה maſhah, taken away: otherwiſe, that touches; from משש maſhaſh.

MICHMASH, or Machmas; Euſebius ſays, that Michmaſh in his time was a conſiderable place, about nine miles from Jeruſalem towards Rama. Michmaſh was eaſt of Beth-aven, 1 Sam. xiii. 6.

MICHMETHAH, מכמתת, the gift of him that ſtrikes, or of the poor; from מתת mathath, a gift, and מכך macac, poor, and from נכה nacah, to ſtrike: otherwiſe, the death of the poor and afflicted; from מות muth, death, and מכך macac, poor.

MICHMETHAH, or Machmethath, a city belonging to the half-tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan, on the frontiers of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, in ſight of Shechem, and over againſt it, Joſh. xvi. 6. xvii. 7.

MICHRI, מכרי, ſale; from מכר macar, to ſell: otherwiſe, knowledge; from נכר nicar. 1 Ch. ix. 8.

MIDDIN, מדין, or niddin, judgment, or that pleads, or reproves: from דין din, whence comes מדון madon, proceſs: otherwiſe, that meaſures: from מדד madad, a city. Joſh. xv. 61.

MIDIAN, מדין, judgment: from דון dun: otherwiſe, meaſure, habit, covering; from מד mad.

I. MIDIAN, or Madian, the fourth ſon of Abraham and Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2. See MADAN.

The Midianites mentioned Numbers xxii. 4, 7. xxv. 15. and xxxi. 2, &c. whoſe daughters ſeduced Iſrael, even to the worſhipping of Baal-peor, were deſcendants of Midian the ſon of Abraham. The Midianites, who were overcome by Hadad ſon of Bedad, king of Edom, Gen. xxxvi. 35, and thoſe who oppreſſed Iſrael, and were defeated by Gideon, Judg. vi. 1, 2, &c. vii. 1, 2, &c. were alſo deſcended from Midian, ſon of Abraham, whoſe habitation was eaſt of the Dead-Sea, and ſouth of the country of Moab. Their capital city was called Midian, and its remains were to be ſeen in the time of St. Jerom and Euſebius. It was ſituated on the Arnon, and ſouth of the city Ar, or Areopolis.

The Lord intending to puniſh the Midianites, becauſe their daughters had ſeduced Iſrael to the worſhip of Peor, ſays to Moſes; take a thouſand men out of each tribe, and ſend them under the command of Phinehas, ſon of the high-prieſt Eleazar, to execute my vengeance againſt the Midianites. Phinehas marched therefore at the head of twelve thouſand men, having with him the ark of the covenant, according to ſome commentators, and the trumpets of the tabernacle. He defeated the Midianites, and ſlew five of their kings, Evi, Rekem, Zur, Hur, and Reba, who reigned over ſeveral cities of the country of Midian, lying eaſt of the Dead Sea. And God permitted alſo, that the wicked prophet Balaam ſhould be involved in their misfortune, and loſe his life. The Iſraelites took the women, the children, the flocks, and whatever belonged to the Midianites; they burnt their cities, villages and forts, and they brought into their camp all the booty they had got in this expedition.

II. MIDIAN; was probably the ſon of Cuſh, ſince Zipporah, the wife of Moſes, who was a Midianite, was nevertheleſs a Cuſhite; Numb. xii. 1. Heb. and ſince Habakkuk, iii. 7. Heb. puts the Midianites with the Cuſhites as if they were ſynonymous, or at leaſt neighbours. This Midian peopled the country of Midian, eaſt of the Red-Sea. Into this country Moſes withdrew, and there married Zipporah, the daughter of Jethro, Exod. ii. 15, &c. It was theſe Midianites who trembled for fear, when they heard the Hebrews had paſſed through the Red-Sea, Hab. iii. 7. Abulfeda ſpeaking of the city of Midian, ſays, "Madyan is a city, in ruins, on the ſhore of the Red-Sea, on the ſide oppoſite to Tabuc, from which it is diſtant about ſix days journey. At Midian may be ſeen the famous well, where Moſes watered the flocks of Schoaib. (For thus the Mahometans call Jethro.) This city was the capital of the tribe of Midian among the Iſraelites. According to Ibuſaid, the bay of the Red-Sea in this place, is about one hundred thouſand paces wide."

It ſhould ſeem as if the Orientals knew no other Midianites but thoſe on the ſhore of the Red Sea, near Mount Sinai, among whom Moſes took refuge. The Arabian authors affirm, that the Midianites are a ſtrange people, who came to ſettle in Arabia, and are not of the number of the ancient inhabitants of this country; which countenances the opinion of thoſe, who will have Midian to have been a ſon of Cuſh. It is alſo affirmed, that the Midianites worſhipped the idols Abda and Hinda; and that the prophet Jethro being ſent by God to reclaim them, they continued hardened and obſtinate, and that God extirpated them, D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 581, 496. Vide JETHRO.

MIGDAL-EL, מגדל-אל, μαγδαλιὴλ, tower of God, or the majeſty of God. See MAGDALENE.

MIGDAL-EL, or Mandalel, a city of Naphtali. This word ſignifies, the tower of God, Joſh. xix. 38.

MIGDAL-GAD, מגדל-גד, tower of Gad, happy, or fortified tower; from מגדל migdal, a tower, and גד gad, good fortune: otherwiſe, greatneſs of happineſs; from גדל gadol, grand, magnificent.

MIGDAL-GAD, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 37.

MIGDAL-SENNA, a city ſeven miles from Jericho, ſouth.

MIGDOL, מגדל, tower, or greatneſs; from מגדל megdal.

I. MIGDOL, Magdalum, or Magdala; theſe words ſignify a tower, and are found ſometimes alone, and ſometimes joined to a proper name. Joſephus ſpeaks of a fortreſs called Magdala, near to Gamala; and ſome have thought, that from hence hence Mary Magdalen took her name, Joſeph de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 25. & Antiq. lib. xviii. 1. & in Vitâ.

II. MIGDOL. Moſes ſays, that when the Iſraelites came out of Egypt, the Lord commanded them to encamp, over againſt Pi-hahiroth, between Migdol and the ſea, over againſt Baal-zephon, Exod. xiv. 2. It is not known whether this Migdol was a city, or only a tower. The prophets ſpeak of Magdalum in lower Egypt, over againſt Thebais, Jerem. xiii. 2, 14. Ezek. xxix. 10. Hebr. The itinerary of Antoninus has Magdolum, at about twelve miles from Peluſium. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXXIX. page .

MIGMA, Μίγμα, mixture.

MIGRON, מגרון, μαγγεδδὼ, fear; from מגר mager, in a metaphorical ſenſe: otherwiſe, a farm; from גרן goren: or throat; from גרון garon: otherwiſe, to deliver; from מגר magar: otherwiſe, fear; from יגר jagar.

MIGRON, or Magron, a village near Gibeah. Saul with 600 men retreated into the cave of Remnon, near Migron, 1 Sam. xiv. 2.

MIJAMIN, מימן, μιαμεὶν, who is dextrous: otherwiſe, the right hand, from ימין jamin: or that prepares the waters; from מים majim, waters, and מן min, preparation: otherwiſe, true, faithful, truſty; from נאמן naaman.

MIJAMIN, or Maiman, a prieſt of the ſixth ſacerdotal family, 1 Chron. xxiv. 9.

MIKLOTH, מקהלות, μακεδδὼδ. It ſignifies rods, or ſtaffs; from מקל makel: otherwiſe, voices; from קל col: or lightneſſes, or contempt; from קלל calal, to deſpiſe: But with a ה he, Macheloth, or Mikloth, ſignifies aſſembly, congregation; from קהל cahal.

I. MIKLOTH, or Macelloth, ſon of Abi-Gibeon, or Jehiel, and father of Shimeah, or Shimeam, 1 Chr. viii. 31, 32. and 1 Chron. ix. 37, 38.

II. MIKLOTH, a captain of David's army. He commanded 24,000 men, under Dodai the Ahohite, 1 Chron. xxvii. 4.

MIKNIAH, מקניהו, μακκανία, the poſſeſſion, or purchaſe of the Lord; from קנה kanah: otherwiſe, flock; from מקנה micne; or neſt of the Lord; from קנן kinen, to build a neſt, and יה jah, the Lord.

MILALAI, מללי, circumciſion; from מול mul: otherwiſe, my word; from מלל malal, to ſpeak, and the pronoun י i, my. Nehem. xii. 36.

MILCAH, מלכה, queen; from מלך malac, to reign.

I. MILCAH, or Melcha, daughter of Aram, ſiſter of Lot, wife of Nahor, niece of Abraham, and mother of Bethuel. Her other ſons were Huz, Buz, Kemuel, Cheſed, Hazo, Pildaſh, and Jidlaph. Gen. xxiv. 15. xxii. 20, &c.

II. MILCAH, daughter of Zelophehad, Numb. xxvi. 33.

MILE, milliare, a meaſure of length, containing a thouſand paces. Eight ſtadia or furlongs make a mile. Our Saviour tells us, that if we are conſtrained to go a mile, we ſhould go two, Matt. v. 41. The Romans commonly meaſured by miles, and the Greeks by furlongs. The furlong was an hundred and twenty-five paces, and the pace five feet. The ancient Hebrews had neither miles, furlongs, nor feet, but only the cubit, the reed, and the line. The Rabbins make a mile to conſiſt of two thouſand cubits, and four miles make a paraſang. See Reland Paleſt. lib ii. cap. 1. alſo the Hebrew meaſures.

MILETUM, Μίλητον, red, or ſcarlet; from the Greek μίλτος, vermillion, red.

MILETUM, or Miletus, a famous city of Ionia, perhaps the Melothi in Judith ii. 13. St. Paul going from Corinth to Jeruſalem, in A. D. 58, paſſed by Miletum; and as he went by ſea, and ſo could not take Epheſus in his way, &c. he cauſed the biſhops of the church of Epheſus to come to Miletum, which was about twelve leagues from thence. When they were come to him, he earneſtly exhorted them to vigilance, &c. After which he took leave of them, and embarked for Phœnicia, Acts xx. 14, 15, &c.

[There was alſo a MILETUS in Crete; and it ſeems proper to refer to this Miletus, what St. Paul ſays 2 Tim. iv. 20. Trophimus have I left at Miletus ſick, becauſe when St. Paul viſited Miletus near Epheſus, Acts xx. 17. Trophimus went with him to Jeruſalem: and St. Paul did not return to that Miletus. Perhaps it might be adviſable to ſpell theſe names differently, Miletus—Miletum.]

MILK. A land flowing with milk and honey, is a country of extraordinary fertility. Moſes forbids to ſeethe the kid in its mother's milk, Exod. xxiii. 19. xxxiv. 16. Deut. xiv. 21. which the Hebrews underſtand literally. See MEATS. Some underſtand this prohibition metaphorically, as forbidding cruelty; as in another place to take the old bird ſitting upon her neſt along with her young ones. Vide Deut. xxii. 6.

The writers of the Old Teſtament ſpeak of the conception of man in his mother's womb, as of milk that curdles, and takes the human form. See Job x. 10, 11. Nonne ſicut lac mulſiſti me, & ſicut caſeum me coagulâſti. And Wiſdom vii. 1, 2. In ventre ventris figuratus ſum caro, decem menſium tempore coagulatus ſum in ſanguine. The heart of the wicked is coagulated, or hardened, like milk; but the Hebrew may be tranſlated, their heart is as fat as greaſe, Pſal. cxix. 70.

In the prophets the kingdom of the Meſſiah is repreſented as a time of great abundance, when the mountains ſhould run down with milk and honey, Joel. iii. 18. And Iſaiah ſays, lx. 16. Thou ſhalt alſo ſuck the milk of the Gentiles, and ſhalt ſuck the breaſts of kings. St. Paul compares his converts to little children, who are to be fed with milk, and not with ſolid food; 1 Cor. iii. 2 Heb. v. 12. and St. Peter thus exhorts the faithful; As new-born babes deſire the ſincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby, 1 Pet. ii. 2

To milk is often ſaid in a figurative ſenſe, to denote the dangerous careſſes and enticements of ſinners, Prov. i. 10. My ſon, if ſinners entice thee, conſent thou not, Heb. יחתו milk thee, or deceive thee, flatter thee, tempt thee by allurements. The text reads the ſame word in other paſſages, where St. Jerom uſes the word lactare, inſtead of ſeducere, fallere. In the Song of Songs, iv. 11. Honey and milk are under thy tongue, ſignifies, your words are ſofter or ſweeter than milk and honey. Vide FRAGMENT, No. . page .

MILL, mola, to grind, Our Saviour ſays, Matth. xviii. 6. it would be better for a man to be thrown into the ſea, with a mill-ſtone about his neck, than that he ſhould be a ſcandal to one of his little ones, Expedit ei ut ſuſpendatur mola aſinaria in collo ejus, &c. This aſſes mill-ſtone, according to ſome, was a large ſtone turned round by an aſs, to diſtinguiſh it from ſmaller ſtones turned by hand. Others believe, that the mola aſinaria was the lower mill-ſtone, which was ſluggiſh and immovable.

To expreſs the meaneſt condition of life, Moſes ſays, From the firſt born of Pharaoh, to the firſt-born of the maid ſervant that is behind the mill. Becauſe before the invention of wind-mills and water-mills, they commonly uſed hand-mills to grind their corn. Samſon was condemned by the Philiſtines to this kind of labour in his priſon; But the Philiſtines took him, and put out his eyes, and brought him down to Gaza, and bound him with fetters of braſs, and he did grind in the priſon houſe, Judg. xvi. 21. Alluſion is often made to this cuſtom. See Iſai. xlvii. 2. Matth. xxiv. 41. Luke xvii. 36. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , page .

Moſes forbids his people to take from a poor man as a pledge, the upper or the nether mill ſtone, Deut. xxiv. 6. Or according to the Hebrew, Thou ſhalt not take the two ſtones of a mill, and the carriage. Very probably he ſpeaks of thoſe mills, which the Hebrews uſed in the wilderneſs, which were mounted upon carriages, becauſe of their frequent decampments. The two Chaldee paraphraſts explain this in a figurative ſenſe; Thou ſhalt not uſe any artifice to hinder the conſummation of marriage. Some Rabbins explain what is ſaid of Samſon in a ſenſe pretty near this; he was made to grind in his priſon, ſay they, that they might have ſome of his race. In profane authors Molere is ſometimes taken in an obſcene ſenſe.

MILLET, a kind of grain, in Latin millium. It is mentioned Iſaiah, xxviii. 25. Vulgate. (Heb. נסמן LXX. Κέγχρον, and Ezekiel, iv. 9. דוחן LXX. Κέγχρον.) Iſaiah ſays, that the huſbandman ſows in his land, wheat, barley, millet, and fitches, each in its place. And Ezekiel receives an order from the Lord, to make himſelf bread with a mixture of wheat, barley, beans, lentils, and millet. The word uſed by Iſaiah is Niſman; Ezekiel uſes Dochan. The LXX. render both by Kenchron, millet. But the ſignification of Niſman is doubtful. Some render it by ſpelt, or fitches, [or vetches.] Others join it to the barley, and read hordeum ſignatum vel inſigne. The word Niſman is found only in this place; nor is Dochan read any where elſe.

I. MILLO, or Mello; this Hebrew word ſignifies filled up. Thus they called a deep valley, which was between the old city of Jebus, or Jeruſalem, and the city of David, built on Mount Sion. David and Solomon cauſed this valley to be filled up, and made here a place for the people to aſſemble. 1 Kings ix. 15. 2 Kings v. 9. 1 Chr. xi. 8. Solomon alſo on a part of it, built a palace for his queen, the daughter of Pharaoh, 1 Kings ix. 24. On account of theſe chargeable works of Solomon, to fill up Millo, Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat revolted, and ſpread the ſpirit of ſedition, 1 Kings xi. 27, 28, &c.

II. MILLO, a city near Shechem. It is ſaid Judges ix. 6. that the inhabitants of Shechem, and thoſe of the city of Millo, made Abimelech ſon of Gideon king. The Hebrew text reads, The houſe of Millo, inſtead of the city of Millo. Some believe that Millo was a citizen of Shechem; or, ſome part of that city; for in Paleſtine there is no known city of Millo.

MINA, or MNA; a ſpecies of money, called in Hebrew, min, or mina, or maneh, properly, one part or ounce. I obſerve this word only in the books of Kings, Chronicles, Ezra, and Ezekiel. Ezekiel tells us, xlv. 12. that the mina or maneh was valued at ſixty ſhekels, which in gold make of our Engliſh money above £ 54. and in ſilver almoſt £ 7. This is the Hebrew maneh. But the Greek or Attick mina, which is probably that mentioned in the books of the Maccabees, and in the New Teſtament, is valued at an hundred drachmæ, or about £ 2 17s. There was alſo a leſſer mina, valued at ſeventy-five drachmæ.

MINCHA,

MINCHA, מנחה, an offering.

MINCHA. This is a pure Hebrew word, and ſignifies offerings of meal, cakes, or biſcuits, preſented in the temple of the Lord. The LXX. ſometimes preſerve this Hebrew word; but inſtead of mincha, they read manaa, which doubtleſs was the common pronunciation in their time. We find manna in Baruch i. 10. Prepare ye manna, and offer upon the altar of the Lord our God. Scripture uſes the word mincha, to expreſs the offerings that Cain and Abel made to the Lord, of their firſt-fruits; Gen. iv. 3, 4. and for the preſents that Jacob made to his brother Eſau, at his return from Meſopotamia, Gen. xxxii. 13, 16, 18, 20, 21. and for thoſe that the children of Jacob carried to Joſeph into Egypt, before he diſcovered himſelf to them; Gen. xliii. 11, 14, 24. and for thoſe that Ehud preſented to Eglon, king of Moab: Judg. iii. 15, 17, 18. Malachi ſpeaking of the ſacrifice of the new law, which in every place was to be offered, makes uſe of the word mincha. From the riſing of the ſun, even to the going down of the ſame, my name ſhall be great among the Gentiles, and in every place incenſe ſhall be offered to my name, and a pure offering, Mal. i. 10, 11.

MINNI, מני, diſpoſed, reckoned, prepared.

MINNI, or Menni; Jeremiah li. 27. invites the kings of Minni, Ararat, and Aſhchenaz, to war againſt Babylon. Minni, we think, denotes Minias, a province of Armenia; and perhaps Armenia took its name from Aram and Minni; i. e. the Syria of Minni or Minias, mentioned by Nicolas of Damaſcus, lib. xcvi. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 4.

MINNITH, מנית, counted, prepared.

MINNITH, or Mennith, a city beyond Jordan, four miles from Heſhbon, on the road to Philadelphia, as Euſebius relates, Onomaſt. in Minnith. It belonged to the Ammonites, when Jephthah made war againſt them, Judg. xi. 33. Ezekiel ſays, that Judah carried wheat of Minnith to the fairs of Tyre. The Vulgate expreſſes it Frumentum primum, the fineſt wheat, Ezek. xxvii. 17.

MINT, a garden-herb, or pot-herb, ſufficiently known. The law did not oblige the Jews to tythe theſe ſorts of herbs; it only ſubjected to the payment of tythes what could be comprehended under the name income or revenue, proventus; eſpecially what was produced in the country. But the Phariſees deſiring to diſtinguiſh themſelves, by a moſt ſcrupulous and literal obſervation of the law, gave tythes of mint, aniſe, and cummin, Matth. xxiii. 23. Our Saviour does not diſcommend this exactneſs, but complains, that while they are ſo preciſe in theſe leſſer matters, they neglect the eſſential commandments.

MIRACLE, ſign, wonder, prodigy; theſe terms are commonly uſed in Scripture, to denote an action, event, or effect, ſuperior (or contrary) to the general and eſtabliſhed laws of nature. This name is given, not only to true miracles wrought by ſaints or prophets ſent from God, by good angels, by the finger of God, or by the ſon of God; but alſo to the falſe miracles of impoſtors, and to wonders wrought by the wicked, by falſe prophets, or by devils. So Moſes ſpeaks of the miracles of Pharaoh's magicians, in the manner he ſpeaks of thoſe wrought by himſelf, in the name and by the power of God. And our Saviour foretels in the goſpel, that falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets ſhould perform wonders, capable of deceiving, if poſſible, the elect themſelves, Matth. xxiv. 24. And St. John in the Revelations, xiii. 13, 14. ſpeaks of a beaſt that came out of the earth, which performed ſuch prodigies, as even to make fire come down from heaven on the earth, which ſeduced many perſons, &c. And in the ſame book he ſpeaks of demons, which ſhew wonders, to prevail with the kings of the earth to make war on the ſaints; and of a falſe prophet, who works miracles, to ſeduce thoſe who have received the mark of the beaſt, Rev. xvi. 14. xix. 20.

Therefore miracles and prodigies are not always ſure ſigns, of the ſanctity of thoſe that perform them; nor proofs of the truth of the doctrine they deliver; nor certain teſtimonies of their divine miſſion. The Son of God not only allows us, but even commands us to examine miracles, and thoſe who perform them. Then if any man ſhall ſay unto you, Lo here is Chriſt, or there, believe it not. For there ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders, inſomuch that (if it were poſſible) they ſhall deceive the very elect, Matth. xxiv. 23, 24. And Moſes ſays, Deut. xiii. 1. If there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, who giveth thee a ſign or a wonder, and the ſign or the wonder cometh to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee ſaying, Let us go after other gods, (which thou haſt not known) and let us ſerve them; thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams; for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your ſoul. It may therefore be affirmed, that the proof of miracles is not always certain. To the miſſion of him who works miracles muſt be joined the truth of the doctrine he advances, the innocence of his life, his good underſtanding, and his concurrence with thoſe whoſe life, miſſion, miſſion, and doctrine have been already acknowledged and approved. His miracles muſt be ſtrictly examined, to ſee if they are true, and not juggling tricks, or magical operations. Whether they lead to God, to peace, to righteouſneſs, and to ſalvation. If all theſe marks and characters are found in him who works miracles, we may without danger allow ſuch an one to be a meſſenger from God.

Our Saviour complains, John iv. 48. that the Jews would not believe but by dint of miracles. Except ye ſee ſigns and wonders, ye will not believe. The ſame Jews aſked a ſign from Jeſus Chriſt; Maſter, we would ſee a ſign from thee, Matth. xii. 38. To which he replied, that they ſhould ſee no other ſign but that of the prophet Jonas. He ſays, John xv. 24. that if he had not performed among them ſuch miracles as were never before performed by man, they would have had no ſin. Nicodemus owns, John iii. 2. No man can do theſe miracles that thou doeſt, except God be with him. Such a train of miracles, accompanied with ſo much innocence and righteouſneſs, with a doctrine ſo pure and divine, could not be the work of falſity and deluſion. The finger of God manifeſtly appears herein. When Jeſus Chriſt ſent his apoſtles to preach the goſpel among the Jews, and among infidel nations, he gave them power of working all ſorts of miracles in his name, Matth. x. 6, 8, &c. Nothing ſo much contributed to the propagation of the Chriſtian faith, as the multitude of miracles wrought by the apoſtles and their diſciples; to which was joined the ſublimeſt doctrine, and the pureſt morality, with a moſt holy and diſintereſted life and converſation.

The prejudices, obſtinacy, and incredulity of the Jews muſt have been very extraordinary, not to yield to the miracles of Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles. St. Paul ſays, that the Jews muſt have miracles to convince them. The Jews require a ſign, and the Greeks ſeek after wiſdom. 1 Cor. i. 22. But who ever performed greater ſigns, or worked more frequent and more inconteſtable miracles than Jeſus Chriſt? The common people laboured under leſs prepoſſeſſions and prejudices than the doctors, the prieſts, and the Phariſees; and were ready to allow, that the Meſſiah could not do a greater number of miracles. The doctors themſelves could not give the lie to their own eyes, or oppoſe what was ſo public and notorious; they could not directly deny the miracles, but choſe rather to aſcribe them to Beelzebub. The modern Jews pretend, that Jeſus Chriſt had ſtole the name Jehovah out of the temple, by which he performed his miracles. If this were true, could it be conceived, that God would favour an impoſtor with the gift of working miracles, and ſuch a long train of miracles, and in ſo high a degree, and by one who attempted the ſubverſion of the law and the Jewiſh religion? And would he permit him to transfer this power to his diſciples and apoſtles, to thoſe who believed in him, and this for ſo long a time?

MIRIAM, מרים, μαριὰμ, exalted; from רמם ramam: otherwiſe, bitterneſs of the ſea; from מרר marar, bitterneſs, and ים jam, the ſea: otherwiſe, myrrh of the ſea; from מור mor, myrrh: otherwiſe, lady, or miſtreſs of the ſea; from מרה marah, a Syriac word, which ſignifies lord, or miſtreſs.

MIRIAM, ſiſter of Moſes and Aaron, and daughter of Amram and Jochebed, born about A. M. 2424, ante A. D. 1580. She might be ten or twelve years old when her brother Moſes was expoſed on the banks of the Nile, ſince Miriam was watching there, and offered herſelf to Pharaoh's daughter, to fetch her a nurſe. The princeſs accepting the offer, Miriam fetched her own mother, to whom the young Moſes was given to nurſe, Exod. ii. 4, 5, &c. It is thought that Miriam married Hur, of the tribe of Judah; but it does not appear that ſhe had any children by him, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 2. p. 75. c. d. & alii.

Miriam had the gift of prophecy, as ſhe inſinuates, Exod. xvii. 10, 11. Numb. xii. 2. Hath the Lord indeed ſpoken only by Moſes? Hath he not ſpoken alſo by us? After the paſſage of the Red Sea, Miriam led the choirs and dances of the women, and ſung with them the canticle, Sing ye to the Lord, &c. while Moſes ſung it in another choir of men, Exod. xv. 21. When Zipporah the wife of Moſes arrived in the camp of Iſrael, Miriam and Aaron diſputed with her, ſpeaking againſt Moſes on her account, Numb. xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. which the Lord puniſhed by viſiting Miriam with a leproſy. Aaron interceded with Moſes for her recovery, and Moſes beſought the Lord: who ordered her to be ſhut out of the camp ſeven days.

We are acquainted with no ſubſequent particulars of the life of Miriam. Her death happened in the firſt month of the fortieth year after the Exodus at the encampment of Cades in the wilderneſs of Sin. Numb. xx. 1. The people mourned for her, and ſhe was there buried. Joſephus ſays, ſhe was buried with great ſolemnity at the charge of the public, and that they mourned for her a whole month. St. Gregory of Nyſſa, and St. Ambroſe were of opinion, that ſhe lived in perpetual virginity, but we have obſerved, ſerved, that Joſephus has given her Hur for a huſband. Euſebius aſſures us, that in his time the ſepulchre of Miriam was to be ſeen at Cades.

MIRMA, מרמה, deceit; from רמה ramah: otherwiſe, that raiſes itſelf; from רמם ramam, to raiſe, and the pronoun ה ah, itſelf.

MISHAEL, מישאל, who is aſked for, or lent; from מי mi, who, and שאל ſhaal, who demands or lends: otherwiſe, God takes away, or retires; from משה maſhah, to take away, and אל el, God.

MISHAEL, or Miſael, one of the three companions of Daniel, to whom Nebuchadnezzar gave the Chaldæan name of Meſhach, Dan. i. 7. He was one of thoſe caſt into the burning furnace, from which he was miraculouſly delivered. Vide DANIEL: alſo Dan. iii. 12.

MISHAM, מישעם, their ſaviour; from ישע jaſhah, or הושיע hoſhiah, a ſaviour: otherwiſe, he that regards him; from שעה ſhaah, to regard: otherwiſe, that takes away, or touches the people; from מישש maſhaſh, or משה maſhah, and עם ham, the people.

MISHAIM, or Miſaum, ſon of Elpaal, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 12.

MISHEAL, משאל, ματαλ, mathal, 1 Chron. vi. 74. He that aſketh, or is aſked: or that lends; from שאל ſhaal, to aſk: otherwiſe, hell, the grave, death; from the ſame: otherwiſe, touched of God; from מישש maſhaſh, to touch, and אל el, God: or whom God takes away, or draws back; from משה maſhah.

MISHEAL, or Meſſal, a city of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 26. Euſebius ſays it is near Mount Carmel, on the ſea coaſt.

MISHMA, משמע, he that hears, or obeys; from שמע ſhamah: otherwiſe, noiſe, reputation.

MISHMA, or Maſma, fifth ſon of Iſhmael, Gen. xxv. 14.

MISHMANNAH, משמנה, his fat, his oil; from שמן ſhaman, oil, or greaſe, and the pronoun ה a, his: or ſimply, perfume, ſweet-ſcented oil.

MISHRAITES, משרעי, who touches the companion, the friend, the paſtor, or malice; from מישש maſhaſh. to touch, and רעה rahah, a friend, &c. from רע rah, malice. 1 Chron. ii. 53.

MISHNA, משנה, or miſna, repetition.

MISNA; this is properly the code of the Jewiſh civil law. The word miſna in Hebrew ſignifies repetition, משנה miſhna. Δευτέρωσις. The Greek deuteroſis has the ſame ſignification; q. d. a ſecond explication of the law of Moſes, or, a ſecond law. For the Jews believe, that when God gave the written law to Moſes, he gave him alſo another not written, which was preſerved by tradition among the doctors of the ſynagogue, to the time of the famous Rabbi, Judas the holy, who wrote the Miſna about A. D. 180, being then about forty years old: He was born A. D. 136. This doctor was prince or head of the captivity, i. e. the chief of the Jews after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the temple. He was born at Sephoris, a city of Galilee, and having acquired great reputation, and being long employed in compoſing differences and deciding diſputes, among his nation concerning the ſenſe of the law; and likewiſe ſeeing great danger leſt the Jews diſperſed through ſo many provinces, might at laſt recede from the traditions of their fathers, or forget ſome part of the rites of their nation; he judged it better to reduce them to writing, than to truſt to their memories. This produced the Miſna, which is the codex of the civil and canon law of the Jews, and which contains a collection of their ceremonies, and oral laws.

This work is divided into ſix parts. The firſt, סדר זרעים ordo ſeminum, contains the diſtinction of ſeeds in a field, the trees, fruits, tythes, &c. The ſecond, סדר מדעים ordo feſtorum, regulates the manner of obſerving the feſtivals. The third, סדר נשים ordo mulierum, treats of women, and matrimonial caſes. The fourth, סדר נזיקים ordo damnorum, which treats of Loſſes, takes cognizance of ſuits which ariſe from trade, alſo of ſtrange worſhip, עבודה זרה cultus extraneus, or idolatry, becauſe it afforded much matter for judicial proceedings. The fifth, סדר קדשים ordo ſanctorum, ſeu rerum ſacrarum, is concerning obligations, ſacrifices, and whatever has any relation thereto. The ſixth, סדר טהרית ordo purificationum, has for its ſubject the ſeveral ſorts of purifications. Thoſe who deſire a more exact knowledge of the Miſna, may conſult the edition of it, by G. Surenhuſius at Amſterdam in 1703, in ſix tomes in folio, with the notes of Maimonides, Bartenora, and Guiſius. See alſo the third tome of the Bibliotheca Rabbinica of Bartolucci, and the hiſtory of the Jews by M. Baſnage.

Judah the Holy is acknowledged as the author, or compiler, of the Miſna. He is the chief and principal of thoſe doctors, whom the Jews call Tanaites, or preſervers of the tradition. They ſucceeded, ſay they, the heads of the great ſynagogue, the chief of which were Zerubbabel, or Malachi. Ezra is eſteemed to be the head of the Tanaites. It is maintained that they had the peculiar favour of God, and have often heard the Bath-col, or daughter of the voice, which came in the place of prophecy, and procured great authority and reſpect to theſe doctors: on whom the Jews are very laviſh of encomiums, and the moſt pompous titles. From theſe Tanaites, theſe depoſitaries of tradition, Judah the Holy,

Holy, learned what he has given us in the Miſna. The Tanaites were ſucceeded by the Gemariſts, or commentators; for no ſooner did the Miſna appear, but it was received with profound veneration by all Jews, for they thought it contained what had been dictated by God himſelf from Mount Sinai, as well as the written law. So that all their learned men made it their chief ſtudy, and both in Judæa and Babylon, applied themſelves to the making of comments on it. Theſe commentaries, together with the text of the Miſna, make up the two Talmuds, that of Jeruſalem, and that of Babylon. Theſe comments they call the Gemara, or ſupplement, becauſe with theſe the Miſna is compleat, and needs no farther improvement. Vide GEMARA, TALMUD.

MISPAR, מספר, to number, or to write, or ſcribe, or book, or he that reckons; from ספר ſaphar: otherwiſe, the bull of the tribute; from מס mas, tribute, and פר phar, a bull.

MISPERETH, מספרת, μαΦαρὰθ, he that reckons or counts; from ספר ſaphar: or augmentation of the tribute; from מס mas, tribute, and פרה parah, to multiply.

MITE, MINUTUM, a ſmall piece of money, in value a quarter of a Roman penny, in our Engliſh money about ſeven farthings, or two pence. She threw in two mites which make a farthing. See alſo Luke xii. 59. and xxi. 2.

MITHCAH, מתקה, μαθεκκὰ, ſweetneſs; from מתק mathac, ſweet, mild.

MITHCAH, or Methca, an encampment of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, between Tarah and Haſhmonah, Numb. xxxiii. 28, 29. probably the Methegammah, 2 Sam. viii. 1. Compare 1 Chron. xviii. 1. where it is ſaid David took Gath and her daughters. [So Hebr. & Vulgat. The Engliſh tranſlation has, Gath and her towns.] And in Samuel, that he took Metheg the mother, or Metheg and its mother; that is, Metheg and Gath. Gath and Metheg were in the neighbourhood of Haſhmonah, pretty far ſouth of the Land of Promiſe. Inſtead of Metheg the mother, the Hebrew reads Methegammah, which St. Jerome has tranſlated by Frænum tributi. But I rather think he wrote Frænum cubiti, and that the tranſcribers have ſubſtituted Frœnum tributi. But it is better to take Metheg for the name of a place. [Is not metheg a tranſpoſition of gethem? i. e. little gath.]

MITHNITE, מתני, gift, loins; according to the Syriac, hope, or expectation.

MITHREDATH, מתרדת, he that explains or meditates upon the law; from תור thur, law: otherwiſe, the deſcent or dominion of death; from רדד radad, to deſcend, or רדה radah, to rule, and מות muth, death. This name is Chaldee or Perſian, in the compoſition of which enters the name of Mithra, a deity of the Perſians, who write this name without a t, but with a pure aſpiration mirh: ſo that the ת has no ſhare in it.

MITHREDATH, or Mitridates, ſon of Gazabar, Ezra i. 8. (מתרדת הגזבר Γαζοφύλαξ. Ita Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xi. cap. 1. & 1 Eſdr.) or rather Mithredath the treaſurer, (for this is the literal ſignification of Gazabar) by the order of Cyrus, returned to Sheſhbazzar, the prince of Judah, the veſſels of the temple.

MITHRIDATH, or Mithridates, one who ſigned the letter written to Artaxerxes, king of Perſia, againſt the Jews, to hinder them from rebuilding the walls of Jeruſalem, Ezr. iv. 7.

MITRE, mitra; mention is made in Scripture of the mitres of the prieſts and of thoſe of women. Iſaiah ſpeaks of thoſe of women, Auferet Dominus, ——armillas & mitras. The Hebrew Haraloth, tranſlated Mitras, ſignifies to tremble, to waver. The Syrian and Arabian women at this day have commonly upon their heads a ſilver mitre called Arkie, made in form of a ſugar loaf, and encompaſſed with a veil of black ſilk, edged with pearls and precious ſtones.

MITYLENE, Μιτυλένη, purity, cleanſing, or preſs.

MITYLENE, capital of the Iſle of Leſbos, through which St. Paul paſſed as he went from Corinth to Jeruſalem, A. D. 58. Acts xx. 14.

MIZNEPHETH, מצנפת. See CIDARIS.

MIZNEPHETH, or Maſnepheth, the Hebrew name of the high prieſt's cap or mitre. Moſes gives us no particular deſcription of it.

MIZOR, Μισὼ, in Greek, Miſo, in the Hebrew Jaheſar, or Jaheſah, plain, or level way; from ישר jaſhar: otherwiſe, ox; from שור ſhur: or wall: otherwiſe, ſawed; from נשר naſhar.

MIZOR, or Miſor, a city of Reuben, given to the Levites of the family of Merari, 1 Chron. vi. 78, 79. Mizor is not in the Hebrew of Joſhua, nor in the Chronicles. There is ſome probability that Mizor is put for Jaza. Aquila and Symmachus have taken Mizor for a plain; and indeed this word is ſometimes put for a champain country. See Joſhua xx. 8. xxi. 36.

MIZPAH, מצפה, or Mizpeh, a centinel, ſpeculation, or that waits for; from צפה tſaphah: or roof.

I. MIZPAH, Mizpeh, Maſpha, or Meſphe, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 38. ſouth of Jeruſalem, and north of Hebron or Eleutheropolis, about ſix leagues from Jeruſalem. I think it to be Mizpah of Benjamin, 1 Sam. vii. 5, 6, 7. Joſh. xviii. 26. which was a place of prayer and devotion, where the Hebrews often aſſembled. See 1 Kings xv. 22. 2 Chron. xvi. 6. Nehem. iii. 7. 1 Sam. x. 17. 1 Mac. iii. 46.

II. MIZPAH, or Maſphath, of Gad, in the mountains of Galeed. Here Laban and Jacob made a covenant, Gen. xxxi. 49. Jephthah dwelt at Mizpah, Mizpah, and here he made a covenant with the Iſraelites on the other ſide of Jordan, who choſe him for their captain; and here he aſſembled his troops, Judg. xi. 11, 29, 34. This city is ſometimes aſcribed to Moab, becauſe the Moabites conquered, and kept it.

III. MIZPAH Joſhua, xi. 3, 8. ſpeaks of the Hivites, who inhabited the country of Mizpeh, or Mizpah, at the foot of Mount Hermon, and conſequently towards the head of the river Jordan. He adds, that the army of Jabin and his allies being put to flight, took refuge at Mizpah, to the eaſt of the city of Sidon: which agrees with that poſition.

IV. MIZPAH, in general, ſignifies ſome elevated place from whence there was a proſpect to a diſtance; an eminence where a watch was kept.

MIZRAIM, מצרים, μεσαρεὶμ, tribulations, or who is ſtreightened or blocked up; from מצר matzar.

MIZRAIM, or Meſraim, ſon of Ham, and father of Ludim, Anamim, Lehabim, Naphtuhim, Pathruſim, and Caſluhim, Gen. x. 6. Meſer or Miſor was father of the Mizraim, or the Egyptians; and he himſelf is commonly called Mizraim, although there is very ſtrong probability that Mizraim being of the plural number, ſignifies rather the Egyptians themſelves, than the father of that people. The name Mizraim is alſo put for the country: thus it has three ſignifications, which are perpetually confounded and uſed promiſcuouſly, being ſometimes put for the land of Egypt, ſometimes for him that firſt peopled Egypt, and ſometimes for the inhabitants themſelves. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXXIX. page .

The word Mizraim being of the dual number, may expreſs both Egypts, the ſuperior and inferior, or the two parts of this country, as divided by the Nile. The city of Cairo the capital of Egypt, and even Egypt itſelf, is to this day called Mezer by the Arabians. But the natives call it Chemi, i. e. the Land of Cham, or Ham, as it is alſo ſometimes called by the Hebrews, Pſal. lxxviii. 12. cv. 23. cvi. 22. The prophet Micah, vii. 12. Heb. gives to Egypt the name of Mezor; [or Matzor] and the Rabbi Kimchi, followed herein by ſeveral learned commentators, explains by Egypt what is ſaid of the rivers of Mezor, 2 Kings xix. 24. Iſai. xix. 6. Heb.

The city of Memphis, in Hebrew Moph or Noph, and which long was the capital of Egypt, had alſo the name of Meſer. The Oriental geographers ſay, that from the time of the conqueſts of Alexander, it had the name of Bablion or Babylon, in memory of the ancient Babylon of Chaldæa. But the cities of Memphis, Babylon, and Cairo, though not far from one another, and built from the ruins of each other, are not ſtrictly in the ſame place. Cairo is eaſt of the Nile, and old Memphis weſt. Vide MEMPHIS, EGYPT, &c.

MIZREPHOTH-MAIM, משרפות, the burnings of the waters; from סרף ſaraph, to burn, and from מים majim, waters: or ſimply, furnaces where metals are melted.

MIZREHOTH-MAIM, Joſh. xi. 8. xiii. 6. We think this may be the city of Sarepta: the root is the ſame as of Mizrephoth. Others think the waters of Mizrephoth were hot waters; others that they were the ſalt waters of the ſea, received into canals, which being exhaled by the heat of the ſun, produced ſalt, as is practiſed in ſome places on the ſea ſhore.

MIZZAH, מזה, μοζὲ, diſtillation, or ſprinkling; from נזה nazah: otherwiſe, of this; from the conjunction מ of, and from זה ze, this: or, according to the Syriac, conſumption, or burning.

MIZZAH, or Meza, fourth ſon of Reuel, ſon of Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 13.

MNASON, mentioned Acts xxi. 16. He was an ancient diſciple, a Jew by birth; converted by Jeſus Chriſt himſelf; and one of the Seventy. St. Paul lodged at his houſe at Jeruſalem, A. D. 58. Several Latin copies call him Jaſon, others Naſon, but his true name was Mnaſon. He was a different perſon from Jaſon the hoſt of St. Paul at Theſſalonica, Acts xvii. 5.

MNESTHEUS, Μενεσθεὺς, force, ſtrength, or anger of God; from the Greek μένος, force, anger, and Θέος, God.

MOAB, מואב, of his father; from the prepoſition מ m, of, or from, and the pronoun ו o, his, and אב ab, father. Inſtead of Moab, the ancients pronounced Meab, the waters of the father, the ſon of the father. Waters repreſent generation.

MOAB, ſon of Lot, and of his eldeſt daughter. The circumſtances of his conception and birth may be ſeen, Gen. xix. 31, &c. This happened about the ſame time as the birth of Iſaac, A. M. 2108, ante A D. 1896. Moab was father of the Moabites.

MOABITES, a people deſcended from Moab, ſon of Lot. Their habitation was beyond Jordan, and the Dead Sea, on both ſides the river Arnon. Their capital city was ſituated on that river; and was called Ar, or Areopolis, or Ariel of Moab, or Rabbah-Moab, i. e. the capital of Moab, or Kir-hareſh, i. e. a city with brick walls. This country was originally poſſeſſed by a race of giants called Emim, Deut. ii. 11, 12. The Moabites conquered them, and afterwards the Amorites took a part from the Moabites, Judg. xi. 13. Moſes conquered that part which belonged to the Amorites, and gave it to the tribe of Reuben. The Moabites were ſpared by Moſes, for God had reſtricted him, Deut. ii. 9. But there always was a great antipathy between the Moabites and Iſraelites, which occaſioned many wars between them. Balaam the wizard ſeduced the Hebrews to idolatry and uncleanneſs, by means of the daughters of Moab, Numb. xxv. 1, 2. and Balak, king of this people, endeavoured to prevail on Balaam to curſe Iſrael. God ordained, that the Moabites ſhould not enter into the congregation of his people, [q. be capable of magiſtracy?] even to the tenth generation, Deut. xxiii. 3. becauſe they had the inhumanity to refuſe the Iſraelites a paſſage through their country, nor would ſupply them with bread and water in their neceſſity.

Eglon king of the Moabites, was one of the firſt that oppreſſed Iſrael after the death of Joſhua. Ehud killed Eglon, and Iſrael expelled the Moabites, Judg. iii. 12, &c. A. M. 2679, ante A. D. 1325. Hanun king of the Ammonites having inſulted David's ambaſſadors, David made war againſt him, and ſubdued Moab and Ammon: under which ſubjection they continued till the ſeparation of the ten tribes. The Ammonites and Moabites continued in ſubjection to the kings of Iſrael to the death of Ahab.

Preſently after the death of Ahab, the Moabites began to revolt. 2 Kings iii. 4, 5. Meſha king of Moab, refuſed the tribute of an hundred thouſand lambs, and as many rams, which till then had been cuſtomarily paid, either yearly, or at the beginning of every reign, which of theſe two is not clearly expreſſed in Scripture. The reign of Ahaziah was too ſhort to make war with them; but Jehoram, ſon of Ahab, and brother to Ahaziah, having aſcended the throne, thought of reducing them to obedience. He invited Jehoſhaphat king of Judah: who with the king of Edom, then his vaſſal, entered Moab: where they were near to periſhing with thirſt, but were miraculouſly relieved. Vide 2 Kings iii. 16, &c.

It is not eaſy to perceive what were the circumſtances of the Moabites from this time; but Iſaiah, at the beginning of the reign of king Hezekiah, threatens them with a calamity, which was to happen three years after his prediction, and which probably referred to the war that Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria made with the ten tribes, and the other people beyond Jordan.

Amos i. 13, &c. alſo foretold great miſeries to them, which, probably, they ſuffered under Uzziah and Jotham, kings of Judah, or under Shalmaneſer: 2 Chron. xxvi. 7, 8. xxvii. 5. or laſtly, the war of Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem: we believe this prince carried them captive beyond the Euphrates, as the prophets had threatened; Jerem. ix. 26. xii. 14, 15. xxv. 11, 12. xlviii. Jerem. xlviii. 47. xlix. 3, 6, 39. l. 16. and that Cyrus ſent them home again, as he did the reſt of the captives. After their return from captivity, they multiplied, and fortified themſelves, as the Jews did, and other neighbouring people; ſtill in ſubjection to the kings of Perſia, afterwards conquered by Alexander the Great, and in obedience to the kings of Syria and Egypt ſucceſſively, and finally to the Romans. There is a probability alſo, that in the later times of the Jewiſh republic, they obeyed the Aſmonean kings, and afterwards Herod the Great.

The principal deities of the Moabites were Chemoſh and Baal-peor. Vide their articles. The Scripture ſpeaks of Nebo, of Baal-meon. and of Baal-dibon, as of gods of the Moabites: but it is likely theſe are rather names of places where Chemoſh and Peor were worſhipped: and that Baal-dibon, Baal-meon, and Nebo, are no other than Chemoſh adored at Dibon, or at Meon, or on Mount Nebo.

MOADIAH, מואדיה, μααδαὶ, ſolemnity, or feſtival of the Lord.

MODIN, Μωδεὶν, judgment, or debate, or quarrel; from דין dun.

MODIN, a celebrated city or town in the tribe of Dan, from whence aroſe Mattathias and his ſons, known by the name of Maccabees, 1 Macc. ii. 1, 15. ix. 19. This place could not be far from the ſea, ſince the mariners from their ſhips might ſee the mauſolæum, here erected in honour of Mattathias, 1 Macc. xiii. 29, 30. Euſebius ſays, that Modin was not far from Dioſpolis, and that in his time was ſtill to be ſeen the tomb of the Maccabees. St. Jerom on Iſai. xxx. inſinuates that it was but a ſmall place, which he calls Viculus, or a little village. See MATTATHIAS. But Modin is not only famous for the tomb of the Maccabees, but alſo for a battle fought by an handful of men, under Judas Maccabæus, againſt Antiochus Eupator, 2 Macc. xiii. 9, &c.

There is a ſeeming contradiction in the author. He ſays, ver. 15. that Judas went into the king's tent by night; and ver. 17. that this was done in the break of the day. I imagine the attack was begun in the night, but the action was not compleated till break of day.

MOLADAH, מולדה, birth, generation; from ילד jalad, to beget.

MOLADAH, or Molatha, a city of Simeon, Joſh. xv. 26. xix. 2. firſt given to Judah, afterwards to Simeon. I imagine it to be the Malatha, or Malathis, mentioned in the Notitia Imperii; alſo the the Makheloth, Numb. xxxiii. 25. This city was in the moſt ſoutherly part of Judah. See MALATHA.

MOLE, an animal declared impure by Moſes, Lev. xi. 30. Heb. תנשמת tinſhameth. LXX. Ἀσπαλάξ. Vulg. Talpa. Chald. אשותא Aſhuta. The Hebrew tinſhamet is underſtood by the Syriac for an animal with ſeveral feet; perhaps the ſcolopendra. Caſtellio tranſlates the Hebrew by a toad; others by a weaſel. Bochart thinks it ſignifies a camelion, but the Chaldee and the Rabbins underſtand it of a mole. Bochart believes, that the true word for a mole is choled, which the Vulgate has tranſlated weaſel. Levit. xi. 29. חלד Chald. חולד Vid. Bochart. de Animal. Sacr. p. 1. lib. iii. cap. 35.

We find the word mole in the Vulgate, [and in the Engliſh tranſlation] Iſai. ii. 20. But the Hebrew reads חפרפרות chaporperoth, from a root ſignifying to dig; and by conſent of interpreters, it ſignifies in this place moles. By this paſſage, we ſee the exceſſive blindneſs of the Jews, who gave divine honours to ſuch creatures.

MOLID, מוליד. See MOLADAH. Otherwiſe, circumciſion of the hand; from מול mul, circumciſion, and יד jad: otherwiſe, that begets.

MOLOCH, מלך, king; from מלך melec.

MOLOCH, Molech, Milcom, or Melchom, a god of the Ammonites. The word Moloch ſignifies king, and Melchom ſignifies their king. Moſes in ſeveral places forbids the Iſraelites under the penalty of death to dedicate their children to Moloch, by making them paſs through the fire in honour of that god, Lev. xviii. 21. xx. 2, 3, 4, 5. And God himſelf threatens to pour out his wrath againſt ſuch a man. There is great probability that the Hebrews were addicted to the worſhip of this deity, even before their coming out of Egypt, ſince Amos v. 26. and after him St. Stephen, Acts vii. 43. reproaches them with having carried in the wilderneſs, the tabernacle of their god Moloch. Solomon built a temple to Moloch on the Mount of Olives, 1 Kings xi. 7. and Manaſſeh a long time after, imitated his impiety, making his ſon paſs through the fire in honour of Moloch, 2 Kings xxi. 3, 4. It was chiefly in the valley of Tophet and Hinnom, eaſt of Jeruſalem, that ſuch idolatrous worſhip was paid, Jerem. xix. 5, 6, &c.

Some are of opinion, that they contented themſelves with making their children leap over a fire ſacred to Moloch; by this conſecrating them to that falſe deity; and by this luſtration purifying them: this being an uſual ceremony on other occaſions among the heathen. Others believe that they made them paſs between two fires oppoſite to each other; in the ſame intention. But others maintain that they really burnt their children, as ſacrifices to Moloch. See Pſalm cvi. 37. Iſaiah lvii. 5. Ezek. xvi. 20, 21. xxiii. 37, 39. where it is poſitively aſſerted, that the Hebrews ſacrificed their children to devils, to Moloch, and to ſtrange gods. And 2 Kings xvii. 31. it is ſaid, that the inhabitants of Sepharvaim burnt their children in the fire to Anammelech and Adrammelech their gods. However I would not be underſtood to aſſert, that they always really burnt to death their children; and perhaps when it is only ſaid they made them paſs through the fire, luſtrare per ignem, or transferre per ignem, this may mean in ſome places, the leaping over the flames, or paſſing nimbly between two fires. But we are perſuaded, that generally ſpeaking the worſhippers of Moloch immolated or ſacrificed their children to death in honour of this falſe deity. Vide FRAGMENT, No. LI. page 99.

The Rabbins aſſure us, that the idol Moloch was of braſs, ſitting on a throne of the ſame metal, adorned with a royal crown, having the head of a calf, and his arms extended as if to embrace any one. When they would offer any children to him, they heated the ſtatue within by a great fire; and when it was burning hot, they put the miſerable victim within his arms, where it was ſoon conſumed by the violence of the heat: and, that the cries of the children might not be heard, they made a great noiſe with drums, and other inſtruments, about the idol. Others ſay, that his arms were extended, and reaching toward the ground; ſo that when they put a child within his arms, it immediately fell into a great fire which was burning at the foot of the ſtatue. Others relate that it was hollow, and had internally ſeven partitions, the firſt of which was appointed for meal or flour; in the ſecond there were turtles, in the third an ewe, in the fourth a ram, in the fifth a calf, in the ſixth an ox, and in the ſeventh a child. All theſe were burned together, by heating the ſtatue on the inſide.

When David conquered the Ammonites, 1 Chron. xx. 2. he took the crown of their god Milcom, or more ſimply, he took the crown of their king, which weighed a talent of gold, and made a crown of it for himſelf. The Hebrew talent weighed three thouſand ſhekels, or one hundred and twenty-five Roman pounds. This is an exceſſive weight for a crown royal. Therefore it is thought this prince did not wear it on his head, but cauſed it to be hung upon his throne, over his head. Or laſtly, that the talent of gold here mentioned, does not expreſs the weight, but the value, of the crown. It was of gold, and ſet with precious ſtones, as is hinted in the book of Chronicles. Theſe precious ſtones were a very conſiderable addition to the price; but its weight might be that of an ordinary royal crown. This is the opinion of ſome commentators on 2 Sam. xii. 30.

There are various ſentiments about Moloch: ſome believe that Moloch was Saturn, to whom it is well known that human ſacrifices were offered. Others think he was Mercury, others Venus, others Mars or Mithra. We have endeavoured to prove, that Moloch ſignified the ſun, or the king of heaven. See alſo Selden de Diis Syris, Spencer, de legibus Hebræorum Ritualib. lib. ii. cap. 10. And Voſſius, de Origine & progreſſu Idolatriæ, lib. ii. cap. 5.

MONEY. Scripture often ſpeaks of gold, ſilver, braſs, of certain ſums of money, of purchaſes made with money, of current money, of money of a certain weight; but I do not obſerve coined or ſtamped money till late, which induces me to believe, that the ancient Hebrews took gold and ſilver only by weight. That they only conſidered the purity of the metal, and not the ſtamp.

The moſt ancient manner of commerce, was by way of barter, or exchanging one ſort of merchandize for another. One man gave what he could ſpare to another, who gave him in return what he alſo did not want. Afterwards, the more precious metals were uſed in traffic, as things whoſe values were more generally known and ſtated. Laſtly, they contrived to give this metal a certain mark, a certain weight, and a certain degree of alloy, to fix its value, and to ſave buyers and ſellers the trouble of weighing and examining the metal.

At the ſiege of Troy in Homer Iliad, Σ. they make no mention of gold or ſilver coined; but the values of things are eſtimated by the number of oxen they were worth. E. gr. They bought wine, by giving oxen, ſlaves, ſkins, iron, &c. for it. Iliad. H. When the Greeks firſt uſed money, it was only little pieces of iron or copper, called Oboli, Spits, of which an handful was a drachma, Plutarch. in Lyſandro. Herodotus, lib. i. cap. 94. thinks, that the Lydians were the firſt that ſtamped money of gold or ſilver, and introduced it into commerce. Others ſay, it was Iſhon king of Theſſaly, and ſon of Deucalion, Lucan. Pharſal, lib. vi. Others aſcribe this honour to Erichthonius, who had been educated by the daughters of Cecrops king of Athens: Strabo, lib. viii. Others again to Phidon king of Argos.

Among the Perſians it is ſaid, that Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes, firſt coined golden money, Herodot. lib. iii. cap. 89, &c. lib. iv. cap. 166. Lycurgus baniſhed gold and ſilver from his commonwealth of Lacedæmon, and only allowed a ſort of rude money, made of iron. Janus, or rather the kings of Rome, made a kind of groſs money of copper, having on one ſide the double face of Janus, on the other, the head of a ſhip.

I find nothing concerning the money of the Egyptians, the Phœnicians, the Arabians, or the Syrians, before Alexander the Great. In China to this day they ſtamp no money of gold or ſilver, but only of copper. Gold and ſilver paſs only as merchandize. If any one offers gold or ſilver, they take it and pay it by weight, as other goods. So that they are obliged to cut it into pieces with ſheers for that purpoſe, and they carry a ſteel-yard at their girdles to weigh it.

The people of Albania, and thoſe on the banks of the Araxes, had neither money, nor weights, nor meaſures, and did not reckon beyond an hundred: Strab. lib. xi. p. 352. Mr. Tournefort ſays, Voyage, lib. ii. p. 127. that to this day the Georgians, who ſucceeded that people, deſpiſe money, and would not ſell their proviſions; but would barter for them. All the trade of Mingrelia is carried on by barter. In Ethiopia and Bengal they uſe ſea-ſhells of the Maldive iſlands, inſtead of ſmall money: alſo in the Maldives, and ſeveral places of India: alſo on the coaſts of Guinea, and in the kingdoms of Congo and Siam.

Let us now return to the Hebrews. Abraham weighs out four hundred ſhekels of ſilver, to purchaſe Sarah's tomb: Gen. xxiii. 15, 16. And Scripture obſerves, that he paid this in current money with the merchant. Joſeph was ſold by his brethren to the Midianites for twenty pieces of ſilver, Gen. xxxvii. 28. Heb. twenty ſhekels of ſilver. The brethren of Joſeph bring back with them into Egypt the money they found in their ſacks, in the ſame weight as they had given; Gen. xliii. 21. The bracelets that Eliezer gave to Rebecca weighed ten ſhekels, and the ear-rings two ſhekels. Gen. xxiv. 22. Moſes ordered that they ſhould take the weight of five hundred ſhekels of myrrh, and two hundred and fifty ſhekels of cinnamon, of the weight of the ſanctuary, to make the perfume which was to be burnt to the Lord on the golden altar, Ex. xxx. 24. He acquaints us in another place, that they offered for the works of the tabernacle, ſeventy-two thouſand talents of braſs, Exod. xxxviii. 29. We read in the books of Samuel, that the weight of Abſalom's hair was two hundred ſhekels of the ordinary weight, or of the king's weight, 2 Sam. xiv. 26. Iſaiah deſcribes the wicked weighing ſilver in a balance, to make an idol thereof; Iſai. xlvi. 6. and Jeremiah, xxxii. 10. weighs ſeventeen pieces of ſilver in a pair of ſcales, to pay for for a field, he had bought. Iſaiah ſays, Come buy wine and milk without money, and without price. Wherefore do ye weigh money for that which is not bread? Amos vii. 5. repreſents the merchants encouraging one another, to make the ephah ſmall, wherewith to ſell, and the ſhekel great, wherewith to buy, and to falſify the balances by deceit.

In all theſe paſſages there is only mentioned theſe three things. 1. The metal, i. e. gold or ſilver, and never copper, it not being uſed in traffic as money. 2. The weight, a talent, a ſhekel, a gerah or obolus; of the weight of the ſanctuary, and of the king's weight. 3. The alloy, of pure or fine gold and ſilver, and of good alloy, as received by the merchant. It is ſpoken no where of the impreſſion, or of the coinage; but it is ſaid, they weighed the ſilver, or other commodities by the ſhekel and the talent. This ſhekel therefore, and this talent, were not fixed and determined pieces of money, but weights that were applied to all things uſed in commerce. Hence thoſe deceitful balances of the merchants, who would increaſe the ſhekel, i. e. would augment the weight by which they weighed the gold and ſilver they were to receive, that they might have a greater quantity than was their due; hence in the weight of the ſanctuary, the ſtandard of which was laid up in the temple, to prevent fraud; hence thoſe prohibitions in the law, Thou ſhalt not have in thy bag diverſe weights; a great and a ſmall, Deut. xxv. 13. Hence thoſe ſcales that the Hebrews wore always at their girdles, Hoſea xii. 7. and the Canaanites in their hands; as the Chineſe ſtill wear them at their girdles, to weigh the gold and ſilver which they receive in payment.

And it is to be obſerved, that in the original text there is never any mention of money, or of any thing like it. The gold and ſilver offered to Moſes in the Deſert, for the uſe of the tabernacle;—that which was given to Aaron to make a golden calf;—that of which Gideon made an ephod; — that which tempted Achan; — that which David left Solomon; — and that which Gehazi received from Naaman; was only gold or ſilver made into rings, bracelets, pendants, veſſels, or ingots. Not a word of coined money, of a mark or impreſſion, nothing to ſhew the form of the money, or the figure repreſented upon it. For, generally, coined money has the name of ſome prince, ſome animal, flower, or ſome device on it. But nothing of this kind occurs among the Hebrews.

It is true that in the Hebrew of Geneſis xxxiii. 19, we find, that Jacob bought a field for an hundred keſitah's; and that the friends of Job, chap. xlii. 11. after his recovery, gave to that model of patience each a keſitah, and a golden pendant for the ears. We alſo find there daricks, (in Hebrew Darcmonim, or Adarcmonim.) and Minæ, Stateræ, Oboli: but this laſt kind of money was foreign, and is put for other terms, which in the Hebrew only ſignify the weight of the metal. The keſitah is not well known to us; ſome take it for a ſheep or a lamb; others for a kind of money, having the impreſſion of a lamb or a ſheep. But we rather think it to be a purſe of money. See KESITAH.

The Darcmonims or Daricks, are money of the kings of Perſia; and it is agreed, that Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, firſt began to coin golden money. Ezekiel tells us, xlv. 12. that the mina makes ſixty ſhekels; he reduces this foreign money to the weight of the Hebrews. The mina may probably be a Perſian money originally, and adopted by the Greeks and by the Hebrews. But under the dominion of the Perſians, the Hebrews were hardly at liberty to coin money of their own, being under the obedience of theſe princes, and very low in their own country. They were ſtill leſs able under the Chaldæans, during the Babyloniſh captivity, nor afterwards under the Grecians, to whom they were ſubject till the time of Simon Maccabæus, to whom Antiochus Sidetes king of Syria granted the privilege of coining money in Judæa, 1 Macc. xv. 6. And this is the firſt Hebrew money properly ſo called, that we know of. There were ſhekels and demi-ſhekels of ſilver. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. XXVIII. p. 51. No. . also, and plates of JEWISH COINS.

MONTH, in Latin Menſis, in Greek Meen, in Hebrew Chodeſch or Jerach. The ancient Hebrews had no particular names for their months. They ſaid, the firſt, ſecond, third, &c. In Moſes, Exod. xiii. 4. xxiii. 15. xxxiv. 18. Deut. xvi. 1. חדש אבוב, we find Chodeſh Abib, or the month of the young ears of corn, or of the new fruits: which is, probably, the Egyptian name of the month, which the Hebrews afterwards called Niſan, and which was the firſt of the holy year. Every where elſe this lawgiver marks out the months by their order of ſucceſſion. In Joſhua, Judges and Samuel, we ſee the ſame method. Under Solomon we read of the month Sio or Zif, which is the ſecond month of the holy year, and which anſwers to that afterwards called Jiar. In the ſame chapter we read of the month Bul, which is the eighth of the holy year, and anſwers to Marſchevan, or October. Laſtly, in chap. viii.

viii. 2. of the ſame book, we read of the month Ethanim, or the month of the valiant, which anſwers to Tizri, the ſeventh of the holy year.

Critics are not agreed about the origin of theſe names of the months. Scaliger thought Solomon borrowed them from the Phœnicians, with whom he had much intercourſe. Grotius believes they came from the Chaldæans, and F. Hardouin fetches them from the Egyptians. However this be, we ſee nothing of them, either before or after Solomon. But after the captivity of Babylon, they continued the names of the months as they had found them among the Chaldæans and Perſians.

At firſt the Hebrews followed the ſame diſtribution of their year and months, as Egypt. Their year conſiſted of 365 days, and of twelve months each of thirty days. This appears by the enumeration of the days, of the year of the deluge, Gen. ch. vii. The twelfth month was to have thirty-five days, and they had no intercalary month, but at the end of one hundred and twenty years, when the beginning of the year following was out of its place thirty whole days.

After the Exodus, which happened in the month of March, God ordained that the holy year, i. e. the calendar of religious feaſts and ceremonies, ſhould begin at Niſan, the ſeventh month of the civil year (the civil year he did not change) which the Hebrews have always continued to begin at the month Tizri, anſwering to our September. After the Babyloniſh captivity, the Jews being but an handful of people in the midſt of others, ſurrounding them, complied with ſuch cuſtoms, and manners of dividing times and ſeaſons, as were uſed by the people that ruled over them; firſt, of the Chaldæans, afterwards of the Perſians, and laſtly, of the Grecians. They took the names of the months from the Chaldæans and Perſians, and perhaps their manner of dividing the year and months. However, we cannot be ſure of this, not exactly knowing the form of the Chaldæan months. But we ſee plainly by Eccleſiaſticus, xliii. 6. by the Maccabees, by Joſephus, Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 10. and by Philo, vit. Moſ. lib. iii. that in their time they followed the cuſtom of the Grecians: that is, that their months were lunar, and their years ſolar.

Theſe lunar months were each of twenty-nine days and an half, or, rather, one was of thirty days, the following of twenty-nine, and ſo on alternately: that which had thirty days was called a full or compleat month; that which had but twenty-nine days was called incompleat. The new moon was always the beginning of the month, and this day they called Neomenia, new-moon day, or new month. They did not begin it from that point of time, in which the moon is in conjunction with the ſun, but from the time at which ſhe firſt becomes viſible, after that conjunction. And to determine this moment, it is ſaid, they had people poſted on elevated places, to inform the Sanhedrim as ſoon as poſſible. Proclamation was then made, the feaſt of the new moon, the feaſt of the new moon; and the beginning of the month was proclaimed by ſound of trumpet. For fear of any failing in the obſervation of that command, which directed certain ceremonies at the beginning of each month, they continued the Neomenia two days, the firſt was called the day of the moon's appearance, the other of the moon's diſappearance. So ſay the Rabbins: but there is great probability, that if this was ever practiced, it was only in provinces diſtant from Jeruſalem, For in the temple, and in the capital city, there was always a fixed calendar, or at leaſt a fixed deciſion for feſtival days, determined by the houſe of judgment.

When we ſay that the months of the Jews anſwered to ours, Niſan to March, Jiar to April, &c.

&c. this muſt be underſtood with ſome latitude; for the lunar months cannot be reduced exactly to ſolar ones. The vernal equinox falls between the twentieth and twenty-firſt of March, according to the courſe of the ſolar year. But in the lunar year, the new moon will fall in the month of March, and the full moon in the month of April. So that the Hebrew months will commonly anſwer to two of our months, the end of one, and the beginning of the other.

Twelve lunar months making but three hundred fifty-four days and ſix hours, the Jewiſh year was ſhort of the Roman by twelve days. To recover the equinoctial points, from which this difference of the ſolar and lunar year would ſeparate the new moon of the firſt month, the Jews every three years intercalated a thirteenth month, which they called Ve-adar; the ſecond Adar. By this means their lunar year equalled the ſolar; becauſe in thirty-ſix ſolar months there would be thirty-ſeven lunar months. The Sanhedrim regulated this intercalation, and this thirteenth month was placed between Adar and Niſan; ſo that the paſſover was always celebrated the firſt full moon after the equinox. Conſult F. Lamy's Introduction to the Scripture, and our Diſſertation on Chronology, at the beginning of our commentary on Geneſis; Scaliger de emendatione temporum; and Calviſius's Introduction to Chronology.

MOON, Luna. The Lord created the ſun and the moon on the fourth day of the world, to preſide over day and night, and to diſtinguiſh times and ſeaſons, Gen. i. 15, 16. As the ſun preſides over day, ſo the moon preſides over night; the ſun regulates the courſe of a year, the moon the courſe of a month; the ſun is, as it were, king of the hoſt of heaven, the moon is queen. Moſes ſpeaks of the moon as of a luminous body, not much inferior to the ſun; yet it is certain, that the moon, when compared to the ſun, is but a very ſmall body. The moon's diameter is about 2184 Engliſh miles; her ſuperficial content is about one thirteenth part of the ſurface of the earth, whereas the ſun's diameter is 100 times that of the earth, and his ſuperficial content 10,000 times that of the earth's ſurface. But the ſacred authors ſpeak in a popular manner. They call that a great light which appears great to us: not meaning to determine its abſolute magnitude.

The moon was appointed for the diſtinction of ſeaſons, of feſtival days, and days of aſſembling, ſays Gen. i. 14. And the Pſalmiſt ſays, civ. 19. He made the moon for ſeaſons. So Eccleſiaſticus; He made the moon alſo to ſerve in her ſeaſon, for a declaration of times, and a ſign of the world. From the moon is the ſign of feaſts, a light that decreaſeth in her perfection. The month is called after her name: increaſing wonderfully in her changing, being an inſtrument of the armies above, ſhining in the firmament of heaven. The beauty of heaven, the glory of the ſtars, an ornament giving light in the higheſt places of the Lord. The Hebrews varied their manner of reckoning months and years. We think that in the time of Moſes, and long after, they kept to the ſolar year; but after their return from Babylon, they had only lunar years. This the author of Eccleſiaſticus inſinuates in the paſſage quoted. It is true, however, either way, that the moon marks the revolutions of ſeaſons, and that men divided the year into twelve months, by following the twelve revolutions of the moon, in the courſe of one year.

I do not know whether the Hebrews underſtood the cauſe of lunar eclipſes; but they always ſpeak of them in terms which intimate that they conſidered them as wonders, and as effects of the power, and wrath of God. When the prophets ſpeak of the deſtruction of empires, they often ſay, that the ſun ſhall be covered with darkneſs; the moon withdraw her light; and the ſtars fall from heaven. Iſai. xiii. 10. xxiv. 23. Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8. Joel ii. 10. iii. 15. But I cannot perceive that there is any direct mention of an eclipſe.

Among the Orientals in general, and the Hebrews in particular, the worſhip of the moon was more extenſive; and more famous, than that of the ſun. Deut. iv. 19. xvii. 3. Moſes bids the Iſraelites take care, that when they ſee the ſun, the moon, the ſtars, and the hoſt of heaven, not to pay them any ſuperſtitious worſhip, becauſe they were only creatures appointed for the ſervice of all nations that are under heaven. Job, xxxi. 26, 27. alſo ſpeaks of the ſame worſhip. If I beheld the ſun when it ſhined, or the moon walking in brightneſs, and my heart has been ſecretly enticed, or my mouth hath kiſſed my hand, as a token of adoration. The Hebrews worſhipped the moon by the name of Meni, of Aſtarte, of the goddeſs of the groves, of the queen of heaven, &c. The Syrians adored her, as Aſtarte, Urania, or Cæleſtis; the Arabians as Alilat; the Egyptians as Iſis; the Greeks as Diana, Venus, Juno, Hecate, Bellona, Minerva, &c.

Macrobius, Saturnal, lib. iii. cap. 8. and Julius Firmicus acquaint us, that men dreſſed like women, and women dreſſed like men, ſacrificed to the moon. And Maimonides thinks, Moſe Nebochim, part iii. cap. 38. that this is what Moſes intended to forbid, when he prohibited the ſexes from from ſuch an exchange of habits. The moon was worſhipped as a god, and not a goddeſs, in Syria, Meſopotamia, and Armenia. The Sepharvites called her Anamelech, the gracious king. Strabo calls her Men: as does Iſaiah lxv. 11. She was repreſented clothed like a man; and there are medals extant, on which ſhe is repreſented in the habit and form of a man armed, having a cock at his feet, covered with a Phrygian or Armenian bonnet. Spartian, in Caracalla. aſſures us, that the people of Charræ in Meſopotamia believed, that ſuch as held the moon for a goddeſs, would be always in ſubjection to their wives. He adds, that though the Greeks and Egyptians ſometimes called her goddeſs, yet they always call her god in their myſteries. In Scripture we have no name for goddeſs, and Aſtarte, i. e. the moon, is called a god, as well as Baal, who is the ſun. Vide plate of BAAL, and the FRAGMENT, No. CVII, page.

They offered ſeveral ſorts of ſacrifices to the moon. We ſee in Iſaiah lxv. 11. and Jeremiah vii. 18. that they offered to her in the high ways, and upon the roofs of their houſes, ſacrifices of cakes, and ſimilar offerings. Thus the Greeks honoured Hecate, or Trivia, which is the moon. Elſewhere they offered to her human ſacrifices. Strabo relates, lib. xi. that in the countries bordering on the Araxes, they eſpecially worſhipped the moon, who had there a famous temple. The goddeſs had ſeveral ſlaves, and every year they offered one of them in ſacrifice to her, after having fed him daintily the whole year before. Lucian, de Dea Syr. ſpeaks of like ſacrifices, offered to the goddeſs of Syria, who was the Dea cœleſtis, i. e. the moon. Fathers carried their children, tied up in ſacks, to the top of the porch of the temple, from whence they threw them down upon the pavement; and when theſe unfortunate victims moaned, the fathers would anſwer, that they were not their children, but young calves.

The Jews aſcribed different effects to the moon. Moſes ſpeaks of the fruits of the ſun and the moon. Deut. xxxiii. 14. The ſun and moon are conſidered as the two cauſes which produce the fruits of the earth. The moon furniſhes them with moiſture and juices; the ſun concocts this moiſture, and exhales what is ſuperfluous, Plin. lib. ii. cap. 101. Lunæ fœmineum ac molle ſidus atque nocturnum, ſolvere humorem & trahere, non auferre. Some commentators think, that the fruits of the ſun are thoſe that come yearly, as wheat, grapes, &c. and the fruits of the moon are thoſe that may be gathered at different months of the year, as cucumbers, figs, &c.

MORASTHI, מורשתי, heir, or inheritance, or of the inheritance; from the prepoſition מ am, of, or from, and ירש jaraſh: otherwiſe, of poverty; from the ſame.

MORASTHI, the country of the prophet Micah. See MARESA.

MORDECAI, מרדכי, contrition, or bitter bruiſing; from דוך duc, to bruiſe, and מרר marar, bitter: or myrrh bruiſed; from מור mor, myrrh, and duc, to bruiſe: or who teaches to bruiſe; from mara, maſter, or he that teaches: otherwiſe, very pure myrrh, according to the Hebrew and Syriac. This name is not Hebrew, but Chaldee, compoſed of Merodach, or Mordak, a deity of the Babylonians.

MORDECAI, ſon of Jair, of the race of Saul, and a chief of the tribe of Benjamin. He was carried captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, with Jehoiachin (or Jeconiah) king of Judah, A. M. 3405, before A. D. 599. Eſther ii. 5, 6. He ſettled at Shuſhan, and there lived to the firſt year of Cyrus, when it is thought he returned to Jeruſalem with ſeveral other captives, Vide 1 Eſdras ii. 2. Abenezra, Cornel. à lapide, & alios. But afterwards he returned to Shuſhan. There is great probability that Mordecai was very young when taken into captivity. For from the tranſportation of Jeconiah by Nebuchadnezzar, to the third year of Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes, or Ahaſuerus, who, this year took Eſther to wife, is above fourſcore years.

Some believe that Mordecai came to Babylon or Shuſhan, only in the perſon of his father, and that he was born in this country: but there is no need of this ſolution. For if we ſuppoſe Mordecai to be twelve years old at the tranſportation of Jeconiah, then at the time of Ahaſuerus's marriage with Eſther he might be fourſcore and twelve. At this age he might diſcharge the duty of thoſe employments the king gave him, yet live a long time, ſuppoſing, as the Jews pretend, that he lived to be an hundred fourſcore and eighteen years old; or even if he lived to be only an hundred and ten, or an hundred and twenty. However this be, Mordecai had a niece called Edeſſa, or Eſther, the daughter of his brother, whom he had adopted and brought up as his own daughter, after the death of his brother.

Eſther became the ſpouſe of Ahaſuerus, (vide ESTHER:) Mordecai was very aſſiduous at the palace gate to learn news of the queen: during his attendance there he diſcovered the conſpiracy of two eunuchs to kill the king: this ſervice was regiſtered but not rewarded. The king Ahaſuerus raiſing Haman to be his favourite, Mordecai refuſed to honour him: Haman reſented this indignity by endeavouring to exterminate the whole

Jewiſh people, for which purpoſe he obtained a decree from the king.

Mordecai acquainted Eſther with this decree, and urged her to prevail with the king to revoke it. In the mean time, the king not being able to ſleep one night, cauſed the annals of the preceding years to be read to him. Therein was read the conſpiracy of the two eunuchs againſt the king, diſcovered by Mordecai. The king aſked, if this man had been rewarded? being told he had not, he aſked who was in the antichamber? He was anſwered, Haman: who was then coming to the king, to ſolicit that Mordecai might be hanged on a gallows he had provided for him. Ahaſuerus aſked him, What ſhould be done to the man whom the king delighted to honour? Haman believing it was himſelf whom the king intended by this deſcription, anſwered, let him be clothed in a royal habit, be ſet upon the king's horſe, have a royal diadem on his head; and be it proclaimed before him in the public places of the city, Thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the king delighteth to honour. The king replied, haſte then, and do thus to Mordecai: which Haman was forced to do.

Eſther having prepared herſelf by faſting and prayer, preſented herſelf before the king, in hopes of averting that danger from her people, to which Haman had expoſed them. She diſcovered to him the wicked deſign of Haman, that Mordecai was her uncle, that ſhe was a Jeweſs by birth, and that her people were condemned to the ſlaughter. Ahaſuerus moderated his decree againſt the Jews, condemned Haman to be hanged on the gallows he had ſet up for Mordecai, gave his goods to the queen, and raiſed Mordecai to the honours that Haman had enjoyed. This was the fourteenth day of Niſan, which day became a ſolemn feſtival to the whole nation for ages. See ESTHER and PURIM.

The greater part of critics and commentators believe, that Mordecai was author of the book of Eſther. Certainly, he in conjunction with Eſther writ the letter, which ordains the celebration of the Feaſt of Lots, or Purim. But this letter is no other than the very book of Eſther, in which ſome ſlight alterations have been made, to give it the form of an hiſtory rather than of a letter.

MORDOCHÆUS, Μαρδοχαίος, ſon of Jair, Eſth. ii. 5. From the ſame.

MORIAH, מוריה, ἀμορία, bitterneſs of the Lord; from מרר marar: otherwiſe, myrrh of the Lord; from מור mor: otherwiſe, doctrine, or fear of the Lord; from ירא jara, to fear, or ירה jarah, to teach, and יה jah, the Lord: according to the Syriac and the Hebrew, the dominion of the Lord.

MORIAH, a mountain upon which the temple of Jeruſalem was built by king Solomon. 2 Chron. iii. 1. It is thought this was the place where Abraham was going to offer up his ſon Iſaac, Gen. xxii. 2, 14. though this ſuppoſition is attended with great difficulties. Inſtead of Moriah in Geneſis, the Samaritans read Morek, and pretend that God ſent Abraham near to Sichem, where certainly was Moreh, Gen. xii. 6. Deut. xi. 30. and that it was upon mount Gerizim that Iſaac was brought to be ſacrificed.

MORNING. This is ſometimes put for quickly. Thou ſhalt hear me in the morning, or quickly. The evening and the morning make the day, according to Moſes; becauſe the ancient Hebrews began their day in the evening, Gen. i. 5. The morning expreſſes the diligence with which any thing is done. The Lord ſays, that he aroſe early to invite his people to return to him, Jer. vii. 13. xi. 7. The Pſalmiſt ſays the ſame, that he praiſed God in the morning, that he was in haſte to pay his devotion to him, Pſal. lix. 16. xcii. 2.

Ezekiel ſays, xlvi. 14, 15. Vulgate, the prieſt of the week ſhall offer every morning to the Lord the ordinary ſacrifice of a lamb. Cata manè manè, is an expreſſion taken from the Greek, where the prepoſition cata being joined to a noun ſignifying a year, a day, or the hour of the day, denotes the action to be repeated every time at that hour, cata manè, every morning.

Zephaniah ſays, manè, manè, Zeph. iii. 5. Every morning doth he bring his judgment to light. Manè, manè, being repeated, expreſſes very early in the morning. Amos iv. 13. God changes the darkneſs into morning, the night into day. Joel ii. 2. As the morning ſpread upon the mountains. As at the break of day the light appears upon the mountains, ſo ſhall the locuſts ſpread in the country.

From morning to evening expreſſes a very ſhort time, Job iv. 20. And the Pſalmiſt comparing the life of man to a flower, ſays, that in the morning it flouriſheth, in the evening is withered and decayed, Pſal. xc. 6. The rain of the evening and of the morning, or rather of the ſpring and autumn. See RAIN.

The Pſalmiſt ſpeaking of the Meſſiah, cx. 3. ſays, that he was begot before the morning; or according to the Hebrew, that "his poſterity is as the dew, which is produced from the boſom of the morning." Our tranſlation renders it thus: Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holineſs, from the womb of the morning." This poſterity are the faithful believers in Jeſus Chriſt. Their multitude may be well compared to a plentiful dew that falls in the morning, and which ſeems even to come out of the boſom of the morning.

The ſame Pſalmiſt expreſſes the rapidity of his flight, cxxxix. 9, 10. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermoſt parts of the ſea; even there ſhall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand ſhall hold me. We know no motion ſo rapid as the diffuſion of the beams of the ſun, at day-break.

Iſaiah ſays, viii. 20. that thoſe who do not keep the law and the ordinances of God, ſhall have no morning. They ſhall periſh without ſeeing the light, they ſhall not abide until morning.

Job, xli. 9. compares the eyes of the Behemoth to the brightneſs of the morning: they are as ſplendid as the morning.

MOSEROTH, מסרה, μοσερὰ, erudition, diſcipline, bond; from יסר jaſar, to bind.

MOSEROTH, or Moſerah, Numb. xxxiii. 30. probably the ſame as Hazeroth, or Hazerah, an encampment of Iſrael in the Wilderneſs. It was in the neighbourhood of Kadeſh, and near Mount Hor, where Aaron died.

MOSES, משה, taken out of the water.

MOSES, ſon of Amram and Jocabed, was born in Egypt A. M. 2433, ante A. D. 1571. His father and mother were of the tribe of Levi. He had a brother called Aaron, and a ſiſter named Miriam; Aaron was three years older than Moſes, and Miriam might be ſeven or eight years older than Aaron. Some time before the birth of Moſes, the king of Egypt decreed, that all the male children of the Hebrews ſhould be put to death as ſoon as born. The parents of Moſes could not obey this ſevere law; they concealed the child in their houſe three months. But, deſpairing of longer hiding him, they reſolved on expoſing him to the wide world, committing his preſervation to Providence. They put him into a kind of little veſſel made of ruſhes, and laid him on the banks of the Nile. His ſiſter Miriam ſtood to watch at a diſtance. The daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt, happening to come that way, to bathe in the river, perceiving the baſket, ordered it to be fetched to her, and ſhe opened it.

Miriam the ſiſter of little Moſes, aſked her if ſhe would pleaſe to have her fetch an Hebrew nurſe? She went, and brought Jocabed, her own and Moſes's mother. The princeſs named the infant Moſes, which in the Egyptian language ſignifies one ſaved out of the water. Mò or Moï ſignifies water, and Uſes one that is drawn out; ſo ſay Joſephus, and Clemens Alexandrinus. But the abbot Renaudot, who ſtudied the Egyptian language, ſays, that Mooou ſignifies water, and Si to draw or take. According to Joſephus, the name of Pharaoh's daughter was Thermutis. She adopted Moſes, and had him inſtructed in all the learning of Egypt. Acts vii. 22. But Amram and Jocabed, who brought him up, betimes informed him in the religion and hiſtory of his forefathers. So that when he grew up, he would not own for his mother the princeſs who had adopted him, chuſing rather to partake with his own people in their afflictions, than to ſhare in the pleaſures of a court, Heb. xi. 24, 25, 26.

Clemens Alexandrinus, lib. i. Strom. ſays, that Moſes's parents had named him Joachim, at his circumciſion. Pharaoh's daughter named him Moſes, in memory of his being taken out of the water; and it was thought that in heaven he had the name of Melchi. Clemens Alexandrinus adds, that he had the ableſt maſters in Egypt, to teach him arithmetic, geometry, muſic, phyſic, the ſymbolic philoſophy, which was taught by means of hieroglyphic characters, and all that belonged to the language and writing of the Egyptians. Philo, de Vitâ Moſis, ſays pretty much the ſame thing. He adds, that Grecians were ſent for to inſtruct him in the liberal ſciences, that the Aſſyrians taught him their learning, and the Egyptians mathematics. Eupolemus ſays, that Moſes is the firſt of ſages, that he firſt gave to the Hebrews the art of grammar, from whom the Phœnicians received it, and from them the Grecians. Eupolem. apud Clem. Alex. lib. i. Strom. & Euſeb. præp. lib. ix. cap. 26.

Joſephus Antiq. lib. ii. cap. 5. has much adorned the hiſtory of Moſes, yet it is thought very probable, that he has delivered only what was believed among the Jews. He relates that, the king of Egypt had a daughter named Thermutis, who going to the banks of the river Nile, ſaw in the water a little box floating; having found in it a child of extraordinary beauty, ſhe ſent for ſome women to give it ſuck. But the child refuſing the breaſt from any of theſe women, Miriam the child's ſiſter approached as if by accident, and told the princeſs the child would not ſuck any but a Hebrew nurſe; at the ſame time ſhe offered to fetch one. She went, and brought Jocabed the child's mother, who having preſented the nipple to young Moſes, he inſtantly took it.

The beauty of young Moſes was ſo great, and he ſhewed ſo much wit and addreſs, that all were charmed with him, and were never ſatisfied with looking on him. The princeſs Thermutis not having any children adopted him, and when he was three years of age, ſhe preſented him to the king her father; telling him that ſhe had choſe him for her ſon on account of his rare qualities, and could wiſh that he might ſucceed to the crown of Egypt. And at the ſame time ſhe put the child into the hands of her father. The king received him into his arms, and, to pleaſe his daughter, in a way of mirth he put his diadem upon the child's head. But Moſes preſently ſnatched it off, and letting it fall on the ground, he trod it under foot. This was looked upon as no good omen, and a prieſt who had foretold the birth of this child ſhould be fatal to Egypt, was very urgent to have him put to death, ſaying that Egypt could not be in ſafety if he lived. Thermutis took him away, without any oppoſition from the king; and diſregarding the predictions of the fortune-teller, ſhe cauſed Moſes to be brought up in a manner befitting the dignity ſhe intended him.

When he was grown up, Providence preſented an opportunity of ſhewing his valour. The Ethiopians that inhabited South Egypt, greatly ravaged the country. The Egyptians with a great army, marched againſt the Ethiopians, but were defeated. The Ethiopians, proud of their ſucceſs, penetrated into Egypt, even to the ſea, laying all waſte before them. The Egyptians unable to oppoſe them by human means, had recourſe to an oracle, which told them to apply to an Hebrew for aſſiſtance. The king then deſired Moſes of Thermutis, to head his army. Thermutis made her father promiſe with an oath, that no injury ſhould be done to him. As ſoon as he took the command of the army, he contrived to cut off the enemy's retreat, and to attack them before they could know of his march. He took up a reſolution of leading his army, not along the Nile, which was the direct way, but within the country, where it was very dangerous to paſs, becauſe of the multitude of ſerpents, and other venomous beaſts, that infeſted thoſe quarters.

By this means he came upon the Ethiopians before they were aware. He cut them in pieces, invaded their country, took ſeveral of their cities, and ſhut them up in the city of Saba. He beſieged this town, but becauſe it was in an iſland, and well fortified, he could not carry the place ſo ſoon as he expected.

But in this interval Tharbis, daughter to the king of Ethiopia, having from the walls ſeen Moſes fighting bravely at the head of the Egyptian army, conceived a great affection for him. She ſecretly ſent to him propoſals of marriage. Moſes conſented, on condition ſhe ſhould deliver up the city. This ſhe performed; Moſes took poſſeſſion of Meroe, married Tharbis, and with his victorious army returned into Egypt. But there, inſtead of finding the acknowledgments he deſerved, he found himſelf expoſed to the envy of the courtiers, and accuſed to Pharaoh of having murdered an Egyptian. The king himſelf taking umbrage at the bravery and reputation of Moſes, reſolved to uſe this pretence to put him to death. Moſes having diſcovered theſe deſigns, retired through the deſart into the country of Midian, not finding it ſafe to go the ordinary road.

But Moſes himſelf relates none of theſe particulars; for he tells his own ſtory thus: Exod. ii. 11, 12, &c. A. M. 2473, ante A. D. 1531. Moſes was then forty years old, Acts vii. 23. Moſes being grown up viſited his brethren, and ſaw the hardſhips they ſuffered from the Egyptian taſk-maſters. Seeing an Egyptian oppreſſing an Hebrew, he vindicated his cauſe, ſlew the Egyptian, and hid his body in the ſand. The next day he found two Hebrews at variance, and being willing to reconcile them, he aſked the offender, why he ſtruck his brother? He anſwered with another queſtion, Who made you a ruler and judge over us? Will you kill me as you did the Egyptian yeſterday? Moſes hearing this, was afraid, and wondered how it was diſcovered: Pharaoh being informed of it, ſought for Moſes to put him to death. But he fled into the country of Midian, beyond the Red Sea, in Arabia Petræa, towards Mount Sinai: where he ſat down near a well. While he was ſitting there, the ſeven daughters of Jethro prieſt of Midian came thither, according to cuſtom, to draw water for their flocks; but ſhepherds coming with the ſame intention, drove them away. Moſes aſſiſted the damſels, drove off the ſhepherds, and himſelf watered Jethro's flocks.

Moſes living for ſome time with Jethro, Jethro gave him his daughter Zipporah in marriage, who bore Moſes two ſons, Gerſhom, and Eleazar. After this, the king of Egypt died, and the children of Iſrael groaning under the weight of oppreſſions, ſent their cries to heaven, and the Lord heard them.

Moſes was employed in feeding the ſheep of Jethro his father-in-law; and one day came to the mountain of Horeb, where he obſerved a buſh that burned without being conſumed. Moſes, aſtoniſhed at this ſight, ſays within himſelf, I muſt go and examine how it is that this buſh is not conſumed. The Lord ſeeing him advance, ſpake to him out of the buſh, ſaying; Moſes approach no nearer, but put off your ſhoes, for the place whereon you ſtand is holy ground. Then he commiſſioned him, notwithſtanding the reluctance, and heſitation of Moſes, to deliver his people Iſrael. Foretelling the obſtinacy of Pharaoh, the intervention of miracles, &c.

Moſes ſtill intreating to be excuſed, the Lord commanded him to throw his rod on the ground; which was immediately changed into a ſerpent. God bid him take it up; it became a rod again. Then he bid him put his hand into his boſom, and when he drew it out, it was all over leprous. He bid him put it in again, and it returned to its former health. Theſe two miracles, ſays he, you ſhall perform before Iſrael. If after this they ſhall not believe you, take water out of the Nile, and pour it on the land; it ſhall be changed into blood. But Moſes not yet intirely acquieſcing, the Lord referred him to his brother Aaron as a man of ready utterance.

Moſes returning to Jethro, told him he muſt go to ſee his brethren in Egypt; he took his wife and children with him, and ſet forward. But when he was arrived at an inn, the angel of the Lord ſought to kill his ſecond ſon Eleazar, the occaſion of which was (as ſome think) becauſe he was not circumciſed. Therefore Zipporah with a ſharp ſtone, circumciſed her ſon; and throwing herſelf at Moſes's feet, ſaid, you are a bloody huſband to me. After this they parted from each other, and ſhe returned to her father Jethro, and took her ſons with her. The Hebrew text of ver. 24, 25, 26. is very obſcure, becauſe it does not expreſs who it is the angel would kill, nor at whoſe feet Zipporah caſt herſelf, nor what is the nominative caſe to dimiſit eum in the Vulgate. In ver. 26. we have followed the ſenſe, that to us appeared to be moſt rational.

Being returned to Egypt, Moſes and Aaron went to Pharaoh, and told him, that the God of the Hebrews ordered them to go three days journey into the deſart of Arabia, to offer ſacrifices to him. Pharaoh refuſed; and gave orders, that the children of Iſrael ſhould no longer be allowed ſtraw, as before, for making of bricks. The people on this made their complaint to Moſes, and he to the Lord, who told him, you ſhall ſee the plagues which ſhall ſmite the Egyptians. Moſes and Aaron coming to Pharaoh, with the orders of the Lord, Aaron threw down his rod, which immediately was changed into a ſerpent. Pharaoh then ſent for his magicians, the chief of which were Jannes and Jambres, who by enchantments changed alſo their rods into ſerpents; but Moſes's rod now changed into a ſerpent, devoured thoſe of the magicians.

After this the Lord ſmote Egypt with ten different ſorts of plagues, in the compaſs of a few days. Some Rabbins believe, that they continued a whole year, not ſucceeding one another immediately, but by intervals.

1. The plague of blood, Moſes changing the waters of the Nile into blood; on the eighteenth day of the ſixth month, afterwards called Adar; (February, O. S.) This plague continued about ſeven days.
2. The plague of frogs, was about the twenty-fifth of Adar; and continued but one day.
3. The plague of lice, on the twenty-ſeventh of Adar.
4. The plague of flies, the twenty-ninth, which at the earneſt intreaty of Pharaoh was taken away on the thirtieth of Adar.
5. The plague of the peſtilence, or mortality among the cattle, about the ſecond day of the ſeventh month, afterwards called Niſan. It ceaſed on the third day.
6. The plague of boils and ulcers, which ſeized all the Egyptians, and even hindered the magicians themſelves from appearing before Pharaoh. This plague continued the third and fourth days of Niſan, called Abib by Moſes.
7. The plague of thunder and lightning, rain and hail, on the fifth day of Niſan, continued but one day.
8. The plague of locuſts or graſhoppers, which devoured all that had eſcaped the hail, on the eighth of Niſan.
9. The plague of darkneſs, which covered all Egypt for three days, while the land of Goſhen, where the Iſraelites lived, was enlightened as uſual. While this plague laſted, Pharaoh ſent for Moſes and Aaron, and told them to ſacrifice to their God, provided they left behind them their flocks and their herds; but Moſes anſwered, they muſt take all their cattle with them. This day Moſes ordered the Hebrews to prepare a lamb for the paſſover.
10. The plague of the death of the firſt-born of the Egyptians, who were ſlain by the deſtroying angel on the night between the fourteenth and fifteenth of Niſan: on which ſame night the Hebrews came out of Egypt.

The fourteenth day of Abib, or Niſan, at evening, the Hebrews killed the lamb of the paſſover, or of the paſſage of the Lord, and with the blood they ſprinkled the two poſts and upper part of their doors; that the deſtroying angel paſſing over their houſes, might not enter to kill their firſt-born. About the middle of the night the Lord ſmote all the firſt-born of the Egyptians, from the firſt-born of Pharaoh, to the firſt-born of the meaneſt of his ſlaves; and there was a great outcry throughout Egypt. Pharaoh ſent in haſte to call Moſes and Aaron, and bid them go quickly and ſacrifice to their God, with their wives, children, cattle, and all that they had; and when they went, to pray for him alſo. The Egyptians alſo urged them to be gone.

Moſes took with him the bones of the patriarch Joſeph, who had laid this injunction on the Iſraelites before his death. Exod. xiii. 10. Gen. l. 25. The Hebrews departing from Rameſes, came firſt to Succoth, and thence to Etham. From Etham they turned towards Pi-hahiroth, which is between the ſea and Migdol, over againſt Baal-zephon. No ſooner were they arrived there, but Pharaoh advanced with a powerful army, thinking to force them back into Egypt. But the Lord put between the camp of Iſrael and that of the Egyptians, a miraculous cloud, which was luminous on the ſide towards the Iſraelites, and dark towards the Egyptians. Vide SEA-RED, and FRAGMENT, No. XXXIX.

The Egyptians perceiving that the Hebrews had fled through the ſeparated waters of the Red-Sea, they purſued them; but the Lord by a wind, brought back the waters, ſo that the whole army of the Egyptians was drowned. Then Moſes and the Iſraelites ſang a ſong of thankſgiving to the Lord. From hence they went on toward Sinai: at Marah they found water, but very bitter. Moſes crying to the Lord, he ſhewed him a certain kind of wood, which being thrown into the water took away the bitterneſs, and made it potable.

On the fifteenth day of the ſecond month, after they came out of Egypt, the Hebrews came into the wilderneſs of Sin or Zin, between Elim and Sinai. Here the multitude, tired with the length of their journey, began to murmur againſt Moſes, ſaying, Would to God we had died in Egypt, where we ſat at the fleſh-pots, and where we ate bread in abundance! The Lord ſpake to Moſes, and promiſed to rain food from heaven: of which Moſes informed the people. That very evening the camp of Iſrael was covered with quails, brought thither by the wind; and the next morning they ſaw all round the camp a kind of hoar-froſt, or like little grains, of the colour of bdellium, and of the ſhape of coriander-ſeeds: the manna. See MANNA. Moſes bid Aaron to fill an omer with manna, and to lay it up before the Lord; to remain as a monument to future generations.

From the deſart of Sin, the Hebrews proceeded to Alluſh, and to Rephidim; where the people in want of water, murmured againſt Moſes. But the Lord, by the miniſtry of Moſes, drew them water out of the rock of Horeb. At this time the Amalekites attacking Iſrael, Moſes ſent Joſhua againſt them; he himſelf at the ſame time, with Aaron and Hur, being on an eminence, from whence they could ſee the engagement. While Moſes held up his hands toward heaven, Joſhua had the advantage over the enemy; but no ſooner did he hold them down when weary, but the Amalekites prevailed. Wherefore Aaron and Hur put ſtones under him, that he might ſit down, while each of them ſupported his arms, that he might not be tired. So the Amalekites were intirely defeated. And the Lord ſaid to Moſes, write an account of this action in a book, and inſtruct Joſhua in it; for I will utterly deſtroy the memory of Amalek from under heaven.

The third day of the third month from their coming out of Egypt, they arrived at the foot of Mount Sinai, where they continued one whole year. God had told Moſes, that here they ſhould offer ſacrifices to him after they came forth out of Egypt: and here Moſes was the mediator of a covenant between God and this people. Vide LAW, &c. and ſee the hiſtory, Exod. xx. &c.

Then coming down from the mountain, Moſes declared to the people the laws he had received, and the articles of the covenant the Lord would make with them. The people anſwering, that they would perform whatever the Lord ſhould enjoin them, Moſes erected an altar of unhewn ſtone, at the foot of the mountain, and twelve monuments, or twelve other altars, in the name of the twelve tribes of Iſrael. He offered ſacrifices and peace-offerings; and taking the blood of the victims, he poured half upon the altar, and the other half into cups: and having read to the people the ordinances he had received from the Lord, and which he had wrote in a book, he ſprinkled all the people with the blood that was in the cups. Thus was concluded this ſolemn and celebrated covenant, between the Lord and the children of Iſrael.

Then the Lord bid Moſes come up again into the mountain, and bring with him Joſhua his ſervant, that he might inſtruct him in all the particulars of thoſe laws and regulations, that he would have obſerved by the prieſts or people, in the public exerciſe of religion; all the parts of which he diſtinctly appointed him. After which God informed him, that the people whom he had brought out of Egypt, had ſoon forgotten all their promiſes and engagements; for at that very time they had made a molten image, and were worſhipping a golden calf; adding, that he had a mind utterly to exterminate this headſtrong and untractable people; and would make Moſes the father and chief of a great nation: but Moſes interceded for the people.

Deſcending from the Mount, Joſhua heard the ſhouts and rejoicings of the people. He ſaid to Moſes, that he heard a noiſe in the camp, as if of an engagement with an enemy. But Moſes told him, that it was not the ſound of an alarm, but cries of joy. When they approached the camp, they ſaw the golden calf, and the people ſinging and dancing about it; Moſes for indignation threw down the tables of ſtone he held in his hands, and broke them. Taking the calf they had made, he reduced it to powder, and ſcattered the powder into the water, and ſo made all the congregation drink of it. See GOLDEN CALF. Moſes ſeverely rebuked Aaron; Aaron excuſed himſelf as well as he could; and Moſes ſtanding at the entrance of the camp, proclaimed, Whoever is for the Lord, let him join himſelf to me. All the children of Levi aſſembling about him, he ſaid; Thus ſaith the Lord, let every one of you take his ſword, and let him go from gate to gate acroſs the camp, and ſlay even to his brother, his friend, or his kinſman. That day there were ſlain about three thouſand people.

The next day Moſes remonſtrated to the people on the heinouſneſs of their ſin, and told them, he would go up again into the mountain, and endeavour to obtain forgiveneſs for them. He went up, and intreated the Lord to pardon them; or, otherwiſe, he begged that he himſelf might be blotted out of the book of the Lord. The Lord anſwered, That only he who offended ſhould be blotted out of his book; but that he would chaſtiſe the criminals in the day of his vengeance. And that as to himſelf, he would not go along with them, but would ſend his angel before them. Farther to ſhew the diſpleaſure of the Lord, Moſes carried the tabernacle out of the camp, where the Lord had been uſed to give his orders. But Moſes not deſiſting to pray the Lord to continue his conduct of his people to the Land of Promiſe, he at length promiſed not to forſake them. Moſes deſired another favour from the Lord, which was, that he might ſee his glory. The Lord anſwered him, that he could not ſee his face, for no man could ſupport that ſight; but that he would paſs before the opening of the rock, where Moſes might hear his name, and ſee his hinder parts [train] as he paſſed along.

Afterwards Moſes went up into the mountain, and carried new tables of ſtone. There God gave him the decalogue anew, and ſeveral other commandments: after forty days and forty nights he came down, bringing the two tables of teſtimony with him. He was not aware that his face emitted rays of light, which remained upon it after his communication with the Lord: So that Moſes while he ſpake to Aaron and Iſrael put a veil over his face.

Then he cauſed proclamation to be made, that whoever had any valuable metals, or precious ſtones, thread, wool, furrs, or fine wood fit for the tabernacle, might offer them to the Lord. The Iſraelites inflamed by a holy zeal, brought with great alacrity more than was neceſſary.

The Lord commanded alſo, that each Iſraelite ſhould contribute half a ſhekel, (about thirteen pence half-penny of our money.) And that this contribution might be regularly raiſed, he took an account of the people, from twenty years old and upwards; and there were found 603,550, each of which paying a bekah or half ſhekel, the ſum amounted to 100 talents of ſilver, (about 34,219l.) and 1775 ſhekels, (about 202l. 9s.) Six whole months they worked at the tabernacle, i. e. from the ſixth month of the holy year, after their coming out of Egypt, A. M. 2513, to the firſt day of the firſt month of the following year 2514, ante A. D. 1490. On the firſt day of Niſan, April 21. according to Uſher, the tabernacle of the covenant was ſet up, and filled with the glory of the Lord. The fourteenth of Niſan the Iſraelites celebrated the ſecond paſſover from their coming out of Egypt; and about this time Moſes publiſhed the laws contained in the ſeven firſt chapters of Leviticus: he conſecrated Aaron and his ſons, and dedicated the tabernacle, and all its veſſels.

The firſt day of the ſecond month of this year, Moſes took a ſecond account of the people, in which the Levites were reckoned apart, and appointed to the ſervice of the tabernacle. Moſes regulated their functions, and the offices of each. Alſo the order of every tribe in their marches and encampments, to prevent confuſion. The princes of the tribes made their offerings to the tabernacle, each according to his rank, and upon his day, during the twelve days of the dedication and conſecration of this holy place. Laſtly, about this time Moſes made ſeveral ordinances, relating to the purity to be obſerved in holy things, the uncleanneſſes to be avoided, and the manner of approaching the tabernacle.

About the end of the year, Jethro the father-in-law of Moſes brought him his wife Zipporah, and his two ſons Gerſhom and Eliezer. Moſes received him with all reſpect, and by his perſuaſion commiſſioned judges to aſſiſt in accommodating differences, and cauſes of leſſer conſequence.

Soon after, the pillar of clouds riſing, the Iſraelites decamped from Sinai to go towards Paran. Vide TABERAH and KIBROTH HATTAAVAH.

On account of the arrival of Zipporah in the camp, Aaron and Miriam his ſiſter ſpoke againſt Moſes, becauſe his wife was an Ethiopian; the particulars of this diſpute we do not know; but Scripture ture tells us, that the Lord interpoſed in behalf of Moſes, who was the meekeſt man upon earth. See AARON and MIRIAM.

It is not eaſy to determine, whether the ſedition of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, happened after the arrival of the Hebrews at Kadeſh-barnea, or before: Korah was of the tribe of Levi, as well as Moſes and Aaron; Dathan, Abiram, and On, were of Reuben. Being diſguſted at Moſes and Aaron, they raiſed a mutiny againſt them, ſupported by two hundred and fifty others of the chief of the people: ſaying, Ye take too much upon you, ſeeing all the congregation are holy every one of them, and the Lord is among them: wherefore then lift ye up yourſelves above the congregation of the Lord? Moſes fell upon his face, and told them, Let every one of you take his cenſer, and preſent himſelf to-morrow before the Lord; and the Lord will then cauſe it to be known whom he hath choſen. Moſes in the mean time having ſent for Dathan and Abiram, they ſent him word they would not come to him. Wilt thou put out the eyes of theſe men? We will not come up.

The day following Moſes having aſſembled all the people at the door of the tabernacle, the glory of the Lord appeared; and in the iſſue the revolters were ſwallowed up by the earth. Yet the very next day the people began again to murmur againſt Moſes and Aaron on the ſame occaſion, ſaying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord. The Lord cauſed a ſudden fire, or plague, to go forth, in the camp, but Aaron with his cenſer placing himſelf between the living and the dead, offered his incenſe, and intreated the Lord; upon which the plague ceaſed.

From the encampment called the Graves of Luſt, the people went to Hazeroth, and thence to Kadeſh-barnea, where they continued a good while: from hence Moſes ſent twelve choſen men to take a view of the land of Canaan. Theſe meſſengers were forty days on their ſearch, and at their return they brought back ſome of the fruits of the country, of an extraordinary largeneſs and fairneſs; they very much commended the land for its beauty and fertility, but added, that the inhabitants were of gigantic ſtature, and had many ſtrong and populous cities; ſo that there were but little hopes that this country could be conquered by them. This report put all the camp into a mutiny. Nothing would ſatisfy them, but they would return into Egypt. Then the Lord in his anger threatened to deſtroy all the people, but Moſes interpoſed by his prayers. However ſentence was paſſed againſt theſe murmurers, that all from the age of twenty years and upwards ſhould die in the deſart. The ten ſpies were puniſhed by a ſudden death. Only Joſhua and Caleb were preſerved, and God declared that they alone of the whole multitude ſhould enter into the Land of promiſe.

Being come to Kadeſh, Miriam the ſiſter of Moſes died there. In this encampment the people murmured for want of water, which Moſes and Aaron ſupplied them with, by cauſing it to guſh out of a rock. But as they ſhewed ſome diſtruſt in the Lord, he condemned them to die in the wilderneſs, without entering the Land of Promiſe. This made them give this encampment the name of Meribah, or the waters of contradiction.

They went then to Mount Hor, where Aaron died. From hence they went to Zalmonah, where it is thought Moſes erected the brazen ſerpent, to heal thoſe who had been bitten by the fiery ſerpents in the camp. Numb. xxi. 6. See SERPENT. Being come to Mount Piſgah in the deſart of Kedemoth, they diſpatched ambaſſadors to Sihon, king of the Amorites, to demand a paſſage through his country, which being refuſed, Moſes gave him battle, overcame him, and took all his territories. Some time afterwards, Og king of Baſhan marched againſt Moſes, and fought with him; but Moſes conquered him, and made himſelf maſter of his country.

After this Moſes encamped in the plains of Moab, at Shittim, where the Iſraelites continued till they paſſed over Jordan, under Joſhua. While they abode in this encampment, Balak king of Moab invited Balaam to come and curſe Iſrael. But the ſorcerer, having rather bleſſed than curſed them, he ſent the daughters of Moab into the camp, to tempt the Iſraelites to idolatry and fornication. This wicked counſel had the deſired effect; but Moſes put to death all thoſe who had given themſelves to the worſhip of Baal-peor, to the number of 23,000, beſides 1000 others executed by the judges.

After this the Lord commanded Moſes to make war againſt the Midianites, who had ſent their daughters, along with thoſe of Moab to debauch Iſrael. Phinehas was appointed captain of this expedition, for which Moſes gave him twelve thouſand choſen men. He routed the Midianites.

The tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh having aſked of Moſes for their inheritance the country they had conquered from the Amorites, Moſes conſented, on condition that they would go along with their brethren over Jordan, to aſſiſt them in the conqueſt of the country poſſeſſed by the Canaanites.

The firſt day of the eleventh month of the fortieth year after the coming out of Egypt, Moſes being in the fields of Moab, knowing that he was not to paſs over Jordan, and that his laſt hour was not far off; he made a long diſcourſe to the people, recapitulating all he had done, and all that had happened from the coming out of Egypt. He ſet before them the happineſs that would attend their conſtancy and fidelity, and the calamities which would puniſh their prevarication. He put into the hands of the prieſts and elders a copy of the law, with an injunction to have it read ſolemnly every ſeventh year in a general aſſembly of the nation. He compoſed an excellent canticle or poem, in which he exclaims againſt their future infidelities, and threatens them with all the evils that in after ages came upon them. Laſtly, a little before his death he gave to each of the tribes a particular bleſſing, in which he mingles ſeveral prophecies and predictions.

The Lord commanded Moſes, at the beginning of the twelfth month, to aſcend Mount Nebo, where he gave him a view of the country, both on this ſide and beyond Jordan; ſaying to him, This is the land which I ſware unto Abraham, and unto Iſaac, and unto Jacob, ſaying, I will give it unto thy ſeed. I have cauſed thee to ſee it with thine eyes, but thou ſhalt not go over thither. So Moſes the ſervant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over againſt Beth-peor; but no man knoweth of his ſepulchre unto this day. And Moſes was an hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated. And the children of Iſrael wept for Moſes in the plain of Moab thirty days. It is added, There aroſe not a prophet ſince like unto Moſes, whom the Lord knew face to face: in all the ſigns and the wonders which the Lord ſent him to do in the land of Egypt, to Pharaoh, and to all his ſervants, and to all his land: and in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terror which Moſes ſhewed in the ſight of all Iſrael.

The Scripture is full of the praiſes of this great man; Jeſus, ſon of Sirach, author of Eccleſiaſticus, applauds him, Ecclus. xlv. 1, 2, 3.

Moſes is the moſt ancient writer, of whom there remains any authentic works. He has left us the Pentateuch, or the five firſt books of the Old Teſtament, Geneſis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy. Probably theſe books were not originally ſeparate works, as we find them now. Moſes compoſed but one ſingle work, of which the law was, as it were, the body, and Geneſis was the preface. Afterwards they were divided for convenience in reading. Theſe books are acknowledged as authentic and inſpired, by general conſent both of Jews and Chriſtians. Some difficulties have been ſtarted about the author of theſe books, becauſe ſome paſſages have been obſerved therein, that ſeem not to agree to Moſes. And indeed it muſt be owned, that ſome ſmall additions have been made. But theſe additions make no alteration in the ſenſe, but are by way of illuſtration only.

Beſides the Pentateuch, the Jews aſcribe to Moſes eleven Pſalms, from Pſalm XC. to C. But there is no ſufficient proof that theſe Pſalms had Moſes for their author. For the title of the ninetieth Pſalm, a prayer of Moſes the man of God, which they pretend muſt be applied alſo to the ten following Pſalms, is not ſufficient. The greater part of the titles of the Pſalms are not original, nor indeed very ancient; and ſome of them are wrong placed. Beſides, in theſe Pſalms we find the names of perſons, and other marks, that by no means can agree with Moſes. Vide PSALMS.

Some ancients thought that Moſes was the author of the book of Job. Origen on Job pretends, that he tranſlated it out of Syriac into Hebrew. But this opinion is rejected both by Jews and Chriſtians; and if this book had truly belonged to Moſes, would the Jews have ſeparated it from the Pentateuch?

There is alſo quoted an apocalypſe or revelation of Moſes, a leſſer Geneſis, the aſcenſion of Moſes, the aſſumption of Moſes, the teſtament of Moſes, the myſterious books of Moſes. It is thought that from the apocalypſe of Moſes St. Paul quoted Gal. v. 6. For in Jeſus Chriſt, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but faith which worketh by love. And vi. 15. For in Chriſt Jeſus, neither circumciſion availeth any thing, nor uncircumciſion, but a new creatnre. It is imagined alſo, that what is ſaid in the epiſtle of St. Jude, ver. 9. concerning the contention of Michael the archangel with the devil, about the body of Moſes, is taken from the aſſumption of Moſes. Vide Fabricius, Apoc. Vet. Teſt.

As to the death and burial of Moſes, many difficulties have been raiſed. The Scripture tells us expreſsly, that Moſes died, according to the word of the Lord, Deut. ult. 5, 6. But as the Hebrew words על־פי יהוה literally import upon the mouth of the Lord, the Rabbins have imagined, that the Lord took away his ſoul by a kiſs. Others have maintained that he did not die; and others have pretended that he was tranſported into heaven. Our maſters have aſſured us, ſays Maimonides, that our maſter Moſes is not dead, but aſcended into heaven, where he ſerves God to all eternity, Maimonid. Præfat. in Thalmud. En. Iſrael. p. 2. p. 39. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. iv. cap. ult. that that he diſappeared; but that it was he himſelf who gave an account of his own death, for fear that the Jews aſtoniſhed at his exalted virtue, ſhould imagine that he had made approaches to Deity itſelf. And ſince no body could tell where his place of burial was, and ſince he appeared with Elias in the transfiguration of Jeſus Chriſt; and laſtly ſince St. Jude ſays, that there was a diſpute between Michael and the devil about his body, ſome have concluded that he did not really die, but aſcended body and ſoul into heaven.

The Rabbins, in their accounts of the life of Moſes, do not content themſelves with the miracles that the Scripture relates of him, but ſay, for example, that he was born circumciſed; that the daughter of Pharaoh, who found him upon the banks of the Nile, was leprous, and that as ſoon as ſhe touched the ark in which the infant lay, ſhe was immediately cured. Bathia, (for ſo they call this princeſs) having brought Moſes to Pharaoh, at the age of three years, Moſes took his crown, and put it upon his own head. Balaam, the famous wizard mentioned in Scripture, being then at Pharaoh's court, adviſed him to put the child to death. But Pharaoh's magicians deſiring to try if Moſes had done this out of knowledge and deſign, or by mere chance, put diamonds and coals of fire before him. Moſes was reaching out his hand to the diamonds, but the angel Gabriel pulled it back, and put it to the coals of fire, He put them upon his tongue, and burned himſelf, which made him heſitate in his ſpeech ever after. This action was the ſaving of his life. When it was known to Pharaoh that he had killed an Egyptian, he condemned him to loſe his head; but God permitted that his neck ſhould become as hard as a pillar of marble, and the rebound of the ſword killed the executioner. Moſes fled away, and no body could ſtop him; for Pharaoh became dumb that minute, and all the reſt either deaf, dumb, or blind.

Moſes withdrew to Korkon, king of Ethiopia, who was then in Armenia. Balaam being alſo then in Ethiopia, excited the people to an inſurrection againſt their prince; but Moſes in the defence of Korkon at the head of his army, beſieged Balaam in the capital city of Ethiopia. To make the approach to the city more difficult, he brought an infinite multitude of ſerpents round about. But Moſes charmed the ſerpents, and made himſelf maſter of the town. He married the queen, then widow to the king, who died during the war, and reigned forty years over Ethiopia: the queen complained that Moſes did not uſe her as his wife; at which the people mutinied, and Moſes was conſtrained to retire to Jethro, where he found a famous rod or twig, that God had at firſt created for Adam. It paſſed afterwards to Abraham, then to the kings of Egypt, from whom Jethro took it, when he left that court. He planted it in his garden, and promiſed his daughter to any one that would pluck it up. The name of God was engraved upon this twig, which was the cauſe of its being ſo miraculous. He married Zipporah, who ſoon brought him a ſon. But Jethro having covenanted that his firſt-born ſon ſhould not be circumciſed, God immediately ſent two angels, who ſo far ſwallowed up Moſes, as that there only remained his feet. But no ſooner had Zipporah circumciſed her ſon, than Moſes was delivered from this danger. The Jews relate a thouſand miracles about the manner of Moſes's receiving the law. According to them it is not enough to ſay, that Moſes aſcended into Mount Sinai; they will have it that he aſcended into heaven; that being come to the top of Sinai, a cloud took him up, and carried him into heaven. Upon his way he met the angel Remuel, chief of twelve thouſand angels, who was deſirous to accompany him. But pronouncing the name of God, compoſed of twelve letters, he made him fly away to the diſtance of twelve thouſand furlongs. Purſuing his way, he found the angel Adarniel, who put him into a great fright. For this angel had a terrible voice, which he cauſed to be heard in the two hundred thouſand ſpheres encompaſſed with a white fire. Moſes being diſmayed would have fled away, but the Lord encouraged him; and pronouncing the name of God compoſed of ſeventy-two letters, he terrified the angel in his turn, who fled away, crying out as he went, Happy art thou Moſes, who knoweſt that of which the angels are ignorant. They believe the tables were of ſapphire, on which the law was written; and that Moſes was made rich by the fragments only, that were taken from theſe tables when they were poliſhed, Exod. xxxiv. 1. They ſay moreover, that Moſes put to death the accomplices of Korah, by putting a deadly poiſon into their cenſers, the fume of which killed them.

The hiſtory of Moſes was ſo famous for many ages, in almoſt all the countries of the world, that it is no wonder that writers of different nations have each repreſented it after his own manner The Orientals, the ancient Grecians, the Egyptians, the Chaldeans, the Romans, have all made additions to his hiſtory. Some of them have improved upon the miracles that the Scripture relates concerning his life; others have diſguiſed his ſtory, by adding to it not only falſe, but mean and trifling circumſtances. The reader has had a taſte in what we have extracted from the Rabbins.

As the Jews and Orientals generally have enlarged the number of Moſes's miracles, and magnified his exploits, ſo the Greek and Latin authors have extenuated them, or made them doubtful by a mixture of fable. Manetho ſays, apud Joſeph. cont. App. lib. i. p. 1052, &c. that Moſes was a prieſt of Heliopolis, called Oſarſiph, who being at the head of a company of lepers, and other diſeaſed perſons, whom king Amenophis wiſhed to expel from his kingdom, he revolted againſt the king, and fortified himſelf with his people in the city of Avaris, or Typhon. This new commander made a beginning by making his followers ſwear obedience to him; then he gave them laws, which conſiſted chiefly of ſuch points as theſe; that they ſhould not worſhip the gods, that they ſhould not refrain from eating ſuch things as paſſed for ſacred in Egypt, and that they ſhould not make any alliance with any other people, but only with ſuch as would eſpouſe their cauſe. After this Oſarſiph changed his name for that of Moſes.

He ſent ambaſſadors to the ſhepherds whom king Thermutis had drove out of Egypt, and who were withdrawn to Jeruſalem, to perſuade them to enter into confederacy with them, and to join their forces together againſt king Amenophis. The ſhepherds were very well pleaſed at this invitation, and with great diligence repaired to the city Avaris, to the number of two hundred thouſand men. King Amenophis got together an army of three hundred thouſand men, but inſtead of fighting with the rebels, he retired into Ethiopia, where he found a protection, the king of that country being in alliance with him. The rebels having no longer any thing to fear, diſperſed themſelves all over Egypt, and there committed a thouſand outrages, not only againſt the men, but alſo againſt the ſacred animals, killing, burning, and deſtroying wherever they came. At the end of thirteen years, king Amenophis joining his troops with thoſe of the king of Ethiopia, he poured at once upon the rebels, and drove them as far as to the frontiers of Syria.

Juſtin was no better informed. He tells us, lib. xxxvi. that when Joſeph was ſold by his brethren, and carried into Egypt, he there ſoon inſinuated himſelf into the king's favour, by means of the magic art, in which he was very expert. Beſides which he had the knack of interpreting dreams, and had it not been for him, all Egypt had died for hunger. For he foretold a great famine that happened, the diſtreſs of which was prevented, by hoarding up all the corn of Egypt for ſeveral years, by his advice. Moſes was his ſon, and inheriter of all his ſecrets. But beſides his knowledge, he was valued likewiſe for the extraordinary beauty of his perſon. But the Egyptians being much vexed with leproſies, and fearing this evil might be farther communicated, they conſulted the gods about it, who commanded that all thoſe ſhould be driven out of the country who were infected with this diſtemper; Moſes therefore was driven out, and all the other lepers. At going away, they ſtole the gods of the Egyptians; who being deſirous to recover them again, purſued the lepers with weapons in their hands. But they were ſoon obliged by tempeſts to return home again.

Moſes therefore being at the head of the exiles, conducted them to the country of Damaſcus, which was the country of their anceſtors Abraham and Iſrael. They made themſelves maſters of Mount Sinai, after ſeven days marching and faſting. In memory of this ſeventh day they obſerved the Sabbath, and dedicated it to faſting. And fearing leſt the leproſy, which ſtill infeſted them, ſhould make them odious to the neighbouring people, they reſolved to have no correſpondence with any other nation, which by degrees became a principle of their religion. After Moſes, his ſon Arrat, who was prieſt of the Egyptian gods, was created king of the Jews; from which time the royalty and the prieſthood have always been united in the ſame perſon. Vide MANETHO, JEWS, &c.

MOTHER. Is ſometimes uſed for a metropolis, the capital city of a country, or of a tribe; and ſometimes for a whole people. 2 Sam. xx. 19. The ſynagogue is the mother of the Jews, as the church is of the Chriſtians. Iſaiah ſays, l. 1: Where is the bill of your mother's divorcement whom I have put away? i. e. of the ſynagogue. And St. Paul, Galat. iv. 26. Jeruſalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all. The great Babylon, the heathen city of Rome, is called in the Revelations, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth, that is, of idolatry, Rev. xvii. 5.

A mother in Iſrael ſignifies a brave woman, whom God uſes to deliver his people. This name the Scripture gives to Deborah. Judg. v. 7. Wiſdom calls herſelf Mater pulchræ dilectionis, the mother of chaſte love. The earth, to which at our death we muſt all return, is called the mother of all men: To the day that they return to the mother of all things, Ecclus. xl. 1.

MOUNTAINS. Judæa was a mountainous country, try, but the mountains were generally beautiful, fruitful, and cultivated: producing fruits, olives, vines, and paſturage. Moſes ſays, Deut. xxxii. 13. that the rocks of its mountains produce oil and honey, by a figure of ſpeech, which elegantly ſhews their fertility. He ſays, Deut. viii. 7, 9, that in the mountains of Paleſtine ſpring excellent fountains, and that their bowels yield iron and braſs. And indeed we are informed by hiſtory, that there were mines in Paleſtine and Mount Libanus. Ariſteas in the hiſtory of the ſeventy interpreters aſſures us, that theſe mines were in being down to the empire of the Perſians, and that then the governors of this province acquainting the king, that the charges of working the mines exceeded the profit, they were left off. Moſes deſires earneſtly of the Lord, that he might ſee theſe fine mountains of Judæa and Libanus, Deut. iii. 25.

There are many other mountains, famous only for having cities on them; as Hebron, Samaria, Nazareth, Gibeon, Shophim, Shilo, &c.

The mountains of Judah are chiefly ſouth of the country belonging to that tribe, inclining towards Idumæa.

The mountains of Ephraim are ſpread through the whole extent of that tribe, except what are ſituated on Jordan to the eaſt, and on the Mediterranean ſea to the weſt.

The mountains of Gilead ſtretch out north and ſouth, from Libanus, or Mount Hermon, as far as the mountains of Seir, or of Idumæa.

The mountains Abarim, Piſgah, and Nebo, make but one chain of mountains, ſtretching from eaſt to weſt, from the mountains of Gilead or Seir, far into the plains of Moab, to the eaſt of Jordan.

The Hebrews frequently give to the mountains the epithet of eternal, becauſe they are as old as the world itſelf, Gen. xlix. 26. Deut. xxxiii. 15.

Some philoſophers have doubted, whether there were any mountains before the Deluge. They pretend that mountains were produced by ſinkings of the earth, cauſed by openings made by the waters under the earth. Vide DELUGE.

MOURNING. The Hebrews, at the death of their friends and relations, gave all poſſible demonſtrations of grief and mourning. They wept, tore their clothes, ſmote their breaſts, faſted and lay upon the ground, went barefooted, pulled off their hair and beards, or cut them, and made inciſions on their breaſts, or tore them with their nails. Levit. xix. 28. xxi. 5. Jer. xvi. 6. The time of mourning was commonly ſeven days; but this was lengthened or ſhortened, according to circumſtances. Jeſus the ſon of Sirach ſays, the days of mourning are ſeven; Ecclus. xxviii. 16, 17. and elſewhere, My ſon, let tears fall down over the dead, and begin to lament, as if thou hadſt ſuffered great harm thyſelf; and then cover his body according to the cuſtom, and neglect not his burial. Weep bitterly, and make great moan, and uſe lamentation as he is worthy, and that a day or two, leſt thou be evil ſpoken of; and then comfort thyſelf for thy heavineſs. The Rabbins admit of ſeveral degrees in their grief and mourning. For the three firſt days it was allowed to give up themſelves to tears, and to the moſt ſenſible grief: which the ſeven days following was more moderate. But if the time of mourning was extended to a whole month, it was managed with moderation. The mournings for Saul, Judith, and Herod the Great, laſted but ſeven days. Thoſe for Moſes and Aaron were prolonged to thirty days. Joſephus ſays, that a thirty days mourning ought to be ſufficient for any wiſe man, in the loſs of his neareſt relation, or his deareſt friend.

During the whole time of their mourning the near relations of the deceaſed, as father, mother, huſband, brother, ſiſter, children, continued ſitting in their houſes, and ate on the ground. The food they took was thought unclean, and even themſelves were judged impure; their ſacrifices ſhall be unto them as the bread of mourners; all that eat thereof ſhall be polluted, ſays Hoſea, ix. 4.

Their faces were covered, and in all that time they could not apply themſelves to any labour, nor read the book of the law, nor ſay their uſual prayers. They did not dreſs themſelves, nor make their beds, nor uncover their heads, nor ſhave themſelves, nor cut their nails, nor go into the bath, nor ſalute any body. No body ſpoke to them unleſs they ſpoke firſt. Their friends commonly went to viſit and comfort them, bringing them food, according to that of the Proverbs, xxxi. 6, 7. Give ſtrong drink unto him that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink and forget his poverty, (or affliction) and remember his miſery no more.

Leo of Modena ſays, that after they come back from the funeral, the relations of the deceaſed ſit down on the ground, and after they have taken off their ſhoes, they have bread, wine, and hard eggs ſet before them. In ſome places they make a great entertainment for the relations, and thoſe that aſſiſted at the funeral. Joſephus ſays, de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 1. that after Archelaus had kept a mourning of ſeven days, for his father Herod the Great, he made a magnificent treat for the people; and that it was a cuſtom among the Jews on theſe occaſions, to make great feaſts for the relations; which was very inconvenient to many perſons, who could not well bear that expence. Anciently they ſet bread and meat at the tombs of the dead, that the poor might have the benefit of it, Tob. iv. 18. Eccleſ. xxx. 18. Baruch. vi. 26, 31.

Anciently, in times of public mourning, the Hebrews went up to the roof, or upon the platforms of their houſes, there to bewail their misfortune. Through all the cities of Moab, ſays Iſaiah, they ſhall gird themſelves with ſackcloth: on the tops of their houſes, and in their ſtreets, every one ſhall howl, weeping abundantly, Iſai. xv. 3. And elſewhere, ſpeaking to Jeruſalem, he ſays; What aileth thee now, that thou art wholly gone up to the houſe-tops? Iſai. xxii. 1.

They hired women to weep and mourn, and players on inſtruments, as well at the funerals of the Hebrews, as anciently among the Romans. But this cuſtom is not obſervable in the Eaſt, till after the Romans introduced it. Perſons in years were carried to their graves by ſound of trumpet, as Servius ſays, and younger people by the ſound of flutes. In Matth. ix. 23. we obſerve a company of players on the flute, at the funeral of a girl of twelve years of age. Among the Romans the kings had fixed the number of players on the flute at funerals; more than ten was forbidden. The Rabbins have determined among the Hebrews, that a huſband muſt have two at the burial of his wife, not reckoning the two he-mourners and the ſhe-mourner that were hired. If a woman of condition ſhould marry a man of inferior quality, he was to bury her according to her condition. For according to the Rabbins, the wife aſcends with her huſband, but ſhe deſcends not with him, even at her death.

All that met a funeral proceſſion, or a company of mourners, out of civility were to join them, and to mingle their tears with thoſe that wept, Joſeph. lib. ii. cont. Appion. p. 1075. a. St. Paul ſeems to allude to this cuſtom, when he ſays; Rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep, Rom. xii. 15. And our Saviour in the goſpel; The men of this generation are like unto children ſitting in the market-place, and calling one to another, and ſaying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned to you, and ye have not wept, Luke vii. 32. Matth. xi. 17.

When Jeſus Chriſt was led away to his crucifixion, the women of Jeruſalem followed him, and made great lamentations: Luke xxiii. 27. When the daughter of Jephthah was devoted by her father, ſhe went with her companions upon the mountains, to lament her death, and her being obliged to leave the world before ſhe was married, Judg. xi. 38. In Paleſtine and Syria, the women go out alſo into the burying places at certain times, there to mourn for the death of their near relations.

The habit of mourning among the Hebrews was not fixed either by the law or cuſtom. We only find in Scripture, that they uſed to tear their garments. A cuſtom ſtill obſerved, but they only tear a ſmall part of it, and only for form's ſake. Anciently in times of mourning they cloathed themſelves in ſackcloth, or hair-cloth, i. e. in coarſe or ill made clothes, of brown or black ſtuff. At this day, that they may not appear ridiculous, they wear mourning after the faſhion of the countries where they live, without being conſtrained to it by any law.

MOUSE, or Rat. In Greek Μῦς, Latin, Mus, in Hebrew עכבר Gnachbar, or Acbar. Moſes, Levit. xi. 29. declared it unclean, which inſinuates that it was eaten ſometimes. The Jews were ſo oppreſſed with famine during the ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Romans, that they were compelled to eat dogs, mice, and rats, Hiſt. Hebr. templi ſecundi, p. 241. Iſaiah, lxvi. 17. reproaches the Jews with eating mice, and other impure food. The Rabbins, Beth. Jacob. Fol. 181, ſay, that one reaſon why the law forbad the eating of mice, is, becauſe their fleſh cauſes the loſs of memory. Mice made great ſpoil in the fields of the Philiſtines, after that people had taken taken the ark of the Lord, 1 Sam. v. 6, 7, &c. The lords of the Philiſtines ſent back the ark with mice and emerods of gold, as an atonement for irreverence committed, and to avert the vengeance that purſued them. The Aſſyrians that beſieged Bethulia, when they ſaw the Hebrews come out of the city in order of battle, compared them to mice, ſaying, See the mice are coming forth out of their holes, Judith xiv. 12. Vulgate.

MOUTH. We obſerved on the article ADORE, that to kiſs one's hand, and to put it to one's mouth, was a ſign of adoration. The Hebrews, by way of pleonaſm, often ſay; he opened his mouth, and ſpoke, ſung, curſed, &c. Alſo, that God opens the mouth of the prophets, puts words into their mouth, bids them ſpeak what he inſpires to them. To inquire of the mouth of the Lord, is to conſult him, Joſh. ix. 14. God ſays, that he will be the mouth of Moſes and of Aaron, Exod. iv. 15. We will call the damſel, and enquire at her mouth; let us know Rebecca's ſentiments of the matter, Gen. xxiv. 57. Let us hear what is in the mouth of Achitophel, 2 Sam. xvii. let us conſult him about this affair.

To open the mouth, is often uſed emphatically, for ſpeaking aloud, boldly, freely, 1 Sam. ii. 1. my mouth is enlarged—opened—over my enemies, ſays Hannah the mother of Samuel. Ezek. xxiv. 27. And Iſaiah lvii. 4. In a contrary ſenſe, to ſhut the mouth, to ſilence, is a mark of humiliation and affliction, Pſal. cvii. 42. And Pſal. xxxviii. 14. To ſet their mouth againſt the heavens, Pſal. lxxiii. 9. is when they ſpeak arrogantly, inſolently, and without the fear of God.

God directs that his law ſhould be always in the mouth of his people, that the Iſraelites commune frequently with one another about it. He forbids them ſo much as to pronounce the name of ſtrange gods; Exod. xxiii. 13. God ſays, that the earth opened her mouth, to receive the blood of Abel, Gen. iv. 11. The Hebrews generally ſay; to cauſe to paſs under the mouth of the ſword, whereas we ſay, the edge of the ſword. To ſpeak mouth to mouth, is an Hebraiſm, which we render by face to face, Numb. xii. 8. Heb. To lay one's hand on one's mouth, ſignifies to keep ſilence out of reſpect, admiration, or fear. To fill from one mouth to the other, from one extremity to the other; as a ſack that is full from the bottom to the top. Shut not up the mouths of thoſe that praiſe thee; let them not be oppreſſed, or prevented from publiſhing thy praiſe. The Scripture often ſays, that God does what he barely permits, or even what he foretels ſhall be done. With one mouth, is with common conſent, Dan. iii. 51. To obſerve the mouth of the king, is to hear his words with attention, Eccles. viii. 2. To walk by the mouth of any one, is to obey his orders. To tranſgreſs againſt the mouth of the Lord, is to diſobey his commands. You ſhall be juſtified by your own mouth, you ſhall be condemned out of your own mouth: by the good or ill uſe of your own tongue.

Hoſea ſays, vi. 5. that the Lord has put the people to death by the words of his mouth. That is to ſay, that he foretold death or captivity to them by his prophets. Iſaiah ſays of the Meſſiah, xi. 4. He ſhall ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips ſhall he ſlay the wicked. Theſe expreſſions denote the abſolute power of God, and that it requires only one breath to deſtroy his enemies. The ſame prophet ſays; xlix. 2. He hath made my mouth like a ſharp ſword. All theſe ways of ſpeaking energetically expreſs the ſovereign authority of God. From the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, ſays Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. xii. 34. Our diſcourſes are the echo of the ſentiments of our hearts. It is not what enters into the mouth that defileth the man; it is neither meat nor drink that makes us unclean in the ſight of God: in ore, or ad os, often ſignifies, pro ratione, proportione ſervatâ.

MOZA, מוצא, μωσή, unleavened bread; from מצה matzah: otherwiſe, to find, or who has ſucceeded; from מצא matza: otherwiſe, turned out; from יצא jatza, to go out.

I. MOZA, or Moſa, ſon of Caleb and his concubine Ephah, 1 Chron. ii. 46.

II. MOZA, ſon of Zimri, and father of Binea, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 36.

MOZAH, המוצה, unleavened bread; from מצה matzah: or that ſqueezes: otherwiſe, diſpute, quarrel. See נצץ natzatz.

MULBERRY-TREE, in Latin Morus, Pſalm lxxviii. 47, ſays, that among other plagues with which the Lord viſited Egypt, he deſtroyed their vines with hail, and their mulberry-trees with froſt. [Vulgate; the Engliſh tranſlation reads ſycamore-trees.] The Hebrew word שקמותם בחנמל, according to the generality of interpreters, ſignifies ſycamores. He killed their ſycamore-trees with froſt, or great hail-ſtones. The ſycamore is frequent in Egypt, and has a leaf nearly reſembling that of a mulberry-tree, and fruit ſomething like figs; hence the word ſycamore, from ſycos, a fig or fig-tree, and morus, a mulberry-tree. The Hebrew word Shikamah is evidently the radix of ſycaminus, which ſignifies alſo a ſycamore. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , page .

It is ſaid, 1 Macc. vi. 34, that Antiochus Eupator coming into Judæa with a powerful army, and many elephants, thoſe who had the care of theſe animals ſhewed them the blood of grapes and mulberries, that they might provoke them to fight. The elephant of its own nature is not cruel; to render him fierce he muſt be vexed, urged, made drunk, or ſhewed ſome blood, or ſomething like blood. Experience ſhews, that many animals are provoked at the ſight of blood, or of any lively red colour, as Valleſius affirms; why not elephants alſo?

MULE, the offſpring of two animals of different ſpecies, a horſe and a ſhe-aſs, or an he-aſs and a mare.

There is great likelihood that the Jews did not breed mules, becauſe it was forbid to couple creatures of different ſpecies, Levit. xix. 19. But they were not forbid to uſe them. Thus we may obſerve, eſpecially ſince David's time, that he and ſhe-mules were common among the Hebrews: formerly they uſed only he and ſhe-aſſes. 2 Sam. xiii. 29. xviii. 9. 1 Kings i. 33, 38, 44, x. 25. xviii. 5, &c.

Some have thought, that Anah ſon of Zibeon, of the poſterity of Seir, being in the Deſart, found out the manner of breeding mules, by coupling together animals of different kinds. This opinion was much eſpouſed by the ancients. But St. Jerome, who notices it in his Hebraical queſtions on Geneſis, tranſlates, that Anah found hot waters. The Syriac ſays, a fountain; but rather it ſignifies a people whom Anah ſet upon and defeated. See ANAH.

MUPPIM, מפים, μανφιν, of the mouth; from the prepoſition מ am, and פה pe, the mouth.

MUPPIM, or Mophim, ſon of Benjamin, Gen. xlvi. 21. called Shupham, Numb. xxvi. 39.

MURDER, Murder among the Hebrews was always puniſhed with death, but involuntary homicide was only puniſhed by baniſhment. Cities of refuge were appointed for involuntary manſlaughter, whither the ſlayer might retire, and continue in ſafety, till the death of the high-prieſt, Numb. xxxv. 28. Then the offender was at liberty to return to his own houſe, if he pleaſed. A murderer was put to death without remiſſion, and the kinſman of the murdered perſon might kill him with impunity. Money could not redeem his life, he was dragged away even from the altar, if he had taken refuge there.

When a dead body was found in the fields, of a perſon ſlain by a murderer unknown, Moſes commanded, that the elders and judges of the neighbouring places ſhould reſort to the ſpot, Deut. xxi. 1, 2—8. The elders of the city neareſt to it were to take a heifer, which had never yet bore the yoke, and were to lead it into ſome rude and uncultivated place, which had not been ploughed or ſowed, where they were to cut its throat; the prieſts of the Lord, with the elders and magiſtrates of the city, were to come near the dead body, and waſhing their hands over the heifer that had been ſlain, they were to ſay: "Our hands have not ſhed this blood, nor have our eyes ſeen it ſhed. Lord be favourable to thy people Iſrael, and impute not to us this blood, which has been ſhed in the midſt of our country." This ceremony may inform us, what idea they had of the heinouſneſs of murder, and how much horror they conceived at this crime; and alſo their fear that God might avenge it on the whole country: and the pollution that the country was ſuppoſed to contract, by the blood ſpilt in it, unleſs it were expiated, or avenged on him who had occaſioned it; if he could be diſcovered.

MURMURING. A complaint made for wrong pretended to have been received. St. Paul forbids murmuring. Neither murmur ye, as ſome of them murmured, and were deſtroyed of the deſtroyer, 1 Cor. x. 10. And the wiſe man, Wiſdom i. 11. Therefore beware of murmuring, which is unprofitable, and refrain your tongue from backbiting; for there is no word ſo ſecret that ſhall go for nought, and the mouth that belyeth ſlayeth the ſoul. And indeed God ſeverely puniſhed the Hebrews that murmured in the Deſart. He was more than once upon the point of forſaking them, and even of deſtroying them, had not Moſes appeaſed his anger by earneſt prayer. Vide Numb. xi. 33, 34. Pſ. lxxviii. 30. Numb. xiv. 30, 31, &c. Numb. xxi. 4, 5, 6, &c. xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. xvi. 3, &c.

MUSACH, מוסך, καθέδρα, from נסך naſac, to cover: otherwiſe, unction, libation, or mixing of liquors; from מסך maſac.

MUSACH. This term ſignifies literally a veil or covering, or a work of caſt metal. There are many various opinions concerning the ſignification of Muſach of Judah, that Manaſſeh cauſed to be uncovered at the approach of the king of Babylon; and of the Muſach of the Sabbath that Ahaz cauſed to be turned towards the temple, for fear of the king of Aſſyria. Some have thought it was a veil, that covered the courts of the temple; others that it was a tent, wherein the prieſts reſted themſelves in the temple, when their week was out; others that it was a cheſt wherein they threw their offerings for the repairs of the temple. Our opinion is, that it was the ſcaffold of braſs made by Solomon, 2 Chr. vi. 13. and placed in the temple, upon which he ſtood on feſtival days. The ſame name was given to the the ſcaffold upon which a prieſt aſcended on great ſolemnities, to read the law to the people.

Ahaz fearing that king Tiglath-pileſer ſhould come to Jeruſalem, and take away this ſcaffold, which was very valuable both for its matter and form, he cauſed it to be taken away from its place, and put into ſome ſecret part of the temple. Manaſſeh on a like occaſion tore off the plates of braſs with which it was covered. In 2 Kings xi. 14. the high-prieſt Jehoiada, deſiring to have young Joaſh acknowledged as king, cauſed guards to be ſet about him in the muſach that was in the temple. The prince was ſeated upon the ſcaffold, and the guards placed round about. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLVIII, page 152.

MUSHI, מושי, he that touches, that withdraws himſelf, that takes away; from מוש muſh.

MUSHI, or Muſi, ſon of Merari, chief of a family of Levites, 1 Chron. vi. 19. Numb. iii. 33.

MUSIC. The ancient Hebrews had a ſtrong inclination to muſic and muſical inſtruments. They uſed it in their religious ſervices, in their public and private rejoicings, at their feaſts, and even in their mournings. We have in ſcripture canticles of joy, of thankſgiving, of praiſe, of mourning; epithalamiums, or ſongs compoſed on occaſion of marriages; as the Song of Songs, and Pſalm xlv. which are thought to have been compoſed to celebrate the marriage of king Solomon. Alſo mournful ſongs, as thoſe that David compoſed on the death of Saul and Abner, and the Lamentations of Jeremiah on the death of Joſiah. Alſo Pſalms to celebrate the acceſſion of a prince to his crown, as Pſalm lxxii. Songs of victory, triumph, and thankſgiving, as that which Moſes ſung after paſſing the Red-Sea, that of Deborah and Barak, and others. The book of Pſalms is an ample collection of different pieces for muſic, compoſed on all ſorts of ſubjects by inſpired authors. See POETRY.

Muſic is very ancient. Moſes ſays of Jubal, who lived before the Deluge, he was the father of thoſe who played on the kinnor, and the hugab, Gen. iv. 21. Now kinnor manifeſtly ſignifies the harp, and hugab the ancient organ, i. e. a kind of flute compoſed of ſeveral pipes of different ſizes, joined together. Laban complains that his ſon-in-law Jacob had left him, without bidding him farewell, and without giving him an opportunity of ſending him away, with mirth and with ſongs, with tabret and with harp. Moſes having paſſed over the Red Sea, compoſed a ſong, and ſung it with the Iſraelite men, while Miriam his ſiſter ſung it with dancing, and playing on inſtruments, at the head of the women. This legiſlator cauſed ſilver trumpets to be made, to be ſounded upon ſolemn ſacrifices, and on religious feſtivals. David, who had a great taſte for muſic, ſeeing that the Levites were numerous, and not employed as formerly, in carrying the boards, veils, and veſſels of the tabernacle, its abode being fixed at Jeruſalem; he appointed a great part of them to ſing and play on inſtruments in the temple.

Aſaph, Heman, and Jeduthun were chiefs of the muſic of the tabernacle under David, and of the temple under Solomon. Aſaph had four ſons, Jeduthun ſix, and Heman fourteen. Theſe twenty-four Levites, ſons of the three great maſters of the temple muſic, were at the head of twenty-four bands of muſicians, which ſerved in the temple by turns. Their number there was always great, but eſpecially at the great ſolemnities. They were ranged in order about the altar of burnt ſacrifices. Thoſe of the family of Kohath were in the middle, thoſe of Merari at the left, and thoſe of Gerſhom on the right hand. As the whole buſineſs of their lives was to learn and to practiſe muſic, it muſt be ſuppoſed that they underſtood it well; whether it were vocal or inſtrumental muſic. The Lord had abundantly provided for their maintenance, and nothing could hinder them from being perfect in their art.

The kings alſo had their particular muſic. Aſaph was chief maſter of muſic to king David. He was, as the Scripture ſays, a prophet at the king's hand. And Barzillai ſaid to David, Can I hear any more the voice of ſinging men and ſinging women? Even in the temple, and in the ceremonies of religion, female muſicians were admitted as well as male, who generally were the daughters of the Levites. Heman had fourteen ſons and three daughters, who underſtood muſic. The ninth Pſalm is addreſſed to Benaiah, chief of the band of young women who ſang in the temple. Ezra in his enumeration of thoſe whom he brought back with him from the captivity, reckons up two hundred ſinging men and ſinging women. The Chaldee praphraſt on chap. ii. 8. of Eccleſiaſtes, where Solomon ſays that he gat ſinging-men and ſinging-women, underſtands it of ſinging women of the temple. In 1 Chronicles xv. 20. it is ſaid, in the Hebrew, that Zechariah, Aziel, and Shemiramoth, preſided over the ſeventh band of muſic, which was that of the young women.

As to the nature of their muſic, we can judge of it only by conjecture, becauſe it has been long loſt. But probably, it was only a mixture of ſeveral voices, of which all ſung together in the ſame tune, each according to his ſtrength and ſkill; and that there was not among them thoſe different rent parts, and that combination of ſeveral voices and tunes, which conſtitute our concerts, or compounded muſic. Probably alſo, the voices were generally accompanied by the inſtrumental muſic. But if we may draw any concluſions in favour of their muſic, from its effects, its magnificence, majeſty, and the fine ſentiments contained in their ſongs; we muſt allow that their muſic was excellent. Every one knows, that David by his ſkill on the harp diſpelled the melancholy vapours of Saul. The ſame Saul having ſent meſſengers to apprehend David at Naioth in Ramah; the meſſengers no ſooner heard the ſound of the inſtruments of the prophets, who were there ſinging and playing, but they were immediately tranſported (as it were) by a divine enthuſiaſm, to do the ſame. Saul ſent a ſecond and a third company after them, who did the ſame. Laſtly this prince came thither himſelf, was ſeized in the ſame manner by the divine Spirit, and began to have all the motions of thoſe that are inſpired, even before he came to the place where the prophets were aſſembled. The prophet Eliſha finding himſelf a little agitated, cauſed a minſtrel to play before him to calm his ſpirits, into a temper fit to receive the divine Spirit.

The muſical inſtruments of the ancient Hebrews are, perhaps, what has been hitherto leaſt known, of any thing in the holy Scriptures. The Rabbins themſelves know no more in this matter, than other commentators who are leaſt acquainted with Jewiſh affairs. One cannot read without contempt, what is ſaid by moſt of them, reſpecting certain terms, whoſe meaning is not aſcertained, which occur in the titles to the Pſalms; and which they take, at a venture, for inſtruments of muſic: ſuch as neginoth, hanechiloth, naſhemmith, ſiggaion, gittith, halamoth, michtam, haialoth haſhahar, ſhuſhanim, &c.

If we examine attentively, we ſhall find, that the Hebrews had by no means a great variety of muſical inſtruments. We ſhall conſider them under three claſſes: (1) Stringed inſtruments. (2) Wind inſtruments, or divers kinds of flutes. (3) Different kinds of drums.

Of ſtringed inſtruments, are the nabl, (נבל) the pſaltery, or pſanneterim: Dan. iii. 5. theſe three names apparently ſignify nearly, or altogether, the ſame thing. They have conſiderable reſemblance to the harp; the ancient cythara; or the hazur (עשור) or ten ſtringed inſtrument: both were nearly of the figure Δ: but the nablum, or pſaltery, was hollow toward the top, was played on (touched) toward the bottom: whereas, the cythara, or ten-ſtringed inſtrument, was played on on the upper part, and was hollow below: both were touched with a ſmall bow, or fret, or the fingers.

The cinnor כנור, or ancient lyre, had ſometimes ſix, ſometimes nine, ſtrings. Theſe ſtrings were ſtrung from top to bottom; and ſounded by means of a hollow belly, over which they paſſed: theſe were touched with a ſmall bow, or fret, or the finger.

The ancient ſymphony, was nearly the ſame as our viol.

The ſambuc, was a ſtringed inſtrument, which we gueſs was nearly the ſame as the modern pſaltery.

We diſcover in Scripture divers ſorts of trumpets, and flutes; of which it is difficult to aſcertain the forms.

The moſt remarkable of this kind is the ancient organ, in Hebrew huggab (עגב) which, ſeemingly, was one of thoſe kinds of flutes compoſed of ſeveral pipes of unequal length and perforation, which gave a muſical ſound, when paſſed ſucceſſively over the lips, and blown into while paſſing. [This is the ancient pipe of Pan.]

Drums were of many kinds. The Hebrew word taph (תוף) from whence comes the word tympanum, is taken for all kinds of drums, or timbrels. The zalzelim (צלצלים, cymbal, or cyſtra) is commonly tranſlated by the LXX. and the Vulgate cymbala: now the cymbals were inſtruments of braſs, of a very clattering ſound, made in the form of a cap, or hat, and ſtruck one againſt the other, while held one in each hand. Later interpreters by galgelim underſtand the ſiſtrum; an inſtrument formerly very common in Egypt. It was nearly of an oval figure, and croſſed by braſs wires, which being ſhaken jingled, while their ends were ſecured from falling out of the frame, by their heads being larger than the orifice which contained the wires.

The Hebrew text ſpeaks of an inſtrument called ſhaliſhim (שלשים) which the LXX. have tranſlated cymbala; but Jerom, ſiſtra: it is found only 1 Sam. xviii. 6. the term ſhaliſhim, hints that it was of three ſides (triangular) and it might be that ancient triangular inſtrument, which carrying on each ſide ſeveral rings, they were jingled together by a ſtick; and gave a ſharp rattling ſound. The original alſo mentions mezilothaim, מצלותים, which were of braſs, and of a ſharp ſound. This word is uſually tranſlated cymbala: ſome however render it tintinabula, little bells. Zechariah ſays, xiv. 20. the time ſhall come, when on the mezilots of the horſes, ſhall be written, "Holineſs to the Lord!" this inclines to the ſuppoſition that this word ſignifies bells; ſince we know that anciently, bells were worn by horſes trained for war, to accuſtom them to noiſe.

by

The bells which were placed at the bottom of the robe of the high-prieſt, are called פעמון phaamun. LXX. Κώδων, tintinabulum.

MYNDUS, Μύνδος, dumb; from the Greek μύδος.

MYNDUS, a maritime city of Caria, 1 Macc. xv. 23.

MYRA, a town of Lycia, where St. Paul embarked for Rome, on board a ſhip of Alexandria, Acts xxvii. 5.

MYRRH, Myrrha, in Heb. מור, Mur. Exod. xxx. 25. is a gum yielded by a tree which is common in Arabia: and which is about five cubits high: its wood hard, and its trunk thorny. Scripture notices two kinds (1) myrrha electa, literally, free myrrh: what runs of itſelf without inciſion; this is the beſt of all. Pliny ſpeaking of the tree which yields myrrh, ſays, Sudant ſpontè priuſquam incidantur, ſtactem dictam, cui mella præfertur. This is the myrrh called alſo ſtacte. (2) The other kind of myrrh is ſimple and ordinary. It was employed in perfumes, and in embalming, to preſerve the body from corruption. The Magi who came from the Eaſt to worſhip Jeſus Chriſt, offered to him myrrh, Matth. ii. 11.

In the Goſpel, Mark. xv. 23, is mentioned myrrh and wine; wine mingled with myrrh; which was offered to Jeſus Chriſt, previous to his crucifixion, intended to deaden in him the anguiſh of his ſufferings. It was a cuſtom among the Hebrews to give ſuch kind of ſtupifying liquors to perſons who were about to be capitally puniſhed, Prov. xxxvi. 6. Talmud, Tract. Sanhed. cap. 6. Some have thought that the myrrhed wine of St. Mark, is the ſame as the "wine mingled with gall," of St. Matthew: but others diſtinguiſh them. The myrrhed wine was given to our Lord, from a ſentiment of ſympathy, to prevent him from feeling too ſenſibly the pain of his ſufferings; but the ſoldiers, from cruelty, gave him their potation, mingled with gall, of which Jeſus would not drink. Or, perhaps, St. Matthew, writing in Syriac, uſed the word marra, which ſignifies either myrrh, bitterneſs, or gall. The Greek tranſlator took it in the ſenſe of gall, and St. Mark in the ſenſe of myrrh. Wine mingled with myrrh was highly eſteemed by the ancients: Pliny ſays, lib. xiv. cap. 13. Lantiſſima apud priſcos vina erant, myrrhæ odore condita. The law of the twelve tables forbids the ſprinkling of it on the dead: Ne murrhata potio mortuo inderetur.

MYRTLE. Myrthus, Hebrew, הדס, Chadas; this expreſſes ſometimes the ſhrub which bears the myrtle flowers; Zach. i. 8, 10, 11. alſo the flower itſelf; alſo the perfume, or eſſence, extracted from the flowers. Myrthetum is a place planted with myrtles. This ſhrub was common in Judæa. Eſdras ſends the people to procure in the country, myrtles, branches of olives, and palms, to make booths for the Feaſt of Tabernacles. Eſdras viii. 15.

MYSIA, Μυσία, criminal, or abominable; from the Greek μύσος, crime.

MYSIA, a province of Aſia Minor: having Bythinia north; the Troad ſouth; Phrygia eaſt; and the Helleſpont weſt. St. Paul preached in this country, Acts xvi. 7, 8.

MYSTERY. This word is from the Greek myſterion, which in that language properly ſignifies, a ſecret; from myo, I ſhut, ſtoma, a mouth: i. e. a ſubject on which I ſhut my mouth, I decline to ſpeak: or from the Hebrew סתר ſatar, מסתר meſatar, a thing concealed. Denudare amici myſteria, deſperatio animæ, ſays Eccleſiaſticus xxvii. 16. When a man has betrayed the ſecret of his friend, he is unworthy of credit. Ei, qui revelat myſteria, & ambulat fraudulenter,—ne commiſcearis. Have no correſpondence with him who betrays the ſecrets of his friends, and who walks deceitfully, Prov. xx. 19.

All religions true or falſe have their myſteries, i. e. certain things kept private, not to be divulged, or expoſed indifferently to every body; but known only to the initiated. The Pagans had their myſteries, but they were myſteries of iniquity, ſhameful myſteries, concealed only becauſe their expoſure would have rendered their religion contemptible, ridiculous, and odious. If men of ſenſe and honour had known what was practiſed in the myſteries of certain falſe deities, they would have abhorred them. Scripture often ſpeaks of the infamous myſteries of Aſtarte, Adonis, Priapus, wherein a thouſand infamous actions were concealed under the veil of religion. Baruch ſpeaks of the proſtitutions practiſed in honour of Venus at Babylon, Baruch vi. 42, 43. The whole religion of the Egyptians was myſterious. But theſe pretended myſteries were invented afterwards, to conceal the folly and vanity of it. They could not vindicate, for example, the adoration they paid to brutes, but by ſaying, that the gods had ſometimes concealed themſelves under theſe ſhapes. In the Maccabees mention is made of the myſteries of Bacchus, and of the ivy imprinted on every one that was initiated therein, and of the garlands of ivy worn by thoſe who aſſiſted at theſe ceremonies, 1 Macc. vi. 7. 2 Macc. vi. 7. Aſa king of Judah, would not ſuffer the queen his mother to continue to preſide over the myſteries of Priapus. 1 Kings xv. 13. No doubt but they gave myſterious and ſecret reaſons for the worſhip of Moloch, and human ſacrifices offered to him. It was perhaps a perverſe imitation of Abraham's intended ſacrifice of his ſon Iſaac. The Phœnicians aſſigned a reaſon not unlike this, for their cruel ſacrifices to Hercules and to Saturn. See Porphyry in Euſebius's Preparatio Evangelica.

The religion of the Jews was full of myſteries. The whole nation was a myſtery, according to St. Auſtin. It repreſented the people of Chriſt, and the Chriſtian religion. Whatever happened to them, whatever they practiſed, all that was commanded, or forbidden them, was figurative according to St. Paul. Their ſacrifices, their prieſthood, their purifications, their refraining from certain ſorts of food, included myſteries which have been explained by Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles. The paſſage over the Red Sea was a ſymbol of baptiſm. The brazen ſerpent was a myſtery prefiguring the croſs and death of Chriſt. Sarah and Hagar, Iſaac and Iſhmael, denoted the two covenants. The tabernacle and its veſſels hinted at the worſhip of God in the Chriſtian church. The prieſthood of Aaron has been admirably explained by St. Paul of the prieſthood of Jeſus Chriſt. Barnabas has unfolded the ſecrets contained in the prohibition of certain foods. Jeſus Chriſt diſcovered the myſtery, of Jonah's being confined three days in the whale's belly: and that of lifting up the brazen ſerpent in the wilderneſs: that of manna which repreſented his body and blood: that of the union of Adam and Eve. The reprobation of the Jews, and the adoption of the Gentiles, was intimated in an hundred paſſages of Scripture; by Agar and Sarah, by Iſhmael and Iſaac, by Ephraim and Manaſſeh, by Saul and David, by Abſalom and Solomon, and even by Moſes and Aaron, who were not permitted to enter the Land of Promiſe.

The prophecies concerning the perſon, the coming, the characters, the death and paſſion of the Meſſiah, appear in a multitude of places in the Old Teſtament,—but figuratively and myſteriouſly. The actions, the words, the life of the prophets, were a continual and general prophecy, concealed from the people, and ſometimes from the prophets themſelves, and not explained and diſcovered, till after the birth and death of Jeſus Chriſt; and theſe myſteries were diſpenſed ſo wiſely, that the firſt ſerved as a foundation for the ſecond, and the ſucceeding illuſtrated thoſe that preceded. Daniel is more explicit than the prophets before him; Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, ſpeak of the coming, of the death, and of the prieſthood of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the calling of the Gentiles, more diſtinctly than the prophets before them.

The myſteries of the Chriſtian religion, as the incarnation of the word, his hypoſtatical union with his human nature, his miraculous birth, his death, reſurrection, aſcenſion, the grace of Jeſus Chriſt, and the manner of its operation in our hearts, the reſurrection of the dead, &c. are objects of faith to all true Chriſtians.

The word myſtery is alſo taken for ſecrets of an higher order, and ſupernatural; as thoſe whoſe knowledge God has reſerved to himſelf, or has ſometimes communicated to his prophets and friends. Thus Daniel gives to God the name of revealer of myſteries: he tells king Nebuchadnezzar, that only God who reigns in heaven, can reveal hidden myſteries, and things to come. And our Saviour ſays to his diſciples, Matthew vi. 7. that they are happy becauſe God has revealed to them the myſteries of the kingdom of heaven. St. Paul often ſpeaks of the myſtery of the goſpel, of the myſtery of the croſs of Chriſt, of the myſtery of Chriſt which was unknown to former ages, of the myſtery of the reſurrection, &c. Myſtic Babylon, the great harlot, had written upon her forehead, myſtery, to ſhew that ſhe repreſented not any particular woman, but a corrupted and idolatrous people.

The word myſtery in the Greek is expreſſed by ſacramentum in Latin: expreſſing the ſacraments and myſteries of the Chriſtian church. God has made known unto us the myſtery of his will; his incarnation, his coming, his goſpel.

Theſe then were called myſteries, the doctrine of the goſpel, the tenets of Chriſtianity, and the Chriſtian ſacraments: not only becauſe they included ſecrets which had not been known, if the Son of God and his Holy Spirit had not revealed them; but alſo becauſe they were not opened indifferently to every body; according to the advice of Jeſus Chriſt to his apoſtles, Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither caſt ye your pearls before ſwine. Preachers in their ſermons, and eccleſiaſtical writers in their books, did not fully expreſs themſelves on all the myſteries. They ſaid enough to be underſtood by the faithful, while to the Pagans they were ſecrets—privacies. This precaution continued long in the church.

ADDITION.

The word myſtery has been ſo repeatedly canvaſſed, and the import of it, as it appears to me, ſo often perverted, that I cannot refrain from adding a few remarks upon it.

I never hear the word myſtery, without thinking of the

the old Engliſh term MAISTERIES, maſteries, as —the maiſterie of the Merchant Taylors,—of the Cordonniers (Cordwainers) and of other arts, and trades. In fact, the term is ſtill uſed in the city of London, "the art and myſtery of"—occurs in the indentures of apprenticeſhip, as uſed in moſt branches of buſineſs: meaning, that which may be a difficulty, or even an impoſſibility, to be underſtood, by a novice—by a perſon only beginning to conſider the ſubject—but which is perfectly eaſy, and intelligible to a maſter of the buſineſs; whoſe practice, and whoſe underſtanding, have been long cultivated, by uſe in it.

Or, myſtery, may be defined a SECRET: now a ſecret, will always remain ſo, to a perſon who uſes no endeavours to diſcover it:—oftentimes we ſay, ſuch a perſon holds ſuch a mode of accompliſhing ſuch a buſineſs a ſecret. Now, imagine one who wiſhes to know this ſecret; he labours, ſtrives, &c. but, unleſs he proceed in the right mode, the proceſs deſired continues ſtill a ſecret: ſuppoſe the poſſeſſor of this ſecret ſhews him the proceſs, teaches him, gives him information, &c. then this ſecret (myſtery) is no longer myſterious to him; but he enjoys the diſcovery, and profits accordingly: while another perſon, not ſo favored, is as much in the dark reſpecting this ſecret, as ever he was.

Secrets may be conſidered as of various kinds: ſome are known to a few, but are unknown to the many; ſome are kept cloſely a long time, but are revealed in proper ſeaſon; ſome are kept intirely, totally, and never are revealed; ſome are of a nature not to be inveſtigated by us; and ſome, ſo far ſurpaſs our powers, that, however familiar their effects may be to our obſervation, yet their principles, acting cauſes, progreſſes, and diſtributions, exceedingly perplex our underſtandings, and reduce us to the neceſſity of inference, ſuppoſition, and conjecture.

I entreat that this familiar illuſtration of the word myſtery, may not be deſpiſed becauſe of its familiarity;—as, I incline to think, that it is not far from a ſcriptural acceptation of the term. Let us ſee what its effect may be when applied to ſcripture examples, 1 Tim. iii. 16. Great is the myſtery—ſecret—of godlineſs.—i. e. a thing not to be comprehended at firſt ſight; nor until after many reflections, and much conſideration.

Rom. xi. 25. I would not have you ignorant of this myſtery—ſecret—that blindneſs in part hath happened to Iſrael;—ſtrange indeed! if myſtery denoted ſomething utterly incomprehenſible and inexplicable, that the apoſtle ſhould wiſh them not to be ignorant of it! that he ſhould inſtantly open to them what this myſtery is!—To the Jews, indeed, it was ſtill a ſecret; and they did not believe the fact, that they laboured under any blindneſs at all:—while to the apoſtle, and to his fellow Chriſtians, the myſtery was clear, and it was well underſtood by them.

1 Cor. xv. 16. Behold, I ſhew you a myſtery—we ſhall not all ſleep—change the phraſeology: "behold, I tell you a ſecret, we ſhall not all ſleep"—could the apoſtle mean to ſhew them a thing utterly incomprehenſible?

1 Cor. xiii. 2. The apoſtle ſpeaks of a man's underſtanding all myſteries—i. e. they were eaſy to him, though not ſo to others. Alſo, 1 Cor. xiv. 2. where he alludes to a man, who diſcourſing in a language foreign to his auditors, may in the Spirit ſpeak myſteries: he may tell all manner of ſecrets, in a foreign language, but while he himſelf underſtands perfectly well his own meaning, and what he ſays, yet his ſubjects of diſcourſe will continue ſecrets to thoſe who are ignorant of the language he uſes.

We ſpeak the wiſdom of God in a myſtery, ſays the apoſtle, 1 Cor. ii. 6. i. e. the wiſdom hitherto kept ſecret: but now the ſecret is explained—is opened—is let out—not indeed, to the princes of the world; to them it is as much a ſecret as ever, but God by his Spirit hath given us information reſpecting it, and by that we know and underſtand it.

Stewards of the myſteries of God—i. e. perſons intruſted with ſome of the ſecrets of God—for the benefit of his church, 1 Cor. iv. 1.

So the calling of the Gentiles ſeparately from the Jews, was a myſtery—a ſecret—which no Jew would have thought of, or have believed, had not God opened, and explained, and enforced it, by his Spirit, &c. Eph. iii. 3—6.

MYSTERY ſignifies alſo an allegory, i. e. a mode of information under which there is a partial inſtruction given, a partial diſcovery made, but there is ſtill a cover of ſome kind, which preſerves ſomewhat of ſecrecy:—but this, the perſon who deſires to know the ſecret thoroughly, muſt endeavour to remove. So, the myſtery of the ſeven ſtars, Rev. i. 20. is, an allegory repreſenting the ſeven Aſiatic churches under the figure or ſymbol of ſeven burning lamps. So the myſtery, Babylon the Great—is an allegorical repreſentation of a ſpiritual Babylon, ſpiritual idotatry, ſpiritual fornication, &c. and to this agrees the expreſſion afterwards, I will tell thee the myſtery of the woman;—i. e. I will explain to thee the allegory of this figure, Rev. xvii. 5, 7.

I apprehend that, originally, the fathers underſtood the the word in this ſenſe; ſo, the myſtery of the ſacrament of the Lord's body and blood,—is the figurative repreſentation of the Lord's body. But the myſteries among the heathen, in time perverted this, and the true idea of the word myſtery, into ſentiments not merely unſcriptural, but unwarrantable, and unwiſe.

Nevertheleſs, I do not mean to deny, that there are myſteries in the higheſt ſenſe of the word, in Nature, Providence, and Grace. The union of the human ſoul and body, is a profound ſecret: the origin of life, is a profound ſecret:—the cauſe, manner, &c. of thought, is a deep ſecret. So are many diſpenſations of Providence: why goodneſs ſhould ſuffer, and evil proſper, is a ſecret: and, why one is called and another left, is a ſecret of ſecrets, a myſtery of Grace!

If the ways and works of God are myſteries, we may juſtly expect to find his attributes, his eſſence, his perfections, his nature, are myſteries to us, poor worms of mankind! Could we ſuppoſe, pardon the ſuppoſition, that God was inclined to inſtruct us in this, it would be (as we are conſtituted, at preſent) teaching us a maiſterie, which we have no faculties capable of learning; it would be ſpeaking to us, in a language of which we ſhould never be able to comprehend a word; it would be overwhelming us with too mighty, too extenſive, too profound, too exalted diſcoveries, for us to receive, or conceive; unleſs we were previouſly endued with the attributes and qualities of the divine nature: with immenſity, infinity, ubiquity, omniſcience, eternity, and, in ſhort, with DEITY!

Now, ſince none denies the exiſtence of God, becauſe he cannot comprehend his nature and eſſence, which is a myſtery; ſo none ought to deny exertions of his power, goodneſs, wiſdom, &c. becauſe they imply the exerciſe of what is ſecret to mankind in general: and this principle, which is undeniable in nature, ought to be equally undeniable in religion.—In ſhort, what relates to God may, rather muſt, always have ſomewhat of myſtery in it. Even the moſt direct and profound intercourſe between the human powers, and their ineffable Creator, prayer and praiſe, may be ſecrets, i. e. myſterious ſervices, but not therefore leſs devout, or leſs acceptable.

MYSTIC. The myſtical ſenſe of Scripture is that which is gathered from the terms or letter of the Scripture, beyond their literal ſignification. For example, Babylon ſignifies literally a city of Chaldæa, the habitation of kings who perſecuted the Hebrews, and who were overwhelmed in idolatry and wickedneſs. But St. John in the Revelations gives the name of Babylon myſtically to the city of Rome. So Jeruſalem is literally, Jeruſalem a city of Judæa; but myſtically, the heavenly Jeruſalem; the habitation of the ſaints. The word ſerpent as to the letter, ſignifies a venomous reptile; myſtically the devil, the old ſerpent, &c. &c.

NAAM, נעם, νοὲμ, beautiful, pretty: otherwiſe, that moves them; from נוע nuah, to remove, and the pronoun מ am, them.

NAAM, or Naham, ſon of Caleb, 1 Chron. iv. 15.

NAAMAH, נעמה, νομὰ, beautiful, agreeable; from נעם naham: otherwiſe, that moves violently; from נוע nuah, to ſtir, and מאה mah, much.

I. NAAMAH, or Noema, daughter of Lamech and Zillah, and ſiſter of Tubal-cain, Gen. iv. 22. It is believed that ſhe found out the art of ſpinning wool, and of making cloth and ſtuffs.

II. NAAMAH, an Ammoniteſs, wife of Solomon, and mother of Rehoboam, 1 Kings xiv. 21.

III. NAAMAH, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 41.

IV. NAAMAH, or Naamath, a city from whence came Zophar, one of Job's friends, Job ii. 11.

NAAMAN, נעמן, νοεμὰν, beautiful; ſee Naamah: otherwiſe, who prepares himſelf to motion; from נוע nuah, motion, and מנה manah, preparation.

I. NAAMAN, ſon of Benjamin, Gen. xlvi. 21.

II. NAAMAN, ſon of Bela, and grandſon of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 4. He was head of a family, Numb. xxvi. 40.

III. NAAMAN, general of the army of Ben-hadad, king of Syria; he was in great credit with the king his maſter, becauſe by his means the Lord had ſaved Syria, but he was a leper. Naaman had in his houſe a young Iſraelitiſh girl, a captive, who ſaid, there was a prophet in Iſrael, who could cure any diſorder. Naaman having heard theſe words, went immediately to Ben-hadad, and deſired leave to go to Samaria, to the prophet Eliſha. The king wrote to the king of Iſrael, that he ſhould cure Naaman, who exclaimed in aſtoniſhment, "Am I a God, that I can kill and make alive;" 2 Kings v. 1, 2, &c.

But Eliſha ſent word to Jehoram; "Let this man come to me; and he ſhall know that there is a prophet in Iſrael." Naaman came therefore with his chariot and horſes, and ſtopped at the door of Eliſha's houſe; whether out of reſpect to him, or, that having the leproſy he was impure. Eliſha ſent to tell him, to waſh himſelf ſeven times in Jordan. Naaman being very angry at this mode of cure, and at the prophet's apparent ſtiffneſs, was turning away in great wrath, when his ſervants ſaid to him; "Had the prophet enjoined you ſome hard thing, you would readily have obeyed him; how much rather ſhould you do it, when he only bids you waſh and be clean?" Naaman was perſuaded, went to Jordan, waſhed ſeven times, and was perfectly cured.

He came back again to the man of God, and told him; "Now I know certainly that there is no God but the Lord. I intreat you to receive a preſent at my hand." But Eliſha would not. Naaman ſeeing that he could not prevail with him, ſaid, I beſeech you then to permit me to carry home with me, two mules lading of the earth of this country; for from henceforward I ſhall offer ſacrifice to no God, but the God of Iſrael. Eliſha readily permitted him, ſeeing his regard for the Lord, which made him think that he could not offer any ſacrifices agreeable to God, but upon earth that was holy, and taken out of the land of Iſrael. This piece of devotion is ancient among the Jews, and even among Chriſtians. Benjamin de Tudela ſays, that the Jews of Nahardea, in the kingdom of Perſia, built their ſynagogue with earth and ſtones, fetched on purpoſe from Jeruſalem. We are aſſured that the empreſs Helena, mother of Conſtantine the Great, cauſed a great quantity to be brought to Rome, which ſhe put in the church of the Holy Croſs, ſurnamed in Jeruſalem. St. Auſtin, and Gregory of Tours, ſupply ſeveral other examples. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CIII, page 5.

To return to Naaman; ſpeaking to Eliſha, he added theſe words: In this thing the Lord pardon thy ſervant, that when my maſter goeth into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myſelf in the houſe of Rimmon: when I bow down myſelf in the houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy ſervant in this thing. And he ſaid unto him, go in peace. This paſſage has given riſe to many ſcruples. The greater part of commentators think, that Naaman only aſks leave from Eliſha to continue thoſe external ſervices to his maſter Ben-hadad, that he had been uſed to render him, when he entered tered the temple of Rimmon; but not to adore Rimmon: and that Eliſha ſuffered him to accompany the king his maſter into the temple of this idol, provided that he paid it no worſhip.

Others, in great numbers, tranſlate the Hebrew by the time paſt; in this thing the Lord pardon thy ſervant, that when my maſter went into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and he leaned on my hand, and I bowed myſelf in the houſe of Rimmon: when I bowed down myſelf in the houſe of Rimmon, the Lord pardon thy ſervant in this thing. And he ſaid unto him, go in peace. Naaman mentions only this paſt ſin, and aſks pardon for it, becauſe idolatry in ſome meaſure includes all other crimes; and he chiefly inſiſts on this, in his declaration to the prophet, that from henceforward he would only worſhip the God of Iſrael.

Naaman was returning into his own country very joyful, but had hardly gone fifty yards, when, Gehazi diſpleaſed that Eliſha his maſter took nothing from Naaman, runs after him to aſk for ſomething; and in the name of his maſter, by a lye, begged a talent, and two changes of raiment. The talent (of ſilver) is worth of our money about £ 342. Naaman anſwered him, "take two talents," and conſtrained him to receive them, and alſo ſent two of his ſervants to carry them for him. See GEHAZI. The leproſy of Naaman was inflicted as a puniſhment on Gehazi. The Scripture after this makes no mention of Naaman.

NAAMATHITE, נעמתי, beauty, or motion of death; from נעם naham, beauty, or נוע nuah, to move, and מות muth, death.

NAARAI, נערי, ναραὶ, my young children, or my watchers, or my ſpillers; from nahar, or hara, or hur, and the pronoun י i, my.

NAARAI, or Hezrai, a valiant man of David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 37.

NAARAN, נערן, Vulgate, Noran, young child; from נער nohar: otherwiſe, that awakes; from עיר hur.

NAARAN, or Naarath, or Noran, a city of Ephraim, 1 Chron. vii. 28.

NAARATH, נערה, נערתה, νοερὰ, youth, or child; from נער nahar: otherwiſe, to ſpill; from ערה harah: otherwiſe, that watches; from עיר hur.

NAARATH, a city of Ephraim, Joſh. xvi. 7. Euſebius places Naarath about five miles from Jericho. This is probably the ſame as Neara, mentioned by Joſephus, and from whence he ſays they brought the waters which watered the palm trees of Jericho. Perhaps this alſo may be the Naaran above.

NAASHON, נחשון, that foretels, that conjectures: or ſerpent; from נחש nicheſh: otherwiſe, their auguries; from the ſame, and the pronoun ן an, their.

NABAL, נבל, fool, or ſenſeleſs.

NABAL, a very rich but very churliſh man, of but little underſtanding, of the tribe of Judah, and the race of Caleb, whoſe ordinary dwelling was probably at Maon, one of the moſt ſouthern cities of Judah, and who had a great number of flocks on Mount Carmel, not far from Maon. This Carmel is very different from the Mount Carmel, on the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, between Dora and Ptolemais. While David, fearing Saul, was obliged to hide in the wilderneſs of Paran, and near to Carmel, he always took care that none of his followers ſhould injure Nabal, but rather ſhould aſſiſt his ſhepherds and herdſmen. Being therefore informed that Nabal was come thither to ſhear his ſheep, he ſent ten young men of his company, to make his compliments to him, and to aſk him civilly for ſomething to refreſh himſelf and followers. But Nabal anſwered them, "Who is David, and who is the ſon of Jeſſe? We are peſtered every day with ſervants that run away from their maſters. Shall I take the fleſh of my ſheep, and the proviſions I have brought for my own ſervants, and ſhall I give them away to ſtrangers?" The men that David had ſent went back, and acquainted him with Nabal's churliſh anſwer.

Then David in anger cauſed four hundred of his people to arm themſelves, and went with a reſolution to put Nabal and all his family to the ſword. But in the interim one of Nabal's ſervants having acquainted his wife Abigail with what had paſſed, who was a wiſe and prudent woman, and having juſtified alſo David's people, ſhe preſently prepared proviſions and refreſhments, with which ſhe met and appeaſed David. Abigail then returned to Nabal, and found him in his houſe making a feaſt as it were for a prince. His heart ſwelled with joy, and he was quite drunk. Abigail ſaid nothing to him till morning; but after he had ſlept, ſhe told him of the danger he had been in. This account had ſuch effect upon him, that he became as immovable as a ſtone, and his heart was ſo ſtruck with fear, that he died in ten days. Nabal in the original ſignifies a fool or madman. 1 Sam. xxv. 25, &c.

NABATHEANS, Ναβαταῖοι, that propheſy, that ſpeak, or bring forth fruit. See NEBAJOTH.

NABATHEANS, or Nabathenians, Arabians deſcendants from Næbajoth. Their country is called Nabathæa, and extends from the Euphrates to the Red-Sea. Not that the Nabatheans are the only inhabitants of this vaſt tract of land, but they are the principal. Their chief cities are, are, Petra, the capital of Arabia Deſerta, Medaba, and ſome others. The wandering manner of life that they lead, with their wives, children and cattle, and the liberty they enjoy, without being accountable to any body, appears to them to be the greateſt bleſſing of life. Their chief ſubſtance conſiſts in cattle. Iſaiah promiſes Jeruſalem, that the fat rams of Kedar and Nebaioth ſhould be brought into the temple of the Lord, and offered upon his altar,

The Nabatheans are hardly known in Scripture, but ſince the time of the Maccabees. During the wars of the Jews againſt the Syrians, and while almoſt all other nations about them were againſt the Hebrews, the Nabatheans alone ſhewed them friendſhip. Judas Maccabæus going to the aſſiſtance of his brethren in the country of Gilead, was very well received by the Nabathites. Some time after Jonathan Maccabæus ſent his brother John to the Nabatheans, to conduct and depoſit with them the heavy baggage of his army; but the inhabitants of Medaba, or Nadabatha, took John as he went, ſlew him, and ſeized his carriages. Diodorus Siculus places among the Nabatheans the lake Aſphaltites, the palm-trees and gardens of balm that are near there, and the city of Petra. Their country extended northward as far as Libanus. Dionyſius the geographer places the Nabatheates at the foot of Libanus. Joſephus ſays that Jonathan Maccabæus being in the country of Emath, and having driven his enemies beyond the river Eleuthera, he penetrated into Arabia, beat the Nabatheans, and came to Damaſcus. Epiphanius ſays, that the Ebionites came chiefly out of the country of the Nabatheans, and from Paneas.

NABLUM, in Hebrew, Nebel. Vide MUSIC.

NABONASSAR, king of Babylon, the ſame as Baladan, Berodach, or Merodach-baladan, Iſai. xxxix. 1. and 2 Kings xx. 12. alſo called Beleſis, or Beleſſus, in Agathias and Alexander Polyhiſtor. But is moſt known by the name of Nabonaſſar, given him by Hipparchus, Ptolemy, and Cenſorinus. He reigned fourteen years at Babylon, from A. M. 3257, to 3272, and had Nabius for his ſucceſſor. The epocha or æra of Nabonaſſar, ſo famous among chronologers, falls on A. M. 3967 of the Julian period, 3257 from the creation, 747 years before A. D. See BALADAN.

NABONADIUS, or Nabonides, called Labynetus by Herodotus, Nabannidoch by Abydenus, and Belſhazzar by Daniel. He ſucceeded Laboroſoarchod, who is probably the ſame as Evilmerodach, king of Babylon, A. M. 3449, ante A. D. 555. He reigned ſeventeen years according to Beroſus, and according to the canon of Ptolemy. Under him Babylon was taken by Cyrus, A. M. 3466, ante A. D. 538. Vide BELSHAZZAR and NERIGLISSOR.

NABOPOLASSAR. See NEBUCHADNEZZAR II.

NABOTH, נבת. See NEBAJOTH.

NABOTH, an Iſraelite of Jezreel, who lived under Ahab king of Iſrael, and had a fine vineyard in Jezreel, near the king's palace. This prince required of him, either to ſell him his vineyard, in order to make a kitchen garden of it, or to exchange it for a better. But Naboth declined the offer. Ahab returning into his houſe, threw himſelf on his bed, and refuſed to eat. Jezebel his wife took on herſelf to procure this vineyard; ſhe writ letters in Ahab's name, ſealed them with the king's ſeal, and ſent them to the elders of Jezreel, directing them to publiſh a faſt, make Naboth ſit among the chief of the people, ſuborn againſt him two ſons of Belial, or two falſe witneſſes, who may depoſe, that Naboth has blaſphemed againſt God and the king. (The text has it, that Naboth hath bleſſed God and the king; but it is agreed, that to bleſs is here put for to curſe, as in ſeveral other paſſages. See Job i. 5. ii. 9. The holy text, out of reſpect, avoids even the mention of the word curſe, when applied to God.) [query, "the Gods, even Moloch"] Accordingly, Naboth was condemned and ſtoned for the ſuppoſed crime. 1 Kings xxi.

Jezebel immediately went to the king, and bid him take and enjoy Naboth's vineyard. Ahab inſtantly departed from Samaria, and came to Jezreel to take poſſeſſion of Naboth's eſtate. But the Lord commanded the prophet Elijah to threaten him and Jezebel with the moſt ignominious deaths, and treatment after death. See AHAB, JEZEBEL, and 2 Kings ix. 10.

NACHON, נכן, prepared; from כון cun: otherwiſe, certain, ſolid; from כן cen.

NACHON. Mention is made of the floor of Nachon, 2 Samuel vi. 6. So that Nachon muſt be the name of a man, who is known by no other paſſage of Scripture. When the oxen which brought the ark arrived at his threſhing-floor, they began to ſtumble; which put the ark in danger of being overturned. Others tranſlate the Hebrew by the prepared floor, i. e. the floor of Obed-edom, which was near, prepared to place the ark therein. 1 Chronicles, xiii. 9. reads the floor of Chidon, inſtead of the floor of Nachon. The Chaldee has only in the place prepared. This place, wherever it was, either was in Jeruſalem, or very near to Jeruſalem, and to the houſe of Obed-edom, which was in this city.

NADAB, נדב, free and voluntary gift; from נדב nadab: otherwiſe, prince; from נדיב nadib.

I. NADAB, ſon of Aaron, and brother of Abihu. He offered incenſe to the Lord with ſtrange, i. e. common, fire; not with that which had been miraculouſly lighted on the altar of burnt-offerings. Therefore he was ſlain by the Lord, together with his brother. Lev. x. 2. It is gueſſed, that perhaps theſe two brothers had ſuffered themſelves to be ſurprized by wine. Vide ABIHU.

II. NADAB, ſon of Jeroboam I. king of Iſrael. He ſucceeded his father in the kingdom of the ten tribes, A. M. 5050, ante A. D. 954. He reigned but two years. He was aſſaſſinated while beſieging Gibbethon, by Baaſha ſon of Ahijah, of the tribe of Iſſachar, who uſurped his kingdom. The Scripture ſays of Nadab, that he did evil in the ſight of the Lord. 1 Kings xv. 25.

III. NADAB, ſon of Shammai, and father of Seled and Appaim, 1 Chron. ii. 30.

NAGGE, Ναγγαὶ, brightneſs: from נגה nagah.

NAHALAL, נהלל, נהלל, he that is praiſed, or that glitters; from הלל hillul: or otherwiſe, that becomes ſtrong; from הלל halal.

NAHALAL, or Naalol, or Nachalal, a city of Zebulon, Joſh. xix. 15. yielded to the Levites, and given to the family of Merari, Joſh. xxi. 35. The children of Zebulon did not make themſelves compleat maſters of it, but permitted the Canaanites to dwell in it, Judg. i. 30. Its ſituation is not exactly known.

NAHALIEL, נחליאל, ναθαναὲλ, brook, vale, or inheritance of God, or God is my brook: from נחל nahal, a brook, &c. and from אל el, God.

NAHALIEL, an encampment of the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs. From Mattanah they went to Nahaliel, and thence to Bamoth, Numb. xxi. 19. Euſebius ſays, that Nahaliel is upon the Arnon, and that Mattanah is beyond the Arnon towards the eaſt, twelve miles from Medaba. Nahaliel ſignifies, My river is the Lord.

NAHAM, נחם, ναὲμ, conſolation, or repentance; from נחם nacham: otherwiſe, who guides them; from נחה nachah, to guide: or their reſt; from נוח nuach, to reſt, and the pronoun מ am, them, or their.

NAHAMANI, נחמני, ναιμανὶ, comforter, or that comforts me, or that ſpreads; from נחם nacham.

NAHARAI, נחרי, ἀραὶ, my noſtrils, my noſe: otherwiſe, hoarſe, dry, hot, angry; from חרר charar: or, according to the Syriac, choaked.

NAHARAI, a native of Beeroth, a man of great valour, and armour-bearer to Joab, 2 Sam. xxiii. 37.

NAHASH, נחש, ſnake, or ſerpent, or that foretels, or braſs: from נחש nicheſh.

I. NAHASH, or Naas, king of the Ammonites. He attacked Jabeſh-Gilead a month after the election of Saul as king of Iſrael. The Hebrews of Jabeſh finding themſelves not ſtrong enough to reſiſt Nahaſh, offered to capitulate. Nahaſh propoſed to pull out every one's right eye, and to make it a reproach in Iſrael. The elders of Jabeſh deſired a truce of ſeven days. They ſent therefore to Gibeah, where Saul reſided, and their meſſengers declared their diſtreſs: Saul happening to return juſt then out of the fields, ſeeing the people weep, inquired the reaſon of it. They then acquainted him with the meſſage they had received from the inhabitants of Jabeſh, at which, being moved by the Spirit of God, he cut two of his oxen in pieces, and ſent them expreſs throughout Iſrael; proclaiming, that ſo ſhould the cattle of all thoſe be treated, who did not come preſently to follow Saul and Samuel. The people ſtruck with conſternation, appeared all at the place appointed: Saul ſent back the meſſengers to Jabeſh-Gilead, and bid them expect relief on the morrow. As ſoon as it was evening, Saul took all his army over Jordan; and marching all night, by break of day attacked the camp of the Ammonites; (this might be about the fourth day of the ceſſation granted to Jabeſh) with ſo much fury, that he intirely routed them. Thus was this war finiſhed at once, and Joſephus ſays, that Nahaſh himſelf was killed in the battle. 1 Sam. xi.

II. NAHASH, king of the Ammonites, and a friend to David; probably ſon to the above. We know nothing of the circumſtances of his life, nor on what occaſion a friendſhip commenced between him and David. It is likely however, that this might happen during Saul's perſecution of David, when he was forced to abſcond on the other ſide Jordan. Probably Shobi, ſon of Nahaſh, of Rabbah the capital of the Ammonites, is a ſon of the ſame Nahaſh. 2 Sam. xvii. 27. xxii. For the imprudence of his ſon Hanun, See HANUN.

III. NAHASH, father of Abigail and Zeruiah: is thought to be the ſame as Jeſſe, father of David. Compare 2 Sam. xvii. 25. and 1 Chron. ii. 13, 15, 16. Nahaſh, or Nachaſh, ſignifies a ſerpent, a crafty fellow. This perhaps might be the ſurname of Jeſſe the father of David. Others think that Nahaſh is the name of Jeſſe's wife; but the firſt explication ſeems to be beſt.

IV. NAHASH, father of Shobi, friend of David, 2 Sam. xvii. 27. Probably the ſame as Nahaſh II. above.

V. NAHASH, or Ir-nahaſh, a city of Judah, peopled by the deſcendants of Tehinnah.

NAHATH, נחת, ναχὼθ, reſt; from נוח nuach: otherwiſe, guide; from נחה nachah, to conduct: otherwiſe, deſcent, according to the Syriac.

NAHATH,

NAHATH, ſon of Ruel, and grandſon of Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 13.

NAHBI, נחבי, my well-beloved; from חבה chabah, well-beloved, and the pronoun י i, my: otherwiſe, my guide, or my reſt; from נוח nuach, to reſt, or from נחה nachah, to guide, and the conjunction ב with, and the pronoun י i, my.

NAHBI, or Nahabi, ſon of Vophſi, one of the ſpies ſent by Moſes, Numb. xiii. 14.

NAHLAT, the name of the wife of Ham, ſon of Noah, according to the Orientals.

NAHOR, נחור, hoarſe, dry, hot, angry; from חרר charar; or choaked, according to the Syriac.

I. NAHOR, or Nachor, ſon of Serug, born A. M. 1849, ante A. D. 2155. He died aged one hundred and forty-eight years; his ſon was Terah, the father of Abraham, whom he begat at the age of twenty-nine years, Gen. xi. 22, 24.

II. NAHOR, ſon of Terah, and brother of Abraham, Gen. xi. 26. The year of his birth is not exactly known, nor that of his death. Nahor married Milcah the daughter of Haran, by whom he had ſeveral ſons, Huz, Buz, Kemuel, Keſed, Hazo, Pildaſh, Jidlaph, and Bethuel. Nahor fixed his habitation at Haran, which is therefore called the city of Nahor, Gen. xxiv. 10.

NAHASSON, or Naſhon, ſon of Aminadab; head of the tribe of Judah, at the Exodus. He was the firſt that made his offering to the tabernacle of the Lord, in the ſecond year from their leaving Egypt. He offered a baſon, the weight of which was one hundred and thirty ſhekels of ſilver, a plate weighing ſeventy ſhekels, and a cup of ten ſhekels of ſilver. He offered alſo a bull, a ram, and a lamb, for burnt-offerings; a goat for a ſin-offering, two bulls, five ſheep, five kids, and five lambs, for a peace-offering. Numb. vii. 12, 13.

NAHUM, נחום, ναὸμ, comforter, penitent, or their guide. See NAHAM.

NAHUM, the ſeventh of the twelve minor prophets, native of Elkoſhai, a little village of Galilee, whoſe ruins were in being in the time of St. Jerome. However ſome think Elkoſhai is rather the name of his father, and that the place of his birth was Begabor, or Bethabara, beyond Jordan. Heretofore they uſed to ſhew the tomb of this prophet at a village called Bethogabre, now called Giblin, near Emmaus. The Chaldee calls him Nahum of Beth-koſhi, or of Beth ketzi: but the ſituation of this place is as much unknown as that of Elkoſhai. The particular circumſtances of Nahum's life are altogether unknown. His prophecy conſiſts of three chapters, which make up but one diſcourſe, wherein he foretels the deſtruction of Nineveh. He deſcribes it in ſo lively and pathetic a manner, that he ſeems to have been on the very ſpot.

Opinions are divided as to the time in which he propheſied. Joſephus ſays, he foretold the fall of Nineveh one hundred and fifteen years before it happened, which will bring the time of Nahum under king Ahaz. The Jews ſay, that he propheſied under Manaſſeh. Clemens Alexandrinus puts him between Daniel and Ezekiel, and conſequently during the captivity. But we incline to St. Jerome's opinion, that he foretold the deſtruction of Nineveh in the time of Hezekiah, and after the war of Sennacherib in Egypt, mentioned by Beroſus. Nahum ſpeaks plainly of the taking of Noamon, a city of Egypt, of the haughtineſs of Rabſhakeh, of the defeat of Sennacherib; and he ſpeaks of them as things that were paſſed. He ſuppoſes that Judah was ſtill in their own country, and that they there celebrated their feſtivals. He ſpeaks of the captivity, and of the diſperſion of the ten tribes. All theſe marks convince us, that Nahum cannot be placed before the fifteenth year of Hezekiah, ſince the expedition of Sennacherib againſt that prince was in the fourteenth year of his reign.

And as the taking of Nineveh foretold by him, cannot be the firſt ſiege of that place, under Sardanapalus long before; (i. e. A. M. 3257) it muſt be neceſſarily underſtood of the ſecond ſiege of that city, by Nabopolaſſar and Aſtyages, A. M. 3378, ante A. D. 626, which comes to the ſixteenth year of king Joſiah, under whom St. Jerome places the deſtruction of Nineveh. Tobit ſays, that this city was taken by Nebuchadnezzar and Ahaſuerus, giving the name of Nebuchadnezzar to Nabopolaſſar, and to Aſtyages that of Ahaſuerus.

This prophet gives us a fine deſcription of the deſtruction of Nineveh. He ſays that this city ſhould be ruined by a deluge of waters, which ſhould overflow it, and demoliſh its walls. Diodorus Siculus and Athenæus relate, that during the time this city was beſieged by Beleſis, and by Arbaces, under Sardanapalus, the river Tigris ſwelled in ſuch a manner, that it overthrew twenty furlongs of the walls of Nineveh. But as the ſiege here mentioned by Nahum happened after the taking of Nineveh under Sardanapalus, the ſame thing might happen to Nineveh at the ſecond and laſt ſiege under Nebuchadnezzar and Aſtyages. Probably the beſiegers directed the courſe of the waters, to the ſame effect as before. See NINEVEH.

The time of his death is not known. The Greek meneologies, and the Latin martyrologies, place his his feſtival December 1. Petrus Natalis however places it December 24. which he ſays was the day of his death; without acquainting us from whence he had learned that circumſtance.

NAIM, Ναὶμ, or Nain, Luke vii. 11. beauty, &c. See NAHAM.

I. NAIN, or Naim, a city of Paleſtine, where Jeſus Chriſt reſtored the widow's ſon to life, as they were carrying him out to be buried. Euſebius ſays, this city was in the neighbourhood of Endor and Scythopolis. Elſewhere he ſays, it was two miles from Tabor, ſouth. The brook Kiſhon ran between Tabor and Nain.

II. NAIN, a city or town of Idumea, where Simon, ſon of Gioras fortified himſelf. Joſeph de Bello, lib. v. cap. 7.

NAIOTH, ניות, ναβὰθ, beauties; from נאה naah: otherwiſe, habitations, abodes; from נוה navah.

NAIOTH, or Najoth, near to Ramah, where David withdrew to avoid the violence of Saul. Here Samuel with the ſons of the prophets dwelt, 1 Sam. xix. 23.

NAIS, a city in the great plain, probably the ſame as Nain. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5.

NAKEDNESS, Nudity. Theſe terms, beſides their ordinary and literal meaning, ſometimes ſignify void of ſuccour, diſarmed. So, after the worſhipping of the golden calf, the Iſraelites found themſelves naked in the midſt of their enemies.

Nakedneſs of the feet was a token of reſpect. Moſes put off his ſhoes when he approached the burning buſh. Moſt commentators are of opinion, that the prieſts ſerved in the tabernacle with their feet naked, and afterwards in the temple. In the enumeration that Moſes makes of the habit and ornaments of the prieſts, he no where mentions any dreſs for the feet. The Talmudiſts teach, that if they had but ſtepped with their feet upon a cloth, a ſkin, or even upon the foot of one of their companions, their ſervice would have been unlawful. That as the pavement of the temple was of marble, the prieſts uſed to incur ſeveral inconveniencies, becauſe of the nakedneſs of their feet; to prevent which in the ſecond temple, there was a room in which the pavement was warm, that they might there warm their feet. Alſo the frequent ablutions appointed them in the temple ſeem to imply, that their feet were naked.

Some alſo maintain, that the common Iſraelites might not enter this holy place, till they had put off their ſhoes, and cleaned their feet. To this purpoſe are applied theſe words of Eccleſiaſtes, v. 1. Keep thy foot when thou goeſt to the houſe of God. Take care that your feet be clean. Rabbi Solomon, upon theſe words of Leviticus xix. 30. Ye ſhall keep my ſabbaths, and reverence my ſanctuary, underſtands the obligation of appearing before the Lord with naked feet. Maimonides ſays expreſsly, that it was never allowed to enter the houſe of God on the holy mountain with ſhoes on, or with a ſtaff, or with their ordinary cloaths on, or with dirty feet. Some think our Saviour alludes to this cuſtom, when he ſays to his diſciples, Provide neither two coats, neither ſhoes, nor yet ſtaves, Matth. x. 9, 10.

The Turks at this day do not enter their moſques, till after they have waſhed their feet, and their hands, and have put off the outward covering of their legs. The Chriſtians of Ethiopia enter not into their churches except with their feet bare. The Indian Brachmans have the ſame reſpect for their pagodas. Solinus ſays, cap. 19. that no one can enter the temple of Diana of Crete, till he has made his legs bare. Juvenal ſays, Sat. vi. that even the kings of the Jews kept their Sabbaths with naked feet.

Exercent ubi feſta mero pede Sabbatha Reges.

The nakedneſs of the feet is ſometimes put in Scripture for that nakedneſs which modeſty forbids. With-hold thy feet from being unſhod, ſays Jeremiah, ii. 25. Take care of diſcovering your feet, or of falling into any ſhameful action. And Jerem. xiii. 26. Therefore will I diſcover thy ſkirts upon thy face, that thy ſhame may appear. The feet expreſs what delicacy would conceal. Lam. i. 9. Sordes ejus in pedibus ejus, & aqua pedum. Vide FEET.

To uncover the nakedneſs of any one, is commonly put for a ſhameful and unlawful conjunction, or an inceſtuous marriage. Ignominiam carnis ſuæ nudavit. Levit. xx. 19. And Ezekiel xvi. 37. Nudabo ignominiam tuam. And again, Eras nuda & confuſione plena.

Nakedneſs is ſometimes put for being ill clad. Saul continued naked among the prophets; i. e. having only his under cloaths on. Iſaiah receives orders from the Lord to go naked; i. e. cloathed as a ſlave, half clad. Thus it is recommended to cloath the naked, i. e. ſuch as are ill cloathed. St. Paul ſays, that he was in cold, in nakedneſs; i. e. in poverty, and want of raiment.

Naked is put for diſcovered, known, manifeſt. So Job, xxvi. 6. Hell is naked before him. The ſepulchre, the unſeen ſtate, is open to the eyes of God. St. Paul ſays in the ſame ſenſe; Neither is there any creature that is not manifeſt in his ſight; but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. Heb. iv. 13.

The nakedneſs of Adam and Eve was unknown, [i. e. unfelt] by them before they ſinned. They were not aſhamed at it, becauſe concupiſcence and and irregular desires had not yet excited the flesh against the Spirit. They were exempt from whatever indecency might happen among us, on occasion of nakedness.

Some interpreters translate the text of Moses, Adam and Eve were wise, or crafty; for the Hebrew word Harom has sometimes this signification. But it is plain from the sequel of Moses's discourse, that he meant it of bodily nakedness; for he says, that to hide their nakedness they made themselves aprons of fig-leaves. The Pagans believe that in the golden age all men went naked, Plato in Politic, p. 272.

NAME. The name of God. See JEHOVAH. The name without any other addition, signifies the name of the Lord, which was not pronounced out of respect. The Israelitish woman's son blasphemed the Name, Levit. xxiv. 11. If any one blasphemed the sacred name, he was taken out of the camp, and all who heard him laid their hands upon his head, and the people stoned him.

The name of God often stands for God himself, his power, or majesty. Our assistance, or strength and hope is in the name of God, in his goodness, power, &c. The Hebrews believe that Moses, that Jesus Christ, and the prophets, performed their miracles by pronouncing the name of God, the true pronunciation of which was known to them, though at this day (they say) it is intirely forgot.

To invoke the name of God, to serve in the name of God, to bless in the name of the Lord, to build an house in the name of the Lord; in all these expressions the name is put for the Lord himself. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXVIII.

To take the name of God in vain, Exod. xx. 7. is to swear falsely, or without occasion, or to mingle the name of God in our discourses, or oaths, either falsely, rashly, wantonly, unnecessarily, or presumptuously. God forbids to make mention of the names of other gods, Exod. xxiii. 13. It is doing them too much honour to swear by their names, to take them as witnesses of what we say, or affirm, as if they were really something. The Hebrews hardly ever pronounced the name Baal; they disfigured it, by saying Mephiboseth, or Meriboseth, instead of Mephibaal, or Meribaal; where Boseth signifies something shameful or contemptible: instead of saying Elohim, they said Elilim, gods of filthiness.

To give a name is a token of command and authority. A father gives names to his children, a master to his slaves, to his brute creatures. It is said Gen. ii. 23. that Adam gave name to his wife, and to all the animals, and that the names he gave them became their true name. God changed the name of Abram, Jacob, and Sarai. This expresses his absolute dominion over all men, and his particular benevolence towards those, whom he receives more especially into the number of his own. Hence it was that he gave a name, even before their birth, to some persons whom he appointed, and who belonged to him in a particular manner. So he gave a name to Jedediah, or Solomon son of David, to the Messiah, to John the Baptist, &c.

God speaking to Moses, promises he will send his angel before him; and says, my name is in him. Exod. xxiii. 21. He shall act, he shall speak, he shall punish in my name; he shall bear my name, he shall be my ambassador, he shall receive the same honours as belong to me. And in effect, the angel that spake to Moses, that appeared to him in the bush, that gave him the law on Mount Sinai, speaks and acts always as God himself; and Moses always gives him the name of God. Thus says the Lord, and the Lord spake to Moses, saying,

To know any one by his name, I know thee by name, Exod. xxxiii. 12. expresses a distinction, a friendship, a particular familiarity. The kings of the East had little communication with their subjects; and hardly ever appeared in public. So that when they knew their servants by name, vouchsafed to speak to them, to call them, and to admit them into their presence, it was a great mark of favour.

Those that in the assemblies were called by their names, per nomina vocabantur, Numb. xvi. 2. were the principal of the people, the heads of tribes; or who had some great employment, or particular dignity.

On these occasions they called thus; Aaron and his posterity, Hur and his family, Caleb and those under him, &c. They called by their name only the first and chief of the people. I have called thee by thy name, Isai. xliii. 1. xlv. 4. may also signify, I have appointed thee by name to this office; I have changed your name, to shew that I took you into my service; so Nebuchadnezzar gave new names to Daniel and his companions. God speaking of the fixed place where his temple should be built, calls it The place which the Lord shall choose to place his name there. Deut. xiv. 23. xvi. 2. That there his name should be called on. That this place should have the honour of bearing the name of the Lord, of being consecrated to his service, and worship. These expressions shew the veneration of the Hebrews for whatever in any wise belonged to God.

Name is often put for renown or reputation. The name of Joſhua became famous over all the country, Joſh. vi. 27. And God ſaid to David, when he reproached him with the crime he had committed with Bathſheba, I have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth. 2 Sam. vii. 9. I have given you honour and reputation, equal to that of the greateſt of monarchs.

To raiſe up the name of the dead, Ruth iv. 5, 10, &c. is ſaid of the brother of a man who died without children, when this brother marries the widow of the deceaſed, and revives his name in Iſrael, by means of the children which he may beget: theſe are deemed to be children of the deceaſed. In a contrary ſenſe to this, to blot out the name of any one, is to exterminate his memory; to extirpate his race, his children, works or houſes, and in general whatever may continue his name on the earth. Thou haſt deſtroyed the wicked, thou haſt put out their name for ever and ever. Pſal. ix. 5. The name of the wicked ſhall rot. Prov. x. 7. It ſhall ſtink, and if it be at all remembered, it ſhall be only with abhorrence and deteſtation.

Iſaiah iv. 1. deſcribes a time of calamity and diſgrace in Iſrael, wherein men ſhould be very ſcarce: he ſays, In that day ſeven women ſhall take hold of one man, ſaying, we will eat our own bread, and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by thy name, to take away our reproach. Take us for wives, and let us be called your ſpouſes. The Lord complains in Ezekiel, that his ſpouſes (Judah and Iſrael) are become proſtitutes, though they bore his name; that they have defiled his holy name, which they bore as his ſpouſes, by abominations, and by idolatry.

God often complains that the falſe prophets propheſied in his name, Jerem. xiv. 14, 15. xxvii. 15, &c. Jeſus Chriſt ſays, Matth. vii. 22. that in the day of judgment many ſhall ſay, Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name, and in thy name have caſt out devils, and in thy name done many wonderful works? he ſays, Mark ix. 41. whoſoever ſhall give a cup of cold water in his name, ſhall not loſe his reward; and he that receives a prophet or a juſt man, in the name of a prophet or juſt man, ſhall receive a recompence in proportion to his good intention. Matth. x. 41. In all theſe inſtances the word name is put for the perſon, for his ſervice, his ſake, his authority.

So names of men is ſometimes put for heads or perſons. Rev. iii. 4. Thou haſt a few names even in Sardis, which have not defiled their garments. And Rev. xi. 13. Vulg. Occiſi ſunt in terræ motu nomina hominum ſeptem millia. Seven thouſand men periſhed in the earthquake,—names of men: Gr. perhaps this ſhould be conſidered as implying men of name, perſons of conſequence, nobles, titulados, &c.

NAOMI, נעמי, beautiful, agreeable.

NAOMI, or Noemi, wife of Elimelech; who retired into the land of Moab on occaſion of a famine in Judæa; where Elimelech dying, Naomi ſettled her two ſons in marriage, Mahlon to Ruth, and Chilion to Orpah. Theſe two young men dying alſo, without children, Naomi reſolved to return into Judæa. Her two daughters-in-law were deſirous of returning with her, but ſhe diſſuaded them. Orpah remained behind, but Ruth would accompany Naomi to Bethlehem. Ruth i. 1, 2, 3, &c. When they came thither, the report was ſoon ſpread in the neighbourhood, and the people came to welcome her. She told them, that they muſt no longer call her Naomi, i. e. fair; but Mara, i. e. bitterneſs. For the Lord, ſays ſhe, has heaped trouble upon me. I went away full, but the Lord has brought me back empty and deſolate.

One day as Ruth went out to glean in the fields, ſhe happened to enter that of Boaz, who encouraged her to follow his reapers, and made her eat among his harveſters. At her return home, Naomi informed her, that Boaz was her near kinſman: and ſhe adviſed the procedure of Ruth ſo warily, that ſhe brought it about at laſt, that Boaz married Ruth. Vide BOAZ and RUTH.

By this marriage Ruth had a ſon called Obed; on which the women of Bethlehem congratulated Naomi. The exact time is not known, in which this hiſtory of Ruth and Naomi happened; but we know that between the time of the marriage of Salmon with Rahab of Jericho, and the birth of David, are three hundred and ſixty-ſix years, which are filled up only with four perſons, Salmon, Boaz, Obed, and Jeſſe. So that each of theſe muſt have lived long.

NAPHISH, נפיש, the ſoul: from נפש napheſh: otherwiſe, he that reſts, or refreſhes himſelf, that reſpires: according to the Syriac, that multiplies.

NAPHISH, or Naphis, ſon of Iſhmael. Gen. xxv. 15. and 1 Chron. i. 31.

NAPHTHA, a ſort of Bitumen found about Babylon. Daniel ſays, Dan. iii. 46. Vulg. that they heated the furnace, in which Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego were to be caſt, with naphtha, pitch and other combuſtible matter. It is thought Noah uſed naphtha or bitumen, to coat the outſide of the ark, Gen. vi. 14. and that the walls of the tower of Babel were cemented with a ſort of mortar, in which naphtha was a chief ingredient. Gen. xi. 3. We are aſſured that naphtha is ſo ſubtle and inflammable, that it even attracts the fire to it, when it (i. e. its vapour) comes within a certain diſtance. Strabo ſays, lib. 15. it cannot be quenched by common water. Pliny relates, that Medea burnt a woman of whom ſhe had conceived a jealouſy, by giving her a crown dipped in naphtha, which took fire as ſhe approached the altar, to ſacrifice.

is

Naphtha is a kind of petroleum, or rock-oil, found in ſeveral parts of the world, ſometimes of one colour, ſometimes of another, according to the nature of the rock, or of the ſoil that produces it; ſometimes more liquid, ſometimes leſs, always very inflammable, ſulphureous, and clammy. The word Naphtha is derived from the Chaldee or Hebrew Noph or Naph, to drop or diſtil. It is procured in great quantities from certain ſprings, near the city Hit in Chaldæa, Herbelot. Diction. Orient. p. 452, 656, 740. Alſo in the mountains of Farganah, in the province of Trantoxane. To diſtinguiſh naphtha from pitch, the Turks call it black maſtick. There is a naphtha petræa, which diſtils from rocks: it is found in the duchy of Modena. There is ſome alſo about Raguſa, and even in ſeveral provinces of France, as Auvergne, &c. The naphtha of France is ſoft as pitch, liquid, black, of an ungrateful ſcent. That of Italy is a kind of petroleum, or a clear oil, ſometimes white, ſometimes red, ſometimes yellow, ſometimes green, and ſometimes black. Iſaac Voſſius has a Diſſertation on Naphtha. [In England, the common naphtha is Barbadoes tar, which is a rock oil brought from that iſland: I have never been able to procure the true naphtha.]

NAPHTALI, נפתלי, compariſon, likeneſs: otherwiſe, that ſtruggles, or fights: or to twine, wrench; from פתל pathal.

NAPHTALI, or Nephtali, ſixth ſon of Jacob, by Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid. Rachel ſaid, with great wreſtlings have I wreſtled with my ſiſter, and I have prevailed. Gen. xxx. 8. "I have ſtrove with her like wreſtlers, who endeavour to throw one another down; I have made great efforts and at laſt have obtained the victory." We know but few particulars of the life of Naphtali. His ſons were Jahzeel, Guni, Jezer, and Shillem. Gen. xlvi. 24. The patriarch Jacob, when he gave his bleſſing to his ſon Naphtali, ſaid to him; Naphtali is a hind let looſe; he giveth goodly words. Gen. xlix. 21. Moſt of the Rabbins and commentators apply this to Barak, who was of the tribe of Naphtali, and who at firſt ſhewed the fear of a hind, by refuſing to march againſt the Canaanites, unleſs the propheteſs Deborah would go with him; but he afterwards ſhewed that he imitated the ſwiftneſs of a hind in purſuit of the enemy. Judg. iv. 6. He ſignalized his eloquence alſo in that ſublime canticle he compoſed with Deborah, to give thanks to God for their victory.

The LXX. give another rendering to this text; Naphtali is as a tree that puts forth young branches, the ſhoots of which are fine. This ſenſe ſeems to me as good, at leaſt, as the former. Jacob commends the fertility of Naphtali, and the beauty of his race. Naphtali had but four ſons, yet at the Exodus his tribe made up 53,400 men able to bear arms. Moſes in bleſſing the ſame tribe, ſays, Deut. xxxiii. 23. O Naphtali, ſatisfied with favour, and full with the bleſſing of the Lord, poſſeſs thou the weſt and the ſouth. [Vulgate, The ſea and the ſouth; which the Hebrew will admit.] i. e. the ſea of Genneſaret, which was ſouth of the inheritance of this tribe. His ſoil was very fruitful in corn and oil. His limits were extended into upper and lower Galilee, having Jordan eaſt, Aſher and Zebulun weſt, Libanus north, and Iſſachar ſouth.

The tribe of Naphtali encamped in the wilderneſs on the north-ſide of the tabernacle, between Dan and Manaſſeh. Numb. ii. 25, 26, 27, &c. After the diviſion, by Joſhua, of the Land of Promiſe, the children of Naphtali did not deſtroy all the Canaanites in their country, but contented themſelves with making them tributary. Judg. i. 33. The Naphtalites being on the frontiers to the north, were firſt invaded, and firſt made captives by the kings of Aſſyria. 2 Kings xv. 29. A. M. 3345, ante A. D. 659. Iſaiah ix. 1. foretold to them, that they ſhould ſee the light of the Meſſiah, and ſhould be firſt illuminated by the light of the goſpel. And indeed our Saviour preached oftener and longer in Galilee, and particularly in the tribe of Naphtali, than in any other part of Judea, Matt. iv. 13, 15.

NAPHTUHIM, נפתוחים, νεφθαείμ, openings.

NAPHTUHIM, or Nephſuim, fourth ſon of Mizraim, Gen. x. 13. He dwelt in Egypt, and probably peopled that part of Ethiopia, between Siene and Meroe, and of which Napata or Napatea was the capital.

NARCISSUS, Ναρκίσσος, aſtoniſhment, ſtupidity, ſurprize; from the Greek νάρκησις.

NARCISSUS. St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 11. ſays, Greet them of the houſhold of Narciſſus, which are in the Lord. This paſſage cannot prove that Narciſſus was a Chriſtian, any more than Phil. iv. 22. in which he ſends ſalutes from Cæſar's houſhold, i. e. probably, thoſe of Nero's family. Origen pretends, that this expreſſion, the houſhold of Narciſſus, proves that this family was not all Chriſtians. Grotius thinks that Narciſſus was a Pagan, but others will have him to have been a Chriſtian. But as theſe maintain him to have been Narciſſus, the famous freed-man of the emperor Claudius, they muſt certainly be miſtaken, ſince this Narciſſus never was a Chriſtian; and beſides, he was dead ſome years before St. Paul wrote this epiſtle. The Pſeudo-Ambroſius ſays, that ſome copies make Narciſſus to have been a prieſt, and that if St. Paul does not ſalute him, it is becauſe perhaps he then happened to be abſent. The Greeks ſay he was biſhop of Athens, and a martyr, give him the title of an apoſtle, and place him in the number of the ſeventy diſciples. Baronius has accordingly inſerted him in the Roman martyrology, October 31.

NASBAS, Ναβὰτ. See NEBAT.

NASBAS, or Nabath, a kinſman of Tobit. Tob. ix. 18.

NASI, נשׂי, a prince.

NASI, or Naſhi, i. e. prince. The Hebrews give this name to the heads of the tribes of the great families, and even to the princes of the people. At this day it is in a manner appropriated to ſignify the chief, the preſident of the Sanhedrim. Simon Maccabeus was honoured with this title, after he had become independent of the Greeks. He has the name of Naſi on his medals. The prince, or the Naſi, of the Sanhedrim, was the depoſitary of the oral law or tradition, which Moſes, according to the Rabbins, intruſted with the ſeventy elders, who made up that aſſembly. Thoſe who are of opinion, that the Sanhedrim has always ſubſiſted ſince its firſt inſtitution by Moſes, muſt alſo make the dignity of Naſi equally ancient: but thoſe who maintain the Sanhedrim to be much more modern, hold alſo the ſame of the office of Naſi. Some will have Eſdras to have firſt introduced this office, and that he annexed it to the family of David. When Hillel came from Babylon, under the reign of Herod, about thirty years before Jeſus Chriſt, he exerciſed this function with great ſplendour. After the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, this name of prince was changed into that of patriarch, or head of the captivity. It is neceſſary to know their titles, in order to underſtand the language of the Rabbins, and of ſuch authors as have treated of the republic, or other affairs, of the Jews.

NATHAN, נתן, who gives, or is given.

I. NATHAN, ſon of David and Bathſheba, 2 Sam. v. 14. 1 Chr. iii 5. Father of Mattatha. Luke iii. 31.

II. NATHAN, a famous prophet of the Lord, who lived under king David, and had a great ſhare in the confidence of that prince. His country is unknown, as alſo the time in which he began to propheſy. The firſt time the Scripture ſpeaks of him, is on occaſion of the deſign of David, to build a temple to the Lord. That prince diſcovered his intention to Nathan, who, not queſtioning but ſo pious a reſolution muſt proceed from God, bid him execute what his heart prompted him to. But the night following the Lord ordered Nathan to acquaint David, that this honour did not belong to David, but was reſerved for his ſon and ſucceſſor.

Several years after, when David had tranſgreſſed with Bathſheba, and had ſlain Uriah, by the ſword of the children of Ammon; the Lord ſent Nathan to reprove him. Nathan acquitted himſelf of this duty in a very prudent manner, by a parabolical ſtory of a rich man, who having many flocks and herds of his own, yet for the entertainment of a friend who was come to viſit him, would force a lamb from a poor man, which was the only one he had; David had hardly heard Nathan's ſtory, 'ere he exclaimed, the man is worthy of death! he ſhall reſtore the lamb fourfold. Then Nathan applied his parable to David himſelf, "thou art the man, &c. You have taken by force the wife of Uriah the Hittite, and him have you ſlain by the ſword of the Ammonites. Therefore the ſword ſhall not depart from thy houſe," &c. 2 Sam. xi. xii.

David acknowledged his ſin to the prophet, crying out, I have ſinned againſt the Lord. Nathan to comfort him, aſſured him, that the Lord had mitigated his puniſhment, and that he himſelf ſhould not die. But becauſe he had given occaſion to the enemies of the Lord to blaſpheme, his ſon that was born of Bathſheba ſhould ſurely die. Bathſheba had a ſecond ſon, called Solomon, and the Lord ſent Nathan again to David, ordering him to call the name of the child Jedidiah, i. e. beloved of the Lord. Probably on this occaſion, God declared to David, that Solomon ſhould be his ſucceſſor; that he ſhould build him a temple, and ſhould be the heir of the promiſes made to him. See 2 Sam. vii. 12, &c.

David being arrived at a great age, Adonijah his ſon began to take upon him the ſtate and equipage of a king, in oppoſition to the intereſt of his brother Solomon. But neither the high-prieſt Zadok, nor the prophet Nathan, were in his intereſt. Adonijah gave a ſplendid entertainment to thoſe of his own faction, at which Nathan conceiving ſome jealouſy, immediately repaired to Bathſheba, the mother of Solomon, and bid her, at the peril of her own life, and that of her ſon, to follow his counſel. "Go preſently to king David, and ſay to him; O my Lord the king, have you not ſworn to me, that Solomon my ſon ſhould ſucceed to the crown? Why then does Adonijah reign?" While you are ſaying this, I will come in, and confirm what you ſay. Bathſheba adopted this advice, and while ſhe was yet ſpeaking to the king, Nathan comes, and being admitted, ſaid to him, "O my Lord the king, have you appointed Adonijah to be your ſucceſſor? Have you not often declared to me, that Solomon ſhould be your ſucceſſor?" Then David cauſed Zadok the high-prieſt, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada to be ſent for, and commanded them, with the prophet Nathan, to anoint Solomon king of Iſrael.

Adonijah

The time and manner of Nathan's death are not known. 1 Chronicles xxix. 29. give us to underſtand, that Gad and Nathan wrote the hiſtory of David. The ſame prophets had alſo regulated with David the order and diſpoſition of the miniſters of the temple. Laſtly, that Nathan and Ahijah of Shilo had written the hiſtory of Solomon, 2 Chron. ix. 29. In 1 Kings iv. 5, under the reign of Solomon we find mention of Azariah and Zabud, ſons of Nathan, who had conſiderable employments at court; but whether this was Nathan the prophet is not ſaid.

St. Epiphanius in his Lives of the Prophets, relates a ſtory taken from ſome apocryphal book, in which it is ſaid, that Nathan knowing by inſpiration that David was on the point of committing adultery, he ſet out immediately for Jeruſalem, hoping to prevent it. But the devil found means to delay him by the way, having placed before him a dead man quite expoſed. Nathan out of humanity, thought himſelf obliged to ſtay and bury him; in the mean time David committed his crime. Eupolemus in Euſebius makes Nathan an angel of the Lord, when he ſays, that the angel called Dianathan told David, that God did not think fit he ſhould build the temple.

III. NATHAN, father of Igal. 2 Sam. xxiii. 36. called Nathan brother of Joel, 1 Chron. xi. 38.

IV. NATHAN, father of Zabud, a prieſt. 1 Kings iv. 5.

V. NATHAN, father of Azariah, 1 Kings iv. 5.

VI. NATHAN, brother of Joel, 1 Chron. xi. 38. a champion in David's army. The ſame as Nathan father of Igal. 2 Sam. xxiii. 36.

VII. NATHAN, one of the chief of the Jews that returned from Babylon with Ezra, and was ſent by him to Iddo, that he might give them Nethinim for the temple ſervice, Ezra viii. 16.

NATHANAEL, נתנאל, gift of God; from נתן nathan, a gift, and אל el, God.

I. NATHANAEL, or Nethaneel, ſon of Zuar, head or prince of the tribe of Iſſachar at the Exodus. He made his oblations to the tabernacle, as chief of his tribe, Numb. i. 8. vii. 18, 19.

II. NATHANAEL, fourth ſon of Jeſſe of Bethlehem, and brother of David, 1 Chron. ii. 14.

III. NATHANAEL, ſon of Obededom, of the race of the prieſts. He ſounded a trumpet at the ſolemnity of bringing the ark to Jeruſalem, 1 Chron. xv. 24. xxvi. 4.

IV. NATHANAEL, a doctor of the law, ſent by Jehoſhaphat to inſtruct the people. 2 Chr. xvii. 7.

V. NATHANAEL, father of Shemaiah, a Levite. 1 Chron. xxiv. 6.

VI. NATHANAEL, a Levite in the time of king Joſiah, 2 Chron. xxxv. 9.

VII. NATHANAEL, one who returned from the captivity of Babylon, Ezra x. 22.

VIII. NATHANAEL, a diſciple of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. Philip meeting Nathanael told him, we have found the Meſſiah, deſcribed by Moſes and the prophets, in Jeſus of Nazareth, ſon of Joſeph. Nathanael aſked him, Can any thing good come out of Nazareth? Philip bid him come and ſee. Jeſus ſeeing Nathanael coming towards him, ſays, There's an Iſraelite indeed, without artifice, or diſguiſe. Nathanael aſked him, How can you know me? Jeſus anſwered, Before Philip called you, I ſaw you under the fig-tree. (It is believed that Jeſus ſaw him in ſpirit, as he was praying in ſecret under a fig-tree, and begging of God the manifeſtation of the Meſſiah.) Nathanael then ſaid to him, Maſter, thou art the ſon of God, and the king of Iſrael. Jeſus anſwered him, doſt thou believe, becauſe I ſaw thee under the fig-tree? Thou ſhalt ſee much greater things than theſe. John i. 46, &c. xxi. 2.

Many have thought that Nathanael was the ſame as St. Bartholomew, (vide BARTHOLOMEW.) The evangeliſts, who mention Bartholomew, ſay nothing of Nathanael, and St. John, who mentions Nathanael, takes no notice of Bartholomew. We read at the end of St. John's goſpel, that our Saviour after his reſurrection manifeſted himſelf to Peter, Thomas, Nathanael, and the ſons of Zebedee, as they were fiſhing in the lake of Geneſareth. We know no other circumſtances of the life of this holy man. Some believe he was the bridegroom at the marriage of Cana in Galilee.

NATHAN-MELECH, נתן-מלך, gift of the king; from נתן nathan, to give, and מלך melech, a king.

NATHAN-MELECH, an eunuch or officer of Manaſſeh, king of Judah. 2 Kings xxiii. 11. He had the care of the chariots conſecrated to the ſun.

NATURE. In Scripture the word nature expreſſes the natural courſe of things eſtabliſhed in the world. So a crime is ſaid to be againſt nature, becauſe it is contrary to the method eſtabliſhed by the Creator, Judg. xix. 24. Rom. i. 26.

Obſecro ne ſcelus hoc contra naturam operemini in virum. And St. Paul ſays, to ingraft a good olive-tree into a wild olive, is contrary to nature, Rom. xi. 24. the cuſtomary order of nature is thereby in ſome meaſure violated, and inverted.

Nature is alſo put for natural deſcent, Gal. ii. 15. We who are Jews by nature; i. e. Jews by birth, and not Gentiles. And Eph. ii. 3. We were by nature the children of wrath.

Nature alſo denotes common ſenſe, natural inſtinct. Doth not even nature itſelf teach you, that if a man have long hair, it is a ſhame to him? 1 Cor. xi. 14.

The nature of animals is that whereby they are diſtinguiſhed from other creatures, and from one another. Every nature of beaſts, birds, ſerpents, and other animals, has been tamed and ſubdued by human nature, James iii. 7.

St. Peter informs us, that Jeſus Chriſt has made us partakers of a divine nature; he has merited for us the character of children of God, and grace to practice godlineſs, &c. like our father who is in heaven.

NAVE, נן, ναυῆ. The Greek tranſlator of Eccleſiaſticus reads nave for nun. Nun ſignifies ſon, poſterity, durable and eternal; from נין nin: nave ſignifies beauty; from נאה naah: otherwiſe, habitation; from נוה navah.

NAZAREAN, Ναζωραῖοι, kept, or flower; from נצר natzar, to keep, to flouriſh.

NAZARETH, נצרת, ναζαρετ, guarded, or flouriſhing.

NAZARETH, a little city of Zebulun, in lower Galilee, weſt of Tabor, and eaſt of Ptolemais. Euſebius places it fifteen miles from Legio eaſt. This city is celebrated for having been the reſidence of Jeſus Chriſt, for the firſt thirty-three years of his life, Luke ii. 51. Here our Saviour became incarnate, here he lived in obedience to Joſeph and Mary, and from hence he took the name of a Nazarean. After he had begun his miſſion, he preached here ſometimes in the ſynagogue, Luke iv. 16. But becauſe his countrymen had no faith in him, and were offended at the meanneſs of his original, he did not many miracles there, nor would he dwell therein. Matth. xiii. 54, 58. So he fixed his habitation at Capernaum for the latter part of his life, Matt. iv. 13. The city of Nazareth was ſituated on an eminence, and on one ſide there was a precipice, from whence the Nazareans one day had a deſign of throwing down our Saviour, becauſe he upbraided them with their unbelief, Luke iv. 29.

St. Epiphanius ſays, that in his time Nazareth was only a village, and that to the reign of Conſtantine it was inhabited by Jews alone, excluſive of Chriſtians. Adamnanus, a writer of the ſeventh century, ſays, that in his time there were two great churches at Nazareth, one in the midſt of the city, built on two arches, in the place where our Saviour's houſe had ſtood. Under the two arches now mentioned, was a very fine fountain, which furniſhed water to the whole city. The ſecond church of Nazareth was built in the place where the houſe ſtood, wherein the angel Gabriel appeared to the Virgin Mary. Villibrode, in the eighth century, ſpeaking of the ſame church of Nazareth, ſays, that the Chriſtians were often obliged to redeem it with money from the Pagans, who otherwiſe threatened to demoliſh it. Phocas in the twelfth century ſays, that as ſoon as one enters into Nazareth, one finds the church of St. Gabriel, under which is a little vault, wherein is the fountain near which the angel firſt ſpoke to Mary. It may be here obſerved, that the Orientals thought the angel firſt ſpoke to Mary near a fountain, and afterwards in her own houſe. Phocas adds, that in the ſame city there is a very handſome church, heretofore the houſe of St. Joſeph. The church of Nazareth, or of the incarnation, is ſtill in being.

Now all this will by no means agree with the famous tranſlation of the houſe of the Virgin Mary; which in 1291, is pretended to have been removed by the aſſiſtance of angels, from the city of Nazareth into Dalmatia; from whence it was carried four years after, beyond the gulph of Venice, into the dioceſe of Recanati, in the borders of Ancona, and ſet on the land of a lady named Lauretta; from whence the church that was found there, obtained the name of our Lady of Lauretto. But the ſituation of this holy houſe being in a wood, to which it was dangerous to reſort, becauſe of robbers, it was a third time tranſported to the diſtance of half a league from thence upon a hill; and once more it was carried from thence to the place where it ſtands at preſent. It is very probable, that all theſe different tranſlations were no other than ſo many different buildings, conſtructed on the model of the church of Nazareth; juſt as in ſeveral places churches have been built, on the model of that of the holy ſepulchre at Jeruſalem.

NAZARITES, נזרים, ναζιραῖοι, ſeparated, or crowned; from נזיר nazir, or נזר nazar, a flower, or bud.

NAZARITE, or Nazarean. This term may ſignify,

1, An inhabitant of Nazareth; or native of that city.

2, This name was given to Jeſus Chriſt and his diſciples; commonly, in a ſenſe of deriſion and contempt, eſpecially by writers againſt Chriſtianity.

3, For

3, For a ſect of heretic (Chriſtians) called Nazareans.
4, For a Nazarite, a man under the obligation of a vow, to obſerve the rules of Nazariteſhip; whether for his whole life, as Sampſon and John the Baptiſt; or only for a time, as thoſe in Numbers vi. 18, 19, 20. Amos ii. 11, 12.
5. Nazarite, in ſome paſſages of ſcripture, denotes a man of diſtinction and dignity in the court of a prince.

The name of Nazarene belongs to Jeſus Chriſt, not only becauſe of his having lived the greater part of his life at Nazareth, and becauſe that place has always been conſidered as his country, but alſo becauſe the prophets had foretold, that "he ſhould be called a Nazarene." Matth. ii. 23. We find no particular place in the prophets, expreſsly affirming, that the Meſſiah ſhould be called a Nazarene; and St. Matthew only quotes the prophets in general. Perhaps he would inſinuate, that the conſecration of the Nazarites, and their great purity, was a type and prophecy referring to our Saviour; Numb. vi. 18, 19. or elſe that the name of Nazir or Nazarite, given to the patriarch Joſeph, referred to Jeſus Chriſt, Gen. xlix. 26. Deut. xxxiii. 16. Laſtly, St. Jerom was of opinion, that St. Matthew alludes to Iſaiah xi. 1. lx 21. There ſhall come forth a rod out of the ſtem of Jeſſe, and a branch (in Hebrew, Nezer,) ſhall grow out of his roots. This branch or Nezer, and this rod, are certainly intended to denote Jeſus Chriſt, by the general conſent of the fathers and interpreters.

Nazarean heretics, were Chriſtians converted from Judaiſm, whoſe chief error conſiſted in defending the neceſſity or expediency of the works of the law, and who obſtinately adhered to the practice of the Jewiſh ceremonies. The name of Nazarenes at firſt had nothing odious in it; and was often given to the firſt Chriſtians. The Fathers frequently mention the goſpel of the Nazarenes, (i. e. of St. Matthew). Some of them were in being in the time of St. Jerom, who does not reproach them with any error. They were zealous obſervers of the law of Moſes, but held the traditions of the Phariſees in contempt.

Nazarite, under the ancient law, denotes a man or woman, engaged by a vow to abſtain from wine and all intoxicating liquors, to let their hair grow, not to enter any houſe polluted by having a dead corps in it, nor to be preſent at any funeral. If by accident any one ſhould have died in their preſence, they re-commenced the whole of their conſecration and Nazariteſhip. This vow generally laſted eight days, ſometimes a month, and ſometimes their whole lives. When the time of their Nazariteſhip was expired, the prieſt brought the perſon to the door of the temple, who there offered to the Lord a he-lamb for a burnt-offering, a ſhe-lamb for an expiatory ſacrifice, and a ram for a peace-offering. They offered likewiſe loaves and cakes, with wine for libations. After all was ſacrificed and offered, the prieſt, or ſome other, ſhaved the head of the Nazarite at the door of the tabernacle, and burnt his hair on the fire of the altar. Then the prieſt put into the hands of the Nazarite the ſhoulder of the ram roaſted, with a loaf and a cake, which the Nazarite returning into the hands of the prieſt, he offered them to the Lord, lifting them up in the preſence of the Nazarite. And from this time he might again drink wine, his Nazariteſhip being accompliſhed.

Perpetual Nazarites, as Sampſon and John the Baptiſt, were conſecrated to their Nazariteſhip by their parents, and continued all their lives in this ſtate, without drinking wine, or cutting their hair.

Thoſe who made a vow of Nazariteſhip out of Paleſtine, and could not come to the temple when their vow was expired, contented themſelves with obſerving the abſtinence required by the law, and cutting off their hair in the place where they were; the offerings and ſacrifices preſcribed by Moſes, to be offered at the temple, by themſelves, or by others for them, they deferred, till a convenient opportunity. Hence it was, that St. Paul being at Corinth, and having made the vow of a Nazarite, he had his hair cut off at Cenchrea, a port of Corinth, and deferred the reſt of his vow, till he came to Jeruſalem. Acts xviii. 18.

When a perſon found he was not in condition to make a vow of Nazariteſhip, or had not leiſure fully to perform it; he contented himſelf by contributing to the expence of the ſacrifices and offerings of thoſe, who had made, and were fulfilling this vow: and by this means he became a partaker in ſuch Nazariteſhip. Joſephus magnifying the zeal and devotion of Herod Agrippa, ſays, that king cauſed ſeveral Nazarites to be ſhaven. Maimonides ſays, that he who would partake in the Nazariteſhip of another, went to the temple, and ſaid to the prieſt, "In ſuch a time ſuch an one will finiſh his Nazariteſhip; I intend to defray the charge of his tonſure, either in part, or in the whole". When St. Paul came to Jeruſalem, A. D. 58 Acts xxi. 23, 24. St. James, with other brethren, ſaid to him, That to quiet the minds of the converted Jews, he ſhould join himſelf to four perſons, who had a vow of Nazariteſhip, and contribute to their charges charges and ceremonies, by which the new converts would perceive, that he did not totally disregard the law, as they had been led to suppose.

Nazarite, expresses a man of great dignity, as the patriarch Joseph is called a Nazarite among his brethren; Gen. xlix. 26. Nazarite in this sense is variously understood. Some think it signifies one who is crowned, chosen, separated, distinguished: Nezer in Hebrew signifies a crown. The LXX. translate, a chief, or, him that is honoured. We think that Nazir was a name of dignity, in the courts of the eastern princes. In the court of Persia, the Nezir is the superintendant general of the king's household, the chief officer of the crown, and the high steward of his family, treasures, and revenues. Chardin, Government of the Persians, ch. 5. p. 236. In this sense Joseph was the Nezir of the house of Pharaoh. It is very like what the ancient Persians called the King's Eyes. Moses also gives to Joseph the name of Nazir, speaking of the tribes of his two sons Ephraim and Manasseh. Deut. xxxiii. 16.

NEAH, נעה, a city, Josh. xix. 13.

NEAH, Nea, or Noa, a city of Zebulun, Josh. xix. 13. I suspect it to be the Neve, mentioned in the itinerary of Antoninus, thirty-six miles from Capitolias; but I must own, the manner of writing Noa or Neah is not very favourable to this conjecture. See Reland, tom. ii. p. 909.

NEAPOLIS, Νεάπολις, new city; from νέα, new, fresh, and πόλις, a city.

NEAPOLIS, or Naplouse. Vide SHECHEM.

NEAPOLIS, now called Napoli, mentioned Acts xvi. 11. a city of Macedonia, whither St. Paul came from the isle of Samothracia. From Neapolis he went to Philippi. Napoli is near the borders of Thrace.

NEARIAH, נעריה, νεαρία, child, or effusion, or watch of the Lord; from nahar, hara, and hur. See Naarah.

NEARIAH, or Naariah, fifth son of Shechaniah. One of those who, at the head of five hundred men of the tribe of Simeon, attacked the remnant of the Amalekites in Mount Seir, where they defeated them, and dwelt in their country, 1 Chron. iii. 22. iv. 42. The time of this expedition is not known.

NEBAI, ניבי, that fructifies; from ניב nub: otherwise, that foretels, or that speaks; from נבא niba.

NEBAJOTH, נביות, words, or prophecies; from נבא nabia: or fruits; from הביאה thabuah.

NEBAJOTH, or Nabajoth, first son of Ishmael, and grandson of Abraham and Hagar. Father of the Nabathean Arabians. See NABATHEANS.

NEBALLAT, נבלט, that fructifies, or that prophesies in secret, or in a riddle; from nub, and לוט lut, to hide, to wrap up.

NEBALLAT, a city of Benjamin, Nehem. xi. 34.

NEBAT, נבט, that beholds.

NEBAT, or Nabath, of the tribe of Ephraim, of the race of Joshua, and father of Jeroboam, the first king of the ten tribes, 1 Kings, xi. 26. The author of the Hebrew questions on the books of Kings, says, that Nebat was the same as Shimei, who cursed David, 2 Sam. xvi. 5, &c. but, that Shimei was of the family of Saul, consequently of Benjamin, and therefore not of Ephraim.

NEBO, נבו, that speaks, prophesies, or fructifies.

I. NEBO, or Nabo, a city of Reuben, Numb. xxxii. 38. being in the neighbourhood of Moab, the Moabites seized it, and in the time of Jeremiah they held it, Jerem. xlviii. 1.

II. NEBO, a city of Judah, Ezra ii. 29. x. 43. and Neh. vii. 33. Probably the village Nahau, eight miles from Hebron, south, which was forsaken in the time of Eusebius and St. Jerom.

III. NEBO, a mountain beyond Jordan, where Moses died. Deut. xxxii. 49.

IV. NEBO, an idol of the Babylonians. "Bel boweth down, Nebo stoopeth," says Isaiah xlvi. 1. The word Nebo comes from a root that signifies to prophesy, and therefore may stand for an oracle. There is some probability, that Bel and Nebo are the same deity, and that Isaiah has used these as synonymous terms. Bel was the oracle of the Babylonians. Nebo or Nabo is found in composition of the names of several princes of Babylon; as Nabonassar, Nabopolassar, Nebuchadnezzar, Nabuzardan, Nabusesban, &c. The LXX. instead of Nebo read Dagon, Heb. קרס נבו. 70. Συνετρίβη Δαγων. The Chaldæans worshipped a god they called Odacon. Vide FRAG. No. CLXV.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR, נבכדנאצר, tears and groans of judgment; from בכה bacah, to weep, and דין din, judgment: otherwise, trouble, or sorrow of judgment; from צר tsar, anguish, דין din, judgment. This word is foreign from the Hebrew: and includes the name of the Babylonian god Nabo, or Nebo.

I. NEBUCHADNEZZAR, Nebuchadrezzar, Nabuchodonosor, &c. king of Assyria, otherwise called Saosduchinus, began to reign at Nineveh, A. M. 3335, ante A. D. 669. In the twelfth year of his reign, in a set battle he overcame Arphaxad, king of the Medes, in the plains of Ragau. Nebuchadnezzar sent to Cilicia, Damascus, Mount Libanus, Phœnicia, Judæa, and the other nations adjoining, even to Ethiopia, to require them to acknowledge him as king, and to submit to his empire. But these people sent back his ambassadors with disdain, and slighted his his menaces. Nebuchadnezzar, enraged, ſwore by his throne that he would be revenged; and in the thirteenth year of his reign he aſſembled his chief officers, and acquainted them with his reſolution, of bringing the whole earth under his government. He appointed Holofernes his generaliſſimo, gave him his inſtructions, put large ſums of money into his hands, and ſent him with a powerful army to reduce all thoſe nations. See HOLOFERNES. Nebuchadnezzar, otherwiſe Saoſduchinus, had Saracus or Chynaladan for ſucceſſor, A. M. 3356, ante A. D. 648.

II. NEBUCHADNEZZAR, otherwiſe Nabopolaſſar, father of Nebuchadnezzar the Great, ſo much celebrated in Scripture. Nabopolaſſar was a Babylonian, and Saracus, king of Aſſyria, gave him the command of his army. He made a league with Aſtyages, otherwiſe called Ahaſuerus, who gave his daughter Amyitis in marriage to Nebuchadnezzar, ſon of Nabopolaſſar. Ahaſuerus and Nabopolaſſar joining their forces, revolted againſt Saracus, king of Nineveh, beſieged him in his capital, took him priſoner, and upon the deſtruction of the Aſſyrian monarchy raiſed two kingdoms; that of the Medes poſſeſſed by Aſtyages, or Ahaſuerus, and that of the Chaldæans, or of Babylon, founded by Nabopolaſſar, A. M. 3378, ante A. D. 626. Nabopolaſſar died A. M. 3399, ante A. D. 605.

III. NEBUCHADNEZZAR, ſon and ſucceſſor of Nabopolaſſar, ſucceeded to the kingdom of Chaldea A. M. 3399, ante A. D. 605. Some time before, Nabopolaſſar had aſſociated him in the kingdom, and ſent him to recover Carchemiſh, which had been conquered from him four years before, by Necho king of Egypt. Nebuchadnezzar having been ſucceſsful, marched againſt the governor of Phœnicia, and Jehoiachim king of Judah, who was a tributary to Necho, king of Egypt. He took Jehoiachim, and put him in chains, in order to carry him captive to Babylon; but afterwards he left him in Judea, on condition of paying a large tribute. He took away ſeveral perſons from Jeruſalem; among others, Daniel, Hananiah, Miſhael, and Azariah, all of the royal family, whom the king of Babylon cauſed to be brought up carefully, in the language and in the learning of the Chaldæans, that they might be employed at court.

Nabopolaſſar dying about the end of A. M. 3399, Nebuchadnezzar, who was then either in Egypt or in Judæa, haſtened to Babylon, leaving to his generals the care of bringing to Chaldea the captives he had taken in Syria, Judæa, Phœnicia, and Egypt; for according to Beroſus, he had ſubdued all theſe countries. He diſtributed theſe captives into ſeveral colonies, and in the temple of Belus he depoſited the ſacred veſſels of the temple of Jeruſalem, and other rich ſpoils.

Jehoiachim, king of Judah, continued three years in fealty to king Nebuchadnezzar, but then being weary of paying tribute, he threw off the yoke. The king of Chaldæa ſent troops of Chaldæans, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, who harraſſed Judæa, during three or four years; at laſt Jehoiachim was beſieged and taken in Jeruſalem, put to death, and his body thrown to the birds of the air, according to the predictions of Jeremiah. See JEHOIACHIM.

In the mean time Nebuchadnezzar being at Babylon, in the ſecond year of his reign, had a myſterious dream, in which he ſaw a ſtatue compoſed of ſeveral metals, a head of gold, a breaſt of ſilver, belly and thighs of braſs, legs of iron, and feet half of iron, and half clay: a little ſtone rolling by its own impulſe from the mountain, ſtruck the ſtatue, and broke it. This dream gave him great uneaſineſs, yet afterwards he forgot it, and could not recover the leaſt notion of it. He ordered all his diviners and interpreters of dreams to be ſent for, but none could tell him the dream, or the interpretation. Nebuchadnezzar in wrath, ordered them all to death, which was going to be put in execution, when Daniel was informed of it. He went immediately to the king, and deſired him to reſpite the ſentence a little, and he would endeavour to ſatisfy the king's deſire. God in the night revealed to him the king's dream, and alſo the interpretation, to this effect: Yourſelf, ſaid Daniel, are repreſented by the golden head of the ſtatue. After you will ariſe a kingdom inferior to yours, repreſented by the breaſt of ſilver; and after this another ſtill inferior, denoted by the belly and thighs of braſs. After theſe three empires, (i. e. the Chaldæans, Perſians, and Greeks) will ariſe a fourth, denoted by the legs of iron, (i. e. the Romans.) Under this laſt empire God will raiſe a new one, of greater ſtrength, power, and extent than all the others: (that of the Meſſiah, repreſented by the little ſtone coming from the mountain, and overthrowing the ſtatue.)

Then the king raiſed Daniel to great honour, ſet him over all the wiſe-men of Babylon, and gave him the government of that province: at his requeſt he granted to Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, the overſight of the works of the ſame province of Babylon.

Jehoiakin, or Jechoniah, king of Judah, having revolted againſt Nebuchadnezzar, this prince beſieged him in Jeruſalem, and forced him to ſurrender. Nebuchadnezzar took him with his chief officers, officers, captive to Babylon, with his mother, his wives, and the beſt workmen of Jeruſalem, to the number of ten thouſand men. Among the captives were Mordecai the uncle of Eſther, and Ezekiel the prophet. He took alſo all the veſſels of gold which Solomon made for the temple, and the king's treaſury: and ſet up Mattaniah, Jeconiah's uncle by the father's ſide, whom he named Zedekiah.

Zedekiah continued faithful to Nebuchadnezzar nine years; being then weary of ſubjection, he revolted, and confederated with the neighbouring princes. The king of Babylon came into Judæa, reduced the chief places of the country, and beſieged Jeruſalem: but Pharaoh Hophra, or Vaphres, coming out of Egypt to aſſiſt Zedekiah, Nebuchadnezzar went to meet the king of Egypt, overcame him in battle, and forced him to retire into his own country. After which he returned to the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and was three hundred and ninety days before the place, before he could take it. But in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, A. M. 3419, ante A. D. 588, the city was taken. Zedekiah attempted to eſcape, but was taken and brought to Nebuchadnezzar, who was then at Riblah in Syria. The king of Babylon condemned him to die, cauſed his children to be put to death in his preſence, and then bored out his eyes, loaded him with chains, and ſent him to Babylon.

Three years after the Jewiſh war, Nebuchadnezzar beſieged the city of Tyre, which ſiege held thirteen years. But during this interval, he made war alſo on the Sidonians, Moabites, Ammonites, and Idumæans; and theſe he treated much as he had done the Jews. Joſephus ſays, theſe wars happened five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, conſequently A. M. 3421, ante A. D. 583. The city of Tyre was taken A. M. 3432, ante A. D. 572. Ithobaal, who was then king, was put to death, and Baal ſucceeded him. The Lord as a reward to the army of Nebuchadnezzar, which had lain ſo long before Tyre, gave up to them Egypt and its ſpoils. Nebuchudnezzar made an eaſy conqueſt of it, becauſe the Egyptians were divided by civil wars among themſelves; he enriched himſelf with booty, and returned in triumph to Babylon, with a vaſt number of captives.

Nebuchadnezzar, being at peace, applied himſelf to the adorning, aggrandizing, and enriching Babylon with magnificent buildings. It was now he undertook thoſe famous gardens, ſupported by arches, reckoned among the wonders of the world. Several alſo have aſcribed to him the walls of Babylon, though many give the honour of that work to Semiramis.

About this time Nebuchadnezzar had a dream of a great tree, loaded with fruit. Suddenly an angel deſcending from heaven, commanded that the tree ſhould be cut down, and the branches, leaves, and fruit be beaten off, yet the trunk and the root ſhould be preſerved in the earth; that it ſhould be bound with chains of iron and braſs, &c. among the beaſts of the field for ſeven years. The king ſent for all the diviners in the country, but none could explain his dream, until Daniel informed him, that this dream reſpected himſelf. You, ſays Daniel, are repreſented by the great tree: you are to be brought low, to be reduced to the condition of a brute, &c. but you ſhall afterwards be reſtored to your firſt ſituation.

A year after, as Nebuchadnezzar was walking on his palace at Babylon, he began to ſay, "Is not this Babylon the Great, which I have built in the greatneſs of my power, and in the brightneſs of my glory?" Hardly had he pronounced theſe words, when he fell into a diſtemper or diſtraction, which ſo altered his imagination, that he thought himſelf to be metamorphoſed into an ox, and aſſumed the manners of that creature. After having been ſeven years in this ſtate, God opened his eyes, his underſtanding was reſtored to him, and he recovered his royal dignity.

Nebuchadnezzar's repentance was neither ſolid nor ſincere. For the year of his reſtoration, he erected a golden ſtatue, whoſe height was ſixty cubits, and breadth ſix cubits, in the plains of Dura, in the province of Babylon. Having appointed a day for the dedication of this ſtatue, he aſſembled the principal officers of his kingdom; and publiſhed by an herald, that all ſhould adore this image, at the ſound of muſic, on penalty of being caſt into a burning fiery furnace. The three Jews, companions of Daniel, would not bend the knee to the image. Daniel probably was abſent. Nebuchadnezzar commanded Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego to be called, and he aſked them why they preſumed to diſobey his orders? they replied, that they neither feared the flames, nor any other penalty; that the God, whom only they would worſhip, knew how to preſerve them; but if the Lord ſhould not think fit to deliver them out of his hands, nevertheleſs they would obey the laws of God rather than men.

At theſe words the king cauſed them to be bound, and to be thrown into the furnace, which being vehemently heated, the flame conſumed the men that caſt them in; but it ſpared Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego. An angel of the Lord abated the flames, ſo that the fire did not touch them. Nebuchadnezzar ſeeing this miracle, was much much aſtoniſhed, and ſaid to his nobles; "From whence is it that I ſee four men walking in the midſt of the flames? and the fourth is like a Son of God." Then Nebuchadnezzar approaching the mouth of the furnace, called the three Hebrews, who came out of the furnace in perfect health, to the great aſtoniſhment of the whole court.

Then Nebuchadnezzar gave glory to the God of Shadrach, Meſhach, and Abednego, and he exalted the three Hebrews to great dignity in the province of Babylon. Dan. iv. 1, 2, &c.

Nebuchadnezzar died this year, A. M. 3442, ante A. D. 562, after having reigned forty-three years. Megaſthenes, quoted by Euſebius, Præpar. lib. ix. cap. 41, ſays, that this prince having aſcended to the top of his palace, was there ſeized with a fit of divine enthuſiaſm, and cried out, "O Babylonians, I declare to you a misfortune, that neither our father Belus, nor queen Baltis, have been able to prevent. A Perſian mule ſhall one day come into this country, who, ſupported by the power of your gods, ſhall bring you into ſlavery. He ſhall be aſſiſted by the Mede, the glory of the Aſſyrians." (This Perſian mule is Cyrus, who was born of a mother that was a Mede, and a Perſian father. The Mede who aſſiſted Cyrus was Cyaxares, or Darius the Mede.) Nebuchadnezzar added, "Would to God this conqueror might periſh in the depths of the ſea, or in ſome diſmal wilderneſs where no human creature ſets his foot, that we might not ſee the evils with which we are threatened! And would to God that I myſelf had had a happier fate before this had come into my mind!" At ſaying which he diſappeared. It is doubted whether theſe words, he diſappeared, ſhould denote his death, or only his flight and retreat, which followed his metamorphoſis into an ox. The name Nebuchadnezzar, or Nebuchadonoſor, in the Chaldæan tongue, may ſignify a treaſure defended by the god Nebo.

Perſian authors relate, that Lahoraſb, the fourth king of Perſia, of the dynaſty of the Caianides, who ſucceeded Kaikhoſtrot, made great conqueſts in the eaſtern, and afterwards in the weſtern parts, near his empire. He ſent into Paleſtine one of his generals called Raham, and ſurnamed Bakhtalnaſſar, i.e. the happineſs of victory, from which the Hebrews formed Nebuchadnezzar, and the Greeks Nebuchodonoſar, by whom all Syria was reduced to obedience. The king of Judah, of the race of Solomon, who then reigned at Jeruſalem, refuſing to ſubmit, was attacked by Raham, who took Jeruſalem, ſacked and deſtroyed it.

Other hiſtorians give to Nebuchadnezzar the name of Gudarz, and ſay he was lieutenant-general to king Lohoraſb; who having ſpent the greater part of his life in the moſt weſtern parts of the empire, was almoſt unknown to the Hebrews and the Arabians; while Gudarz, called alſo Raham, or Nebuchadnezzar, acquired a very great reputation, though he was but the ſubaltern or lieutenant-general of Lohoraſb's army. But all are agreed about his great valour and martial exploits, and maintain, that king Lohoraſb was cotemporary with the prophets Jeremiah, Daniel, and Eſdras. It would be undoubtedly very difficult to reconcile all this with Scripture.

It may not be amiſs to add a word here, concerning the metamorphoſis of this prince. There are many opinions about this matter. Origen believed the thing to be impoſſible, and turned it into an allegory. Bodin thought Nebuchadnezzar was really changed into a bull, and did not only loſe the ſhape and ſentiments, but even the ſoul of a man. Others maintain, that this change was only in his body and outward form, but not in his ſoul; the king preſerving his reaſon in the midſt of his misfortune, like Apuleius during his change into an aſs, and like thoſe Italians mentioned by St. Auſtin, who having taſted ſome cheeſe given them by ſome magicians of the country, were changed into beaſts of burden, and after a certain time recovered their own ſhape again, and their firſt condition. Some Rabbins pretend, that the ſoul of Nebuchadnezzar quitted the body of that prince, and gave place for a time, to that of an ox, which communicated its ſentiments to him, and imparted to his body the ſame motions, the ſame taſte, the ſame inclinations as thoſe of oxen. Others have acknowledged in Nebuchadnezzar only a vitiated imagination, and in his ſubjects a kind of faſcination of the eyes, which made both believe that Nebuchadnezzar was changed into an ox, and had the figure of one, though really there was no ſuch thing.

The moſt received opinion is, that by the effect of divine power, Nebuchadnezzar fell into a black melancholy, and in his frenzy imagined that he was become an ox. As in the diſeaſe called a Lycanthropy, a man is perſuaded that he is changed into a wolf, a dog, a cat—[which only ariſes from his diſtempered brain, and heated imagination, ſince thoſe about him perceive no ſuch change in his outward figure; but only in his inclinations and behaviour.]—ſo that he howls and bites like a wolf, eats raw meat, runs into the fields, and avoids the ſociety of men, &c.

Thus Nebuchadnezzar imagining himſelf to become an ox, grazed upon herbs, butted with his horns, let his hair and nails grow, lowed, went naked, and imitated the actions of an ox. His people aſtoniſhed at ſuch a change, bound him as madmen or ideots are bound; but he fled into the fields, [park, or garden of his palace] living there naked, expoſed to the dew of heaven, and the other inclemencies of the weather, ſo that his hair grew like the feathers of an eagle, and his nails like the claws of a lion. Nothing more is required, to account for all that the Scripture ſays of Nebuchadnezzar. There was nothing miraculous in this, except the foretelling of this diſtemper, its approach and its concluſion, juſt at the time that the prophet had foretold.

A queſtion is moved concerning the duration of this diſeaſe. Some, as Theodoret, maintain, that the Perſians diſtinguiſhing their years into two ſeaſons, winter and ſummer, the ſeven years of Nebuchadnezzar muſt be reckoned in this manner, which will reduce it to three years and an half. Dorotheus, and the ſpurious Epiphanius, affirm, that in truth God had condemned Nebuchadnezzar to a ſeven years habitation with the brutes, but that at the inſtances of Daniel, the ſeven years were reduced to ſeven months. The falſe Epiphanius adds, that as Daniel conſtantly foretold to the great men of Chaldæa, that Nebuchadnezzar ſhould again aſcend the throne, and as the courtiers diſbelieved and derided theſe predictions, in order to convince them he obtained of God by his prayers, that this time might be ſhortened. Others maintain, that this prince was changed into an ox only twenty-one months. They explain the ſeven "times" of Daniel, of ſeven times the ſpace of three months. Tempus according to them being a quarter of a year, or three months. Peter Comeſtor makes it but ſeven months.

But we ſeek no other interpreter for Daniel, beſide Daniel himſelf. It is certain that this prophet by Tempus, "a time," means a year. E. gr. to denote the ſpace of three years and an half, he ſays, Tempus & tempora & dimidium temporis; we find the ſame way of ſpeaking in the Revelations, and in the ſame ſenſe.

NEBUCHADONOSAR, נבוכד־ראצר, or Nebuchadrezzar. Tears, or anguiſh of generation; from בכה bacah, and צר tzar, as above, and דור dor, generation.

NEBUSHASBAN, נבושזבן, word, or prophecy that expands: from נבא prophecy, and זוב zub, to run out: otherwiſe, fruits that ſpread, or run out; from תבואה thebuah, fruits, and זוב zub, to expand: according to the Hebrew and the Syriac, fruits of deliverance.

NEBUSHASBAN, or Nabuſeſban, general of Nebuchadnezzar, who went with Nebuzar-adan to take Jeremiah out of priſon, and to recommend him to Gedaliah. Jer. xxxix. 13.

NEBUZAR-ADAN, נבוזראדן, fruits or prophecies of judgment: or winnowed, or ſpread; from נבא niba, prophecy, and תבואה thebuah, fruits, and דן dun, judgment, and זרה zarah, to winnow. Compounded of the word Nebo, or Nabo, a deity of the Babylonians.

NEBUZAR-ADAN, or Nabuzardan, general of Nebuchadnezzar's armies, and chief officer of his houſhold. He conducted the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and took the city, while Nebuchadnezzar was at Riblah in Syria. Having plundered the city and the temple, he ſet them on fire. Afterwards he aſſembled the captives at Ramah, and ſuffered Jeremiah and Baruch to go where they pleaſed, according to the king's order, Jer. xxxix. 11—24. xl. 1—6. The other captives he carried to Babylon, leaving Gedaliah to govern the miſerable remains of Judah. Some have thought that Nebuzar-adan gave Jeremiah the ark of the covenant, the golden candleſtick, the tables of incenſe, and of the ſhew-bread, and that this prophet hid them in a cave of Mount Nebo, in the land of Moab. But this opinion is very uncertain.

Four years after Jeruſalem was taken, while Nebuchadnezzar was engaged at the ſiege of Tyre, Nebuzar-adan brought to Babylon ſeven hundred and forty-five captives more. He afterwards marched againſt the Ammonites, waſted their country, and brought their king and princes captives to Babylon. The Scripture makes no farther mention of Nebuzar-adan.

NECESSITY. This word is taken, not only for the need of ſeveral things, but alſo for perplexity, trouble, or diſquiet, whether we be afflicted inwardly, or aſſaulted by our enemies outwardly, or in difficulty, &c. It ſometimes anſwers to the Hebrew word Zarah, Anguſtia, and to Mezucah, coarctatio, Judg. xi. 7. St. Jerom has often uſed neceſſitas, to expreſs a thing that muſt be done immediately. But eſpecially in the Pſalms neceſſitates is put for anguſtiæ. In Wiſd. xviii. 21. it is ſaid of Aaron, reſtitit iræ, & finem impoſuit neceſſitati; he cauſed the dreadful plague to ceaſe, with which God had viſited his people, on occaſion of the rebellion of Korah. And Wiſd. xix. 4. ducebat illos digna neceſſitas; the Egyptians were urged, as it were, into their calamity, by a kind of fatal neceſſity, of which their hardneſs of heart rendered them worthy.

St.

St. Paul often ſpeaks of the neceſſities of the ſaints, or of the new converts, who were in a true and real poverty.

The word neceſſary does not always denote an abſolute neceſſity, but a neceſſity of decency, or of duty, or merely ſomething uſeful and advantageous. So Matt. xviii. 7. It muſt needs be that offences come; God ſuffers them to come, and makes them ſubſervient to his glory. And Tob. xii. 3. It was neceſſary, it was expedient, that you ſhould be proved by temptation. And Luke xiv. 18. I have bought a piece of ground, and I muſt needs go and ſee it: it is convenient that I go to ſee it. [We often uſe the word muſt in Engliſh in the ſame ſenſe; I muſt do ſuch a thing—i. e. it is fit and proper I ſhould do it.]

NECHO, נכה, lame, or who was beaten.

NECHO, or Nechao, king of Egypt. This prince carried his arms to the Euphrates, where he conquered the city of Carchemiſh. He is known not only in Scripture, but by Herodotus, who ſays, that Necho was ſon of Pſammetichus, king of Egypt, and having ſucceeded him in the kingdom, he raiſed great armies, and ſent out great fleets, as well on the Mediterranean ſea as the Red ſea; that he fought the Syrians near the city of Migdol, obtained the victory, and took the city of Cadytis. The learned are not agreed about this city Cadytis. Some will have it to be Cades in Arabia Petræa; others Jeruſalem, which they ſay is called Cadyta or Cadytis, i. e. the Holy City, becauſe of its temple. Others ſay, it is the city Cedes in Galilee, of Naphtali. See CADYTIS and MIGDOL. 2 Chr. xxv. 2 Kings xxiii. Joſiah, king of Judah, who was a tributary to the king of Babylon, oppoſed Necho, who ſent to tell him, "What have I to do with thee, king of Judah? the Lord has commanded me to make war againſt another people." It is thought that Necho had received an admonition from Jeremiah, to march againſt Carchemiſh. Joſiah would not hear the remonſtrances of Necho, but gave him battle at Megiddo, where he received the wound of which he died. The people of Jeruſalem ſet up Jehoahaz or Joachaz, for king of Judah, and Necho paſſed forwards, without making any long ſtay in Judæa.

But at his return from his expedition, which was very ſucceſsful, he halted at Riblah in Syria; and ſending for Jehoahaz king of the Jews, he depoſed him, loaded him with chains, and ſent him into Egypt. Then coming to Jeruſalem, he ſet up Eliakim or Jehoiakim in his place, and exacted the payment of one hundred talents of ſilver, and one talent of gold from the country. Jeremiah, xlvi. 2. acquaints us, that the city of Carchemiſh was taken from Necho by Nabopolaſſar, king of Babylon, in the fourth year of Jehoiachim king of Judah; ſo that Necho did not enjoy his conqueſt above four years. Joſephus adds, that the king of Babylon purſuing his victory, brought under his dominion the whole country, between the river Euphrates and Egypt, excepting Judæa. Thus Necho was again reduced within the limits of his own country.

NECROMANCY, conſiſts in raiſing up the ghoſts of thoſe who are deceaſed: as the witch of Endor. See 1 Sam. xxviii. 7. The word necromancy is not in Scripture, but Moſes forbids the Iſraelites to have recourſe to diviners, or thoſe who conſult the dead. Deut. xviii. 11. דיש אל המתים. Non inveniatur in te, qui quærat á mortuis veritatem. The enchantreſs that raiſed up Samuel is called Baalath-ob, 1 Sam. xxviii. 7, 8, 9. בעלת אוב, the miſtreſs of Ob. The word Ob in Scripture, expreſſes a diviner, a magician, a necromancer, a ventriloquiſt, one who ſpeaks in his belly, and thereby deceives the ſimple, making them believe that the voice ſpeaks to them out of the earth, as if from the dead. Your voice ſhall be as that of an Ob, which ſpeaks out of the bottom of the earth, ſays Iſaiah, ſpeaking to Jeruſalem, Iſai. xxix. 4. Heb. You ſhall mutter, whiſper, not daring to ſpeak out; but with an obſcure and hollow voice, as if it iſſued out of the ground. Necromancers were condemned to death, Levit. xx. 6. and Saul in purſuance of this law had extirpated them: but it may be ſeen by the Kings and Chronicles, that they were but too frequent afterwards, and that the law was very ill obſerved in this article, as in many others.

The Rabbins think that necromancers uſed the bones of the dead in their invocations, and chiefly the ſkull. They offered incenſe to it, and did not leave off calling the ghoſt, till the dead appeared to them, or till ſome Demon taking the ſhape of the dead, preſented himſelf to them, and anſwered them. In the Hiſtory of the Pythoneſs of En-dor, we do not find that ſhe uſed any thing elſe but words. Several have been of opinion, that the art of the necromancers conſiſted only in trick and jugling, or was at moſt an illuſion of the devil; and that the ſpirits of the dead were never really raiſed. Some even believe, that Samuel appeared neither to Saul nor the witch; but that this ſorcereſs abuſed the credulity of that prince, and his perplexity.

NEDABIAH, נדביה, gift, or vow of the Lord, or the good pleaſure of the Lord, or that offers himſelf to the Lord; from נדב nadab: otherwiſe, prince of the Lord; from נדיב nadib, and יה jah, the Lord.

NEDABIAH, or Nadabiah, ſon of Jeconiah. 1 Chron. iii. 18.

NEGINOTH, נגנות. Stringed inſtruments of muſic.

NEGINOTH. This term is read before ſome of the Pſalms. It ſignifies ſtringed-inſtruments of muſic, to be played on by the fingers, or by women muſicians; and the titles of thoſe Pſalms, where this word is found, may be thus tranſlated; A Pſalm of David to the maſter of muſic, who preſides over the ſtringed inſtruments.

NEHEL, or Nehelam, or rather Nahal. Shemaiah, a falſe prophet of Judah, was of Nehelam. Jer. xxix. 24. The word Nehelamith may ſignify a dream. Thus Shemaiah the Nehelamite may ſignify Shemaiah the dreamer. We know a city called Nahallal or Nahalol in the tribe of Zebulun. Joſhua xix. 15. See alſo Judges i. 30. Perhaps Shemaiah may have been of this city.

NEHELAMITE, נחלמי, dreamer, or dream; from חלם chalam: otherwiſe, vale or brook, or inheritance of the waters; from נחל nachal, brook, &c.

NEHEL-ESHCOL, נחל-אשכול, Φάραγξ βότρυος, The brook, or vale of the cluſter, or of the grape; from נחל nachal, a brook, or a vale, and אשכול eſhcol, a bunch of grapes.

NEHEL-ESHCOL, the brook of Grapes, or the valley of Grapes. This name was given to that valley of the Land of Promiſe, wherein the ſpies of Iſrael gathered the bunch of grapes, which they brought to the camp at Kadeſh, on a pole between two men. Numb. xiii. 23. The Hebrew word Nehel or Nachal ſignifies either a valley or a brook. Nehel-eſchol was ſouth of the promiſed land.

NEHEMIAH, נחמיה, conſolation, or repentance of the Lord; from נחם nacham: otherwiſe, reſt of the Lord; from נוח nuach, reſt: otherwiſe, conduct of the Lord; from נהה nachah, and יה jah, the Lord.

NEHEMIAH, or Neemias, ſon of Hachaliah, was born at Babylon during the captivity. He was, according to ſome, of the race of the prieſts; according to others, of the tribe of Judah, and of the royal family. Thoſe who maintain the firſt opinion, ſupport it by 2 Macc. i. 18, 21. where it is ſaid, Nehemiah the prieſt offered ſacrifices. And Eſdras x. 10. he is reckoned in the number of the prieſts. But thoſe who believe that he was of the race of the kings of Judah, ſay, 1ſt, That Nehemiah having governed the republic of the Jews for a conſiderable time, there is great probability he was of that tribe of which the kings always were. 2dly, Nehemiah mentions his brethren Hanani, and other Jews, who coming to Babylon during the captivity, acquainted him with the ſad condition of their country. 3dly, The office of cup-bearer to the king of Perſia, to which Nehemiah was promoted, is a proof that he was of an illuſtrious family. 4thly, He excuſes himſelf from entering into the inner part of the temple, probably becauſe he was only a Laick. Should ſuch a man as I flee? And who is there that being as I am, would go into the temple to ſave his life? Neh. vi. 11.

As to the Maccabees, where he is mentioned as a prieſt, it is anſwered, that the Greek text does not affirm him to be a prieſt, but only that Nehemiah ordered the prieſts to perform their functions. As to his ſigning among the prieſts, this he might do in quality of governor of the Jews, which gave him at leaſt an equal rank with the prieſts. Laſtly, the name of Nehemiah is found in no catalogue, nor in any genealogy of the Hebrew prieſts.

Scripture gives him the name, or title, of Tirſhatha, i. e. cup-bearer; which office he had at the court of Artaxerxes Longimanus. He had a great affection for the country of his fathers, though he had never ſeen it; and one day, as ſome Jews newly come from Jeruſalem acquainted him with the miſerable eſtate of that city, in its deſtruction, he faſted, prayed, and humbled himſelf before the Lord, intreating that he would be favourable to the deſign he conceived, of aſking the king's permiſſion to rebuild Jeruſalem. The courſe of his attendance at court being come, he preſented the cup to the king, according to his duty, but with a dejected countenance. The king entertained ſome ſuſpicion at it, thinking he might have ſome evil deſign. But Nehemiah diſcovering the occaſion of his diſquiet, Artaxerxes gave him leave to go to Jeruſalem, and to repair its walls and gates; but appointed him a time to return.

Nehemiah arrived at Jeruſalem with letters and full powers, but was there three days before he opened the occaſion of his journey. On the night of the third day he went round the city, and viewed the walls. After this he aſſembled the chief of the people, produced his commiſſion and letters, exhorted them to undertake the repairing of the gates and walls of the city; and immediately all began the work. The enemies of the Jews only ſcoffed at them at firſt, but afterward ſeeing the chief breaches repaired, they uſed ſtratagems and threats to deter Nehemiah. He therefore ordered part of his people to ſtand to their arms behind the walls, while others worked, having alſo their arms near them. His enemies then had recourſe to craft and ſtratagem, endeavouring to draw him into an ambuſcade in the fields, where they propoſed to finiſh their diſpute diſpute at an amicable conference. But Nehemiah gave them to underſtand, that the work he had begun required his cloſe perſonal attendance, and therefore he could not come out to them.

About the ſame time he diſcovered, that a falſe prophet, called Shemaiah, had been corrupted by his enemies, and that ſome of the chief of the city were ſecretly in confederacy with them. All this did not diſcourage him. He continued his work, and happily compleated it in fifty-two days.

Then he dedicated the walls, the towers, and the gates of Jeruſalem, with ſolemnity and magnificence. He ſeparated the prieſts, the Levites, and the princes of the people into two companies, one of which walked to the ſouth, and the other to the north, on the top of the walls. Theſe two companies were to meet at the temple. The proceſſion was accompanied with muſic, both vocal and inſtrumental. When all were come to the temple, they there read the law, offered ſacrifices, and made great rejoicings: and the Feaſt of Tabernacles happening at the ſame time, it was celebrated with great ſolemnity. Nehemiah obſerving that the city was too large for its preſent inhabitants, ordered that the chief of the nation ſhould there fix their dwelling; and cauſed them to draw lots, by which a tenth part of the whole people of Judah were obliged to dwell at Jeruſalem.

Then he applied himſelf to the reforming of ſuch corruptions, as had crept into public affairs. He curbed the inhumanity of the great, who held in ſlavery and ſubjection the ſons and daughters of the poor or unfortunate, keeping alſo the lands, which the poor had mortgaged or ſold to them.

Nehemiah undertook to diſſolve the marriages with ſtrange and idolatrous women, and ſent away all ſuch women. He obliged the people punctually to pay the miniſters of the Lord their due, and enjoined the prieſts and Levites to ſtrict attendance on their reſpective duties, and functions. He enforced the obſervation of the ſabbath, and would not permit ſtrangers to come in to buy and ſell, but kept the gates of the city ſhut all that day, And to perpetuate as much as poſſible theſe good regulations, he engaged the chief men of the nation ſolemnly to renew their covenant with the Lord: and an inſtrument to this effect was drawn up, and ſigned, by the principal men, both prieſts and people.

We read 2 Macc. i. 19, 20, 21, &c. that Nehemiah ſent to ſearch for the holy fire, which before the captivity of Babylon the prieſts had hid in a dry and deep pit; but not finding any fire there, but inſtead thereof a thick and muddy water, he ſprinkled this upon the altar; whereupon the wood which had been ſprinkled with this water, took fire preſently, as ſoon as the ſun began to appear. Which miracle coming to the knowledge of the king of Perſia, he cauſed the place to be encompaſſed with walls where the fire had been hid, and granted great favours and privileges to the prieſts. It is recorded in the ſame books, that Nehemiah erected a library, wherein he placed whatever he could find, either of the books of the prophets, of David, and of ſuch princes as had made preſents to the temple. Laſtly, he returned to Babylon, according to the promiſe he had made to king Artaxerxes, about the thirty-ſecond year of that prince. From thence he returned again to Jeruſalem, where he died in peace, having governed the people of Judah about thirty years.

The ſecond book, which in the Latin bibles bears the name of Eſdras, in the Hebrew bears the name of Nehemiah. This author ſpeaks almoſt always in the firſt perſon; and at firſt reading one would think he had writ it day by day; but, if we read it with due attention, we may obſerve ſeveral things, which could not have been written by Nehemiah. For example, memorials are quoted, wherein were regiſtered the names of the prieſts in the time of Jonathan, the ſon of Eliaſhib, and even to the times of Jeddoa or Jaddus, who lived under Darius Codomannus, and under Alexander the Great. It is therefore very probable, that Nehemiah wrote the memoirs of his government, which are cited 2 Macc. ii. 13. and that from theſe memoirs this book has been compiled.

NEHILOTH, or Nechiloth. This word is found at the beginning of the 50th Pſalm, and ſignifies the dances, or the flutes. This Pſalm is addreſſed to the maſter who preſided over the dances, which were performed in certain religious ceremonies, or to the band of muſic which performed on the flute. The title of the 50th Pſalm may be thus tranſlated, A pſalm of David, addreſſed to the maſter of muſic preſiding over the dancers, or over the flutes.

NEHUSHTA, נחשתא, νεεθὰν, ſnake, ſoothſayer, or of braſs; from נחוש or נחש nachaſh.

NEHUSHTA, or Noheſta, daughter of Elnathan, and mother of Jehoiachin, king of Judah, 2 Kings xxiv. 8.

NEHUSHTAN, נחשתן, which is of braſs or copper; by deriſion, a trifle of braſs; from נחש nachaſh.

NEHUSHTAN. This name Hezekiah, king of Judah, gave to the brazen ſerpent, that Moſes had ſet up in the wilderneſs, Numb. xxi. 8. and which had been preſerved by the Iſraelites to this time. The ſuperſtitious people having made an idol of this ſerpent, Hezekiah cauſed it to be burnt, and in deriſion gave it the name of Noheſtan, heſtan, q. d. this little brazen ſerpent. For in Hebrew, Nahaſh, or Nachaſch, ſignifies a ſerpent, and that of braſs. Vide SERPENT and PUNON.

NEIEL, נעיאל, ναιὴλ, ſhaking or motion of God; from נוע nuah, to ſhake, and אל el, God.

NEIEL, or Nehiel, a city of Aſhur, Joſh. xix. 27.

NEIGHBOUR. Propinquus or proximus, ſignifies near relations, countrymen, thoſe of the ſame tribe, neighbours, and in general, all men connected by the bonds of humanity, and whom charity requires that we ſhould conſider as friends and relations. We ſhall alledge examples of theſe ſignifications. So Gen. xxiv. 41. ſays Abraham to Eliezer: When you ſhall arrive at my relations, my kindred. So Gen. xi. 3, 7. One ſaid to another, one neighbour to another. So Levit. xxv. 25. If his neighbour, he that is of the ſame tribe, and of the ſame family, has a mind to redeem the field that was ſold.

Propinquus is uſed in this ſenſe through the whole book of Joſhua, xx. 5. He killed a man at unawares, Judg. vii. 13. One ſoldier related his dream to his comrade.

At the time of our Saviour, the Phariſees had reſtrained the word neighbour to thoſe of their own nation, or to their own friends; holding, that to hate their enemy was not forbid by the law, Matth. v. 43. Luke x. 29. But our Saviour informed them, that the whole world were their neighbours; that they ought not to do to another, what they would not have done to themſelves; that they ought to love all men as themſelves; and that this charity extended even to enemies. See the beautiful parable of the good Samaritan: the real neighbour to the diſtreſſed. Luke x. 29.

God is a neighbour to thoſe who fear him, and call upon him, Pſal. lxxxv. 9. cxlv. 18. He gives them tokens of his preſence and protection. Am I a God at hand, and not a God afar off? am I one of thoſe Gods that men have made not above two days ago? am not I an eternal God? Otherwiſe, I am a neighbour-God, that ſees every thing, knows every thing, and not an abſent, or a diſtant God, Jerem. xxiii. 23.

NEKEB, נקב, ἀννεκὲβ, that bores or pierces, or that curſes.

NEKEB, or Neceb, a city of Naphtali. Joſh. xix. 33. the ſame as Adami.

NEKODA, נקודא, painted, ſpotted of ſeveral colours: from נקד naked: otherwiſe, which is crooked, or ſhepherd that goads the cattle; from קדד kadad: otherwiſe, burning; from קדה kadah.

NEMUEL, נמואל, ימואל, or Jamuel. God that ſleeps, or ſleep of God; from נום num, ſleep, and אל el, God: otherwiſe, from the Arabic word נמה nah, increaſe, and אל el, God. Jamuel, God is his day; from יום jom, day, and the pronoun ו, his: otherwiſe, the ſea of God; from ים jam, the ſea, and אל el, God.

I. NEMUEL, or Namuel, ſon of Eliab, of Reuben, brother of Dathan and Abiram. Numb. xxvi. 9.

II. NEMUEL, or Jemuel, ſon of Simeon, head of a family. Numb. xxvi. 12.

NEOMENIA, Νεομηνια, new moon; Coloſſ. ii. 16. A Greek word, that ſignifies the firſt day of the moon or month, according to the Hebrews. A day conſecrated to God by a ſacrifice, Numb. x. 10. and xxviii. 11. From νέος, new, and μήν, month.

NEOMENIA, from the Gr. Νεομηνία. The Hebrews had a particular veneration for the firſt day of every month, and Moſes appointed peculiar ſacrifices for this day. Numb. xxviii. 11, 12. But he gave no orders that it ſhould be kept as an holy day. Nor can it be proved, that the ancient Jews obſerved it ſo: it was a feſtival of merely voluntary devotion. It appears that even from the time of Saul they made, on this day, a ſort of family entertainment, ſince David ought then to have been at the king's table, and Saul took it amiſs that he did not attend, 1 Sam. xx. 5 & 18. Moſes inſinuates, that beſides the national ſacrifices then conſtantly offered, every private perſon had his particular ſacrifices of devotion, Numb. x. 10. The beginning of the month was proclaimed by ſound of trumpet, at the offering of the ſolemn ſacrifices, Numb. x. 10. But the moſt celebrated neomenia was that at the beginning of the civil year, or firſt day of the month Tizri, Levit. xxiii. 24. This was a ſacred day, on which no ſervile labour was performed; on this they offered particular burnt-ſacrifices, and ſounded the trumpets in the temple.

In the kingdom of the ten tribes, the ſerious among the people uſed to aſſemble at the houſes of the prophets, to hear their inſtructions. The Shunamite, who entertained Eliſha, propoſing to viſit that prophet, her huſband ſaid to her; Why do you go to day, ſince it is neither ſabbath, nor new-moon? 2 Kings iv. 23. Iſaiah declares, i. 13, 14. that the Lord abhors the new-moons, the ſabbaths, and the other days of feſtival and aſſembly of thoſe Jews, who in other things neglected his laws. Ezekiel ſays, xlv. 17. vide & 1 Chr. xxiii. 31. & 2 Chron. viii. 13. that the burnt-offerings that were uſed to be offered on the day of the new moon, were provided at the king's expence, and that on this day was to be opened the eaſtern gate of the court of the prieſts, Ezek. xlvi. 1, 2. Judith kept no faſt on feſtival days, or on the new-moon, Judith viii. 6. The modern Jews keep the neomenia only as a feaſt of devotion, which each may obſerve, or not, as he pleaſes. They think it rather belongs to the women than the men. The women forbear work, and they indulge a little more on this day than on others. In the prayers of the ſynagogue, they read from Pſalm 113 to 118. They bring forth the roll of the law, and read therein to four perſons. They call to remembrance the ſacrifice, that on this day uſed to be offered in the temple. On the evening of the ſabbath which follows the new moon, or ſome other evening following, when the new moon firſt appears, all the Jews aſſemble, and pray to God, as the creator of the planets, and the reſtorer of the new moon; then raiſing themſelves towards heaven, they aſk of God to be preſerved from misfortune; then after mentioning David, they ſalute each other, and ſeparate.

Spencer has a long diſſertation on the Neomenia, in which he ſhews very well, that the Gentiles heretofore honoured the firſt day of the month, out of veneration to the moon. He would conclude from hence, that the Hebrews borrowed this practice from ſtrange and idolatrous people. But he by no means proves this, and it is much more probable, that without any deſign of imitating the Hebrews, they thought fit to honour the moon at the beginning of the month, i. e. her firſt appearance: this worſhip of the moon was general among many nations.

NEOPHYTE, Νεόφυτος, Greek, literally a new plant, or newly planted; from νέος, new, and φύτος, a plant. Vide NOVICE.

NEPHATH DOR, נפת־דור, νεφαδὼρ, honey-comb of the habitation, or of the generation; from נוף nuph, honey-comb, and דור dur or dor, abode, or generation: otherwiſe, diſtillation, or ſieve of the habitation, or of the generation; from nuph, and dor.

NEPHATH-DOR, or, the city Dor, 1 Kings iv. 11.

NEPHEG, נפג, ναφὴγ, weak, feeble, faint; from נוג phug.

NEPHEG, or Napheg, ſon of David, 2 Sam. v. 15. 1 Chron. iii. 7. xiv. 6.

NEPHI, otherwiſe Νέφθαρ, Naphthar, purification; perhaps from נוף nuph, to winnow, to ſift.

NEPHI. So ſeveral writers name that place, where Nehemiah found the pit where the holy fire had been hidden, 2 Macc. i. 36. But copies vary the word Nephi: the Syriac and Greek of the Roman edition read Naphtai; the Alexandrian MS. and other Greek copies, Nephtar.

NEPHTAR, Νέφθαρ, ſee NEPHI, 2 Macc. i. 36. Purification, illumination; from פתר phathar. But if we derive it from the Chaldee פטר patar, it may ſignify pure, unmixed: or, if we read Necphar, from the Hebrew Caphar, it may ſignify to expiate, purify, or cleanſe.

NEPHTOAH, נפתוח, ναφτὼ, opening, or ſculpture; from פתח pathach.

NEPHTOAH. The fountain of Nephtoah in Benjamin, Joſh. xv. 9. Travellers are ſhewed a fountain, as the fountain of Nephtoah, near to which was formerly a church dedicated to John the Baptiſt, becauſe it is believed that Zechariah and Elizabeth dwelt there, to whoſe uſe this fountain ſerved.

NEPHUSIM, נפוסים, who are crumbled, or reduced to duſt: from פסס paſas.

NER, נר, lamp, brightneſs: otherwiſe, land new tilled: from ניר nir.

NER, ſon of Abiel, and father of Abner, the general of Saul's armies, 1 Sam. xiv. 50, 51, related to Saul.

NEREUS, Νερέας, light, or land newly tilled. See NER.

NEREUS. St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 15. ſalutes Nereus and his ſiſter. Some believe that this is the Nereus, whoſe faſt is kept as of a martyr, with St. Achillæus, May 12. But there is little probability that the Nereus, mentioned by St. Paul, ſhould have lived to the time of Trajan, fifty years from the time in which the martyrdoms of Nereus and Achillæus are placed. However, the thing is not abſolutely impoſſible. The acts of Nereus and Achillæus being works of no authority, we think it improper to extract from them.

NERGAL, נרגל, νηργὲλ, ſpy, or watchman; from רגל ragal: otherwiſe, light diſcovered, or preſerved; from נר ner, light, and גלל galal, to diſcover: otherwiſe, land newly cultivated, or diſcoveries; from ניר nir, new-ploughed land, and גלל galal, to diſcover.

NERGAL, or Neregal, a god of the Cuthites, 2 Kings xvii. 30. The Rabbins, followed by ſome interpreters, think the god Nergal was worſhipped under the ſhape of a wooden hen. Others, that the Cuthites adored fire, and kept up a perpetual fire upon their altars, in honour of the ſun. Ner ſignifies a lamp. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , page .

NERI, Νηρι, my light.

NERIAH, נריה, νήριος, light, or land, of the Lord, or the Lord is my light; from נר ner. (See NER,) and יה jah, the Lord.

NERIGLISSAR, or Nigliſſor; he ſucceeded Evilmerodach,

Evilmerodach, according to Beroſus. See NIGLISSOR.

NERO. The emperor Nero is not named in Scripture; but he is indicated by his title of emperor, and by his ſurname Cæſar:—for, to him St. Paul appealed after his impriſonment by Felix, and his examination by Feſtus, who was ſwayed by the Jews. St. Paul was therefore carried to Rome, where he arrived in February, A. D. 60. Here he continued two years, preaching the goſpel with freedom, till he became famous even in the emperor's court, in which were a good number of Chriſtians: for he ſalutes the Philippians in the name of the brethren who were of the houſhold of Cæſar, that is, of Nero's court, Philip. iv. 22. i. 12, 13. We have no particular information how he cleared himſelf from the accuſations of the Jews; whether by anſwering before Nero, or whether his enemies dropped their proſecutions; [which ſeems probable from Acts xxviii. 21.] but this is certain, that he was liberated A. D. 62.

St. Paul returned to Rome A. D. 65, the 11th and 12th of Nero; and having, as it is ſaid, made a proſelyte of a concubine of this prince, he was ſeized and impriſoned by him. He appeared before him, and was forſaken by every body on that important occaſion; but God delivered him at this time out of the mouth of the lion, 2 Tim. iv. 16, 17. He appeared before him a ſecond time, and was condemned to be beheaded A. D. 66. The apoſtle Peter was alſo apprehended, and put to death by the orders of the ſame prince, at the ſame time.

Nero is reckoned the firſt perſecutor of the Chriſtian church; his perſecution was A. D. 64. Nero, the moſt cruel, and ſavage of all men, alſo the moſt wicked and depraved, began his perſecution againſt the Chriſtians A. D. 64. on pretence of the burning of Rome, of which every one thought himſelf to be the author. He endeavoured to throw all the odium on the Chriſtians; thoſe were ſeized firſt who were known publickly as ſuch, and by their means many others were diſcovered. They were condemned to death, and were even inſulted at their ſufferings. Some were ſewed up in ſkins of beaſts, and then expoſed to dogs to be torn in pieces: others were nailed to croſſes; others periſhed by flames; [they were ſewed up in pitched coverings, which being ſet on fire, they ſerved as torches to the people] and were lighted up in the night time. Nero gave leave to uſe his own gardens, as the ſcene of all theſe cruelties. From this time edicts were publiſhed againſt the Chriſtians, and many martyrs ſuffered, eſpecially in Italy. We have mentioned the deaths of St. Peter and St. Paul, conſequent on this perſecution; which probably continued to the death of Nero, A. D. 68, and the 14th of this emperor, who killed himſelf the 9th or 11th of June. The revolt of the Jews from the Romans happened about A. D. 65 and 66, the 12th and 13th of Nero. The city of Jeruſalem making an inſurrection A. D. 66, Florus there ſlew 3,600 perſons, and thus began the war. A little while afterwards thoſe of Jeruſalem killed the Roman garriſon. Ceſtius on this came to Jeruſalem, to ſuppreſs the ſedition; but was forced to retire after having beſieged it about ſix weeks, and was routed in his retreat November 8, A. D. 66. About the end of the ſame year Nero gave Veſpaſian the command of his troops againſt the Jews. This general carried on the war in Galilee, and Judæa, during A. D. 67 and 68, the 13th and 14th of Nero. But Nero killing himſelf the 14th year of his reign, Jeruſalem was not beſieged till after his death, A. D. 70, the 1ſt and 2d of Veſpaſian.

NERONIAS. Joſephus ſays, that the younger Agrippa gave the name of Neronias to the city of Paneas, near the ſource of Jordan.

NETHANIAH, נתניה, gift of the Lord; from נתן nathan, a gift, and יה jah, the Lord.

II. NETHANIAH, a Levite, head of the fifth band of muſicians, 1 Chron. xxv. 2, 12.

NETHINIM, נתינים, given, or offered; from nathan.

NETHINIM. From the Hebrew nathan, to give. The nethinim were ſervants given and dedicated to the ſervice of the tabernacle and temple, to perform the moſt laborious offices therein; as the carrying of wood and water thither. At firſt the Gibeonites were deſtined to this ſtation: and, afterwards, the Canaanites that ſurrendered themſelves, and whoſe lives were ſpared. We read, Ezra viii. 20. that the nethinim were ſlaves devoted by David, and other princes, to the miniſtry of the temple; and Ezra ii. 58. that they were ſlaves given by Solomon: the children of Solomon's ſervants. And we ſee, 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. that that prince had ſubdued the remains of the Canaanites. It is very probable he gave a good number of them to the prieſts and Levites, for the temple ſervice. The nethinim were carried into captivity with the tribe of Judah, and great numbers of them were placed on the coaſts of the Caſpian ſea, from whence Ezra brought ſome of them, Ez. viii. 17. At the return from the captivity, they dwelt in cities appointed for them.

them. There were ſome of them alſo at Jeruſalem, who inhabited that part of the city called Ophel. Two hundred and twenty returned with Ezra: and thoſe that followed Zerubbabel made up three hundred ninety-two. Nehem. iii. 26. This number was but ſmall in regard to their offices; ſo that we find afterwards, a ſolemnity called Xylophoria, in which the people carried wood to the temple with great ceremony, to keep up the fire of the altar of burnt ſacrifices, Joſeph. de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 17. ſeu λε in Græco.

NETOPHA, נטופה, νετωΦὰθ, drop, diſtillation, amber, myrrh. or gum, &c. from nataph: otherwiſe, inclination of the mouth; from נטה natah, and פה pe, the mouth.

NETOPHA, Netupha, Netuphat, or Netophathi, a city and country between Bethlehem and Anathoth, Ezra ii. 22. Nehem. vii. 26. Jerem. xl. 8. and 1 Chron. ix. 16. We find ſeveral perſons in Scripture, natives of Netophati.

NETOPHATI, ſon of Salma, 1 Chron. ii. 54. Probably this Netophati was father of the inhabitants of Netuphat. 2 Sam. xxiii. 28.

NEW. It is put for extraordinary or unuſual. The Lord has choſe a new method of making war; ſays Deborah in her ſong, Judg. v. 8. If the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and ſwallow them up, you ſhall thereby know that they have blaſphemed the Lord, Numb. xvi. 30. And Wiſdom xv. 3. ſpeaking of manna, ſays, the Hebrews taſted a new kind of food; God gave them miraculous bread. And ſpeaking of the quails he ſays, Viderunt novam creaturum avium, Wiſd. xix. 11.

God promiſes a new heaven and a new earth, at the time of the Meſſiah; Iſai. lxv. 17. lxvi. 22. that is, an univerſal renovation of manners, ſentiments, and actions, throughout the world. This paſſage is alſo referred to the end of the world; when will be ſeen a new heaven and a new earth; not that the preſent heaven and earth will be annihilated; but the air, the earth, and the elements will be more perfect, or at leaſt, together with the inhabitants, ſhall be of a nature ſuperior to thoſe viciſſitudes and alterations, that we now ſuffer from theſe elements.

God alſo promiſes to his people a new covenant, a new ſpirit, a new heart; and this was fully accompliſhed at our Saviour's coming, Ezek. xi. 19. xviii. 31. xxxvi. 26.

A new hymn, a new ſong; things of this kind generally pleaſe, the more they have the character of novelty.

God ſays he is going to create a new thing upon the earth, a woman ſhall compaſs a man, which is underſtood of the conception and birth of the Meſſiah. Jerem. xxxi. 22. Several of the moderns underſtand it otherwiſe. I am going to do a new thing in Iſrael: hereafter women ſhall ſeek men in marriage. Vide MARRIAGE. [But it is thought the word rendered to compaſs ſhould be rendered to turn about—a woman ſhall repel—diſcomfit—turn away a man.]

NEZIAH, נציח, νεσίζ, victorious, ſtrong, or eternal; from netzac. Ezra ii. 54. A Nethinim.

NEZIB, נציב, which ſtands upright, a ſtatue, or elevated pillar or garriſon; from נצב netzib: or a plant, according to the Syriac. Joſh. xv. 43. a city.

NIBHAZ, נבחז, that fructifies, or that produces viſion; from נוב nub, to be fruitful, and חזה chazah, to ſee: otherwiſe, to propheſy, to foretel, or to ſpeak; from נבא niba. This is a Mediſh word; its true etymology is not in the Hebrew.

NIBHAZ, or Nebachas, a god of the Hivites, 2 Kings xvii. 31. It is not known who this god was. Literally, it may imply Nebo the ſeer, the oracle of Nebo. The Rabbins, followed by ſeveral commentators, think Nebachas had the ſhape of a dog, ſomething like the Anubis of the Egyptians;

Omnigenûmque Deûm monſtra & latrator Anubis.
VIRG. ÆNEID. vi.

Nabac in Hebrew ſignifies to bark. To ſupport this opinion, they obſerve that ſome of the Orientals had a great veneration for the dog. Among the Egyptians whole cities worſhipped this animal. The Magians, ſays Herodotus, differ from the Egyptian prieſts, for the Egyptians kill no animal, except what they ſacrifice to their gods: whereas the Magians ſlay all kinds of animals, excepting men and dogs. They even think it meritorious to kill great numbers of reptiles, ſerpents, and other ſuch creatures. They ſacrificed a dog to Hecate, (the moon) and this animal was conſecrated to her. There was alſo a dog in the myſteries of Mithras, or the ſun; and in a ſacrifice to this deity, on an ancient bas-relief, is a dog licking up the blood of a bull. It is ſaid, that Zoroaſter inſerted among his rules of charity, that dogs were to be protected and loved. The Perſians expoſed dead bodies to dogs, before they buried them, thinking it a token of happineſs, to be drawn about by dogs. This animal is the ſymbol of fidelity and vigilance; yet I do not know that any one has advanced, that dogs were worſhipped any where beſides in Egypt. Vide DOG.

NIBSHAN, נבשן, that ſpeaks, propheſies: or fruits of ſleep, or of change; from nub, or niba, and שנה ſhanah, to change, and ישן jaſhan, to ſleep: otherwiſe, prophecy of the tooth, or of ivory; from שן ſhen.

NIBSHAN, or Nebſan, a city of Judah, Joſh. xv. 62. The Hebrew reads Nipſan.

NICANOR, Νικάνωρ, victorious; from the Greek νικάω, to conquer.

NICANOR. In Scripture there are ſeveral perſons named Nicanor.

I. NICANOR, ſon of Patroclus, he returned from Rome with king Antiochus Epiphanes, and had a great ſhare in his favour. 2 Macc. viii. 19. 2 Macc. xiv. 12. ſays, he was maſter of the elephants. He was ſent into Judæa the firſt time, A. M. 3839, by Antiochus Epiphanes, or rather by Lyſias, who governed for Antiochus, then gone into Perſia. Nicanor was ſent into Judæa with Gorgias, to counteract Judas Maccabæus. He thought himſelf ſo ſure of victory, that he pretended to pay the two thouſand talents which the king owed the Romans for tribute, with the money that ſhould ariſe from the ſale of Jewiſh ſlaves; and ſent to the cities on the ſea-coaſt, to invite merchants to come and buy ſuch ſlaves, promiſing them fourſcore and ten for one talent.

Judas Maccabæus having intelligence of this incurſion prepared to reſiſt it, which he did effectually, (vide MACCABÆUS JUDAS) for, diſtributing his army into four bodies, he gave the command of fifteen hundred men to each of his three brothers, Simon, Joſeph, and Jonathan; and having given them the watch-word, the aſſiſtance of God, he put himſelf at the head of three thouſand men, ſet upon Nicanor, killed above nine thouſand of his men, and routed his whole army.

Nicanor returned into Judæa about four years afterwards, when Demetrius Soter, ſon of Seleucus, was come back into Syria, and had aſcended the throne of his anceſtors. This prince then ſent Nicanor into Judæa, with orders to deſtroy all thoſe that ſhould diſpute his commands, and to eſtabliſh Alcimus who had bought the high-prieſthood.

At firſt he endeavoured to get Judas into his power by ſtratagem, but Judas perceiving the deſign, withdrew in time. Then he marched againſt Nicanor with his army, and gave him battle at Capharſalama. Nicanor had about five thouſand men killed on the ſpot, and the reſt fled to Jeruſalem. He came thither alſo himſelf, where he ridiculed the burnt offerings offered for the kings of Syria, treated the prieſts with contempt, and threatened at his return to burn the temple, if they did not deliver Judas into his hands.

Then he departed, and came to encamp about Bethoron, where he received a reinforcement of Syrian troops. Judas alſo drew near with his army, and encamped at Adarſa, four miles from Bethoron. The battle was fought the thirteenth day of the month Adar, when Nicanor's army was intirely routed, and himſelf ſlain in the fight. They cut off Nicanor's head, and his right hand, which he had ſacrilegiouſly ſtretched out againſt the temple; theſe the Jews brought, and hung them up in the ſight of Jeruſalem, and ordered that for the future, this day ſhould be celebrated as a feſtival to all Iſrael. Such was the end of Nicanor, A. M. 3843, ante A. D. 161.

The ſecond book of the Maccabees relates more at length this laſt expedition of Nicanor againſt Judæa, 2 Macc. xiv. 12, 13, &c.

II. NICANOR, one of the ſeven firſt deacons, who were appointed at Jeruſalem ſoon after the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, on occaſion of the diviſion among the believers into two parties, thoſe who ſpoke Greek, and thoſe of Paleſtine, who ſpoke Hebrew or Syriac, Acts vi. 5, &c. Nothing particular is known of Nicanor. The Roman martyrology ſays, that he obtained the crown of martyrdom January 10, in the iſland of Cyprus. The Greeks keep his feaſt Auguſt 27, with that of the ſaints Procorus, Timon, and Parmenas. Dorotheus ſays he was put to death with many others the ſame day as St. Stephen; which inſinuates that he ſuffered martyrdom at Jeruſalem, and not in Cyprus. His name is found in the Menæa, December 28.

III. NICANOR, or Nicator, Demetrius Nicator, king of Syria, aſcended the throne in A. M. 3854, ante A. D. 150. See DEMETRIUS.

NICHES. It is ſaid in the prophet Amos, v. 25. that the Iſraelites in their wanderings in the wilderneſs, bore the tabernacle of their Moloch, and Chiun their images, the ſtar of their gods, which they made to themſelves. St. Stephen, Acts vii. 43. upbraids them with the ſame. It is thought with great probability, that Moloch, and thoſe other Pagan deities, which they carried with them in the deſert, were borne in niches upon men's ſhoulders, or drawn about on covered carriages, as we know the heathen carried their idols in proceſſion, or in public marches. There are ſome who believe that thoſe ſilver temples of the goddeſs Diana, which were made and ſold at Epheſus, were alſo theſe niches, or portable temples, for the devotion of pilgrims. We muſt a little farther illuſtrate this piece of antiquity.

The cuſtom of carrying the images of the gods under tents, and in covered litters, came originally from the Egyptians. Herodotus ſpeaks of a feaſt of Iſis, wherein her ſtatue was carried upon a chariot with four wheels, drawn by her prieſts.

The

The ſame author ſpeaking of one of their deities, ſays, they carried it from one temple to another, incloſed in a little chappel made of gilt wood. Clemens of Alexandria ſpeaks of an Egyptian proceſſion, wherein they carried two dogs of gold, an hawk, and an ibis. The ſame father quotes the words of Menander, who rallied thoſe vagrant divinities, that could not continue in one place. Macrobius ſays, that the Egyptian prieſts carried the ſtatue of Jupiter of Heliopolis upon their ſhoulders, as the gods of the Romans were carried in the pomp of the games of the Circus. Philo of Biblos relates, that they uſed to carry Agrotes, a Phœnician deity, in a covered niche upon a car drawn by beaſts. Euſeb. Prep. lib. i.

The Egyptian prieſts placed Jupiter Ammon upon a little boat, from whence hung plates of ſilver, by the motion of which they formed a judgment of the will of the Deity, and from whence they made their reſponſes to ſuch as conſulted them. The Egyptians and Carthaginians, as Servius reports, had little images, which were carried upon chariots, and gave oracles by the motion they communicated to thoſe carriages. The Gauls, as we are told by Sulpicius Severus, carried their gods abroad into the fields, covered with a white veil. Tacitus ſpeaks of an unknown goddeſs, who reſided in an iſland of the ocean. They keep for her a covered chariot, which none dares approach but her prieſt: and when he ſays that the goddeſs is entered therein, two heifers are harneſſed to it, who draw the chariot where they think fit, and then bring it back into her grove. They waſh the chariot, and the veils that cover it, and then they drown the ſlaves that were employed in the ſervice. Here therefore are examples of gods carried in niches and in chariots.

We muſt yet give ſome examples of little temples of metal. Diodorus Siculus ſpeaks of two ſmall temples of gold. There was one at Lacedæmon, which was all of braſs, and therefore was called Chalcotoichos, or the houſe of braſs. Victor in his deſcription of Rome gives inſtances of ſome of the ſame metal in this city; but I ſhould rather think, that the little temples of Diana of Epheſus, which were made and ſold by Demetrius the ſilverſmith, were either models in little of the temple of this goddeſs, or niches wherein the goddeſs herſelf was repreſented.

NICODEMUS, Νικόδημος, innocent blood; from נקי naki, innocent, and דם dam, blood: according to the Greek, victory of the people; from νικάω, to conquer, and δήμος, the people.

NICODEMUS, a diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt, by nation a Jew; by ſect a Phariſee. John iii. 1. The goſpel calls him a ruler of the Jews, and our Saviour entitles him maſter in Iſrael. When our Saviour began to manifeſt himſelf by his miracles at Jeruſalem, at the firſt paſſover after his baptiſm, Nicodemus came to him by night, for further information. Jeſus told him, that no one could ſee the kingdom of heaven, except he ſhould be born again. Nicodemus taking this in a literal ſenſe, anſwered, How can a man that is old, be born again? Can he enter a ſecond time into his mother's womb? Jeſus proceeded to explain the nature of this new birth: alluded to the hiſtory of the brazen ſerpent in the wilderneſs, and hinted plainly at his ſalutary miſſion to redeem mankind.

After this converſation Nicodemus became a diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt, and no doubt he came to hear him, as often as our Saviour viſited Jeruſalem. When the prieſts and Phariſees had ſent officers to ſeize Jeſus, who returning to them, reported, that never man ſpoke as he did; the Phariſees replied, "Are you alſo of his diſciples? Is there any one of the elders or Phariſees that has believed in him?" Then Nicodemus thought himſelf obliged to anſwer, ſaying, Does the law permit us to condemn any one before he is heard? To which they replied, Are you alſo a Galilean? Read the Scriptures and you will find, that never any prophet came out of Galilee. The council broke up ſuddenly. Nicodemus declared himſelf openly a diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt, when he came with Joſeph of Arimathea to pay the laſt duties to the body of Chriſt crucified, which they took down from the croſs, embalmed, and laid in the ſepulchre. So far Scripture relates.—

Nicodemus received baptiſm from the diſciples of Chriſt, but it is uncertain whether before or after his paſſion. The Jews then depoſed him from his dignity of ſenator, excommunicated him, and drove him from Jeruſalem. Photius Cod. 171. It is ſaid alſo, that they would have put him to death, but that in conſideration of Gamaliel, who was his uncle or couſin-german, they contented themſelves with beating him almoſt to death, and plundering his goods. Gamaliel conveyed him to his country-houſe, and provided him with what was neceſſary for his ſupport; and when he died, he buried him honourably near St. Stephen. His body was diſcovered in 415, with thoſe of St. Stephen and Gamaliel, and the Latin church pays honour to all three together, Auguſt 3. Vide Lucian, de St. Steph. invent.

There is extant an apocryphal goſpel under the name of Nicodemus, which in ſome MSS. is entitled the Acts of Pilate. But it is very certain this is not what is cited by the ancients under the name of "the Acts of Pilate," which he ſent Tiberius, being modern, and deſerving no conſideration. At the end of this ſpurious goſpel are read theſe words, which ſufficiently ſhew its falſity. In the name of the Holy Trinity here end the acts of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, which were found at Jeruſalem by Theodoſius the Great in the Pretorium of Pontius Pilate, in the public acts which were written in the nineteenth year of the emperor Tiberius, and the ſeventeenth year of Herod, ſon of Herod, king of Galilee, the eighth day before the kalends of April, which is the twenty-third day of March, in the year of the two hundredth and ſecond Olympiad, under the chief prieſts Joſeph and Caiphas. Which was brought to the form of a hiſtory by Nicodemus, and written in Hebrew after the crucifixion and paſſion of our Saviour.

NICOLAS, Νικόλαος, Νικολαΐται, victory of the people; from νικάω, to overcome, and λαὸς, the people.

I. NICOLAS, of Damaſcus, a peripatetic philoſopher, poet, and hiſtorian, ſurnamed of Damaſcus, becauſe a native of that city. He lived in the time of Auguſtus, a little before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, and had a great ſhare in the favour of that emperor, and alſo of Herod the Great, king of the Jews, who employed him in ſeveral affairs of conſequence, of which he always acquitted himſelf very honourably. Joſephus often quotes his hiſtory; but in ſeveral places accuſes him of diſguiſing the truth, in favour of Herod, to whom he had devoted his pen. He wrote a general hiſtory, and Joſephus quotes ſomething from it, which he had ſaid of Antiochus Epiphanes. Suidas reckoned only eighty books of the hiſtory of Nicolas of Damaſcus. Joſephus cites the 124th, and Athenæus reckons as far as 144. He compoſed ſeveral other works. Henry of Valois, publiſhed at Paris in the year 1634, in Greek and Latin, the collection made by Conſtantine Porphyrogenetus, of the ſeveral works of Nicolas of Damaſcus. Theſe collections belonged to M. de Peireſch, who had procured them to be bought in the iſle of Cyprus.

II. NICOLAS, one of the ſeven firſt deacons. Acts vi. 5. He was a proſelyte of Antioch, i. e. converted from Paganiſm to the religion of the Jews. Afterwards he embraced Chriſtianity, and was one of the moſt zealous and moſt holy among the firſt Chriſtians; ſo that he was choſen for one of the ſeven firſt deacons of the church of Jeruſalem.

His memory has been tarniſhed in the church by a blemiſh, from which it has not been poſſible to clear him hitherto. Certain heretics were called Nicolaites from his name; and though perhaps he had no ſhare in their errors, nor their irregularities, yet he is ſuſpected to have given ſome occaſion to them. This is what the ancients inform us in this matter. He had a wife who was very handſome, and in imitation of thoſe that aimed at a great degree of perfection, he left her, to live in a ſtate of continence. Epiphanius ſays, that he did not perſevere in this reſolution, but took his wife again, and in order to juſtify this conduct, he advanced principles contrary to truth and purity. He plunged himſelf into irregularities, and gave beginning to the ſect of the Nicolaites, to that of the Gnoſtics, and to ſeveral others, who followed the bent of their natural paſſions, to crimes and wickedneſſes.

St. Epiphanius is ſupported in this by St. Irenæus, Tertullian, St. Hyppolytus, St. Hilary, St. Gregory of Nyſſa, St. Philaſter of Breſſa, St. Jerom, Caſſian, Gregory the Great, Pacian, pope Gelaſius, Gildas, and ſeveral moderns, who ſay that Nicolas the deacon was head and author of the impious and infamous ſect of the Nicolaites.

But Clemens Alexandrinus, more ancient than Epiphanius, expreſſes much eſteem for Nicolas, and relates the affair otherwiſe, lib. iii. Strom. The apoſtles, ſays he, having made ſome reproaches to Nicolas, as being too jealous of his wife, he cauſed her to come before them, and declared that any one might eſpouſe her that pleaſed. This declaration, made in pure ſimplicity, and without reflection, was only deſigned as a proof that his attachment and paſſion for his wife did not overcome him; and in reality, adds Clement, I have been informed, he never cohabited with any other woman. His ſon and his daughters, who lived very long, always remained ſingle. But ſuch as were glad to catch at the pretence of his authority, ſcreened themſelves under what he had done; in order to palliate and vindicate thoſe irregularities which they practiſed.

Theſe heretics grounded themſelves, ſays the ſame Clement, on a word that Nicolas let fall, that "the fleſh ought to be abuſed." By which he meant nothing elſe, but that we ought to controul and ſuppreſs our inclinations to ſenſuality and concupiſcence; the paſſions, and the impetuoſities of the fleſh; whereas, theſe diſciples of pleaſure explained theſe words according to their own ſenſuality, and not according to the meaning of this apoſtolical man. Euſebius having related, that the Nicolaites gloried in having Nicolas the deacon as the author of their ſect; he confutes them by this paſſage of Clemens Alexandrinus. Theodoret does the ſame, and declares ſtill more openly for the ſentiment of Clemens. For, excuſing the permiſſion of Nicolas, by which he allowed any one to marry his wife, he ſays, that the deacon had in reality no inclination to permit it, it, but only intended by this voluntary offer, to confute the murmuring raiſed againſt him. St. Auſtin, Victorinus Petavienſis, Iſidorus, and the council of Tours acquit him likewiſe. The apoſtolical conſtitutions, and the interpolated letters of St. Ignatius the martyr, affirm that the Nicolaites falſely aſſumed his name. This is what is ſaid in his vindication.

Caſſian ſays, that ſome diſtinguiſh Nicolas the founder of the ſect of the Nicolaites, from Nicolas one of the ſeven deacons. Jeſus Chriſt, Rev. xi. 6, 15. condemns the actions and the doctrine of the Nicolaites. He ſays he hates them, he makes it a merit in the biſhop of Epheſus that he abhors them, and reproaches the biſhop of Pergamus that ſome of his church adhered to their doctrine. In all theſe paſſages St. John does not inſinuate the leaſt thing that may ſeem to excuſe Nicolas, or clear him from the accuſation of being the author of the ſect of the Nicolaites; and we ſee that no Chriſtian church has ever paid any honour to the memory of Nicolas, which is a great circumſtance againſt him: [nevertheleſs if Nicolas the deacon, was not the ſame Nicolas, as the founder of the ſect, this obſervation is of no force: and it is quite as ſtrong taken the other way: for St. John does not hint at his ever having been in any honourable office, and now behaving unworthily, or becoming depraved, &c. which probably he would have done, had this Nicolas been the deacon.]

NICOLAITES, or Nicolaitans. The Nicolaites were frequent in Aſia from the end of the firſt century: ſince Jeſus Chriſt expreſsly condemns them himſelf, in the Revelations. St. Irenæus ſays, that adulteries, and the uſe of meats offered to idols, were held as indifferent things among them. Victorinus Petavienſis ſays, that they ate theſe meats after having exorciſed them, and forgave fornicators eight days after their offence. Theodoret ſays, that the two diſtinguiſhing characters of this hereſy were libertiniſm and folly. St. Epiphanius gives a long account, both of their infamous actions, and their extravagant opinions concerning God and the creation. St. Auſtin ſays, that they have women in common, and make no ſcruple to conform to all the Pagan ſuperſtitions. They tell a number of fables about the creation and diſpoſition of the world, intermingling many barbarous names of angels and princes, to amaze their auditors; though to people of underſtanding they are rather ſubjects of mirth than of terror. Through all their diſguiſes it is eaſy to perceive, that they hold, the world was not created by God, but was the work of certain powers whom they feign with an inſupportable temerity, or whom they take for granted, from the credit of others, with a credulity not leſs blameable.

St. Irenæus calls them a branch of the Gnoſtics, and ſays, it was againſt them St. John wrote his goſpel. Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, they had a certain book on the authority of which they relied, and by which they imputed to God himſelf the infamous actions they committed. They continued but a very little time, according to Euſebius; at leaſt the name of Nicolaites did not continue long: but their errors were adopted by other ſects, and Tertullian ſays, that the Cainites eſpouſed them. The Nicolaites were revived under the reign of Lewis the Debonaire, about A. D. 852, as Sigebert of Gemblours ſays in his Chronicon; and again in the eleventh century, under pope Urban II. The Nicolaites were certain prieſts, deacons, and ſubdeacons, who maintained that marriage was allowed them. They were condemned by the council of Placentia in the year 1095. Hæreſis Nicolaitarum, id eſt, incontinentium ſubdiaconorum, diaconorum & præcipue ſacerdotum, irretráctabiliter damnata eſt, &c.

NICOPOLIS, Νικόπολις, the city of victory, or victorious city; from νικάω, to conquer, and πόλις, a city.

I. NICOPOLIS, a city of Epirus, on the gulph of Ambracia; here St. Paul paſſed his winter A.D. 64. He wrote to Titus, then in Crete, to come to him hither, Tit. iii. 12. Some are of opinion, that the city of Nicopolis, where St. Paul was, was not that of Epirus, but that of Thrace, on the borders of Macedonia, near the river Neſſus.

II. NICOPOLIS, otherwiſe Emmaus, a city of Paleſtine. See EMMAUS. It began to bear the name of Nicopolis under the emperor Alexander, ſon of Mammæus. Julius Africanus, an eccleſiaſtical author, famous for his Chronicles, was ſent to the emperor to ſolicit the re-eſtabliſhment of this city, which before was called Emmaus. It is doubted whether this Emmaus be the ſame as that mentioned in the goſpel. Conſult M. Reland, Paleſtina, lib. ii. cap. 6. & lib. iii.

NIDDUI, נדוי, ſeparated, excommunicated.

NIDDUI. This was (ſay they) the leſſer ſort of excommunication in uſe among the Hebrews. He who had incurred this, was to withdraw himſelf from his relations, at leaſt to the diſtance of four cubits. It commonly continued a month. If it was not taken off in a month, it might be prolonged for ſixty or even ninety days. But if within this term the excommunicated perſon did not give ſatisfaction, he fell into the cherem, which was a ſecond ſort of excommunication;

cation; and thence into the third ſort, called ſchammatha, the moſt terrible of all. See the article EXCOMMUNICATION, and Cherem.

NIGER, ſurnamed Simon, mentioned in the Acts of the Apoſtles, chap. xiii. 1. He was a prophet and teacher, and was one of thoſe who laid their hands on Saul and Barnabas, for the execution of that office to which the Holy Ghoſt had appointed them. Some believe it is he that is called Simon the Cyrenian, who carried the croſs of Chriſt to Mount Calvary: but the only proof for this opinion is a ſimilitude of names. St. Epiphanius ſpeaks of one Niger among the ſeventy diſciples of our Saviour. The church makes no mention of Simon Niger in its offices, nor in its martyrologies.

NIGHT. The ancient Hebrews began their artificial day in the evening, and ended it the next evening; ſo that the night preceded the day, whence it is ſaid, Gen. i. 5. evening and morning one day. They allowed twelve hours to the night, and twelve to the day. The hours of the day and thoſe of the night were not equal, except at the equinox. At other times, when the hours of the night were long, thoſe of the day were ſhort, as in winter; and contrary-wiſe, when the hours of the night were ſhort, as at Midſummer, the hours of the day were long in proportion.

Night is put for a time of affliction and adverſity, Pſal. xvii. 3. Thou haſt proved mine heart, thou haſt viſited me in the night, thou haſt tried me; that is, by adverſity and tribulation. And Iſaiah xxi. 12. the morning cometh, and alſo the night. The morning is come, and behold the night; we expected peace, and we are overwhelmed with troubles and diſaſters. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXXXVIII.

Night is alſo put for the time of death, John ix. 4. The night cometh wherein no man can work. I muſt fulfil, ſays Chriſt, the duties of my miſſion while it is day, and while I am yet alive. And St. Paul ſays, 1 Theſſ. v. 2. that the day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night. It is thought the end of the world, and the day of judgment, will come in the night time. [This can be underſtood only of the inhabitants of ſome certain place of the earth; becauſe when it is night in one part of the earth, it is always day in another part.]

Children of the day, and children of the night, in a moral and figurative ſenſe, denote good men and wicked men, Chriſtians and Gentiles. The diſciples of the Son of God are the children of light: they belong to the light, they walk in the light of goſpel truths; they ſhine as the ſtars, by the brightneſs and exemplarineſs of their lives. On the contrary, the children of the night walk in the darkneſs of ignorance and infidelity, and they perform only works of darkneſs. Ye are all the children of the light, and the children of the day; we are not of the night, nor of darkneſs. 1 Theſ. v. 5.

The ancient patriarchs, as alſo the heroes in the heroical ages, roſe very early in the morning, and even by night, before the break of day. Whence it is, that to riſe in the night to do any buſineſs, is put for being careful and diligent. God ſays, that he riſes early to call his people, by the voice of his prophets; he has omitted nothing that might reform them. See DARKNESS.

NIGLISSOR, or Nigliſar, or Nerigliſſor, or Nerigliſſoror, the ſucceſſor of Evilmerodach in the kingdom of Chaldea. Joſephus ſpeaks of Nigliſſor: Antiq. lib. x. cap. 12, he ſays, Evil-merodach being dead, after he had reigned eighteen years, [months] Nigliſſor his ſon ſucceeded to the kingdom, and having reigned forty years, [q. an error for four] he died, and left his kingdom to Laboroſoarchod his ſon. He reigned but nine months, and had Balthaſar for his ſucceſſor, whom the Babylonians call Naboandel. Cyrus, and Darius, king of the Medes, made war againſt him, &c. In the firſt book againſt Appion, he cites the hiſtorian Beroſus, who ſpeaks of him thus in his third book. After the death of Nebuchadnezzar, Evil-merodach his ſon ſucceeded him in the kingdom of Chaldæa. Evil-merodach having given himſelf up to all ſorts of irregularities and debaucheries, was treacherouſly killed by his brother-in-law Nirigliſſor, after he had reigned two years. His aſſaſſin uſurped his throne, and held it for two years. After his death his ſon Laboroſoarchod aſcended the throne, though he was but a child, and reigned only nine months. His courtiers made him away, becauſe he appeared to have evil inclinations. Thoſe that put him to death having conſulted together, reſolved to tranſlate the government to a Babylonian called Nabonides. In the ſeventeenth year of his reign came Cyrus to attack Babylon, &c. [The reader will obſerve the emendations above are only conjectural.]

Megaſthenes, quoted by Euſebius, ſays, that Nebuchadnezzar having diſappeared from among men, had Evil-merodach for his ſucceſſor, who was treacherouſly killed by his brother-in-law Nirigliſſor, and who left a ſon named Labaſſoarach, who ended his life alſo by a violent and tragical death. After his death they ſet upon the throne Nabannidoch, who was not of the family, nor did he belong to it in any manner. Cyrus having made himſelf maſter of all Babylon, gave Nabannidoch the government of Carmania.

It is not very eaſy to reconcile theſe accounts. Joſephus ſephus ſeems only to have followed Beroſus; for Scripture ſays nothing of Nigliſſor, or Laboroſoarchod, or Nabonides, but only of Nebuchadnezzar, of Evil-merodach, and of Belſhazzar. Uſher endeavours to regulate this hiſtory thus, Nebuchadnezzar dies A. M. 3442. Evil-merodach ſucceeds him, and is killed 3444 by Nerigliſſor, who ſucceeds. He dies in 3448, and Laboroſoarchod ſucceeds him. He holds the empire but nine months, and has Balſhazzar for ſucceſſor, who is called Nabonides by Beroſus, Labynites by Herodotus, and Nabannidoth by Abydenus. Beroſus and Ptolemy allow him ſeventeen years at Babylon.

Several ſkilful interpreters believe, that Scripture mentions only Nebuchadnezzar, Evil-merodach, and Balſhazzar, becauſe theſe only were lawful heirs to the crown of Chaldæa, the others being only uſurpers and intruders. But I doubt the ſufficiency of this reaſon. Scripture, as well as other hiſtories, mentions, indifferently, lawful kings and uſurpers, thoſe of the royal family, and thoſe that are not. The laws of hiſtory do not require, that the hiſtorian ſhould judge of the rights of princes, but record their actions and ſucceſſions.

M. Du Pin propoſes to reconcile ſacred and prophane hiſtory, by the following ſyſtem. After Nebuchadnezzar, who reigned forty-three years, ſucceeded his ſon Evil-merodach, who reigned two years compleat, and begun the third year. This, ſays he, is the Balſhazzar, ſo often called the ſon of Nebuchadnezzar in Daniel. (It is to be obſerved, that the name Evil-merodach is not in that prophet, which may confirm the conjecture that Evil-merodach and Balſhazzar are the ſame perſon.) Evil-merodach is killed by Nerigliſſor his brother-in-law, who reigns four years: he alſo may paſs for the ſon of Nebuchadnezzar the Great, as being his ſon-in-law, and having married his daughter. Laboroſoarchod his ſon reigned nine months, and was killed by a conſpiracy of Babylonian nobles, who ſet up in his ſtead one of the conſpirators, named Nabonides, being ſixty-two years old; a Babylonian indeed, but a Mede by deſcent, and ſon of Ahaſuerus. He is called Nabonides by the Babylonians, but Darius by the Medes. He reigned ſeventeen years.

But this ſyſtem in incumbered with great difficulties. 1*ſt*, It conſounds Evil-merodach with Balſhazzar. 2*dly*, It confounds Nabonides with Darius the Mede. 3*dly*, Laſtly, it reconciles Joſephus neither with Scripture, nor with Beroſus, eſpecially in that duration of eighteen years, which this hiſtorian aſſigns to Evil-merodach, and in that of forty years, which he allows Nigliſſor. So that it muſt be owned to be abſolutely impoſſible, to reconcile things ſo directly contrary to each other, and to extricate hiſtorical facts that have ſo great a degree of perplexity.

NILE, שחור, black, muddy, dark, or the morning; from שחר ſhachar. Rather from נהל nahal, a river, a brook.

NILE, a river of Egypt, whoſe fountain is in the upper Ethiopia. It is ſaid it proceeds from two ſprings, or from two eyes, which are diſtant from each other about twenty paces. The largeſt of them is worſhipped by the inhabitants of the country, who are idolaters. Its depth is ſomething more than five and twenty palms, and the other ſpring is about ſixteen palms deep. Its courſe is firſt toward the north; afterwards it winds about to the eaſt, and falls into a great lake. Coming out of this lake, it proceeds toward the ſouth. It waters the country of Alata, where it has ſeveral falls. After having watered ſeveral kingdoms, it continues its courſe far into the kingdom of Goiam. Then it winds about again, from the eaſt to the north. Having croſſed ſeveral kingdoms and provinces, it falls into Egypt at the cataracts, which are water-falls made by meeting with ſteep rocks, of the length of two hundred feet.

At the bottom of theſe rocks the Nile returns to its uſual pace, with which it flows through the valley of Egypt. Its channel, according to Villamont, is about a league broad. At eight miles below Grand Cairo, it is divided into two arms, which make a triangle, whoſe baſe is at the Mediterranean ſea, and which the Greeks call the Delta, becauſe of its figure ∇. Theſe two arms are divided into others, which diſcharge themſelves into the Mediterranean, whoſe diſtance from the top of the Delta is about twenty leagues. Theſe branches of the Nile, the ancients commonly reckoned to be ſeven. Septemplicis oſtia Nili. Ptolemy makes them nine, others but four, others eleven, others fourteen. Others maintain, that there are no more than the mouths of Damietta, of Rozetto, and of the two canals, one of which paſſes by Alexandria, and the other is very ſmall.

Several have thought that the Nile was the Gihon, one of the four rivers mentioned by Moſes, as flowing by the terreſtrial paradiſe. But this opinion is not to be ſupported, ſince the Euphrates and the Tigris, which are certainly two of the four rivers, are too far from the Nile. Yet the inhabitants of the kingdom of Goiam call this river Gihon. The Abiſſins call it Ab Euchi, Abay, or the father of rivers. The Negroes call it Tami. Homer, Diodorus Siculus, and Xenophon teſtify, teſtify, that its ancient name was Egyptus, and Homer mentions it by no other name. Diodorus ſays, that it took the name of Nilus only ſince the time of a king of Egypt called by that name. Pliny relates the opinion of king Juba, who affirmed that the Nile had its ſource in Mauritania, that it appeared and diſappeared in different places, firſt hiding itſelf under ground, and then ſhewing itſelf again; that in this country it was called Niger, and in Æthiopia it had the name Aſtapus; that about Meroe it was divided into two arms, of which the right was called Aſtuſapes, and the left Aſtaborus; and laſtly, that it obtained the name of Nile only below Meroe.

Pliny, Plutarch, Dionyſius the geographer, and ſome others teſtify, that it was alſo named Siris. Dionyſius ſays, that the Ethiopians call it Siris, and that after it comes to Siena, it has the name of Nilus. It is probable, that the name Siris comes from the Hebrew word Sihor, which ſignifies trouble; and that Nilus comes from the Hebrew, Nahal, which ſignifies river, or torrent. In Scripture the Nile has ſeldom any other name but the river of Egypt. Joſhua and Jeremiah expreſs it by the name Sihor, or the river of troubled water. What haſt thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink the water of Sihor? ſays Jeremiah. The Greeks give it the name of Melas, which alſo ſignifies black, or troubled. And indeed travellers inform us, that the water of this river is generally ſomething muddy, but it is eaſily fined by throwing into it ſome almonds or ſkinned beans. Servius explaining that verſe of Virgil, where ſpeaking of the Nile he ſays:

Et viridem Ægyptum nigrâ fœcundat arenâ.

obſerves that the ancients called the Nile Melo: Melo in Hebrew ſignifies full, which may well agree with the Nile, becauſe of its great floods, which continue for about ſix weeks in the heat of ſummer, and during this time overflow Egypt.

Diodorus Siculus obſerves, that the moſt ancient name by which the Grecians have known the Nile, is Oceanus. It had alſo the name of Aigle, afterwards of Ægyptus, and laſtly of Nilus, from king Nileus. The Ægyptians paid divine honour to the Nile, and called it Jupiter Nilus.

Te propter nullos tua tellus poſtulat imbres,
Arida nec fluvio ſupplicat herba Jovi.

Perhaps for this reaſon, the Lord in the prophets ſometimes threatens to ſmite the river of Egypt, to dry it up and kill its fiſhes; as it were to ſhew the Egyptians the vanity of their worſhip, and the impotence of their pretended deity. Iſai. xi. 15. Ezek. xxix. 3, 4, &c.

When the Scripture points out the limits of the Land of Promiſe, it often puts the river or the ſtream of Egypt for its ſoutherly limits. From the entering in of Hamath, unto the river of Egypt, 2 Chron. vii. 8. Or, from the channel of the river (Euphrates) unto the ſtream of Egypt, Iſai xxvii. 12. Some interpreters not being convinced that the country of the Iſraelites extended to the Nile, have imagined that the ſtream of Egypt was a ſtream that fell into the Mediterranean ſea, between Rhinocorura and Gaza, which is called in Scripture the river of the wilderneſs, Amos vi. 14. But it is certain, that the Land of Promiſe was to reach the Nile. Joſhua ſhews it plainly, Joſh. xiii. 3. and xv. 4. compared with 1 Chron. xiii. 5. And this is what we have endeavoured to prove in our commentary on Joſh. xiii. 3.

The Arabians and other Orientals often give the Nile the name of a ſea, and the ſurname or epithet of Faidh, which is common alſo to the Euphrates, becauſe theſe two rivers by their overflowing increaſe the fertility of the countries they paſs through. They alſo give it the name of Mobarek, as well becauſe of the fruitfulneſs it occaſions to the land, as that fecundity it is thought to procure to the women.

When the Nile overflows only to the perpendicular height of twelve cubits, a famine neceſſarily follows in Egypt; nor is the famine leſs certain, if it ſhould exceed ſixteen cubits, as Pliny ſays; ſo that the juſt height of the inundation is between twelve and ſixteen cubits. The Arabian author of a book, which gives an account of the Nilometry, or meaſures of the Nile, from the firſt year of the Hegira, till the 875th, or from A. D. 622 to 1497, ſays in like manner, that when the depth of the channel of the Nile is fourteen fathom, an harveſt may be expected that will amount to one year's proviſion; but if it increaſes to ſixteen, the corn will be ſufficient for two years; leſs than fourteen makes a ſcarcity, and more than eighteen makes a famine.

The Nilometor is a pillar erected in the middle of the Nile, upon which are marked the degrees of the aſcent of the water. There were ſeveral of theſe in different places of the Nile. At this day there is one in the iſland, which divides the Nile into two arms, one of which paſſes to Cairo, and the other to Gizah. M. d'Herbelot takes notice of ſeveral others, built or repaired by ſeveral Kailifs. The ancients have preſerved the memory of the Nilometer in their monuments. See Antiquity explained, tom. iii. p. 185. Heretofore they kept the meaſure of the ſwelling of the Nile in the temple of Serapis, like a ſacred relic; and the the emperor Conſtantine had it tranſported to the church of Alexandria. The Pagans then affirmed, that the Nile would not overflow any more, and that Serapis being provoked, would be revenged of Egypt, and would cauſe a ſterility there. But however the Nile overflowed, and aſcended to its uſual height the years following.

The Nile overflows regularly every year in the month of Auguſt, in the higher and middle Egypt, where this overflowing is neceſſary, becauſe it hardly ever rains there. But in the lower Egypt the flood is leſs ſenſible and leſs neceſſary, becauſe it frequently rains there, and the country is ſufficiently watered. It is leſs ſenſible, becauſe they make fewer dikes there, or receptacles for the water, and the inundation ſpreading itſelf equally through all the country, does not riſe higher than a cubit through the whole Delta. Whereas in higher and middle Egypt, where it rains very ſeldom, they have made high banks at a league diſtance, in the midſt of which there are deep canals, to receive the waters of the river. They make a breach in theſe dikes by the authority of the Bacha, and when a country is ſufficiently watered, the dike is ſtopped up there, and opened in another place; and thus the whole land of Egypt is ſucceſſively watered, as it were a garden. The Egyptians have often contentions among one another, village againſt village, to ſtrive which ſhall have the firſt diſtribution of the waters; and when the overflowing comes as they deſire, they celebrate a great feſtival all over the country.

There have been great variety of opinions, concerning the cauſe of the overflowing of the Nile. But at preſent it is aſcertained, that it is occaſioned by the great rains, which fall in Ethiopia in the months of June, July, and Auguſt, which are the winter months in that country. The ſoil there is extremely dry and ſpungy, and at firſt ſoaks up the rain: but when it is glutted, the ſtreams and rains ſupply the Nile with all that water, which it diſtributes throughout Egypt. Theſe waters carry with them much mud, which by ſettling, contributes to fatten and enrich the land.

When the waters are withdrawn, the culture of the land is eaſy. The ſeed is caſt on the mud, and with little tillage produces great plenty. The mud which the Nile brings is earth which it tears up from the banks in its courſe; which ſame mud covering the land marks and furrows of the fields, obliges the proprietors to have recourſe to the line and the meaſuring-rod, to meaſure out their lands and inheritances every year anew. The ſoil of Egypt being very light and ſandy, it is impoſſible but that the waters muſt carry off a great quantity of it.

NIMRAH, נמרה, νεμβρὼν, leopard; from נמר namer: otherwiſe, bitterneſs, or rebellion; from מרר marar, bitterneſs, or מרה, marah, rebellion: or change; from מור mur.

NIMRAH, or Nemra, a city of Gad, or rather of Reuben, eaſt of the Dead Sea, Numb. xxxii. 3. Euſebius on the word Nebra ſays, there is a large village in Batanea called Nabara. I make no doubt but Nemra, Nimra, Nimrim, Nemrim, and Beth-nemra, are the ſame city. Jeremiah, xlviii. 34. ſpeaks of Nimrim and its pleaſant waters. Iſaiah, xv. 6. alſo mentions the waters of Nimrim. St. Jerom ſays, that Nimrim is ſituated on the Dead Sea, and that its name is from the bitterneſs of its waters, which have this quality ſince the deſolation of this city, as had been denounced by the prophets Iſaiah and Jeremiah.

NIMROD, נמרד, νεμβρὼδ, rebellion, or ſleep of deſcent, or of him that rules; from מרה marah, or מרד marad, rebellion, and נום num, ſleep, ſlumbering, and רדד radad, deſcent: or dominion; from רדה radah.

NIMROD, or Nembrod, ſon of Cuſh, a mighty hunter before the Lord, Gen. x. 8, 9. He began to monopolize power on the earth, and gave occaſion to the proverb, "like Nimrod, the great hunter before the Lord." His hunting was not only of wild beaſts, but alſo to ſubdue men, to reduce them under his dominion. Ezekiel, xxxii. 30. gives the name of hunters to all tyrants. The foundation of the empire of Nimrod was at Babylon; and, very probably, he was among the moſt eager undertakers of the Tower of Babel, and he built Babylon at, or near, that famous tower. From thence he extended his dominion over the neighbouring countries, and Erech, Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar.

Moſes adds: out of that land went forth Aſſhur, and builded Nineveh, and the city Rehoboth, and Calah, and Reſen, between Nineveh and Calah: the ſame is a great city. This, Bochart underſtands ſtill of Nimrod, and tranſlates the Hebrew,—"From this place he went out to go into Aſſyria, where he built Nineveh, Rehoboth, Calah, and Reſen." i. e. when Nimrod had eſtabliſhed the beginning of his empire at Babylon, and in the land of Shinar, he advanced towards Aſſyria, where he built powerful cities, as ſo many fortreſſes, to keep the people in ſubjection.

Some Rabbins take in a good ſenſe what is ſaid, that Nimrod was a mighty hunter before the Lord, ſaying he had a particular addreſs and dexterity in hunting; and what game he took he offered to the Lord. It muſt be owned the words before the Lord are commonly taken in good part, as heightening the good qualities of any one; but in this place moſt interpreters take them in a bad ſenſe, in the ſame manner as when it is ſaid of the men of Sodom, that they were great ſinners before the Lord, Gen. xiii. 13. As alſo of Er the eldeſt ſon of Judah, that he was very wicked before the Lord, Gen. xxxviii. 7.

me have confounded Nimrod with Belus, the founder of the kingdom of Babylon, and with Ninus, the founder of that of Nineveh: but theſe are much later than Nimrod. Prophane authors have embelliſhed the hiſtory of Bacchus, with ſeveral circumſtances taken from that of Nimrod. The name Nebrodeus or Nebrodus, given to Bacchus, is evidently derived from Nembrod, or Nimrod, though the Greeks will derive it from a goat-ſkin, with which they pretend Bacchus was cloathed. The name Bacchus may alſo be derived from Bar-chus, the ſon of Cuſh; becauſe Nimrod was indeed the ſon of Cuſh. The Greeks give to Bacchus the name of hunter, juſt as Moſes gives to Nimrod. The expeditions of Bacchus into the Indies are formed upon the wars of Nimrod in Babylonia and Aſſyria. Nimrod in Hebrew ſignifies a rebel. To him is imputed the firſt invention of idolatrous worſhip paid to men.

The hiſtory of Nimrod is dreſſed up with fables by the Perſian authors. Some confound him with Zohac, the firſt king of the Dynaſty of thoſe princes that reigned immediately after the deluge. Others will have Nimrod to be the ſame as Caicacus, the ſecond king of the ſecond Perſian Dynaſty, called that of the Cainaides.

It is ſuppoſed that Moſes makes Nimrod the immediate ſon of Cuſh. The Perſians make him to be ſon to Canaan, and brother to Cuſh. Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria, ſays, that Nimrod was the firſt author of the religion of the Magians, and of the worſhippers of fire.

NIMSHI, נמשי, reſcued from danger; from משא, or משה maſhah: otherwiſe, that touches; from מוש muſh.

NIMSHI, or Namſi, father of Jehu, king of Iſrael, 1 Kings xix. 16.

NINEVEH, נינוה, νινευῆ, handſome, agreeable; from נאה naah: otherwiſe, dwelling; from נוה navah.

NINEVEH, capital of Aſſyria, founded by Aſhur, ſon of Shem; or by Nimrod, ſon of Cuſh; for in the text, Gen. x. 11. Moſes according to ſome has relation to Nimrod, who was mentioned before. Vide NIMROD. It muſt be owned, that Nineveh was one of the moſt ancient, the moſt famous, the moſt potent, and the largeſt cities of the world. It is very difficult to aſſign the time of its foundation; but it cannot be long after the building of Babel. It ſtood on the banks of the Tigris, and in the time of the prophet Jonah, who was ſent thither under Jeroboam the ſecond, king of Iſrael, and, as we judge, under the reign of Pul, father of Sardanapalus, king of Aſſyria; Nineveh was a very great city, its circuit being three days journey. Diodorus Siculus, lib. ii. Bibl. ſays it had one hundred and fifty ſtadia in length, fourſcore and ten ſtadia in breadth, and four hundred and fourſcore ſtadia in circuit; i. e. about ſeven leagues long, three leagues broad, and eighteen leagues round. Its walls were an hundred feet high, and ſo broad, that three chariots could drive abreaſt upon them. Its towers, of which there were fifteen hundred, were each two hundred feet high.

Some place it to the weſt, others to the eaſt of the river Tigris. At the time of Jonah's miſſion thither, Jonah iv. 11, it was reckoned to contain more than ſix ſcore thouſand perſons, who could not diſtinguiſh their right hand from their left; which is generally explained of young children, that had not yet attained the uſe of reaſon. By this reckoning, there ought to have been then in Nineveh more than ſix hundred thouſand perſons.

Nineveh was taken by Arbaces and Beleſis, A. M. 3257, ante A. D. 747, under the reign of king Sardanapalus, in the time of Ahaz, king of Judah, about the time of the foundation of Rome. It was taken a ſecond time by Aſtyages and Nabopolaſſar, from Chinaladan, king of Aſſyria, A. M. 3378, ante A. D. 626. Nineveh no more recovered its former ſplendor. It was intirely ruined in the time of Lucianus Samoſatenſis, (in Επισυ. p. 346) who lived under the emperor Adrian. However, it was rebuilt under the Perſians, but was deſtroyed by the Saracens about the ſeventh century. See Marſham's Canon. Ægypt. ſæculo xviii. Tit. Nini excidium, and Uſher, A. M. 3257 and 3378.

Modern travellers ſay, that the ruins of ancient Nineveh may ſtill be ſeen on the eaſtern bank of the Tigris, and on the oppoſite ſide the city of Mozul or Mozil, which many do not diſtinguiſh from Nineveh. Prophane hiſtories tell us, that Ninus firſt founded Nineveh; but Scripture, which is infinitely better authority, aſſures us it was Aſhur, or Nimrod. The ſacred authors make frequent mention of Nineveh, and its kings, Tiglath-pilneſer, Sennacherib, Shalmanezzar, and Eſar-haddon. Tobit lived in this city. Nahum and Zephaniah foretold its ruin in a very particular and pathetic manner, which Tobit repeated.

repeated. It is known what Jonah did at Nineveh; and the ſignal repentance of the Ninevites; which is even commended in the goſpel, Matt. xi. 41. Luke xi. 32. Vide FRAGMENT, No. III.

I. NINUS, ſon of Belus the Aſſyrian, and founder of the Aſſyrian monarchy, A. M. 2737, ante A. D. 1267; about the time of the government of Deborah and Barak in Iſrael. Herodotus ſays, lib. i. cap. 95. that for an hundred and twenty years this monarchy was in poſſeſſion of upper Egypt. Cteſias, and after him Diodorus Siculus, lib. ii. Bibl. Trogus, and Juſtin, lib. i. ſay, that Ninus brought into ſubjection all the princes of Aſia, except thoſe of India. Zoroaſter, king of the Bactrians oppoſed him, but at laſt was ſubdued. Julius Africanus aſcribes to this prince a reign of fifty-two years; but Dionyſius of Halicarnaſſus, in the firſt book of his Roman antiquities, ſhews very well, that the firſt kings of Aſſyria poſſeſſed but a ſmall part of Aſia.

II. NINUS, ſurnamed the younger, ſucceeded Sardanapalus, in the kingdom of Aſſyria. Sardanapalus having been compelled to burn himſelf in Nineveh, Arbaces and Beleſis, on the diſſolution of the Aſſyrian monarchy, founded two others, that of the Medes, and that of the Babylonians. The empire of Aſſyria, reduced to very narrow limits, was continued to Ninus, called in Scripture Tiglath-pilneſer, 2 Kings xv. 29. xvi. 7, 10. and Thilgamus by Ælian, Hiſt. Animal. lib. xii. cap. 21. Euſebius in his Chronicon, after Caſtor of Rhodes, allows him a reign of nineteen years: from A. M. 3257, to 3276. His ſucceſſor was Salmanezzar.

NISAN, נסן, flight; from נוס nus: or ſtandard; from נסס naſas: or proof and temptation; from מסה maſſah.

NISAN, a Hebrew month, anſwering to our March, and which ſometimes takes from February or April, according to the courſe of the moon. It was made the firſt month of the ſacred year, at the coming out of Egypt. Exod. xii. 2. It was the ſeventh month of the civil year. In Moſes it it is called Abib. The name Niſan is only ſince the time of Ezra, and the return from the captivity of Babylon.

The firſt day is the Neomenia. A faſt for the death of the children of Aaron, Lev. x. 1, 2, 3. On the tenth day a faſt for the death of Miriam the ſiſter of Moſes; alſo, every one provided himſelf with a lamb for the paſſover. On this day the Iſraelites paſſed over Jordan under the conduct of Joſhua. Joſh. iv. 19. On the fourteenth day in the evening they ſacrificed the paſchal lamb, and the day following, being the fifteenth, was held the ſolemn paſſover, Exod. xii. 18, &c. The ſixteenth they offered the ſheaf of the ears of barley, as the firſt-fruits of the harveſt of that year, Levit. xxiii. 9, &c. The twenty-firſt was the octave of the paſſover, which was ſolemnized with particular ceremonies. The twenty-ſixth the Jews faſted in memory of the death of Joſhua. On this day they began their prayers to obtain the rains of the ſpring. On the 29th they call to mind the fall of the walls of Jericho.

NISROCH, נסרך, νεσρὰχ, ἀσαρὰχ, flight, or ſtandard, or proof and temptation, tender, or delicate; from נוס nus, to fly; or from נסס naſas, ſtandard; or from מסה maſſah, temptation, and רך rac, tender, delicate. The root of this word is not in the Hebrew.

NISROCH, or Neſroch, a god of the Aſſyrians. Sennacherib was killed by one of his ſons, while in adoration to his God Niſroch in his temple, 2 Kings xix. 37. It is not known who this God Niſroch was. The Seventy call him Meſrach, Joſephus calls him Araſkes. The Hebrew of Tobit publiſhed by Munſter calls him Dagon.

The name of this deity may be traced in the words Sarac, and Sargon, kings of Aſſyria: and perhaps Sarac is the ſame as Sarak. But nothing of this informs us who this God Niſroch was.

NITOCRIS. Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 186, 187, &c. ſpeaks of queen Nitocris, mother to king Labynetus, from whom Cyrus took Babylon: but the Scripture tells us, that the king from whom Cyrus took Babylon, was Belſhazzar, ſon or grandſon to Nebuchadnezzar; it ſeems to follow, that Nitocris was queen to Nebuchadnezzar the Great, and the ſame as Amytta, daughter to Aſtyages, king of the Medes.

Nitocris is celebrated by Herodotus as an heroine. While the king her ſon abandoned himſelf to his pleaſures, ſhe took the burthen of government upon her, and did all that human prudence could do, for the ſecurity of the empire. She compleated with incredible diligence the works that Nebuchadnezzar had left unfiniſhed, and particularly the walls of the city, and quays of the rivers, &c.

In the laſt year of Belſhazzar's reign, while Babylon was beſieged by Cyrus, Dan. v. 1, 2, 3, &c. Belſhazzar made a feaſt for his wives and concubines, at which he prophaned the holy veſſels of the temple of Jeruſalem; when there appeared upon the walls of the room, over againſt the candleſtick, a hand that wrote theſe words, Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharſin. The ſight of this prodigy terrified the king and all his company. Nitocris, the queen-mother, went into the hall, and told the king, that there was a man in his kingdom called Belteſhazzar, who would truly explain the viſion. Daniel was ſent for, who gave the king the explication of it.

NITRE. A ſort of ſalt, or of ſalt-petre, common in Paleſtine, Arabia, and Egypt. The Hebrews call it Nether, and uſe this word to expreſs a ſalt proper to take ſpots out of cloaths, and even from the face. The wiſe man ſays, Prov. xxv. 20. As he that taketh away a garment in cold weather, and as vinegar upon nitre; ſo is he that ſingeth ſongs to an heavy heart. Muſic is as ſerviceable in diſpelling ſorrow, and in reſtoring a chearful temper, as nitre diſſolved in vinegar is uſeful in taking away blemiſhes from the face, or from cloaths. They always diſſolved the nitre in vinegar when they applied it to this uſe. [The above ſeems to me not to be the true ſenſe of the paſſage in Proverbs. I have always taken it otherwiſe—He makes bad worſe who deprives the ſhivering wretch of a garment in cold weather; ſo doth he who ſingeth ſongs to a heavy heart: vinegar poured upon nitre makes a great ebullition, ſo merriment, jollity and ſong are equally out of time, unſoothing, unſuitable to a mind overwhelmed by profound grief.] Jeremiah ſpeaking to his people under the image of a faithleſs and abandoned ſpouſe, ſays, Though thou waſh thee with nitre, and take thee much ſoap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, ſaith the Lord God. Thou art too much polluted in my eyes ever to be made clean. This paſſage proves the uſe of nitre, to purify from outward ſpots and blemiſhes. [N. B. The nitre common among us, from which gunpowder is made, is not the nitre of the Scriptures: it is nearer, I believe, to ſal-ammoniac.]

NO, or No-ammon, a city of Egypt, which St. Jerom always tranſlates by Alexandria. But it is rather the city of Dioſpolis in the Delta, between Buſiris to the ſouth, and Mendeſium to the north. See Jeremiah xlvi. 25. Ezek. xxx. 14, 15, 16. Nahum iii. 8. See DIOSPOLIS and AMMON No.

No-ammon ſignifies the habitation of Ammon, Several are of opinion, that Ammon is the ſame as Ham the ſon of Noah, who, they ſay, fixed his dwelling in Egypt.

NOACHIDÆ. This name is given to the children of Noah, and in general to all men not of the choſen race of Abraham.

The Rabbins pretend, that God gave Noah and his ſons certain precepts, which contain the natural duty common to all men, and the obſervation of which alone will be ſufficient to ſave them. The Hebrews would not ſuffer any ſtranger to dwell in their country, unleſs he would conform to them. Theſe precepts are eight in number.

THE NOACHICAL PRECEPTS.

I. Obedience is due to judges, magiſtrates, and princes.

II. The worſhip of falſe gods, ſuperſtition, and ſacrilege, are abſolutely forbidden.

III. Alſo curſing the name of God, blaſphemies, and falſe oaths.

IV. Likewiſe all inceſtuous and unlawful conjunctions or copulations.

V. Alſo the effuſion of the blood of all ſorts of living animals, murder, wounds, and mutilations.

VI. Alſo theft, cheats, lying, &c.

VII. The parts of a living animal are not to be eaten, as was practiſed by ſome Pagans. Arnob. contra Gentes, lib. v. Caprorum reclamantium viſcera cruentatis oribus diſſipant.

Maimonides ſays, that the firſt ſix of theſe precepts were given by Adam, and the ſeventh was added by Noah. What inclines us to doubt of their antiquity, is, that no mention is made of theſe precepts, in Scripture, in Onkelos, in Joſephus, or in Philo; nor in any of the ancient fathers.

NOADIAH, נועדיה, νωαδία, witneſs; from עדד hadad: or aſſembly, or ornament of the Lord; from עדה hedah, &c. and יה jah, the Lord.

NOADIAH. A falſe propheteſs employed by the enemies of Nehemiah, to endeavour to intimidate him. But Nehemiah continued and accompliſhed his undertaking. Nehem. vi. 14. ante A. D. 454.

NOAH, נעה, ναα, that quavers or totters; from נוע nuah.

NOAH, נח, repoſe, or reſt: from נוח nuac: otherwiſe, conſolation; from נחם nacham, by cutting off the מ mem.

NOAH, or Noe, ſon of Lamech, was born A. M. 1056, ante A. D. 2948. Amidſt the general corruption of mankind, Noah found favour in the eyes of the Lord. God ſeeing that all men had corrupted their ways, ſaid to Noah; "The end of all fleſh is reſolved upon before me; the earth is filled with the iniquities of men, and I will deſtroy them from the face of the earth. Make an ark of wood, &c. for thy preſervation, and that of animals, plants, &c.

Noah performed what the Lord had commanded him; and A. M. 1656, ante A. D. 2348, God cauſed all the animals to come to Noah, into the ark; after which he ordered him to go in himſelf, with his wife, his three ſons, and their wives. (Noah was then ſix hundred years old.) Preſently the waters of the deluge began to fall, inſomuch that whatever had life on the earth, or in the air, was deſtroyed, except ſuch animals as were with Noah in the ark.

The Lord remembering Noah, cauſed the waters to to diminiſh; ſo that the ark reſted on the mountains of Armenia, or of Ararat, ſays the Hebrew. The tenth day of the tenth month, the tops of the mountains began to appear. After forty days Noah let go the raven, who went out of the ark, and returned according to the Hebrew, or returned not according to the Septuagint and the Vulgate; or he went out, and went and came, flying about the ark, and alighting upon its roof. Afterwards Noah ſent forth the dove, which not finding a place to ſet his foot, returned into the ark again. Seven days after, he ſent it out again, and it returned in the evening, bringing in its mouth a branch of an olive-tree, having green leaves upon it, which the tree had ſhot out ſince the aſſwaging of the waters. He ſtaid yet ſeven days longer; then he uncovered the roof of the ark; and obſerving the whole ſurface of the earth was dry, he received orders from the Lord to go out of the ark, with all the animals. He therefore came out in the ſix hundred and firſt year of his age, and the twenty-ſeventh day of the ſecond month.

Then he offered as a burnt ſacrifice to the Lord one of all the pure animals that were in the ark; and the Lord accepted his ſacrifice, and promiſed to bring no more a deluge over the earth; of which promiſe the ſign he gave to Noah was the rainbow.

Noah being an huſbandman, cultivated the vine; having made wine and drank thereof, he unwarily made himſelf drunk, and falling aſleep in his tent, happened to uncover himſelf indecently. Ham the father of Canaan diſcovering him in this condition, made ſport of him, and jeered with his two brothers: but they, inſtead of ſporting, going backwards, covered their father's nakedneſs, by throwing a mantle over him. Noah awaking, and knowing what Ham had done, foretold the doom of ſlavery to Ham, and his poſterity: [vide FRAGMENTS, No. XIX. XX.] while he bleſſed his other ſons.

Noah lived after the deluge three hundred and fifty years; his whole life was nine hundred and fifty years. He died A. M. 2006, ante A. D. 1998. He left three ſons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth, (vide their Articles) and according to the common opinion, he divided the whole world among them. To Shem he gave Aſia; to Ham, Africa; and to Japheth, Europe. Euſeb. Græc. Chronic. ſeu Theſauri tempor. p. 10. Philaſtr. de hæreſ. cap. 70. Some inſiſt, that beſides theſe three ſons, he had ſeveral others. The ſpurious Beroſus gives him thirty, called Titans, from the name of their mother Titæa. They pretend the Teutons or Germans are derived from a ſon of Noah called Thuiſcon. The falſe Methodius alſo makes mention of Jonithus or Jonicus, a pretended ſon of Noah. The ſcholaſtic hiſtory of Peter Comeſtor may be ſeen, lib. i. cap. 37. and Toſtat upon Geneſis.

St. Peter calls Noah a preacher of righteouſneſs, 2 Peter ii. 5. becauſe before the deluge he was inceſſantly declaring to men, not only by his diſcourſes, but by his unblameable life, and by the building of the ark, in which he was employed ſix ſcore years, the coming of the wrath of God. Vide Matth. xxiv. 37. We find among the verſes of the pretended Sybils, a deſcription of mankind before the deluge, and Noah's preaching to them. Theophilus of Antioch, lib. iii. ad Autolyc. p. 129, ſeems to believe, that the name Deucalion, who is the ſame as Noah, comes from the Greek Deute, and Calein, come and call; becauſe Noah ſpeaking to men before the deluge, uſed the words, Come, God calls you to repentance.

St. Peter ſays, For Chriſt alſo hath once ſuffered for ſins, the juſt for the unjuſt, (that he might bring us to God) being put to death in the fleſh, but quickened by the ſpirit: by which alſo he went and preached unto the ſpirits in priſon; which ſometime were diſobedient, when once the long ſuffering of God waited in the days of Noah, while the ark was a preparing, wherein few, that is eight ſouls, were ſaved by water, 1 Pet. iii. 18, 19, 20. Several of the ancient fathers have taken theſe words literally: as if Jeſus Chriſt after his reſurrection, had really preached to thoſe men, who before the deluge were diſobedient to the preaching of Noah; and that he had delivered ſome of them. Others by the word priſon underſtand the body, which is, as it were, the priſon of the ſoul. Others, that Jeſus Chriſt, by his ſpirit, with which Noah was repleniſhed, preached by the mouth of that patriarch to the unbelievers before the deluge, whoſe ſouls were then in the priſon of the body, but who at the time when St. Peter wrote were in the priſon of hell. Other interpretations alſo are given to this paſſage.

The eaſtern people had a notion, that Noah received orders from God to take the body of Adam, and put it in the ark, to preſerve it from the waters of the deluge; and that when he found himſelf near his death, he called his ſon Shem to him, entruſted him with this depoſitum, and bid him carry it to Melchiſedech, the prieſt of the moſt high, that they two might bury it in ſuch place as the angel of the Lord ſhould ſhew them. Shem went therefore to Melchiſedech, and they buried Adam upon mount Calvary, which is the middle of the earth. This is a prayer which, it is ſaid, Noah repeated every day while he was in in the ark. "O Lord, thou art truly great, and there is nothing ſo great as that it can be compared to thee. Look upon us with an eye of mercy, and deliver us from this deluge of waters. I intreat this of thee for the love of Adam thy firſt man, for the blood of Abel thy ſaint, for the righteouſneſs of Seth whom thou haſt loved. Let us not be reckoned in the number of thoſe who have diſobeyed thy commandments, but ſtill extend thy merciful care to us, becauſe thou haſt hitherto been our deliverer, and all thy creatures ſhall declare thy praiſe. Amen."

Several learned men have obſerved, that the Pagans confounded Saturn, Deucalion, Ogyges, the god Cœlus, or Ouranus, Janus, Protheus, Prometheus, Vertumnus, Bacchus, Oſiris, Vadimon, and Xiſuthrus, with Noah. See M. Bochart, Geograph. Sacr. lib. i. cap. 1. M. Huet. de concord. Rat. & Fidei, lib. ii. Grot. de verit. Relig. Chriſt. lib. i. Natalis Comes. Mytholog. lib. viii. cap. 17. *Octav. Several writings have been aſcribed to Noah. Some Hebrews have thought, that Moſes quotes a work compoſed by Noah, when he ſays, Gen. vi. 9. Theſe are the generations of Noah. And elſewhere, Gen. x. 1. Now theſe are the generations of the ſons of Noah. The falſe Beroſus aſcribes alſo a book to him, of the ſecrets of natural things; and the Cabaliſts maintain, that this book was ſtole from Noah by his ſon Ham, and given to Mizraim. W. Poſtel ſpeaks of it in the title of his book called, De originibus, ſeu de varia ac potiſſimum orbi Latino ad hanc diem incognita, aut inconſiderata hiſtoria, &c. Ex libris Noachi & Hanachi, &c. Lambecius in his catalogue of the emperor's library, ſpeaks of a book with this title: The Method which was revealed to the Prophet Noah by the Angel of the Lord, to diſcover ſixteen figures, proper to foretel what ſhall come hereafter. But all theſe are juſtly ranged among fables and impoſtures. There is no proof that Noah ever wrote any thing; much leſs that any thing of his is preſerved to our times.

The wife of Noah is called Noriah by the Gnoſtics; Barthenos or Bathenos by Epiphanes: Noema or Tethiri, by ſome ancient Rabbins. But this has as little certainty, as what we now mentioned of Noah's works. Vide ARK, DELUGE.

The eaſtern people think that Noah came out of the ark on the tenth day of the firſt month of the Arabian year, called Meharram; and that this patriarch inſtituted a faſt on that day, which they ſtill obſerve, in commemoration of the deliverance from the waters of the deluge. Then Noah was appointed of God as a new Adam, to repeople the world. All nations derive their origin from his three ſons. From Shem the Hebrews, the Arabians, the Perſians, the Syrians, and the Greeks; from Japheth the Scythians, the Moguls, the Getæ, the Tartars, the Chineſe, the Turks, the Hyperboreans, of Gog and Magog: from Ham the Indians, the Africans, the Blacks, &c. [But certainly Noah had alſo other poſterity, after the deluge.]

Beſides theſe three ſons of Noah, the Orientals have given him a fourth, called Magheſtan, unknown to the ſacred books of the Hebrews. They ſay moreover, that God ſent books to Noah, which ſignifies, according to their way of ſpeaking, that when he died he left ten volumes behind him, in which he wrote down the revelations, and all the commands he had received from God. But theſe books, if ever they were at all in being, are now loſt. [unleſs the Indian Sanſcrit books be memorials of them.]

The fable of Deucalion and his wife Pyrrha, Apollodor, lib. i. is manifeſtly derived from the hiſtory of Noah. Deucalion by the advice of his father built an ark, or a veſſel of wood, in which he put all ſorts of proviſions neceſſary for life, and entered into it with his wife Pyrrha. This was to ſecure them from a deluge, that drowned almoſt all Greece. All the people almoſt of this country were deſtroyed, none eſcaped but thoſe that took refuge upon the tops of the higheſt mountains. As ſoon as the flood was over, Deucalion came out of his ark, and found himſelf on mount Parnaſſus. There he offered ſacrifices to Jupiter, who ſent Mercury to him, to know what he deſired. He requeſted him that he might become the reſtorer of mankind, which Jupiter granted him. He and Pyrrha were ordered to caſt ſtones behind them, which were immediately changed into ſo many men and women.

The Pagans ſtruck medals to preſerve the memory of this famous event. Octav. Falconerii inſcript. Athlet. Rom. 1568. Vide & Kircher de Arcâ Noe, p. 138. Vide APAMEA.

NOARA, Noarath, or Nearath, a city of Ephraim, five miles from Jericho, as Euſebius ſays.

NOB, נבה, νοβα, diſcourſe, prophecy.

NOB, or Nobe, or Nomba, a ſacerdotal city of Benjamin or Ephraim. St. Jerome ſays, in Epitaphio Paulæ. (Vide Euſeb. in locis, voce, Nombra.) that in his time it was intirely deſtroyed, and that the ruins of it might be ſeen not far from Dioſpolis. When David was drove away by Saul, he came to Nob, and aſking the high-prieſt Abimelech for ſomething to eat, he gave him the bread which had been lately taken off the holy table: alſo alſo he gave him the ſword of Goliath. When Saul was informed of this by Doeg, he cauſed all the prieſts of Nob to be ſlain, and deſtroyed their city. 1 Sam. xxii. 9, &c. xxi. 6, 7, 8, &c.

NOBAH, נבח, ναβὲ, that barks or yelps; from נבח nabach.

NOBAH, or Nobe, or Chanatha, or Canath, a city beyond Jordan. It took the name of Nobah from an Iſraelite who made a conqueſt of it, Numb. xxxii. 42. Gideon purſued the Midianites to this city, Judg. viii. 11. Euſebius ſays, that there is a forſaken place of this name about eight miles from Heſhbon, ſouth. But that could not be this Nobah, becauſe this was much farther north.

NOD, נוד, vagabond.

NOD, or the Land of Nod. To this country Cain withdrew after his fratricide, Gen. iv. 16. The LXX. and Joſephus, read Naid inſtead of Nod, and have taken it for the name of a place. It cannot be eaſily known what country this was, unleſs perhaps it was Nyſe, or Nyſea, towards Hyrcania. St. Jerome and the Chaldee have taken the word Nod in the ſenſe of an appellative, a vagabond or fugitive. [i. e. a wanderer on the earth.]

NODAB, נודב, νάδαβ, he that vows: otherwiſe, liberal: otherwiſe, prince, or chief; from נדב nadab.

NODAB, a country bordering on Iturea and Idumea, but now unknown. We read, 1 Chron. v. 19. that the tribe of Reuben, aſſiſted by Gad and Manaſſeh, had a war againſt the Hagarites, the Jeturites, and the people of Nephith and of Nodab, in which the Iſraelites had the advantage.

NOGAH, נגה, ναγὲ, brightneſs, ſplendor.

NOGAH, or Noge, a ſon of David, 1 Chron. iii. 7. xiv. 6.

NOHAH, נוחה, νaὰ, he that reſts; from נוח nuah: chief, manager; from נחה nachah, to manage.

NOHAH, or Nohaa, fourth ſon of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 2.

NOPHAH, נופח, that breathes; from נפח naphak: otherwiſe, that chains, or ties up; from פוח puac: or that fears; from פחד pacad: otherwiſe, that ſpeaks, or murmurs; from יפח japhac.

NOPHAH, or Nophe, a city of the Moabites, which afterwards belonged to the Amorites, and laſtly to the Iſraelites, Numb. xxi. 30. Nophah was near to Medebah. There is ſome probability that it is the Nephis, Eſdr. v. 21. or Nebo or Nabo, Nehem. vii. 33, and Ezra ii. 29, &c. The ſituation agrees perfectly well. Nebo is joined with Medeba in Iſai. xv. 2. xlvi. 1.

NOPHET, נפת, honey-comb; from נוף nuph: or ſieve, or that drops: from the ſame.

NOPHET, Joſh. xvii. 11. and elſewhere, is taken for a diſtrict or a province. Often it is joined to Dor, as Nophet-dor, Joſh. xi. 2. xii. 23. the diſtrict round the city Dor, on the Mediterranean, ſouth of mount Carmel, and north of Cæſarea of Paleſtine. Two thirds of it was poſſeſſed by the tribe of Zebulun, and one third by that of Manaſſeh.

NOSE. Naſus, Nares. The Hebrews commonly place the ſeat of anger in the noſe. There went up a ſmoke out of his noſtrils, 2 Sam. xxii. 9. And in Moſes, The anger of the Lord and his jealouſy ſhall ſmoke againſt that man, Deut. xxix. 20. Alſo in the Pſalms, There went up a ſmoke out of his noſtrils, Pſal. xviii. 3. And Job, Out of his noſtrils goeth ſmoke, Job xli. 21. The ancient Greek and Latin authors ſpeak pretty much after the ſame manner.

——— Ἀνὰ ῥῖνας δέ οἱ ἤδη

HOMER. ODYSS. xxiv.

Οἱ ἀει δριμεῖα χολὰ ποὶ ῥινὶ κάθηται.

THEOGRITUS.

Thus Perſius,

Diſce, ſed ira cadat naſo, rugoſaque ſanna.

And Plautus,

Fames & mora bilem in naſo conciunt.

The eaſtern women in ſeveral places wore golden rings in their noſtrils. Solomon alludes to this cuſtom when he ſays, Prov. xi. 22. As a jewel of gold in a ſwine's ſnout, ſo is a fair woman without diſcretion. And Ezekiel, xvi. 12. And I put a jewel on thy forehead [Heb. noſe,] and ear-rings in thine ears, and a beautiful crown upon thine head.

They alſo put rings in the noſtrils of oxen and camels, to guide them by. I will put my hook in thy noſe, and my bridle in thy lips, 2 Kings xix. 28. And Job xli. 2.

NOTHING, Nihilum, is ſometimes put in oppoſition to body, ſolidity, or maſs. It is alſo put for vacuity, and for what is not ſenſible. Job ſays, xxvi. 7. He ſtretcheth out the north over the empty place, and hangeth the earth upon nothing, upon the vacuum. And Iſaiah, xl. 22. Vulg. that God ſpreads out the heavens as nothing, extendit tanquam nihilum cœlos; he extends them in the air, in inviſible ſpaces. The wiſe man ſays, Wiſd. ii. 2. Vulg. we are born of nothing, and in ſome ſenſe ſhall return to nothing again. Ex nihilo nati ſumus, & poſt hoc erimus tanquam non fuerimus. We ſhall diſappear from the face of the earth, as if we had never been there. And Iſaiah ſays, xli. 24. Behold ye are of nothing, and your works of nought; an abomination is he that chooſeth you.

Idols

Idols are often called nothings, non-entities. Ye which rejoice in a thing of nought, Amos vi. 13. And Eſther, Apoc. xiv. 11. O Lord, give not thy ſceptre unto them that be nothing; deliver not over thy people to thoſe gods that are nothing. And St. Paul, we know that an idol is nothing in the world. 1 Cor. viii. 4.

To bring to nothing, i. e. to exterminate, to deſtroy, utterly to root out any thing.

NOVICE, or Neophyte. This word comes from the Greek Νεόφυτος, from νεὸς, novus, and φύτος, plantatus, ſatus, and literally ſignifies, newly ſown, or planted. This name was given to new converts to Chriſtianity, or to thoſe newly baptized. St. Paul adviſes, 1 Tim. iii. 6. that a novice ſhould not be made a biſhop, for fear, ſays he, leſt being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil. As Lucifer, being puffed up with thoſe eminent qualities he poſſeſſed, became proud and inſolent, and was therefore precipitated into hell, ſo a man who finds himſelf ſuddenly exalted in dignity, eaſily flatters himſelf, and conceits that he has more real worth than others, and that there is great occaſion for his ſervices, &c. Hence ariſes preſumption and pride, and then comes the judgment of God, who always humbles the proud.

NUMBER. This word is ſometimes taken to ſignify a ſmall number, ſuch as is ſoon reckoned; ſometimes it ſignifies the contrary. We are but few in number, ſays Jacob to his ſons, when they had aſſaulted Shechem, Gen. xxxiv. 30. literally, Ego autem viri numeri, I being men of number. And Moſes ſays, Deut. iv. 27. Ye ſhall be left few in number among the heathen. And Job, when a few years are come, Heb. years of number. And the Pſalmiſt, cv. 12. When they were but a few men in number: literally, men of number.

Number ſometimes ſtands for a great number, or a multitude. Thus, Pſal. cxlvii. 4. He telleth the number of the ſtars, or their multitude, as the Septuagint and Vulgate tranſlate it. Solomon ſays, Eccleſ. ii. 3. Quo facto opus eſt ſub ſole, numero dierum vitæ ſuæ.

The number of the beaſt, or the number of the name of the beaſt, in Rev. xiii. 17, 18. ſtands for the numerical value of the letters that compoſe his name. Vide ANTICHRIST.

NUMBERS. The book of Numbers is the third of the Pentateuch. The Hebrews call it וידבר Vajedabber, and he ſpoke, becauſe in the Hebrew it begins with theſe words. Some Jews call it במדבר Bemiddebar, in the deſert, becauſe it includes the hiſtory of the Iſraelites' journeying in the wilderneſs. The Greeks, and after them the Latins, call it the book of Numbers, becauſe the three firſt chapters contain the numbering of the Hebrews and Levites, which was performed ſeparately, after the erection and conſecration of the tabernacle.

The people having departed from Sinai on the twentieth day of the ſecond month of the ſecond year after their coming out of Egypt, went to the wilderneſs of Paran, and thence to Kadeſh, from whence they ſent ſpies to view the Land of Promiſe. At their return the people were diſcouraged; for which God condemned them to die in the deſart. And having journeyed thirty-nine years in the wilderneſs, they arrived at laſt at the plains of Moab, beyond Jordan. What happened during this interval is read in the book of Numbers.

NUMENIUS, Νεμήνιος, new-moon, new month, or the firſt day of the month. See NEOMENIA.

NUMENIUS, ſon of Antiochus, was ſent by Jonathan Maccabæus to renew the alliance made by the Jews, with the Romans and Lacedæmonians. He was again commiſſioned for the ſame purpoſe ſome years after, by Simon Maccabæus, the brother of Jonathan. It is not eaſy to know who this Numenius was, but he appears to have been a perſon of great capacity, ſince he was employed in ſuch important negociations, which he always managed with addreſs. Joſephus alſo mentions letters of the Roman ſenate in favour of Johannes Hyrcanus, given in the ninth year of his high prieſthood, wherein Numenius, the ſon of Antiochus, is named as ambaſſador from the Jews.

NUN, נון, ſon.

NUN, ſon of Eliſhamah, and father of Joſhua, of the tribe of Ephraim. The Greeks give him the name of Naue inſtead of Nun.

NUTS, a fruit well known and very common. The only paſſage in which mention is made of nuts, is Cant. vi. 11. I went down into the garden of nuts, or of nut-trees.

NYMPHA, Νύμφα, or Nymphas, Coloſſ. iv. 15. ſpouſe; from νύμφη.

NYMPHAS. St. Paul, Coloſſ. iv. 15. ſalutes Nymphas, and the church in his houſe. Some Latins have thought, that Nymphas was the name of a woman: but the Greek text ſhews plainly it muſt be a man. The Greeks keep the feaſt of Nymphas February 28, and give him the name of an apoſtle, They add, that he died in peace.

OATH. God has prohibited all falſe oaths, and all uſeleſs and cuſtomary ſwearing in ordinary diſcourſe: but when the neceſſity and importance of a matter requires an oath, he allows us to ſwear by his name; but not in the name of any falſe gods, or in the name of inanimate things, whether on earth, or in heaven, or by the ſtars, or by the life of any man. Our Saviour forbids all kinds of oaths, Matt. v. 33. and the primitive Chriſtians underſtood and obſerved this command in a literal ſenſe, as may be ſeen from Tertullian, Euſebius, St. Chryſoſtom, St. Baſil, St. Jerom, &c. However, it muſt be acknowledged, that neither the apoſtles nor fathers abſolutely condemned ſwearing, or the uſe of oaths upon every occaſion, and on all ſubjects. There are circumſtances wherein we cannot morally be excuſed from it. But we ought not to ſwear except on urgent neceſſity. We ought to live with ſuch integrity and veracity, as not to need an oath in confirmation of what we ſay; but that our word may be looked upon as good as an oath: nor muſt we ever ſwear but with a ſtrict regard to juſtice and truth. See St. Auſtin, Ep. 157. n. 40. and the commentators on St. Matthew, v. 33, 34.

VIII. OBADIAH, the prophet. He foretold the return from the captivity in theſe terms according to the Vulgate, Obad. 20. The army of the children of Iſrael, who had been tranſplanted out of their own country, ſhall poſſeſs all the land of the Canaanites as far as Sarepta, and the cities of the ſouth ſhall be in ſubjection to thoſe that had been carried away from Jeruſalem as far as the Boſphorus. The Hebrew [and Engliſh tranſlation] read it thus: The captivity of this hoſt of the children of Iſrael ſhall poſſeſs that of the Canaanites even unto Zarephath; and the captivity of Jeruſalem which is in Sepharad, ſhall poſſeſs the cities of the ſouth. Some Hebrews by the name of Canaanites here underſtand Germany, and France by the name of Zarephath, and Spain by the name of Sepharad. The Jew that taught St. Jerom the Hebrew tongue, by the name of Sepharad, underſtood the Boſphorus, which he connected with the prepoſition Be, ſignifying within, and made but one word of them. But it will be better to follow the reading of the Septuagint. The Iſraelites at their return from the captivity ſhall poſſeſs the land of the Canaanites, or of the Phœnicians, as far as the city of Sarepta, which was near to Tyre and Sidon, the capital of Phœnicia. And the captives that ſhould return to Jeruſalem ſhall poſſeſs the country that reaches from Ephrata towards the ſouth of the Land of Promiſe.

OBAL, עובל, inconvenience of old age, or of the flux: from בלה balah, to grow old, or from יבל jabal, flux, and עוה havah, naughtineſs. According to the Arabic, he that walks; from עבל habal.

OBED-EDOM, עבד־אדם, the ſlave of Edom, or the Idumæan: or labourer of the man, of red, or earthy; from עבד habad, a ſlave, and from אדם adam, man, or Edom, Idumæan.

OBED-EDOM, ſon of Jeduthun, a Levite, 1 Chr. xvi. 38. father of Shemaiah, Jehozabad, Joah, Sacar, Nathaneel, Ammiel, Iſſachar, and Peulthai. He had a numerous family, ſays 1 Chron. xxvi. 4. becauſe the Lord bleſſed him. After the death of Uzzah, David terrified at that accident, durſt not remove the ark into the place he had provided for it in his own houſe, but left it in the houſe of Obed-Edom, near the place where Uzzah was ſtruck dead. The preſence of the ark became a bleſſing to Obed-Edom, which encouraged David ſome months afterward to remove it to the place he had appointed for it. Afterwards Obed-Edom and his ſons were aſſigned to the keeping of the doors of the temple, 1 Chr. xv. 18, 21. In 2 Sam. vi. 10. Obed-Edom is called the Gittite, probably becauſe he was of Gath rimmon, a city of the Levites beyond Jordan, Joſh. xxi. 24, 25.

OBIL, אויבל, ἀβὶλ, that weeps, or deſerves to be bewailed; from אבל abal: otherwiſe, ancient; from בלה balah: otherwiſe, who is brought; from יבל jabal.

OBIL, or Ubil, an Iſhmaelite, maſter of the camels to king David, 1 Chron. xxvii. 30. David gave the care of his camels to an Iſhmaelite, probably becauſe theſe people knew better than others the manner of rearing and managing theſe animals, which were very common in their country.

OBOTH, אבות, ſpirits of Python, falſe oracles, or bags, goat-ſkins ſerving for veſſels to put liquors in; from אוב ob: otherwiſe, deſires; from אבה abah: otherwiſe, fathers; from אב ab.

OBOTH, an encampment of the Hebrews in the wilderneſs. From Punon they went to Oboth, and from Oboth to Je-abarim, Numb. xxi. 10. xxxiii. 43. Ptolemy ſpeaks of a city called Oboda, or Eboda, in Arabia Petræa; Pliny, and the geographer Stephanus mention it alſo. Stephanus makes it belong to the Nabatheans, and Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 28. to the Helmodeans, a people of Arabia. At Oboth they worſhipped the god Obodos, which Tertullian joins with Duſares, another king of this country. Tertul. ad Nation. lib. ii. cap. 8.

OBSCURE, as put for adverſity, ſee NIGHT and DARKNESS. An obſcure, dark, or ſad countenance is oppoſed to a ſerene and open one. Jeſus Chriſt upbraids the Phariſees, that they had obſcure or ſad aſpects, Matt. vi. σκυθρωποι, when they faſted. And Nahum, ii. 10. ſpeaking of the deſtruction of Nineveh, ſays, their faces were as black as a pot. Heb. as if they had blacked their faces with ſoot. Some travellers, as Tavernier, Voyage of Perſia, lib. ii. cap. 7. affirm, that by way of mourning the Orientals daub their faces with the black of a kettle. Joel makes alluſion to this cuſtom, ii. 6. All faces ſhall gather blackneſs. And Iſa. xiii. 8. Their faces ſhall be as flames. And Ezek. xx. 47. All faces from the north to the ſouth ſhall be burned. Vide FRAGMENT, No. E. 305.

Obſcure places denote the grave, Pſal. cxliii. 3. "The enemy hath made me to dwell in darkneſs, as thoſe who have been long dead." In Pſal. lxxiv. 20. we read, "The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty," which ſome underſtand of the obſcure places of priſons, wherein tyrants often keep the weak and unfortunate; becauſe the obſcure of the earth, the poor Iſraelites, are reduced to captivity in the houſes of the Babylonians. Solomon ſpeaks of the obſcure, the poor, as oppoſed to the great and rich. Prov. xxii. 29. "Seeſt thou a man diligent in his buſineſs, he ſhall ſtand before kings; he ſhall not ſtand before mean men:" Heb. coram obſcuris.

In great calamities, the ſun is ſaid to be obſcured, and the moon covered with darkneſs, Matt. xxiv. 29. Luke xxiii. 45. Vide alſo Nah. iii. 19. Jer. xiv. 2.

Obſcurity of the heart and of the mind, according to St. Paul, is put for the wilful ignorance and hardneſs of the Jews. Rom. i. 21. Eph. iv. 18.

OBSERVATION. To obſerve the commandments of the Lord, his laws, his ſolemnities, his covenant, &c. are expreſſions that occur very frequently in Scripture, Exod. xxiii. 21. Obſerve him, and hear his voice: Hebrew, be on your guard in his preſence, and fear him. You ſhall not obſerve dreams, Levit. xix. 26. לא תעוננו. Some tranſlate, you ſhall uſe no ſorcery; others, you ſhall caſt no nativities; or, you ſhall not enchant the eyes; or, you ſhall uſe no auguries by the flight of birds.

Obſervare cuſtodias. To keep guard in the temple, at the gate of a prince, in a camp, or even to keep watch over a flock that lies out in the field, 1 Sam. ii. 22.

To obſerve the mouth of any one, to be a ſpy on his words, in order to ſurprize him. The Babylonians obſerved Daniel, that they might have an opportunity to accuſe him to the king. The Phariſees obſerved Jeſus Chriſt, and endeavoured to catch him in his diſcourſes. Solomon, Eccl. viii. 2. adviſes to obſerve the mouth of the king, to keep his ordinances, to be obedient to his commands, and, Eccl. xi. 4. that he that obſerves the winds ſhall not ſow. St. Paul reproves the Galatians, iv. 10. for obſerving days and months; imitating the Jews in their ſuperſtitious ſtitious diſtinctions of days. Ezekiel ſays, xxxiii. 4, 5. that he who does not obſerve himſelf, or takes no care of himſelf, ſhall die by the ſword, Pſ. cxxx. 3. If thou Lord ſhouldeſt mark (or obſerve) iniquities, O Lord, who ſhall ſtand? If thou ſhouldeſt enter into a rigorous obſervation of our faults, who can bear ſuch a ſcrutiny, who can ſtand ſuch an enquiry?

I. ODED, father of the prophet Azariah, called Obed in ſome ancient bibles and Latin concordances, 2 Chron. xv. 1.

II. ODED, a prophet of the Lord, 2 Chr xxviii. 9. who being at Samaria, when the Iſraelites returned from the war againſt Judah, with their king Pekah, and brought 200,000 captives; he went to meet them, and remonſtrated effectually with them; ſo that they ſent back their captives.

The principal men of Samaria took care of them, gave them cloaths, food, and other aſſiſtances; after which they furniſhed them with horſes, becauſe the greater part of them were exhauſted, and unable to walk. Thus they conducted them to Jericho, which was in the confines of Judah.

ODONARKES, Ὀδομαρὰ, or Odaren, ſong of praiſe; from הוד hod, praiſe and רנן ranan, a ſong: otherwiſe, witneſs of the ark; from עוד hud, witneſs, and ארון aron, ark.

ODONARKES, or Odaven, an ally of Bacchides, the enemy of the Jews. He was killed by Jonathan Maccabæus, with ſome others of the Syrians, 1 Macc. ix. 66, A. M. 3846, ante A. D. 158.

OFFERINGS. The Hebrews had ſeveral kinds of offerings, which they preſented at the temple. Some were free-will offerings; others were of obligation. The firſt-fruits, the tenths, the ſin-offerings were of obligation: the peace-offerings, vows, offerings of wine, oil, bread, ſalt, and other things, made to the temple, or to the miniſters of the Lord, were offerings of devotion. The Hebrews called offerings in general Corban, קרבן. But the offerings of bread, ſalt, fruits and liquors, as wine and oil, preſented to the temple, they called Mincha, מנחה. Sacrifices are not properly offerings; nor commonly included under this name.

Offerings of grain, meal, bread, cakes, fruits, wine, ſalt, oil, were common in the temple. Sometimes theſe offerings were alone; ſometimes they accompanied the ſacrifices. Honey was never offered with the ſacrifices, but it might be offered alone, as firſt-fruits, Levit. ii. 11, 12.

Theſe were the rules obſerved in the preſenting of thoſe offerings called Mincha, or Korban Mincha: Levit. ii. 1. קרבן מנחה, LXX. δῶρον θυσίας, Vulg. Oblationem ſacrificii. There were five ſorts of theſe offerings. 1. Fine flour or meal. 2. Cakes of ſeveral ſorts, baked in an oven. 3. Cakes baked upon a plate. 4. Another ſort of cakes baked upon a plate with holes in it. 5. The firſt-fruits of the new corn, which were offered either pure and without mixture, or roaſted, or parched in the ear, or out of the ear.

The cakes were kneaded with oil-olive, or fried in oil in a pan, or only dipped in oil after they were baked. The bread offered to the altar, was to be without leaven; for leaven was never offered on the altar, nor with the ſacrifices, Levit. ii. 11, 12. But they might make preſents of common bread to the prieſts, and miniſters of the temple.

Theſe offerings were appointed in favour of the poor, who could not afford the charge of ſacrificing animals. Thoſe alſo who offered living victims were not excuſed from giving meal, wine, and ſalt, which was to accompany the greater ſacrifices. Thoſe who offered only oblations of bread, or of meal, offered alſo oil, incenſe, ſalt, and wine, which were in a manner their ſeaſoning. The prieſt in waiting received the offerings from the hand of him who offered them, laid a part upon the altar, and reſerved the reſt for his own ſubſiſtence, as a miniſter of the Lord. Nothing was wholly burnt up but the incenſe, of which the prieſt retained none. See Lev. ii. 2, 13. Numb. xv. 4, 5.

When an Iſraelite offered a loaf to the prieſt, or a whole cake, the prieſt broke it into two parts, ſetting aſide that part he reſerved to himſelf, and broke the other into crumbs, poured upon it oil, ſalt, wine, and incenſe, and ſpread the whole upon the fire of the altar. If theſe offerings were accompanied by an animal for a ſacrifice, it was all thrown upon the victim, to be conſumed with it.

If theſe offerings were ears of new corn, (wheat or barley) theſe ears were parched at the fire, or in the flame, and rubbed in the hand, and then offered to the prieſt in a veſſel; over which he put oil, incenſe, wine, and ſalt, and then burnt it upon the altar, firſt having taken his own portion. Levit. ii. 14, 15.

The greater part of theſe offerings were voluntary, and of pure devotion. But when an animal was offered in ſacrifice, they were not at liberty to omit theſe offerings. Every thing proper was to accompany the ſacrifice, and what ſerved as ſeaſoning to the victim. In ſome caſes the law requires only offerings of corn, or bread; as, when they offered the firſt-fruits of their harveſt, whether offered ſolemnly by the nation, or as the devotion of private perſons.

As to the quantity of meal, oil, wine, or ſalt, to accompany the ſacrifices, I cannot eaſily ſee that the law determines it. Generally the prieſt threw an handful of meal, or crumbs, on the fire of the altar, with wine, oil, and ſalt in proportion, and all the incenſe. The reſt belonged to himſelf, the quantity depended on the liberality of the offerer. I obſerve, that Moſes appoints an aſſaron, or the tenth part of an ephah of meal, for thoſe that had not wherewithal to offer the appointed ſin-offerings. See Levit. v. 11. xiv. 21. In the ſolemn offerings of the firſt-fruits for the whole nation, they offered an intire ſheaf of corn, a lamb of a year old, two tenths or two aſſarons of fine meal mixed with oil, and a quarter of an hin of wine for the libation. Lev. xxiii. 10, 11, 12, &c. Numb. v. 15.

In the ſacrifice of jealouſy, when a jealous huſband accuſed his wife of infidelity, the huſband offered the tenth part of a ſatum of barley-meal; without oil or incenſe, becauſe it was a ſacrifice of jealouſy.

Offerings of fruits of the earth, of bread, of wine, oil, and ſalt, are the moſt ancient of any that have come to our knowledge. Gen. iv. 3, 4. Cain offered to the Lord fruits of the earth, the firſt-fruits of his labour. Abel offered firſtlings of his flocks, and of their fat. The heathen religions have nothing more ancient, than theſe ſorts of offerings made to their gods. They offered clean wheat, flour, and bread.

> Farra tamen veteres jaciebant, farra metebant,
> Primitias Cereri farra reſecta dabant.
> OVID. FAST. ii.

Numa Pompilius, the Romans' legiſlator, and who eſtabliſhed their religious rites, taught them to offer to the gods, fruits, corn, meal, or the crumb of bread, with ſalt, wheat roaſted or parched. Numa inſtituit fruge Deos Colere, & molâ ſalſâ ſupplicare, atque, ut author eſt Hemina, far torrere, Plin. lib. xviii. cap. 2. Before the uſe of bloody ſacrifices they offered only corn.

> OVID. FAST. i.

Theophraſtus, apud Stobæum, obſerves, that among the Greeks, meal mingled with wine and oil, which they call Thylemata, was the ordinary ſacrifices of the poor.

The difference between the offerings of meal, wine, and ſalt, with which the Greeks and Latins accompanied their bloody ſacrifices, and thoſe uſed by the Hebrews in their temple, conſiſted, chiefly, in that the Hebrews caſt theſe oblations upon the fleſh of the victims, being already offered and put upon the fire, whereas, the Greeks put them upon the head of the victim while alive, and juſt going to be ſacrificed. See LIBATION.

OG, עג, a cake, bread baked in the aſhes.

OG, king of Baſhan, or of part of the Land of Promiſe, beyond Jordan, between the mountains of Gilead eaſt, Jordan weſt, Libanus and mount Hermon north, and the brook Jabok ſouth. Og was a giant, of the race of the Rephaim. We may judge of his ſtature by the length of his bed, which was long preſerved in Rabbath, the capital of the Ammonites, Deut. iii. 11. It was nine cubits long, and four cubits broad; that is, fifteen feet, four inches long, and ſix feet ten inches broad. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XIII, page 29.

Moſes ſays, Numb. xxi. 33. that after having conquered Sihon, king of the Amorites, he advanced toward the country of Baſhan: wherein king Og reigned, who marched againſt him, to Edrei, with all his ſubjects; Og was conquered, and ſlain, with his children and all his people. Og and Sihon were the only kings that withſtood Moſes. Their country was given to the tribes of Gad, Reuben, and to half the tribe of Manaſſeh.

OHAD, אחד, that praiſes; from ידה jadah, to praiſe.

OHAD, or Ahod, third ſon of Simeon; went down into Egypt with Jacob his grandfather, and Simeon his father, Gen. xlvi. 10. A. M. 2298, ante A. D. 1706.

OHEL, אהל, ὀὸλ, tent, tabernacle: otherwiſe, brightneſs; from הלל hillul

OHEL, or Ohol, ſon of Zerubbabel, and grandſon of Joſiah, 1 Chron. iii. 20.

OLD, ancient. We ſay the Old Teſtament, by way of contradiſtinction from the New. Moſes was the miniſter of the Old Teſtament, of the old-age of the letter; but Jeſus Chriſt is the Mediator of the New Teſtament, or of the new covenant, not of the letter, but of the ſpirit, Heb. ix. 15—50.

The old man, Rom. vi. 6. the old Adam, in a moral ſenſe, is our derived corrupted nature, which we ought to crucify with Jeſus Chriſt, that the body body of ſin may die in us. In Col. iii. 9. the apoſtle enjoins us, to put off the old man with his deeds, and to put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. And Eph. iv. 22. we are to put off the old man which is corrupt according to the deceitful luſts.

The old leaven, is concupiſcence, and adherence to the literal and ceremonial obſervances of the law. St. Paul adviſes, 1 Cor. v. 8. to keep the feaſt, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedneſs; but with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth. Jeſus Chriſt expreſſes almoſt the ſame thing, when he ſays, Luke v. 37. that no man putteth new wine into old bottles, elſe the new wine will burſt the bottles, and be ſpilled, and the bottles ſhall periſh.

The old fruits and the new, which ſucceed one another, Levit. xxv. 22. xxvi. 10. and Cant. vii. 13. denote great abundance. You ſhall have ſo much, that to make room for the new you ſhall be obliged to remove the old.

OLIVE-TREE. St. Paul in his Epiſtle to the Romans, xi. 24. diſtinguiſhes two kinds of olive-trees; 1. the wild and natural; and 2. thoſe that require care and culture. The cultivated olive-tree is of a moderate heighth, its trunk knotty, its bark ſmooth, aſh-coloured; its wood is ſolid and yellowiſh; the leaves are oblong, almoſt like thoſe of the willow, of a green colour, dark on the upper ſide, and white on the under ſide. In the month of June it puts out white flowers that grow in bunches. Each flower is of one piece, widening upwards, and dividing into four parts; the fruit oblong and plump. It is firſt green, then pale, and when it is quite ripe black. In the fleſh of it is incloſed a hard ſtone, full of an oblong ſeed. The wild olive is ſmaller in all its parts.

When Noah ſent forth the dove out of the ark, it brought back to him a ſmall olive-branch with its leaves; Gen. viii. 11. which was a token to the patriarch, that the waters of the deluge were ſunk away. Solomon in the temple of Jeruſalem made of the wood of the olive cherubim; and gates that parted the ſanctum from the ſanctuary, 1 Kings vi. 23, 33. Eliphaz in Job xv. 33. compares a wicked man to a vine which ſheds its bloſſoms, and to an olive whoſe flowers fall before their ſeaſon, and conſequently it brings no fruit. The ſacred writers often uſe ſimiles taken from the olive.

OLIVES, the mount of, is ſituate eaſt of Jeruſalem, and ſeparated from the city by the brook Kidron, and by the valley of Jehoſhaphat. Vide the Map of JERUSALEM. On this mount Solomon built temples to the gods of the Ammonites and Moabites, out of complaiſance to his wives, 1 Kings, xi. 7, Hence the Mount of Olives is called the mountain of corruption, 2 Kings xxiii. 13. הר המשחית Vulg. Mons offenſionis: or, Mons corruptionis. Joſephus ſays, that this mountain is five ſtadia (or furlongs) from Jeruſalem; 625 geometrical paces; a ſabbath-day's journey, ſays St. Luke, Acts i. 12. The Mount of Olives has three ſummits, ranging from north to ſouth; from the middle ſummit our Saviour aſcended into heaven; on the ſouth ſummit Solomon built temples to his idols; the north ſummit is diſtant two furlongs from the middlemoſt. This is the higheſt, and is commonly called Galilee. Vide Reland. Palæſt. tom. ii. p. 338.

In the time of king Uzziah, the Mount of Olives was ſo ſhattered by an earthquake, that half the earth on the weſtern ſide, fell, and rolled four furlongs, or five hundred paces, toward the oppoſite mountain on the eaſt; ſo that the earth blocked up the highways, and covered the king's gardens. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. ix. cap. 11. Zech. xiv. 5.

This mountain is become an object of veneration among Chriſtians, ſince from hence our Saviour aſcended into heaven. Euſebius, de Vita Conſtant. lib. iii. cap. 43. aſſures us, that in the place of the aſcenſion there was a cavern, where, ſaid tradition, our Saviour entered, to communicate to his diſciples ſome of his moſt ſacred myſteries; whether by theſe words may be underſtood the holy Euchariſt, or a repaſt he took with them, mentioned Acts i. 4. or, whether he means any particular and ſecret inſtructions. The fathers inform us, that when our Saviour aſcended into heaven, he left his footſteps imprinted on the earth; that they always ſubſiſted, though the faithful continually carried away the ground from this place, by way of devotion. Thus is literally accompliſhed what Zechariah ſaid, xiv. 4. And his feet ſhall ſtand in that day upon the Mount of Olives.

It is added, that the empreſs Helena having cauſed a magnificent church to be built, in the midſt of which was this place, when they would have paved it with marble like the reſt, they never could accompliſh it; every thing that was put there by way of ornament removed of its own accord, ſo that they were forced to leave it as it was. To this day, it is ſaid, the impreſſion of our Saviour's left foot is viſible, ſunk into the rock, three fingers breadth; and they ſay the ſtone, wherein was the impreſſion of his right foot, was taken away at the time of the Cruſadoes, and placed in a temple, which at preſent is one of the principal Turkiſh moſques, where it is thought it may ſtill remain: for the Chriſtians have not liberty to enter therein to inform themſelves. St. Jerom, in Epitaph. Paulæ & alibi, ſpeaks of a great croſs, ſet up on the Mount of Olives, which might be ſeen afar off. The ſame father aſſures us, that when they endeavoured to ſhut up the cave which anſwered to the place where our Saviour aſcended into heaven, they could never accompliſh their deſign: but were forced to leave this place free and open. But obſerve, that the impreſſions of our Saviour's feet muſt have been ſunk very deep into the mountain, and that the Chriſtians muſt very nicely have obſerved the place, ſince the tenth Roman legion encamping upon this mountain, at the ſiege of the city by Titus, as Joſephus ſays, lib. vi. cap. 3. de Bello, could not efface theſe ſacred footſteps, nor eraſe them out of the memory of the faithful. [Query, are not theſe metaphorical expreſſions, ſignifying that the memory and effect of our Lord's life and aſcenſion was perpetual, and indefeaſible? in which ſenſe we may ſtill juſtly ſay, the way he went to heaven is open to all believers.] Vide ASCENSION.

OLYMPAS, or Olympias; St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 15. ſalutes Olympas, a believer of diſtinguiſhed virtue and merit. The particulars of his life are unknown. The Greeks honour him Nov. 10. and ſay he was beheaded at Rome the ſame day that St. Peter was crucified there.

OLYMPIAD, a ſpace of four years. The Greeks commonly computed time by Olympiads. They began to reckon in this manner chiefly from the 27th Olympiad, in which Chorœbus was victor; which was about one hundred and eight years after their firſt eſtabliſhment by Iphitus. Before this time they kept no exact regiſter of the conquerors at the Olympic games; and it is thought that Timæus, in the age of Ptolemy Philadelphus, was the firſt hiſtorian who inſerted the years of the Olympiads into his hiſtory. After him Eratoſthenes and Polybius followed the ſame method. Before them the Greek hiſtorians were not very careful in the dates of their chronology. See Marſham's Canon. Ægypt. Sæcul. 15.

The Olympic games, celebrated at Elis every four years, with a vaſt concourſe of people, began A. M. 3120, ante A. D. 884. But generally their beginning is taken only from the twenty-eighth Olympiad, wherein Chorœbus was conqueror, A. M. 3228, ante A. D. 776. This is properly the epocha of the hiſtorical time among the Grecians; previous to this their hiſtory is a great mixture of fable. Vide YEAR, ÆRA, &c.

OLYMPIAN. Jupiter Olympicus. The Grecians often gave to Jupiter, and to other gods, the ſurname of the places where they had temples dedicated to them. Jupiter was called Jupiter Idæus, from Mount Ida, where he was educated: —Cretenſis, from the iſland Crete where he was born, and where his ſepulchre was:—Capitolinus, becauſe of his temple in the capitol at Rome:—Fulminator, becauſe of his thunder:—Hoſpitalis, becauſe he preſided over hoſpitality; and ſo of the reſt. Antiochus Epiphanes having prophaned the temple of Jeruſalem, cauſed the ſtatue of Jupiter Olympicus to be ſet up there, where it remained three whole years, 2 Macc. vi. 2. till Judas Maccabæus removed it, and reſtored the worſhip of the Lord. This idol Daniel called the abomination that maketh deſolate, Dan. xii. 11. At the ſame time the ſame Jupiter was ſet up in the temple of mount Gerizim in Samaria, under the name of Jupiter Hoſpitalis, 2 Macc. vi. 2. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 7. Ἑλληνίς, that the Samaritans offered of their own accord to conſecrate their temple of Gerizim to Grœcian Jupiter.

I. OMRI, or Amri, general of the army of Elah, king of Iſrael. Being at the ſiege of Gibbethon, and hearing that his maſter Elah was aſſaſſinated by Zimri, who had uſurped his kingdom, he raiſed the ſiege of Gibbethon, and, being elected king by his army, marched againſt Zimri, attacked him at Tirzah, and forced him to burn himſelf and all his family, in the palace wherein he had ſhut up himſelf. Zimri reigned but ſeven days, A. M. 3075, ante A. D. 929. 1 Kings xvi. 9.

After the death of Zimri, half of Iſrael acknowledged Omri for king, the other half adhered to Tibni the ſon of Gineth: this diviſion continued for four years. When Tibni was dead, the people united again in acknowledging Omri as king of all Iſrael, who reigned twelve years: ſix years at Tirzah, and ſix at Samaria.

Till then Tirzah had been the chief reſidence of the kings of Iſrael. But when Omri purchaſed the hill of Shomeron, 1 Kings xvi. 24. about A. M. 3080, ante A. D. 924, for two talents of ſilver, (£.684) he there built a new city, which he called Samaria, from the name of the firſt poſſeſſor Shemer or Shomer; and there he fixed his royal ſeat. From which time Samaria was the capital of the kingdom of the ten tribes.

Omri did evil before the Lord, and his crimes exceeded thoſe of his predeceſſors. He walked in all the ways of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat. He died at Samaria A. M. 3086, ante A. D. 918. His ſucceſſor was Ahab.

III. OMRI, ſon of Michael, of Iſſachar. 1 Chron. xxvii. 18. chief of his tribe in the time of king David.

ON, אן, pain, force, iniquity. Numb. xvi. 1.

ON, a city of Egypt. See HELIOPOLIS.

ONAM, אונם, ὠμὰν or ἰανὰμ, their trouble; from אנה anah: otherwiſe, their ſtrength, or their iniquity; from און on, or aven, according to different readings, and the pronoun מ.

ONAN, אונן, ἀυνὰν, pain, ſtrength, power, iniquity. See ONAM.

ONAN, ſon of Judah, and grandſon of the patriarch Jacob. Judah having given a young woman named Tamar to his eldeſt ſon Er for a wife, Er died without children. Judah then cauſed his ſecond ſon Onan to marry Tamar, that he might raiſe ſucceſſors to his brother. But Onan ſeeing that the children begotten by him would be deemed to belong to his brother, withheld from Tamar the means of becoming a mother. This was ſo diſpleaſing to the Lord, that he cauſed him to die, Gen. xxxviii. 6, 7, &c. probably by ſome extraordinary malady. The time of this affair is wholly uncertain. The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, a book very apocryphal, ſays, that Onan lived a year with Tamar without conſummating his marriage; Tamar complaining of this to Judah, he expoſtulated with Onan, who followed the connſel of his mother who was a Canaanite, and who had an averſion for Tamar.

ONESIMUS, Ὀνήσιμος, uſeful; from ὀνήσιμος.

ONESIMUS, a Phrygian by nation, a ſlave to Philemon, and a diſciple of the apoſtle Paul. Oneſimus having run away from his maſter, and alſo having robbed him, Philem. verſe. 18. Chryſoſt. Prologo. went to Rome about A. D. 61. while St. Paul was there in priſon the firſt time. As Oneſimus knew him by repute, (his maſter Philemon being a Chriſtian) he ſought him out, acquainted him with what he had done, owned his flight, and did him all the ſervice Philemon himſelf could have done, had he been at Rome. St. Paul brought him to a ſenſe of the greatneſs of his crime, inſtructed him, converted him, baptized him, and ſent him back to his maſter Philemon with a letter inſerted among St. Paul's epiſtles; which is univerſally acknowledged as canonical.

This letter had all the ſucceſs he could deſire. Philemon not only received Oneſimus as a faithful ſervant, but as a brother and a friend; and after a little time, he ſent him back to Rome to St. Paul, that he might continue his ſervices to him in his priſon. After this, Oneſimus carried ſuch epiſtles as the apoſtle wrote at that time: as that to the Coloſſians, A. D. 62.

From this time Oneſimus's employment was in the miniſtry of the goſpel. The apoſtolical conſtitutions, lib. vii. cap. 46. acquaint us that St. Paul made him biſhop of Berea in Macedonia. The martyrologies call him apoſtle, and ſay he ended his life by martyrdom. The Roman martyrology mentions him as being made biſhop of Epheſus by St. Paul after Timothy. Others add, that it was he whom Ignatius the Martyr ſpeaks of, as biſhop of Epheſus, A. D. 107: but this opinion has no ſolid proof. See M. Tillemont, Note 70. upon St. Paul. The ſame martyrology places his feaſt on February 16, and ſays, that having ſucceeded Timothy in the biſhoprick of Epheſus, and having been charged by him with the preaching of the goſpel, he was taken into cuſtody and ſent to Rome, where he was ſtoned for his faith in Jeſus Chriſt. His body was buried there, but was afterwards taken up and carried to the place where he had been biſhop. The Greeks celebrate his feaſt December 15.

ONESIPORUS, Ὀνησίφορος, who brings profit: from ὄνησις, uſefulneſs, and Φόρος, he that brings.

ONESIPHORUS, mentioned honourably by St. Paul, 2 Tim. i. 16. He came to Rome A. D. 65, while St. Paul was in priſon there for the faith, and at a time when almoſt every one had forſaken him. See 2 Tim. i. 16, 18. and Theodoret. in 2 Tim. He arrived there from Aſia, where he had already been very ſerviceable to the church. Having found St. Paul in bonds, after long ſeeking him, he often aſſiſted him to the utmoſt of his power. For which reaſon the apoſtle wiſhes all ſort of benedictions on himſelf and his family. The Greeks place his feſtival April 29, and December 8. On April 29 they make him biſhop of Colophon in Aſia; and December 8. they make him biſhop of Ceſarea, without diſtinguiſhing which Ceſarea. They place him among the ſeventy diſciples, and ſeem to aſcribe martyrdom to him. The Roman martyrology on December 16, ſays he ſuffered martyrdom on the Helleſpont, where he went to preach the goſpel along with Porphyrius: that having been apprehended by the command of the proconſul Adrian, and carried into a temple dedicated to idols, there to offer incenſe to them, which he courageouſly refuſed to do; he was cruelly whipped with rods; then tied to a horſe's tail, and drawn about till he expired.

ONIAS, Ὀνίας, ſtrength of the Lord, or the Lord is my ſtrength; from אן on, and יה jah, the Lord: otherwiſe, ſhip of the Lord; from אני ani, and יה the Lord.

I. ONIAS, high prieſt of the Jews, ſon and ſucceſſor of Jeddoa or Jaddus; Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xi, cap. ult. ad finem; he was made high prieſt A. M. 3682, and governed the Hebrew republic twenty years, to A. M. 3702, ante A. D. 302. Onias had two ſons, Simon, and Eleazar. Simon, ſurnamed the juſt, ſucceeded him.

II. ONIAS, ſon of Simon the juſt, high prieſt of the Jews, did not immediately ſucceed his father, who died A. M. 3711, becauſe of his minority. Eleazar, his uncle by the father's ſide, ſucceeded Simon the juſt, and held the high-prieſthood near thirty years. He died A. M. 3744, and had for his ſucceſſor, not Onias II. his nephew, who was lawful heir to this dignity, but Manaſſeh his great uncle, who died in 3771. Then Onias II. at laſt enjoyed the high-prieſthood, and held it to 3785, ante A. D. 219. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 3 & 4. that this Onias was a man of a mean ſpirit, and ſo ſordidly covetous, that he had like to have loſt his country by it. For the high prieſts, his predeceſſors, having been uſed to pay out of their own money the tribute of the country to the king of Egypt, and which was but twenty talents, (about £.6,850) he refuſed to continue this cuſtom.

Ptolemy Euergetes, king of Egypt, incenſed againſt Onias, ſent a meſſenger to him, threatening that if he did not ſpeedily pay what he owed to the king's treaſury, he would give up Judea to his ſoldiers, and ſend thither other inhabitants inſtead of the Jews. The people were terrified at theſe threats; but the avarice of the high prieſt ſtill rendered him inſenſible. Joſephus, nephew of Onias, and ſon of one Tobias, and a ſiſter of the high prieſt, obtained leave of him to go in his name, and in that of the people, to remonſtrate to the king of Egypt. Joſephus coming to court, knew ſo well how to work upon the tempers of the king and the queen, that he obtained from them all he deſired.

Onias II. had for ſucceſſor Simon II. his ſon, raiſed to the high prieſthood in 3785. Some think that it is Onias II. whoſe commendation is given by Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, chap. i. and whom he calls Simon: they will alſo have it to be him, to whom the Lacedæmonians writ the letter mentioned by Joſephus, Antiq. book xii. cap. 5. But others with more reaſon refer it to Onias III.

III. ONIAS, ſon of Simon II. high prieſt of the Jews, was eſtabliſhed in the prieſthood A. M. 3805, ante A. D. 199. Joſephus relates the ſucceſſion of Onias III. very differently from the ſecond book of the Maccabees. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 5. The high prieſt Simon had three ſons, Onias III. Jaſon or Jeſus, Onias, otherwiſe Menelaus. Onias III. at his death left a ſon under age called Onias. As he was not capable of exerciſing the high-prieſthood, king Antiochus Epiphanes conferred it on Jaſon the brother of Onias III. But he did not long enjoy it, for falling into diſgrace with this prince, he diſpoſſeſſed him of the prieſthood, and gave it to Menelaus, otherwiſe called Onias. So that the three ſons of Simon the Juſt ſucceſſively enjoyed this dignity; but the two laſt were in poſſeſſion of it to the excluſion of Onias IV. ſon of Onias III. to whom it belonged by right of ſucceſſion. But, 2 Macc. chap. iii, iv ſays, it was under the pontificate of Onias III. that the hiſtory of Heliodorus happened, who having been ſent by king Seleucus to fetch away the treaſure from the temple of Jeruſalem, was hindered by angels. In conſequence of which, Onias having been accuſed to the king of Syria, by one Simon, as a traitor to his country, and author of the diſturbances at Jeruſalem when Heliodorus came thither; he thought fit to make a journey to Antioch, to vindicate himſelf to the king. While this was doing king Seleucus died, and his brother Antiochus Epiphanes ſucceeded him, at his return from Rome, in A. M. 3828, ante A. D. 176. Then Jaſon brother to Onias came to Antioch, offered money to Epiphanes for the high-prieſthood, and obtained it. He then returned to Jeruſalem while Onias continued at Antioch, deprived of his dignity.

Three years afterwards Jaſon having ſent Menelaus, brother of Simon to Antioch, (obſerve he does not call him brother of Jaſon, or of Onias) to carry money to the king, and to conſult him on ſome affairs of importance; Menelaus inſinuated himſelf into the king's favour, obtained the ſovereign prieſthood from him, for which he gave three hundred talents above what Jaſon had given. Jaſon being thus deprived of his dignity, was obliged to retire into the country of the Ammonites. But as Menelaus was not able to pay what he had promiſed the king ſo ſoon as was expected, his brother Lyſimachus was ſubſtituted in this office. In the mean while, Antiochus Epiphanes Epiphanes being obliged to depart in haſte for Cilicia, to ſuppreſs the rebellion of ſome cities there, he left as governor, at Antioch, one Andronicus, who, corrupted by the money given him by Menelaus, put to death Onias III. the lawful high-prieſt of the Jews. Vide 2 Macc. iv. 32, 33, &c. A. M. 3834, ante A. D. 170.

The unjuſt death of ſo holy a man filled with indignation, not only the Jews, but even the Pagans, themſelves. As ſoon as the king came back from Cilicia, they made their complaints to him of this murder. The king, though naturally little inclined to favour the Jews, could not refrain from tears, remembering the wiſdom and the moderation of Onias. He cauſed Andronicus to be ſtripped of the purple he wore, made him walk in diſgrace through the ſtreets of Antioch, and ordered him to be put to death in the ſame place where he had killed Onias. Thus the Lord brought upon him that puniſhment he had ſo juſtly deſerved.

There are few perſons to whom greater praiſes have been given than to Onias III. It is thought that to him Areus king of the Lacedæmonians wrote the letter, 1 Macc. xii. 20, 21. But we have given reaſons that make it doubtful whether this letter was written to Onias III. It is more probable it was ſent to Onias I. See LACEDEMON.

Jonathan Maccabæus ſending ambaſſadors to Rome A. M. 3860, ordered them at their return to make Lacedæmon in their way, and to renew the alliance with the Lacedæmonians, in the ſame manner as they had done with the Romans; and in the letter he wrote to the Lacedæmonians, he recites that of king Areus. Joſephus alſo gives it intire, lib. xii. cap. 5. but changes the terms and manner of expreſſion. See the character which the ſecond book of the Maccabees gives to the high-prieſt Onias III. 2 Macc. iii. 1, 2, 3. See alſo chap. xv. v. 12, 13, &c. where Onias appeared to Judas Maccabæus, accompanied by the prophet Jeremiah, who preſented a ſword to Judas.

IV. ONIAS, ſon of Onias III. never enjoyed the high-prieſthood. The ambition of his uncles Jaſon and Menelaus, and the injuſtice of the kings of Syria, kept him from it. However, he had hopes of obtaining it, till the death of his uncle Menelaus: but when he ſaw that Menelaus was put to death, and that Antiochus Eupator had appointed as his ſucceſſor, Alcimus or Jacimus, who was indeed of the race of Aaron, but not of the family of Onias; and that Lyſias, regent of the kingdom of Syria, had adviſed the king no longer to continue the high-prieſthood in this family: Onias IV. ſoon perceiving his utter excluſion took refuge in Egypt with Ptolemy Philometor, where he obtained permiſſion to build a temple to the true God, in the prefecture of Heliopolis, 2 Macc. xiii. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 15. A. M. 3842, ante A. D. 162. This temple was not built till A. M. 3854, ante A. D. 150. This temple was called Onion. See ONION.

Joſephus in his ſecond book againſt Appion, ſays, that Ptolemy Philometor and Cleopatra his queen, placed ſo great confidence in Onias and in Doſitheus, both Jews, that they intruſted them with the command of their army. And after the death of king Philometor, Cleopatra being deſirous to ſecure the kingdom to her ſon, who was the lawful heir of Philometor, but Ptolemy Euergetes, otherwiſe called Phyſcon, oppoſing this ſettlement, the queen employed Onias IV. to make war againſt him. Onias advanced towards Alexandria with a ſmall army of Jews, and appeaſed a ſedition there. But Ptolemy having compelled the queen to marry him, put to death all who were in the intereſt of the young prince, and killed him in the arms of his mother the very day of their marriage, in the very midſt of the ſolemnity. It is not ſaid whether Onias was put to death on this occaſion, but it is very probable.

V. ONIAS, called otherwiſe Menelaus, whom Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 4, 5. makes to be ſon to Simon the Juſt, and brother of Onias III. and whom 2 Macc. iv. 23. makes to be brother to a certain Simon of the tribe of Benjamin, an enemy and accuſer of Onias III. This Menelaus, or Onias V. was created high-prieſt A. M. 3832, and put to death in 3842, ante A. D. 162. Jaſon the uſurper of the high-prieſthood having ſent Menelaus to Antioch, to carry money to king Antiochus Epiphanes, and to know his anſwer to ſome important queries; Menelaus managed the king's temper ſo dexterouſly, that he got into his confidence, and obtained the high-prieſthood for himſelf, to the excluſion of Jaſon, by an offer of three hundred talents more than Jaſon had ſent for it: and having received the king's orders, he returned to Jeruſalem, puffed up with this new dignity. Jaſon was forced to withdraw into the land of the Ammonites.

But Menelaus not ſending punctually to the king the money he had promiſed, though Soſtratus governor of the caſtle had urged him to the payment; they both received a ſummons to appear before the king, when the king conferred the high-prieſthood on Lyſimachus the brother of Menelaus. In the mean time Antiochus having been obliged in great haſte, to go to quell an inſurrection of ſome cities in Cilicia, Menelaus took the opportunity of his abſence, to endeavour to improve his affairs. He engaged Andronicus, governor of Antioch in the abſence of the king, to put to death Onias III. But at the return of Antiochus he was convicted of this crime, and puniſhed in an ignominious manner.

Menelaus ſupported himſelf yet ſome time. Lyſimachus, to whom Antiochus Epiphanes had given the high-prieſthood, having by the counſel of Menelaus committed many diſorders, and violences in the temple, the people mutinied, and ſeveral of his attendants were wounded, ſome ſlain, and himſelf was killed on the ſpot. Menelqus was accuſed as the author of theſe diſorders. But Antiochus coming to Tyre, Menelaus by a large ſum gained to his intereſt Ptolemy, ſon of Dorimenes; and by his means he not only eſcaped the death he deſerved, but even obtained the condemnation of the deputies ſent by the Jews, to accuſe him before Antiochus. He returned to Jeruſalem more inſolent than ever, increaſing in malice, and continually laying ſnares for his fellow citizens. In the interim, when Antiochus was gone into Egypt, and a report was ſpread of his death; Jaſon the falſe high-prieſt, took a thouſand men with him, and beſieged Jeruſalem, which he took, and forced Menelaus to retire into the citadel, where the Syrians kept garriſon. But the report of Antiochus's death afterwards proving falſe, Jaſon was obliged to withdraw, and Menelaus was re-eſtabliſhed at Jeruſalem with new authority, by which he diſtreſſed the citizens.

After the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, his ſon Antiochus Eupator, under the conduct of Lyſias the regent of the kingdom, marched againſt Jeruſalem. Menelaus was then in the army, and pretended to intercede with Eupator in favour of the Jews his countrymen, flattering himſelf that he ſhould ſoon recover his authority at Jeruſalem. But Lyſias having acquainted Eupator, that Menelaus was the cauſe of all the troubles in Judæa, the king cauſed him to be apprehended, and ſecured till his return. Then being come to Berea, he was carried to the top of a tower fifty cubits high, wherein had been collected a great quantity of aſhes, and from the top of which nothing but a great precipice could be ſeen. From hence Menelaus was thrown down, and died miſerably, being ſuffocated in the aſhes, which ſerved him both for a grave and a tomb.

VI. ONIAS. Vide ANATHEMA, Curſe, Devote.

ONION. This name was given to the temple built by Onias IV. in Egypt, about A. M. 3854, ante A. D. 150. Onias IV. retiring into Egypt, inſinuated himſelf into the eſteem of Ptolemy Philometor, and Cleopatra his queen. Taking advantage of his favour, he aſked leave of the king to build a temple in Egypt, after the model of that at Jeruſalem, and therein to ſettle prieſts and Levites of his own nation. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 6. What determined him to undertake this, was chiefly, a paſſage of the prophet Iſaiah, who more than ſix hundred years before had foretold, that the Lord ſhould one day have a temple in Egypt, and, that by means of a Jew, who ſhould build it there.

Joſephus does not quote the words of Iſaiah, but the following is received as the paſſage, Iſai. xix. 18, 19. In that day ſhall five cities in the land of Egypt ſpeak the language of Canaan, (the Hebrew) and ſwear to the Lord of hoſts; one ſhall be called the city of deſtruction (or of curſing, or of Heres, or the Sun, Heb. עיר החרם Gnir Hacherem, Civitas Anathematis, Aquila, Sym. Theodoret: but the Vulgate read עיר הרחרס Gnir Hacheres, Civitas Solis. Perhaps it was this that ſuggeſted to Onias, to build or conſecrate this temple in the canton of Heliopolis.) In that day ſhall there be an altar to the Lord in the midſt of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord. And it ſhall be for a ſign, and for a witneſs unto the Lord of hoſts, in the land of Egypt.

Onias having received this permiſſion, built at Bubaſtus a temple, after the model of that at Jeruſalem, but not ſo large or magnificent. He found alſo prieſts and Levites as little ſcrupulous as himſelf, who engaged in the ſervice of this temple, and who obſerved the ſame ceremonies there, as were performed in the temple of Jeruſalem. This is the deſcription that Joſephus gives us of the temple Onion, in the ſeventh book of his hiſtory of the Jews. It was built 180 furlongs from Memphis, (about four leagues, taking 3,000 geometrical paces for a league.) This canton is called the Nome of Heliopolis; and the temple there has a tower like that of Jeruſalem, ſixty cubits high, and built with very large ſtones. The altar is of the ſame ſtructure as that at Jeruſalem. Onias adorned this temple with gifts and precious monuments, given by the liberality of the Jews of Egypt; but inſtead of the candleſtick which was in the temple of Jeruſalem, he hung up a golden lamp, which enlightened the Onion. All the circumference of the temple was incloſed with a wall of bricks, with gates of ſtonework. King Philometor endowed it with large revenues and much land, for its ſupport. The Jews

Jews and prieſts of Jeruſalem could not ſee this temple without concern, and it was always a ſubject of diviſion between the Jews of Egypt, and thoſe of Paleſtine.

After the ruin of the temple of Jeruſalem by the Romans, A. D. 70. there was reaſon to fear, that the Jews, being expelled their country, might retire into Egypt, and aſſembling in the temple Onion, might take occaſion to make a new revolt. For which reaſon Lupus, governor of Alexandria, and prefect of Egypt, having informed Veſpaſian of what had paſſed concerning the aſſaſſins which had withdrawn out of Judæa into Egypt: this prince gave him orders to demoliſh the temple. But Lupus ſatisfied himſelf with ſhutting it up, about A. D. 73, about 226 years after its founcation. Paulinus, who ſucceeded him a little after, took away all the ornaments and riches that were therein, cauſed all the doors to be ſhut up, and would not ſuffer any exerciſe of religion to be performed in it. Such was the end of the temple Onion. Joſeph. lib. vii. de Bello, cap. 37.

ONKELOS, the famous author of the Chaldee paraphraſe on the Pentateuch. The Jews pretend that Onkelos was a Gentile by birth and religion; that he was converted to Judaiſm while Hillel was alive, who lived ſome time before our Saviour. His paraphraſe is, without diſpute, the beſt, the moſt ſenſible, and the moſt literal, of any among the Jews; and it were to be wiſhed that he had explained all the Hebrew books of the Old Teſtament, as he has done the Pentateuch. Father Morin ſhews, that this paraphraſe is much more modern than the Jews report. He thinks it dates before the Talmud of Babylon, but after the Talmud of Jeruſalem. Jerom knew nothing of it, and very likely, it was compoſed ſince his time.

Some Jews have pretended, that Onkelos was ſon to the emperor Titus; others that he was his nephew, the ſon of his ſiſter. Others think, the author of the paraphraſe that bears Onkelos's name, was more ancient than he whom they repreſent as Titus's nephew. Other Rabbins have maintained, that Onkelos the paraphraſt was the ſame as Aquila, the famous Greek interpreter of Scripture. But. F. Morin, who acquaints us with all theſe particulars, has well confuted them in his Exercitations on the Bible, lib. ii. Exercit. 8. cap. 6.

Theſe reaſons have induced them to think, that Onkelos was the ſame as Aquila of Pontus. 1. The ſimilitude of names; for Onkelos and Aquila, or Akilas, are the ſame. 2. Aquila as well as Onkelos, was a proſelyte. 3. Each of them lived at the ſame time; about A. D. 150. To theſe reaſons it may be anſwered; 1. That the difference of the names Onkelos and Aquila, is ſufficient to make them two diſtinct perſons. 2. That the character of a proſelyte given to Onkelos is not well grounded. 3. That Aquila lived in the ſecond century of the Chriſtian church, whereas Onkelos lived in the time of Hillel, ſome time before Jeſus Chriſt. It is true, they ſay he lived till after the death of Gamaliel the grandſon of Hillel, who died eighteen years before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; but this is far enough from the time of Aquila. It is true that the author of Bereſhith Rabba wrote a Rabbinical Commentary on Geneſis, and ſome Rabbins after him talk of the Targum of Aquila; but this Targum is the Greek verſion of Aquila. Targum may be taken either for a verſion, or a paraphraſe.

The Targum of Onkelos has always been greatly eſteemed among the Jews. Elias Levita ſays, that the Jews think themſelves obliged to read a ſection of the law every week in their ſynagogues, which is the leſſon of the week. They read this ſection twice, firſt in the Hebrew original, afterwards in the Targum, i. e. in Chaldee; and for this they uſe the Targum of Onkelos. Thus it was read in his time, i. e. in the beginning of the ſixth century. Hence it was, according to the obſervation of this author, that this Targum was ſo well known among them, while the others were very ſcarce; inſomuch that it was not eaſy to find a copy of the other Targums in a whole province, whereas thoſe of Onkelos were very common.

As to what Father Morin ſays, that the Targum of Onkelos was not compoſed till after the Talmud of Jeruſalem; the reaſons he aſſigns only prove, that ſome additions have been made to Onkelos's text, and ſome words inſerted. But as to the body of the work, it cannot be doubted, but that it was wrote about the time of Jeſus Chriſt. St. Jerome's ſilence about this matter is but a negative argument; he might not have known it, though it were in being; or he might have known it, and yet neither quote it, nor mention it.

In many copies of the Bible, the Jews inſerted the Targum of Onkelos after the original text of the Bible; and put the ſame muſical notes to it, as to the Hebrew; ſo that it might be read with a kind of chanting in their ſynagogues, at the ſame time as the original, and to the ſame tune.

Though Onkelos generally follows his original, word for word, very cloſely and juſtly: yet he explains ſome paſſages of the original which he thought required it. E. gr. in moſt of the paſſages, where the name Jehovah is found, he puts מימרא דייי Memra, Verbum Jehovah, the Word of Jehovah; and he diſtinguiſhes Memra, Word, from Pitgama, which ſignifies diſcourſe, aſcribing to Memra all the actions of ſupreme deity. To Memra he aſcribes the creation of the world; he appeared to Moſes on Mount Sinai, and gave him the law: to him Jacob made his vow, ſaying: "If the Word ſhall conduct me, and bring me back to the houſe of my father, then he ſhall be my God." The ſame Word appeared to Abraham in the plain of Mamre. Jacob appealed to him as a witneſs between himſelf and Laban, &c. See WORD.

ONO, אונו, his trouble, his ſtrength, his iniquity; from און on, or aven, and the pronoun ו o, his.

ONO, a city of Benjamin: built, or at leaſt rebuilt, by the family of Elpaal, of Benjamin, 1 Chron. viii. 12. It was five miles from Lod, or Lydda, which alſo had been built by the Benjaminites.

ONO, ſecond ſon of Lod, Ezra ii. 33. where I take Lod to be the city of Lydda, and that Ono is its daughter, as in Scripture the villages are named the daughters of the great cities, to which they owe their origin. Compare 1 Chron. viii. 12.

ONYCHA, or Onyx. This word is uſed in two ſenſes in Scripture. 1. For an odoriferous nail or ſhell. 2. For a ſtone named Onyx. According to the etymology, Onyx ſignifies a nail of the finger, or toe. The Hebrew word Exod. xxx. 34. שחלת Shecheleth, which St. Jerome after the LXX. tranſlates by the aromatic ſhell or nail, is by others underſtood of Labdanum, or bdellium. But the greater part of commentators explain it by the onyx, or the odoriferous ſhell, a ſhell like that of the ſhell-fiſh purpura. The onyx is fiſhed for in watry places of the Indies, where grows the ſpica nardi, which is the food of this fiſh, and what makes its ſhell ſo aromatic. They gather theſe ſhells when the heat has dried the marſhes. The beſt onyx is found in the Red-Sea, and is white and large. The Babylonian is black and ſmaller. This is what Dioſcorides ſays.

ONYX, the precious ſtone ſo called, was the eleventh in the high-prieſt's pectoral. Exod. xxviii. 20. Hebrew, שהם ſhoham, LXX. Joſeph. Aquil. Hieron. Jun. Lud. de Dieu alii plures: Onychinus lapis: but Exod. xxviii. 9. The ſame term is tranſlated by St. Jerom, Sym. & Theodot. Onyx, by the LXX. and many others ſmaragdus. We think its true ſignification to be the emerald. The onyx is a kind of agate, of a whitiſh black colour; and as the white therein has ſomething of the colour of a man's nail, it has obtained the name of the onyx, or the nail.

OPHEL, עפל, Vulg. tower, or elevated place; from עפל hophel; otherwiſe, obſcurity; from עיפה hiphah.

OPHEL. At Jeruſalem was a wall and tower of Ophel. Jotham, king of Judah, made ſeveral buildings on the wall, or within the wall of Ophel, 2 Chron. xxvii. 3. Manaſſeh, king of Judah, built a wall weſt of Jeruſalem and the fountain Gihon, beyond the city of David, from the fiſh-gate to Ophel, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 14. At the return from the captivity, the Nethinim dwelt at Ophel, Nehem. iii. 26. xi. 21; from whence we gueſs, that this wall and tower were in the neighbourhood of the temple, ſince the Nethinim ought to be at hand, and ready at all times to do their duty therein. In Micah iv. 8. there is mention of the tower of Ophel: And thou, O tower of the flock, the ſtrong hold of the daughter of Zion. Heb. And thou, tower of the flock, Ophel, daughter of Zion: though ſome tranſlate Ophel—by bulwark, or ſtrong hold. There was at Jeruſalem a ſheep-gate, and a tower of Ophel. Joſephus, de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 18. & lib. vi. cap. 6. lib. vii. cap. 13. ſpeaks of Ophlas, which is the ſame as Ophel: and it ſeems to me, by what he ſays of it, that it muſt be near the temple.

OPHIR, אופר, aſhes; from אפר epher.

I. OPHIR, ſon of Joktan. Moſes ſays, Gen. x. 26—30. that the dwelling of the ſons of Joktan extended from Meſha to Sephar, a mountain of the eaſt. We think Meſha to be Mount Maſius in Meſopotamia; and Sephar the country of the Sepharvaites, or Saſpires, which divided Media from Colchis. Scripture does not acquaint us who were the deſcendants of Ophir, nor what particular province was peopled by him between Meſha and Sephar; but it cannot be doubted that the country of Ophir, whatever country that was, was peopled by the poſterity of Ophir, ſon of Joktan.

II. OPHIR, a country much celebrated in Scripture, and about which critics have propoſed a great number of conjectures. It is agreed, with great reaſon, that this country was peopled by Ophir, the ſon of Joktan, juſt mentioned; and Moſes lets us know, that the thirteen ſons of Joktan dwelt from Meſha to Sephar, a mountain of the eaſt, Gen. x. 30. But as Meſha and Sephar are as much unknown as Ophir itſelf, we muſt take another method to diſcover Ophir. All the paſſages have been examined which mention this country, 1 Kings xxii. 48. compared with 2 Chron. xx. 36. and 1 Kings ix. 28. x. 22. and it has been obſerved, that the ſame ſhips that went to Tarſhiſh, went alſo to Ophir; that theſe ſhips ſet out from Ezion-geber, a port of the Red-Sea, 1 Kings xxii. 49. ix. 26. x. 22.; that three years were required for Solomon's fleet to to make the voyage of Ophir; that this fleet returned freighted with gold, peacocks, apes, ſpices, ivory, and ebony, 1 Kings ix. 28. x. 11, 12. compare 2 Chron. viii. 18. ix. 10, &c. laſtly, that the gold of Ophir was in the higheſt eſteem, and that the country of Ophir more abounded with gold than any then known. By theſe tokens interpreters have undertaken to ſearch for Ophir, but almoſt all have taken different ways.

Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. that the country of Ophir is in the Indies, and is called the Gold Country. It is thought he means Cherſoneſus Aurea, known now by the name of Malacca, a peninſula oppoſite to Sumatra. Lucas Holſtenius, notis in Ortelium, after many enquiries, thinks we muſt fix on India in general, or the city of Supar in the iſland of Celebes. Others place it in the kingdom of Malabar, or of Ceylon, or in the iſle of Tapobrana, ſo famous among the ancients. Bochart has laboured to ſupport this opinion. Eupolemus, apud Euſeb. lib. ix. cap. 30. has placed Ophir in the iſland Durphe in the Red-Sea. Maffeus believed it was Pegu, and it is ſaid the Peguans pretend to be deſcended from thoſe Jews, whom Solomon ſent to work the mines of this country. Lipenius, who has compoſed a treatiſe concerning the country of Ophir, places it beyond the Ganges, at Malacca, Java, Sumatra, Siam, Bengal, Pegu, &c. Others, Arias Montanus. Genebr. Vatab. have ſought for Ophir in America, and have placed it in the iſland Hiſpaniola. Chriſtopher Columbus, who firſt diſcovered this iſland A. D. 1492, was uſed to ſay he had found the Ophir of Solomon. He ſaw there deep caverns, which went under ground for above ſixteen miles, from whence he thought Solomon might have dug his gold. Poſtel and ſome others have placed it in Peru, a country famous for its vaſt quantity of gold. Others have ſearched for it in Africa. They ſay that the inhabitants of Melinda or Sofala, on the eaſtern coaſt of Ethiopia, by tradition, and in books, affirm, that Solomon every three years ſent his fleet thither, to fetch gold, which is in great plenty there. John Dos Santos relates, that in Monomatapa in a mountain called Fura, there are excellent mines; that on the ſame mountain ſtands an old caſtle, which tradition ſays was the habitation of the queen of Sheba; and that this country is the real Ophir. Others place it at Angola, on the eaſtern coaſt of Africa; others at Carthage, though this city was not built till long after Solomon. Others have placed it in Spain.

Grotius, on 1 Kings, ix. 28. gueſſes, that Solomon's fleet did not perhaps go to the Indies, but only to a port of Arabia, by Arrian called Aphar, by Pliny Saphar, by Ptolemy Sapphera, and by Stephanus Saphinira. This city was ſituated on the coaſts of Arabia that were waſhed by the ocean. That the Indians brought their merchandizes thither, and that Solomon's navy went thither to bring them home. Huetius in his Diſſertation on the navigation of Solomon, ſays, the land of Ophir was on the eaſtern coaſt of Africa, which the Arabians call Zanguebar; that the name Ophir was given more particularly to the ſmall country of Sophala, which is on the ſame coaſt; that Solomon's fleet went out of the Red-Sea, and from the harbour of Ezion-geber, entered into the Mediterranean ſea by a canal of communication; that it doubled the cape of Guadarfui, and coaſted along Africa to Sophala: that there was found in abundance whatever was brought to Solomon by this voyage. [Mr. BRUCE has laboured to ſupport this opinion, by a variety of very ingenious arguments: eſpecially the names of places on the coaſt, and the courſes of the winds.]

Goropius Becanus and Bivarius, ſuppoſe Solomon's fleet not to depart from the Red-Sea, but from the Mediterranean. They pretend that the port of Ezion-geber was on this ſea. They ſay that Ezion-geber, according to Scripture, was in Idumæa; that Idumæa bordered on the Mediterranean; that on this ſea is found Gaſton-gabria in Strabo, and Betogabria in Ptolemy; which city is probably the ſame as Ezion-geber. True it is, that the Scripture places the city of Ezion-geber on the Red-Sea, or according to the Hebrew the ſea of Zuph: but they pretend that this name may expreſs in general the ſea of limits, which agrees as well to the Mediterranean as to the Red-Sea. Hornius does not diſapprove this opinion; but it is eaſy to confute it by two or three arguments.

1. The ſea of Zuph is never taken but for the Red-Sea.
2. Ezion-geber was on the gulph of Elath, on the Red-Sea.
3. Idumea might extend to the Mediterranean ſea in the time of Ptolemy the geographer; but in the time of Solomon, and a great while after, it extended into Arabia Petræa, towards Elath and Ezion-geber.

The abbot de Choiſy, in his Life of Solomon, is much inclined to place Ophir in the kingdom of Siam. In this kingdom and round about it are found all thoſe things, that Solomon's navy brought from Ophir; and the voyage is long enough for three years, between this place and Ezion-geber.

But, we have taken a new courſe in queſt of Ophir. We think that Ophir the ſon of Joktan, with his brethren, brethren, peopled the countries between the mountain Maſius and the mountains of Saphar, which are probably thoſe of the Tapires or Saſpires, towards Armenia, Media, and the ſources of the Tigris and Euphrates; for we do not pretend at this day to aſſign the limits of thoſe countries. Euſtathius of Antioch, in Hexaemer. as well as we, places Ophir in Armenia. The emperor Juſtinian divided Armenia into four parts, and one of theſe parts was called Sophara. Strabo, lib. xi. places on the Phaſis a people called Sarapenes. Quadratus, apud Stephan. in Ὠλήνη, ſpeaks of the Obarenians on the river Cyrus; and Pliny of the Suarni, ſituated between the Caſpiæ Portæ, the Gordian mountains, and the Euxine ſea. The gold of Pharvaim, or of Sepharvaim, is the ſame as the gold of Ophir, 1 Kings ix. 26, 27, 28. compared with 1 Chron. xxix. 4. An S has often been added to the beginning of words to ſhew their aſpiration; and the Septuagint ſometimes reads Sophir for Ophir. Sepharvaim has much relation to Mount Saphar mentioned by Moſes.

Perhaps to this will be replied, Firſt, that in the country where we place Ophir all the things are not to be found, that Solomon fetched home by his fleet. Secondly, that this country does not border on the ſea, nor could there be any paſſing thither with a fleet. Thirdly, that this could not be a three years voyage. But I anſwer, that the fleet of Solomon in its voyage ſtopped at ſeveral harbours, in each of which it took in ſuch things as were neceſſary. It took in apes, ebony, and parrots on the coaſts of Ethiopia. It took in gold at Ophir, or at the place of traffic, whither the people of Ophir reſorted. It might alſo find ivory there, or if you pleaſe in ſome of the ports of Arabia, where alſo it might be ſupplied with ſpices: this fleet might trade on both ſides of the Red-Sea; on the coaſts of Arabia and Ethiopia; and on the parts of Ethiopia beyond the Straits; when it had entered into the ocean. Thence it paſſed up the Perſian gulph, and might viſit the places of trade on both its ſhores, and thence run up the Tigris or Euphrates, as far as theſe rivers were navigable.

The ancients tell us the names of ſeveral places of traffic on the Tigris and Euphrates, which were heretofore famous, before they had raiſed banks on the Tigris, or made out-lets in the Euphrates, which afterwards interrupted the navigation of thoſe rivers, or made it more difficult. Vide Strabo in the firſt book of his Geography. Thus, though the countries were not maritime, yet they might trade with them by going up the Tigris or Euphrates.

Before the reign of David the Hebrews did not much apply themſelves to trade by ſea. The Canaanites or Phœnicians were in poſſeſſion of all the commerce of the Mediterranean; and as the Hebrews had little or no territory on the ſhore of this ſea, and nothing on the ocean, it is not to be wondered at, that they did not think of making ſea voyages. Beſide, from Joſhua's time to David, they had hardly any enjoyment of peace, and were not in condition of applying themſelves to navigation. But after David had conquered Idumæa, and was become maſter of Elath, and of Ezion-geber, upon the Red-Sea, (Vide 1 Kings ix. 26. 2 Chron. viii. 17. 1 Kings xi. 15, 16. 1 Chron. xviii. 13); he conſidered the advantage their ſituation afforded for trade on the ocean. He ſent out fleets, and very probably, from their voyages he obtained the three thouſand talents of gold of Ophir, which he bequeathed to the building of the temple. 1 Chron. xxix. 4.

Solomon continued the ſame traffic to Ophir, from whence his fleet in one voyage, brought 450 talents of gold, 2 Chron. viii. 18. He improved and perfected what his father had begun at Elath and Ezion-geber, 2 Chron. viii. 17. He went in perſon to theſe cities, ordered ſhips to be built there, cauſed thoſe two harbours to be fortified, and gave the neceſſary orders, not only that the trade of Ophir might be effectually carried on, but alſo might be extended to ſuch other places, as the Red-Sea opened him a paſſage to. He alſo brought to theſe two harbours from the maritime places of Paleſtine, as many ſea-faring people as he poſſibly could, eſpecially Tyrians, with whom his friend and ally king Hiram ſupplied him. This was the chief ſource of the immenſe riches of king Solomon; in which, as well as in wiſdom, he exceeded all the kings of his time.

Solomon's ſucceſſors, the kings of Judah, who poſſeſſed Idumæa, carried on this traffic; they uſed the port of Ezion-geber, down to the times of Jehoſhaphat. But this king having here prepared a fleet to go to Ophir, in conjunction with Ahaziah king of Iſrael, and this fleet being there deſtroyed, it ſunk the reputation of this harbour. At the entrance of this haven is a chain of rocks, upon which the fleet was driven by the winds when it attempted to quit the port, and was there daſhed to pieces. The year after Jehoſhaphat fitted out another fleet from the port of Elath, to go to Ophir, and would not let Ahaziah ſhare in the undertaking. See 1 Kings xxii. 49. 2 Chron. xx. 36, 37.

Under

Under Jehoram, ſon and ſucceſſor of Jehoſhaphat, 2 Kings viii. 20, 22, the Idumæans revolting againſt Judah, obtained their liberty, and the kings of Judah loſt the cities of Elath and Ezion-geber, by the help of which they had carried on their trade to Ophir, 2 Kings xiv. 22. 2 Chron. xxvi. 2. But Uzziah, or (Azariah) king of Judah, having recovered Elath at the beginning of his reign, fortified it anew, peopled it with his own ſubjects, and reſtored the trade of Ophir, which was continued to the reign of Ahaz. Then Rezin, king of Damaſcus, ſurprized Elath, drove out the Jews that were ſettled there, and put Syrians in their place, with deſign of carrying on the trade to Ophir, and the ſouth, to his own advantage. But the year following Tiglath-pileſer made a conqueſt of Elath from Rezin, and acquired the property of the trade to himſelf. After this time the affairs of the Jews would no longer allow them to think of Ophir, or of extending their commerce by ſea. Nor do I ſo much as find the name mentioned in their books, written after the captivity of Babylon.

OPHNI, עפני, ἀΦνὶ, who is weary; from יעף jahaph: or that ſteals; from עוף huph: or, according to the Syriac, who is folded or plaited.

OPHNI, a city of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 24. עפני Ophni or Gophni. Probably the ſame as Gophni or Gophna. For in Hebrew the letter ע Hain is often pronounced as a G. Gophna, according to Joſephus, was about fifteen miles from Jeruſalem, towards Naplouſe or Shechem, ſays Euſebius, Onomaſtic. ad vocem Φάρα ξ βότρυς. He ſays, in vocem Geba, it was five miles from Geba, or Gabaa. Joſephus often ſpeaks of Gophna, and of the toparchy of Gophna, and all he ſays agrees very well with the poſition of Euſebius. He ſays, that Veſpaſian having ſubdued the country of Gophna, brought alſo Bethel and Ephraim into ſubjection, de Bello, lib. v. cap. 8. He ſays in another place, lib. vi. cap. 1. that Titus advancing from Samaria towards Jeruſalem, paſſed by Gophna.

OPHRAH, עפרה, ἀΦαρὰ, duſt, fawn; from עפר haphar: otherwiſe, lead; from עפרת hophereth.

OPHRAH, a city, Joſh. xviii. 23.

OPHRAH, אפרה, a cow: from פר par: otherwiſe, abounding in fruit; from פרה parah: otherwiſe, aſhes; from אפר apher, cinis.

OPHRAH, Aphra, or Ephra, ſon of Meonothai, of Judah, 1 Chron. iv. 14.

ORACLE. St. Jerome often tranſlates by oraculum, what in many other places he calls propitiatorum. The Hebrew word, Exod. xxv. 18, 20. xxxvii. 6, & paſſim. is כפרת Caphoreth, LXX. Ἱλαςήριον [Mercy-Seat, Eng.] it comes from the verb caphar, to expiate, to pardon ſins, to cover, to harden any thing. This word may be rendered, a covering; and indeed it was the cover of the ark of the covenant, or of the ſacred cheſt in which the laws of the covenant were contained. At each end of this cover was a cherub of maſſy beaten gold; theſe ſtretching out their wings towards each other, formed a kind of throne, upon which the Lord was conſidered as ſitting. Hence they invoked him ſometimes as, he Who ſitteth upon the cherubim. And perhaps by tranſlating Caphoreth by propitiatory, [or mercy-ſeat] it may be inſinuated, that from thence the Lord hears the prayers of his people, and pardons their ſins. And by tranſlating it oracle they would ſhew, that from hence he manifeſted his will and pleaſure, and gave reſponſes: as he did to Moſes.

Oracle is alſo taken for the ſanctuary, or for the place wherein was the ark of the covenant. The Hebrew word is Dabir, and the Septuagint have preſerved this term, 1 Kings vi. 5, 16, 17. viii. 6, &c. דביר Dabir. LXX. Δαβὶρ, Δαβεὶρ Aquil. Sym. χρηματιςήριον, Pſal. xxviii. 2. Ναὸς. Chrematiſterion, by which Aquila and Symmachus have rendered it, ſignifies an oracle. The Chaldee, the houſe of propitiation. But Dabir properly ſignifies an oracle.

Oracle is alſo put for the oracles of falſe gods. The moſt famous oracle of Paleſtine was that of Baalzebub, king of Ekron, which the Jews themſelves often went to conſult, 2 Kings i. 2, 3, 6, 16. There were alſo Teraphim, as that of Micah mentioned Judg. xvii. 1, 5; the ephod made by Gideon, viii. 27, &c. and the falſe gods adored in the kingdom of Samaria, which had their falſe prophets, and conſequently their oracles; whether theſe oracles were really delivered by aſſiſtance of the devil, or that the prieſts and falſe prophets impoſed on the people, making them believe they were inſpired, though they only ſpoke by their own ſeducing ſpirit.

Among the Jews we diſtinguiſh ſeveral ſorts of oracles.

1. Oracles delivered vivâ voce; as when God ſpake to Moſes face to face, and as one friend ſpeaks to another, Numb. xii. 8.
2. Prophetical dreams from God; as the dreams which God ſent to Joſeph, and which foretold his future greatneſs, Gen. xxxvii. 5, 6.
3. Viſions; as when a prophet in an extaſy had ſupernatural revelations, Gen. xv. 1. xlvi. 2.
4. The oracle of Urim and Thummim, which accompanied the ephod, or the pectoral, worn by the high-prieſt, Numb. xii. 6. Joel ii. 28. This manner of inquiring of the Lord was often uſed, uſed, from Joſhua's time to the erection of the temple at Jeruſalem, 1 Sam. xxiii. 9. xxx. 7.

5. After the building of the temple they generally conſulted the prophets, who were frequent in the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael.

After Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, who are the laſt of the prophets of whom any writings remain, the Jews pretend that God gave them what they call Bathcol, the daughter of the voice, which was a ſupernatural manifeſtation of the will of God, either by a ſtrong inſpiration, or internal voice, or by a ſenſible and external voice, which was heard by a number of perſons ſufficient to bear teſtimony of it. For example, ſuch was the voice that was heard at the baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, ſaying, This is my beloved ſon, &c.

In the early Chriſtian church the gifts of prophecy and inſpiration were very common; and God has permitted, that ſince that time the greater part of the heathen oracles are fallen into contempt and ſilence.

Much has been written on the ſubject of oracles, and the learned have been divided on this matter. Some have aſcribed to demons all the oracles of antiquity; others to the knavery of the prieſts; others have pretended that there were ſeveral kinds of oracles: ſome were illuſions and tricks of the devil, others were the effects of juggling and contrivance. Scripture affords us examples of theſe ſorts of oracles.

The number of falſe prophets was always great in Iſrael. Theſe deceivers ſpoke in the name of the Lord, though the Lord had not ſent them. Moſes, Deut. xiii. 1, &c. forewarns Iſrael, that falſe prophets and dreamers ſhould ariſe, who would foretel things to come, and that their predictions might be verified by events. It cannot be doubted, but that among other nations, barbarians and idolaters, the devil had ſtill a greater power, and a greater number of diſciples.

Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, was in great reputation for delivering oracles, ſince Ahaziah king of Iſrael, being dangerouſly wounded, ſent to conſult this falſe deity, and to know whether he ſhould recover from his bruiſes, 2 Kings i. 2, 3. But Elijah by a command from God, and an oracle of the Lord, prevented that of the devil.

The idol Bel, worſhipped at Babylon as a living, eating, and drinking god, very probably alſo gave out oracles, Vide, Apoc. Dan. xiv. 2. or the ſtory of Bel and the dragon.

We read in Scripture, that ſome families of Dan ſeeking a ſettlement, ſent out men upon the diſcovery, to find a proper place for them to dwell in, Judg. xviii. 5, 6, 7. Theſe meſſengers paſſed by the houſe of Micah, who had in his ſervice a young Levite, to conſult a ſuperſtitious figure that he had made. The young Levite anſwered them boldly; Go in peace; before the Lord is your way, wherein ye go. They went and ſucceeded. Can we ſay, that this Levite was inſpired of God, and that he pronounced this oracle from him? This is hardly probable; and it is much more likely, that he made this anſwer from himſelf: or that he was moved by a lying ſpirit.

It cannot be denied that the Pagans addreſſed themſelves to their idols, to receive oracles from them. They had therefore ſometimes reſponſes; for can any be ſo ſenſeleſs as to aſk, where they know it is abſolutely impoſſible to receive an anſwer? The prophet Hoſea, iv. 12. reproaches the Iſraelites with conſulting their wooden idols. My people aſketh counſel of their ſtocks, and their ſtaff declareth unto them. The book of Wiſdom ſays, xiii. 16, 17. that when a man had cut down a tree from the foreſt, after he has taken from it wherewithal to warm himſelf, he makes an idol of the remainder, which he is ſo fooliſh as to conſult about his moſt important affairs. Habakkuk teſtifies the ſame thing, ii. 19. Woe unto him that ſaith to the wood, awake; to the dumb ſtone, ariſe, it ſhall teach.

The Hebrews, living in the midſt of idolatrous people, accuſtomed to receive oracles, to have recourſe to their diviners, magicians, and interpreters of dreams, would they not have been under a temptation to imitate theſe practices, theſe impieties, and ſuperſtitions, if God had not afforded them certain means of knowing ſome future events by prieſts and prophets, in their moſt urgent neceſſities? Thus when Moſes had forbid the Iſraelites to conſult magicians, witches, enchanters, and necromancers, he promiſed to ſend them a prophet of their own nation, who ſhould inſtruct them, and diſcover the truth to them. The Lord thy God will raiſe up unto thee a prophet from the midſt of thee, of thy brethren like unto me, unto him ye ſhall hearken, Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 15, &c.

And theſe oracles of truth had no neceſſary connection either with time or place, or any other circumſtance, or with the perſonal merit of the perſon by whom they were uttered. The high-prieſt cloathed with the ephod and pectoral gave a true anſwer, whatever was his perſonal character. Sometimes, he gave an anſwer, without knowing clearly the ſubject of the queſtion he was conſulted about. Caiaphas pronounces an oracle relating to Jeſus Chriſt, whom he hated, and whoſe deſtruction he deſired, and an oracle which which he underſtood not himſelf. For he ſays, John xi. 49, 50, 51. Ye know nothing at all, nor conſider that it is expedient for us, that one man ſhould die for the people, and that the whole nation periſh not. It is added, and this ſpake he—not of himſelf, but being high-prieſt that year, he propheſied that Jeſus ſhould die for that nation. And when the high-prieſt Ahimelech was conſulted by David, he gave him an anſwer, though David did not plainly acquaint him with the occaſion of his journey. 1 Sam. xxi. 1, 2, 3. xxii. 15. Micah ſays, iii. 11. that the heads of Judah judge for reward, and the prieſts thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money, nevertheleſs, the prophets declared the truth to them. At the day of judgment many will ſay to Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. vii. 22. Lord, Lord, have we not propheſied in thy name, and in thy name have caſt out devils, and in thy name have done many wonderful works? Notwithſtanding this, he will ſay to them, I never knew you.

The fathers inform us, that at the coming of the Meſſiah, the oracles of the heathen were ſtruck dumb. It is plain, that ſince the preaching of the goſpel, the empire of the devil is much contracted and weakened, and that the moſt famous oracles are inſenſibly fallen into contempt. But it muſt be allowed, that this ſilence of the oracles did not happen all at once, and that a good while after our Saviour's time there were impoſtors, who gave out pretended oracles, and the devil ſtill uttered them in ſome temples of their idols. St. John, Rev. xiii. 5, 6, 13, 14, 15. deſcribing the perſecution of the church, ſpeaks of the ſigns, wonders, and deluſions, which the deceiver and his accomplices ſhould produce to the world, to prevail with men to worſhip the image of the beaſt, and to entice them to idolatry.

OREB, עורב, raven, ſweet, caution, or mixture; from ערב harab: otherwiſe, evening; from ערב hereb, by a different reading.

OREB, one of the princes of the Midianites, who was killed with Zeeb, another prince of the ſame people, Judges vii. 25, A. M. 2759, ante A. D. 1245. While Gideon purſued the army of the Midianites, he directed the men of Ephraim to ſecure the paſſes of the Jordan, that the Midianites might not eſcape into their own country. The Ephraimites, therefore, took the two chiefs of the Midianites, and killed Oreb at the rock of Oreb, and Zeeb at the wine-preſs of Zeeb. Some think that Oreb, or the rock of Oreb, was a village, or, at leaſt, that from this time one was begun to be formed there. Euſebius and St. Jerom, in Arava, vel Araba, ſpeak of a little place called Araba, three miles from Scythopolis, weſt; and Herman Vanderhart, Vide Reland. Palæſt. 1, 2. thinks it was here that the Orebim dwelt, who fed the prophet Elijah when concealed near the brook Chereth, 1 Kings xvii. 3, 5. He pretends that the tranſlators have very preposterouſly made ravens of theſe Orebites. ערבים Corvi. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

ORION. A conſtellation in the heavens juſt before the ſign Taurus. The Hebrew word כסיל Cheſil ſignifies, according to the ancient Hebrews, that ſtar of the ſecond magnitude which aſtronomers call the ſcorpion's heart. It appears at the beginning of the autumnal equinox, and forebodes cold or froſt. Virgil gives it the epithet of nimboſus Orion. It alſo marks the weſt. Hence it comes that the LXX. on Job ix. 9. and Theodotion on Amos v. 8. tranſlate it by veſperum.

ORNAN, ארנן, that rejoices; from רנן ranan: otherwiſe, their bow or ark; from ארון aron: otherwiſe, light of the ſon; from אור or, light, and נן nun, a ſon.

ORNAN. Vide ARAUNAH. Joſephus calls him Orphona, Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 3.

ORONTES, a river of Syria, which riſes in mount Libanus, and paſſes by Emeſus, Apamea, Epiphanius, and Antioch, and falls into the Mediterranean ſea. Pliny ſays, its ſource is between Libanus and Antilibanus. The Scripture makes no mention of the Orontes; but its name is frequent in commentaries on the ſacred writings.

ORPAH, ערפה, the neck, or the ſkull, nakedneſs of the mouth, or face; from ערה harah, to be naked, and פה pe, the mouth: or awaking of the mouth; from ער har, awaking.

ORPAH, a Moabitiſh woman, wife of Chilion, ſon of Elimelech, and Naomi. Chilion the huſband of Orpah being dead, ſhe lived with Naomi her mother-in-law; who, being deſirous of returning into her own country, Orpah was prevailed with to ſtay in Moab, but Ruth would follow Naomi to Bethlehem, Ruth i. 9, 10, &c. See NAOMI.

ORPHA. Several think this to be the city of Ur, from whence the patriarch Abraham departed, Gen. xi. 28, 31.

ORPHONA, a Jebuſite, whoſe life David ſaved when he took the city of Jeruſalem, ſays Joſeph. Antiq. lib. vii. cap. 3. Vide Araunah, or Ornan:

ORTHOSIAS, Ὀρθωσιὰς, or Orthoſis, Vulgate, Orthoſias, which is right; from ὄρθος, right, upright.

ORTHOSIAS, a maritime city of Phœnicia, over against againſt the iſland of Aradus, not far from Tripolis. Tryphon, the uſurper of the kingdom of Syria, eſcaped from the city of Dora in Paleſtine, where he was beſieged, to Orthoſias, and thence into his own country Apamea, 1 Macc. xv. 25—37.

ORYX, a ſort of wild goat. Ariſtotle ſays, Hiſt. Anim. lib. i. it has a horn in the middle of its forehead, and Appian ſays, it has more than one. Pliny, lib. viii. cap. 53. & lib. xi. cap. 46. ſays its hair is curled and turned towards its head. Several have confounded it with the antelope. Juvenal, Sat. ii. informs us, that it was eaten formerly, but that its fleſh was not much in eſteem with thoſe of nice palates.

Et Getulus oryx hebeti lautiſſima cœna.

The Hebrew word Tho, תוֹ or תוֹא, Iſai. li. 20. is commonly tranſlated by a wild bull, [as in our Engliſh tranſlation.] But the Septuagint, and other Greek interpreters, the Syriac, and the Vulgate, place it among the goats, ſince they tranſlate it oryx.

OSPREY, or OSSIFRAGA, פרשׁ Pereſh, a kind of eagle, whoſe fleſh is forbid, Lev. xi. 13. The oſſifraga, or oſprey, is thus called, becauſe it breaks the bones of animals, in order to eat the marrow. It is ſaid to dig up bodies in church-yards, or burying-places, to eat what it finds in the bones, which has been the occaſion that the Latins called it Avis buſtaria, and the Perſians, Uſtukhan-khour, the bone-eater.

The Arabians and Perſians alſo call it Humai, and ſay it is the moſt innocent of all birds, becauſe it does no harm to any animal, and only feeds on dead bones.

Ariſtotle ſays, that the oſſifraga is the greateſt of eagles, except thoſe of Germany. Its plumage is of an aſh-colour, approaching towards white. Pliny ſays, that it is produced by the ſea-eagle, which ingenders with all birds of prey. She does not only feed her own young, but thoſe alſo that any other eagle has forſaken. Her ſight is but weak, which is contrary to the nature of other eagles.

This is the deſcription that Aldrovandus gives us of the oſſifraga. Its beak is exceeding crooked, and in the place where it is hooked, it is two fingers broad, and about a ſpan long. Its colour is like brown horn, drawing towards dark blue. The opening of its beak is about a hand's breadth, the tongue is like that of a man, and broad at the end, and on the two ſides it has two hooks made like fiſh-hooks. Its head and neck are covered with long narrow feathers, and from its chin hang down ſmall hairs like a beard. The ground of its plumage is diverſified by three colours, whitiſh, dark, and ruddy; the great feathers are of a brown colour, a little inclining towards cheſnut. The twelve feathers of its tail are a little reddiſh, and ſpotted with black and white. Its legs are covered with dark feathers a little ruddy, ſo that there remains but a ſmall part of the legs uncovered of about two fingers breadth. This part that is uncovered is of a very fine yellow. Its talons are black and ſhining. Aldrovandus ſays, this bird only feeds upon fiſh; ſo that it muſt be very different from the oſſifraga here mentioned. But indeed, the whole that is ſaid of the oſſifraga, or bone-eater, ſeems to be very fabulous.

OSTRICH, in Latin, Struthio, is often mentioned in Scripture. Moſes forbids it to the Hebrews, Levit. xi. 16. Deut. xiv. 14. [The Engliſh tranſlation reads owl.] Interpreters are not agreed about the ſignification of the Hebrew word Jaanah, יענה, or בת יענה, Στρουθοκάμηλος, which the LXX. St. Jerom, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion have rendered by oſtrich. Several of the moderns take it for the owl, ulula. We have propoſed ſome conjectures to prove it is the ſwan.

We find in Job xxxix. 13. another Hebrew word Rhenanim, which is tranſlated oſtrich. Others take it for a peacock, but able interpreters apply the word Noza to the oſtrich, which is read in the ſame verſe. The marks which Job aſcribes to the Noza agree very well to the oſtrich.

This animal is ranged among birds. It is very large, has very long legs, its wings very ſhort, the neck about the length of four or five ſpans. The feathers of its wings are in great eſteem, and are uſed as ornaments for hats, beds, canopies. They are ſtained of ſeveral colours, and made into very pretty tufts. Their plumage is white and black; the females have a mixture of grey, black and white. They are hunted by way of courſe, for they never fly; but they uſe their wings to aſſiſt them in running more ſwiftly.

There are many oſtriches in Ethiopia. The oſtrich lays her eggs in June, on the ground, covers them with ſand, and the ſun hatches them. It is probably on this account, ſhe is made the ſymbol of cruelty and forgetfulneſs. Jeremiah ſays, Lam. iv. 3. Even the ſea-monſters draw out the breaſt, they give ſuck to their young ones. The daughter of my people is become cruel, like the oſtriches in the wilderneſs. Job xxxix. 13, &c. ſets forth at length the cruelty and forgetfulneſs of the oſtrich: Gaveſt thou the goodly wings unto the peacocks, or wings and feathers unto the oſtrich? which leaveth leaveth her eggs in the earth, and warmeth them in the duſt. And forgetteth that the foot may cruſh them, or that the wild beaſt may break them. She is hardened againſt her young ones, as though they were not hers; her labour is in vain without fear. Becauſe God hath deprived her of wiſdom, neither hath he imparted to her underſtanding. What time ſhe lifteth up herſelf on high, and ſcorneth the horſe and his rider.

Here is, in ſhort, almoſt all that we are told of the oſtrich. It lays its eggs upon the ground, hides them under the ſand, and the ſun hatches them. All this is not incredible. We know that in Egypt they hatch a vaſt quantity of eggs every day in ovens made on purpoſe, and heated to a certain degree of heat. As the oſtrich is extremely large and heavy, it would break its eggs if it were to ſit upon them like other birds. She therefore hides them in the ſand, watches them, and hatches them as we may ſay with her eye, according to Vanſleb's account of Egypt, p. 103. The male and female ſtay with them alternately, and while one of them goes to ſeek its proviſion, the other does not leave ſight of them. However, if either of them ſhould be driven away, or go too far from their neſt, they could not find their eggs again. And it is probable, that this has given occaſion to what is ſaid of their cruelty and forgetfulneſs.

Among the great number of eggs that the female lays, (for we are told that ſhe brings ten, twelve, fifteen, or twenty,) it ſeldom happens but that ſome of them miſcarry. The oſtrich breaks theſe, and with the worms that are bred from thence, ſhe feeds her young. Laſtly, Job ſays, that God has deprived the oſtrich of underſtanding. This is juſtified by what is related of this bird. She ſuffers herſelf to be taken by a man covered with the ſkin of an oſtrich, Strabo, lib. xvi. who puts his arm into the ſkin of the neck of the animal, lifts it up on high, and imitates the motion of the head. Others ſay, Claudian. in Eutrop. Oppian. Halieut, lib. iv. that when ſhe is purſued by the hunters, ſhe hides her head in the ſand, continues there, and thinks herſelf ſecure. Pliny ſays, that ſhe thruſts her head in the buſhes, and there remains, as if her whole body were well concealed. Laſtly, they ſay that ſhe is naturally deaf, Marmol. Afric. which does not a little contribute to her ſtupidity.

She lifteth up herſelf on high, and ſcorneth the horſe and his rider. The oſtrich is very lofty; they made a diſſection of an oſtrich at the academy of ſciences, which was ſeven feet and an half high, from the top of the head to the ground. Pliny ſays, lib. x. cap. 1. that ſhe exceeds in ſtature the height of a man on horſeback. As to its ſwiftneſs, it is agreed, that there are few horſes that can overtake them by fair running.

Moſes forbids the uſe of oſtriches fleſh, at leaſt our tranſlators will have it ſo. Lev. xi. 16. Deut. xiv. 14. It is certain they eat them in Peru, and in Africa, where they are common. Marmol acknowledges, that their fleſh has an ill ſcent, and is ſticky, eſpecially that of the thighs; yet they eat of it, however. When the people of Numidia take young ones, they rear them, make them fat, and lead them in flocks into the deſart, to feed. And when they are fat, they kill them and ſalt them. The Ethiopians alſo eat their eggs, as delicious food. Theſe eggs are generally of the bigneſs of a large bowl, but ſome not ſo big. The Ethiopians are ſaid to make cups of the egg-ſhells. Pierius affirms, that they even make caps of them, which they wear and value very much.

The Scripture ſpeaks of the oſtrich in ſeveral other places, but it is doubted whether the original word really ſignifies this bird or no. See the commentators upon Iſai. xiii. 21. xxxiv. 13. xliii. 20. Jer. l. 39. Mic. i. 8. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXLIV, page 92, and Plate.

OTHNI, עתני, my time, my hour; from עת heth, and the pronoun י i, my, or mine.

OTHNI, ſon of Shemaiah, a valiant man of David's army, 1 Chron. xxvi. 7.

OTHNIEL, עתניאל, γοθονιὴλ, the time, or the hour of God; from עת heth, time, and אל el, God.

OTHNIEL, or Othoniel, ſon of Kenaz, of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 17. The Scripture ſays, that Othniel was brother to Caleb, Judg. i. 13. Hence ariſe ſome difficulties. 1. If Caleb and Othniel had been brothers, Othniel could not have married his niece Achſah, the daughter of Caleb. 2. The Scripture never aſſigns to Caleb and Othniel the ſame father: it always names Kenaz as father of Othniel, and Jephunneh as father of Caleb. 3. Caleb muſt be much older than Othniel, ſince he gave Othniel his daughter Achſah in marriage. Thus it ſeems much better to ſuppoſe Kenaz and Jephunneh to be brothers, and that Othniel and Caleb were couſin-germans, and in this ſenſe brothers, according to the language of Scripture. Thus Achſah being but ſecond couſin in reſpect of Othniel, he might marry her without offending the law.

Caleb having received his portion in the mountains of Judah, in the midſt of a country poſſeſſed by giants giants of the race of Anak, having taken the city of Hebron, he advances towards Debir, otherwiſe called Kirjath-ſepher, and declares, "I will give my daughter Achſah in marriage to him that ſhall take Kirjath-ſepher." Othniel took it, and had Achſah to wife. But at the time that the bride was bringing home to her huſband with the uſual ſolemnity, Othniel moved his wife Achſah to aſk of her father Caleb a field of ſprings, that was near and above another dry field that Caleb had given him. By the Hebrew text it ſhould ſeem, that it was Achſah who deſired Othniel to aſk this of Caleb. Vide FRAGMENT. No. CLVII, page 148.

After the death of Joſhua the Iſraelites not exterminating the Canaanites from the land, and not having continued in their fidelity to the Lord, he delivered them over to Chuſhan-Riſhathaim, king of Meſopotamia, to whom they continued in ſubjection eight years, Judg. iii. 4, 5, 6, 7, 9, &c. Then they cried to the Lord, who raiſed them up for a deliverer Othniel the ſon of Kenaz, who was filled with the ſpirit of God, and judged Iſrael: and the country had reſt for forty years. That is to ſay, it was in peace the fortieth year after the peace that Joſhua had procured for it, in A. M. 2960, ten years before his death. The year of Othniel's death is unknown.

OWL; in Latin, Bubo, Ulula, Noctua, Nycticorax; it is often taken for the ſcreech-owl, a bird of the ſame kind; flying by night, and living in darkneſs. Moſes places the owl among unclean birds, Lev. xi. 17. Deut. xiv. 17. When Iſaiah ſpeaks of Babylon reduced to a wilderneſs, he ſays that the owls ſhall anſwer to one another, Iſai. xiii. 22. Finally, the Pſalmiſt ſays, that in his affliction he was as the owl ſitting alone on the houſe-top, Pſal. cii. 7. But interpreters are not agreed about the ſignification of the Hebrew words tranſlated Bubo, Ulula, Nycticorax, Noctua, and Paſſer.

They reckon ſeveral ſpecies of owls. This bird has its head like a cat, and large ſharp claws. It catches mice like a cat; its eyes cannot bear the great light of the ſun. Other birds hate it, and purſue it; and in return the owl hunts and eats the leſſer birds. Its cry is mournful and diſmal. It paſſes for a bird of ill omen. It was conſecrated to Minerva, and upon this account was honoured by the Athenians, who repreſented it on their medals.

OYL. It is known that the Hebrews anointed themſelves all over with oyl; but eſpecially their head: they anointed alſo their kings, and high-prieſts. See UNCTION.

Iſaiah calls an eminence, or vineyard, that was fruitful and fat, a horn the ſon of oyl: Iſai. v. 1. and x. 27. he ſays, that God would make to putrify the yoke of the Iſraelites, by the quantity of oyl that he would pour thereon. Computreſcere faciam jugum in facie olei. He would take from it all its roughneſs and hardneſs. The high-prieſt Joſhua, and the prince Zerubbabel, are called ſons of oyl, Zech. iv. 14. i. e. each of them had received the ſacred unction. Job, ſpeaking of the condition of his firſt proſperity, ſays that the rocks were then fountains of oyl to him, Job. xxix. 6.

The oyl of gladneſs, Pſal. xlv. 7. and Iſai. lxi. 3. was the perfumed oil with which they anointed themſelves on days of rejoicing and feſtivity. Moſes ſays, Deut. xxxii. 13. that God made his people to ſuck oil and honey out of the rocks. i. e. that in the midſt of diſmal deſerts, he abundantly provided them with all things not only neceſſary but agreeable alſo. The olive-tree ſhall fail to bring forth fruit, ſays Habakkuk, iii. 17. The fooliſh virgins in the goſpel took no oyl with them, to repleniſh their lamps, Matt. xxv. 8. See LAMP. St. James directs, Is any ſick among you, let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oyl in the name of the Lord. James v. 14.

II. OZEM, ſon of Jerahmeel, 1 Chron, ii. 25.

OZIAS, ſon of Micha, of Simeon, was the chief of the city of Bethulia, when it was beſieged by Holofernes. He vigorouſly ſupported the ſiege againſt that general, but finding the people mutinied, and accuſed him, he promiſed to ſurrender the city in five days, if God did not ſend them relief: Judith procured their deliverance. Ozias continued in the city, praying with the people. Their prayers were heard; Holofernes was ſlain by Judith, Bethulia was delivered, and the Aſſyrian army routed. See HOLOFERNES, JUDITH, &c.

PACE, paſſus; a meaſure of five geometrical feet.

PACORUS, ſon of Orodes, king of the Parthians, entering Syria at the head of a powerful army, beſieged Caſſius in Antioch. But Caſſius ſo bravely defended himſelf, that Pacorus was forced to raiſe the ſiege, Dio. Caſſ. lib. xl. He went then and ſat down before Antigonina, which was not far from thence; but the Parthians were ſo little ſkilled in the art of attacking places, that they were obliged to quit this ſiege alſo. Caſſius then laid in ambuſh for them, and they were intirely routed.

Pacorus came again over the Euphrates after the death of Julius Cæſar, along with Labienus, who had been ſent by Brutus and Caſſius to the court of the king of Parthia, to deſire aſſiſtance. After the defeat of theſe two confederate generals, Labienus continued among the Parthians, till the Aradians, the Palmyreneans, and the tyrants, or little kings, of Syria, invited them to their aſſiſtance, againſt the tax-gatherers that oppreſſed them. Pacorus with his troops reduced all Syria and Phœnicia, but it was not poſſible for him to ſubdue Tyre, wherein the remains of the Roman army had taken ſhelter.

Having taken Sidon and Ptolemais, he ſent a detachment into Judæa, with orders to ſet Antigonus the ſon of Ariſtobulus on the throne. This party was commanded by his chief cup-bearer, called alſo Pacorus. Antigonus had promiſed the Parthians a thouſand talents, and five hundred Jewiſh women; and having got ſome troops together, he entered into Judæa, ſupported by the Parthians. He ſubdued the firſt that oppoſed him, and purſued them directly to Jeruſalem, into which he entered, and fortified himſelf in the temple. Herod and Phaſael, who ſupported the intereſts of Hyrcanus, took poſſeſſion of the palace.

The Feaſt of Pentecoſt being being come, the two parties began to treat of an accommodation, to prevent that diſorder which the confluence of ſuch a multitude of ſtrangers was likely to produce. Antigonus propoſed to Herod and Phaſael, to take for arbitrator the chief cup-bearer, Pacorus, who was incamped near the city; in which they acquieſced. He therefore entered Jeruſalem with his troops, and perſuaded Hyrcanus and Phaſael to appear before Barzapharnes, who was governor of Syria for the Parthians, in hopes to obtain ſome regulations that might be beneficial to the province. Thither they went, conducted by Pacorus, who then returned to Jeruſalem.

When Barzapharnes thought that Pacorus might be got back to Jeruſalem, he arreſted Phaſael and Hyrcanus. Pacorus had orders to do the ſame by Herod; but he got ſome hint of the deſign, and eſcaped to Maſſada. The Parthians plundered Jeruſalem, ſet Antigonus on the throne, and delivered up to him Phaſael and Hyrcanus in chains. Phaſael killed himſelf; and Antigonus cauſed Hyrcanus's ears to be cut off, to render him incapable of the high-prieſthood. After which he delivered him again to the Parthians, who carried him with them beyond the Euphrates.

The Parthians did not long hold the kingdom of Syria. Ventidius, general of the Roman troops, having beat their armies, obliged Pacorus to return back over the Euphrates. The year after Pacorus having again got a great army together, came again into Syria, but was there beat and killed by Ventidius. Vide PHAZAEL.

PADON, בדון, his redemption; from פדה padah, to redeem, and the pronoun ן an, his: according to the Syriac, yoke, or yokes.

PADON, or Phadon, a father, or chief of the Nethinim, Ezra ii. 44 Nehem. vii. 47.

PAGIEL, בגעיאל, Φαγιὲλ, prevention of God, or prayer of God; from בגע pagah, to prevent, to pray.

PAGIEL, or Phegiel, ſon of Ocran, head of the tribe of Aſher; he offered as the other chiefs, Numb. vii. 72.

PAHATH-MOAB, פחת־מואב, chief, or captain, or Pahath of Moab; from פחה pacah, prince, chief of Moab: otherwiſe, the ſtrength of the father; from כחת pacath, hollow, ditch, and the prepoſition מו mo, of, and אב ab, father.

PAHATH-MOAB, or Phahath-Moab, a place in the land of Moab, Ezra ii. 6. viii. 4. x. 30.

PALAL, פלל, Φελαλὶ, that thinks, or prays, or judges; from פלל pillel, to beſeech. to judge.

PALAL, or Phalel, ſon of Uzai, Nehem. iii. 25.

PALESTINE, פלשת, ἀλλόφυλοι, Heb. Paleſheth, 1 Sam. vi. 17. which is covered, watered; from פלש palaſh: otherwiſe, to bring or cauſe ruin; from שות ſhuth, to put, and מפלה maphalah, ruin. This word is not Hebrew. [It is lately thought to be Sanſcrit, ſignifying ſhepherd.]

PALESTINE. This name may be taken either in a more limited, or in a general ſenſe.

Paleſtine, taken in a limited ſenſe, ſtands for the country of the Philiſtines or Paleſtines, including that part of the Land of Promiſe which extended along the Mediterranean ſea, from Gaza ſouth to Lydda north. The LXX. were of opinion, that the Hebrew word Philiſtiim ſignified ſtrangers, ſince they generally tranſlate it Allophyli, ſtrangers, or men of another tribe.

Paleſtine taken in a more general ſenſe, ſignifies the whole country of Canaan, the whole Land of Promiſe, as well beyond, as on this ſide, Jordan; though pretty frequently it is reſtrained to the country on this ſide that river: ſo that in later times the words Judea and Paleſtine were ſynonymous. We find alſo the name of Syria Paleſtina given to the Land of Promiſe, and even ſometimes this province is comprehended in Cœle-Syria, or the Lower Syria. Herodotus, lib. vii. cap. 89. & lib. ii. cap. 6. is the moſt ancient writer we know, that ſpeaks of Syria-Paleſtina. He places it between Phœnicia and Egypt. See Reland. Paleſtinæ, lib. i. cap. 7, 8. See JUDAH.

Moſes ſpeaks of Paleſtine as of the fineſt country in the world, a land flowing with milk and honey. Profane authors alſo ſpeak of it much in the ſame manner. Hecatæus, apud Joſeph. contr. App. p. 1049, who had been brought up with Alexander the Great, and who wrote in the time of Ptolemy I. mentions this country as very fruitful and well-peopled, an excellent province, that bore all kinds of good fruit. Pliny, lib. v. cap. 14, 15, gives a like deſcription of it; he ſays that Jeruſalem was not only the moſt famous city of Judea, but of the whole eaſt. He deſcribes the courſe of the Jordan, as of a delicious river; he ſpeaks advantageouſly of the lake of Genneſareth, of the balm of Judea, its palm-trees, &c. Tacitus, Hiſt. lib. xv. cap. 6, Ammianus Marcellinus, and moſt of the ancients, who have mentioned Paleſtine, have ſpoken of it with equal commendations.

The Mahometans, who know it beſt, ſpeak of it extravagantly, which proves however its great fertility. They tell us, that beſides the two principal cities of the country, Jeruſalem and Jericho, this province had a thouſand villages, each of which had many fine gardens. That the grapes were ſo large, that five men could hardly carry a cluſter of them, and that five men might hide themſelves in the ſhell of one pomegranate! That this country was anciently inhabited by giants of the race of Amalek.

Notwithſtanding theſe teſtimonies of the ancients, we find people very incredulous as to the fruitfulneſs of the Holy Land. Travellers that viſit it, generally ſpeak but little to its advantage. The country, they ſay, appears to be dry and barren, ill watered, and has but few cultivated plains. Strabo, lib. xvi. among the ancients, ſpeaks of it with contempt. He ſays, that this province is ſo barren, that it moves no body's envy, that there is no need of fighting for it, in order to obtain it, and that Jeruſalem ſtands upon a dry and barren ſpot.

St. Jerome was an eye-witneſs of it, and very well acquainted with thoſe qualities which the Scriptures aſcribe to it. He ſays that Paleſtine is full of mountains, that dryneſs and drought are very common, that they had only rain-water, which they caught, and preſerved in ciſterns, which ſupplied the want of fountains. But the ſame St. Jerome ſpeaks of the fertility of Paleſtine, and that no country could diſpute with it in fruitfulneſs. Modern travellers who ſpeak of the preſent ſterility, do not deny that it ſtill preſerves traces of its ancient fecundity in ſome places, which produce all ſorts of fruits almoſt without culture. In other places the herbs grow with great profuſion, and to an extraordinary height. If ſome mountains, and ſome plains, are barren, it is becauſe they are but little cultivated for want of inhabitants. How many other countries, heretofore renowned for fertility, are now reduced to barren and dreadful wilderneſſes!

PALLAS, one of the wives of Herod the Great, by whom he had a ſon called Phazael, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xvii. cap. 1.

PALM, palmus, a meaſure of four fingers breadth, or of 3,648 inches, in Hebrew Tophach טפח, LXX. Παλαίϛης, Exod. xxv. 25. The Hebrew Zereth זרת, LXX. Σπιθαμὴ, Exod. xxviii. 16. is often tranſlated Palmus, and in Greek by Spithame, though it ſignifies a half-cubit, and contains three ordinary palms; which ought to be obſerved, ſerved, that two meaſures ſo unequal may not be confounded. St. Jerom ſometimes tranſlates Tophach by four fingers, and ſometimes by a palm; but he always renders Zereth by Palmus; and the Septuagint by Spithame. Goliath was in heighth ſix cubits and a Zereth, i. e. ſix cubits and an half, making eleven feet ten inches and ſomething more. We find Iſai. xl. 12. an expreſſion that proves the Zereth, or palm, to ſignify the extent of the hand from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger. Who hath meaſured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with a ſpan?—a Zereth.

PALM-TREE; this was very common in Paleſtine. The Hebrews called it Tamar תמר, and the Greeks Φοῖνιξ, Phœnix. The fineſt palm-trees were about Jericho and Engeddi. There were many alſo along the banks of the Jordan, and towards Scythopolis. Jericho is called the City of Palm-Trees, Deut. xxxiv. 3. Beſide dates the palm-tree produces a kind of honey, little inferior to common honey, Joſeph de Bello, lib. v. cap. 4. and they likewiſe drew a wine from it, much uſed in the eaſt. St. Chryſoſtom and Theodoret think it was this palm-wine that Moſes mentions, Lev. x. 9.

It is ſaid Job xxix. 18. Vulgat. I ſhall multiply my days as the palm-tree. Some ancients read, I ſhall live as long as the Phœnix. But the Hebrew has, כחול ארבה ימים. LXX. Ἡ ἡλικία μου γηράσει ὡσπὲρ φέλεχος Φοίνικος, I ſhall multiply my days as the ſand. The Greek word Phœnix ſignifies a palm-tree; and is alſo put for a Phœnix, or for a Phœnician.

The palm, or a branch of the palm-tree, is a ſymbol of victory, and was carried before the conqueror in proceſſions and rejoicings for victory. They alſo ſent a golden branch of a palm-tree to the kings of Syria, as a kind of tribute, or preſent. This they call baina in Greek. They alſo offered them in the temple of Jeruſalem. I conceive that all theſe cuſtoms were derived from the Greeks; for I find nothing of them in the Old Teſtament before the Maccabees.

The city of Palms is Jericho, as may be ſeen Deut. xxxiv. 3. Judg. i. 16. iii. 13. 2 Chr. xxviii. 15. the palm-trees of the plain of Jericho are famous throughout Scripture, and even in profane authors. In the temple of Jeruſalem Solomon cauſed pillars or pilaſters to be made, in the form of palm-trees, 1 Kings vi. 29, &c. probably in imitation of the Egyptians, who had ſuch pillars in their temples, Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 169.

Palm-trees from the ſame root produce a great number of ſuckers, which form upwards a kind of foreſt by their ſpreading, Plin. lib. xii. cap. 4. Procerioribus ſylva, arbore ex ipſâ. Under a little wood of palm-trees (perhaps) of this kind, the propheteſs Deborah dwelt between Ramah and Bethel, Judg. iv. 5. Probably to this multiplication of the palm-tree, the prophet alludes when he ſays; The righteous ſhall flouriſh like a palm-tree, Pſal. xcii. 12. And Eccleſiaſticus l. 14. repreſents the prieſts, the ſons of Aaron, round about the high-prieſt Onias, as ſo many young palm-trees, ſhooting from the root of an old palm-tree.

Jeremiah ſays, x. 5. ſpeaking of the idols of the heathen carried in proceſſion, that they were in the ſhape of palm-trees: The palm-tree is upright and tall. The ancients, before the art of carving was carried to its perfection, made their images all of a thickneſs, ſtrait, having their hands hanging down and cloſe to their ſides, the legs joined together, the eyes ſhut, with a very perpendicular attitude, and not unlike to the body of a palm-tree. Such are the figures of thoſe antique Egyptian ſtatues that ſtill remain. The famous Greek architect and ſculptor Dædalus ſet their legs at liberty, opened their eyes, and gave them a freer and eaſier attitude, Diodor. Sicul. lib. iv. Bibl. p. 192. The Spouſe in the Canticles vii. 7. is compared to a palm-tree as to ſtature: this is a noble compariſon.

The Spouſe in the Canticles, v. 11. compares the hair of her lover to the fruit of the male palm-tree, and to the blackneſs of the raven. The palm-tree produces its leaves, or if you pleaſe its hair, at the top of its trunk: Coma omnis in cacumine, ſays Pliny, lib. xiii. cap. 14. The male palm-tree renders the female fruitful, by means of a flower incloſed in its fruit. This fruit of the male palm-tree in Greek is called Elatæ. The compariſon of a head of hair to the branches of the palm-tree is the more juſt, as theſe leaves turn round like curls, and their extremities hang down towards the ground. They are long, double, and narrow like a ſword; its flowers are faſtened by a very ſmall ſtalk, they grow in cluſters, and reſemble thoſe of ſaffron, except that they are ſmaller and white.

PALMYRA, תדמר, Hebrew, Tadmor; the palm, or palm-tree; from תמר tamor: otherwiſe, bitterneſs; from מרר marar: otherwiſe, change; from מור mur.

PALMYRA, a city of Syria, built by king Solomon. In Hebrew called Tadmor or Thamor. It was ſituated in a wilderneſs of Syria, on the borders of Arabia Deſerta, towards the Euphrates. Joſephus places it two days journey from the upper upper Syria, one days journey from the Euphrates, and ſix days journey from Babylon. He ſays there is no water in the wilderneſs, but in this place. At this day there are vaſt ruins of this city. There was nothing more magnificent in the whole eaſt. Dr. Halifax gives us a deſcription of it, which M. le Bruyn has inſerted at page 342 of his Voyages. There are a great number of inſcriptions, moſt of which are Greek, the others in Palmyrenean characters. Nothing relating to the Jews is ſeen in the Greek inſcriptions; and the Palmyrenean inſcriptions are intirely unknown, as well as the language and the characters of that country.

The city of Palmyra preſerved the name of Tadmor to the time of Alexander. Then it received the name of Palmyra, which it preſerved for ſeveral ages. About the middle of the third century it became famous, becauſe Odenatus and Zenobia his queen made it the ſeat of their empire. When the Saracens became maſters of the eaſt, they reſtored its ancient name of Tadmor, which it has always preſerved ſince. Its ſituation is much like that of Ammon in Lybia, being in the midſt of deſarts; a kind of iſland in the main land, amidſt an ocean of ſand, and ſurrounded by ſandy deſarts on all ſides.

Its ſituation between two powerful empires, that of the Parthians to the eaſt, and that of the Romans to the weſt, expoſed it often to danger from their quarrels. But in time of peace it ſoon recovered itſelf, by its trade with both empires. For the caravans of Perſia and of the Indies, which now unload at Aleppo, then uſed to ſtop at Palmyra. From hence they carried the merchandizes of the eaſt, which came to them by land, to the ports of the Mediterranean; and returned the merchandizes of the weſt after the ſame manner.

It is ſurpriſing that hiſtory gives no account, neither when, nor by whom, Palmyra was reduced to its preſent condition.

PALSIE, Παράλυσις, ſolution.

PALSIE, paralyſis. This diſtemper is a preclusion, or ſtoppage, of one or more of the limbs, which deprives them of motion, and makes them uſeleſs to the patient. Some palſies are very painful, others not ſo much, from the nature of the humors that cauſe them. Our Saviour cured ſeveral paralytics by his word alone. See Matth. iv. 24. viii. 6. ix. 2. Mark ii. 3, 4, &c. Luke v. 18, &c. The ſick man that was lying near the pool at the ſheep-market, for thirty-eight years was a paralytic, John v. 5. The word paralytic is derived from the Greek word Paraluo, which ſignifies to reſolve or relax; as importing that the palſie is a relaxation of the nerves. But it may be produced by other cauſes.

PALTI, פלטי, deliverance, or flight; from פלט palat.

I. PALTI. or Phalti, ſon of Raphu; one of the twelve ſpies ſent to examine the Land of Promiſe, Numb. xiii. 9.

II. PALTI, ſeems to be a city, 2 Sam. xxiii. 26. Helez the Palthite. So 1 Chron. xi. 27. But we know nothing of this city.

PALTIEL, פלטיאל, deliverance, or flight of God; from פלט palat, and אל el, God.

PALTIEL, or Phaltiel, ſon of Azzan, of Iſſachar. One of the commiſſioners appointed to diſtribute the Land of Promiſe, Numb. xxxiv. 26.

PAMPHILIA, Παμφιλία, altogether lovely: from πᾶν, all, and φίλιος, amiable.

PAMPHYLIA, a province of Aſia, having Cilicia eaſt, Caria weſt, the provinces of Aſia north, and the Mediterranean ſouth. It is mentioned 1 Maccabees xv. 23. and Acts xxvii. 5. St. Paul and St. Barnabas preached at Perga in Pamphylia. Acts xiii. 13. xiv. 24.

PANEAS, a city of Syria, formerly called Leſhem, afterwards Dan, from the conqueſt made of it by ſome Iſraelites of the tribe of Dan; afterwards Paneas from Mount Paneus, at the foot of which it was ſituated; then Cæſarea Philippi, in honour of the emperor Auguſtus, to whom Philip, ſon of Herod the Great, conſecrated it. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 3. p. 618. His father Herod had a good while before built a magnificent temple here to the honour of Auguſtus, ſays Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 13. Laſtly, young Agrippa changed the name of Cæſarea into that of Neronias, in honour of Nero, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 8. In the time of William of Tyre it was called Belinas, Hiſt. lib. xv. Some doubt whether Paneas be the ſame as Dan. Euſebius and St. Jerome make a manifeſt diſtinction, in Dan. ſince they affirm that Dan is four miles from Paneas on the road to Tyre. But moſt writers confound them together, and St. Jerome himſelf ſays, in Ezek. xlviii. that Dan or Leſhem was afterwards called Paneas. It was ſituate about the place where Jordan iſſues out of the ground; for this river has its ſource in the lake called Phiala, an hundred furlongs from Paneas. See JORDAN.

PANEUS, or Panius, a mountain, otherwiſe called Hermon, making part of Mount Libanus, at the foot of which was the city Paneas, Hieronym. in Hermon, ſeu Ærmon. It is ſaid there was an ancient temple upon this mountain, which was ſo ſo high, that the ſnow might be ſeen on it the whole ſummer long, Vide Hieronym. Onomaſt. in Ærmon. See HERMON.

PANION, a cavern in the mountain Paneus, near the ſource of Jordan, where Herod the Great built a temple of white marble in honour of Auguſtus. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xv. cap. 13.

PANTHER. The Jews, and after them ſome of the fathers, have owned the name of Panther among the anceſtors of Jeſus Chriſt; but they are not agreed about his place in this genealogy. The ſureſt way is abſolutely to reject him, as contrary to the evangeliſts, who make no mention of him; and as being maliciouſly introduced by the Jews into the genealogy of our Saviour, to make it precarious and contemptible.

PAPER, papyrus. The papyrus is a kind of bulruſh, which grows in Egypt in the Nile. The Egyptians applied it to ſeveral uſes, as to make baſkets, ſhoes, cloaths, Herodot. lib. ii. cap. 37. little boats to ſwim on the Nile, Theophraſt. Hiſt. Plant. lib. iv. Plin. lib. vi. cap. 22. lib. vii. cap. 56. lib. xiii. cap. 11. and paper to write on. The part of the papyrus near the root, is good to eat. Iſaiah, xviii. 2. בכלי גמא, ſpeaks of a kind of veſſel or little bark of paper: made, as ſome think, in form of a head, wherein the Egyptians put a letter, to inform the people of Biblos of the diſcovery of their god Adonis, whom they bewailed as dead. They put this machine upon the Mediterranean, and made the people believe that it came of itſelf in the ſpace of ſeven days to Biblos, upon the coaſts of Phœnicia, which was more than fourſcore leagues from Egypt. Lucian. de Dea Syr. Vide & Cyrill. Alex. tom. ii. lib. ii. & Procop. in Iſai. The Hebrew Goma, uſed by Iſaiah, ſignifies a ruſh or reed; Moſes uſes the ſame word to denote the materials of that little ark, in which his parents expoſed him upon the Nile. Exod. ii. 3. תיבת גמא Arca Junci. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

The writing-paper of the ancients was very different from that uſed by us; it was compoſed of the leaves of the papyrus, from whence our name for paper. Vide BOOK.

There is great probability that it is this paper of Egypt, which is expreſſed in ſeveral paſſages of [the Vulgate] Scripture by the words Charta and Liber; and that the ancient volumes were only Egyptian paper. The fine vellum and parchment was introduced but late: yet I no where find that they made long rolls of mere paper. This matter was not ſolid enough, nor firm enough, to be ſewed thus together from end to end. It is much more probable, that theſe rolls were made of ſkins or of vellum, as they are now made. Diodorus Siculus relates, that the Perſians formerly wrote their regiſters upon ſkins; and Herodotus ſpeaks of the ſkins of ſheep and goats made uſe of by the ancient Ionians to write upon. We muſt therefore admit, that the king of Pergamus only improved the dreſſing of ſkins, into parchment, pergamena, and prepared them ſo perfectly, that he had no longer any occaſion for the paper of Egypt. And indeed vellum is of much better uſe than the Egyptian paper. All the moſt ancient manuſcripts we have, whether Greek or Latin, are written upon vellum, and there hardly remains any thing of the Egyptian paper in our archives, but ſome old titles, and they are almoſt gone to decay. Voſſius thinks the uſe of vellum was much more ancient than the kings of Pergamus. Voſſ. origin. & lib. i. de arte Grammat. cap. 38.

PAPHOS, Πάφος, or paphus, which boils; or which is very hot; from παφλάζειν, to boil, or to be very hot.

PAPHOS, a famous city of the Iſle of Cyprus, where St. Paul converted the proconſul Sergius Paulus, and ſtruck with blindneſs a Jewiſh ſorcerer, called Bar-jeſus, who would have hindered his converſion. Paphos was at the weſtern extremity of the iſland. Acts xiii. 6. A. D. 44.

PARABLE, Gr. Παραβολαὶ, Parabole; (Heb. משלים, Maſhilim) from the verb paraballein, ſignifies to compare things together, to form a parallel, or ſimilitude of them, with other things. In Scripture are often confounded compariſon, ſimile, parable, the ſententious manner of ſpeaking by proverbs, ſentences, or ſimilitudes. What we call the Proverbs of Solomon, which are moral maxims and ſentences, the Greeks call the Parables of Solomon. And when St. Jerom would expreſs the poetic and ſententious ſtyle of Balaam, Numb. xxiii. 7, 18, &c. he ſays, he began to ſpeak in a parable: Aſſumptâ parabolâ, dixit. In like manner when Job anſwers his friends, it is ſaid, he began to take up his parable: Job xxvii. 1. xxix. 1. Aſſumens parabolam ſuam, dixit. The parabolical, enigmatical, figurative, and ſententious way of ſpeaking was the language of the Eaſtern ſages and learned men; and nothing was more inſupportable than to hear a fool utter parables. The legs of the lame are not equal; ſo is a parable in the mouth of fools, Prov xxvi. 7.

The prophets uſe parables, the more ſtrongly to impreſs prince and people with their threatenings or promiſes. Nathan reproves David under the parable of a rich man who had taken away and killed the lamb of a poor man. 2 Sam. xii. 2. 3, &c. The woman of Tekoah, who was hired by Joab to reconcile the mind of David to Abſalom, Abſalom, propoſed to him the parable of her two ſons that fought together, and one having killed the other, they were going to put the murderer to death, and ſo to deprive her of both her ſons, 2 Sam. xiv. 2, 3, &c. Jotham, ſon of Gideon, propoſed to the Shechemites the parable of the bramble of Libanus, whom the trees choſe for their king, Judg. ix. 7, 8, &c. The prophets often reprove the infidelity of Jeruſalem under the parable of an adulterous wife, &c. &c.

Our Saviour in the Goſpel ſeldom ſpeaks to the people but in parables: thereby verifying the prophecy of Iſaiah, vi. 9. that the people ſhould ſee without knowing, and hear without underſtanding, in the midſt of inſtructions. St. Jerome in Matth. xviii. obſerves, that this manner of inſtructing and ſpeaking by ſimilitudes and parables was common in Syria, and eſpecially in Paleſtine. It is certain that the ancient ſages employed this ſtile, if I may ſo ſay, even to affectation.

Some parables in the New Teſtament are ſuppoſed to be true hiſtories. As that of Lazarus and the wicked rich man; that of the good Samaritan; that of the Prodigal Son. In others our Saviour ſeems to allude to ſome points of hiſtory in thoſe times; as that deſcribing a king who went into a far country, to receive a kingdom. This may hint at the hiſtory of Archelaus, who after the death of his father Herod the Great went to Rome, to receive from Auguſtus the confirmation of his father's will, by which he had the kingdom of Judæa left to him.

Laſtly, the word parable is ſometimes uſed in Scripture in a ſenſe of reproach and contempt. God threatens his people to ſcatter them among the nations, and to make them a parable, or a fable [in our Engliſh tranſlation a proverb] to the people. 2 Chron. vii. 20. So that when any one would expreſs a nation hated of God, and which has ſuffered his fierce anger, he ſhall ſay, May you become like Iſrael!

PARACLETUS, Παρᾶκλήτος, comforter, or mediator.

PARACLETUS, a comforter. In Greek, Παράκλητος, from παρικαλεω, exhortor, conſolor, defendo, intercedo, Paracletos, or Paraclitus, according to another pronunciation of the word, changing the Eta into an Iota; one that exhorts, defends, comforts, that prays or intercedes for another. Paracletus is a title given to the Holy Ghoſt by our Saviour, who ſays, John xiv. 16. I will pray the Father, and he ſhall give you another COMFORTER, Paracletus, that he may abide with you for ever. And St. John, 1 Epiſt. ii. 1. ſays, we have an advocate (Paracletus) with the Father: this advocate, Paracletus, defender, mediator, is Jeſus Chriſt the righteous, who is the propitiation for our ſins. But the name Paracletus is chiefly aſcribed to the Holy Ghoſt, John xiv. 26. xv. 26. xvi. 7.

PARADISUS, פרדס, παράδεισις, a garden planted with trees.

PARADISE. From the Hebrew, or rather from the Chaldee, Pardes, of which the Greeks made Paradiſos, and the Latins, Paradiſus. The original ſhould properly ſignify an orchard, a plantation of fruit-trees, or, ſometimes, a foreſt. This word is found in three places of the Old Teſtament. (1) Nehem. ii. 8. where Nehemiah deſires king Artaxerxes, that letters may be made out for him to Aſaph the keeper of the king's foreſt, that he might have what timber was neceſſary: in this place Paradiſus denotes a foreſt of trees fit to build with. (2) Solomon, Eccleſiaſtes ii. 5. ſays, he made him gardens and paradiſes, or orchards. (3) In the Song of Solomon, iv. 13. he ſays that the plants of the Spouſe are as an orchard of pomegranates, or a paradiſe. The Greeks acknowledged that the word paradiſus came to them from the Orientals, or Perſians, who gave the name of paradiſe to their fruit-gardens, and their parks. Xenophon and other Greek authors often uſe this word in this ſenſe.

The Septuagint uſe the word Paradiſus, Gen. ii. 8. יטע יהוה גן בערן Παράδεισον ἐν Ἐδὲν. Vulg. paradiſum voluptatis, when they ſpeak of the garden of Eden, which the Lord planted, and placed Adam and Eve therein: and this famous garden is commonly known by the name of the Terreſtrial Paradiſe. There have been many enquiries about its ſituation. Some have thought that it never exiſted, but whatever is ſaid of it in Scripture, ought to be taken allegorically. Others believed, it was beyond the confines of this world. Others, that it was only in the beginning, or at the creation. It has been placed in the third heaven, in the orb of the moon, in the moon itſelf, in the middle region of the air, above the earth, under the earth, in a diſtant place concealed from the knowledge of men, in the place which is now poſſeſſed by the Caſpian ſea, under the arctic pole, and to the utmoſt ſouthern regions. See the ſeveral opinions collected together in M. Huet's Diſſertation concerning the Situation of the earthly Paradiſe.

There is hardly any part of the world, in which it has not been ſought: in Aſia, in Africa, in Europe, in America; in Tartary, on the banks of the Ganges, in the Indies, in China, in the iſland of Ceylon, in Armenia, under the equator; in Meſopotamia, in Syria, in Perſia, in Babylonia, in in Arabia, in Paleſtine, in Ethiopia, where the mountains of the moon are; near the mountains of Libanus, Antilibanus, and Damaſcus. M. Huet places it on the river produced by the junction of the Tigris and Euphrates, now called the river of the Arabs; below this conjunction and the diviſion of the ſame river, before it falls into the Perſian ſea.

He places it on the Eaſtern ſhore of this river, which being conſidered (ſays he) according to the diſpoſition of its channel, and not according to the courſe of its ſtream, was divided into four heads, or four different openings: i. e. two upwards, the Tigris and Euphrates, and two below, the Piſon and Gihon. The Piſon, according to him, is the weſtern channel, and the Gihon is the Eaſtern channel of the Tigris, which diſcharges itſelf into the Perſian gulph. It is ſaid that M. Bochart was pretty much of the ſame opinion. Bochart. Phaleg. lib. i. cap. 4. de anim ſacr. parte ii, lib. v. cap. 6.

Other ſkilful men have placed the terreſtrial paradiſe in Armenia, between the ſources of the rivers 1. Tigris, 2. Euphrates, 3. Araxis, 4. Phaſis, which we take to be the four rivers deſcribed by Moſes. Euphrates is expreſsly mentioned; Hiddekel is the Tigris, ſtill called Diglito. The Phaſis is Piſon, in which the reſemblance of the words is apparent. The Gihon is the Araxes. Araxes in Greek, as Gihon in Hebrew, ſignifies rapid or impetuous; and there is no river more rapid than the Araxes. The land of Eden was in this country, as far as can be judged by ſome traces of it, yet remaining in Scripture. The land of Cuſh is the ancient Scythia, ſituate on the Araxes. Havilah is plainly Cholchis, a country very famous for its gold. Travellers that have viſited this country give ſufficient teſtimony of its great fruitfulneſs, and there is a tradition among the inhabitants, that paradiſe was in their province.

Eccleſiaſticus xliv. 16. ſays, that Enoch being agreeable to God was tranſlated into paradiſe. The Latin fathers, who read the word paradiſe in the Vulgate, thought that this patriarch was tranſported into paradiſe, i. e. heaven, according to ſome, or the earthly paradiſe, according to others. But the Greek fathers, who did not read the word paradiſus, in the Greek, have not determined the place to which Enoch was tranſlated. Jerom often has the word paradiſus, in imitation of the Septuagint; but incorrectly. He generally tranſlates the Hebrew Gan by paradiſus; but Gan only ſignifies a garden, whether a kitchen-garden, orchard, or park.

In the New Teſtament, paradiſe is put for a place of delight, where the ſouls of the bleſſed enjoy happineſs. Thus Jeſus Chriſt tells the penitent thief on the croſs, Luke xxiii. 43. To-day ſhalt thou be with me in paradiſe, i. e. in the ſtate of the bleſſed. And St. Paul ſpeaking of himſelf in the third perſon ſays, 2 Cor. xii. 4. I knew a man that was caught up into paradiſe, and heard unſpeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Jeſus Chriſt ſays, Rev. ii. 7. To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midſt of the paradiſe of God. The Jews commonly call paradiſe the garden of Eden; and they imagine, that at the coming of the Meſſiah they ſhall here enjoy an earthly felicity, in the midſt of delights; and till the reſurrection and the coming of the Meſſiah, they think their ſouls ſhall abide here in a ſtate of reſt.

The Orientals think, that the terreſtrial paradiſe was in the iſland of Serendib, or Ceylon; and that when Adam was drove out of paradiſe, he was ſent to the mountain of Rahoun in this iſland, two or three days journey from the ſea. The Portugueſe call this mountain Pico de Adamo, or the Mountain of Adam, becauſe it is thought that this firſt of men was buried under this mountain, after he had lived in repentance an hundred and thirty years. D'Herbelot. Bibliot. Orient. p. 708.

The Muſſulmen do not believe that the paradiſe, in which Adam was placed, was terreſtrial, but that it was in one of the ſeven heavens; and that from this heaven Adam was thrown down into the iſland of Ceylon, where he died, after having made a pilgrimage into Arabia, where he viſited the place appointed for the building of the temple of Mecca. They ſay alſo, that when God created the garden of Eden, he created there what the eye had never ſeen, the ear has never heard, and what has never entered into the heart of man to conceive. That this delicious garden has eight doors, whereas hell has but ſeven, and that the porters which have the care of them are to let none enter before the learned, who make a profeſſion of deſpiſing earthly, and of deſiring heavenly things.

The Orientals reckon four paradiſes in Aſia. (1) About Damaſcus, in Syria. (2) About Obollah in Chaldæa. (3) About the deſert of Naoubendigian in Perſia, in a place called Scheb-Baovan, watered by the Nilabe. And laſtly, in the iſle of Ceylon, or Serendib.

We may perceive from hence, that the opinion which places the terreſtrial paradiſe about Damaſcus, and near the ſources of the Jordan, is no novel opinion, nor peculiar to European writers. Heidegger in the lives of the patriarchs,

Mr. le Clerc, father Abram, and father Hardouin, both Jeſuits, have maintained this opinion.

PARALYSIS, Παράλυσις, a palſy, a relaxation or reſolution of the nerves; from παρὰ and λύω, ſolvo. Vide PALSIE.

PARAN, פארן, beauty, glory, ornament; from פאר peer.

PARAN, El-paran, or Pharan, a deſert of Arabia Petræa, ſouth of the Land of Promiſe, and north-eaſt of the gulph Elanitis. Chedor-laomer and his allies ravaged the country to the plains of Paran. Gen. xiv. 6. Hagar being ſent from Abraham, retired into the wilderneſs of Paran, where ſhe lived with her ſon Iſhmael, Gen. xxi. 21. The Iſraelites having decamped from Sinai, came into the deſart of Paran, Numb. x. 12. From hence Moſes ſent out ſpies to inſpect the Land of Promiſe, Numb. xiii. 3. and conſequently Kadeſh is in the wilderneſs of Paran, ſince theſe men were ſent from Kadeſh, Numb. xiii. 26. Moſes ſeems to place Mount Sinai in Paran when he ſays, that the Lord appeared to the Iſraelites on the mount of Paran, Deut. xxxiii. 2: Habakkuk, iii. 3. ſeems to ſay the ſame thing. When David was perſecuted by Saul, he withdrew into the wilderneſs of Paran, near Maon and Carmel, 1 Sam. xxv. 1, 2. Hadad ſon of the king of Edom was carried when a child into Egypt, 1 Kings xi. 18. Thoſe who conducted him came from the eaſtern parts of Idumea (or Edom) into the country of Midian, from thence into the country of Paran, and ſo into Egypt. The greater part of the habitations of this country were dug in the rocks, Joſeph de Bello, lib. v. cap. 7. and here Simon of Geraſa gathered together all that he took from his enemies.

PARAN was a city of Arabia Petræa, three days journey from the city of Elah, or Ailat, eaſt. This city gave name to the deſart of Paran.

PARANYMPHUS, Παράνυμφος, near the bridegroom.

PARANYMPHUS. This word, according to the force of the Greek paranymphos, ſignifies, he that is near the bridegroom, the friend of the bridegroom, he that performs the ſolemnities of the wedding, and conducts the bride to the bridegroom. The Rabbins ſay, Vide Gemar. Hieroſol. Cithuboth, cap. 1. that the principal office of the Paranymphus was, to obſerve that the bridegroom and bride committed no fraud in relation to the mark of the bride's virginity. John the Baptiſt ſays, that there is a great difference between the bridegroom and the Paranymphus. The bridegroom has the bride, and for him the marriage is made; the Paranymphus, or the friend of the bridegroom, performs the orders of the bridegroom, and rejoices to obey him, John iii. 29. Among the Grecians the Paranymphus kept the door of the nuptial bed, and had the care and management of the feaſt, and all the other rejoicings. Vide Pollucem. Some think the Architriclinus, John ii. 8. at the marriage of Cana was the ſame as the Paranymphus. Gaudentius Brixienſis aſſures us, tract. 9. from the tradition of the ancients, that commonly the preſident of the nuptial feaſt was choſen from among the prieſts, that he might take care nothing paſſed contrary to the law, or to the rules of decency. See MARRIAGE, ARCHITRICLINUS.

PARAPHRASE, Chaldee. See TARGUM.

PARASCUE, Παρασκευὴ, preparation. Mark xv. 42.

PARENTS. This word is properly ſaid of a father and mother, but is extended alſo to others related by blood, eſpecially in a direct line upward. The Scripture commands children to honour their parents, Exod. xx. 12. i. e. to obey them, to ſuccour them, to have an inward and outward reſpect for them, to give them all aſſiſtance that nature, and their, and our, circumſtances require. Chriſt in the Goſpel, Matth. xv. 5, 6. condemns that corrupt explication which the doctors of the law gave of this precept; teaching that a child was diſengaged from the obligation of ſupporting and aſſiſting his parents, when he ſaid, It is a gift by whatſoever thou mighteſt be profited by me. q. d. "I am no longer maſter of my own eſtate, it is conſecrated to the Lord." See CORBAN.

Marriages among parents and relations were forbid within certain degrees, Levit. xviii.

PARMASHTA, פרמשתא, burſting of the foundation; from פרם param, to break, to divide, and from שתות ſhatoth, foundation: or that puts the rupture; from שות ſhuth, to put, and param, rupture: according to the Syriac and Hebrew, a calf, or bull of a year old. This name is Perſian or Mediſh.

PARMASHTA, or Phermeſta, ſeventh ſon of Haman, the enemy of the Jews. Slain by the Jews, together with his father, Eſt. ix. 9.

PARMENAS, Παρμενὰς, that abides, and is permanent; from παραμένω, I abide.

PARMENAS, one of the ſeven deacons choſen with St. Stephen, Acts vi. 5, 6. A. D. 33. The Scripture gives them all great commendation, as men of honeſt report, full of the Holy Ghoſt and wiſdom. St. Epiphanius thinks, they were of the number of the ſeventy diſciples. As to Parmenas, we have nothing certain of his life or death. The Greeks ſay he fell aſleep before the eyes of the apoſtles. Adon places his martyrdom at at Philippi in Macedonia, January 23. The martyrology notices his death under Trajan, in the ſame city.

PARNACH, פרנך, πάρανὰχ, a bull ſtruck or beaten, or that ſtrikes; from פר par, a bull, and נכה nacah, to beat: otherwiſe, fruit, or production of perfumes; from פרה parah, to produce, and nacah, perfume.

PARNACH, or Pharnac, father of Elizaphan, of Zebulun, Numb. xxxiv. 25.

PAROSH, פרעש, φόρος, a flea, an inſect that leaps; from פרעש paroſh: otherwiſe, fruit of the moth; from פרה parah, to fructify, and עש haſh, a moth.

PAROSH, or Pharoſh, or Pharos. His children returned from Babylon, in number two thouſand one hundred and ſeventy-two. Ezra ii. 3. viii. 3. x. 25.

PARSHANDATHA, פרשנדתא, revelation of corporal impurities, or of his trouble; from פרש paraſh, expoſed, revealed, and נדה nadah, impurities of women, or trouble: otherwiſe, dung of impurity; from נדה nadah, and paraſh. This name is originally Perſian or Mediſh.

PARSHANDATHA, or Pharſandatha, the eldeſt ſon of Haman, the great enemy of the Jews, put to death with his father, Eſther ix. 7.

PART, portion. The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance, Pſal. xvi. 5. Thou art my refuge, and my portion in the land of the living, Pſal. cxlii. 5. And, Iſrael is the part, or portion, of the Lord, his peculiar people: The Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance, Deut. xxxii. 9. But with this difference, that God makes and conſtitutes the happineſs of his people, but his people cannot augment his happineſs or glory.

Part or portion alſo ſignifies recompence, or correction. This is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed unto him by God. Job xx. 29. They ſhall be a portion for foxes. Pſal. lxiii. 10. Upon the wicked he ſhall reign ſnares, fire, and brimſtone, and an horrible tempeſt; this ſhall be the portion of their cup, Pſal. xi. 6. This is their part or portion, and the juſt puniſhment of their iniquity. The Lord ſhall appoint him his portion with the hypocrites.

PARTHIANS, Παρθοὶ, from פרש paraſh, a horſeman. The Parthians and Perſians generally rode on horſeback.

PARTHIANS, the ſame as the ancient Perſians. They were called Perſians in the time of the prophets, and Parthians in our Saviour's time. The name Perſians, in Hebrew Paraſchim, ſignifies horſemen. The proper name of the Perſian nation is Ælam. Probably they received the name Peraſchim, becauſe of their excellent horſemanſhip, which continues to this day. None of the ſacred writers mention the Perſians till towards the time of Cyrus. Ezekiel xxvii. 10. puts the Perſians among the troops of the king of Tyre: alſo in the army of Gog, prince of Magog, Ezek. xxxviii. 5. Judith ſaid, that the Perſians admired her courage, xvi. 10. Daniel often ſpeaks of the king of the Perſians, who was to deſtroy the Chaldæan monarchy. The name of Parthians is only read Acts ii. 9. where they appear as if diſtinct from the Elamites, though they made originally but one people. See Ælam. Elymais was the capital of Ælam, and Suſa the capital of the Perſians.

The firſt Epiſtle of St. John in ſeveral manuſcripts has the title of "the Epiſtle to the Parthians."

PARTRIDGE. The partridge is a bird very good to eat; its flight is low, and of little compaſs. The grey partridges are the more common, but the red ones are the larger. There are white partridges in the Alps, which have hairy feet. St. Auſtin ſays, tom. v. Serm. 46, that the partridge is a quarrelſome animal, and loves contention. In order to catch it, the ſame inclination is made uſe of, that moves it to quarrel; by which means it throws itſelf greedily into the nets of the fowler. He compares heretics to them, who are greedy of diſpute, always ſtriving for victory to lead away the ſimple. He applies to them the paſſage of Jeremiah, xvii. 11. As the partridge ſitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, ſo he that getteth riches, and not by right, ſhall leave them in the midſt of his days, and at his end ſhall be a fool. St. Ambroſe, lib. vi. Hexaemer, cap. 3. & ep. 32. and St. Jerome, in Jer. xvii. inform us, that the partridge carries away the eggs of another partridge, and ſits upon them as her own; but when ſhe has hatched them, and the young ones are able to fly, they fly away, and follow the voice of their true dam. But it will be difficult to give good proofs of this, from natural hiſtory.

The LXX read, The partridge cried, it gathered together what it had not produced. Upon which Theodoret obſerves, in Jer. xvii. that fowlers uſe tame partridges, by which they catch others; and doubtleſs this is what St. Auſtin means when he ſays, that the partridge is taken by his obſtinacy, in purſuing the tame partridge into the net. Elian obſerves the ſame, lib. iv. cap. 16. de Animal. as alſo the author of Eccleſiaſticus, Like as a partridge taken and kept in a cage, ſo is the heart of the proud; and like as a ſpy, watcheth

he for thy fall. The tame partridge makes as it were its ſport and diverſion of the deſtruction of other partridges.

Some tranſlate the Hebrew, Jer. xvii. 11. קרא דגר ולא ילד. — The partridge lays many eggs, but does not hatch them all. Becauſe ſhe makes her neſt upon the ground, and is therefore often obliged to quit her eggs, for fear of cattle, dogs, or ſportſmen, which chills her eggs, and makes them unfruitful. Rain and moiſture alſo may ſpoil them, and ſometimes the male-partridge breaks them.

Others think that the Hebrew word Kore, here tranſlated a partridge, rather ſignifies a cuckow; Kore ſignifies that which cries, and the cuckow is little known but by its crying: it does not ſit upon its own eggs, but lays its eggs in other birds' neſts. This agrees with what is ſaid by Jeremiah. We have no proof that the Hebrew word ſignifies a partridge, but the teſtimony of the Septuagint, who thus tranſlate it. Bochart thinks it rather ſignifies a woodcock, ruſticula.

PARUAH, פרוה, Φαρσὲ, flouriſhing; from פרח parach: according to the Syriac, that flies away.

PARUAH, or Pharue, father of Jehoſhaphat, of Iſſachar, who was made governor of Iſſachar by Solomon, 1 Kings iv. 17.

PASACH, פסך, Φασὲχ, your fragment, your diminution; from פסס paſas, fragment, and the affix ך ec, your.

PASCHA, Πάσκα. See PASSOVER.

PASEAH, פסח, Φασὲ, leap, paſſage.

PASEAH, or Pheſſe, ſon of Eſhton, and grandſon of Caleb. 1 Chron. iv. 12.

PASHUR, פשחור, that extends or multiplies the hole, or whiteneſs; from פשה paſhah, to ſpread or extend, and חור chur, a hole, a cave, or whiteneſs: otherwiſe, that multiplies, or extends the liberty or the principality; from the ſame word paſhah, to extend, and חרר charar; whence חורים chorim, nobles, freemen.

I. PASHUR, or Phaſſur, a deſcendant of Immer, &c. Jer. xx. 1. called Magor-miſſabib.

II. PASHUR, Phaſhur, or Pheſhur, 1247 of his children returned from Babylon: Ezra ii. 38. Neh. vii. 41.

PASSION. This word has ſeveral very different ſignifications; firſt, it ſignifies the paſſion or ſuffering of Jeſus Chriſt. To whom alſo he ſhewed himſelf alive after his paſſion, Acts i. 3. It is alſo put for the ſufferings of the ſaints. Heb. x. 32 Vulg. Magnum certamen ſuſtinuiſtis paſſionum. Ye have ſuffered great afflictions. Rom. viii. 18. Vulg. Et non ſunt condignæ paſſiones hujus temporis ad futuram gloriam. Secondly, it ſignifies ſhameful paſſions, Rom. i. 26. to which they are given up, whom God abandons to their own deſires. And the paſſions of ſin, Rom. vii. 5. paſſiones peccatorum, which act in our members, to bring forth the fruit of death. The paſſions of deſires. 1 Theſſ. iv. 5. paſſio deſiderii, our evil inclinations, the motions of concupiſcence, to which the heathen abandoned themſelves without ſcruple.

PASSOVER, פסח, Paſcha, or Phaſe; Heb. Peſach, Ezek. xii. 21. Leap, paſſage. In Chaldee, פסחא paſha, whence paſcha, or πάσχα, by changing the ח cheth into χ chi; as, Charan has been rendered for Haran.

PASSOVER, or Paſcha, paſſage. The Jews pronounce it Peſach. They gave the name of paſſover to the feſtival eſtabliſhed in commemoration of the coming forth out of Egypt, Vide Exod. xii. becauſe the night before their departure, the deſtroying angel who ſlew the firſt-born of the Egyptians, paſſed over the houſes of the Hebrews without entering therein, becauſe they were marked with the blood of the lamb, which, for this reaſon, was called the Paſchal Lamb.

This is what God ordained concerning the paſſover: The month of the Exodus from Egypt; (this month is called Abib in Moſes; afterwards it was called Niſan) was hereafter to be the firſt month of the ſacred or eccleſiaſtical year, and the fourteenth day of this month, between the two evenings, i. e. between the ſun's decline and his ſetting; or rather according to our reckoning, between three o'clock in the afternoon and ſix in the evening, at the equinox, they were to kill the paſchal lamb, and to abſtain from leavened bread. The day following being the fifteenth, reckoned from ſix o'clock of the foregoing evening, was the grand feaſt of the paſſover, which continued ſeven days; but only the firſt and the ſeventh day were peculiarly ſolemn. The ſlain lamb ought to be without defect, a male, and of that year. If no lamb could be found, they might take a kid. They killed a lamb or a kid in each family; and if the number of the family was not ſufficient to eat the lamb, they might aſſociate two families together.

With the blood of the lamb they ſprinkled the door-poſts and lintel of every houſe, that the deſtroying angel at the ſight of the blood might paſs over them. They were to eat the lamb, the ſame night, roaſted with unleavened bread, and a ſallad of wild lettuces; or bitter herbs: it was forbid to eat any part of it raw, or boiled, nor were they to break a bone; but it was to be eat intire, even with the head, the feet, and the bowels. If any thing remained to the day following, it was thrown into the fire, Exod. xii.

46. Numb. ix. 12. John xix. 36. They who ate it were to be in the poſture of travellers, having their reins girt, ſhoes on their feet, ſtaves in their hands, and eating in a hurry. This laſt part of the ceremony was but little obſerved, at leaſt it was of no obligation after that night they came out of Egypt. During the whole eight days of the paſſover no leavened bread was to be uſed. They kept the firſt and laſt day of the feaſt; yet it was allowed to dreſs victuals, which was forbid on the Sabbath-day.

The obligation of keeping the paſſover was ſo ſtrict, that whoever ſhould neglect it was condemned to death, Numb. ix. 13. But thoſe who had any lawful impediment, as a journey, ſickneſs, or uncleanneſs, voluntary or involuntary; for example, thoſe who had been preſent at a funeral, or &c. were to defer the celebration of the paſſover till the ſecond month of the eccleſiaſtical year, the fourteenth day of the month Jiar (which anſwers to April and May.) We ſee an example of this poſtponed paſſover under Hezekiah, 2 Chron. xxx. 2, 3, &c.

We may add, that the Oriental Chriſtians, and eſpecially the Syrians, inſiſt, that on the year that Chriſt died, the feaſt was celebrated on the thirteenth of Adar, being Saturday, that it began at the concluſion of the Friday before, and that our Saviour foreſtalled it by a day, and celebrated it on the Friday, (beginning from the evening of the Thurſday before) becauſe he was to ſuffer on the Friday, D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 349. Calviſius alſo places the ſame paſſover on the Saturday, April 4. A. D. 33. the thirty-fifth of Jeſus Chriſt, the 344th year of Alexandra.

The ceremonies with which the modern Jews celebrate their paſſover, are ſuch as theſe, Leo of Modena, part. iii. cap. 3. The feaſt continues a week, but the Jews out of Paleſtine extend it to eight days, according to an ancient cuſtom, by which the Sanhedrim ſent two men to obſerve the firſt appearance of the new moon, and immediately to give notice of it to the chief of the council. For fear of error, they kept two days of the feſtival. One was called dies latentis lunæ; the other dies apparentis lunæ. So that the two firſt days of the paſſover, and the two laſt alſo are ſacred; both from labour, and buſineſs. But it is allowed to prepare victuals, and to remove from place to place, whatever they have occaſion for. For the four intervening days it is only forbid to work; but they may manage their money; and theſe days are diſtinguiſhed from working-days only by ſome particular things.

During the eight days of the feaſt, the Jews eat only unleavened bread, and it is not allowed them to have in their cuſtody any leaven, or bread leavened. And they examine all the houſe with a very ſcrupulous care, to take away whatever may have any ferment in it. Vide LEAVEN.

Preſently after they begin making unleavened bread, which they call Mazzoth; and make enough to ſerve all the eight days of the feaſt. They take care that the flour has not been wet, or warmed, for fear it may have been fermented. They make it into large and thick cakes, of different figures; and that they may not riſe, they bake them immediately in the oven. Some make their cakes with eggs and ſugar, for perſons that are nice or ſick; theſe they call Mazza aſchiras, i. e. rich cake without leaven.

On the fourteenth of Niſan the firſt-born of every family faſts, in memory of what happened the night when God ſmote the firſt-born of Egypt. At evening they go to prayers, and at their return they ſit down to table, which is prepared in the day-time, and as well furniſhed as their circumſtances will allow. In order to obſerve the command, Exod. xii. 8. that the lamb muſt be eaten with unleavened bread, and with bitter herbs, they have in a diſh, ſome part of a lamb, or kid, prepared with bitter herbs, ſuch as celery, ſuccory, or lettuce, and a little plate of ſauce. This is to remind them of the lime and the bricks that their anceſtors were forced to make in Egypt; and holding glaſſes of wine in their hands, they tell of the hardſhips their forefathers endured there, and of the wonders God performed to deliver them from thence. Laſtly, they return thanks to God for theſe mercies, and repeat Pſal. cxii. to cxviii. Bleſs the Lord, O my ſoul, &c. and thoſe that follow, beginning with Hallelujah; after which they go to ſupper. When they have ſupped, they ſay or ſing, the reſt of theſe Pſalms, and other thankſgivings. The day following they repeat the ſame things.

The morning prayers are the ſame as thoſe of other feſtivals, but they add the Pſalms peculiar to this, They take the roll of the Pentateuch, and read Exodus, chap. xii. which contains the inſtitution of the paſſover; and Numbers, chap. xxviii. relating to the ſacrifices proper to this feaſt. Then the prayer Muſſaph; and afterwards they read out of the prophets whatever has any relation to what has been read out of the Pentateuch. This laſt leſſon is called Aftara, which is as much as to ſay diſmiſſion; becauſe after this they go away. After dinner they make a commemoration of the feſtival, and give a bleſſing to the prince prince under whoſe dominion they live, and pray God to preſerve him in peace and happineſs, &c. and that he may cheriſh their nation, according to the advice of Jeremiah, xxix. 7.

The ſame things are repeated the two following days. This feſtival is concluded by the ceremony Habdala, or diſtinction. This ceremony is performed at the cloſing of the ſabbath-day, when the maſter of the houſe pronounces certain words, and benedictions, to deſire that every thing may ſucceed the coming week. At going out of the ſynagogue they go to eat unleavened bread for the laſt time.

From the ſecond evening of the paſſover they reckon forty-nine days to the Feaſt of Weeks, or Pentecoſt. And from the day after the paſſover they reckon thirty-three days, during which they neither marry, nor make new cloaths, nor cut their hair, nor celebrate any public rejoicing; but they ſpend this time in a kind of mourning, becauſe of a great mortality which happened, ſay they, among the diſciples of the Rabbin Akiba. The thirty-third day is kept as a feſtival, becauſe on this day the mortality ceaſed. This day is called Lag, becauſe the two Hebrew letters L and G ſtand for 33, in their numerical value.

The Rabbins inform us of other particulars; as that, if any one neglects to remove the leaven out of his houſe, he incurs the penalty of the whip. He that eats it by miſtake, and without knowing of it, muſt pay a fine. They may either burn the leaven that they find, or reduce it to crumbs, and caſt it into water. Some carry their ſcrupuloſity ſo far, as not to name the word leaven before their children, for fear they ſhould have a mind to it; in like manner, as they do not call pork by its name, that they may not make it too well known. They call it דבר אחר alia res, another thing.

They are careful in chooſing the wheat or barley that is to be uſed in making the unleavened bread; and they take all poſſible caution to hinder it from growing ſour, or fermenting, whether before or after the grinding. They take care of the bag it is put in, and will not carry it to the mill on any horſe's back, that it may not heat. They mingle neither butter nor ſalt, nor oil with the unleavened bread, for fear they ſhould cauſe any fermentation. It muſt be a Jew that is to knead it, and the moſt famous Rabbi's have not diſdained to take this trouble upon them.

While the temple was in being the Jews ſacrificed a lamb in the temple, between the two evenings, (i. e. after the noon of the 30th of Niſan, from about two o'clock to ſix in the evening) private perſons brought them to the temple, and there ſlew them; then they offered the blood to the prieſts, who poured it out at the foot of the altar. The perſon himſelf, or a Levite on this occaſion, might cut the throat of a victim, but the effuſion of the blood at the foot of the altar was appropriate to the prieſt. Philo ſays, that at this feaſt a Levite, or even a Jewiſh layman, might perform the prieſt's function; which is to be underſtood in the ſenſe we have now explained it. Philo de Vita Moſis, lib. iii.

On the vigil of the feaſt the matron of the family ſets out the table in the neateſt manner ſhe can; on which are ſet two unleavened cakes, two pieces of the lamb, one a ſhoulder roaſted, to put them in mind that God delivered them with a ſtretched-out arm. The other piece is boiled, in memory of the ſacrifice. To this they add, as is ſaid, Machazer Bonor. 1. part. Paſchas apud Bartolocci Bibl. Rabb. ſome ſmall fiſhes, becauſe of the Leviathan; a hard egg, becauſe of the bird Ziz; ſome meat, becauſe of the Behemoth. (The Leviathan, the Behemoth, and the Ziz, are three animals appointed for the feaſt of the elect in the other life.) Nuts and peaſe for the children, to provoke their curioſity to aſk reaſons for this ceremony. They have a kind of muſtard that has the appearance of mortar, which was heretofore made of dates, and dried figs, and at preſent is made of cheſnuts and apples, to repreſent the labour of making bricks: They call it חרוסת Charoteth. The father of the family ſits down to table with his children and ſlaves; becauſe on this day all are free. Being ſat down, the chief of the family takes of the bitter herbs about the bigneſs of an olive, which he dips in the Charoteth, eats it, and diſtributes to the reſt.

When they have done eating, they withdraw a little from table, and then a young lad, whoſe buſineſs it is to give out the hymn, propoſes ſeveral queſtions, as, Why on this night they muſt eat none but unleavened bread? Why they uſe none but bitter herbs? &c. They ſit again to the table, and the father of the family explains the hiſtory of the paſchal lamb, and of all the ceremonies that accompany it. He concludes with prayer, and by exhorting to pray for the reſtoration of Jeruſalem, and of the ancient ſacrifices, that they may there eat the paſchal lamb, and make God propitious to them by its blood. He gives thanks to the Lord, for having procured their anceſtors ſuch ſuch a glorious deliverance. After prayer, he waſhes his hands, and taking one of the unleavened loaves, he breaks it and bleſſes it. He does not bleſs the other loaves on the table, becauſe that night they are to be contented with a little bit of bread: For it is the bread of affliction; bread appointed for ſlaves and miſerable wretches.

He mingles this bread with the bitter herbs, and the Charoſeth, and eats it, praiſing God for having given this ordinance to his people. Then he takes a bit of the lamb, which he eats, giving thanks to God in the ſame manner. Afterwards, he takes another little bit of bread, and then he muſt eat no more. But they drink a third and a fourth cup of wine, in which water is mixed. They thunder out pſalms and thankſgivings, while this action is performing. Heretofore, and before the deſtruction of the temple, the paſchal lamb was to be intirely roaſted; but at preſent they think it is not allowed them to uſe the lamb either intirely roaſted, or intirely boiled; becauſe that would be to offer ſacrifices, and to eat them, out of Jeruſalem and the temple. But they roaſt one part of it, and boil another, or they take away a part of the animal, that it may not be intire, and ſo cannot paſs for a ſacrifice.

To fix the beginning of the lunar month, and conſequently of the Feaſt of the Paſſover, which was celebrated on the 14th day of the moon of March, the Rabbins, (Maimon. Tract. tom. i. ii. חדש הדרש) inform us, that their anceſtors placed centinels on the tops of mountains, to obſerve the moment of the appearance of the new moon, and that as ſoon as they had ſeen it, they ran in all haſte to inform the Sanhedrim, who diſpatched meſſengers to the neighbouring cities, to acquaint them that the Neomenia was begun. But we obſerve no trace of this either in Joſephus, or Philo, or in Scripture. Beſides, it appears to us certain, that the old Hebrews did not uſe lunar months; which overthrows this whole ſyſtem of the Rabbins. See MONTHS and YEARS.

As to the Chriſtian paſſover, it was inſtituted by Jeſus Chriſt, when, at the laſt paſſover ſupper he ate with his apoſtles, he gave them a ſign of his body to eat, and a ſign of his blood to drink, under the ſpecies of bread and wine; prefiguring that the day after he ſhould give up his body to the Jews, and to death. The paſchal lamb that the Jews killed, tore to pieces, and ate, and whoſe blood preſerved them from the deſtroying angel, was a type and figure of our Saviour's death and paſſion, and of his blood ſhed for the ſalvation of the world.

Even from the beginning there was a diverſity of ſentiments, and of practice, about the celebration of this Chriſtian paſſover. From the time of St. Polycarp the churches of Aſia kept Eaſter-Day on the fourteenth day of the moon of March, whatſoever day that might happen upon, in imitation of the Jews; the Latin church keeps it on the Sunday following the fourteenth day of the moon of March. Polycarp came to Rome and conferred with Anicetus on this ſubject; but neither of them being able to perſuade the other, they thought they ought not to diſturb the peace of the church about a matter of mere cuſtom. The diſpute on this ſubject growing warm under the pontificate of Victor, about A. D. 188, the Aſiatics continued their practice, and Polycrates, biſhop of Epheſus, with the other biſhops of Aſia, having written to the pope a long letter in ſupport of their opinion, Victor ſent letters through all the churches, by which he declared them excommunicate. The other churches did not approve of this rigour, and notwithſtanding his ſentence, they continued in communion with thoſe who ſtill kept Eaſter on the fourteenth day of the moon of March.

At the council of Nice, A. D. 325, the greater part of the churches of Aſia were inſenſibly fallen into the practice of the Romans. The council of Nice ordained, that all the churches ſhould celebrate Eaſter-Day on the Sunday following the fourteenth day of the moon of March; and the emperor Conſtantine cauſed this decree to be publiſhed through the whole Roman empire. Thoſe who continued their old practice, were looked on as ſchiſmatics, and had the name of Quartodecimans given them, or partizans of the fourteenth day; in Greek, Teſſares-decatites.

It is a famous queſtion, whether our Saviour kept the legal and Jewiſh paſſover the laſt year of his life? Some have thought that the ſupper he ate with his diſciples on the Thurſday evening, when he inſtituted the ſacrament of his body and blood, was an ordinary meal, without a paſchal lamb. Others, that our Saviour anticipated the paſſover, keeping it on the Thurſday evening, and the other Jews on the Friday. Others have advanced that the Galileans kept the paſſover on Thurſday, as Jeſus Chriſt did; but that the other Jews kept it on Friday. It is the moſt general opinion of the Chriſtian church at this day, as well Greek as Latin, that our Saviour kept the legal paſſover on the Thurſday evening, as well as the reſt of the Jews.

The evangeliſts St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. Luke, ſeem favourable to the opinion, that he kept the paſſover on the Thurſday evening, as alſo the other Jews. But we muſt own, that St. John ſeems to contradict it, ſince he ſays that Jeſus being at table with his diſciples, before the feaſt of the paſſover, when Jeſus knew that his hour was come, &c. John xiii. 1, 2, &c. And, afterwards, when the Jews had led Jeſus to Pilate, he obſerves, that they themſelves went not into the judgment-hall, leſt they ſhould be defiled, but that they might eat the paſſover, John xviii. 28. Laſtly, he ſays, that Friday was the preparation of the paſſover, and that the Saturday following was the great day of the feaſt, the Sabbath-day, for that Sabbath-day was an high day, John xix. 14, 31. and why ſo, if not becauſe it was the paſſover? And on this account the Friday before was the preparation of the paſſover, which was to be celebrated the day following.

In a diſſertation on our Saviour's laſt paſſover, we have endeavoured to ſhew, that our Saviour did not celebrate the paſſover the laſt year of his life; at leaſt, that the Jews celebrated it on Friday, the day of his death, and that he died on Calvary at the ſame hour that the Jews offered the paſchal ſacrifice in the temple; ſo that the ſubſtance and the ſhadow coincided at the ſame time. Several of the ancients thought that the true day of the legal paſſover fell this year on the Friday, the day on which our Saviour ſuffered. So Tertullian againſt the Jews, cap. 8. Hilarius Diaconus, or the author of the queſtions on the Old and New Teſtament, qu. 55. p. 63. and qu. 94. tom. iii. oper. S. Aug. The word PASCHA is taken, 1. for the paſſing over of the deſtroying angel. 2. For the paſchal lamb. 3. For the meal at which it was eat. 4. For the feſtival inſtituted in memory of the coming out of Egypt, and the paſſage of the deſtroying angel. 5. For all the victims offered during the paſchal ſolemnity. 6. For the unleavened bread eat during the eight days of the paſſover. 7. For all the ceremonies of this ſolemnity.

PASTOPHORION, Παστοφόριον, chamber, ſecret place, nuptial chamber; from παστὸς, thalamus, and Φέρω, I bring. An apartment in the temple, where the prieſts habit were kept, [a VESTRY] 2 Macc. iv. 38.

PATARA, Πατάρα, which is trod under foot; from πατέω, I tread under foot.

PATARA, a maritime city of Lycia. St. Paul going from Philippi to Jeruſalem, found at Patara a ſhip bound for Phœnicia, in which he ſailed. Acts xxi. 1. A. D. 58.

PATHMOS, Πατμὸς, mortal; from the Greek πατέμαι, I am ſqueezed to pieces.

PATMOS, an iſland of the Ægean ſea, one of the Sporades, whither the apoſtle and evangeliſt St. John was baniſhed, A. D. 94. Rev. i. 9. In this iſland he had his revelations or apocalypſis. Moſt interpreters think, he wrote them in the ſame place, during the two years of his exile; others think, that he did not write them till after his return to Epheſus. The iſland of Patmos is between the iſland of Icaria and the promontory of Miletus. It is now called Patino, or Pactino, or Patmol. Its circuit is five and twenty or thirty miles. It has a city called Patmos, with a harbour, and ſome monaſteries of Greek monks. They ſhew you a cave, now a chapel, where they pretend St. John wrote his Revelations. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , and Plate.

PATHROS, פתרוס, mouthful of dew; from פת path, mouthful, and רסס raſas, to water: otherwiſe, perſuaſion, or dilatation of ruin; from pathah, to perſuade, or pathac, to dilate, and raſas, which alſo ſignifies to deſtroy. This is the name of a place in Egypt, whoſe etymology is not to be had from the Hebrew.

PATHROS, or Phaturis, a city and diſtrict of Egypt, mentioned by the prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel, Jer. xliv. 1, 15. Ezek. xxix. 14. xxx. 14. We do not very well know its ſituation, though Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 29. lib. v. cap. 9. has Phatarites nomos, and Ptolemy the geographer ſpeaks of Phaturis, and it appears to have been in Upper Egypt. Iſaiah xi. 11. calls it Pathros, and it is the country of the Pathruſim, the poſterity of Mizraim, of whom Moſes ſpeaks, Gen. x. 14. Ezekiel threatens them with intire ruin. The Jews retired thither, notwithſtanding the remonſtrances of Jeremiah, and the Lord ſays by Iſaiah, that he will bring them back from thence.

PATHRUSIM, פתרסים, πατροσωνιεὶμ, inhabitants or people of Pathros.

PATHRUSIM, or Phetruſim, fifth ſon of Mizraim, he peopled the country Pathros, or Patros, in Upper Egypt, See PATHROS.

PATIENCE, patient. The patience of Job is commended, commended, who, amid the misfortunes which God permitted to afflict him, did not behave impatiently, James v. 11. The patience of God, 1 Pet. iii. 20. which invites our converſion, and delays to puniſh us, is another kind of patience: it is the effect of his mercy, and of his infinite power, who does not haſten his vengeance. The patience of the poor, which ſhall not be loſt; Pſal. ix. 18. And, Thou art my patience and my God, Pſal. lxxi. 5. This is another thing; for patience in this place rather ſignifies hope and expectation. The hope which the poor has placed in God, ſhall not be in vain, Matth. xviii. 26. Luke xviii. 7. They bring forth fruit with patience, Luke viii. 15. They muſt wait till the time comes, [rather amid ſufferings, which exerciſe their patience, and perfect it:—with perſeverance.]

PATRIARCHS. This name is given to the ancient fathers, chiefly thoſe who lived before Moſes, as Adam, Lamech, Noah, Shem, &c. Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, the ſons of Jacob, and heads of the tribes. The Hebrews call them princes of the tribes, or heads of the fathers, Roſhe Aboth. The name Patriarch is from the Greek Patriarcha, head of a family. By an extention and imitation of this name of the firſt fathers of the Old Teſtament, the name of Patriarch is given to the biſhops of the firſt churches of the Eaſt, as Antioch, Alexandria, Jeruſalem, and Conſtantinople; alſo to the firſt founders of certain religious orders, as St. Baſil, St. Bennet, St. Auſtin, &c. For the Patriarchs of the Jews in later times, ſee JEWS.

After the deſtruction of the temple of Jeruſalem by the Romans, and the diſperſion of the Jews, that unfortunate nation was without a king, without a temple, without ſacrifices, without altar, without prieſts, without ephod, without any ſolemn exerciſe of their religion. For as to what was ſtill kept up in their ſynagogues, it was but the ſhadow of a part of what had been. They offered neither offering nor ſacrifice, there was no altar of incenſe, nor of ſhew-bread, no candleſtick, no altar of burnt-offerings. Even the ſacerdotal families were ſo confounded with the reſt, that they could no longer be diſtinguiſhed. Even the tribes and great families themſelves were involved in the utmoſt diſorder and confuſion.

Yet notwithſtanding this diſorder, as well thoſe Jews that continued in Paleſtine, as thoſe that inhabited beyond the Euphrates, endeavoured to preſerve ſome form of government among themſelves, eſpecially as to what related to their eccleſiaſtical polity. Thoſe of Judæa choſe them a head, to whom they gave the name of Patriarch. And thoſe beyond the Euphrates gave their chief the title of Prince of the Captivity. The firſt governed the Jews that dwelt in Judea, Syria, Egypt, Italy, and the provinces of the Roman empire. The ſecond had under his juriſdiction all thoſe that inhabited Babylonia, Chaldæa, Aſſyria, and Perſia. Vide CAPTIVITY.

If the Jews may be believed, the eſtabliſhment of patriarchs was before the deſtruction of the temple an hundred years. For they reckon that Hillel ſurnamed the Babylonian, becauſe he came out of that country, at his arrival at Jeruſalem, was conſulted about the celebration of the feaſt of the paſſover, which in that year fell upon a Saturday; that they were ſo well pleaſed with his anſwer, that they made him patriarch of the nation, and that his poſterity ſucceeded him down to the fifth century of the Chriſtian church, in which the patriarchs of Judæa were aboliſhed.

But what gives reaſon to doubt of this pretended antiquity of the patriarchs of Judæa is, that neither the Scripture, nor Philo, nor Joſephus make any mention of it; and that neither the Aſmonean princes, nor Herod the Great, or his ſucceſſors, nor the high-prieſts, who were at Jeruſalem, would have ſuffered them in Paleſtine, with that plenitude of power which the Rabbins inveſt them with. The contradictions and differences among the Jewiſh authors, who have given us the ſucceſſion of theſe pretended patriarchs that preceded the deſtruction of the temple, is a farther proof of their being ſuppoſititious. Theſe patriarchs are only known among the Rabbins that are poſterior to the Talmudiſts, and conſequently too modern to give any authority to a thing of this nature.

LIST of the PATRIARCHS of PALESTINE, as given by the RABBINS.

1. Hillel the Babylonian.
2. Simeon his Son.
3. Gamaliel, Son of Simeon.
4. Simeon II. Son of Gamaliel.
5. Gamaliel II. Son of Simeon.
6. Simeon III. Son of Simeon II.
7. Judah, Son of Simeon III.
8. Gamaliel III. Son of Judah.
9. Judah II. Son of Gamaliel III.
10. Hillel II. Son of Judah.
11. Judah III. Son of Hillel II.
12. Hillel III. Son of Judah.
13. Gamaliel IV. Son of Hillel.

David Ganz in his chronology intituled Tzemach David; (i. e. the offspring of David) reckons them thus:

1. Hillel the Babylonian.
2. Rabban Simeon his Son.
3. R. Gamaliel Ribbona.
4. R. Simeon, ſon of Gamaliel. This is probably the ſame who ought to be reckoned as the firſt patriarch, who was eſtabliſhed under the government of Adrian.
5. Rabban Gamaliel, Son of Simeon.
6. R. Jetruda, the Prince.
7. Hillel, the Prince, his Son.
8. Rabban Gamaliel the elder.
9. R. Simeon III.
10. R. Judah, Naſi, or the Prince.

PATROBAS, Πατρόβας, paternal, or that purſues the ſteps of his father; from the Greek πατὴρ, a father, and βαίνω, I go.

PATROBAS, a diſciple mentioned by St. Paul; Rom. xvi. 14, he was at Rome A. D. 58. No particulars of his life are come to our knowledge. The Greeks place his death Nov. 4, or 5. and make him biſhop of Pozzolo in Campania, in the kingdom of Naples. Origen thinks Patrobas lived with Aſyncritus, whom St. Paul ſalutes in the ſame verſe, Origen. in Rom.

PATROCLUS, Πατρόκλος, the glory of the father, or of his country; from the Greek πατὴρ, a father, and κλέως, glory. Father of Nicanor, 2 Macc. viii. 9.

PAU, פעו, Φαὺ, Φογὼ, that cries aloud; from פעה pahah: otherwiſe, that appears.

PAU, or Phau, a city of Edom, where dwelt king Hadar, Gen. xxxvi. 39.

PAUL, Παῦλος, ſmall, or little; paulus quaſi puſillus. His Hebrew name was Saul, demanded.

PAUL, originally named Saul; of the tribe of Benjamin, native of Tarſus in Cilicia, a Phariſee by ſect; firſt a perſecutor of the church, afterwards a diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt, and apoſtle of the Gentiles. It is thought he was born about two years before our Saviour, ſuppoſing he lived ſixty-eight years, as we read Chryſoſt. tom. vi. Hom. 30.

The Ebionites, ſays Epiphan. hæreſ. 30. cap. 16. related ſeveral particulars of the education, the family, and the converſion of St. Paul; but they do not deſerve inſertion. He was a Roman citizen, Acts xxii. 27, 28. becauſe Auguſtus had given the freedom of Rome to all the freemen of Tarſus, in conſideration of their firm adherence to his intereſts. His parents ſent him early to Jeruſalem, where he ſtudied the law at the feet of Gamaliel, a famous Doctor, Acts xxii. 3. He made very great progreſs in his ſtudies, and his life was always blameleſs before men; being very zealous for the full obſervation of the law of Moſes. His zeal perſecuted Jeſus Chriſt in his members, 1 Tim. i. 13. and when the protomartyr St. Stephen was ſtoned, Saul was not only conſenting to his death, but he even ſtood by, and took care of the cloaths of thoſe who ſtoned him, Acts vii. 58, 59. This happened A. D. 33. ſome time after our Saviour's death.

At the time of the perſecution againſt the church, after the death of Stephen, Saul was one who ſhewed moſt violence in diſtreſſing the believers, Gal. i. 13. Acts xxvi. 11. He entered into their houſes, and forcibly ſeized both men and women, and ſent them to priſon, Acts viii. 3. xxii. 4. In the ſynagogues he cauſed thoſe to be beaten who believed in Jeſus Chriſt, compelling them to blaſpheme the name of the Lord. Having received credentials from the high-prieſt Caiaphas, and the elders of the Jews, to the chief Jews of Damaſcus, with power to bring to Jeruſalem all the Chriſtians he ſhould find there, he departed, full of threats, and breathing out ſlaughter. But, being on the road, and near to Damaſcus, ſuddenly about noon a great light from heaven encompaſſed him and all his company. This ſplendor ſtruck them to the ground, and Saul heard a voice ſaying to him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Saul anſwered, Who art thou, Lord? the Lord replied, I am Jeſus of Nazareth whom thou perſecuteſt; it is hard for thee to kick againſt the pricks. Saul in conſternation aſked, Lord what is it that thou wouldeſt have me to do? Jeſus bid him go to Damaſcus, where he ſhould learn his will.

Saul, now, though his eye-lids were open, yet he could not ſee; but his companions led him by the hand to Damaſcus, where he continued three days without ſight, and without nouriſhment. On the third day the Lord commanded a diſciple of his, Ananias, to find out Saul, to lay his hands on him, and to cure his blindneſs: which he did; then Saul was baptized, and filled with the Holy Ghoſt. He continued ſome days with the diſciples at Damaſcus, preaching in the ſynagogues, and proving that Jeſus was the Meſſiah.

Having preached ſome time at Damaſcus, he went into Arabia, Gal. i. 17. probably into the neighbourhood of Damaſcus, then under the government of Aretas, king of Arabia. After a little while, he returned to Damaſcus, and preached the goſpel. The Jews, unable to bear the progreſs of the goſpel here, reſolved to put him to death; and gained over the governor. But Saul eſcaped, by being let down over the wall in a baſket, Acts ix. 24, 25, 26, 27. A. D.

37, the third year after his arrival at Damaſcus. Coming to Jeruſalem to ſee St. Peter, the diſciples were fearful of intercourſe with him, not believing him to be a convert, Gal. i. 18. But, Barnabas having introduced him to the apoſtles, Saul related to them the manner of his converſion, &c. From Jeruſalem he went to Cæſarea of Paleſtine, and from thence into his own country, Tarſus in Cilicia.

Here he continued about five or ſix years, from A. D. 37 to 43; when Barnabas coming to Antioch by order of the apoſtles, and having found many Chriſtians there, he went to Tarſus to ſeek Saul, and brought him to Antioch, where they continued a whole year, Acts xi. 20, 25, 26. During this time there happened a great famine in Judæa, and the Chriſtians of Antioch having made collections to aſſiſt their brethren at Jeruſalem, they deputed thither Paul and Barnabas with their offering, A. D. 44. Having acquitted themſelves of their commiſſion, they returned to Antioch. Shortly after, God warned them by his prophets in this church, that he had appointed them to carry his word into other places. Then the church, after faſting and praying, with the prophets Simeon, Lucius, and Manaen, laid their hands on them, and ſent them to preach whither the Holy Ghoſt ſhould conduct them. Probably about this time, A. D. 44. Paul being enraptured up into the third heaven, ſaw ineffable things, 2 Cor. xii. 2, 3, 4.

Saul and Barnabas went firſt into Cyprus, preaching in the ſynagogues of the Jews. At Paphos, A. D. 45, they found a Jewiſh magician called Bar-jeſus, with the proconſul Sergius Paulus. Bar-jeſus did all he could to hinder the proconſul from embracing the Chriſtian faith. As a puniſhment, Saul deprived him of his ſight for a time, and the proconſul having ſeen this miracle, became a convert. Many think that St. Paul received the name of Paul, (which St. Luke always gives him afterwards) in memory of this converſion of Sergius Paulus: Aſterius, homil. 8. believes he changed his name at his converſion, in Damaſcus. St. Chryſoſtom, (homil. 28. in Acta. Ita Theodoret. Theophyl. Œcumen. in Rom. i.) at his ordination, and when he received his miſſion at Antioch. Others ſay (Aug. ſerm. 315, cap. 5. Grot. Fromond.) he took the name of Paul, which is a Latin name, only when he began to preach to the Gentiles, and eſpecially to the Romans. Laſtly, many think that he always went by both names, Saul, and Paul, like many other Jews; who had one name in Hebrew, and another in Greek, or Latin. But if this were ſo, how comes it that neither St. Paul himſelf, nor St. Luke, nor any other author, has called him Saul after the converſion of Sergius Paulus?

From Cyprus St. Paul and his company went to Perga in Pamphylia, where John Mark, Barnabas's couſin, left them to return to Jeruſalem. Making no ſtop at Perga, they came to Antioch in Piſidia, where, being deſired to ſpeak in the ſynagogue, St. Paul in a long diſcourſe ſhewed that Jeſus was the Meſſiah foretold by the prophets; and that he roſe again the third day. He was deſired to diſcourſe again on the ſame ſubject the next ſabbath-day, when almoſt all the city came together to hear. The Jews ſeeing this concourſe, and moved with envy, oppoſed what St. Paul ſaid. Then ſaid Paul and Barnabas boldly: "We turn to the Gentiles."

The Jews unable to bear this happy progreſs of the goſpel, drove away Paul and Barnabas from thence, who went to Iconium: preached in their ſynagogue, converted a great number both of Jews and Gentiles, and God confirmed their miſſion by many miracles. In the mean time the Jews having incenſed the Gentiles againſt Paul and Barnabas, and threatening to ſtone them, they retired to Lyſtra and Derbe, cities of Lycaonia.

At Lyſtra was a man called Æneas, crippled in his feet from his mother's womb. This man the apoſtle bid to riſe and ſtand upon his feet. The people ſeeing this miracle, cried out, that the gods were deſcended among them in human ſhape. They would have offered ſacrifices to them; but Paul and Barnabas with much ado reſtrained them.

Some Jews of Antioch in Piſidia and of Iconium, coming to Lyſtra, animated the people againſt the apoſtles, who ſtoned Paul, and drew him out of the city, thinking him to be dead. But the diſciples gathering about him, he roſe up, and the next day went for Derbe. Having here alſo preached the goſpel, they returned to Lyſtra, to Iconium, and to Antioch of Piſidia; to Pamphylia, and Perga, thence they went down into Attalia, and ſailed for Antioch in Syria, from whence they had departed a year before. They aſſembled the church, and related the great things God had done by their means.

St. Luke omits the actions of St. Paul from A. D. 45, to the time of the council at Jeruſalem, A. D. 50. There is great likelihood, that during this interval St. Paul preached from Jeruſalem to Illyricum, as he informs us, Rom. xv. 19. 20. without making any ſtay in places where others had preached before him. He ſays in general, that he had ſuffered more labours than any other apoſtle, and had endured more

priſons: was often very near death, ſometimes on the water, ſometimes among thieves: ſometimes from the Jews, and ſometimes from falſe brethren and perverſe Chriſtians; he was expoſed to great hazards, as well in cities as in deſarts. He ſuffered hunger, thirſt, nakedneſs, cold, faſtings, watchings, and the fatigues inſeparable from long journies, undertaken without any proſpect of human ſuccour, in this very different from the good fortune of others who lived by the goſpel, and who received ſubſiſtence from thoſe to whom they preached it. He made it a point of honour to preach gratis, working with his hands, that he might not be chargeable to any; he having learned a trade, (as was uſual among the Jews) which was, to make tents of leather, for the uſe of ſoldiers.

During this courſe of preaching, he five times received from the Jews thirty-nine ſtripes: was twice beaten with rods by the Romans; thrice ſuffered ſhipwreck, and had paſſed a night and a day in the deep. This is differently interpreted. Some think that he was actually a night and a day at the bottom of the ſea, God having there miraculouſly preſerved him, as heretofore Jonah. Others, that he was hid for a night and a day at the bottom of a well, after his danger at Lyſtra, where he had been ſtoned. Others, that at Cyzicus he was put into a priſon called Bythos, or the Deep; for this is the term uſed by St. Paul, without adding ſea to it, as in the Vulgate. But the greater part of the fathers, as St. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, Œcumenius, Ambroſiaſter, Thomas, and ſeveral moderns, explain it by ſaying, that after a ſhipwreck St. Paul was a day and a night in the ſea ſtruggling againſt the waves; and this ſeems the moſt reaſonable opinion. The Greek word Buthos, when put by itſelf is commonly taken for the bottom of the ſea, or for the open ſea. St. Paul had ſuffered all this before A. D. 58, when he wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians. 2 Cor. xi. 25.

St. Paul and St. Barnabas were at Antioch, when ſome perſons coming from Judæa, pretended to teach, that there was no ſalvation without circumciſion, and other legal ceremonies. Epiphanius and Philaſter ſay, that he who maintained this was Cerinthus. Paul and Barnabas withſtood theſe new doctors, and it was agreed to ſend a deputation to Jeruſalem, about this queſtion. Paul and Barnabas were deputed, and at Jeruſalem they reported to the apoſtles the ſubject of their miſſion. Some of the Phariſees who had embraced the faith aſſerted, that the converted Gentiles ought to receive circumciſion, and the law. But after conſultation it was decreed, that the Gentiles ſhould only avoid idolatry, fornication, and the eating of things ſtrangled, and blood.

Being returned to Antioch the deputies aſſembled the faithful, read the decree, and comforted them. A. D. 51. Some time after St. Peter alſo coming to Antioch, lived with the converted Gentiles without ſcruple; but, ſome brethren coming thither from Jeruſalem, he ſeparated himſelf from the Gentiles. St. Paul publicly cenſured him for this conduct, which indeed was blameable, and might have been of dangerous conſequence, Galat. ii. 11—16.

St. Paul, in this journey to Jeruſalem, declared the doctrine he preached among the Gentiles; and diſcourſed of ſome points of it in private, in the preſence of Barnabas and Titus, with Peter, James, and John, who could find nothing amiſs in it. They ſaw with joy the grace that God had given him; and his appointment as apoſtle of the Gentiles.

After Paul and Barnabas had continued ſome time at Antioch, Paul propoſed to Barnabas, to viſit the cities where they had planted the goſpel. Barnabas conſented; but wiſhed to take John Mark with them. This was oppoſed by St. Paul, and cauſed a ſeparation between them. Barnabas and John Mark went together to Cyprus, and St. Paul taking Silas, they croſſed over Syria and Cilicia, and came to Derbe, and afterwards to Lyſtra. Here they found a diſciple called Timothy, the ſon of a Jewiſh mother, but of a Gentile father, whom St. Paul took with him, and circumciſed him, that he might not offend the Jews. They went over the provinces of Lycaonia, Phrygia, and Galatia, to Myſia, and coming to Troas, St. Paul had here a viſion in the night. A man habited like a Macedonian intreated him to paſs over into Macedonia.

Embarking therefore at Troas they ſailed to Neapolis, a city of Macedonia, near the frontiers of Thrace, and came to Philippi, where they found ſome religious women, among whom was Lydia. Another day they happened to meet with a maid-ſervant, who was poſſeſſed with a ſpirit of Python; Paul, turning towards her, ſaid to the ſpirit, I command thee in the name of Jeſus Chriſt to come out of her; upon which it immediately left her. But the maſters of the ſervant, who made great profit by her, accuſed Paul and Silas before the magiſtrates, who ordered them to be whipped with rods, and ſent them to priſon.

Towards midnight, as Paul and Silas were ſinging hymns to God, there was a great earthquake, the foundations of the priſon were ſhaken, all the the doors flew open, and the fetters of the priſoners burſt. The gaoler awaked, and ſeeing all this, drew his ſword with intention to kill himſelf: but Paul cried out to him to do himſelf no miſchief, for they were all ſafe. The gaoler then brought out Paul and Silas, aſking them, what he muſt do to be ſaved? Paul and Silas inſtructing him and his family, baptized them. In the morning the magiſtrates ſent to releaſe his priſoners; but Paul refuſed, ſaying, after they have publicly whipped us, being Roman citizens, they ſhall come themſelves and fetch us out: which, the magiſtrates hearing they were Roman citizens, did. Paul and Silas went firſt to Lydia, and comforted the brethren, then they departed from Philippi.

Paſſing through Amphipolis and Apollonia, they came to Theſſalonica the capital of Macedonia, where the Jews had a ſynagogue. Paul, according to his cuſtom, there preached the goſpel, three ſabbath-days ſucceſſively. Several believed in Jeſus Chriſt, but the greater part of the Jews raiſed a tumult in the city. The night following the brethren conducted Paul and Silas towards Berea, where many were converted.

The Jews of Theſſalonica being informed that Paul and Silas were at Berea, came thither and animated the mob againſt them; ſo that St. Paul was forced to withdraw; and went to Athens.

Diſputing with the Athenian philoſophers, they brought him before the Areopagus, where he made his defence; meaning to inſtruct them reſpecting the "Unknown God." A few embraced the faith at Athens. Vide ALTAR; ATHENS.

St. Timothy came from Berea to Athens, according to the requeſt of St. Paul, and informed him of the perſecution which afflicted the Chriſtians of Theſſalonica. This obliged the apoſtle to ſend him into Macedonia, that he might comfort them. After this St. Paul went to Corinth, where he lodged with one Aquila a Jew, a tent-maker; and with him St. Paul worked, as being of the ſame trade. Here he made ſeveral converts, and baptized Stephanus and his houſe, with Criſpus and Gaius, 1 Cor. i. 14, 16, 17. xvi. 15. Silas and Timothy came to Corinth, Acts xviii. 5. 1 Theſſal. iii. 6, 9. A. D. 52. and brought him great comfort, acquainting him with the good ſtate of the faithful of Theſſalonica. Shortly after he wrote his firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, which is the firſt Epiſtle he wrote, A. D. 52.

The ſecond Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians was written not long after the firſt. St. Paul, encouraged by the preſence of Silas and Timothy, proſecuted the work of his miniſtry with new ardour; but the Jews oppoſing him, with blaſphemous and opprobrious words, he ſhook his clothes at them, and ſaid, Your blood be upon your own head. From henceforth I go to the Gentiles. He then quitted the houſe of Aquila, and went to lodge with one Titus Juſtus, who was originally a Gentile, but one that feared God. In the mean time the Lord encouraged him by a viſion, and told him, that he had much people in Corinth. He continued here eight months.

Gallio the proconſul of Achaia being at Corinth, the Jews of Corinth brought Paul to his tribunal; but Gallio would not meddle with diſputes that were foreign from his office. Paul at laſt ſailed for Jeruſalem, to be preſent at the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. Before he went on ſhip-board he cut off his hair at Cenchrea, a port of Corinth, becauſe he had compleated a vow of Nazariteſhip. He arrived at Epheſus with Aquila and Priſcilla, from whence he went to Cæſarea of Paleſtine, and to Jeruſalem. Having performed his devotions, he came to Antioch, and made a progreſs through the churches of Galatia and Phrygia. He returned to Epheſus, where he abode three years; from A. D. 54 to 57. Acts xix. 1, 2, 3, &c.

St. Paul found at Epheſus ſome diſciples who had been initiated by Apollos, with the baptiſm of John the Baptiſt. St. Paul inſtructed them, baptized them with the baptiſm of Jeſus Chriſt, and laying his hands on them, they received the Holy Ghoſt, &c. He taught daily in the ſchool of one Tyrannus: he did not omit by day or night to viſit private houſes, to confirm believers, and to convince unbelievers; working with his hands, that he might not be burthenſome. He did there ſeveral miracles: he alſo ſuffered much there, and informs us, that after the manner of men he fought with beaſts at Epheſus, i. e. he was expoſed to wild beaſts in the amphitheatre; ſo that it was expected he ſhould have been devoured by them, had not God miraculouſly delivered him. [or, he maintained a conflict againſt men as ſavage as beaſts.]

Some are of opinion, that this fight mentioned was that of Demetrius the ſilverſmith and his companions; but this opinion cannot be ſupported, ſince his firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, wherein this fight is mentioned, was written before that ſedition. St. Jerome by theſe beaſts underſtands the demons, who raiſed up an infinite number of enemies againſt St. Paul.

But the moſt natural ſenſe of the text is, that he was expoſed to beaſts at Epheſus, and was delivered from them by miracle. This was the opinion opinion of St. Chryſoſtom, of Theodoret, of Ambroſiaſter, of St. Cypian, Ep. 6. of St. Hilary, in Auxent. p. 121. and of moſt modern commentators. Nicephorus, Hiſt. Eccleſ. lib. ii. cap. 25. quotes the apocryphal book of the Travels of St. Paul, which implies, that Jerome governor of Epheſus condemned the apoſtle to be expoſed to wild beaſts. Being in priſon, he was viſited in the night by two women called Tabula and Artemilla, who required baptiſm of him. He freed himſelf from his bonds, went out of priſon as far as the ſea-ſhore, where he baptized them; then returned to priſon, and put on his fetters again, without any one perceiving it. When he was expoſed in the theatre, they let looſe a lion at him, which went to him and lay down at his feet; and ſeveral other beaſts did in like manner. At the ſame time there fell ſuch a violent ſtorm of hail, that many preſent were killed by it, and Jerome himſelf was converted, and received baptiſm. The ancients have often ſpoken of an apocryphal book of the Travels of St. Paul; but we cannot rely on it.

During his abode at Epheſus he wrote his Epiſtle to the Galatians, about A. D. 56. He wrote it all with his own hand, whereas his cuſtom was to uſe an amanuenſis in writing. Gal. vi. 11.

After this St. Paul purpoſed, in obedience to the Holy Ghoſt, to paſs through Macedonia and Achaia, and to go to Jeruſalem, ſaying, he muſt alſo ſee Rome. Having ſent Timothy and Eraſtus into Macedonia, he tarried ſome time in Aſia. During this time he received intelligence of troubles in the church of Corinth, of diviſions among them, and abuſes. Upon this he wrote his firſt Epiſtle, in which he reproves the Corinthians, and reads them excellent leſſons for the reforming of their manners. This letter was written at Epheſus, and ſent to the Corinthians by Stephanas, Fortunatus, and Achaicus.

Before St. Paul left Epheſus, the way of the Lord was diſturbed by a ſedition raiſed by Demetrius the ſilverſmith, whoſe chief trade conſiſted in making little models of the temple of Diana at Epheſus. Demetrius tampered with the other workmen and ſilverſmiths. From the workmen the ſpirit of mutiny ſpread among the people, and preſently the whole city was in an uproar. They hurried to the theatre Gaius and Ariſtarchus, the Macedonians who had accompanied St. Paul in his journey. St. Paul would have preſented himſelf among them, but his friends diſſuaded him. The town-clerk with much ado appeaſed the tumult, and St. Paul taking leave of the diſciples, departed for Macedonia.

He took Timothy with him into Macedonia: Titus came thither to him, and acquainted him with the good effects of his letter among the Corinthians; this engaged him to write a ſecond letter to the Corinthians, which was ſent by Titus, to whom he joined a brother, whom the churches had aſſociated with him, to collect the alms of the faithful. Some think this brother was Silas, others Barnabas, and others St. Luke.

St. Paul having paſſed through Macedonia, came into Achaia, viſited the faithful of Corinth, and having received their alms, as he was upon the point of returning into Macedonia, he wrote his Epiſtle to the Romans. St. Paul had not yet been at Rome, but he promiſes to come to ſee them, and ſalutes many of the faithful of that church. The letter was dictated by St. Paul, and written by Tertius. It is thought it was carried by Phebe, deaconeſs of the church of Cenchrea; whom St. Paul recommends to the Romans.

At laſt he came into Macedonia, intending to be at Jeruſalem at the Pentecoſt. He ſtaid ſome time at Philippi, and there celebrated the paſſover. From hence he embarked and came to Troas, where he continued a week. On the firſt day of the week, the diſciples being aſſembled to break bread, St. Paul being to depart the day following, diſcourſed to them till midnight. During this time a young man called Eutychus happening to ſit in a window, overcome by ſleep, fell down from three ſtories high, and was killed by the fall. St. Paul came down to him, embraced him, and reſtored him to life. He went on foot as far as Aſſos, (otherwiſe Apollonia) and embarked at Mitylene:—from whence he came to Miletus, whither the biſhops, &c. of the church of Epheſus came to ſee him.

After having exhorted them, and having prayed with them, he went on board, and arrived ſafe at Tyre. At Cæſarea they found Philip the evangeliſt, who was one of the ſeven deacons. While St. Paul was here, the prophet Agabus arrived here alſo from Judæa; and having taken St. Paul's girdle, he bound his own hands and feet with it, ſaying, Thus ſhall the Jews of Jeruſalem bind the man who owns this girdle, and ſhall deliver him up to the Gentiles. See AGABUS.

At Jeruſalem the brethren received him with joy; and the day following he went to ſee St. James, at whoſe houſe Paul gave an account of what God had done among the Gentiles by his miniſtry. St. James informed him, that the converted Jews were ſtrangely prejudiced againſt him; and adviſed him to join himſelf to four men that are here, and who have had a vow of Nazariteſhip; and contribute to the charge of their purification, and purify yourſelf alſo, that you may offer with them the offerings and ſacrifices ordained for the purification of a Nazarite. See NAZARITE.

St. Paul followed this advice, and the next day went into the temple, where he declared to the prieſts, that in ſeven days theſe four Nazarites would compleat their vow of Nazariteſhip, and that he would contribute his ſhare of their charges. But, towards the end of theſe ſeven days, the Jews of Aſia obſerving him in the temple, moved the people againſt him, ſeized him, ſhut the gates of the temple, and would have killed him, had not Lyſias, the tribune of the Roman garriſon there, run and reſcued him. St. Paul being on the ſteps, deſired the tribune to ſuffer him to ſpeak to the people; the tribune permitted him, and St. Paul related the manner of his converſion, and his miſſion from God to preach to the Gentiles, At his mentioning the Gentiles, the Jews cried out; away with this wicked fellow out of the world, for he is not worthy to live!

The tribune brought him into the caſtle, and ordered that he ſhould be put to the queſtion by whipping; but being bound, he ſaid to the tribune; Is it lawful for you to whip a Roman citizen before you hear him? The tribune hearing this, cauſed him to be unbound, and aſſembling the prieſts and the chiefs of the Jews, he brought Paul before them, that he might know the occaſion of this tumult. Paul ſaid, Brethren, I have lived in all good conſcience before God until this day. At which words Ananias, ſon of Nebedeus, who was the chief-prieſt, ordered to give him a blow in the face. St. Paul replied to him, God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited wall; for ſitteſt thou to judge me after the law, and forgetting the duty of a judge, commandeſt me to be ſmitten contrary to the law? Thoſe preſent ſaid to him, Revileſt thou God's high-prieſt? St. Paul excuſed himſelf by ſaying, that he did not know he was the high-prieſt. Then, perceiving that part of the aſſembly were Sadducees, and part Phariſees, he cried out, Brethren I am a Phariſee, the ſon of a Phariſee; for the hope and reſurrection of the dead I am called in queſtion.

The aſſembly being divided in opinion, and the clamour increaſing, the tribune and the ſoldiers fetched him out of the aſſembly into the caſtle. The following night the Lord appeared to Paul, to encourage him. The next day more than forty Jews engaged themſelves by an oath, not to eat or drink till they had killed Paul. But St. Paul being informed of this conſpiracy by his ſiſter's ſon, acquainted the tribune with it, who gave orders that the night following he ſhould be ſent to Cæſarea, to Felix the governor.

Five days afterwards Ananias the high-prieſt, and ſome of the council, came to Cæſarea, bringing with them Tertullus an advocate to plead againſt Paul. St. Paul eaſily refuted all their calumnies: and Felix having heard theſe diſcourſes, put off the cauſe. Some days afterwards Felix and his wife Druſilla, who was a Jeweſs, being at Cæſarea, they made Paul come before them, to hear him. Paul ſpoke of juſtice, charity, and of the laſt judgment, in ſuch a manner that Felix was terrified at it, cut ſhort his diſcourſe, and referred him to a leiſure time. In hopes that St. Paul would purchaſe his liberty, he uſed him well; and had frequent converſations with him.

Two years thus paſſing away, Felix made way for his ſucceſſor Portius Feſtus; and being willing to oblige the Jews, he left Paul in priſon. Feſtus being come into his province, after three days went to Jeruſalem, whither the chief prieſts deſired him to ſend for Paul, having plotted to deſtroy him by the way: but Feſtus told them they might come to Cæſarea. Here the Jews accuſed him of ſeveral crimes, but Paul ſo well defended himſelf, that Feſtus could find nothing in him that deſerved puniſhment. He propoſed to him to go to Jeruſalem, and be tried there; but Paul anſwered, that he was now at the emperor's tribunal where he ought to be tried, and he appealed to Cæſar.

Some days after, king Agrippa and his queen Berenice coming to Cæſarea to ſalute Feſtus, the governor mentioned Paul, telling them he did not know what he was guilty of, nor how he ſhould repreſent his caſe to the emperor. Agrippa deſiring to hear him, Feſtus ſent for him on the morrow, and Paul related to Agrippa the manner of his converſion, on his journey to Damaſcus. He ſpoke to him of Jeſus Chriſt, and of his reſurrection. While he was enlarging on theſe things, Feſtus cried out, Paul, you are beſide yourſelf, overmuch learning diſtracts you. Paul replied, I am not diſtracted, moſt excellent Feſtus, but ſpeak the words of ſober truth. King Agrippa told Paul, you have almoſt perſuaded me to become a Chriſtian. I would to God, ſays Paul, that you and all, not only almoſt, but altogether, were ſuch as I am: except theſe bonds.

As it was reſolved to ſend Paul into Italy, he was taken on board a ſhip of Adramyttium, for Myra in Lycia, where, having found a ſhip bound for Italy, they ſailed. But the ſeaſon being far advanced, (for it was at leaſt the latter end of September) and the wind proving contrary, they arrived with difficulty enough at the Fair-havens, in Crete. St. Paul adviſed them to winter here, but others preferred Phenice, another harbour of the ſame iſland. As they were going thither, the wind drove them upon a little iſland called Clauda, where the mariners fearing to ſtrike upon ſome ſand bank, they lowered their maſt, and lay at the mercy of the waves. Three days afterward they threw over-board the tackling of the ſhip. Neither the ſun or ſtars appeared for fourteen days. In this extreme danger an angel aſſured St. Paul, that God had given him the lives of all who were in the ſhip with him, being two hundred and ſeventy-ſix perſons. On the fourteenth night the ſeamen thought by their ſounding they approached land. They were attempting to ſave themſelves in the boat; but St. Paul told the centurion and the ſoldiers, that except the ſailors continued in the ſhip, the lives of the paſſengers could not be ſaved.

About day-break St. Paul perſuaded them to take nouriſhment, aſſuring them that not a hair of their heads ſhould periſh; and after his example they took food. The ſoldiers fearing leſt any of the priſoners ſhould eſcape by ſwimming, were for putting them all to the ſword: But the centurion would not ſuffer that, being willing to ſave Paul; and all of them came ſafe to ſhore. The iſland was called Malta, and the inhabitants received them with great humanity, Acts xxviii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Being all very wet and cold, a great fire was lighted to dry them; and Paul having gathered a handful of ſticks, and put them on the fire, a viper ſprung out of the fire, and ſeized his hand. The people ſaid, this man is ſurely a murderer, and divine vengeance ſtill purſues him. But Paul ſhaking off the viper into the fire, received no injury from it. The people ſeeing this, changed their opinion, and took him for a God. He cured the father of Publius, the chief man of the iſland, of a fever and bloody-flux. After which miracle all their ſick were healed. See MALTA.

At the end of three months they embarked again, and arrived, firſt at Syracuſe, then at Rhegium, and laſtly at Puteoli. Here St. Paul found ſome Chriſtians, who detained him ſeven days; then he ſet out for Rome. The Roman Chriſtians having been informed of St. Paul's arrival, came to meet him as far as Appii-Forum, and the Three Taverns. At Rome he was allowed to dwell where he pleaſed, having a ſoldier to guard him, joined to him with a chain. Three days after his arrival St. Paul deſired to ſee the chief of the Jews. A day was appointed, and St. Paul preached to them the kingdom of God, endeavouring to convince them from Moſes and the prophets, that Jeſus was the Meſſiah. Some believed, and others diſbelieved.

Paul dwelt two whole years at Rome, in a hired lodging, where he received all that came to him, preaching the kingdom of God, and the religion of Jeſus Chriſt, without interruption. His captivity contributed to the advancement of religion, and he converted ſeveral perſons even of the emperor's court. Philip. i. 12, 14, 18. iv. 22. It has been ſaid, he even had a correſpondence by letters with Seneca, but the letters now extant are rejected by every body, as utterly unworthy either of the writers: and manifeſt impoſtures.

The Chriſtians of Philippi in Macedonia ſent Epaphroditus their biſhop with money, and other aſſiſtance in their name, Phil. ii. 25. iv. 18. Epaphroditus fell ſick at Rome, and when he went back to Macedonia, the apoſtle ſent by him a letter to the Philippians, in which he thanks them for their ſeaſonable relief, &c.

Oneſimus, the ſlave of Philemon, having run away from his maſter at Coloſſæ in Phrygia, came to Rome, found out St. Paul, and was very ſerviceable to him. St. Paul converted him, and ſent him back to his maſter Philemon with a letter, about A. D. 62. See ONESIMUS and PHILEMON. He alſo ſent a letter by him to the believers, in the city of Coloſſæ. St. Paul had not preached in that city, and was not perſonally acquainted with the faithful there; but he had been informed by Epaphras, who was then a priſoner at Rome with him, in what manner they had received the word.

It is not known by what means St. Paul was delivered from priſon; there is great probability, that the Jews durſt not proſecute him before the emperor. It is certain, that he was ſet at liberty A. D. 63. He was ſtill in this city, or at leaſt in Italy, when he wrote his Epiſtle to the Hebrews, A. D. 63.

Very many difficulties have been ſtarted on this Epiſtle. It has been attributed to Clement, to Luke, to Mark, to Barnabas, to Apollos, to another Paul, but it has been generally aſcribed to Paul the apoſtle of the Gentiles. It has been diſputed in what language it was wrote, whether Greek or Hebrew. Some have thought that it was firſt wrote in Hebrew by St. Paul, and then tranſlated into Greek by St. Clement, or ſome other. Others, that the original of this Epiſtle was the Syriac, ſtill extant. It is pretty well agreed, that it was wrote before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; but the time when, and the place where, where, are circumſtances not agreed on. He ſpeaks of the brethren of Italy, Heb. xiii. 24. but it is unknown whether it was compoſed at Rome, while St. Paul was in bonds, or after he was at liberty, in ſome other city of Italy. Laſtly, there has been a long diſpute about the authenticity of this epiſtle. The Arians maintained it was not St. Paul's; the Marcionites pretended it was corrupted; the Greeks have long received it as canonical; but the Latins heſitated for ſeveral ages.

St. Paul being out of priſon, went over Italy, and according to ſome of the fathers, paſſed into Spain, then into Judæa, went to Epheſus, where he left Timothy, preached in Crete, and there fixed Titus. Probably he alſo viſited the Philippians, according to his promiſe, Phil. ii. 24. i. 25, 26. And it is believed, that from Macedonia he wrote his firſt Epiſtle to Timothy, about A. D. 64.

Some time after he wrote to Titus, in Crete. He deſires him to come to him at Nicopolis, from whence probably he ſent this letter A. D. 64. The year following he went into Aſia, and at Troas he left a cloak and ſome books, with Carpus, his hoſt. Thence he went to viſit Timothy at Epheſus, then to Miletum, where he left Trophimus ſick, 2 Tim. iv. 20. Laſtly, he went again to Rome, where the fathers believe, that God had revealed to him he ſhould ſuffer martyrdom. He arrived here A. D. 65.

St. Chryſoſtom ſays, it was reported that St. Paul going to ſee a cup-bearer and a concubine of Nero, he made a convert of the concubine. This ſo provoked Nero, who was very fond of her, that he put St. Paul in priſon. The apoſtle tells us, in 2 Tim. iv. 16. that at his firſt appearance he was forſaken by all. In his priſon he was much aſſiſted by Oneſiphorus, who found him, at laſt, after much inquiry. In this priſon he wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy, which St. Chryſoſtom, 2 Tim. homil. 9. regards as the apoſtle's laſt Teſtament. This epiſtle is perhaps the moſt ſublime and moſt difficult of all thoſe written by St. Paul.

This great apoſtle at laſt conſummated his martyrdom, June 29, A. D. 66. He was beheaded at a place called the Salvian Waters. Some have ſaid, that his head ſpouted out milk inſtead of blood, and that this miracle converted the executioner and two others; but this has no ſanction from antiquity. He was buried on the Oſtium way, a magnificent church was afterwards built over his tomb, which is ſtill in being.

Beſides the fourteen Epiſtles of St. Paul, which we have mentioned in the courſe of his hiſtory, Clemens Alexandrinus, lib. vi, quotes ſeveral of his diſcourſes, which are not now extant. We have ſeen that it was ſuppoſed he had correſponded with Seneca. There is alſo extant a ſpurious Epiſtle of Paul to the Laodiceans. It has been pretended alſo, that he wrote a third Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, a third to the Corinthians, and a ſecond to the Epheſians. There are aſcribed to him an apocalypſe and a goſpel, which were condemned by pope Gelaſius. The Simoneans had compoſed a book, called, The Preaching of St. Paul; and a prieſt of Aſia compoſed the Voyages of St. Paul, and of St. Thecla. But, being convicted of this impoſture, he was deprived of his prieſthood by the apoſtle John. Tertul. Lib. de Baptiſmo, cap. 17. Hieronym. de Viris illuſtr. in Paulo.

PEACE, pax. This word is uſed in Scripture in different ſenſes. Generally, for quiet and tranquillity, public or private; but often, for proſperity and happineſs of life, To go in peace, to die in peace. God give you peace. Peace be within this houſe. Pray for the peace of Jeruſalem, i. e. wiſh it all ſorts of happineſs and proſperity. Is it peace? i. e. Is all well? The juſt in the other life are in peace; they enjoy a perfect tranquillity, and wait in peace for their happy change. St. Paul in the titles of his Epiſtles generally wiſhes grace and peace to the faithful, to whom he writes. Jeſus Chriſt recommends to his diſciples, to have peace with all men, and with each other. God promiſes his people to water them as with a river of peace, Iſai. lxvi. 12. and to make with them a covenant of peace. Ezek. Theſe expreſſions are very intelligible.

PEACOCK, pavo, in Hebrew, תכיים Tuchiim. 1 Kings x. 22. Interpreters are pretty well agreed about the ſignification of this word. The Septuagint have not expreſſed it in their tranſlation. Some underſtand by Tuchiim, apes or monkeys. The fleet of Solomon that went to Ophir brought a great number of peacocks, whether from Ophir itſelf, or from any other place on their return is uncertain.

The peacock is a tame fowl well known: valuable for the beauty of its plumage. It has a very long tail, diverſified with ſeveral colours, and adorned with marks at equal diſtances in the form of eyes. It has a little tuft or crown on its head. It wings are mixed with azure and gold-colour. Its cry is very ſhrill and diſagreeable. It is ſaid to have the head of a ſerpent, the train of an angel, and the voice of a devil. Its feet are ugly. It frequently makes a turn, eſpecially in ſpring, to admire its tail, the ſplendor of which is increaſed by the light, which does not only ſet off its colours, but alſo multiplies them. It is ſaid the fleſh of the peacock is not apt to corrupt.

PEARL. The Arabians, Perſians, and Turks uſe the word Merovarid to ſignify pearls. The word Margarites, or Margarita, uſed by the Greeks and Latins, ſeems to be derived from thence. The fineſt pearls are fiſhed up in the Perſian gulph, and on the coaſt of Bahrein, ſo called from the city of that name, on the borders of Arabia. Idumæa and Paleſtine being not far from this ſea, it is not to be wondered at that pearls were well known to Job, and the Hebrews. Since that time they have been found in other places; and many are now brought from America. They are ſometimes found alſo in common oyſters. Pearls, that have been long worn, turn yellow, and moulder away. It is an ancient error, that pearls are formed of the dew, and that they are ſoft in the ſea.

As to the paſſages of Scripture, wherein pearls are ſpoken of, Job ſays, xxviii. 18. No mention ſhall be made of coral, or of pearls, for the price of wiſdom is above rubies. [PENINIM] Solomon has nothing finer or more precious than pearls, by which to extol the value of wiſdom, Prov. iii. 15. viii. 11. xx. 15. He uſes the ſimile of pearls three times, to expreſs his eſteem for wiſdom; and ſays, Prov. xxxi. 10. that a good woman comes from as far, and is as hard to find, and of as great value, as pearls. Jeremiah, ſpeaking of the Nazarites of Jeruſalem, ſays, that they were more ruddy than pearls, Lam. iv. 7. אדמו עצם מפנינים. [The Engliſh tranſlation has rubies.] Pearls are not commonly ruddy; but we have obſerved, that Oriental pearls incline to carnation; which is exactly what the prophet intended, by commending the vermilion complexion and wholſome faces of the Nazarites. Jeſus Chriſt forbids his apoſtles to caſt their pearls before ſwine, Matth. vii. 6. i. e. Expoſe not the ſacred truths and myſteries of religion to the raillery of prophane libertines and hardened atheiſts. The author of Eccleſiaſticus means the ſame thing, when he adviſes us not to ſpeak when we find the perſons we ſpeak to are not diſpoſed to hear, Eccluſ. xxxii. 6, The Hebrews call pearls Peninim, the Greeks Margaritæ, the Latins Unio, Margarita, or Perula. Peninim is mentioned Job xxviii. 18. Prov. iii. 15. viii. 2. xx. 15. xxxi. 10. Lament. iv. 7. where the Seventy and the Vulgate tranſlate it by precious ſtones, or things hid, or ivory. [Our Engliſh verſion always tranſlates it it by rubies.] But certainly Peninim ſignifies pearls; and the word Pinna, which ſtands for the ſhell-fiſh that produces them, is probably derived from Peninim. Pearls grow in the ſea, in the ſhells of fiſhes; and precious ſtones are found in mines. Theſe things are of very different natures, yet are often confounded.

PECTORAL, rational, Gr. or breaſt-plate of judgment. This was a piece of embroidery about ten inches ſquare, Exod. xxviii. 15, 16, 17, 18. [זרת is the half cubit, Ezek. xliii. 13, 17.] of very rich work, which the high-prieſt of the Jews wore on his breaſt; it was ſet with four rows of precious ſtones, on each of which was engraved the name of a tribe of Iſrael. This breaſt-plate was double, or made of two pieces, a front and a lining, forming a kind of purſe, or bag, in which, according to the Rabbins, the Urim and Thummim was incloſed. This piece of the high-prieſt's dreſs was named the breaſt-plate of judgment, probably, becauſe by it was diſcovered the judgment and the will of God; or, becauſe the high-prieſt who wore it was the fountain of juſtice, and put on this ornament when he exerciſed his judicial capacity in matters of great conſequence, which concerned the whole nation.

The Hebrew Exod. xxv. 7. xxviii. 28. has חשן Choſhen. LXX. Λόγιον, the oracle, or λογειον. Exod. xxviii. 15, 29, 30. חשן המשפט λόγιον τῆς κρίσεως, the oracle of judgment. Sometimes the LXX. alſo tranſlate חשן by ποδήρης, tunica, talaris, and by περισκήθιον, pectorale, and St. Jerom by Rationale, or Rationale judicii. The literal ſignification of Choſhen is not well known. It is generally derived from the Arabic Caſan, which ſignifies rough, rugged, thick, as this pectoral was, with the rows of ſtones which adorned it. See EPHOD, and URIM and THUMMIM.

PEDAGOGUE, Παιδαγογός, he that leads a child to ſchool; from the Greek παίς, a child, and ἄγω, I conduct.

PEDAGOGUE. This word now carries with it an idea approaching to contempt; for if we ſay a pedagogue, with no other word to qualify it, it expreſſes a pedant, who aſſumes an air of authority over others, which does not belong to him; but among the ancients a pedagogue was a perſon to whom they committed the care of their children, to lead them, to obſerve them, and to inſtruct them in their firſt rudiments: Thus the office of a pedagogue nearly anſwered to that of a governor or tutor, who conſtantly attends his pupil, teaches him, and forms his manners.

St. Paul, 1 Cor. iv. 15. ſays; For though you have ten thouſand inſtructors (or pedagogues) in Chriſt, yet yet have ye not many fathers. Repreſenting himſelf as their father in the faith, ſince he had begot them in the goſpel. The pedagogue indeed may have ſome power and intereſt over his pupil, but he can never have the natural tenderneſs of a father.

To the Galatians St. Paul ſays, iii. 24, 25. the law was our ſchoolmaſter (or pedagogue) to bring us unto Chriſt. It pointed out Chriſt in the Scriptures, in the figures, in the prophecies, of the Old Teſtament: but ſince we are advanced to ſuperior learning, and are committed to the tuition of the faith which we have embraced, we have no longer need of a ſchoolmaſter or pedagogue; as ſuch are of no further uſe to young perſons, when advanced to years of maturity. But after that faith is come, we are no longer under a ſchoolmaſter, or pedagogue.

PEDAHZUR, פדה־צור, ſaviour, ſtrong and powerful, or ſtone of redemption; from פדה padah, to ſave, to redeem, and from צור tzur, fortreſs, ſtone, rock: otherwiſe, the redemption of that which is placed or ſet up; from padah, redemption, and צורה tſurah, placed or ſet up.

PEDAHZUR, or Phadaſſur, father of Gamaliel. Gamaliel was head of the tribe of Manaſſeh, at the Exodus, Numb. i. 10. ii. 20. vii. 54, 59. x. 23. He preſented to the tabernacle in the name of his tribe.

PEDAHEL, פדהאל, redemption of God; from פדה padah, to ſave, to redeem, and אל el, God.

PEDAHEL, or Phedael, ſon of Ammiud, of Naphtali, was one appointed by Moſes, to allot the Holy Land, Numb. xxxiv. 28.

PEDAIAH, פדיה, redemption of the Lord; from פדה padah, to redeem, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. PEDAIAH, or Phadaia, of the city of Rumah, father of Zebudah, the mother of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, 2 Kings xxiii. 36.

II. PEDAIAH, ſon of Jeconiah, king of Judah, father of Zerubbabel and Shimei, 1 Chron. iii. 18, 19.

III. PEDAIAH, ſon of Paroſh. Nehem. iii. 25. viii. 4.

PEKAH, פקח, Φακεὶ, Φακεαὶ, he that opens; from פקח pacach: otherwiſe, that opens the eye, or that is at liberty; from the ſame.

PEKAH, ſon of Remaliah, general of the army of Pekahiah, king of Iſrael. He conſpired againſt his maſter, 2 Kings xv. 25. A. M. 3245, ante A. D. 759. attacked him in the tower of his royal palace of Samaria (being ſeconded by Argob and Arieh, [perhaps Argob and Arieh may here ſignify the cities of Argob and Areopolis beyond Jordan, which were parties in the conſpiracy of Pekah.] and by fifty men of Gilead) he ſlew him and reigned in his place twenty years. He did evil before the Lord, and followed the wicked example of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin. Under the reign of Pekah, Tiglath-pileſſar, king of Aſſyria, came into the country of Iſrael, and took Ijon, Abel-beth-maachah, Janoah, Kedeſh, Hazor, Gilead, and all the country of Naphtali, and carried the inhabitants into Aſſyria. At laſt Hoſhea, the ſon of Elah, formed a conſpiracy againſt Pekah, ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead.

PEKAHIAH, פקחיה, πακεία, it is the Lord that opens; from פקח pacach, to open, and יה jah, the Lord.

PEKAHIAH, ſon and ſucceſſor of Menahem, king of Iſrael, 2 Kings xv. 22, 23. A. M. 3243, ante A. D. 761. reigned but two years. He did evil before the Lord, and followed the ſteps of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin. Pekah, the ſon of Remaliah, conſpired againſt him, and killed him in his own palace.

PELAIAH, פלאיה, Φαλαίας, miracle, or myſtery, or ſecret of the Lord: or the Lord is admirable; from פלא pala, a thing hidden, or wonderful, and יה jah, the Lord.

PELAIAH, or Phalaia, Nehem. viii. 7. x. 10. one of the principal Levites who returned from captivity, he ſigned the covenant that Nehemiah renewed with the Lord.

PELALIAH, פלליה, who thinks on the Lord, or who prays to the Lord: from פלל pillel, to judge, to pray, and יה jah, the Lord.

PELALIAH, or Phelelia, ſon of Amzi, father of Jeroham, of the family of Paſhur, ſon of Malchiah, of the race of the prieſts, Nehem. xi. 12.

PELATIAH, פלטיה, let the Lord deliver, or deliverance or flight of the Lord; from פלט palat, deliverace, flight, and יה jah, the Lord.

I. PELATIAH, Phaltias, or Phelti, ſon of Hananiah, and father of Iſhi, of Simeon. He ſubdued the Amalekites on mount Seir, 1 Chr. iv. 42. The time of this action is unknown.

II. PELATIAH, or Phelti, ſon of Benaiah, a prince of the people, who lived under Zedekiah, king of Judah, and oppoſed the advice given by Jeremiah, to ſubmit to Nebuchadnezzar. Ezekiel being a captive in Meſopotamia, had a viſion, chap. xi. 1, 2, &c. in which he ſaw twenty-five men at the door of the temple of Jeruſalem, among whom Jaazaniah, the ſon of Azur, and Pelatiah, the ſon of Benaiah, were the moſt remarkable. The Lord ſaid to him, Son of man, theſe are the men that have thoughts of iniquity, and who are forming pernicious deſigns againſt this city, &c. As he was prophecying in this manner, Pelatiah the ſon of Benaiah died.

PELEG, פלג, diviſion; from פלג pilleg, to cut, to divide.

PELEG, or Phaleg, ſon of Eber, born A. M. 1757, ante A. D. 2247. Scripture ſays his father named him Peleg, ſignifying diviſion, becauſe in his time the earth was divided; Gen. xi. 16. x. 25. whether Noah had begun to diſtribute the earth among his deſcendants, ſome years before the building of Babel; or that Peleg came into the world the ſame year that Babel was begun; or that Eber by a ſpirit of prophecy named his ſon Peleg ſome years before the Tower of Babel was begun. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XIX, page 37. What here perplexes interpreters is, 1. That Peleg was born not above one hundred years after the deluge. But it ſhould ſeem that the number of men was not then ſufficient for ſuch an undertaking as that of Babel. 2. Joktan, the brother of Peleg, had already thirteen ſons at the time of the diſperſion, after the confuſion of Babel. Peleg being born in the thirty-fourth year of Eber, Gen. xi. 16. it is impoſſible his brother Joktan ſhould have ſuch a number of children at the birth of Peleg. It ſeems therefore that he was not born at the time of the diſperſion. To this may be anſwered, that Moſes has enumerated the names of the thirteen ſons of Joktan, Gen. x. 26. by way of anticipation, though they were not born till after the confuſion of Babel: but as they poſſeſſed a very large country, it was convenient to notice, and to name them, among the other deſcendants of Noah, who participated the provinces of the Eaſt. However this were, at the age of thirty years Peleg begat Reu: and he died at the age of two hundred and thirty-nine.

PELET, פלט, that delivers, deliverance, or flight; from פלט palat.

PELET, or Phalleth, ſon of Azmaveth, a valiant man of David's army, who joined him at Ziklag, 1 Chron. xii. 3.

PELETH, פלת, Φαλατ, judgment; from פלל palal, to judge: otherwiſe, ruin; from מפלה maphalah, or from נפל naphal, to fall. פלת is its infinitive, which, in the Oriental languages, is uſed for a noun.

PELETH, or Pheleth, ſon of Pallu, of Reuben. Father to On and Jehiel, Numb. xvi. 1.

PELETHITES, פלתי, Φελτι, Φελετὶ, in Chaldee, thoſe that draw the bow, or ſlingers. In Hebrew, judges, or deſtroyers.

PELETHITES. The Pelethites and the Cherethites are famous under the reign of David, as the moſt valiant men of his army, and the guards of his perſon. They were originally Philiſtines, of Gath. Vide CHERETHITES.

The word Peletim ſeems to be formed from Philiſtim, and may ſignify men that break, ſeparate, &c. as Cherethim ſignifies men that deſtroy, or exterminate; denominations that exactly ſuit the Pelethites and Cherethites. Some think that under this name ſhould be underſtood the members of the great Sanhedrim. Others derive Pelethim from Pala, or Nipla, which ſignifies to do wonders, and they think theſe to have been prodigious, or miraculous men.

PELICAN, The author of the Commentary on the Pſalms, which bears the name of St. Jerom, in Pſalm cii. 6. ſays, there are two ſorts of pelicans: one lives on the water, and feeds on fiſh; the other keeps in deſarts and feeds on ſerpents and reptiles. Euſebius ſays, in Pſalm cii. that the pelican has a peculiar tenderneſs for its young. St. Auſtin, and Iſidore of Sevil, notice the ſame thing; they ſay the pelican draws blood from itſelf by ſtriking with its bill, and ſo by ſhedding it on its neſt brings the young to life. But theſe hiſtories may be placed among the errors of the old philoſophy. [The fact is, the pelican preſerves the fiſh it has caught, in a bag beneath its throat; from whence it caſts them forth for its young, by ſtriking this bag againſt its breaſt: this action ill obſerved, gave riſe to the idea, that the pelican fed its young with blood drawn from its breaſt.]

The Hebrew קאת, Kaath, from קאת Vomere, which the LXX. tranſlate Pelicanus, Pſal cii. 6. and Levit. xi. 18. is elſewhere tranſlated Mergulus, the diver, as Deut. xiv. 17. elſewhere by birds, as Iſai. xxxiv. 11. and elſewhere by lions, as Zeph. ii. 14. St. Jerome has tranſlated it Onocrotalus in Levit. xi. 18. Iſai. xxxiv. 11. and Zeph. ii. 14. Others, by this word underſtand the bittern, or the heron, or the ſwan, or the lapwing, or the cuckow. Bochart. de animal. ſacr. part. ii. lib. ii. cap. 24. thinks Kaath ſignifies the pelican, a water bird, which they ſay gorges its crop with ſhell-fiſh, and when they are opened by the heat of its crop, diſgorges them again, that it may have the fiſh to eat.

PELLA, a city beyond Jordan. Pliny places it in Decapolis, and commends it for its fine waters, lib. v. cap. 18. Stephanus places it in Cœle-Syria. There is nothing inconſiſtent in this, nor in what others affirm, that Pella was in Perea, in Batanea, in the country of Baſan, Epiphan. de hæreſ. lib. i. Perhaps alſo when Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 23, ſpeaks of Pella in the country of Moab, he means the city of which we are ſpeaking, which was ſituated in Perea, in Batanea, in the country of Baſan, which prophane authors ſometimes call Cœle-Syria, and in the country country which belonged to the Ammonites, the brethren and allies of the Moabites; unleſs he confounds Pella with Abila in the country of Moab, called by Moſes Abel-Shittim, Numb. xxxiii. 49. and by Joſephus Abila, Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 7. lib. v. cap. 1, de Bello, lib. v. cap. 3. As to the ſituation of Pella, it was between Jabeſh and Geraſa, ſix miles from Jabeſh, Euſeb. ad vocem Ἀριστώθ. It was alſo of the number of the ten cities known by geographers, as alſo in the goſpel, by the name of Decapolis. Matth. iv. 25. Mark. v. 20.

Joſephus relates, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 23. that under the reign of Alexander Jannæus, the Jews were maſters of Pella, and deſtroyed it becauſe the inhabitants would not embrace Judaiſm. The firſt Chriſtians having been forewarned by our Saviour, that Jeruſalem ſhould be demoliſhed, took refuge at Pella, Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 5. as ſoon as they ſaw the fire of war againſt the Romans kindled. Epiphanius ſays, de ponderib. & menſur. p. 171. that the diſciples were warned by the revelation of an angel to withdraw thither. This city belonged to the kingdom of Agrippa, who aſſiſted the Romans.

I ſuſpect that Pella takes its name from Abila, or Abela. There were more cities than one named Abila; but that I mean is called by geographers Abila of Batanea, and in Scripture Abel of the Vines. Polybius, Hiſt. lib. v. diſtinguiſhes Abila from Pella, ſince he ſays, that Antiochus the Great took Pella, Kamos, Gephros, Abila, Gadara, &c. Stephanus the geographer ſays, that the city of Pella had Alexander the Great for its founder, probably in memory of the city of Pella in Theſſaly, where he was born. Abila and Pella were afterwards epiſcopal cities of the ſecond Paleſtine. Joſephus ſays, de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 3. that Pella was one of the ſeven toparchies of Judæa; but elſewhere he calls it Betlephtepha, de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 4. and Pliny gives it the ſame name, lib. v. cap. 14. It is unknown where Betlephtepha was. The name of Pella is not in Scripture.

PELONITE, פלוני, δεῖνα, that falls; from נפל naphal: otherwiſe, that is concealed; from פלא pala. A pronoun put inſtead of a noun, expreſſing ſuch or ſuch an one, whoſe name is underſtood, and whom we are unwilling to name, Matth. xxvi. 18. The Greek expreſſes this by δεῖνα, quidam, a certain one.

PELONITE. Peloni or Pheloni was a city of Judæa, 1 Chron. xi. 36.

PELUSIM, סין, or Peluſium, Hebrew, ſin, buſh; from סנה ſene. Peluſium, in Greek ſignifies muddy; from πῆλος, lutum.

PELUSIUM, a city of Egypt, at the mouth of the eaſtern arm of the Nile, the neareſt to Paleſtine. Peluſium, otherwiſe Damietta, was, as it were, the key of Egypt, toward Phœnicia and Judæa. Ezekiel xxx. 15, 16. ſpeaks of it under the name of סין Sin, Lutum, Πηλῶν, Peluſium, and calls it the rampart, or ſtrength, of Egypt. The Hebrew word Sin, which ſignifies mud, anſwers to the Greek Peluſium, from Pelos, of the ſame ſignification. The Septuagint read Sais inſtead of Sin in this place. Scripture ſpeaks of the deſart of Sin, between Elim and Sinai, Exod. xvi. 1. Numb. xxxiii. 11.

Ezekiel pronounces againſt Peluſium. And I will pour my fury upon Sin, the ſtrength of Egypt, and will cut off the multitude of No. And I will ſet fire in Egypt, Sin ſhall have great pain, &c. It is thought theſe threats regarded the expedition of Nebuchadnezzar againſt this country. For the Lord had ſaid to Ezekiel, chap. xxix. 18, 19. Son of man, behold, I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar, king of Babylon, and he ſhall take her multitude, and take her ſpoil, and take her prey: and it ſhall be the wages for his army. Peluſium by its ſituation ſuffered the firſt efforts of the king of Babylon, and of the Chaldæan army.

Before Nebuchadnezzar's time Peluſium had been attacked by Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria. This prince attacked Sethon, otherwiſe Sevechus, king of Egypt, and beſieged Peluſium. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. x. cap. 1. Vid. Herodot. lib. ii. A. M. 3291, ante A. D. 709. Sethon was a prince void of prudence, and little capable of government: he had alienated the minds of his ſoldiers, and was forſaken by all who could defend him. Having addreſſed himſelf to Vulcan, whoſe prieſt he was, he was bid to advance to Peluſium, to meet Sennacherib, and God would ſend him aſſiſtance. He therefore put himſelf at the head of ſuch people as he could, and God ſent againſt Sennacherib's army a great multitude of rats, which in the night time gnawed the ſtrings of the bows, and the thongs of the bucklers, of the Aſſyrians, by which their arms became uſeleſs to them. This is what the Egyptians related. But the ſacred books of the Hebrews inform us, that an angel of the Lord, in one night, ſlew eighty-five thouſand men of Sennacherib's army, 2 Kings xix. 35.

We are aſſured, Polyæn. lib. vii. that Cambyſes, king of Perſia, invading Egypt, and reſolving to take Peluſium, he deviſed this ſtratagem. In an aſſault assault against the town, he placed a great number of cats, dogs, sheep, and such other animals as the Egyptians held sacred, in the front of his troops. Thus the soldiers that defended the city, being Egyptians, durst not throw their lances, or shoot their arrows, for fear of wounding any of those animals. By this mean Cambyses became master of the place.

PENIEL, פניאל, face, or vision of God: or that sees God; from פנה panah, to see, and אל el, God.

PENIEL, Phanuel, or Penuel, a city beyond Jordan, near the ford on the brook Jabbok. Jacob on his return from Mesopotamia, rested at the brook Jabbok; and very early the next morning, having sent all his people before, he remained alone, and an angel came and wrestled with him, till the day dawn. The angel blessed him in the same place, which Jacob from hence called Peniel, saying: I have seen God face to face, yet continue alive. Gen. xxxii. 30.

In after ages the Israelites built a city in this place, which was given to the tribe of Gad. Gideon returning from the pursuit of the Midianites, overthrew the Tower of Peniel, Judg. viii. 17. A. M. 2759, ante A. D. 1245. and slew the inhabitants, for having refused sustenance to him and his people, in a very insulting manner. Jeroboam the son of Nebat rebuilt the city of Peniel, 1 Kings xii. 25. A. M. 3030, ante A. D. 974. Josephus says, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 3. that this prince built himself a palace here.

PENINNAH, פנינה, Φενναvὲ, pearl, precious stone; from פנינים paninim: otherwise, his face; from פנים panim, the face, and the pronoun ה a his.

PENINNAH, or Phenenna, second wife of Elkanah, the father of Samuel, 1 Sam. i. 2, 3, &c. Peninnah had several children, but Hannah, afterwards mother of Samuel, was barren: Peninnah, instead of giving glory to God, the author of fruitfulness, was elevated with pride, and insulted Hannah. But the Lord having graciously visited Hannah, Peninnah was humbled; and some interpreters think, that God took her children from her, or at least that she ceased bearing after this time, according to the expression of Hannah; the barren hath born seven, and she that hath many children is waxed feeble.

PENTAPOLIS, Πεντάπολις, a country of five cities, Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar; From the Greek πέντε, five, and πόλις, a city.

PENTAPOLIS, Wisd. x. 6. Descendente igne in pentapolim. This name is given to the five cities, Sodom, Gomorrah, Admah, Zeboim, and Zoar. They were all five condemned to destruction, (but Lot interceded for Zoar, otherwise called Bala) they were consumed by fire from heaven, and the place where they had stood became the lake Asphaltites.

PENTATEUCH, Πεντάτευχος, the five books; from the Greek πέντε, five, and τεύχος, a volume.

PENTATEUCH. This word, derived from the Greek, signifies literally, the collection of the five instruments, or books, of Moses, i. e. Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy. See their proper Articles: See also MOSES: and the Commentators on the Pentateuch. The following are the arguments of some modern critics, who have disputed Moses's right to the Pentateuch.

1. We find in this work, say they, several things that agree neither to the age, nor character, of this legislator. The author speaks of Moses much to his advantage, Numb. xii. 3. Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth. He speaks always in the third person, The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, &c. Moses said unto Pharaoh, &c. Moses would never have spoke of himself in this manner, at least he would sometimes have expressed himself in the first person.
2. The author of the Pentateuch sometimes abridges his narration, like a writer who collected from ancient memoirs. Sometimes he interrupts the thread of his discourse; e. gr. he makes Lamech the bigamist to say, Gen. iv. 23. Hear my voice ye wives of Lamech, hearken unto my speech; for I have slain a man to my wounding, and a young man to my hurt: Without informing us beforehand, to whom this relates.
3. These observations for example, Gen. xii. 6. And the Canaanite was then in the land, cannot be reconciled to the age of Moses, since the Canaanites continued masters of Palestine all the time of Moses. The passage out of the book of the Wars of the Lord, quoted Numb. xxi. 14. seems to have been clapped in afterwards, as also the first verses of Deuteronomy.
4. The account of the death of Moses, at the end of the same book, certainly cannot belong to this legislator; and the same may be observed of other passages, wherein it is said, that the places mentioned lay beyond Jordan; that the bed of Og was at Ramah, to this day; that the havoth, or cities of Jair, were known to the author, though probably they had not that name till after Moses's time, Numb. xxxii. 41. Deut. iii. 14.

It is observed also in the Pentateuch, that some places are defective; in Exodus xii. 8. we see Moses speaking to Pharaoh, where the author omits omits the beginning of his diſcourſe. The Samaritan copy inſerts in this place what is wanting in the Hebrew. In other places the Samaritan adds what is deficient in the Hebrew text; and what it contains more than the Hebrew ſeems ſo well connected with the reſt of the diſcourſe, that it is difficult to ſeparate them. Laſtly, they believe they obſerve certain ſtrokes in the Pentateuch, which can hardly agree with Moſes, who was born and bred in Egypt; as what he ſays of the earthly paradiſe, of the rivers that watered it, and ran through it; of the cities of Babylon, Erech, Reſen, and Calneh; of the gold of Piſon, of the Bdellium, of the ſtone of Sohem, found in that country; theſe particulars obſerved with ſuch curioſity ſeem to prove, that the author of the Pentateuch lived beyond the Euphrates. Add what he ſays concerning the ark of Noah, of its conſtruction, of the place where it reſted, of the wood wherewith it was built, of the bitumen of Babylon, &c.

Theſe laſt obſervations have made ſome ſurmiſe, that the Levite ſent by Eſar-haddon to the Cuſhites who were ſettled in Samaria, 2 Kings xvii. 24, 27. might poſſibly have compoſed the Pentateuch, and that the Jews might have received it with ſome little variation from the Samaritans. Others have imagined that the Pentateuch, in its preſent condition, is the abridgment of a larger work, compoſed by public writers, to whom this truſt was committed in the republic of the Hebrews.

Not to undertake an examination of all theſe proofs, or to refute all the opinions on which they are founded; we ſhall content ourſelves with making three reflections.

Firſt, to diveſt Moſes of a poſſeſſion he has maintained for ſo many ages, as the author of the Pentateuch; a poſſeſſion ſupported by the joint teſtimony both of the ſynagogue and the church, of the ſacred writers of the Old and New Teſtament, of Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles; this certainly requires proofs beyond reply, evident demonſtrations. But it is plain that the objections are even below convincing arguments.

Secondly, the additions, the diſlocations, the confuſions, the omiſſions, which we cannot but allow therein, will not determine that Moſes was not the author of theſe books. They only prove that ſome amendments have been made, either by adding, or by expungiug. God has ſuffered that the ſacred books ſhould not be exempted from ſuch alterations, as proceed from the hands of copiers, or which are conſequences of great length of time. If a ſlight addition, or change, in the text of an author, be thought ſufficient to deprive him of his labours, what writer could remain in quiet poſſeſſion of his work even a ſingle century?

Thirdly, the conjectures of M. le Clerc and of F. Simon, about the author of the Pentateuch, have been ſo often confuted, that it is quite needleſs to touch that matter here. The prieſt, or Levite, ſent by Eſar-haddon to the Cuſhites, could not have compoſed the Pentateuch. It is quoted in works extant before his time. The law was in conſtant practice from Moſes to the captivity, conſequently it had been written. A copy of it was lodged in the ark, and was found in the days of king Joſiah. The Jews and Samaritans had too much averſion for each other, to communicate and adopt their ſacred writings. By comparing the Samaritan Pentateuch with that of the Jews, we may eaſily perceive that they are both derived from the ſame original; but not copied from one another. The Samaritans have preſerved the Hebrew Pentateuch written in the ancient Phœnician characters, which are the Hebrew characters uſed before the captivity of Babylon. See SAMARITAN. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCII, pages 5, 6, 7.

PENTECONTARCHUS, Πενταικόνταρχος, the chief of fifty; from πεντήκοντα, fifty, and ἄρχομαι, I command. 1 Macc. iii. 55.

PENTECOST, Πεντηκοςὴ, the fiftieth; from the Greek πεντέκοντα, fifty: ἡμέρα, day, is underſtood.

PENTECOST, from the Greek, Pentecoſte, the fiftieth, becauſe the Feaſt of Pentecoſt was celebrated the fiftieth day after the ſixteenth of Niſan, which was the ſecond day of the Feaſt of the Paſſover, Levit. xxiii. 15, 16. The Hebrews call it, Exod. xxxiv. 22, חג שבעות, the Feaſt of Weeks, becauſe it was kept ſeven weeks after the paſſover. They then offered the firſt fruits of their wheat-harveſt, which at that time was compleated, Deut. xvi. 9, 10. Theſe firſt fruits conſiſted in two loaves of leavened bread, of two aſſarons of meal, or of three pints of meal each, Levit. xxiii. 16, 17. [Some interpreters think, that each family was obliged to give two loaves for firſt fruits; but others maintain, and I think with more reaſon, that they offered but two loaves in the name of the whole nation; this is ſufficiently hinted by Joſephus, who puts but one loaf of two aſſarons. Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 10.] Beſides which they preſented at the temple ſeven lambs of that year, one calf, and two rams, for a burnt-offering, two lambs for a peace-offering, and a goat for a ſin-offering. We do not find in Scripture, or in Joſephus, that the Pentecoſt had an octave, though it was one of the three great ſolemnities, in which all the males were to appear before the Lord. Beſides the victims appointed Lev. xxiii. 18, 19. for the day of Pentecoſt, they offered two calves and a ram for a burnt-offering, ſeven lambs for a peace-offering, and a goat for a ſin-offering. See Numb. xxviii. 27. Joſephus puts all theſe ſacrifices together, Antiq. lib. iii. cap. 10.

The Feaſt of Pentecoſt was inſtituted, firſt, to oblige the Iſraelites to repair to the temple of the Lord, there to acknowledge his dominion over their country, and their labours, by offering to him the firſt fruits of all their harveſts. Secondly, to commemorate, and to render thanks to God for, the law given from Mount Sinai, on the fiftieth day after their coming out of Egypt.

The modern Jews celebrate the Pentecoſt for two days, they abſtain from all labour, and buſineſs, as on the Sabbath-day, except that they may make fires, dreſs victuals, and carry what they want from place to place. They hold by tradition, that this day the law was delivered from Mount Sinai; for which reaſon they adorn the ſynagogue and the places appointed for the reading of the law, and even their houſes, with roſes and flowers in crowns and garlands. Leo of Modena, p. iii. cap. 4.

The prayers are accommodated to the feſtival, and they read from the Pentateuch the ſacrifice that was offered on that day, with a leſſon out of the prophets, which has relation to the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. Afterwards, they pronounce a bleſſing for the ſovereign, and a ſermon in commendation of the law.

When the ſecond day of the feſtival is over, in the evening they perform the ceremony of the Abdala, i. e. diſtinction, to diſtinguiſh the day of the feaſt from a working day, and to ſhew that they paſs from the feaſt to a day in which work is allowed. This ceremony conſiſts in repeating certain prayers, and certain bleſſings, and in wiſhing one another good health, and proſperity. After which every one employs himſelf at pleaſure, the feaſt being over.

This Abdala, or diſtinction, is alſo performed at the paſſover, and on the Sabbath; but on the day of the Sabbath there is more ceremony. When every one is come home to his houſe, they light a torch, or a lamp with two cottons, the maſter of the houſe takes wine in a cup, and ſweet-ſcented ſpices: and when he has ſaid ſome paſſages out of the Pſalms, and the end of the eighth chapter of the book of Eſther; The Jews had light, and gladneſs, and joy, and honour, &c. Then he bleſſes the wine and the ſpices, and enjoys the flavour of them as it were to begin the week with pleaſure; he bleſſes the brightneſs of the fire, of which no uſe has yet been made, looks on his hands and nails, becauſe he is then beginning to work, and throws the wine on the ground, as a token of joy and gladneſs. Then wiſhing each other a happy week, they begin their buſineſs. But at the end of the paſſover, and of Pentecoſt, they make the Abdala with words only.

Buxtorf adds ſome other ceremonies, peculiar perhaps to the Jews of Germany. To recall to mind more ſenſibly the mount of Sinai, on which the law was given, they make a very thick cake, of ſeven layers of paſte; this they call Sinai, and inculcate, that theſe ſeven thickneſſes of paſte repreſent the ſeven heavens, which God was to re aſcend, from this mountain to the heaven of heavens, his abode. They reckon up exactly all the days that paſs after the paſſover, that they may not be miſtaken in the moment on which the Pentecoſt is to begin. The king, they ſay, has promiſed liberty to a priſoner, and his daughter in marriage, at the end of ſeven weeks. Is it not fit that this priſoner ſhould count the days, the hours, the moments, at the end of which his happineſs is to begin? This king is God, who has promiſed liberty to the Jewiſh nation, and alſo his law. Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud.

That they may not be miſtaken in their calculation, they celebrate two feſtival days for their greater ſecurity. They did the ſame formerly at other feſtivals, as may be ſeen from Judith. viii. 6. in græco. And Buxtorf affirms they did the ſame at the paſſover; and from hence he removes the difficulty ariſing from our Saviour's eating the paſchal lamb a day before the Jews.

To return to the Pentecoſt. Twice they bring the book of the law; five perſons read it one after another. The ſynagogue and the windows of the houſes are adorned with flowers, to inſinuate, that every thing was dreſſed in verdure about Mount Sinai, when the Iſraelites received the law.

The Chriſtian church alſo celebrates the Feaſt of Pentecoſt fifty days, or ſeven weeks after the paſſover, or the reſurrection of our Saviour. We are convinced that the true day of the paſſover, in the year that our Saviour died, fell on the Saturday, and that Pentecoſt fell on Sunday, May 24, fifty days after our Saviour's reſurrection. The church has always kept the Pentecoſt on the Sunday, at leaſt it is a tradition very expreſs among the fathers, Vide Conſtit. Apoſt. lib. v. cap. 20. Leo. Ep. ii. cap. 1. Aug. de Civit. lib. xviii. cap. 54. Item Author. Serm. 154. de tempore nunc in Append. 167. and the eccleſiaſtical writers, Vide Baron. ad an. 34. n. 234. Uſſer, Pearſon, &c. After the aſcenſion of Chriſt, the apoſtles having withdrawn into a houſe at Jeruſalem, (which it is ſaid was that of Mary the mother of John, upon Mount Sion: Alexand. apud Surium. xi. Jun. Cornel. à Lapide in Acta.) they there waited for the Holy Ghoſt, which our Saviour had promiſed them. On the day of Pentecoſt, about the third hour of the day, (nine o'clock in the morning) ſuddenly they heard a great noiſe, like the ruſhing of a mighty wind, from heaven, which filled the whole houſe where the apoſtles were aſſembled. At the ſame time appeared among them, as it were, tongues of fire, parted, or cloven, and reſted on each of them, who were immediately filled with the Holy Ghoſt, and began to ſpeak different tongues or languages, as the Spirit gave them utterance, Acts ii. 1, 2, 3.

There were then at Jeruſalem pious Jews of all nations, who were aſtoniſhed to hear ſuch a variety of languages: others [probably the Jews of Jeruſalem] made a mockery, ſaying, theſe people are full of new wine. Peter took up their defence, and ſaid, Theſe perſons are by no means drunk, for it is yet but the third hour of the day:—(On feſtival days they did not eat before noon, Joſeph. lib. de vita ſua; eſpecially they taſted nothing before nine in the morning, which was an hour of prayer:)—but this is the accompliſhment of what was ſpoke by the prophet Joel, ii. 28. I will pour out my ſpirit upon all fleſh, &c. And then, whoever ſhall call on the name of the Lord ſhall be ſaved, &c.

Thoſe who heard St. Peter were moved with compunction, and ſaid, Brethren, what muſt we do? Peter anſwered them, Repent, and be baptized in the name of Jeſus Chriſt, to obtain the remiſſion of ſins, and you ſhall alſo receive the Holy Ghoſt, &c. That day were baptized about three thouſand men. This was on the day of Pentecoſt. A. D. 33.

PENUEL, פנואל. See PENIEL.

I. PENUEL, or Phanuel, ſon of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, 1 Chron. iv. 4.

II. PENUEL, ſon of Shaſhak, 1 Chron. viii. 25.

PENULA, Παιλόνη, πενόλη, a cloke againſt the rain, 2 Tim. iv. 13.

PEOR, פעור, hole, opening, from פער pahar. See BAAL-PEOR.

PEOR, or Phogor, a famous mountain beyond Jordan, which Euſebius, in Abarim, places between Heſhbon and Livias. The mountains Nebo, Piſgah, and Peor were near one another, and probably of the ſame chain of mountains. It is very likely that Peor was named from ſome deity of this appellation, worſhipped here, Peor, or Phegor, or Baal-peor, Numb. xxv. 3. Deut. iv. 3. Pſalm cvi. 28.

Peor was a city of Judah, but is not read in the Hebrew, nor in the Vulgate, but only in the Greek, Joſh. xv. 60. Euſebius ſays it was near Bethlehem; Jerom adds, that in his time it was called Paora.

PEREA. From the Greek, Peran, beyond, ſignifies the country beyond Jordan, or eaſt of that river. Joſephus ſays, de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 2. that Perea had its limits, weſt at Philadelphia, the Jordan eaſt, Macheron ſouth, and Pella north. Sometimes the word Perea is taken in a more extenſive ſignification, for the whole country beyond Jordan. This country was alſo encloſed to the eaſt by mountains, which divided it from Arabia Deſerta.

PERFECTION. The Son of God commands us, Matth. v. 48. Be ye perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect: Not that we can ever attain his perfection, but we ought always to be making advances towards it: we ought always to propoſe it to ourſelves as our pattern, in the exerciſe of all virtue, and eſpecially his mercy and charity: whence St. Luke ſays, in the parallel paſſage, Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father alſo is merciful, Luke vi. 36. In Matth. xix. 21, our Saviour ſays, that he who would be perfect, muſt forſake all and follow him. And Luke vi. 40. that the diſciple who would arrive at perfection muſt become like his maſter. St. Paul often exhorts his diſciples to be perfect, i. e. to acquire the perfection of Chriſtianity, to be convinced of the excellence of it, and to practice its truths, 1 Cor. i. 10. xiv. 10, &c.

In the Old Teſtament, the words perfect and perfection anſwer to the Hebrew words Tham and Thummim, which properly ſignify, intire and compleat, without blemiſh or defect, irreprehenſible, perfect. Thus it is ſaid, Gen. vi. 9. Noah was a juſt man, and perfect in his generations. And God ſays to Abraham, Gen. xvii. 1. I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect. And ſpeaking to his people, Deut. xviii. 13. Thou ſhalt be perfect with the Lord thy God. In all theſe places perfect is put for without reproach, unreprovable, ſincere. In like manner, to ſerve God with a perfect heart, is to ſerve him faithfully, purely, not admitting a rival. Perfect knowledge, a perfect law, perfect charity, a perfect work; in theſe expreſſions the word perfect ſignifies whatever may make thoſe things compleat, finiſhed, intire, without deficiency. St. Paul ſays, Heb. vii. 19. The law made nothing perfect: it may be ſaid to give only ſketches of things; to enjoin things of leſs perfection than what the goſpel requires.

A perfect captivity is when a whole people are tranſported into a ſtrange country, without leaving any to cultivate the land, Jer. xiii. 18. Amos i. 6, 9. Deut. xxiii. 8. Vulg. Lights and perfections ſtand for the Urim and Thummim, that the high-prieſt carried about him.

PERFUMES; the uſe of perfumes was frequent among the Hebrews, and among the Orientals in general, before it was known to the Greeks and Romans. Pliny ſays, lib. xiii. cap. 1. that they knew not who was the firſt inventor of perfumes, and that they were unknown even at the ſiege of Troy. Ovid, Faſt. lib. iii. imputes this diſcovery to Bacchus. Arnobius maintains, lib. vii. contra Gentes, that they were unknown in the heroic times. But in the time of Moſes they muſt be known in Egypt, ſince he ſpeaks of the art of the perfumer, and gives the compoſition of two perfumes, Exod. xxx. 25. of which one was to be offered to the Lord, upon the golden altar in the holy place; and the other, Exod. xxx. 34, 35, &c. was appointed for the anointing of the high-prieſt and his ſons, of the tabernacle, and the veſſels of divine ſervice, Exod. xxx. 23.

The firſt of theſe perfumes was compoſed of ſtacte, the onyx, or odoriferous ſhell-fiſh, of galbanum, and incenſe, each of equal weight. This perfume was ſacred and inviolable, and it was forbid on pain of death, for any man whatever to uſe it. It was placed every morning and evening on the golden altar in the Sanctum: by one of the prieſts of the week. This perfume Zacharias, father of John the Baptiſt went to offer, when the angel foretold to him the birth of that forerunner of the Meſſiah.

The other kind of perfume was rather an ointment, to anoint the prieſts and the ſacred veſſels of the tabernacle, it was compoſed of the beſt myrrh, five hundred ſhekels, of cinnamon two hundred and fifty ſhekels, of Canna Aromatica a like quantity, of Caſia Aromatica five hundred ſhekels; and one hin of oil olive. But it is thought they did not afterwards anoint the ſucceſſors of Aaron, becauſe the dignity being hereditary in his family, this unction did not ſeem neceſſary. God reſerved this ointment, or this perfume, to his own ſervice; and whoever ſhould make it, either for himſelf or another, was to be cut off from his people.

The Hebrews had alſo perfumes which they uſed for embalming their dead. The compoſition is not exactly known, but they uſed myrrh, aloes, and other ſtrong and aſtringent drugs, proper to prevent putrefaction, infection, and corruption. Vide EMBALM.

Beſides theſe perfumes, there are others noticed in Scripture. Thoſe, for example, which king Hezekiah preſerved in his repoſitories. The ſpices and precious ointment, 2 Kings xx. 13. And thoſe that were burned with the body of king Aſa. They laid him in the bed which was filled with ſweet odours, and divers kinds of ſpices prepared by the apothecary's art, 2 Chron. xvi. 14. Judith perfumed her face when ſhe was to appear before Holofernes. They prepared the virgins which were to appear before the kings of Perſia, for ſix months together, by the uſe of oil of myrtle, and for ſix other months, by other perfumes, and ſweet-ſcented oils. The Spouſe in the Canticles commends the ſcent of the perfumes of her lover; and her lover in return ſays, that the ſcent of the perfumes of his ſpouſe ſurpaſſes the moſt excellent odours. He names particularly the ſpikenard, the Canna Aromatica, the cinnamon, the myrrh, the aloes, as compoſing theſe perfumes. The voluptuous woman deſcribed by Solomon, Prov. vii. 17. ſays, that ſhe had perfumed her bed with myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon. The epicures in the book of Wiſdom ii. 7. encourage one another to the luxuriant uſe of odours and coſtly perfumes.

Iſaiah reproaches Judæa, whom he deſcribes as a faithleſs ſpouſe to God, as being painted and perfumed to pleaſe ſtrangers, Iſai. lvii. 9. Thou wenteſt to the king with ointment, and didſt increaſe thy perfumes. Ezekiel, xxiii. 41. ſeems to accuſe the Jews with having profaned the odours and perfumes, whoſe uſe was reſerved to ſacred things, by applying them to their own uſe. Thou ſatteſt upon a ſtately bed, and a table prepared before it, whereupon thou haſt ſet mine incenſe and mine oil. Amos, vi. 6. inveighs againſt the rich men of Ephraim, who drank the moſt excellent wines, and perfumed themſelves with the moſt precious oils. The woman-ſinner in St. Luke vii. 37. and Mary Magdalen in St. John xii. 3. anointed our Saviour's feet with coſtly perfume. That of Mary Magdalen was ſpikenard.

Theſe examples ſhew in general, the taſte of the ancient Hebrews, which was, and ſtill is, the taſte of the Orientals, who made much uſe of ſcents and perfumes. They prove alſo, that men and women uſed them, indifferently, and that wiſe and ſerious men condemned the too frequent and affected uſe of them. It may alſo be obſerved, that to abſtain from perfumes, ſcents, and unctions, was eſteemed great mortification. Eſther refrained from perfumes and ointments during the humiliation of her people, Eſth. xiv. 2.

Daniel

Daniel did not anoint himſelf all the three weeks that he was urgent in prayer, to obtain the communications he deſired of God. Dan. x. 3.

Solomon ſays, that dead flies cauſe the ointment of the apothecary to ſend forth a ſtinking ſavour. One dead fly is ſufficient to ſpoil the ſcent of a whole box of perfumes: ſo one fault is enough to deſtroy a man's good name.

PERGA, Πέργη, very earthy; from the prepoſition περὶ very, and γῆ the earth.

PERGA, a city of Pamphylia, Acts xiii. 14. This is not a maritime city, and St. Paul muſt have gone up the river Cayſtrus to it, or elſe muſt have gone on foot. Strabo, lib. xxiv. ſpeaks of a temple of Diana of Perga, ſituated upon an eminence near the city.

PERGAMUS, Πέργαμος, height, elevation.

PERGAMUS. Jeſus Chriſt, Revelations ii. 13. ſpeaks to the angel, or biſhop, of Pergamus; I know thy works, and where thou dwelleſt, even where Satan's ſeat is: and thou holdeſt faſt my name, &c. Some have thought that this angel of Pergamus was Carpus, who ſuffered martyrdom at Pergamus, as we learn from Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iv. cap. 15. But he does not acquaint us that he was then biſhop of this church. The Roman martyrology makes him biſhop of Thyatira; but beſides, Carpus died under the empire of Decius. Therefore it is not credible, he could be biſhop of Pergamus under Dioclefian. Pergamus was a conſiderable city of Troas in the time of St. John. At Pergamus, parchment was invented, thence called Pergamena.

PERIBOLUS, Περίβολος, a wall, Ezek. xlii. 7. Vulg. From the Greek περιβάλλω, I ſurround.

PERIPSEMA, Περίψημα, filth, ſcum. 1 Cor. iv. 13.

PERISCELIDES, Περίσκελιδὴς, a bracelet.

PERISCELIDES. This Greek word ſignifies an ornament worn by women about their legs. Vide Iſaiah iii. 20. and Numbers xxxi. 50. Moſes ſays, that the Iſraelites, when they had defeated the Midianites, offered to the Lord the garters, (periſcelides) the rings, bracelets, and collars, taken from the enemy. We ſee the ſame in the victory which Gideon obtained over the ſame people, Judg. viii. 25, 26, 27. The Hebrew אצעדה, tranſlated by Periſcelides, comes from a root, which ſignifies to walk; which favours the tranſlation of thoſe who underſtand it of coſtly garters, or ornaments, worn by the Midianites about their legs. The Septuagint tranſlate it by χλιδωνα, a bracelet; it certainly has this ſignification, 2 Sam. i. 10, where the Amalekite who had ſlain Saul, ſays, that he took off the bracelet (Azadah) from the arm of that prince.

Iſaiah uſes this term in his enumeration of the ornaments of women. The Chaldee tranſlates it chains of the foot. Clemens Alexandrinus, Pædag. lib. ii. cap. 12. calls πέδας περισφυρίδας, thoſe ſilver or golden circlets that women put about their legs; q. fetters, or bonds. Profane authors call them in the ſame manner, ſhining fetters, golden ſhackles. Martial,

A pedibus niveis fulſerunt aurea vincta.

And Seneca,

Crura diſtincta religavit auro.

The women of Syria and Arabia at this day wear great rings around their legs, to which are faſtened many other leſſer rings, which make a tinkling noiſe, or like little bells, when they walk, or ſtir. Theſe rings are fixed above the ancle, and are of gold, ſilver, copper, glaſs, or even of varniſhed earth, according to the ſubſtance and condition of the wearer.

The princeſſes of Arabia wear large hollow rings of gold, within which are incloſed little pebbles, that tinkle. Others have leſſer rings called Kelkal, hung all round them, which have the ſame effect. The larger circles, or rings, are open in one place, in form of a creſcent, by which they paſs the ſmall of the leg, through them.

The Egyptian ladies wore alſo very valuable legrings; for we read in an inſcription found in Spain, that the ſtatue of Iſis had ornaments of gold on its legs, ſet with two emeralds, and with eleven other precious ſtones. The Roman and Grecian women alſo uſed them. Trimalchio in Petronius, ſpeaking of his ſpouſe, ſays, See what ſhe wears upon her legs; Videtis mulieris compedes: by way of complaint at her extravagance.

PERJURY. The law of God ſeverely condemned perjury, falſe oaths, vows, and promiſes, made without intention to perform them, Levit. xix. 12. Ex. xxiii. 13. Perjury offends againſt the veracity and juſtice of God himſelf, and is a great inſult on his Majeſty, by appealing to him as a witneſs to a lie, and engaging his tremendous name in commiſſion of a crime. See Philo, de decem præceptis & de ſpecialibus legibus. Moſes in Leviticus v. 4, 5, 6. vi. 2, 3. ſeems to appoint ſacrifices to atone for perjury; which is contrary to St. Paul, who aſſures us, that the ſacrifices and ceremonies of the law did not remit internal ſins, but only external and legal faults. Heb. vii. 18. Gal. ii. 16. Rom. viii. 3. Heb. ix. 9, 13. It muſt therefore be preſumed, that the ſacrifices ordained by Moſes, regarded the ignorance only, or temerity of him, who had made a raſh promiſe, or a ſecret oath, or promiſe. Or elſe he ſuppoſes, ſuppoſes, that he who was permitted to offer ſuch a ſacrifice, had already expiated his internal fault, by a perfect repentance and contrition; of which the external ſacrifice preſcribed, is only [the public acknowledgment, or ratification] as we may ſay, to ſatisfy for faults committed, by approaching holy things in a ſtate of defilement. Wilful perjury, in public, and before the judge, was not to be remitted by ſacrifices, according to Moſes's law. He was puniſhed by the ſentence of the judges, when he was found guilty. Portabit iniquitatem ſuam; which is uſually underſtood of capital puniſhment. See Levit. v. 1. xix. 8. xx. 17, 19, 20. xxiv. 15. Numb. ix. 13.

PERIZZITES, פרזי, who dwell in villages, or places not encloſed with walls; from פרז peraz.

PERIZZITES, or Phereſæi, ancient inhabitants of Paleſtine, mingled with the Canaanites. There is great probability, that they themſelves were Canaanites, but having no fixed habitations, and living ſometimes in one country, ſometimes in another, were called Perizzites, which ſignifies ſcattered or diſperſed. Pherazoth ſtands for hamlets or villages. The Perizzites did not inhabit any certain portion of the land of Canaan; there were ſome on each ſide of the river Jordan, in the mountains, and in the plains. In ſeveral places of Scripture the Canaanites and Perizzites are mentioned as the chief people of the country. E. gr. in the time of Abraham and Lot, the Canaanite and Perizzite were in the land, Gen. xiii. 7. The tribe of Ephraim complained to Joſhua, that they were too much confined in their poſſeſſion: he bid them go, if they pleaſed, into the mountains of the Perizzites and Rephaim, there clear the land, cultivate, and inhabit it, Joſh. xvii. 15. Solomon ſubdued the remains of the Canaanites and Perizzites, which the children of Iſrael had not rooted out, and made them tributary, 1 Kings ix. 20, 21. 2 Chr. viii. 7. There is mention of the Perizzites by Ezra, after the return from Babylon: and ſeveral Iſraelites had married wives from that nation, Ezra ix. 1.

PERSECUTION, to perſecute. Perſecution in all ages has been the portion of the elect, and of good men. Cain perſecuted Abel. Joſeph was perſecuted by his brethren; David by Saul; Elijah and Eliſha by Ahab; the prophets by the kings and people of their time; Jeſus Chriſt by Herod, and the chief of the Jews; John the Baptiſt and the apoſtles by the enemies of piety, truth, and juſtice. It is a maxim laid down by the apoſtle, that all thoſe who will lead a godly life ſhall ſuffer perſecution, 2 Tim. iii. 12. But happy are thoſe who ſuffer perſecution for righteouſneſs ſake, ſays our Lord, Matt. viii. 3—10.

But, to perſecute, perſequi, is not always taken in this odious ſenſe; it is often put for following an enemy in his flight, or for applying one's ſelf vigorouſly to any thing, Deut. xvi. 20. Juſte quod juſtum eſt perſequeris; you may apply yourſelf diligently to the practice of juſtice, Pſal. xxxiv. 14. Inquire pacem, & perſequere eam. Prov. xiii. 21. Peccatores perſequitur malum; puniſhment purſues ſinners. Eccluſ. xxxiv. 2. He that depends upon deceitful viſions is compared to one that catches at a ſhadow, or graſps at the wind. Quaſi qui apprehendit umbram, & ſequitur ventum.

PERSIA, פרס, πέρσαι, that cuts or divides: or nail, gryphon, horſe-man; from פרס paras, or peres.

PERSIA, a kingdom of Aſia. The Perſians became very famous from the time of Cyrus, the founder of the Perſian monarchy. Their antient name was Elamites; in the time of the Roman emperors they were called Parthians: at preſent Perſians. See PARTHIANS.

Perſia is bounded eaſt by the province of Kerman; weſt by Chuſiſtan; ſouth by the Gulf of Perſia; and north by a great deſart that ſeparates it from Choraſſan. It is about three hundred leagues in extent, along the ocean. Yezd is the moſt eaſtern city of this province, Hamadan the moſt weſtern, Gireft or Sireft the moſt ſouthern, and Rey the moſt northern.

The Arabians ſay, that Fars, father of the Perſians, was ſon of Azaz, or Arphaxad ſon of Shem. Others derive him from Japheth; but the Perſians derive their original from Kaiumarath, who is among them what Adam is with us. They aſſure us that they have always had kings of their own nation, whoſe ſucceſſion has never been long interrupted.

The Dilemites, the Curdes, and even the Oriental Turks, according to ſome authors, are deſcended from the Perſians. The Dilemites inhabit the ſhores of the Caſpian ſea, called alſo the ſea of Dilem, from that nation. The Curdes are ſcattered in Aſſyria, to which they give the name of Kurdiſtan. The Turks are withdrawn beyond the river Oxut, into Turkeſtan.

Authors ſpeak differently of the religion of the antient Perſians. Herodotus, Clio, ſeu lib. 1. cap. 31, is the firſt who has given any account of it. He tells us, "That they had neither temples, nor ſtatues, nor altars. They look on it as folly to make, or to ſuffer any, becauſe they did not not believe, as the Greeks, that the Gods were of human origin." They ſacrificed to Jupiter on the higheſt mountains. They gave the name of God to the whole circuit of the heavens. They ſacrificed alſo to the ſun, and the moon, and the earth; to the fire, and the water, and the winds. They knew no other gods, antiently, but theſe. Since that time they have learned from the Aſſyrians and the Arabians, to ſacrifice to Urania, or heavenly Venus; whom the Aſſyrians call Militta, the Arabians, Alitta, and the Perſians, Mithra.

Strabo, lib. xix. copies from Herodotus almoſt word for word, but does not agree that the Perſians gave the name of Mithra to Venus; he ſays they call the ſun Mithra, and all authors agree with Strabo in this. "They ſacrifice, ſays he, in a pure place, where they offer up their prayers, and bring thither their victim crowned. After the Magus has divided the fleſh, each takes his part; they leave nothing for the gods, ſaying, that God is contented with the ſoul of the ſacrifice. Some throw into the fire a ſmall part of the double fat that is wrapt about the inteſtines. They chiefly ſacrifice to the fire and the water. They put upon the fire dry wood, without bark, upon which they throw fat, and then oil alſo. They light the fire without any bellows, only making a wind with a kind of fan. [vide the plate to FRAGMENT, No. CXXVIII]. If any one blows the fire, or throws any carcaſe, or dirt, into it, he is puniſhed with death.

"The ſacrifice to the water is performed in this manner. They aſſemble near a lake, a river, or a fountain, and make a ditch, where they kill the ſacrifice, taking care that the neighbouring water is not defiled with the blood, which would make it unclean. After which they put the fleſh upon myrtle, or lawrel. The Magi put fire to it with little ſticks, and ſprinkle their libations of oil mixed with milk and honey, not upon the fire, or upon the water, but upon they ground. Then for a long time they make their enchantments, holding a little bundle of heath. The Cappadocians have a great number of Magi, whom they call Pyrethes, and ſeveral temples of the gods of the Perſians. They kill their victims without making uſe of knives, but of a lever, which they ſtrike as with an axe. They have great encloſures which they call Pyrethees, in the midſt whereof is an altar, on which the Magi preſerve aſhes and a perpetual fire. They enter therein every day, and there make their enchantments for the ſpace of an hour, holding whiſps of rods, and wearing mitres that come down ſo low, as to cover their lips and cheeks.

"The ſacrifices of the Perſians, ſays Herodotus, are performed after this manner. They erect no altars, nor uſe any fire. They have no libations, nor any players on muſic, nor garlands, nor meal. But he who offers the ſacrifice brings the victim into a pure and clean place, and invokes the God to whom he would ſacrifice, having his mitre crowned with myrtle. It is not allowed the prieſt to pray for himſelf in particular, but he muſt pray for the king, and the whole nation. After he has roaſted the fleſh of the victim, being cut into ſeveral pieces, he ſpreads young graſs, or eſpecially clover, and lays them thereon. Afterwards a Magus comes to ſing the theogony, a kind of ſong in uſe among them; and they are not allowed to ſacrifice without a Magus. A little while afterwards the prieſt takes away theſe pieces of fleſh, and does with them what he pleaſes."

Plutarch de Iſide & Iſiride informs us of ſome articles of their creed. "Among thoſe who admitted of two principles, one good the other bad, was, ſays he, the famous Zoroaſter, who lived according to ſome, five thouſand years before the Trojan war. One of theſe gods he named Oromazes, the other Arimanius; and ſaid, that one had a relation to light and knowledge, the other to darkneſs and ignorance. Between theſe two, was another of a middle nature, whom he called Mithras; for this reaſon the Perſians called Mithras, him who has the middle place. He taught, that the firſt was to be ſacrificed to, to obtain favors, and the other, to be defended from evils.

In this manner they invoked darkneſs. They bruiſed in a mortar a herb called Omomi, which afterwards they mingled with the blood of a ſacrificed wolf, and taking it all away, they threw it into a dark place, [cavern] where the ſun never ſhined. They believed that ſome plants and trees belonged to the good god, others to the evil god; and that among animals, dogs, birds, and urchins belong to the good god, and all thoſe of the waters, to the evil one. Oromazes, according to them, was born of the pureſt light; and Arimanius of groſs darkneſs. They are always at variance. Oromazes has produced ſix gods, of which the firſt is the author [or principle] of benevolence, the ſecond of valour, the third of equity, the fourth of wiſdom, the fifth of riches, the ſixth of ſuch pleaſures as attend good actions. Arimanius alſo, by way of emulation, produced a like number of gods.

Oromazes having made himſelf three times greater than he was at firſt, withdrew as far from the ſun, as the ſun is from the earth. He adorned the heaven, placing the ſtars there. He made a ſtar which is more excellent than the reſt, and, as it were, their guardian. This is Sirius, or the great dog. He made beſides twenty-four gods, and put them all into an egg. Arimanius made the ſame number, who broke the egg in which the good ones were incloſed, and then good and evil were mingled together. They ſay there is a time fixed, in which Arimanius muſt die, when the earth being united, all men ſhall live happy in a perfect union, being aſſembled into the ſame city, and ſpeaking the ſame language. Theopompus adds, that according to the opinion of the Magi, during three thouſand years one of the gods ſhall be too powerful for the other; during three thouſand years more they ſhall make war, and ſhall endeavour to deſtroy each other. At laſt Pluto [rather Arimanius the evil deity: for Pluto is the greek deity] ſhall be overcome, and then men ſhall be happy, and ſhall no longer need ſuſtenance, &c."

The Perſians at firſt uſed no images, yet they had them afterwards, as Beroſus ſays in the third book of his Chaldean hiſtory, as quoted by Clemens Alexandrinus, Protrept. Artaxerxes ſon of Darius, and father of Ochus, introduced them, and was the firſt who erected a ſtatue, that of Venus Tanaides, at Babylon, at Shuſhan, and at Ecbatana; and taught the Perſians, the Bactrians, the people of Damaſcus and Sardis, to worſhip it as a goddeſs. Such was the religion of the antient Perſians, according to antient authors, who had the beſt opportunity of being informed.

A modern author, very ſkilful in the eaſtern languages, and who had purpoſely ſtudied the religion of the Perſians, pretends that theſe people had juſt notions concerning Deity, and believed but one God. That, indeed, they admitted of two principles: but one of them was uncreated, and the other created. The created principle was the world. He maintains, that the worſhip they paid the ſun and fire was merely civil and relative. [Vide Hyde, de Relig. Vet. Perſ.]

The modern Perſians refer their religion to Abraham, whom ſome confound with Zoroaſter, and others will have to have been the maſter of Zoroaſter. They think the world was created in ſix days; that in the beginning God created a man and a woman, from whom mankind are derived. That there are ſeveral terreſtrial paradiſes, one univerſal deluge, one Moſes, one Solomon. All this, without doubt, is taken from the hiſtory of the Jews, and from the traditions of the Mahometans.

They hold, ſays D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 340. one eternal God, called in their language Jeſdan, or Oromazdes, who is the true God, called by the Arabians, Allah, the author of all good: alſo another god produced by darkneſs, whom they name Aherman, (properly the Eblis of the Arabians, or the devil,) the author of all evil. They have a very great veneration for light, and a great averſion from darkneſs. God the Creator of all things has produced light and darkneſs, and from a mixture of theſe two, of good and evil, of generation and corruption, the compoſition and decompoſition of the parts of the world is effected, and will always continue, 'till light withdrawing itſelf, on one ſide, and darkneſs on the other, ſhall cauſe a deſtruction and diſſolution. This is an abridgement of the doctrine of Zoroaſter, which is ſtill maintained by the Magians and Guebres, who are worſhippers of fire; and who always, when they pray, turn themſelves towards the riſing ſun.

A LIST of the KINGS of PERSIA, who had any Relation to Sacred Hiſtory.

A. M.
3466	Cyrus the founder of the Perſian monarchy, reigned nine years after the taking of Babylon; died ante. A. D. 529.
3475	Cambyſes, called Ahaſuerus, Ezr. iv. 6. reigned ſeven years and five months. ante. A. D. 522.
	Darius ſon of Hyſtaſpes; called Ahaſuerus in the Hebrew of Eſther, and Artaxerxes in the Greek, ante, A. D. 485.
3519	Xerxes I. reigned twelve years, ante A. D. 473.
3531	Artaxerxes Longimanus reigned forty-eight years, ante A. D. 425.
3579	Xerxes II. he reigned but one year.
3580	Secundianus, or Sogdianus, his brother and murderer, reigned ſeven months.
3581	Ochus, or Darius Nothus, reigned nineteen years, ante A. D. 404.
3600	Artaxerxes Mnemon reigned forty-three years, ante A. D. 361.
3643	Artaxerxes Ochus reigned twenty-three years ante A. D. 338.

3674	The empire of the Perſians laſted 208 years.

PERSIS, Περσὶς, Perſa, Perſian.

PERSIS, a Roman lady, whom St. Paul ſalutes, Romans xvi. 12. and whom he calls his beloved ſiſter. He ſays ſhe had laboured much for the Lord, and ſtill labours. Nothing of her life is come to our knowledge; nor do we ſee that ſhe is honoured by any church; which is ſomething ſingular.

PERUDA, פרודא, divided, or ſeparated: or mule, or horſe; from פרד parad or pered.

PESTILENCE, or plague. In the Hebrew tongue, as in moſt others, plague or peſtilence expreſſes all ſorts of diſtempers and calamities. The Hebrew word Deber, which properly ſignifies the plague, is extended to all other epidemical and peſtilential diſeaſes. Commonly the prophets connect together the ſword, the peſtilence, and the famine, as three evils, which generally accompany each other.

The peſtilent man, Prov. xv. 12. Vulg. is the ſcorner, the fleerer, the pretended free-thinker, who diverts himſelf with the ſimplicity of good people, and with the timidity of pious ſouls. The Hebrew word Lez, tranſlated by peſtilent, ſignifies a ſcorner. The chair of peſtilence, [or ſeat of the ſcorner,] mentioned in the firſt Pſalm, is the ſeat of ſuch pernicious people. Solomon in many places cautions his readers againſt their diſcourſe. The ſcorner loves not him that reproves him, Prov. xix. 25. Vulg. And elſewhere, Peſtilenti flagellato, ſtultus ſapientior erit. The correction of ſuch ſcoffers is a great inſtruction for the weak, the low, the fooliſh, thoſe that want light and underſtanding. Homines peſtilentes diſſipant civitatem, Prov. xxix. 8. Such kind of men are only fit to draw down the anger of God on a community, in order to its deſtruction. Tertullus, the advocate of the Jews ſays, Acts xxiv. 5. that St. Paul was a peſtilent fellow, a common diſturber and mover of ſedition, becauſe he maintained that Jeſus was the Chriſt. Jeremiah gives to Babylon the name of the contagious mountain. Ecce ego ad te, mons peſtifer; becauſe it ſpread the infection of idolatry and ſuperſtition through the whole world. The Meſſiah ſays, Hoſea xiii. 14. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy deſtruction. St. Jerom tranſlates it; Ero mors tua, ὁ mors, morſus tuus ero, inferne. And in Pſalm xci. 3. the Hebrew has, He ſhall deliver me from the ſnares of the hunter, and from the dangerous peſtilence. The ſame letters that ſignify—a word, DABAR, alſo ſignify the peſtilence—DEBER.

PETER, Πέτρος. See CEPHAS.

PETER, the apoſtle, born at Bethſaida, was ſon of John, Jona, or Joanna, and brother of St. Andrew, John i. 42, 43. His firſt name was Simon or Simeon, but when our Saviour called him to the apoſtleſhip, he added the name, Cephas, i. e. in Syriac, a ſtone or a rock; in Latin, Petra, whence Peter. He was a married man, and dwelt with his mother-in-law, and his wife, at Capernaum, on the lake of Genneſareth, Mark i. 29. Matth. viii. 14. Luke iv. 38. Andrew having been firſt called by Jeſus Chriſt, met his brother Simon, and told him, we have found the Meſſiah, and brought him to Jeſus, John i. 41. A. D. 30. After having paſſed one day with our Saviour, they returned to their ordinary occupation, which was fiſhing. Yet it is thought they were preſent with him, at the marriage of Cana in Galilee.

Towards the end of the ſame year, Jeſus Chriſt being on the ſhore of the lake of Genneſareth, ſaw Peter and Andrew buſy, waſhing their nets, Luke v. 1, 2, 3, &c. He entered their boat, and bid Peter throw out his nets into the ſea, in order to fiſh. Peter obeyed him, though he had been fiſhing the whole night without catching any thing. They took ſo many fiſhes at this draught, that their own veſſel, and that of James and John, ſons of Zebedee, were filled. Then Peter threw himſelf at the feet of Jeſus, and ſaid, Depart from me, Lord, for I am a ſinner. Jeſus ſaid to them, Follow me, and I will make you fiſhers of men. He ſaid the ſame to James and John, who immediately quitted their boats and nets, and followed our Saviour.

Some time after, Luke iv. 38. Matth. viii. 14. A. D. 31. Jeſus coming to Capernaum, entered the houſe of Peter, where his mother-in-law lay ſick of a fever. He immediately healed her; and ſhe began to ſerve them. A little while before the feaſt of the paſſover of the following year, A. D. 32. after Jeſus returned into Galilee, he choſe twelve apoſtles, among whom Peter has the firſt place. One night when Jeſus Chriſt walked upon the waters of the lake of Genneſareth, Peter propoſed to come and meet him, Matth. xiv. 28, 29. Jeſus gave him leave, but he ſeeing a great wave coming, was afraid, and began to ſink: but Jeſus held him up, and ſaid to him; O man of little faith, why was you afraid? Afterwards, ſome of his diſciples being offended at his figurative expreſſions, left him: and Jeſus aſked his apoſtles alſo if they would leave him? Peter replied, To whom ſhall we go, Lord? for thou haſt the words of eternal life, John vi. 53, 54, &c.

One day, as our Saviour was near Ceſarea Philippi, he aſked his apoſtles, whom men took him to be? Matth. xvi. 13, 14. They anſwered, ſome ſaid he was John the Baptiſt, others Elias, others Jeremiah, or one of the old prophets. And you, ſays he, whom do you ſay I am? Simon Peter anſwered, You are the Chriſt, the ſon of the living God. Jeſus ſaid to him, Happy are you, Simon, ſon of Jona, for, not fleſh and blood has revealed this to you, but my Father who is in heaven. Your name is Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church, and the gates of hell ſhall not prevail againſt it. And I will give you the keys of the kingdom of heaven, and whatſoever you ſhall bind on earth ſhall be alſo bound in heaven, and whatever you ſhall looſe on earth ſhall be looſed in heaven. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLXXIV, page 174. About eight days after, our Saviour being transfigured on a mountain, had with him Peter, James, and John, and ſhewed them a glimpſe of his glory. Peter being in an ecſtacy, and ſeeing Moſes and Elias with Jeſus, exclaimed, Lord, it is good for us to be here; if you pleaſe, we will make three tents, one for you, one for Moſes, and one for Elias, Matt. xvii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Luke ix. 28.

Jeſus returning to Capernaum, being on the road the apoſtles diſputed among themſelves, which of them ſhould be greateſt in the kingdom of God, which they thought to be very near. Jeſus and Peter came to Capernaum ſome time before the reſt; thoſe who gathered the half ſhekel a head for the uſe of the temple, came and aſked Peter, if his maſter would pay it then? Jeſus bid Peter throw his line into the ſea, and he ſhould find a piece of money to pay for them two, in the mouth of the firſt fiſh he ſhould take. Peter obeyed; and found a ſhekel in the mouth of the fiſh, which he gave to the collectors, for Jeſus and for himſelf.

One day, as Jeſus was ſpeaking concerning forgiveneſs of injuries, Matt. xviii. 21, 22. Peter aſked him how often they muſt forgive? ſeven times? Jeſus told him, ſeventy times ſeven. On another occaſion, A. D. 33. Matthew xix. 27, 28, 29. as our Saviour was ſpeaking of the danger of riches, Peter ſaid to him; Lord, we have left all to follow thee; what reward ſhall we have? Jeſus anſwered, an hundredfold, even in this world, and in the other world eternal life.

On the Tueſday before our Saviour's paſſion, Peter ſhewed him the fig-tree he had curſed, the evening before, was now withered, Mark xi. 12—21. and the day following, as they ſat on the Mount of Olives, he, with the other apoſtles, aſked Jeſus when the temple was to be deſtroyed? On Thurſday he was ſent with St. John to prepare for the paſſover; in the evening, when Jeſus was at table, and began to ſpeak of him who ſhould betray him, Peter made ſigns to John, to aſk him, who this ſhould be? After ſupper, the diſciples diſputed who ſhould be the greateſt? whereupon Jeſus laying aſide his garments, waſhed their feet, to give them an example of humility. Peter at firſt made ſome difficulty; but Jeſus telling him, that if he did not waſh his feet, he could have no part in him; Peter replied, Lord, waſh not only my feet, but my hands and my head, John xiii. 6—10.

Some time after, Jeſus ſaid to him, Peter, Satan has deſired to ſift you as men ſift wheat: But I have prayed for you, that your faith may not fail; and when you are converted, confirm your brethren. Peter aſked Chriſt, where he was going? and ſaid, he was ready to follow him every where, even to death. But Chriſt foretold to him, that he would abjure him three times that very night, before the cock ſhould crow. When ſupper was ended, Jeſus went to the garden of Olives, taking Peter, James and John, apart, as witneſſes of his agony. Peter, though he had lately ſhewn ſo much reſolution, yet fell aſleep with the reſt, which occaſioned Jeſus to ſay to him, Do you ſleep, Simon? Could you not watch with me one hour? Mark xiv. 37. Matth. xxvi. 40, &c.

Judas being come with the ſoldiers to ſeize Jeſus, Peter drew his ſword, and cut off the right ear of one Malchus, ſervant to the high-prieſt: but Jeſus bid him put up his ſword, adding, all who fight with the ſword ſhould periſh by the ſword: at the ſame time he healed Malchus's ear, John xviii. 10, &c. Peter followed Jeſus afar off, into the houſe of Caiaphas; where the ſoldiers and ſervants having a fire in the middle of the hall, Peter ſtood among them to warm himſelf; when a maid ſervant ſaid, ſurely this man was with Jeſus of Nazareth. Peter anſwered, I know not what you ſay; I do not ſo much as know the man. A little while after another maid ſaid, This man was with Jeſus of Nazareth. But Peter denied it with an oath. About an hour after, one of the company affirmed, that Peter was a diſciple of Jeſus. Others inſiſted on the ſame thing, and ſaid, that certainly he was one, for his very ſpeech betrayed him to be a Galilean. One of them, a kinſman to Malchus, whoſe ear Peter had cut off, aſked him, Did not I ſee you with him in the garden? Peter again denied it with an oath, proteſting that he did not know the man. And now the cock crowed the ſecond time. Jeſus being in the ſame hall, and not far from Peter, turned and looked on him; Peter remembering that Jeſus had ſaid to him, Before the the cock crowed twice he ſhould deny him thrice, he threw himſelf out of Caiaphas's houſe, and wept bitterly, Matt. xxvi. 73, 75. Mark xiv. 30, 72.

Very probably he remained in ſecret, and in tears, all the time of our Saviour's paſſion, Friday and Saturday, but on Sunday morning Jeſus being riſen, and Mary having been at the tomb, and not finding the body of Jeſus, ſhe ran into the city, to tell Peter and John that their maſter was taken away. Peter and John ran to the ſepulchre; John coming firſt, did not enter it; but Peter coming, ſtooped down, and ſaw the linen cloths wherein the body had been wrapped. They returned to Jeruſalem, not underſtanding what had come to paſs. The ſame day our Saviour appeared to Peter, to comfort him. Vide John xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. and Luke xxiv. 12, &c. Mark xvi. 7. Luke xxiv. 34. Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. hom. 38.

Some days after, Peter being returned into Galilee, and going to fiſh in the ſea of Galilee (or lake of Genneſareth) with ſome others of the apoſtles, Jeſus appeared to them on the ſhore. John ſaid to Peter, it is the Lord. Peter immediately ſwimming to ſhore came to Jeſus; and Jeſus dined with them. After dinner Jeſus ſaid to Peter; Simon, ſon of Jona, do you love me more than theſe? He anſwered, yea, Lord, you know that I love you. Jeſus ſays to him, then feed my ſheep. He put the ſame queſtion to him again, and Peter making the ſame anſwer, our Lord ſaid to him again, Feed my lambs. This he repeated a third time, at which Peter being mortified, ſaid, You know, Lord, that I love you. Jeſus replied to him, "Feed my ſheep. I tell you for a truth, that when you were young, you girded yourſelf and went where you pleaſed; but now you are old another ſhall gird you, and lead you where you would not go." At the ſame time Peter ſeeing John the Evangeliſt following Jeſus, ſaid, Lord, what muſt become of him? Jeſus anſwered, "If I will have him continue, what does that concern you? Do you follow me." Thus, though he forewarned Peter, yet he refuſed to declare, in what manner John ſhould end his life.

After Jeſus Chriſt had aſcended into heaven, and the apoſtles had ſeen his aſcenſion, they returned to Jeruſalem, to wait for the Holy Ghoſt. During this interval, Peter propoſed to fill up the place vacant by the treachery of Judas. The propoſal was agreed to, and the lot was caſt, which fell upon Matthias.

The tenth day after the aſcenſion of our Saviour, the Holy Ghoſt having deſcended on the apoſtles, and faithful, and having filled them with ſupernatural gifts, and eſpecially with the gift of tongues, there being then at Jeruſalem Jews from all the eaſt; they could not comprehend by what means theſe people, who were Galileans, ſhould ſpeak ſuch variety of languages. Some ſaid, the apoſtles were full of wine: but Peter in their defence, ſtated that, this was not the effect of drunkenneſs, but the completion of the promiſe, Joel ii. 28. to ſend the Holy Spirit on all fleſh, &c. Vide PENTECOST.

Some days after, Peter and John going to the temple at the hour of prayers, found at the gate of the temple a man of more than forty years of age, who from his birth had been a cripple, and could not walk. Peter healed him, and on this occaſion preached Jeſus to the people.

While he was ſpeaking, the prieſts and Sadducees laid hold on Peter and John, and put them in priſon. The day following, the ſenate, the magiſtrates, and the chief prieſts being aſſembled, they aſked the two apoſtles, in whoſe name they had performed the miracle of healing the lame man? Peter anſwered them, in the name of Jeſus Chriſt of Nazareth, whom they had crucified, and whom God had raiſed again, &c. The council ſtrictly charged them to teach no more in this name: but Peter and John told them, judge yourſelves which is moſt juſt, whether to obey you or to obey God.

Many of the faithful ſold their eſtates, and brought the money, and laid it at the feet of the apoſtles. Of this number was a man called Ananias, with his wife Sapphira, who, by agreement between themſelves, concealed part of the money for which they had ſold their land, and brought the reſt, as if it were the whole. Ananias came firſt, and Peter ſaid to him; how could you ſuffer Satan to ſeduce you, to lie to the Holy Ghoſt, by concealing part of the price of your land? &c. Immediately Ananias fell down dead, and was carried out and buried. About three hours afterwards his wife Sapphira came in, and Peter ſaid to her the ſame he had ſaid to her huſband; immediately ſhe alſo fell down, and gave up the ghoſt: which infuſed a great awe in all who heard of it. Vide ANANIAS.

The number of believers increaſed daily; the people even brought the ſick into the ſtreets, that the ſhadow of Peter might cover ſome of them. Then the high-prieſt and the Phariſees put the apoſtles into priſon. But an angel brought them forth, and bid them go into the temple, and boldly declare the words of life. This they did, whereupon the princes and prieſts apprehended them, and demanded why they had diſobeyed their orders? by continuing to ſpeak in the name of Jeſus Chriſt; Peter and the Apoſtles anſwered, that it was more neceſſary to obey God than man. This anſwer provoked them, and they were going to condemn them to death, when Gamaliel ſuſpended their reſolution, by repreſenting, that if this matter was from God, it was in vain to oppoſe it; but if otherwiſe, it would ſoon vaniſh of itſelf. So they diſmiſſed the Apoſtles, after giving each of them thirty-nine ſtripes.

After the martyrdom of Stephen, the Apoſtles alone continued at Jeruſalem; Philip, the deacon, going to Samaria, the Samaritans received the word of the Lord, and ſeveral were baptized. Peter and John repaired thither alſo, to impart the Holy Ghoſt; which Philip had not power to do. Simon the magician was alſo baptized among others, and admiring the power of the apoſtles, in conferring the Holy Ghoſt, he offered money for it to Peter. But Peter with indignation replied to him, Thy money and thyſelf periſh together, who thinkeſt the gifts of God can be bought with money! Acts viii.

St. Peter departing from Jeruſalem, viſited the diſciples from city to city; and came to Lydda. Here he cured Æneas, who had been paralytic eight years. A certain holy woman named Tabitha, happening to die at Joppa while Peter was at Lydda, the diſciples ſent for him. Peter came, and entering the chamber where Tabitha lay dead, he betook himſelf to prayers: then he ſaid, Tabitha ariſe. She opened her eyes, and ſeeing Peter, ſhe ſat up. Peter ſtaid at Joppa a good while, lodging with one Simon a tanner. Acts ix. 36, &c.

At Ceſarea of Paleſtine reſided a centurion called Cornelius, a man who feared God: he was directed by an angel, to ſend to Joppa for Peter; and Cornelius immediately ſent two of his ſervants. While they were on the road Peter being on the terrace of his hoſt Simon's houſe, in an extaſy, ſaw, as it were, a great ſheet of linen let down from Heaven, full of animals clean and unclean. He heard a voice, ſaying, Ariſe Peter, kill and eat. But Peter anſwered, Lord, I have never eaten any thing unclean. The voice replied, Call not that unclean which God has purified. He had this viſion three times, after which the ſheet was again taken up into Heaven. By this time came in the men ſent by Cornelius. The day following St. Peter went with them, and ſome of the brethren from Joppa. Acts x.

He found Cornelius with his kindred and friends waiting for him. When Cornelius firſt ſaw him, he fell at his feet: But Peter lifting him up, ſaid, I am but a man, as well as you. Cornelius related to him what had happened; and Peter giving thanks to God, began to preach Jeſus Chriſt. While he was ſpeaking, the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon all that heard him. Then Peter ſaid, can any one refuſe baptiſm to thoſe who have already received the Holy Ghoſt as well as ourſelves?

When St. Peter was returned to Jeruſalem, the faithful of the circumciſion ſaid to him, Why have you gone unto thoſe that are not circumciſed? but when Peter had related to them all that had paſſed, they glorified God.

It is thought Peter went to Antioch ſoon after this, where he founded a Chriſtian church. A. D. 36. Vide Euſeb. Chronic. Leo Serm. 80. Hieronym. in Galat. xi. & de Viris illuſt. c. 1. Chryſoſt. t. 5. homil. 12. St. Chryſoſtom ſays, he continued there a long while; it is believed ſeven years; not continually, but at intervals. For during this time he viſited Jeruſalem, Aſia Minor, Bithynia, Cappadocia, and Pontus, as is concluded from the epiſtle he afterwards addreſſed to the faithful of thoſe provinces. From thence, ſay ſome, he went to Rome, A. D. 42, the 2d year of Claudius, about twenty-five years before his martyrdom; which time the church of Rome generally allows to the Biſhopric of Peter. It is thought that at his leaving Antioch, he fixed Ignatius in his place. It is ſaid, Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 17. Hieronym. de Viris illuſt. that at Rome he contracted an acquaintance with Philo, the Alexandrian Jew. See PHILO. It is thought alſo, that the chief occaſion of his journey was to oppoſe Simon Magus, who by his deceits had perverted many, and was honoured there almoſt as a God. The preſence and miracles of Peter, abated or ruined the reputation of the impoſtor, Simon, ſays Euſeb. lib. ii. cap 14. Cyril. Catech. 6. Juſtin. Apolog. 1, 2. If at this time St. Peter did not continue long enough at Rome, to undeceive thoſe ſeduced by Simon, yet he did it effectually afterwards, as we ſhall ſee in its place.

Peter being come to Jeruſalem, at the paſſover, A. D. 44. Herod Agrippa began a perſecution againſt the church, Acts xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. He ſlew James the Greater, brother of John, and cauſed Peter to be apprehended, deſigning to put him to death after the paſſover. But the very night before Herod thought of executing him, as Peter, loaded with chains, was ſleeping between two ſoldiers, the angel of the Lord awaked him, opened the priſon, and brought him the length of a ſtreet. He came to the houſe of Mary the mother of John, where many of the faithful were aſſembled at prayers

He

He left Jeruſalem, but we are not told what became of him, 'till the council at Jeruſalem, A. D. 51. Poſſibly before this time he made his ſecond journey to Rome, from whence he wrote his firſt epiſtle, about A. D. 50. It is dated from Babylon, i. e. Rome, as the antients explained it [and as the church of Rome affirms.]

Peter was obliged to leave Rome by order of the emperor Claudius, which baniſhed all Jews from thence, becauſe of the tumults they continually raiſed there, excited by one Chreſtus, as Suetonius ſays, lib. v. cap. 25. meaning, probably, Chriſt. Peter returned into Judea, and was at the council of Jeruſalem, in which, after a ſtrict examination, the council came to this concluſion, which Peter promoted, That no new obligation ſhould be impoſed on the Gentiles, but only abſtinence from fornication, from the uſe of blood, and from meats offered to idols.

Some time after, Peter coming to Antioch, he ate and drank with the Gentiles, without regarding the Moſaic diſtinctions of meats. But, when ſome converted Jews from Jeruſalem came to Antioch, Peter being unwilling to offend them, ſeparated himſelf from the converted Gentiles. Paul fearing, that what Peter did, might be interpreted, as if he meant to revoke and annul what he had determined in the council of Jeruſalem, withſtood him to his face, and expoſtulated with him; to which Peter ſubmitted. Gal. ii. 11.

The particulars of St. Peter's life are little known, after the council of Jeruſalem A. D. 51. Some time before his death he propoſed to write to the faithful that had been converted by him, to remind them of the truths he had taught them, which he did in his ſecond epiſtle. Athanaſi de fuga. Vide 2 Pet. i. 14. For ſome time the canonicalneſs of this epiſtle was queſtioned, becauſe of its difference in ſtyle from the former epiſtle: but at length it was generally received.

The apoſtles Peter and Paul came to Rome about A. D. 65, where they performed many miracles, and made many converts. Simon Magus, by his tricks, it is ſaid, continued to deceive the people, pretending to be the Meſſiah, and even, ſay ſome, attempting to aſcend into the air by his demons, in a fiery chariot, Peter and Paul betook themſelves to their prayers; when, the impoſtor, being forſaken of his dæmons, fell down upon the ground; and having broken his legs, he was carried to Brunda, where, through rage and ſhame, he threw himſelf headlong from the top of his houſe. This Brunda was probably in Rome, for ſeveral of the antients expreſly affirm, that he died at Rome. St. Ambroſe Serm. 68. relates, that the Pagans being provoked againſt Peter, becauſe of what had happened to Simon Magus, ſought to kill him, and that the believers urged him to quit Rome, to avoid their fury. He was got already to the gates of Rome, when he ſaw Jeſus Chriſt coming in at the ſame gate. Peter ſaid to him, Lord, whither are you going? to which our Saviour anſwered, I am coming to Rome to be crucified over again. St. Peter underſtood, by theſe words, that our Lord would have him ſtay there, and glorify him by his death. He returned, and related this to the faithful. He was taken and put into priſon, where, it is ſaid, he continued nine months. He was crucified at Rome in the Via Oſtia, A. D. 66. June 29, (on the ſame day and in the ſame place where St. Paul was beheaded) with his head downwards, as he had deſired of his executioners. Euſeb. lib. iii. cap. 1. Hiſt. Eccl. Prudent. p. 144. Aſter. p. 148. Chryſoſt. in Geneſ. Homil. 66. &c. This he did out of a ſenſe of humility, for fear it ſhould be thought, as St. Ambroſe ſays, that he affected the glory of Jeſus Chriſt, Ambroſ. in Pſal. cxviii. Aug. Serm. 203.

Gregory the Great, lib. iii. ep. 30. ſays, the body of St. Peter was firſt buried in the Catacombs, two miles from Rome, from whence it was afterwards tranſported to the Vatican, where it has lain ever ſince. He held the primacy of Rome about 24 or 25 years. His age might be about 74 or 75 years. It is generally agreed, that Linus was his ſucceſſor.

This is the pourtraiture that Nicephorus, lib. ii. cap. 37. gives us of St. Peter, which he probably took from ſome antient picture of this apoſtle. He was not fat, but pretty tall and upright, having a fair and paliſh countenance. The hair of his head and beard was thick, frizzled, and not long. His eyes were black, and blood-ſhot, his eye-brows protuberant and lofty, his noſe ſomething long, and rather flat than ſharp.

The Ebionites imputed ſeveral of their ſuperſtitions to him, and theſe forgeries they inſerted in a book intitled, The Voyages of St. Peter, which they aſcribed to St. Clement. He has been made alſo the author of ſeveral books, Euſeb. lib. iii. cap. 3. Hiſt. Eccl. Hieronym. de Viris illuſt. cap. 1. mentions his Acts, his Goſpel, his Revelation, a work about Preaching, and another about Judgement. We have ſtill a large hiſtory of St. Peter, called the Recognitions, imputed to St. Clement. Clemens of Alexandria cites the Revelation of St. Peter in his Hypotypoſes. They read this falſe Revelation in ſome churches of Paleſtine on Good-Friday, in the fifth century. Origen rejects the book of St. Peter's Preaching; but Clemens Clemens Alexandrinus often quotes it. The Nazarene heretics uſed St. Peter's goſpel. Origen relates ſomething from it. The orientals aſcribe ſome liturgies to him, but without reaſon. Vide Baronius, and de Tillemont, tom. 1. Hiſt. Eccl. St. Peter, art. 39, 40. Fabricius, Cod. Apoc. N. T.

We have already obſerved, that St. Peter was a married man. But the fathers inform us, that after his calling to the apoſtleſhip he renounced the uſe of marriage, and regarded his wife only as his ſiſter. Clem. lib. vii. Stromat. Chryſoſt. de Virgin. cap. 82. Some have concluded that the wife of St. Peter, (as thoſe of the other apoſtles that were married,) followed her huſband, and aſſiſted him in preaching the goſpel, according to her abilities, viſiting and inſtructing thoſe of her own ſex. Vide S. Arit. tom. 1. Miſcel. Baluz. p. 357.

We are aſſured, by Clem. Alex. lib. vii. Stromat. Euſeb. lib. iii. cap. 30. Hiſt. Eccl. that Peter's wife ſuffered martyrdom. This apoſtle ſeeing her led to death, cried out to her, with great reſolution, Wife, remember the Lord. It is ſaid, alſo, that he had a daughter named Petronilla, or Petrina, whoſe name is in ſome martyrologies May 31. Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. p. 445. and Epiphanius Heres. 30. cap. 22. acknowledge, that St. Peter had children, and St. Auſtin, in Adimant. cap. 17. mentions a daughter of this apoſtle. The Acts of Nereus and Achilleus relate ſeveral things concerning her. Vide the Bollandiſts: May 31.

PETHAHIAH, פתחיה, Φαθία, gate of the Lord, or to whom the Lord opens; from פתה pathac, to open; or gate, and יה jah, the Lord.

PETHAHIAH, or Pheteia, head of the nineteenth family of the prieſts. 1 Chron. xxiv. 16.

PETHOR, a city of Meſopotamia, of which Balaam was a native. The Hebrew, Numb. xxii. 5. calls this city פתורה Pethura: Ptolemy calls it Pachora, and Euſebius, Phathura. He places it in the upper Meſopotamia. We think it to be towards Thapſacus, beyond the Euphrates. St. Jerom in his tranſlation has omitted this name. He has only, To Balaam who dwelt on the river of the Ammonites. The Septuagint have, To Balaam Son of Beor Pathura, who dwells on the river of the country of his people. Certain it is, that Balaam was of Meſopotamia. Deut. xxiii. 4.

PETHUEL, פתיאל, Mouth of God; from פה path, a mouth: otherwiſe, Dilatation, or Perſuaſion of God; from פתה pathah, to perſuade, or from פתח pathac, to dilate, and אל el, God.

PETHUEL, or Phatuel, father of the prophet Joel. The Hebrews think, that the fathers of prophets were alſo prophets, when their names are thus mentioned in ſcripture.

PETRA, סלע, πέτρα, Rock; from סלע ſelah, a ſtone, or Rock.

PETRA, the capital city of Arabia Petrea. It is appropriated to Paleſtine in the antient Notitia Eccleſiaſtica, and was the capital of what was called the Third Paleſtine. Sometimes Euſebius, and St. Jerom alſo, extends Paleſtine to the Red-Sea, to Elath, ſo that it comprehended Idumea and Arabia Petrea: but it was not ſo antiently. The old name of Petra, they ſay, was רקם Rekem, or as Joſephus, Antiq. lib. iv. cap. 4, 7. and Euſebius read it, Arke, or Arkeme, or Arkem. Joſephus ſays, that the city of Rekem takes its name from a king of Midian called Rekem: mentioned Numb. xxxi. 8. But we no where find in ſcripture, that Rekem was the name of a city.

In 2 Kings xiv. 7. it is ſaid, Amaziah King of Judah took Selah (the rock, the ſtone) by war, and called the name of it Joktheel. It is commonly thought this means the city of Petra, the capital of Arabia Petrea; but we cannot be certain of it. Amaziah may have taken by ſtorm ſome rock, (Selah) to which the Idumeans had fled, and may afterwards have named this rock Joktheel, the obedience of the Lord.

Petra, in Greek, ſignifies a Rock, and was probably given to this city becauſe of its ſituation upon a rock, or becauſe it was encompaſſed by rocks, or becauſe, as they ſay, the greater part of the houſes were dug in the rock. It is called alſo by the antients Agra, or Hagor, whence comes the name of Agarenians. But neither can thoſe names be found in ſcripture; ſo that unleſs it be meant 2 Kings, xiv. 7. and Iſaiah xvi. 1. xlii. 11. under the name of Selah, or Rock, I do not ſee that it is mentioned in ſcripture.

Strabo ſays, lib. xvi. that Petra was the capital of the Nabatheans, that the Mineans and the Gerreans brought their perfumes thither for ſale; that the city was ſituate in a plain full of gardens, and watered with fountains, but all encompaſſed by rocks. Pliny lib. vi. cap. 28. ſpeaks of it almoſt in the ſame terms. This deſcription is very different from that by the geographer of Nubia, who ſays, that moſt of the houſes of Petra were dug in the rock; and Herodian gives a deſcription of the capital of the Agarenians, as ſtanding on the point of a very high mountain. This author calls it Atra. Dion does not name it, but in the manner he ſpeaks of it, it muſt be upon a ſteep rock, in a very dry and barren country. Dio Caſſius lib. lxviii. Trajan beſieged it, and though he had made a breach in it, yet he was was forced to raiſe the ſiege. It appears, that the city he mentions was in Meſopotamia, and therefore muſt be very different from the city of which we are now treating.

Some geographers think, that there were more than one Petra. St. Athanaſius diſtinguiſhes two, one in Paleſtine, and the other in Arabia, Epiſtola ad Monachos, p. 635. Vide Reland. Palæſt. lib. iii. p. 927, 928. He calls Arius or Macarius biſhop of Petra in Paleſtine, and Aſterius, biſhop of Petra in Arabia. The paraphraſts Jonathan and Onkelos diſtinguiſh Rekem and Petra as different cities. Joſephus ſpeaks of Petra in the country of the Amalekites, i. e. Rekem or Petra, near to which Aaron died; and he confounds it with Petra in the land of the Midianites, which took its name from king Rekem. Laſtly, I am of opinion, that we ſhould diſtinguiſh Petra or Selah in the country of Moab, or in the eaſtern Idumæa, mentioned Iſaiah xvi. 1. xlii. 11. 2 Kings xiv. 7. which was afterwards called Joktheel, from the other Petra, called Rekem, in the ſouth Idumea, or in Arabia Petræa, or in the country of the Amalekites.

As to the ſituation of this laſt city, it will be difficult enough to determine it. Strabo, lib. xvi. places it three or four days journey from Jericho, and five days journey from the foreſt of palm-trees, on the Red-Sea. Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 28. places it 600 miles from Gaza, and 125 from the Perſian gulph. But Cellarius and Reland think that the numbers have been changed, that we ought to read 125 miles from Gaza, and 600 from the Perſian gulph. Euſebius places Theman five miles from Petra, Carcaria a day's journey from the ſame city, Beeroth Bene-jacan at ten miles weſt, and the city of Elath at ten miles eaſt.

It is thought that the city of Krak, or Karak, lying on the confines of Arabia and Syria, inclining toward the ſouth, is the ancient Petra in Arabia, formerly its metropolis, and which we find in Ptolemy by the name of Charat-Moab, or Charat Moba; in Stevinus, Mobu-charas; and perhaps Caraca, 2 Macc. xii. 17. and Carcar, Judges xi. 3. Carach or Crat ſignifies a fortreſs, in Chaldee and Syriac. It is known to our hiſtorians by the name of Crak of Montreal. It was long in poſſeſſion of the Chriſtians in the time of the Holy War; but at laſt Saladin took it, A. D. 1188. The Ajubites, his ſucceſſors, enjoyed it till they were driven from thence by the Mamalukes. D'Herbelot thinks, that the name Krak was given it from that of Arak, as it was called by the Jews.

Since that time it has obtained the name of Hag, or Hagiar, which ſignifies a ſtone or rock. It ſtands in the province of Hegiaz, and is diſtant from Jemamah a journey of twenty-four hours. The city of Agr, or Hagiar, has given its name to a country between Syria and Arabia, and which we call Arabia Petræa, where the people of Saleh, i. e. the Themudites, inhabited formerly. There are ſtill ſeen in this country, as the Muſſulmen affirm, the rocks and caves where they hid themſelves, from the anger of God, with which they were threatened by the prophet Saleh. There are alſo ſeen the graves of thoſe who were killed fighting againſt the falſe prophet Muſeilemah, who pretended to do in Yemen what Mahomet had done in Hegiaz.

The city of Hagiar, by its advantageous ſituation, became the capital and fortreſs of the Carmathes, from whence thoſe rebels for a long time infeſted the dominions of the chalifs of Bagdat, and ſo much harraſſed the pilgrims of Mecca, that the pilgrimage was ſuſpended for ſeveral years. Abuſaid built there a caſtle called Hagiarah, which his ſon Abouthaher exceedingly fortified, ſo that afterwards Hagiar paſſed for a place that was impregnable.

There is another city called alſo Hagr, or Hagiar, lying farther in Arabia, which belongs to the province of Baharain.

PEULTHAI, פעלתי, my works, or my work; from פעל pahal, or pohal, to do, or work, and the pronoun י i, my.

PEULTHAI, or Phollati, of the race of the Levites, the eighth in order of the porters of the temple, 1 Chron. xxvi. 5.

PHALLU, פלוא, admirable, or hidden; from פלא phala.

PHALLU, or Pallu, ſecond ſon of Reuben, and father of Eliab. Head of a family, Gen. xlvi. 9. Numb. xxvi. 5.

PHALTI, פלטי, deliverance, or flight; from פלט palat.

PHALTI, or Phaltiel, ſon of Laiſh. He married Michal, Saul's daughter, after Saul had taken her from David; but David afterwards took her from Phalti, 1 Sam. xxv. 44. 2 Sam. iii. 15. See MICHAL.

PHANNIAS, or Phanaſus, ſon of Samuel, of the prieſts, a native of the town of Aphtaſi, Joſephus, de Bello, lib. iv. cap. 5. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 8. ſays, He was a brutiſh and ignorant perſon, not only unworthy of the high-prieſthood, but did not ſo much as know, as he ought, what this office was. After the faction had made themſelves maſters of the temple, they uſurped the power of ſetting up and depoſing the high-prieſts. Matthias, the ſon of Theophilus, was then in poſſeſſion of this dignity. They pretended to appoint him a ſucceſſor, ceſſor, and becauſe that formerly, according to their notions, the high-prieſthood had been given by lot, they proceeded to caſt lots on the ſacerdotal family of Eniakim, (probably the ſame as Jakim, 1 Chron. xxiv. 12. which was the twelfth of the ſacerdotal families) and the lot fell upon Phannias, about A. D. 68. Under his pontificate the temple was deſtroyed by the Romans, A. D. 70.

PHANUEL, פנואל, face, or viſion of God; from פנא pana, to ſee, and אל el, God.

PHANUEL, of Aſhur, father of the holy widow and propheteſs Anna, Luke ii. 36, 37, 38.

PHARAOH, פרעה, that diſperſes, that ſpoils, that diſcovers; from פרע parah: according to the Syriac, the revenger, the deſtroyer, the king, the crocodile.

PHARAOH, a common name of the kings of Egypt. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. that all the kings of Egypt, from Minæus the founder of Memphis, who lived ſeveral ages before Abraham, had the name of Pharaoh, down to the time of Solomon, more than three thouſand three hundred years. He adds, that in the Egyptian language, the word Pharaoh ſignifies a king, and that theſe princes did not aſſume this name, till they aſcended the throne, when they quitted their former name. From hence ſays Joſephus, Herodotus names none of the kings of Egypt after Minæus the builder of Memphis, though he had three hundred and thirty kings for his ſucceſſors, becauſe they had all the name of Pharaoh; but he names an Egyptian queen, Nicaule, who ſucceeded them. I find, adds Joſephus, from the ancient records of our nation, that after the age of Solomon no king of Egypt had the name of Pharaoh.

But Joſephus is not very accurate in this paſſage. True it is, Herodotus ſays, lib. ii. cap. 4, 99, 100. that Mines or Minæus was the firſt king of Egypt, and founder of Memphis; that there were three hundred and thirty kings after him in Egypt; that after them was a queen called Nitocris, (not Nicaule, as Joſephus writes it) but it is not true that theſe kings had no other name but Pharaoh. Herodotus ſays expreſsly, that in the books of the Egyptian prieſts were regiſtered the names of three hundred and thirty kings; that in this number eighteen were Ethiopians; and a woman who was a foreigner, called Nitocris; and that the others were Egyptians: theſe princes therefore had each his proper name in this catalogue. So we ſee in the Fragments of Manetho, that each king of Egypt had a name peculiar to him; and we find the name Pharaoh only in Scripture.

As to what Joſephus ſays, that ſince the time of Solomon, the kings of Egypt had no longer the name of Pharaoh, it is manifeſtly falſe, ſince we find this name under Hezekiah, 2 Kings xviii. 21, under Joſiah, chap. xxiii. 29, 30, &c. where this name is joined to Necho, which was the proper name of this prince; under Jehoiakim, chap. xxiii. 35. and in the prophets Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel; who are much later than Solomon. It is very probable that the Egyptians gave the name of Pharaoh to their kings, as long as the Egyptian language was in common uſe, and as long as their kings were of their own nation. But, after the conqueſt of Egypt by the Perſians, and eſpecially by Alexander the Great, and that the Grecians introduced their language, with their government, the name of Pharaoh ceaſed among them. Vide FRAGMENT, No. LXXXIII, pages 141, 142.

Bochart, de Animal, p. 2. lib. v. cap. 17. thinks, that Pharaoh properly ſignifies the crocodile, and that Ezekiel xxix. 3. alludes to this, when he ſays, Behold I am againſt thee, Pharaoh, king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midſt of his rivers. Le Clerc, in Geneſ. xii. 15. thought he found the true root of the word Pharaoh, in the Arabic verb Pharah, to be exalted, to be ſuperior. Abbot Renaudot, Diſſert. de lingua Cophtica, p. 127. ſays, that Pharaoh is the ſame as the Egyptian word Pouro, which ſignifies a king. F. Kircher, Œdyp. Egypt. lib. i. cap. 76. derives Pharaoh from the root Pharah, which ſometimes ſignifies to deliver; and he who would have Pharaoh to ſignify one who is exempted from the juriſdiction of the laws.

The firſt Pharaoh known to us is he, in whoſe time Abraham went down into Egypt, Gen. xii. 10, &c. A. M. 2084, ante A. D. 1919, whoſe officers brought Sarah into that prince's harem; from which ſhe was not recovered without divine interference. The character of this prince ſeems to have been but indifferent. Vide ABRAHAM III.

The proper name of this king of Egypt is unknown: but it may be ſeen from his hiſtory, that he feared God in ſome degree, and that the true religion was not intirely ſuppreſſed in Egypt.

The ſecond Pharaoh noticed in Scripture, reigned in Egypt in the time of Joſeph, when he was ſold thither by the Iſhmaelitiſh merchants. This prince, or perhaps his ſucceſſor, had the myſterious dream of ſeven fat kine, and ſeven full ears of corn, conſumed by ſeven lean kine, and ſeven barren ears; and he promoted Joſeph to be regent of the whole kingdom, Gen. xlv. 8, 9. This is the ſame Pharaoh who ſent for and entertained tertained the patriarch Jacob, and his family in Egypt.

The third Pharaoh, is he that perſecuted the Iſraelites. Moſes tells us, that he was a NEW king, and had no knowledge of Joſeph. He oppreſſed Iſrael: and directed the deſtruction of their children. His daughter preſerved Moſes, and adopted him. Moſes being grown up, and having killed an Egyptian, who had abuſed a Hebrew, was obliged to fly from Egypt, to avoid that death which Pharaoh had threatened him with.

There is a ſtrong probability, that the Pharaoh before whom Moſes appeared, and in whoſe ſight he ſmote Egypt with plagues, was a different perſon from him who would have ſlain him after he had killed the Egyptian. This Pharaoh being at laſt compelled to ſend the Hebrews out of Egypt, repented of the leave he had given, and purſued them with his army of chariots. But he was drowned in the Red Sea. Some hiſtorians pretend to give us the name of this Pharaoh; ſome, as Appion, call him Amoſis, or Amaſis; Euſebius calls him Chenchris: Uſher calls him Amenophis.

The fifth Pharaoh known to us, is he who gave protection to Hadad, ſon of the king of Edom, 1 Kings xi. 15, 16, 17, 18, about A. M. 2960. who gave him to wife a ſiſter of his own queen, enriched him with lands, and brought up his ſon Genubah in his own court.

The ſixth Pharaoh is he who gave his daughter in marriage to Solomon, king of the Hebrews; 1 Kings iii. 1. ix. 16.

The ſeventh Pharaoh is Shiſhak, who protected Jeroboam, and afforded him a refuge againſt king Solomon his maſter. The ſame Shiſhak declared war againſt Rehoboam, ſon and ſucceſſor of Solomon, beſieged and took Jeruſalem, carried away all the king's treaſures, and thoſe of the houſe of God, 1 Kings xiv. 25. 2 Chron. xii. 2, 5, &c. A. M. 3033. The Chronicles inform us, that the army of Shiſhak conſiſted of twelve hundred chariots, ſixty thouſand horſe, and an infinite number of infantry, compoſed of Libyans, Troglodytes, and Ethiopians; not to reckon the native Egyptians; which gives us a grand idea of the power and magnificence of Shiſhak.

The eighth Pharaoh is he with whom Hezekiah made a league againſt Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria, A. M. 3290. Vide SENNACHERIB and HEZEKIAH. This Pharaoh is probably the ſame whom Herodotus, lib. ii. names Sethon, prieſt of Vulcan, who came to meet Sennacherib before Peluſium, and to whoſe aſſiſtance Vulcan ſent an army of rats, which gnawed the bow-ſtrings, and the thongs of the bucklers, of Sennacherib's ſoldiers.

The ninth is Pharaoh-Necho, or Nechos, ſon of Pſammitichus, who ſubdued Joſiah. Herodotus alſo mentions this prince. See NECHO.

The tenth is Pharaoh Ophrah, who entered into an alliance with Zedekiah, king of Judah, and attempted to aſſiſt him againſt Nebuchadnezzar, king of Chaldea. Againſt this Pharaoh, Ezekiel pronounced ſeveral propheſies, Ezek. xxix. xxx. xxxi. xxxii. He is called Apries in Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 161. He is alſo mentioned Habakkuk ii. 15, 16. Iſaiah xix. xx. Jeremiah xlvi. 17.

This is pretty nearly what the Scriptures relate, concerning the Pharaohs, the ancient kings of Egypt.

Eutychius, patriarch of Alexandria relates, that the Oriental Chriſtians gave the name of Amious to the Pharaoh who was drowned in the Red Sea.

Thoſe who would enter more deeply into this affair, may conſult the Chronicon of Euſebius as given by Scaliger, and the Chronicon of Georgius Syncellus, and Sir Robert Marſham's Canon Chronicus Ægyptiacus, &c.

PHARATHONI, or Phara, a city of Ephraim, 1 Macc. ix. 50. The Greek calls it Pharaton, or Pirathon, which is its name, Judg. xii. ult.

PHAREZ, פרש, horſeman, or rider: otherwiſe, that divides, that expoſes, or that declares; from פרש paraſh, or paras, according to different readings. Son of Machir, 1 Chron. vii. 16.

PHAREZ, פרץ, diviſion, rupture: that breaks forth violently.

PHAREZ, ſon of Judah and Tamar. Tamar being juſt ready to lye in, found herſelf with child of twins. Vide the hiſtory, Gen. xxxviii. 27, 28, &c. The year of the birth of theſe twins is not noticed in Scripture. The ſons of Pharez were Heſron and Hamul. Numb. xxvi. 20, 21.

PHARISEES, Φαρισαῖοι, ſeparated; from פרש, ſeparated, or divided.

PHARISEES. The ſect of the Phariſees was one of the moſt ancient and moſt conſiderable among the Jews; its origin is not very well known. Maccabees 4th, chap. vi. ſays, that in the time of John Hyrcanus the high-prieſt, there were three ſects among the Jews, the Phariſees, the Sadducees, and the Eſſenes. Joſephus, after mentioning the letter of Jonathan to the Lacedemonians, ſpeaks of theſe three ſects; which letter was wrote A. M. 3680, Jonathan died the year following. Simon ſucceeded him, and governed eight years. After Simon, ſucceeded Hyrcanus, who governed twenty-nine years. So that we may may place the riſe of the ſect of the Phariſees about A. M. 3820, ante A. D. 184.

St. Jerome, in Iſai. viii. places the beginning of the Phariſees pretty late; for he ſays, the Scribes and Phariſees proceeded from the diviſion of the two famous ſchools of Hillel and Shammai. It is known from Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 17. that Shammai, or Samæas, lived in the time of Herod the Great; conſequently not long before our Saviour. The Rabbins alſo acknowledge Hillel as founder of the ſect of the Phariſees, or at leaſt as the chief ornament of it. But we make no doubt that it was more ancient; and in credit long before Herod, under Hyrcanus, Alexander Jannæus, and Salome his wife.

The Phariſees take their name from a Hebrew word, which ſignifies diviſion or ſeparation, becauſe they diſtinguiſhed themſelves by a more ſtrict manner of life, of which they made profeſſion. They imputed much to deſtiny or fatality, and to the decrees of God, which have appointed all things before time was. Joſephus, who himſelf was a Phariſee, tells us, in vita ſua initio, & Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 9. that the opinions of this ſect nearly approached thoſe of the Stoicks; who did not aſcribe every thing to deſtiny, but left to men a liberty of doing good actions or not. He adds, that they were much addicted to aſtrology, thinking that by means of the ſtars they might arrive at the fore-knowledge of the ſecrets of Providence.

The ſect of the Phariſees was very numerous and extenſive. The reputation they gained by their learning, and by the regularity of their lives, rendered them very early formidable even to kings. Alexander Jannæus, king of the Jews, was during his whole life at variance with the Phariſees, and often had occaſion to repent it. At his death he told his wife, that if ſhe would reign peaceably, ſhe muſt win the Phariſees to her intereſt. She followed his advice, and the Phariſees taking the opportunity, made themſelves maſters of the government.

When our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt appeared in Judea, the Phariſees were in great credit among the people, becauſe of the reputation of their learning, ſanctity, and exact obſervance of the law. They faſted often, made long prayers, paid tythes ſcrupulouſly, diſtributed much alms: but all this was vitiated by pride, oſtentation, hypocriſy, and ſelf-love. They wore large rolls of parchment on their fore-heads, and wriſts, on which were written certain words of the law; they affected to have fringes and borders at the corners, and hems, of their garments, broader than thoſe of other Jews, as a badge of diſtinction, and as denoting them to be greater obſervers of the law than others.

Epiphanius, hæreſ. 16. relates ſurprizing effects of the great auſterities of the Phariſees. Some almoſt deprived themſelves intirely of ſleep. Others ſlept on a plank of a foot broad, that if they ſhould ſleep too ſoundly, they might fall down on the ground, and being awakened, might go to prayers. Others laid upon ſharp and uneven ſtones; others upon thorns: ſo that even in ſleep they might practiſe mortification.

Some of them, St. Jerom ſays, in Matt. xxiii. 27. fixed thorns to the bottom of their robes, which as they walked might prick their legs, and draw blood from them; that they might make mortification familiar, and be continually obliged to think on God. They often waſhed their hands, and affected great external purity, never entering their houſes, or ſitting down at table, without waſhing. When they had been in the ſtreets, or in the market, for fear they ſhould have touched any unclean thing, they waſhed from their fingers ends up to their very elbows, Mark vii. 4. They would not ſo much as touch a Publican, or any man who they thought led an ill life, nor would they eat, drink, or pray with him, Matt. ix. 11. Luke vii. 39. All the veſſels they uſed, their utenſils, and very beds, were often plunged in water: and they often bathed themſelves in cold water, by way of purification, Joſeph. in vita ſua.

They kept many faſts of ſupererogation. The Phariſee, Luke xviii. 12. boaſts of his faſting twice a week, i. e. Monday and Thurſday, according to Epiphanius, hæreſ. 16. and they did it with greater ſtrictneſs than other Jews. Vide Matth. vi. 16. The Phariſees upbraided our Saviour and his diſciples, for eating and drinking as other men, whereas they and the diſciples of John the Baptiſt faſted often, Mark ii. 18. And Joſephus gives an account, that being young, he put himſelf under the conduct of one called Banneus, a very auſtere man, who ate nothing that was dreſſed or prepared, but contented himſelf with what the earth produced of itſelf.

In matters of religion the traditions of the ancients were their chief ſtudies; to theſe they made additions as they thought fit; making their own opinions to paſs for traditions of the ancients. By this means they over-burthened the law with a vaſt number of trifling obſervances, both uſeleſs and diſguſtful, which made it a heavy and inſupinſupportable yoke. They had even altered and corrupted it, in important articles, by perverſe interpretations: as our Saviour reproaches them, Mark vii. 10, 11, 12.

The obſervation of the ſabbath was another point they had refined upon, and our Saviour had debates with them on this head. They maintained, that on this day it was not allowed ſo much as to heal a ſick perſon, though Chriſt did it by a word ſpeaking, Luke vi. 7. John ix. 16. They found fault, that on this day the people brought their ſick to be healed. They were ſcandalized, that a man carried his bed on the ſabbath-day, after he had been cured of a palſy, Mark ix. 11. John v. 8, 9. From all which they concluded, that Jeſus Chriſt could not be a man ſent from God, becauſe he ſo little obſerved that profound reſt, which they thought due to this day, John ix. 16.

Our Saviour upbraids them with making long prayers, ſtanding in the ſynagogues, or at the corners of the ſtreets; and under pretence of prayer, conſuming widows' houſes. He ſays, they affected to build up the tombs of the old prophets, and openly declared, that they diſapproved of the actions of their forefathers who perſecuted them; while they themſelves were actuated by the ſame ſpirit, and oppoſed all who would reclaim them from their enormities. The followers of this ſect condemned only the actual commiſſion of ſin, and thought themſelves allowed to entertain evil deſires, thoughts, and deſigns, if not attended with outward acts of ſin. Thus Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xii. cap. 13. laughs at Polybius, for thinking the gods had puniſhed Antiochus, for having only formed a deſign to pillage the temple of the goddeſs Diana, though he had not put it in execution.

The Phariſees believed the ſoul to be immortal, and acknowledged the exiſtence of angels and ſpirits; they admitted a kind of tranſmigration of the ſouls of good men, which might paſs from one body to another; whereas thoſe of wicked men were condemned to dwell for ever in priſons of darkneſs, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2. & de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 12. In conſequence of theſe principles, ſome of the Phariſees ſaid, that Jeſus Chriſt was John the Baptiſt, or Elias; or one of the old prophets; Matt. xvi. 14. i. e. that the ſoul of one of thoſe great men had paſſed into the body of our Saviour. They believed alſo the reſurrection of the dead, and admitted all the conſequences of it, againſt the Sadducees who rejected it. Joſephus, who was a Phariſee, believed that the demons that poſſeſſed men, were the ſouls of wicked men, which enter the bodies of other men, and are ſometimes driven from thence by exorciſms. See Matt. viii. 29, 30, 31.

The ſect of the Phariſees was not extinguiſhed by the deſtruction of the temple at Jeruſalem, and by the diſperſion of the Jews. The greater part of the preſent Jews are of this ſect, and equally devoted to their traditions, which they call the Oral Law. He that rejects the oral law is an apoſtate, and deſerves death, ſay the modern Phariſees, or Rabbiniſts. Benjamin of Tudela, who lived about the latter end of the twelfth century, ſays, that in his journey he found Phariſees, who were continually bewailing the deſolation of Sion and Jeruſalem; who abſtained from fleſh, and were always clothed in black, faſting every day except the ſabbath, and perpetually praying for the deliverance of Iſrael.

The opinions of the modern Phariſees are the ſame as thoſe of the ancient. They leave every thing to deſtiny, except what depends on human liberty. They ſay that all things are in the hand of heaven, except the fear of God; i. e. that in the exerciſe of acts of piety they have free will, and may voluntarily determine themſelves to good or evil. M. Baſnage ſays, they do not differ from thoſe who in Holland are called Remonſtrants. Thoſe of this day are leſs ſtrict than the ancients as to food, and other auſterities of the body; but they come nothing ſhort of them in vanity, and tenacity for the pretended traditions of their fathers. They alſo hold a kind of metempſychoſis, or revolution of ſouls. The fathers who have written concerning hereſies, have made a hereſy of the Phariſees, as if thoſe who made profeſſion of this ſect had been ſeparated from the body of the Jews, as among us, heretics are excommunicated and rejected by the Orthodox: but it was not ſo with the Jewiſh ſects. Whatever abuſes and corruptions might prevail among them, whether in manners or opinions, they were united in communion with the other Iſraelites. The Phariſees and the Sadducees even diſcharged the chief offices of religion and the ſtate.

PHARPAR, פרפר, that produces fruits: or the bull of the bull; from פרה parah, to produce, or from פר par, a bull.

PHARPAR, or Pharphar, one of the rivers of Damaſcus, or rather an arm of the Barrady or Chryſorrhoas, which waters the city of Damaſcus and the country about it, 2 Kings v. 12. The river of Damaſcus has its fountain in the mountains of Libanus. Near the city it is divided into three ſtreams, one of which paſſes through Damaſcus, the other two water the gardens round about; then re-uniting, they loſe themſelves four or five leagues north of the city. See Maundrell's Travels from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

PHARURIM, פרורים, Φαρϐρεὶμ, kettle, or caldron: from פרר parar: or ſuburbs; from פרור paruar.

PHARURIM. Nathan-melech, eunuch to king Joſiah, had his dwelling at Pharurim, near the entrance of the temple. The Chaldee, and moſt interpreters, think Pharurim ſignifies the ſuburbs. We find 1 Chron. xxvi. 18. a place weſt of the temple, called Parbar. I imagine Pharurim, or Phrurim, is the ſame as Phrourion in Greek, which ſignifies a watch or guard. Nathan-melech had his abode near the body of the guard of the temple.

PHASE, פסח, Φασὴ, paſſage. See PASSOVER.

PHASELIS, Φασηλὶς, paſſage, or halting of the birth, or of the generation; from פסח paſac, to paſs, or to halt, and from ילד jalad, to bring forth, to be born. The true etymology of this word is unknown. 1 Macc. xv. 23.

I. PHASAEL, eldeſt ſon of Antipater the Idumæan, and brother of Herod the Great. Hyrcanus the high-prieſt and prince of the Jews, having committed to Antipater the chief government of the country, he made his eldeſt ſon Phaſael general of the Jewiſh army, and governor of Jeruſalem and round about. On ſeveral occaſions Phaſael proved his valour and conduct. He beat Felix, who intended to revenge on him the death of Malichus, whom his brother Herod had cauſed to be ſlain at Tyre. Some time afterwards the Jews accuſed the two brothers, Phaſael and Herod to Mark Anthony, as having uſurped the whole authority, and left Hyrcanus only the name of prince. But Herod ſo well inſinuated himſelf into Anthony's favour, that his enemies were forced to drop their cauſe.

During the war of Antigonus againſt Herod, Pacorus ſon to the king of the Parthians entering Judea, reſolved to place Antigonus on the throne. He cauſed Barzaphernes with his troops to enter Galilee, and ſent before him towards Jeruſalem one Pacorus, cup-bearer to the king of Perſia, with a body of horſe. Pacorus advanced with Antigonus to Jeruſalem, where they firſt made themſelves maſters of the city, and then of the temple. Herod and Phaſael, who had ſided with Hyrcanus, having ſhut themſelves up in the royal palace, Pacorus ſtaid in the ſuburbs with his people. But Antigonus having deſired him to come into the city, Phaſael went to meet him, and received him into his houſe. Pacorus pretending to deſire to appeaſe theſe commotions, adviſed Phaſael to come with him into Galilee, to meet Barzaphernes, and to treat of peace. Phaſael fell into this ſnare, and followed Pacorus into Galilee; where Barzaphernes at firſt received him very kindly, making him preſents; but afterwards cauſed him to be apprehended, and put in priſon. This treachery was ſo reſented by Phaſael, that he daſhed out his own brains againſt the walls of his priſon. Joſeph de Bello, lib. i. cap. 8. p. 725. A. M. 3957, ante A. D. 47.

II. PHASAEL, ſon of Phaſael, who afterwards married Salampſo his couſin german, daughter of Herod the Great.

PHASAELE, a ſquare tower built by Herod at Jeruſalem, in honour of his brother; it was forty cubits ſquare, and forty in height. Above this height were porticoes, ſupported by arches; and in the midſt of theſe porticoes was a ſecond tower raiſed, adorned with fine apartments and magnificent buſts, having parapets and redoubts above them. The whole height might be about ninety cubits. Joſeph. de Bello, lib. vi. cap. 6.

PHASAELIS, a city three leagues from Jordan, in a plain, on the brook Carith. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. i. cap. 16. lib. xvii. cap. 9. that Herod built it in honour of his brother; north of Jericho. He ſays nothing that it was built beyond Jordan, as they make travellers believe.

PHASIRON, Φασιρὼν, the ſong of the mouth; from פה pe, and שיר ſhir, a ſong: otherwiſe, flat, or ſtreight mouth; from ישר jaſhar. 1 Macc. ix. 66.

PHEBE, Φοίϐη, ſhining, pure; from the Greek word Φοῖϐος.

PHEBE, a deaconeſs of the port of Corinth, called Cenchrea. St. Paul had a particular eſteem for this holy woman; and Theodoret, ad Rom. xvi. thinks the apoſtle lodged at her houſe for ſome time, while he continued in or near Corinth. It is thought ſhe carried to Rome the epiſtle he wrote to the Romans, wherein ſhe is commended, Rom. xvi. 1, 2. Some moderns have advanced a notion, that Phebe was wife to St. Paul, but none of the ancients have ſaid any thing like it. It is thought in quality of deaconeſs ſhe was employed by the church in ſome miniſtrations ſuitable to her ſex and condition; ſuch as, to viſit and inſtruct Chriſtian women, to attend them in ſickneſs, diſtribute alms to them, &c. The martyrologies mention Phebe September 3.

PHENICE, Φοινίκη, red, or purple; from the Greek Φοινικὲς: otherwiſe, palm-tree; from Φοίνιξ PHENICE, a port of the iſland of Crete, to the weſt. St. Paul anchored at Phenice, when he was carried to Rome, Acts xxvii. 12. A. D. 60.

PHENICIA, Φοινίχη, a province.

PHENICIA, a province of Syria, whoſe limits have have not always been the ſame. Sometimes its extent has been defined from north to ſouth, from Orthoſia to Peluſium, Vide Herodot. lib. iv. cap. 39. & lib. vii. cap. 89. Strabo, lib. 16. At other times its ſouthern limit has been Mount Carmel and Ptolemais. From the conqueſt of Paleſtine by the Hebrews, its limits were narrow, and excluded the country of the Philiſtines, which occupied the coaſt from Mount Carmel along the Mediterranean, toward Egypt. It had alſo little extent on the land ſide, becauſe the Iſraelites, who had Galilee, confined it to the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea.

Thus when we ſpeak of Phenicia, we muſt have a right notion of the time. Before Joſhua conquered Paleſtine, the country was poſſeſſed by Canaanites, the ſons of Ham, who were divided into eleven families, of which the moſt powerful was that of Canaan the founder of Sidon, and head of the Canaanites properly ſo called, whom the Greeks named Phœnicians. Only theſe preſerved their independance under Joſhua; alſo under David, Solomon, and the ſucceeding kings: but they were ſubdued by the kings of Aſſyria, and Chaldea. Afterwards they ſucceſſively obeyed the Perſians, Greeks, and Romans. At this day Phenicia is in ſubjection to the Ottomans, not having had any national or native kings, or any independent form of government, for more than two thouſand years: for the kings that the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, Perſians, and Grecians ſometimes eſtabliſhed, were tributary, and had but a precarious authority.

The chief cities of Phenicia were Sidon, Tyre, Ptolemais, Ecdippe, Sarepta, Beryth, Biblos, Tripoli, Orthoſia, Simira, Aradus. The Phenicians alſo anciently poſſeſſed ſome cities in Libanus. Sometimes the Greek authors comprehend all Judea under the name of Phenicia. In the ancient Notitia Eccleſiaſtica, they diſtinguiſh Phenicia above the ſea, and Phenicia of Libanus. The firſt contained the cities of Tyre, Beryth, Arca, Gegarta, Paneas, Trierii, Sidon, Biblos, Orthoſia, Aradus, Gonaiticus Saltus, Ptolemais, Tripoli, Botrys, Antaradus, Politiana. Phenicia of Libanus contained Edeſſa, Abila, Juſtinianopolis, Gonaiticus Saltus, Laodicea, Damaſcus, Palmyra, Salaminia, Heliopolis, the diſtrict of Jambrudes, the diſtrict of Magludes, the Eaſtern diſtrict. By this may be ſeen the then great extent of Phenicia.

PHENICIANS. Herodotus ſays, lib. iv. cap. 104, that the Phenicians inhabited at firſt on the Red-Sea, whence they removed and ſettled on the Mediterranean, between Syria and Egypt. This may be eaſily reconciled with Moſes, who ſays they came from Ham, who peopled Egypt and the neighbouring countries. The name Phenicia is not in the books of Hebrew Scripture; but in the Maccabees, and New Teſtament. The Hebrew always reads Canaan. St. Matthew, who wrote either in Hebrew or Syriac, calls her a Canaanitiſh woman, Matth. xv. 22. whom St. Mark, writing in Greek, calls a Syro-phenician, or a Phenician of Syria; becauſe Phenicia then made a part of Syria, and to diſtinguiſh the people from the Phenicians of Africa, or the Carthaginians. The name Phenician is derived, either from the palm-tree, in Greek Phoinix, which is very common in Phenicia; or from a Tyrian called Phœnix, ſpoke of in fable; or from the Red-Sea, from the ſhores of which it is pretended they came. Phœnix ſometimes ſignifies red, whence comes Puniceus and Phœniceus Color. Others derive it from the Hebrew Pinchas, or Phineas; Bochart from Bene-anak, ſons of Anak. The giants, the ſons of Anak, were very famous in Paleſtine, Vide Bochart. Chanaan. lib. i. cap. 1.

Many fine inventions have been aſcribed to the Phenicians; as particularly the art of writing.

> Phœnices primi, famæ ſi creditur, auſi
> Manſuram rudibus vocem ſignare figuris.
> LUCAN. lib. iii. v. 22.

It is ſaid alſo, they diſcovered the art of navigation, commerce, aſtronomy, voyages in the open ſea, Dionyſ. v. 904. Bochart, by incredible labour and induſtry, has ſhewn, that they had ſent out colonies, and had left traces of their language in almoſt all the iſles, and on all the coaſts of the Mediteranean ſea. The moſt famous of their colonies was Carthage. It is thought that at Joſhua's invaſion many of them retired into Africa and other places. Procopius ſays, Vandalicis, lib. ii. cap. 10. that at Tingis in Africa were found two columns of white marble, near the great fountain, whereon was read in Phenician characters; We are the people who took our flight from before the robber Jeſus the ſon of Nave. Vide AFRICA, CANAAN.

PHERORAS, fourth ſon of Antipater, and brother of Herod the Great. He is not much known in Jewiſh hiſtory, except by his wicked artifices; and the confuſion he occaſioned in the royal family of his brother. He was the chief cauſe of the death of Mariamne, the wife of Herod, and alſo of his two ſons Alexander and Ariſtobulus. He refuſed to marry his niece Salampſo, his brother's daughter, becauſe he was in love with a ſervant maid whom he kept. Antiq. lib. xvi. chap. 11. However, afterwards he married Cypros, another of his brother's daughters, and joined in the conſpiracy of Antipater againſt Herod. He withdrew from from Jeruſalem to beyond Jordan, and reſolved never more to ſee his brother. He kept his word, and would not come to Jeruſalem, though ſent for by Herod, when ill of a dangerous ſickneſs. But Herod did not do the ſame by him; for in Pheroras's laſt ſickneſs he went to ſee him, and ſhewed him all the tokens of brotherly affection. Pheroras being about to die, cauſed a box of poiſon to be burnt, which Antipater had provided, and which was intended for Herod. Herod made a magnificent funeral for Pheroras, and knew not till after his death, the ſecret meaſures concerted between Pheroras and Antipater, to poiſon him. This diſcovery was the beginning of Antipater's misfortunes. Joſeph. loco citato. A. M. 3999, ante A. D. 4.

PHIALE, a famous fountain, or lake, at the foot of mount Hermon, from whence Jordan derives its ſtream. The Greek name Phiale was given it, from its reſemblance to a great baſon. Joſephus relates, de Bello, lib. iii. chap. 18. that an hundred and twenty furlongs from Ceſarea Philippi, on the road leading to Trachonitis, the lake Phiale may be ſeen perfectly round like a wheel, in which the water is always up to the brim, neither increaſing nor diminiſhing. It was unknown that this was the ſource of Jordan, until Philip, Tetrarch of Galilee, threw chaff and ſtraw into the lake, which found a paſſage through the ſubterraneous channels to Panium, from whence it was uſually thought Jordan had its ſource. See MAGEDAN or DALMANUTHA. The name Phiale has been given to ſeveral other lakes, or reſervoirs of water. Reland. Palæſt. lib. i. chap. 41.

PHICHOL, פיכל, Φιχὼρ, The mouth of all, or every tongue; from פה pe, a mouth, tongue, or word, and כלל calal, all: otherwiſe, perfection, or compleating of the mouth; from pe, a mouth, and כלה calah, to complete.

PHICHOL, or Phicol, general of the army of Abimelech king of Gerar. See ABRAHAM, ABIMELECH. Gen. xxi. 22.

PHILADELPHIA, Φιλαδελφία, love of a brother, or of fraternity; from Φίλος, a friend, and ἀδέλφος, a brother.

PHILADELPHIA, a city of Myſia, in Aſia Minor. When St. John the Evangeliſt wrote his Revelations, the angel or biſhop of the church here was a very holy man, vide Rev. iii. 7. It is unknown who this biſhop of Philadelphia was: Aureolus and De Lyra think it was St. Quadratus, a diſciple of the apoſtles, and an apologiſt for the Chriſtian religion, who preſented an apology to the emperor Adrian. The Greeks in their office give him the name of an apoſtle; and Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. chap. 37. calls him an evangeliſt, becauſe he had devoted himſelf to go from province to province to preach the goſpel. But none of the ancients ſay, that Quadratus was biſhop of Philadelphia.

II. PHILADELPHIA, otherwiſe Rabbath, or Rabbath Ammon, Rabbath of the children of Ammon, or Rabat-amana, the capital of the Ammonites, was ſituated in the mountains of Gilead, toward the ſource of the river Arnon. It is ſometimes mentioned as belonging to Arabia, ſometimes to Cœleſyria. Euſebius places it ten miles from Jazer eaſt. It is very probable this city was the reſidence of king Og, ſince in the time of Moſes they ſtill ſhewed his iron bed, nine cubits long, and four cubits broad. Deut. iii. 11. Philadelphia was one of the ten cities of Decapolis beyond Jordan. Plin. lib. v. c. 18. Joſephus extends Perea, or the region beyond Jordan to Philadelphia. Joſeph de Bello, lib. iii. cap. 2. See RABBATH AMMON. It is ſaid this city received its name from Ptolomy Philadelphus king of Egypt. St. Ignatius the Martyr, very probably, preached the goſpel here; and to the church of this place he wrote his epiſtle, directed to the Philadelphians.

PHILADELPHUS. Ptolomy Philadelphus king of Egypt. See PTOLEMY and SEPTUAGINT.

PHILARCHES, Φιλάρχης, lover of the prince; from Φίλος, a friend, and ἄρχος, a prince.

PHILARCHES, was a very wicked man, killed by the Jews, with Timotheus general of the Syrian troops. 2 Macc. viii. 32.

PHILELLEN, Φιλέλλην, a friend to the Greeks. They gave this ſurname to Ariſtobulus king of the Jews, ſon and ſucceſſor of Alexander Jannæus: Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 19. Χρηματίσας Φιλέλλην. And to many eaſtern princes. Vide "JEWISH COINS," Plate II.

PHILEMON, Φιλήμων, that kiſſes, or is affectionate; from Φίλημα, a kiſs.

PHILEMON, a rich citizen of Coloſſæ in Phrygia. He was converted to the Chriſtian faith, with Appia his wife, by Epaphras, a diſciple of St. Paul; for St. Paul himſelf did not preach at Coloſſæ. Coloſſ. ii. 1. Ita Interp. Chryſoſt. homil. in Col. ii. 1. Perhaps we ſhould have known nothing of Philemon, had it not been on account of his ſlave Oneſimus, who having robbed him, and run away from him to Rome, there found St. Paul, and was very ſerviceable to him. St. Paul converted him, baptized him, and ſent him back to his maſter Philemon, to whom he wrote a letter. Philemon had made a church of his houſe, and his domeſtics, as well as himſelf, were of the houſehold of faith. His charity, liberality, and compaſſion, were a refuge to all in diſtreſs.

treſs. The apoſtolical conſtitutions ſay, lib. 7. c. 46. that St. Paul made him biſhop of Coloſſæ, but the Menæa inſinuate, that he went to Gaza in Paleſtine, of which he was the apoſtle and firſt biſhop. From thence he returned to Coloſſæ, where he ſuffered martyrdom with Appia his wife, in the time of Nero. They relate ſeveral particulars of his martyrdom, and ſay, that his body remained at Coloſſæ, where it performed ſeveral miracles. His name is in the martyrologies November 22.

PHILETUS, Φιλητὸς, amiable, or who is beloved; from Φιληθεὶς.

PHILETUS. St. Paul writing to Timothy, 2 Tim. ii. 16, 17, 18. A. D. 65. and a little while before his own martyrdom, ſpeaks of Hymenæus and Philetus; who concerning the truth have erred, ſaying, that the reſurrection is paſt already. We have nothing very certain concerning Philetus; for we make ſmall account of what is read in the falſe Abdias, in the life of St. James major, even ſuppoſing this author has not put the name of Philetus inſtead of Phygellus.

PHILIP, Φίλιππος, warlike, or a lover of horſes.

I. PHILIP, king of Macedon, and father of Alexander the Great, is ſpoke of in Scripture, only by incident, on occaſion of his ſon Alexander. Philip was killed at Egea, a city of Macedonia, by Pauſanias ſon of Ceraſtus, while he was celebrating the nuptials of his daughter Cleopatra with Alexander king of Epirus; A. M. 3668. Alexander the Great, in his letter to Darius, aſſerts, that the Perſians, for a great reward, had engaged the murderers of his father to this crime. Diodor. an. 1. Olymp. 111. Juſt. lib. ix. cap. 6. Q. Curt. lib. iv. chap. 1. Arrian. lib. 2.

II. PHILIP, ſurnamed Arideus, brother of Alexander the Great, ſucceeded him in the kingdom of Macedonia, A. M. 3681. He was put to death in 3687, ante A. D. 317.

III. PHILIP, foſter-brother of Antiochus Epiphanes, a Phrygian by birth, and very much in Antiochus's favour. 2 Macc. ix. 29. This prince made him governor of Jeruſalem, where he committed many outrages on the Jews, to force them to forſake their religion. Seeing that Apollonius and Seron were defeated by Judas Maccabeus, he ſent for new ſuccours to Ptolomy governor of Cœle-Syria, who ſent him Gorgias and Nicanor with a powerful army. Some time after, Antiochus going beyond the Euphrates, to extort money from the people, Philip went with him; Antiochus finding himſelf near his end, made him regent of the kingdom, put his diadem into his hand, his royal cloak, and his ring, that he might render them to his ſon the young Antiochus Eupator. But Lyſias having taken poſſeſſion of the government in the name of young Eupator, who was but a child, Philip not being able to cope with him, durſt not return into Syria; but he went into Egypt, carrying the body of Epiphanes with him, there to implore aſſiſtance from Ptolomy Philometor, againſt Lyſias the uſurper of the government of Syria. The year following, while Lyſias was buſy in his war againſt the Jews, Philip got into Syria, and took poſſeſſion of Antioch. But Lyſias returning into the country with great diligence, retook Antioch, and put Philip to death, who was taken in the city. A. M. 3840. Joſeph. Antiq. l. xii. cap. 15.

IV. PHILIP, ſon of Herod the Great, by one of his wives called Cleopatra. He married Salome the daughter of Herod ſurnamed Philip, and of Herodias; who is ſo well known in the goſpel, by the death of John the Baptiſt; and Salome her daughter, the wife of Philip, is ſhe who danced before Herod, and aſked for the head of that holy forerunner of Chriſt. In the will of Herod, Philip was named after Archelaus, and he bore the title of Tetrarch of Trachonitis, Gaulanitis, Batanea, and Paneas. Antiq. lib. 17. cap. 10. While Archelaus went to Rome, to ſolicit the confirmation of his father's will from Auguſtus, he left his brother Philip in Judea to govern it. Some time after, Verus governor of Syria ſent Philip to Rome alſo, to aſſiſt his brother Archelaus, or to take care of his own intereſts.

As ſoon as Auguſtus had confirmed Herod's will, Philip returned into his Tetrarchy, and lived there many years as a peaceable and moderate prince, contented with his condition, and placing his delight in well-governing his people. When he went abroad, if any one applied to him for juſtice, he preſently ſtopt, in what place ſoever he was, cauſed a tribunal to be ſet, whch he always carried with him for that purpoſe, gave the parties a hearing, and determined the cauſe on the ſpot. He built the walls round the city of Paneas, and gave it the name of Ceſarea Philippi. He alſo enlarged the town of Bethſaida, on the lake Genneſareth, and gave it the name of Julias, in honour of Julia the daughter of Auguſtus. He died A. D. 33, after 37 years reign, the 20th year of the emperor Tiberius. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 6.

V. PHILIP, otherwiſe Herod-Philip, He is called Philip, in St. Mark vi. 17. and Luke iii. 19. and Herod. in St. Matthew xiv. 3. ſon of Herod the Great, and of the ſecond Mariamne daughter of Simon the high-prieſt. This Herod-Philip married Herodias, by whom he had Salome, who danced before Herod (as mentioned in the foregoing going article). Herodias left him, and married Herod-Antipas his brother. See Herod-Antipas, and Herod-Philip, HERODIAS.

VI. PHILIP the apoſtle: native of Bethſaida in Galilee. Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 31. ſays he was a married man, and had ſeveral daughters. Jeſus Chriſt invited him to follow him, John i. 43, 44, &c. Philip followed him; and ſoon after, finding Nathanael, Philip ſaid to him, We have found the Meſſiah. Then he brought Nathanael to Jeſus; and they were with him at the marriage of Cana in Galilee. Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromat. lib. iii. mentions it as a thing univerſally acknowledged, that it was Philip who gave our Saviour the anſwer, Let me firſt go to bury my father, Matth. viii. 21, 22. Tertullian, de Baptiſmo, cap. 12. aſſures us, that it was one of the apoſtles, but the evangeliſts do not ſay it was this apoſtle, and it would be ſtrange, that St. John, who tells us ſo particularly what Chriſt ſaid to Philip, at his call to the apoſtleſhip, ſhould not mention ſo remarkable a circumſtance.

St. Philip was called at the very beginning of our Saviour's miſſion, A. D. 30. and about a year afterwards he was appointed an apoſtle. When our Saviour intended to feed five thouſand men, he aſked St. Philip, only to prove him, whence bread might be bought for ſuch a multitude? Philip anſwered, that, two hundred pennyworth would not be ſufficient for every one to taſte a little, vide John vi. 5, 6, 7. Luke vi. 13. Mat. x. 2. Some Gentiles, having a curioſity to ſee Jeſus Chriſt, a little before his paſſion, they addreſſed themſelves to St. Philip, who mentioned it to St. Andrew, and theſe two together to Chriſt, John xii. 20, 22. At the laſt ſupper, Philip aſked our Saviour, that he would pleaſe to ſhew them the Father, and that was all they deſired. But Jeſus anſwered them, that ſeeing the Son, they ſaw the Father alſo, John xiv. 8, 10. This is all we find of him in the goſpel.

Clemens Alexandrinus ſays, Strom. lib. iii. p. 448. that St. Philip married ſome of his daughters. Theodoret ſays, in Pſal. cxvi. he preached in the two Phrygias; and Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 31. ſays he was buried at Hierapolis in Phrygia Pacatiana. Polycrates, biſhop of Epheſus, apud Euſeb. lib. v. cap. 24. aſſures us, that St. Philip, with St. John, celebrated the paſſover on the fourteenth day of the moon. The ſame author ſeems to ſay, Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 39. that Papias had been informed by the daughters of St. Philip, that a dead man had been reſtored to life in the time of this apoſtle. The falſe hiſtories that we have of St. Philip, pretend that he died at the age of fourſcore and ſeven years, under Domitian or Trajan. There hath been a book of Acts falſely imputed to this apoſtle, which was condemned by pope Gelaſius: as alſo a Goſpel uſed by the Gnoſtics, Epiphan. hæreſ. 26. cap. 13. The Bollandiſts may be conſulted, May 1.

As to his daughters, Polycrates, biſhop of Epheſus ſays, that two of them lived in virginity, and were buried with their father at Hierapolis, Euſeb. lib. iii. cap. 31. Polycrates ſpeaks alſo of another daughter of St. Philip, who lived in great ſanctity, and died at Epheſus. This is, probably, ſhe who was married; and, perhaps, it was this whom the Greeks honoured by the name of Hermione, who, they ſay, was buried at Epheſus, and was daughter of Philip the apoſtle, Vid. Valeſ. Not. in Euſeb. p. 55.

VII. PHILIP, the ſecond of the ſeven deacons, Acts vi. 5. This deacon, they ſay, was of Ceſarea in Paleſtine. It is certain, his daughters lived in that city, Acts xxi. 8, 9. After the death of Stephen, all the Chriſtians, except the apoſtles, having left Jeruſalem, and being diſperſed in ſeveral places, St. Philip went to preach at Sebaſte or Samaria, where he performed ſeveral miracles, and converted many perſons: Acts viii. 1, 2, 5, &c. He baptized them; but informed the apoſtles at Jeruſalem, that Samaria had received the word of God; that they might come, and communicate the Holy Ghoſt to them. Peter and John came thither for that purpoſe. Simon Magus had been admitted to baptiſm, among others, by St. Philip. Vide MAGUS.

St. Philip was, probably, at Samaria, when an angel commanded him to go on the road that leads from Jeruſalem to Old Gaza: (for there were two cities of Gaza, the Old and the New; the Old was then forſaken, and was on the road to Egypt.) Philip obeyed, and there met with an Ethiopian eunuch, belonging to Candace queen of Ethiopia, whom he converted and baptized. See the hiſtory, Acts viii. 26. Being come out of the water, the ſpirit of the Lord took away Philip, and the eunuch ſaw him no more. Some ancient Greek manuſcripts intimate, and ſome of the fathers read in this place, that the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon the eunuch, as ſoon as he was baptized. See Mills's Various Lections on the New Teſtament. But Philip was found again at Azotus, and preached the goſpel in all the cities he paſſed through, till he returned to Ceſarea of Paleſtine, which is about thirty leagues from Azotus.

Scripture does not inform us what Philip did after this time, in A. D. 33. The modern Greeks ſay, ſay, that this holy deacon went to Tralles in Aſia, where he founded a church, of which he was the apoſtle and biſhop, and where he reſted in peace, after performing many miracles. The Latins, after Uſuard and Ado, ſay, June 6, that he died in peace at Ceſarea, and that three of his daughters were there buried with him. Ado adds, that the fourth died at Epheſus; but he has miſtaken this fourth daughter of Philip the deacon, for St. Hermione, daughter of Philip the apoſtle, of the former article. Caius alſo, an ancient prieſt of the Romiſh church, apparently confounds the daughters of Philip the deacon, with thoſe of Philip the apoſtle, when he ſays, that the four daughters of the deacon dwelt at Hierapolis in Phrygia, Caius apud Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. iii. cap. 31. When St. Paula came to Ceſarea, A. D. 386, ſhe had a mind to ſee the houſe of St. Philip, and the chambers of his daughters. Hieronym. Ep. 27. The Greeks celebrate the feaſt of Philip the deacon, October 11.

PHILIPPI, Φίλιπποι, from Philip.

PHILIPPI, a city of Macedonia, and a Roman colony, Acts xvi. 12, 13, &c. St. Paul came to preach here A. D. 52. and converted ſeveral people; among others, Lydia, a ſeller of purple. He alſo caſt out a pythonic ſpirit from a ſervant-maid. Her maſters ſtirred up the whole city againſt Paul; and the magiſtrates cauſed him to be ſeized, whipped, and put in priſon. But the day following they made excuſes for their ill treatment.

PHILIPPIANS: the Philippians were always full of acknowledgment, for the faith they had received from God, by the miniſtry of St. Paul. They aſſiſted him on ſeveral occaſions, Phil. iv. 16. They ſent him money while in Achaia; and being informed that he was a priſoner at Rome, they ſent a deputation to him by Epaphroditus their biſhop, to be ſerviceable to him, Phil. iv. 12, 18. A. D. 61. Epaphroditus fell ſick; and St. Paul, in order to deliver the Philippians from their concern, at the hearing of his ſickneſs, ſent Epaphroditus to them again, when he was recovered, and by him the epiſtle which we have remaining: in which he commends their liberality, and ſhews great acknowledgment, for their readineſs. See PAUL.

PHILISTINES, פלשתים, Φυλιςιείμ, thoſe that dwell in villages. See PALESTINE.

PHILISTINES, a people that came from the Iſle of Caphtor, (vide CAPHTOR, i. e. Crete,) into Paleſtine, Amos ix. 7. Jerem. xlvii. 4. being deſcendants from the Caphtorim, who came from the Caſluhim, children of Mizraim, as Moſes informs us, Gen. x. 13, 14. and, by conſequence, originally from Mizraim, father of the Egyptians. Moſes ſays, Deut. ii. 23. that the Caphtorim, being come out of Caphtor, drove out the Avim which dwelt from Hazerim to Azzah (or Gaza), and dwelt in their ſtead: therefore, it is only ſince the time of the Avim (or Avites), or Canaanites, that the Philiſtines came into Paleſtine, and poſſeſſed that country. We do not know the time of their coming out of Caphtor; but they had been long in Canaan, when Abraham came thither, A. M. 2083.

The name Philiſtine is not Hebrew. The Septuagint generally tranſlate פלישתים by Αλλόφυλοι, Allophyloi, ſtrangers. The Pelethites and Cherethites were alſo Philiſtines; and the LXX. ſometimes tranſlate Cherethim, by Cretai, Cretes, כרתים Κρῆτες, vide Ezek. xxv. 16. Zeph. ii. 5. 6.

The Caſluhim, or Caſluchim, the fathers of the Caphtorim, dwelt originally in Pentapolis Cyrenaica, according to the paraphraſt Jonathan; or in the canton Pentaſchenites of Lower Egypt, according to the Jeruſalem paraphraſt. We find in Marmorica, the city of Axilis, or Azylis; and in Libya bordering on Egypt, Sagylis, or Satylis; and this out of Ptolemy. Theſe names have a ſenſible reſemblance to Caſluhim. This country is near Egypt, where the children of Mizraim had their ſettlement: it is over-againſt Crete. Strabo, lib. xvii. p. 837, allows but a thouſand furlongs between the port of Cyrene, and that of Crete, called Criou Metapon, or the Ram's Forehead. There was, heretofore, a great intercourſe between Cyreniaca and Crete, as appears from Strabo and Pliny: it is therefore probable, that the Caſluhim ſent colonies to this iſland from Cyreniaca, which afterwards paſſed to the coaſts of Paleſtine.

Beſides the conformity which is obſervable between the words Cherethim and Crete, we alſo find a great reſemblance between the manners, the arms, the deities, the cuſtoms of the Philiſtines, and the Cretans.

The Philiſtines were a powerful people in Paleſtine even in Abraham's time, ſince they had then kings, and conſiderable cities. They are not in the number of the nations devoted to extermination, and whoſe territory the Lord had abandoned to the Hebrews. They were not of the curſed ſeed of Canaan. However, Joſhua did not forbear to give their land to the Hebrews, and to attack them by command from the Lord, becauſe they poſſeſſed a country promiſed to Iſrael. But theſe conqueſts of Joſhua muſt have been ill maintained, ſince under the Judges, under Saul, and at the beginning of the reign of king David, the Philiſtines had their kings, and their lords, which they called Sazenim; ſince their ſtate was divided into five little kingdoms, or ſatrapies, and ſince they oppreſſed the Iſraelites during the government of the high-prieſt Eli, and of Samuel, and during the reign of Saul, for about 120 years, from A. M. 2848 to 2960. True it is, that Shamgar, Sampſon, Samuel, and Saul, oppoſed them, and killed ſome of their people, but did not reduce their power. They continued independent till David, who ſubdued them, 2 Sam. v. 17. viii. 1, 2, &c.

They continued in ſubjection to the kings of Judah down to the reign of Jehoram, ſon of Jehoſhaphat, about 246 years, from A. M. 2960, when they were ſubdued by David, to A. M. 3116, when they revolted from Jehoram, 2 Chron. xxi. 16. Jehoram made war againſt them, and probably reduced them to his obedience again, becauſe it is obſerved in Scripture, that they revolted again from Uzziah, who kept them to their duty during his whole reign, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7. Uzziah began to reign in 3194. During the unfortunate reign of Ahaz, the Philiſtines made great havock in the territory of Judah; but his ſon and ſucceſſor Hezekiah, ſubdued them again, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. 2 Kings xviii. 8. Laſtly, they regained their full liberty under the later kings of Judah; and we may ſee by the menaces made againſt them by the prophets Iſaiah, Amos, Zephaniah, Jeremiah and Ezekiel, that they brought a thouſand hardſhips and calamities on the children of Iſrael, for which God threatened to puniſh them with great misfortunes.

Eſar-haddon, ſucceſſor to Sennacherib, beſieged Azoth and took it, by the arms of his general Thaſthan, or Tartan. Pſammiticus, king of Egypt, took the ſame city, after a ſiege of twenty-nine years, according to Herodotus, lib. ii. cap. 157. and this is the longeſt ſiege of any known. During the ſiege of Tyre, which held out thirteen years, Nebuchadnezzar uſed part of his army to ſubdue the Ammonites, the Moabites, the Egyptians, and other nations bordering on the Jews. There is great probability that the Philiſtines could not withſtand him, but were reduced to his obedience, as well as the other people of Syria, Phenicia and Paleſtine. Afterwards, they fell under the dominion of the Perſians, then under that of Alexander the Great, who deſtroyed the city of Gaza, Strabo, lib. xxvi. Arrian, lib. ii. de Expedit. Alexand. the only city of the Phenicians that dared to oppoſe him. After the perſecution of Antiochus Epiphanes, the Aſmoneans took by degrees ſeveral cities from the country of the Philiſtines, which they ſubjected. Tryphon, regent of the kingdom of Syria, gave to Jonathan the Aſmonean, the government of the whole coaſt of the Mediterranean, from Tyre to Egypt; conſequently all the country of the Philiſtines. The name Paleſtine comes from Philiſtine, although theſe people poſſeſſed but a ſmall part of this country.

PHILISTIA, פלשת, ἀλλόφυλοι, the country of the Philiſtines.

PHILO, a famous Jewiſh author, of the city of Alexandria, and of the race of the prieſts. He was brother to Alexander Lyſimachus, alabarch, or chief of the Jews, who in great numbers inhabited that city. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 10. calls him an illuſtrious man in every thing. He made himſelf ſo famous by his eloquence, and by his knowledge of the philoſophy of Plato, that it was commonly ſaid of him at Alexandria, either Philo imitates Plato, or Plato imitates Philo. Hieronym. de viris illuſt. cap. 11. Photius Cod. 105 And the learned call him the Jewiſh Plato, or the ſecond Plato. He was pretty far in years when he was deputed with others to go to Rome, about A. D. 40, by the Jews of Alexandria, to defend the right of citizenſhip of Alexandria, which the Jews claimed, before the emperor Caius. They ſtaid at Rome till Caius returned out of Gaul, and when he arrived, they preſented their memorial to him. Caius received them with more tokens of friendſhip than they expected, Philo. Leg. ad Caium.

Some time after, he gave them a hearing near the city, in the houſes of pleaſure that bore the name of Mecenas and Lamia. The emperor reproached them with being the only people in the world who would not acknowledge him as a God, &c. Vide CAIUS. He diſmiſſed them without deciding the cauſe.

Philo compoſed ſeveral works, good part of which is extant, and much eſteemed by intelligent perſons. Photius believes, Cod. 105, that from him the cuſtom was firſt introduced into the church, of explaining Scripture allegorically; and true it is, that the fathers, eſpecially Clement of Alexandria and Origen, have often followed the method of Philo; but it cannot be denied, that the cuſtom of allegorizing Scripture, was in uſe long before Philo. Joſephus, Proëm. in Antiq. Jud. ad finem, teſtifies, that he had thoughts of compoſing a work, in which he would explain what Moſes had concealed under allegories. St. Paul has often uſed this manner of explaining Scripture; ſo that it may be eaſily ſeen it had been long long familiar to the Jews. See ALLEGORY, and Wiſd. xviii. 24, compared with Philo, lib. iii. de vita Moſ. p. 519.

Several of the ancients have thought, that Philo intended to deſcribe the life of the firſt Chriſtians of Alexandria, in his book intitled, Of a contemplative Life, wherein he repreſents the manner of living of the Therapeutæ. Vide ESSENES. It is ſaid, Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. de viris illuſt. cap. 11. Philo was acquainted with St. Peter at Rome, under the emperor Claudius; and contracted a friendſhip with him. Photius ſays, Cod. 105. that he even embraced Chriſtianity, but quitted it again out of diſcontent: but this circumſtance does not appear from any ancient writer. The time of his death is unknown.

PHILOLOGUS, Φιλόλογος, a lover of letters, or of the word; from Φίλος, a lover, and λογος, the word.

PHILOLOGUS. St. Paul, Romans xvi. 15. ſalutes Philologus, of whom nothing particular is known. The Greeks make him biſhop of Sinope in Pontus, and place his feaſt Nov. 4. Origen believes, that Philologus was huſband to Julia, mentioned in the ſame place; but others doubt whether Julia is not rather the name of a man.

PHILOMETOR, Φιλομήτωρ, lover of his mother; from Φίλος, a lover, and μήτηρ, a mother.

PHILOMETOR, the ſurname of Ptolemy VI. king of Egypt. See PTOLEMY.

PHILOPATOR, Φιλοπάτωρ, lover of his father.

PHILOPATOR. The ſurname of Ptolemy IV. king of Egypt. See PTOLEMY.

PHILOSOPHY, Φιλοσοφία, the love of wiſdom; from Φίλος, a lover, and σοφία, wiſdom.

PHILOSOPHY. St. Paul bids the Coloſſians beware, leſt any man ſpoil them through philoſophy, Coloſſ. ii. 8. And in the Acts, xvii. 18. Luke relates, that when St. Paul came to Athens, he there found Epicurean and Stoic philoſophers, who made a jeſt of his diſcourſes. The ſame apoſtle in many places of his epiſtles, oppoſes the ſuppoſed wiſe men, and the falſe wiſdom of the age, i. e. the Pagan philoſophy, to the wiſdom of Jeſus Chriſt, and the true religion; which in the notion of the philoſophers and ſophiſts of this world, ſeemed to be mere folly, being built neither on the eloquence nor ſubtilty of thoſe who preached it, but on the power of God, and his authority, on the operation of the Holy Ghoſt, which actuated the hearts and minds of believers.

About the time that the ſeveral ſects of philoſophers were formed among the Greeks, as the Academics, the Peripatetics, the Stoics, by a ſort of emulation, among the Jews alſo ſeveral ſects of philoſophers aroſe, as the Eſſenes, the Phariſees, and the Sadducees. The Phariſees had ſome reſemblance to the Stoics, the Sadducees to the Epicureans, and the Eſſenes to the Academics. The Phariſees were proud, vain, and boaſting, like the Stoics: the Sadducees, who denied the immortality of the ſoul, and the exiſtence of ſpirits, freed themſelves at once, like the Epicureans, from all ſolicitude about futurity: the Eſſenes were more moderate, more ſimple and religious, and therefore approached nearer to the Academics.

The philoſophers againſt whom St. Paul inveighs, in his Epiſtle to the Romans, boaſted the extent of their knowledge, the purity of their morality, the eloquence of their writings, the ſtrength of their reaſonings, and the ſubtilty of their arguments. Their weakneſſes were pride, curioſity, preſumption, hypocriſy, ambition. They aſcribed every thing to human reaſon; and would be ſuperior in every thing. Although their lives were diſorderly, ſhameful, and even injurious to human nature, yet they would paſs on the world for good men, and, boaſting of their knowledge of God, they diſhonoured him by their actions. To them St. Paul oppoſed the humility of the croſs of Jeſus Chriſt, the force of his miracles, the purity of his morals, the depth of his myſteries, and the evident proofs of his miſſion.

It is diſputed whether the heathen philoſophers did not borrow the fineſt ſentiments of their morality from the ſacred Scriptures. The fathers have been much divided on this queſtion: ſome have maintained the affirmative, ſome the negative. Philo. lib. i. de vita Moſ. teaches, that before the tranſlation of the books of Moſes, by order of Ptolomy Philadelphus, the Gentiles had no acquaintance with the ſacred books. Ariſtæus de 70 Interp. makes Demetrius Phalerius ſay, that the Greek hiſtorians, poets, and writers, have made no mention of the books of the Hebrews; and that ſome writers being deſirous of inſerting ſomething from them into their works, were prevented by divine puniſhments, of which he gives inſtances. Origen, in Cantic. maintains, that the name of Moſes was unknown to the Greeks, and is not to be found in their writings. Joſephus acknowledges the ſilence of the Greeks, and gives this reaſon for it; that they had not read the books of the Jews. Lactantius, de Origin. Err. lib. ii. cap. 11. ſays expreſsly, that the prophane had never read the ſacred writings. In another place, de Vera Sapientia, lib. iv. cap. 2. that it was ſurprizing that Pythagoras and Plato ſhould go into Egypt, into Chaldea and Perſia, to ſtudy the religion and cuſtoms of thoſe people, and not go into Judea, whither they might eaſily have paſſed, and where they might have found what they vainly ſought elſewhere.

But other of the fathers, and thoſe the greater number, have been for the affirmative: they aſſure us, that the moſt celebrated of the philoſophers, were acquainted with the ſacred books, and the prophets. St. Auſtin thinks, de Civit. lib. viii. cap. 11. & de Doctrina Chriſtian, lib. ii. cap. 28. that Pythagoras knew Jeremiah in Egypt. Others believe that he converſed with Ezekiel in Judea: Quidam, apud Clem. Alex. lib. i. Strom. that he was acquainted with the Jews, and borrowed ſeveral of their laws, which he admitted into his philoſophy. Clemens Alexandrinus, Admonit. ad Gentes, p. 46, 47, 48. ſpeaking to the Greeks, aſſert, that whatever there is of truth in the laws of Plato, was derived from the Hebrews; that from thence their poets borrowed their fineſt thoughts, and their nobleſt expreſſions. Juſtin Martyr, Apolog. i. p. 15. & Apolog. ii. p. 81, 82. ſhews, by many examples, that Orpheus, Homer, Solon, Pythagoras, Plato, and many others, travelled into Egypt, and conſulted the books of Moſes. Celſus the philoſopher, (Orig. cont. Celſ. lib. vi.) an enemy to the Chriſtians, acknowledges the conformity between the ſentiments of Plato and thoſe of Moſes and the Jewiſh prophets: from whence he ridiculouſly concludes, that the Hebrews had imitated the Greeks; as if Moſes and the other ſacred writers had been poſterior to Plato and the Greek poets.

Tertullian maintains, that the ancient law-givers of the heathen had nothing valuable but what they had borrowed from the Hebrews. That their poets and philoſophers had drawn from the fountain of the prophets; that by the ſubtil artifice of the devil, ſome ſtrokes of truth ſlipped into the writings of the profane, in order to undermine the truth at ſuch time as God ſhould manifeſt it to the world. For the greater part of mankind want either penetration, or ſincerity, to diſtinguiſh the truth from ſuch errors as they find blended with it. Juſtin Martyr had the ſame opinion. Euſebius has employed two entire books, lib. xi. xii. of his great work of the Goſpel-Preparation, to ſhew that Plato had taken the principal things of his philoſophy, and of his theology, from the ſacred books of the Jews. Theodoret advances, that the ancient philoſophers Pherecides, Pythagoras, Thales, Solon, and Plato, had travelled into Egypt, and had received inſtructions, not only from the Egyptians, but alſo from the Hebrews, even ſo far, that Pythagoras received circumciſion, which the Egyptians had borrowed from the Jews. St. Ambroſe ſeems to think, that one of Plato's chief deſigns in coming into Egypt, was to conſult the laws of Moſes, and the oracles of the prophets, Ambroſ. in Pſal. cxviii. Serm. 2, 4, 5, 13. & lib. de fuga ſæculi, cap. 8. & de Bono Mortis, cap. 10. & cap. 11. n. 51. & de Arca Noë, cap. 8.

But as this queſtion is concerning a fact, it ought to be examined from facts, rather than authorities. Proofs from fact are of two kinds. Firſt, the agreement of notions and expreſſions, between the ſacred authors and the prophane, in matters wherein naturally they could not agree. Secondly, the acknowledgment of thoſe who copied from others, or the teſtimony of cotemporary authors. But in the writings of the poets and the prophane philoſophers, we find no acknowledgment that they had borrowed any thing from the ſacred writers; none of their cotemporary writers notice any thing like this. Thoſe reſemblances that may be obſerved between the ſacred and prophane authors, are merely fortuitous, and in ſuch paſſages wherein men of ſenſe might eaſily coincide, without copying one another: therefore nothing can be concluded from hence, in favour of the opinion, that the Greeks had read and imitated the Hebrew writers.

Nay, they could not ſo much as have read them; for they muſt either have read them in the original, or in tranſlations. The Grecians did not ſtudy foreign languages; and the Jews were infinitely jealous of the ſacredneſs of their books, nor would communicate them to prophane heathen: neither could they read them in any verſions; for there were none but that of the Septuagint, under Ptolomy Philadelphus, long after Pythagoras, Plato, Ariſtotle, Socrates, Chryſippus, Zeno, and the ancient Greek philoſophers and legiſlators. There is even great probability, that the verſion of the Septuagint is ſtill more modern than Philadelphus. See SEPTUAGINT.

Another famous queſtion has been debated, concerning the ſalvation of the ancient philoſophers; whether they, by only following the light of reaſon, and living good moral lives, in the eye of the world, independently of the law and the goſpel, could eſcape damnation and eternal miſery? St. Paul, Rom. ii. 9, 10, 11, &c. ſeems not to exclude the Gentiles who lived virtuous lives from heaven. Vide GENTILES. When the Gentiles, who have not the law, do by nature things contained in the law; theſe having not the law, are a law unto themſelves: therefore if the uncircumciſion (or, the Gentile) keep the righteouſneſs of the law, ſhall not his uncircumciſion be counted for circumciſion? ver. 26.

From

From theſe paſſages, it may be concluded, that the philoſopher of the Gentiles, who keeps the law of nature, and who worſhips God, is accepted before the Sovereign Judge equally with the Jew, who obſerves the ceremonial law.

[After all, till it be determined what degrees of glory, on one hand, or of miſery, on the other, obtain in the future world, it is impoſſible to anſwer this queſtion: but we may ſafely leave it to the great Judge of all, who will render to every man according to his deeds. The queſtion of degrees of puniſhment, as well as of happineſs, ſolves many of the difficulties attending our imperfect information of the nature, &c. of the future ſtate; and it may prove hereafter, that many whom mankind regarded as of high character, may there be placed below what might be expected as their ſtation; while others, who have been diſregarded here, may enjoy ſituations above them. We ought to conſider, that, in proportion to the means and privileges enjoyed, ſhould be our improvement:—for certainly, thoſe who with feweſt advantages, have brought moſt glory to God, are entitled to a ſtation above thoſe who, with ſuperior advantages, have brought leſs glory to God. Now, ſince advantages of birth, education, diſpoſition, ſituation in life, occurrences,—not to advert to different degrees of mental powers, of the Holy Spirit, of grace, and of the various graces derived from God;—ſince theſe, and a thouſand other incidents, and co-incidents, are altogether beyond our conception and valuation, we may well conclude, that many who appear to us among the firſt, may be finally placed among the laſt; and that many ſhall come from the eaſt and the weſt, and ſit down in the kingdom of God, in higher ſtations of glory, becauſe they have well improved what little light was granted to them, rather than others, who, amid the blaze of divine light with which they were ſurrounded, did not make adequate improvements of the favour.]

The Jews, (Rab. Moſes & Rab. Meyr. Gubar.) allow a place in paradiſe to more than one kind of Gentiles: e. gr. they think, thoſe who have faithfully obſerved the commandments given to Noah, ſhall obtain ſalvation; alſo, thoſe who have known God, who have entertained rational notions of the Deity, who have lived in a regular and laudable manner: they inſtance Socrates and Plato. The Talmudiſts exclude from ſalvation four ſorts of people; ſuch Gentiles as reſemble (1) Balaam and (2) Doeg; and Jews which reſemble (3) Achitophel and (4) Gehazi. Whence we infer, that Pagans, who are like neither Balaam nor Doeg, according to them, may be admitted to happineſs. Toſtatus, Catharinus, Eraſmus, and ſome other modern authors, ſeem to think, that ſome of the antient philoſophers, as Socrates, Plato, and Seneca, were in a ſtate capable of ſalvation; which is, on the ſuppoſition, that they knew God, and that they lived in a moral and laudable manner. Nevertheleſs, certain it is, that without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe God: that faith without works is dead: that without a faith in our deliverer, our Meſſiah, we cannot attain ſalvation. But the philoſophers had neither faith enlivened by charity, nor good works, nor belief in the Meſſiah.

Socrates, the moſt unexceptionable of them all, is accuſed [falſely, I hope; for Ariſtophanes, his accuſer, is no competent witneſs] of being addicted to an abominable vice: he worſhipped the clouds, he uſed to ſwear by a dog, by an oak, by a duck. Lactantius deſcribes him as a buffoon and merry-andrew, if he intended thereby to rally the religion of the Athenians, among whom he lived, and the ſolemnity of an oath; or as a fool, if he held theſe things to be gods. The diſciples of Socrates vindicated their maſter from the imputation of atheiſm, and proved that he worſhipped the gods of the Grecians. At his death he gave orders, that a cock ſhould be ſacrificed to Æſculapius. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

Seneca, the object of admiration of ſeveral of the ancients, compoſed a book of Pagan ſuperſtitions, and after having ſhewn the ridiculouſneſs of them, he concluded, that the wiſe man ought to obſerve theſe things in compliance to cuſtom and the laws, and to practiſe them in outward appearance, without any belief of them. Dio upbraids this philoſopher with the commiſſion of heinous crimes, and with inſtructing his pupil Nero to practiſe the ſame; with heaping up immenſe riches in a very little time, and with increaſing them by daily uſury. Such were the moſt compleat of the Pagan philoſophers! Men who had a barren knowledge of the Deity.

The Orientals obſerve, that the philoſophy of Thales Mileſius, who took water to be the principle of all things, has a near relation to that of Moſes and the Egyptians, who were pretty much in the ſame principles, as alſo the Phenicians, who contended for the production of all things out of tempered mud and watry ſediment; whereas the Perſians and Zoroaſter made a nearer approach to the principles of Anaxagoras, who ſuppoſed fire to be the firſt natural cauſe of all material things.

PHINEHAS, פנחס, Heb. Pinchas. Aſpect, or face of truſt or protection; from פנה panah, to behold, and חסה chaſah, to hope, to truſt.

I. PHINEHAS, or as the Jews pronounce, Pinchas, ſon of Eleazar, and grandſon of Aaron. The third high-prieſt of the Jews, A. M. 2571, until until towards A. D. 2590, ante 1414. He is particularly commended in Scripture for zeal, in vindicating the glory of God, when the Midianites had ſent their daughters into the camp of Iſrael, to tempt the Hebrews to fornication and idolatry: Numb. xxv. 7. ſo that the Lord promiſed the prieſthood to Phinehas by perpetual covenant; evidently including this tacit condition, that his children ſhould continue faithful and obedient; for we know the prieſthood paſſed out of the family of Eleazar and Phinehas to that of Ithamar, and that it returned not to the poſterity of Eleazar until after about an hundred and fifty years.

This dignity continued in the race of Phinehas, from Aaron down to the high-prieſt Eli, for about three hundred and thirty-five years. Aaron was appointed high-prieſt A. M. 2513. Eli was acknowledged high-prieſt and judge of Iſrael in 2848. The manner and cauſes of this change are unknown. It re-entered the family of Eleazar under the reign of Saul, who having put to death Abimelech, and the other prieſts of Nob, gave the high-prieſthood to Zadok, of the race of Phinehas. At the ſame time David had with him Abiathar, of the race of Eli, who performed the functions of high-prieſt. So that after the death of Saul, David continued the prieſthood to Zadok and Abiathar conjunctly. But towards the end of David's reign, Abiathar having eſpouſed the intereſts of Adonijah, to the prejudice of Solomon, he was diſgraced, and Zadok only acknowledged as high-prieſt. The prieſthood continued in his family until after the captivity of Babylon, and even to the deſtruction of the temple. From the beginning of Zadok's prieſthood alone, and the excluſion of Abiathar, to the ruin of the temple, is 1084 years. Zadok was high-prieſt alone, and Abiathar diſgraced, A. M. 2989. The temple was deſtroyed A. M. 4073, A. D. 70.

We read alſo of another memorable and zealous action of Phinehas, Joſh. xxii. 30, 31. When the Iſraelites beyond Jordan had raiſed upon the banks of the river a vaſt heap of earth; thoſe on the other ſide, fearing they were going to forſake the Lord, and to ſet up another religion, deputed Phinehas, and other chief men, to inform themſelves of their reaſon for erecting this monument. When they found that it was only in commemoration of their union and common origin, Phinehas praiſed the Lord, ſaying, We now know that the Lord is with us, ſince you are not guilty of that prevarication of which we ſuſpected you. Vide the commendation that Jeſus the ſon of Sirach gives Phinehas. Ecclus. xiv. 23.

We do not exactly know the time of the death of Phinehas. But as he lived after Joſhua, and before the ſervitude under Chuſhan-riſhathaim, his death is put A. M. 2590. Under his pontificate the ſtory of Micah happened; Judg. xvii. alſo the conqueſt of Laiſha by the tribe of Dan; Judg. xviii. 27. and the enormity committed upon the wife of the Levite of mount Ephraim. Judg. xix. Phinehas's ſucceſſor was Abiezer or Abiſhuah. Judg. xx. 28.

The Rabbins allow a very long life to Phinehas.

II. PHINEAS, ſon to Eli the high-prieſt, and brother to Hophni. See ELI and HOPHNI.

PHLEGON, Φλέγων, zealous, burning; from Φλέγω.

I. PHLEGON, mentioned by St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 14. He was made biſhop of Marathon in Attica, according to the Greeks. They place his feſtival April 8, as do the Latins. We know not the particulars of his life.

II. PHLEGON, a freed-man of Adrian. He compoſed a hiſtory digeſted by the Olympiads, as far as A. D. 140. In this hiſtory he notices, that in the fourth year of the two hundred and ſecond Olympiad, (about the middle of A. D. 33) there happened the greateſt eclipſe of the ſun that had ever been ſeen, the ſtars appearing in the heavens at noon-day; that afterwards there was a great earthquake in Bithynia. Euſeb. Chronic. p. 202. Hieronym. Chronic. p. 158. Chronic. Alex. p. 520. Several critics believe, this was that darkneſs which happened at the death of Jeſus Chriſt. On this account we inſert the name of Phlegon.

PHRAORTES. We have ſaid, after ſome learned men, that Phraortes king of the Medes, noticed by Herodotus, lib. i. cap. 102. is the ſame as Arphaxad, who was conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, mentioned in Judith.

After Dejoces, the firſt king of the Medes, and founder of Ecbatane, ſucceeded Phraortes "Not contenting himſelf with the empire of the Medes, he declared war againſt the Perſians, and was the firſt who brought them into ſubjection to the Medes. Finding himſelf maſter of thoſe two potent and warlike nations, he ſubdued the greater part of the people of Aſia, whom he attempted one after another. At laſt he made war with the Aſſyrians, whoſe capital was Niniveh, a people that formerly poſſeſſed the empire of Aſia, but was then forſaken by their allies, though ſtill powerful enough to make head againſt him. Phraortes carrying the war into their country in the twenty-ſecond year of his reign, was defeated, and periſhed with the greater part of his army. His ſucceſſor was his ſon Cyaxares."

Judith tells us of Arphaxad: in the twelfth year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, who reigned in Niniveh the great city, in the days of Arphaxad, who reigned over the Medes in Ecbatane. And built in Ecbatane walls round about, &c. (Herodotus tus aſcribes the building of Ecbatane to Dejoces, father of Phraortes, but that is not inconſiſtent with Phraortes's beautifying and fortifying this city.) After that he boaſted of his power, as being invincible; by the ſtrength of his army, and by the multitude of his chariots: but, Nebuchadnezzar king of the Aſſyrians, who reigned at Nineveh the Great, made war in the twelfth year of his reign with Arphaxad, and overcame him in the great plain of Ragau, near the Euphrates, the Tigris, and the Jadaſon, in the country of Arioch king of the Elymeans. The twelfth year of Nebuchadnezzar falls, according to our chronology, A. M. 3347. Difference of names ought to be no objection in oriental hiſtorians. We know that they almoſt always differ from the Greeks, in the names of their princes. See F. Montfaucon, concerning the truth of the book of Judith; and for the contrary opinion, M. Baſnage's Jewiſh Antiquities, tom. 2, p. 252, &c.

PHRYGIA, Φρυγία, dry, barren; from Φρύγιος.

PHRYX, Φρὺξ, an inhabitant of Phrygia. 2 Macc. v. 22.

PHURAH, פרה, that bears fruit, or that grows; from פרה parah.

PHURAH, or Phara, the ſervant of Gideon, who went with him to ſpy the camp of the Midianites, Judg. vii. 10, 11.

PHUT, פוט, Φὺθ, prayer, big, fat.

PHUT, or Phuth, third ſon of Ham, Gen. x. 6. We believe he peopled either the canton of Phtemphu, Phtemphti, or Phtembuti, of Pliny and Ptolomy, whoſe capital was Thara in Lower Egypt, inclining toward Lybia; or the canton called Phtenotes, of which Buthas was the capital. The prophets often ſpeak of Phut. In the time of Jeremiah, Jerem. xlvi. 9. Phut was under the obedience of Necho king of Egypt. Nahum, iii. 9. reckons this people in the number of thoſe who ought to come to the aſſiſtance of No-ammon or Dioſpolis.

PHYGELLUS, Φύγελλος, fugitive.

PHYGELLUS, or Phigellus, was a Chriſtian of Aſia, who being at Rome while St. Paul was there in priſon, A. D. 65. forſook him in his neceſſity, with Hermogenes. 2 Tim. i. 15. Phygellus is unknown on any other account; and this evaſion is by no means to his honour. Metaphraſtes, in his diſcourſe on St. Peter and St. Paul, ſays, that the apoſtle having made Phygellus biſhop of Epheſus, this man ſeduced the converted Jews to renounce the faith. But theſe circumſtances are altogether uncertain. Ambroſiaſter, in 2 Tim. i. 15. ſays, that Phygellus and Hermogenes were deceivers, and hypocrites, who attended the apoſtle only to learn what they could from him, and afterwards to calumniate him, and raiſe perſecutions againſt him: but when they ſaw themſelves diſcovered, they left him.

PHYLACTERY, Φυλακτήριον, a preſervative; from the Greek word Φυλάσσω, I keep, I preſerve. Matth. xxiii. 5.

PHYLACTERY. This word is from the Greek, and properly ſignifies a preſervative, ſuch as the Pagans carried about them, to preſerve them from evils, diſeaſes, or dangers: e. gr. they wore ſtones, or pieces of metal, engraved under certain aſpects of the planets. The Eaſt is to this day filled with this ſuperſtition, and the men do not only wear phylacteries for themſelves, but for their animals alſo. Jeſus Chriſt in the goſpel ſays, the Scribes and Phariſees make broad their Phylacteries, and enlarge the borders of their garments. Theſe phylacteries were little boxes, or rolls of parchment, wherein were written certain words of the law. Theſe they wore upon their foreheads, and upon the wriſt of their left-arm. They founded this cuſtom upon Exod. xiii. 9. And it ſhall be for a ſign unto thee upon thy hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes. And verſe 16. And it ſhall be for a token upon thine hand, and for frontlets between thine eyes.

The Jews wore on their phylacteries theſe four paſſages of the law: 1ſt, Sanctify unto me all the firſtborn: whatſoever openeth the womb among the children of Iſrael, both of man and beaſt, it is mine, &c. to the 10th verſe. 2. From the 11th verſe, And it ſhall be when the Lord ſhall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, &c. to verſe 16. 3. From the 4th verſe of the 6th chapter of Deuteronomy, Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, to verſe the 9th. 4. From the 13th verſe of the 11th chapter, And it ſhall come to paſs, if you ſhall hearken diligently to my commandments, &c. to the end of verſe 21.

Leo of Modena informs us particularly about theſe rolls. Ceremonies of the Jews, p. i. cap. 11. n. 4. Thoſe that were to be faſtened to the arms were two rolls of parchment written in ſquare letters, with an ink made on purpoſe, and with much care. They were rolled up to a point, and were incloſed in a ſort of caſe of black calves-ſkin. Then they were put upon a ſquare bit of the ſame leather, but ſomething ſtiffer, from whence hung a thong of the ſame, of about a finger's breadth and a cubit and a half long. Theſe rolls were placed at the bending of the left-arm, and after the thong had made a little knot in the form of the letter Jod, it was wound about the arm in a ſpiral line, which ended at the top of the middle finger, It was called Teffila ſhel-jad, or, the Teffila of the hand.

That of the forehead was compoſed of four pieces of parchment, upon each of which was wrote one one of the ſentences before-mentioned. Theſe four pieces were joined together in a ſquare, and they wrote upon them the letter Schin, ש. Then they put over them a little ſquare of ſtiff calf-leather, from whence proceeded two thongs like the former. This ſquare was put on the middle of the forehead, and the thongs going round the head, made a knot behind like the letter daleth, and then came round again to the breaſt. They called this Teffila ſhel-roſh, the Teffila of the head. The modern Jews content themſelves with putting on theſe phylacteries only at morning-prayers. Some of the moſt devout put them on at the time of noon-prayers alſo, but they are under no obligation to do this. Vide FRAGMENT, No. and PLATE.

Some antients think, (Origen. Chryſoſtom. Hieronym. Euthym. in Matth.) that the uſe of the Tephilim (for thus the Jews call what the goſpel names phylacteries) is as ancient as Moſes; and ſeveral interpreters (Lightfoot. Scalig. Maldon. alii.) will have it, that at the time of our Saviour this cuſtom was general, and that even he himſelf wore them; and that he reproves in the Phariſees only the affectation of having larger phylacteries than other men. But I cannot prevail on myſelf to think, that this cuſtom ever generally obtained. St. Jerom ſays, (in Matth. xxiii. Ita & Theophylact.) that, in his time, the Indian, Perſian, and Babyloniſh Jews, very commonly wore theſe rolls upon their foreheads, and that thoſe who wore them were eſteemed as the moſt religious and devout. This therefore was not univerſal, even among the Jews beyond the Euphrates, and much leſs among thoſe on this ſide that river. The ſame St. Jerom thinks, that the Phariſees wrote the decalogue upon their phylacteries. St. Chryſoſtom, Homil. 43. in Matth. writing on the ſame paſſage, condemns the abuſe of them among Chriſtians, who carried phylacteries about their necks, in which were written certain names of angels in Hebrew, or ſome parts of the goſpel. St. Jerom takes notice of the ſame abuſe, and Pope Gelaſius has condemned this ſort of ſuperſtitious phylactery. Vide BUXTORF, Synag. Jud. cap. 4.

PHYSCON, or Phiſcon, otherwiſe Evergetes VII. king of Egypt. See PTOLOMY.

PI-HAHIROTH, פי־החירת, the mouth, the paſs of Hiroth, or the opening of liberty; from פה pe, a mouth, and חרר charar, or חיר chir, liberty; otherwiſe mouth engraved; from חרת charath, to engrave.

PI-HAHIROTH. The Hebrews departing from Succoth, came to Etham. (Exod. xiii. 20. xiv. 2. פי החירות. LXX. Απεναντι τῆς ἐπαύλεως. E regione ſuburbii.) As if they had read עירות inſtead of חירות. Then the Lord ſaid to Moſes, Turn and encamp before Pi-hahiroth, between Migdol and the ſea, over againſt Baal-zephon. Pi-hahiroth may be explained by, the paſs of Hiroth, or the mouth of Hiroth. Moſes, Numb. xxxiii. 8. calls it ſimply Hiroth. So do Euſebius, and St. Jerom, in his book of Hebrew places. Others, as the Syriac, tranſlate it, over-againſt the ditches. The Seventy in Exodus xiv. 2. tranſlate it, over againſt the village; others, as Rab. Salam. Fag. over againſt the paſs of liberty, or the paſs of drought. We think Hiroth to be the city Heroum, or Heroopolis, ſituated at the extremity, or point, of the Red Sea, or elſe the city of Phagroriopolis, placed by Strabo, lib. xvii. about the ſame place, and the capital of the canton of Phagroriopolitis. There is great probability that Pi-hahiroth ſtands for the paſs which was near Heroum. Beyond this paſs the Hebrews went to encamp at the Red Sea. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XXXIX.

PILA, מכתש, κατακεκομμένε, Mackteſh, Heb. Zeph. i. 11. Wiſ. i. 11. Jaw-tooth, that brays or pounds; from כתש cathaſh: otherwiſe, mortar, depth, ſinking.

PILATE, Πιλάτος, armed with a dart.

PILATE, or Pontius Pilate. His family or country is not known; but it is believed he was of Rome, or at leaſt of Italy. Peter le Manguer ſays he was of Dauphine, of a place not far from S. Valier on the Rhone. Theophylact on Matth. xxvii. believes he was originally of Pontus, becauſe of his name Pontius. He was ſent to govern Judea in the room of Gratus, A. D. 26 or 27. He governed this province ten years, from the twelfth or thirteenth year of Tiberius, to his twenty-ſecond or twenty-third year. Joſeph. Ant. lib. 1. cap. 5.

Pilate was a man of an impetuous and obſtinate temper, who diſturbed the repoſe of Judea, and gave occaſion to the troubles and revolt that followed. Having ſent his troops from Ceſarea to Jeruſalem, to winter there, he cauſed at the ſame time his enſigns to be carried thither, on which were the images of the emperor; whereas the governors had not uſed to let their enſigns enter the city, becauſe they would not exaſperate the Jews, who thought all images and repreſentations contrary to their religion. Wherefore Pilate cauſed them to be brought in covered, and by night. But the day following, the matter being diſcovered, the Jews from the country ran into the city, and afterwards went in great numbers to Ceſarea, to entreat Pilate to take away thoſe images. Pilate refuſed; and the people continued five days and five nights making ſupplication to him, without intermiſſion.

At laſt, on the ſixth day, Pilate having cauſed a tribunal to be ſet up, in an open place of Ceſarea, ſent for the Jews as if to give them an anſwer. But he poſted ſoldiers round the place, who incloſed them, when they were aſſembled, and threatened threatened to maſſacre them every one, if they did not retire. Then the Jews threw themſelves on their faces, and preſented their necks to the ſoldiers, as ready to receive the blow. Pilate was aſtoniſhed at their intrepidity; and preſently cauſed his images to be brought back to Ceſarea. Ant. lib. xviii. cap. 4. & de bello, lib. ii. cap. 14.

Philo, (Legat. ad Caium. p. 1033, 1034. The time of this event is not known.) relates another hiſtory that happened under Pilate, which has ſome relation to the foregoing. He deſigned to conſecrate golden bucklers to Tiberius, in the palace of Herod. Theſe bucklers were without figures or images, and had only an inſcription, importing their conſecration to the emperor. This, however, alarmed the Jews, who were jealous of their religion. The magiſtrates of Jeruſalem, with the ſons of Herod at their head, and followed by the people, came to Pilate, deſiring him to ſuppreſs a thing ſo contrary to their law. But Pilate, with his uſual obſtinacy, was inflexible. They perſiſted, and conjured him not to lay them under the neceſſity of ſending a deputation to the emperor, to cauſe this order to be revoked. Pilate was greatly afraid of ſuch a deputation, apprehending the Jews would then diſcover his inſolence, cruelty, rapines, and outrages, to the emperor: but, they contented themſelves with writing to the emperor, and Tiberius wrote back the ſame day to Pilate, and ordered him immediately to remove thoſe bucklers from Jeruſalem,

St. Luke, (chap. xii. 1, 2, &c.) acquaints us, that Pilate had mingled the blood of ſome Galileans with their ſacrifices; and that the matter having been related to Jeſus Chriſt, he ſaid, Think you that theſe Galileans were greater ſinners than other Galileans, becauſe they ſuffered this calamity? No, I aſſure you. And if you do not repent, you ſhall all periſh in like manner. It is unknown on what occaſion Pilate cauſed theſe Galileans to be ſlain in the temple, while they were ſacrificing; for this is the meaning of that expreſſion, mingling their blood with their ſacrifices. Some (See Theophylac. Euthym. Grot. Brug. &c.) think they were diſciples of Judas Gaulonites, who taught, that the Jews ought not to pay tribute to foreign princes; and that Pilate had put ſome of them to death, even in the temple; but there is no proof of this. Others think, (Maldon. Bez.) that theſe Galileans were Samaritans, whom Pilate cut to pieces in the village of Tirataba, as they were preparing to go up to mount Gerizim, where a certain impoſtor had promiſed to diſcover treaſures to them. Joſeph Ant. lib. xviii. cap. 5. But this event did not happen before A. D. 35, conſequently two years after the death of Jeſus Chriſt.

At the time of our Saviour's paſſion, Pilate made ſome endeavours to deliver him from the Jews. He knew they purſued his life, only out of malice and envy. His wife alſo, who had been diſturbed with dreams, ſent and deſired him not to meddle in the affair of that juſt perſon. He attempted to appeaſe the Jews, and to give them ſome ſatisfaction, by whipping Jeſus Chriſt. He tried to take him out of their hands, by propoſing to deliver him or Barabbas, on the day of the feſtival of the paſſover. He wanted to diſcharge himſelf from pronouncing judgment againſt him, by ſending him to Herod king of Galilee. When he ſaw all this would not ſatisfy the Jews, and that they even threatened him, ſaying he could be no friend to the emperor, if he let Jeſus go; he cauſed water to be brought, waſhed his hands before all the people, and publicly declared himſelf innocent of the blood of that juſt perſon. Yet at the ſame time he delivered him up to his ſoldiers, that they might crucify him. This was enough to juſtify Jeſus Chriſt, and to ſhew that Pilate held him innocent; but it was not enough to vindicate the conſcience and integrity of a judge, whoſe duty it was, as well to aſſert the cauſe of oppreſſed innocence, as to puniſh the guilty criminal.

He ordered to be put over our Saviour's croſs, as it were, an abſtract of his ſentence, and the motive of his condemnation, Jeſus of Nazareth, king of the Jews; written in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. Some of the Jews remonſtrated to Pilate, that he ought to have written, Jeſus of Nazareth, pretended king of the Jews. But Pilate gave them a peremptory anſwer, What he had written, he had written. Towards evening he was applied to, for leave to take down the bodies from the croſs, that they might not continue there the following day, which was the paſſover and the ſabbath-day. This he allowed, and alſo granted the body of Jeſus to Joſeph of Arimathea, that he might pay his laſt duties to it. When the prieſts came to deſire him to ſet a watch about the ſepulchre, for fear the diſciples ſhould ſteal Jeſus away by night; he anſwered, they had a guard, and might place it there themſelves. This is the ſubſtance of what the goſpels tell us concerning Pilate.

Juſtin Martyr, Apol. ii. Tertullian, Apol. cap. 5, 21. Euſebius, Hiſt. Eccl. lib. ii. cap. 2. and after them ſeveral others, ancients and moderns, aſſure us, that it was the cuſtom for Roman magiſtrates, to ſend to the emperor copies of all verbal proceſſes and judicial acts, which they paſſed in their ſeveral provinces. Pilate, in compliance with this cuſtom, having written to Tiberius what had occurred relating to Jeſus, the emperor wrote an account of it to the ſenate, in a manner which gave reaſon to judge, that he thought favourably of the perſon of Jeſus, and that he was willing they ſhould decree divine honours to him. But the ſenate was not of this opinion, and ſo the matter dropped. It appears by what Juſtin ſays of theſe acts, that the miracles of Jeſus Chriſt were mentioned there, and even that the ſoldiers had divided his garments among them. Euſebius inſinuates, that they ſpoke of his reſurrection and aſcenſion. Tertullian and Juſtin refer to theſe acts with ſo much confidence, as would make one believe they had had them in their hands.

However, neither Euſebius nor St. Jerom, who were both inquiſitive and underſtanding perſons, nor any other author who wrote afterwards, ſeem to have ſeen them; at leaſt not the true and original acts. For as to what we have now in great number, they are not authentic, being neither ancient nor uniform. The Pagans forged falſe acts of the paſſion of Jeſus Chriſt, about the beginning of the fourth century, Vid. Euſeb. lib. ix. cap. 5. They were little favourable to him, without doubt, and were very different from thoſe that Juſtin and Tertullian had cited in the ſecond century. The Quartodecimans had alſo the acts of Pilate, by which they juſtified themſelves in their errors, Epiphan. Hæreſ. 50. cap. 1. They were, however, different from thoſe now mentioned, it not being ſuppoſeable that Chriſtians would have recourſe to a work contrived by Pagans; and they varied from each other, one aſſerting that Jeſus Chriſt ſuffered the eighteenth, the other the twenty-fifth, of March. Laſtly, theſe acts are not allowed as authentic by thoſe who have ſpoken of them.

Gregory of Tours thought he had got the real acts of Pilate: but the fragment he cites from it plainly proves, that it was probably the falſe goſpel of Nicodemus, which has been often ſuppreſſed.

We have, beſides, a pretended letter of Pilate to Tiberius, in the recapitulation of the falſe Hegeſippus, and in a writing aſcribed to Marcellus, the diſciple of St. Peter. It is printed in the Chronicon of Martinus Polonus, in Sixtus Senenſis, and in ſeveral others, though with variations. It is thus tranſlated from the Latin:

"Pontius Pilate to Claudius wiſheth health. By the envy of the Jews a thing has lately happened here, of which I myſelf was a witneſs, which will involve them and their children in a dreadful puniſhment. For their fathers having had aſſurances from God, that he would ſend them his ſaint from heaven, to be their real king, and who was to be born of a virgin; God did really accompliſh this promiſe to him, while I was governor of Judea. And the Jews having ſeen, that he reſtored ſight to the blind, and health to the paralytic; that he cleanſed the lepers, drove out devils from thoſe that were poſſeſſed, raiſed the dead, had command over the winds, walked dry upon the ſea, and did many other miracles; while the whole multitude looked upon him as the Son of God, the chief of the Jews conceived an extreme envy and jealouſy againſt him. They ſeized him, delivered him up to me, and formed many falſe accuſations againſt him, ſaying he was a magician, and a tranſgreſſor of their law. As to myſelf, thinking what they ſaid of him to be true, I cauſed him to be whipped, and then delivered him up to their will. They crucified him, and ſet a watch at his ſepulchre. But the third day he roſe again, while my ſoldiers guarded his tomb. The malice of the Jews was ſuch, that they gave money to the ſoldiers, and bid them ſay that his diſciples took away his body. But when the ſoldiers had received the money, they could not forbear from owning the truth. They declared that Jeſus Chriſt was riſen, and that the Jews had given them money not to ſpeak of it. Of this I thought proper to give you notice, that credit may not be given to the lies of the Jews."

There is another pretended letter of Pilate to Tiberius, in Florentinus, p. 113, and another in the hiſtory of Jeſus Chriſt, written in Perſian by Jerome Xavier. The Bollandiſts on February 4, have given a ſpurious hiſtory of our Saviour, ſent to Tiberius by Pilate. Laſtly, Fabricius has given one in Greek, taken from a MS. of M. Colbert's, marked 2493. And Cotelerius quotes another alſo in Greek in the King's library, No. 2431, which are not better than thoſe we have mentioned.

About a year after the death of Jeſus Chriſt, Pilate undertook to bring water to Jeruſalem by an aquæduct. This water was about two hundred furlongs from the city. To perform this, Pilate took money out of the ſacred treaſury. The people made an uproar, and gathered together to the number of ſeveral thouſands, making outcries againſt the governor. Some were ſo violent, as to ſpeak injurious words againſt him. Pilate coming into the city, cauſed many of his ſoldiers to diſguiſe themſelves, and mix with the multitude; while he was addreſſing the Jews, they began to cry out, and ſpeak inſolently; he then made a ſign to the ſoldiers, who falling ling on, ſtruck indifferently all about them, not diſtinguiſhing the innocent from the guilty. By this violent means he appeaſed the ſedition.

After this ſtory, Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 5. relates what we have mentioned before, concerning the Samaritans, who being ſeduced by an impoſtor who promiſed to diſcover many precious veſſels, which he ſaid had been hid by Moſes in mount Gerizim, aſſembled in great numbers. They had armed themſelves, and waited at the village of Tirataba, that they might aſcend mount Gerizim together. But Pilate having previouſly taken poſſeſſion of the height of the mountain with his horſe and foot, attacked them at Tirataba, defeated them, ſlew a great number, diſperſed the reſt, and put to death the chief of thoſe who fell into his hands, The Samaritans complained to Vitellius governor of Syria, maintaining that the meeting of people at Tirataba was with no intention to revolt, but only to ſecure themſelves from the ſeverity of Pilate. Upon which Vitellius ſent Marcellus, one of his friends, into Judea, to ſuperintend this province, and ordered Pilate to Rome, to give an account of his conduct to Tiberius. Pilate quitted the government of Judea A. D. 36. in the 23d year of Tiberius. This emperor was dead before Pilate arrived at Rome.

We know not the particulars of what afterwards happened to this governor, but it is an ancient tradition, Ado Chro. Ætat. 7. that he was baniſhed to Vienne in Dauphiné, where he was reduced to ſuch extremity, that in deſpair he killed himſelf with his own ſword. Euſebius, lib. ii. cap. 7. & vid. Oroſ. lib. vii. cap. 5. quotes this fact, as extracted from authors, who had digeſted (he ſays) the Roman hiſtory by Olympiads. He ſeems to intimate Phlegon, the freed-man of Adrian.

This governor is deſcribed, by Philo the Jew, as a judge that uſed to ſell juſtice; and, for money, pronounced any ſentence that was deſired: he mentions his rapines, his injuries, his murders, the torments he inflicted on the innocent, and the perſons he put to death without form or proceſs. Laſtly, he deſcribes him as a man that exerciſed an exceſſive cruelty during all the time of his government. Philo, de Legatione ad Caium.

The popular tradition of Vienne in Dauphiné, is, that Pilate was baniſhed to this city, which was the place of his nativity: and they call an ancient edifice, in the form of a temple, (otherwiſe Notre Dame de la Vie) by the name of Pilate's Pretorium. On this tradition, the magiſtrates had cauſed to be inſcribed on the front of this edifice, This is the head of Pilate's ſceptre. Mr. Chorier, in his Antiquities of Vienne, has confuted theſe ſuggeſtions; he thinks, that the memory of a certain Italian called Humbert Pilati, has given occaſion to the people to call a tower at Vienne, near the Rhone, the tower of Pilate; and a country-houſe (of Pilati) near St. Vallier, the houſe of Pilate, &c.

PILDASH, פלדש, Φαλὰς, ruin, or loſs of breaking; from פלה palah, ruin, or loſs, and דיש diſh, bruiſing of grain: otherwiſe, judgment of bruiſing; from פלל pillel, judgment, &c.

PILDASH, or Pheldas, ſon of Nahor and Milcah. Gen. xxii. 22.

PILEHA, פלחא, Φελὰι, fragment, rupture: from פלח palach, to cleave, to divide. A Chaldee name, to ſerve, to act; from the Chaldee פלח palach.

PILEHA, or Phalea, one of the chief prieſts, who ſigned the covenant, Neh. x. 24.

PILLAR: a pillar of cloud, a pillar of fire, a pillar of ſmoke, ſignify a cloud, a fire, a ſmoke, which riſes up toward heaven in the form of an irregular column. The pillars of heaven, Job xxvi. 11. the pillars of the earth, Job ix. 6. Pſal. lxxv. 3. are metaphorical expreſſions, that ſuppoſe the heavens and the earth to be as an edifice, raiſed by the hand of God, and founded upon its baſis or foundation. This appears from thoſe words of Job, chap. xxxviii. 4, 5, 6. Where waſt thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? Declare, if thou haſt underſtanding. Who hath laid the meaſures thereof, if thou knoweſt? or who hath ſtretched the line upon it? Whereupon are the foundations thereof faſtened, or who laid the corner-ſtone thereof?

The pillars of the church, Gal. ii. 9. — James, Cephas and John, who ſeemed to be pillars. And Rev. iii. 12. Him that overcometh, will I make a pillar in the temple of my God. He ſhall be the ſupport, the ſtrength, and the ornament of the houſe of God. The church of Jeſus Chriſt, is called by St. Paul, 1 Tim. iii. 15. the pillar and ground of the truth. When the Lord ſent Jeremiah to preach to the nations, he ſays to him, Jer. i. 18. Behold, I have made thee this day a defenced city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls againſt the whole land; able to withſtand all the efforts of thine enemies, and incapable of yielding to their violence.

PINE, pinus, a tree well known, of the nature of the fir-tree. Iſaiah, xliv. 14. ſays, that man has planted a pine, of which he has made an idol. The Hebrew word ארן oren, by the Septuagint and St. Jerom is tranſlated a pine. Others interpret it an elm. The Engliſh tranſlation reads an aſh. In another place of the ſame prophet, we find alſo pine, in the Vulgate, but the Hebrew has,

Iſai. lx. 13. תאשור Taſhur, which the Septuagint renders the cedar; other interpreters, the elm. The Engliſh has the box. Laſtly, in the Chronicles, mention is made of the wood of the pine: but the Hebrew reads Algumim, 2 Chron. ii. 8. אלגומים. LXX. Πευκίνα, Eng. algum-trees, which probably ſignifies in general, trees that are fat and reſinous, or trees that produce gum.

PINNACLE of the temple. When the devil had tempted Jeſus in the deſart, Matt. iv. 5. he taketh him up into the holy city, and ſetteth him on a pinnacle of the temple; and ſaith unto him, If thou be the Son of God, caſt thyſelf down; &c. This pinnacle was, probably, that gallery, or parapet, or wall on the top of the buttreſſes, which ſurrounded the roof of the temple, properly ſo called. For it is well known, that in Paleſtine the roofs were covered with terraces, or platforms; round about which was a low wall, to prevent any one from falling down. Deut. xxii. 8. Joſephus tells us, Antiq. lib. vi. cap. 6. in Lat. that the roof of the temple was defended by pretty tall golden ſpikes, to hinder birds from alighting thereon, that they might not defile it with their dung. It was not therefore on the roof of the temple, that Jeſus Chriſt was placed, but on the wall that ſurrounded the roof.

PINON, פינן, pearl, or gem; from פנינים: otherwiſe, that beholds; from פנה panah, to behold.

PIRAM, פראם, their wild aſs, or their fierceneſs; from פרא para, and the pronoun מ am, their's: otherwiſe, the bull, or the fruit of the mother; from פר par, a bull, or פרה parah, to fructify, and אם am, a mother.

PIRAM, or Pharam, king of Jarmuth, overcome by Joſhua, who ſlew him, and hanged him up, after his death, Joſh. x. 3, 24, 25, 26.

PIRATHON, פרעתון, his diſſipation, his deprivation, his rupture; from פרע parah, and the pronoun ן an, his: according to the Syriac, his vengeance.

PIRATHON, or Pharaton, a city of Ephraim, in mount Amalek. Abdon, judge of Iſrael, was of this city, and was buried there, Judg. xii. 15. Bacchides cauſed this city to be fortified. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 1. It is called Pharathoni, 1 Mac. ix. 50.

PISGAH, פסגה, hill, eminence, fortreſs; from פסג paſag.

PISGAH, or Phaſga, a mountain beyond Jordan, in the country of Moab. The mountains Nebo, Piſgah, and Abarim make but one chain, near mount Peor, over-againſt Jericho, on the road from Livias to Heſhbon. See Euſebius and Jerome on Nebo and Abarim.

PISIDIA, Πισιδία, pitch, or pitchy; from πισσώδης.

PISIDIA, a province of Aſia Minor, having Lycaonia north, Pamphilia ſouth, Cilicia and Cappadocia eaſt, and the province of Aſia weſt. St. Paul preached at Antioch of Piſidia, Acts xiii. 14. and throughout Piſidia, xiv. 24.

PISON, פישון, Φίσων, changing, or doubling, or extenſion of the mouth; from pe, the mouth, and שנה ſhanah, to change, to double: otherwiſe, extended; from פשה paſhah: otherwiſe, multitude; from פוש puſh, to be multiplied.

PISON, or Phiſon, one of the four great rivers that watered paradiſe. We take it to be the Phaſis, a famous river of Colchis. Moſes ſays, Gen. ii. 11, 12, that it runs through all the land of Havilah, and that excellent gold is found there. This river has its ſource in the mountains of Armenia, and diſcharges itſelf into the Euxine ſea. There is hardly any river in the world that has more turnings and windings, becauſe of the mountains in its way; from whence, in the time of Pliny, lib. vi. cap. 4. there were an hundred and twenty bridges over this river: and this perhaps Moſes hints at, when he ſays, that Piſon compaſſeth the whole land of Havilah, which land we take to be Colchis. The gold of this country is much celebrated. All antiquity extols the riches of Colchis. Strabo, lib. xi. obſerves, that the rivers and brooks of this country, (or of the neighbouring countries, for we cannot tell its ancient limits) carried lumps of gold with their waters, which the inhabitants gathered on ſheep-ſkins with their wool on, or in wooden trays with holes bored in them. We think the gold of Phaz, Uphaz, or Ophaz, ſometimes mentioned in Scripture, is the ſame with that of Piſon, or of Phaſis. Cant. v. 11. Jer. x. 9. Dan. x. 5.

PISPAH, פספה, leſſening of the mouth; from פסס paſas, diminution, and פה pe, the mouth.

PISTICA NARDUS, Πιστικὴ, pure ſpikenard; John xii. 3.

PITCH. See BITUMEN.

PITHOM, פתם, their mouthful, or bit; from פת path, and the pronoun מ am, their: otherwiſe, conſummation, or dilatation of the mouth; from פה pe, the mouth, and תם tham, finiſhed, perfect. This word is not Hebrew: in the Egyptian language, phi, or pi, is the maſculine article.

PITHOM, or Phithom, one of the cities that the children of Iſrael built for Pharaoh in Egypt, during their ſervitude, Exod. i. 11. This is, probably, the ſame as Pathumos mentioned by Herodotus, lib. ii. which he places on the canal made by the kings Necho and Darius, to join the Red-Sea with the Nile. We find alſo, in the ancient geographers, Strabo, Ptolemy, Pliny, &c. that there was an arm of the Nile, called Pathmeticus, meticus, Phatmicus, Phatnicus, or Phatniticus. Bochart says, Descript. Ter. Sanct. that Pithom and Rameſſes are about five leagues above the diviſion of the Nile, and beyond this river: but this aſſertion has no proof from antiquity. Marſham will have Pithom to be the ſame as Peluſium, or Damietta.

PITHON, פיתון, his mouth; from פת path: otherwiſe, his perſuaſion; from פתה pathah, and the pronoun ן an, his: otherwiſe, gift of the mouth; from פה, mouth, and תנה thanah, gift.

PITY. See MERCY.

PLAGUES of Egypt. See MOSES.

The Hebrews call plagues, all diſeaſes ſent as puniſhments or corrections from God; the peſtilence, infection, leproſy, ſudden death, famine, tempeſts; all calamities public or private.

PLAIN. In Paleſtine we find two large vales, known to hiſtorians and geographers by the name of plains. One extends along the Jordan from Tiberias to Segor or Seor, about twelve hundred furlongs in length, in breadth one hundred and twenty furlongs, Joſeph. Antiq. lib. ix. cap. 11. & de Bello, lib. v. cap. 4. The other is the plain, or field, of Eſdraelon or Legio, becauſe of theſe cities ſtanding in it; or the valley of Jezreel, becauſe of the city of Jezreel, 2 Chron. iv. 17. It reaches from eaſt to weſt, from Scythopolis on the Jordan, to Legio at the foot of Carmel, in length about twenty-five leagues. Euſebius and St. Jerom in Αὐλών, give a ſtill larger extent to the great plain that lies on the Jordan; from Libanus to the wilderneſs of Paran. The valley or plain of Jericho was in this great plain, and made a part of it, as may be ſeen from Euſebius, in Ἐγγαδδί. Theſe great plains are ſometimes called, the plains of Aulon, or Aulos, or Araba.

PLANE-TREE, platanus. The Hebrew word, Gen. xxx. 37, ערמון Harmon, which the Septuagint and St. Jerom tranſlate by Πλατάνῳ, Ezek. xxxi. 8. a plane-tree, in Geneſis; by modern interpreters, who generally follow the Rabbins, is rendered a cheſnut-tree. In Ezekiel, the Septuagint tranſlate it by a fir-tree. So true it is, that we have but little certainty, concerning the names of trees, in the Hebrew.

PLAY, to play. The Hebrews uſe this word, to expreſs all kinds of diverſions, as dancing, ſports of exerciſe, toying, and amuſements proper for recreating the mind, and diverting it. The Hebrew word צחק Zachak, which ſignifies to play, is commonly uſed for laughing, mocking, jeering, inſulting. When Sarah ſaw Iſhmael play with her ſon Iſaac, ſhe was offended at it: it was a play of mockery or inſult, or, perhaps, of ſquabbling, as in 2 Sam. ii. 14. Let the young people (or ſoldiers) get up, and play before us; let them fight, as it were, by way of play: but the event ſhews, that they fought in good earneſt, ſince they were all killed.

We ſee another kind of play in Exodus xxxii. 6. When the Iſraelites had ſet up the golden calf, they began to dance about it, and to divert themſelves: The people ſat down to eat and drink, and roſe up to play. When Samſon was delivered by Dalilah into the hands of the Philiſtines, they bored out his eyes, put him in priſon, and ſome time after made him play before them, i. e. divert them by the tricks they played him, and by the motions he was forced to make, to avoid them, and to ſkreen himſelf from their inſults, Judg. xvi. 25. [by ſhewing feats of ſtrength]

The women that came out to meet David and Saul, when they returned victorious from the ſlaughter of Goliah, danced and played on inſtruments, and ſhewed their mirth after a thouſand manners, 1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7. In the proceſſion when the ark was removed from the houſe of Obed-edom to the palace of king David, he danced with great alacrity, played upon inſtruments, and teſtified his joy before the Lord, 2 Sam. vi. 5, 21. And when Michal upbraided him, for not obſerving the gravity and decency ſuitable to his rank, he anſwered, I will play before the Lord, and will be ſtill more vile in my own eyes.

Sarah the daughter of Raguel, opening her whole heart before the Lord, ſaid to him; I have never aſſociated myſelf with thoſe that play: Tob. iii. 17. And Jeremiah, xv. 17. I have never haunted the aſſemblies of thoſe that are given to play and diverſion. And the ſame prophet, ſpeaking to the daughter of Sion, tells her, that the time ſhall come, in which ſhe ſhall be rebuilt, and again ſhall divert herſelf in dancing with her equals, Jer. xxxi. 4. Solomon repreſents Wiſdom, as playing before the Lord, and taking her pleaſure in living among men, Prov. viii. 30, 31, Baruch ſeems to point at the diverſion of fowling, by the name of play, chap. iii. 17. where are the princes of the nations, who domineer over the beaſts of the earth, and play with the fowls of the air?

I cannot perceive, in Scripture, any particular ſorts of plays: neither games of hazard, nor plays, i. e. theatrical repreſentations, nor races either of horſes or chariots, nor combats of men or beaſts. Solomon ſpeaks of nothing like this; though he frankly owns, that he had indulged himſelf in all kinds of pleaſure: he mentions only fine buildings, gardens, vineyards, orchards, fiſh-ponds, good eating and drinking, heaping up up gold and ſilver; ſinging-men, and ſinging-women, &c. In the deſcriptions of proſperity and profound peace, Scripture ſpeaks neither of games, nor ſhows, but of well-cultivated and fruitful fields, wherein every one may enjoy his repoſe under his own vine, and his own fig-tree, partaking of the fruits of his labours in ſecurity; where the old men, ſitting in public places, might deliberate about their affairs in common, and where young people might cloath themſelves in glorious apparel, and in ornaments proper for military array. The Iſraelites were a laborious and warlike people, who confined almoſt all their plays and diverſions to the pleaſures of the country, and to thoſe of the feſtivals of the Lord, their religious journeys, and their meals in the temple. I ſpeak of the times in which the obſervation of the law was maintained, and of the ancient periods of the Hebrew republic. For, when they grew irregular, they adopted the utmoſt exceſſes of idolatrous nations, their wicked and ſhameful ſports and diverſions. From the time of the Grecians, after the death of Alexander the Great, under the government of the kings of Syria in Judea, they began to ſtudy the ſports and exerciſes of the Grecians. There were Gymnaſia, or ſchools of exerciſe, in Jeruſalem, and places where they practiſed the exerciſes of the Greeks, wreſtling, racing, quoits, &c. 1 Macc. v. 16. 2 Macc. iv. 13, 14, 15. And when the Romans ſucceeded the Greeks, Herod built theatres and amphitheatres in the cities of Paleſtine, and cauſed all ſorts of games to be repreſented. Vide Joſephus, loc. plur. and Wagenſeil, on the ſports of the Hebrews.

PLEIADES. Theſe are ſeven ſtars [anciently, ſay Vitruvius and Pliny, in the bull's tail; but on modern globes in the ſhoulder] of the Bull; they appear at the beginning of ſpring. Ovid. Faſt. lib. v. 165.

Ora micant tauri ſeptem radiantia flammis.

Job ſpeaks of the Pleiades, chap. xxxviii. 31. ix. 9. and of the Hyades, which are ſeven other ſtars in the Bull's-head, and which mark out the eaſt point and the ſpring. Canſt thou bind the ſweet influence of the Pleiades? Hebrew כימה Chima: Can you hinder the Pleiades from riſing in their ſeaſon? He gives them the name,—the ſweet influences of Chima, becauſe of the agreeableneſs of the ſpring ſeaſon. St. Jerom has tranſlated Chima, by Hyades, Job. ix. 9. and by Pleiades, Job xxxviii. 31. and by Arcturus, the Bear's tail, Amos v. 8. Aquila ſometimes tranſlates it in like manner. The Bear is one of the moſt northern conſtellations; Chima rather ſignifies the Pleiades.

POCHERETH, מוכרת, Φαχερὰθ, deſtruction of the mouth; from כרת carath, to cut, to tear away, and פה pe, the mouth.

POETRY of the Hebrews. No point of criticiſm has been more canvaſſed among the learned, than that concerning the Hebrew poetry. The moſt ſkilful commentators, and the moſt able critics, have abundantly laboured this argument, and yet we cannot ſay the matter is exhauſted, or the difficulty cleared. Since we cannot pretend to know, nor ever ſhall know, the true pronunciation of the Hebrew language; and conſequently we cannot perceive either the harmony of the words, or the quantity of the ſyllables, which conſtitute the beauty of the verſes. Nor have we in Hebrew, as we have in Greek and Latin, rules for aſcertaining the quantity of ſyllables, the number of feet, the cadence and conſtruction of verſes; and yet it is plain the Hebrews obſerved theſe things, at leaſt in ſome meaſure, ſince in their poems we obſerve letters added to, or cut off from, the ends of the words, which ſhew ſome ſubmiſſion to the rhythm, to the number, or the meaſure of ſyllables. Nor have we now any notion of the tune and dance which generally accompanied Hebrew poetry; for we know that the poetry was ſung, and made on purpoſe for ſinging: and Scripture frequently ſpeaks of choirs and dances in the ceremonies of religion.

From the manner in which Joſephus, Origen, Euſebius, and St. Jerom, have ſpoken of the Hebrew poetry, it ſhould ſeem that in their time the beauty and rules of it were well known. Joſephus affirms in ſeveral places, Antiq. lib. ii. cap. ult. lib. iv. cap. ult. lib. vii. cap. 10. that the ſongs compoſed by Moſes are in heroic verſe, and that David compoſed ſeveral ſorts of verſes and ſongs, odes and hymns, in honour of God; ſome of which were in trimeters, or verſes of three feet, and others in pentameters, or verſes of five feet. Origen and Euſebius have eſpouſed the ſame ſentiment, whether out of mere deference to the opinion of Joſephus, or whether of their own judgments, is uncertain. Origen underſtood the Hebrew, and Euſebius was one of the moſt learned men of his time.

St. Jerom, Præfat. in Chronic. Euſeb. has carried this notion ſtill farther, affirming, that the Pſalter was compoſed in Alcaic, Iambic, and Sapphic verſes, in the manner of thoſe of Pindar and Horace. And that the ſongs of Deuteronomy and Iſaiah, the book of Job, and thoſe of Solomon, are in Hexameter and Pentameter verſes. He ſays elſewhere, in Ep. 135. ad Paul Urb. that the canticle in Deuteronomy is in Iambic verſes of four feet, as alſo Pſalm cxviii. and cxliv. whereas Pſalm cx. and cxi. are in Iambic verſes only of three feet.

He obſerves in the Lamentations of Jeremiah a kind of Sapphic verſe, and verſes of three meaſures. In ſeveral places, Epiſt. ad Paulin. & lib. ix. Comment. in Ezech. cap. 30. he ſpeaks of the book of Pſalms, as of a work compoſed of lyric verſes, like thoſe of Pindar, Alcæus, Horace, Catullus, and Serenus. In his preface to the book of Job, he ſays, that from theſe words, Periſh the day in which I was born, are Hexameter verſes, compoſed of Dactyls and Spondees, wherein are ſometimes intermixed other feet of the ſame meaſure, though they have not the ſame number of ſyllables, becauſe of the variation of the language. Sometimes, ſays he, without any regard to the quantity of ſyllables, the poet makes you perceive a kind of cadence or harmony, which ſenſibly affects thoſe who are ſkilful in the rules of poetry.

Philo, de Vita Contemplativa, ad finem, ſays, that the Eſſenes have ancient poems, whoſe verſes are of ſeveral forms and meaſures: ſome have three members, others are hymns ſung at the ſacrifices, others were rehearſed at meals, and others were accompanied with dances. Theodore Herbert thought he had found verſes in the Bible, like to thoſe in Greek and Latin, and he has really inſtanced ſome. Meibomius boaſted, that for above two hundred years nobody but himſelf had arrived at the knowledge of Hebrew poetry; but he kept this knowledge to himſelf, and did not think proper to communicate it to the world. We only know, that by means of his poetry, and the alterations he makes in the text, he takes the whole Scripture to pieces. Francis Gomarus, in his treatiſe called Davidis Lyra, has pretended to give the rules of Hebrew poetry, juſt like thoſe of Greek and Latin; but he brought on himſelf a confutation from Lud. Capellus, which has not been anſwered.

Le Clerc compoſed a very ingenious diſſertation, to ſhew, that the Hebrew poetry was in rhymes, pretty much like the French or Engliſh; and his opinion has been eſpouſed by a good number of partiſans. Others maintain, that in the old Hebrew verſes there is neither meaſure nor feet. Scaliger, Animad. in Chronic. Euſeb. p. 7. col. 1. even affirms, that this language, as well as that of the Syrians, Arabians, and Abyſſins, is not capable of the reſtraint of feet or meaſures. Auſtin of Eugubium ſays, that the Hebrews have neither heroic verſes, nor iambics, nor of any other meaſure; but only ſomething that reſembles it. This opinion is ſupported by Lud. Capellus, Martin Martinius, Samuel Bohlius, Waſmurh, Auſt. Pfeiffer, and others. Grotius alſo declares for this, and this is indeed the ſentiment which we think the moſt probable. Grot. in Luc. 1. 46. Erant enim ῥυθμοὶ Hebræorum non ἔμμελροι, ſed lege ſoluti, cujuſmodi etiam erant, & nunc quoque ſunt, eorum ſaltationes.

Biſhop LOWTH has lately proved that Hebrew poetry has pretty regular rules; but others doubt the application of ſome of his principles.]

POETS. There is no doubt but that the ancient Hebrews had their poets; and we have in the Bible a good number of canticles, and other pieces of poetry. What ſeems very remarkable is, that their poetry is dedicated, by their application of it, to the celebrating of the greatneſs of God and his works. The Hebrew poets, ſo many of them at leaſt whoſe works are come down to us, were men inſpired of God. We find among them kings, law-givers, prophets. Moſes, Barak, David, Solomon, Hezekiah, Job, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and moſt of the prophets, compoſed poems, or pieces in verſe; the moſt pompous, the moſt majeſtic, and the moſt ſublime! The expreſſion, the ſentiments, the figures, the variety, the action, every thing is ſurpriſing!

St. Paul gives a Pagan poet the name of prophet. Tit. i. 12. One of themſelves, even a prophet of their own ſaid, &c. Becauſe, among the heathen, poets were looked on as inſpired by the ſpirit of Apollo. They ſpoke by enthuſiaſm. Oracles were commonly delivered in verſe. The poets were interpreters of the will of the gods.

The poet quoted here by St. Paul, is Epimenides. The antients relate many particulars of him, which prove, that they eſteemed him as inſpired, and favoured by the gods. Ariſtotle ſays, Rhet. lib. iii. cap. 17. that he did not indeed foretell future events, but that he diſcovered things paſt and unknown. Diogenes Laertius, lib. i. and Plutarch, in Solone, give an account, that ſeeing the fort of Munichium, which is the port of Athens, he cried out, O the blindneſs of men! If the Athenians could but foreſee the misfortunes that this fort will create to them, they would demoliſh it with their teeth. The truth of theſe words was evinced ſome years after, when king Antigonus placed a garriſon there, to curb the city of Athens. Another time he encouraged the Athenians, who were apprehenſive of an invaſion from the Perſians. He told them, that it would be ten years before they came, and that then they would be obliged to return again, after having ſuffered great loſſes. He alſo foretold to the Lacedemonians and Cretans, the captivity to which the Arcadians ſhould one day reduce them. Probably from ſuch predictions as theſe, whether true or falſe, the Greeks conſidered Epimenides as a prophet. [N. B. Theſe predictions have in them nothing that requires inſpiration.]

The ſame apoſtle quotes the poet Aratus, a native of Cilicia as well as himſelf. Acts xvii. 28. Τοῦ γὰρ καὶ γένος ἐσμεν. We are the children and the race of God. This is part of a longer paſſage, whoſe import is, We muſt begin from Jupiter, whom we muſt by no means forget. Every thing is replete replete with Jupiter. He fills the ſtreets, the public places, and aſſemblies of men. The whole ſea and its harbours are full of this god, and all of us in all places have need of Jupiter. It was certainly not to prove the being, or to enhance the merit of Jupiter, that St. Paul quotes this paſſage. But he has delivered out of bondage, as we may ſay, a truth which this poet had uttered, without penetrating into the true meaning of it. The apoſtle uſed it to prove the exiſtence of the true God, to a people not convinced of the divine authority of the Scriptures, and who would have rejected ſuch proofs as he might have derived from thence.

POINTS, or vowels. Though the Hebrews in their alphabet have both vowels [their vowels are, א Aleph, ו Vau, י Jod, ה He, ע Gnain. The ה He is rather an aſpiration than a vowel] and conſonants, like other nations, yet however, in writing they do not always inſert their vowels. Sometimes the vowels that are inſerted are not pronounced; or laſtly, theſe vowels being ſometimes long and ſometimes ſhort, it is very difficult to thoſe who have not been long acquainted with the Hebrew tongue, to read rightly the books written in Hebrew. This difficulty gave occaſion to the invention and uſe of pointed vowels, theſe are, certain points placed below or above the conſonants, which ſupply the place of vowels, when they are wanting, or which determine their ſound, quantity, and value, when they are preſent.

Grammarians reckon fourteen pointed vowels, viz. (though ſome are content with ten, or eleven)

Five long.		Five ſhort.		Four very ſhort.

If we have recourſe to the Rabbins, and to ſome Hebrew grammarians among Chriſtians, concerning the antiquity of theſe points, we muſt believe them as ancient as the Hebrew Scriptures themſelves; and muſt derive their origin from Moſes, or from Eſdras, or from the ancients of the great ſynagogue, who lived in the time of Eſdras and of Nehemiah. Vid. Morin. Exercit. Bibl. Exer. 18. lib. ii. cap. 1, 2, 3, &c. Briani Waltoni, Prolegom. Biblic. Prol. 3. art. 38, &c. & alios paſſim. But the moſt judicious believe this invention to be much more modern. Some, as Elias Levita, Kimchi, Abenezra, Judam Levit. & alios apud Tirin. refer their origin to the Maſſorites, or to the doctors of the ſchool of Tiberias, who lived about A. D. 500. F. Morinus thinks, that the Hebrews received from the Arabians both the art of grammar, and the uſe of theſe points. But the Arabians themſelves did not begin to write till very late; for when the empire of the Mahometans was ſettled, about A. D. 622, they had not very long had the uſe of letters. The names of theſe pointed vowels, which are intirely Arabic, are a proof that they were originally derived from that people. Beſides, the firſt grammarians the Jews had, being Arabians, and having written in their own language, it is very probable, that the pointed vowels are of their invention, and proceed from the ſame ſource as their art of grammar. Vide LETTERS, MASSORITES.

F. Morin, who has examined this matter to the bottom, ſhews that the pointed vowels were not invented in the time of Origen, nor in the time of St. Jerom, nor even in the time of the doctors who compoſed the Talmud, which was not finiſhed till the ſeventh century. The ſame author enumerating ſeveral works compoſed by the Jews in the eighth and ninth century, ſays, the firſt traces he meets with of the pointed vowels are in the writings of the Rabbins Ben-Aſer, head of the ſchool of the weſtern Jews, and in thoſe of Ben-Nephtali, head of the ſchool of the eaſtern Jews, about the middle of the tenth century. It follows, that we cannot well place the introduction of theſe points before the tenth century. Morin. Exercit. Biblic. lib. ii. Exer. 28. cap. 1, 2, 3, &c. Walton's Proleg. 3. n. 38, &c. and other Prologomena to the Scriptures; Du Pin, F. Fraſſen, and F. Thomaſſin, in his method of ſtudying the Scripture.

The modern Jews admit of pointed vowels, and of of Bibles printed with them, for ordinary uſe; but the books they publicly uſe in their ſynagogues, the authentic rolls from which they ſolemnly read the ſacred text, are ſtill without points: As at the beginning the Samaritans alſo did not put any points in their Pentateuch, which was written in the ancient Hebrew characters. The ſcrupuloſity of both theſe in this reſpect, is a proof of the novelty of the pointed vowels.

It had been thought, that Eſdras inſerted the pointed vowels in the Hebrew, but Elias Levita, a German Jew, about the middle of the ſixteenth century maintained, that the pointed vowels were not received till after the compleating of the Talmud, about A. D. 500; that till that time the manner of reading the ſacred text, and of ſupplying the vowels, was only preſerved by tradition. The Jews in general, as well thoſe who refer the points to Eſdras, as thoſe who aſcribe them to the Maſſorites, maintain, that the manner of reading, according to this punctuation, is of divine authority, and that the leaſt alteration may not be allowed therein. But the greater part of our critics, even of thoſe who hold Eſdras for the firſt author of the points, maintain it to be a mere human invention, and that no ſcruple ſhould be made of improving it, when the tenor of the diſcourſe, the analogy of things, or the rules of good criticiſm offer a better ſenſe.

Theſe are the chief reaſons urged by the two Buxtorfs, father and ſon, to prove the antiquity of the pointed vowels. Buxtorf. Pater, in Tiberiade, cap. 9. Buxtorf. Fil. Tract. de punctor. antiq. cap. 5. Firſt, two ancient books called Bahir and Zohar, the firſt wrote a little before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſecond a little after, expreſsly mention the pointed vowels in more places than one. Secondly, the Maſſorites of Tiberias, to whom the invention of the points is aſcribed, do not appear to have had ſufficient capacity for this work, nor does any ancient author impute it to them: Aben-ezra, a Rabbin of the twelfth century, is the firſt who does them this honour. Thirdly, ſince the Hebrew has ceaſed to be the vulgar tongue of the Jews, i. e. ſince the captivity of Babylon, it was not poſſible to teach this language without the aſſiſtance of the pointed vowels; therefore, at leaſt they muſt have been in being ſince Eſdras, and have always been in uſe from that time. Fourthly, by ſubverting the authority of the pointed vowels, and putting them on the footing of an invention merely human, the text will be given up to uncertain readings and arbitrary explications, which will overturn the certainty and authority of the Holy Scriptures.

To theſe reaſons we reply: firſt, that the books Bahir and Zohar have nothing near that antiquity here imputed to them. There are even found things in theſe books, that muſt have been written above a thouſand years ſince that time, in which they are pretended to have been written. No ancient author has either owned them, or quoted them. Secondly, the Maſſorites of Tiberias were certainly in being a long time in Judæa; and, abſtracting from the notion that has been received of their capacity, and from the teſtimony of Aben-ezra and of Elias Levita, it is known with certainty, that the pointed vowels were not adopted before their time.

Thirdly, that ſince the Hebrew tongue has ceaſed to be a living language, and ſpoke by the Jews, the neceſſity of the pointed vowels is not ſo great as is pretended. The Samaritans, who underſtand Hebrew no better than the Jews, have no points to this day; yet they read the Hebrew text in Samaritan characters. The Arabians had points but late. One might very well be without them in their language, as alſo in the Hebrew, the Syriac, and the Chaldee, even on the ſuppoſition that theſe were not living languages, provided we preſerve the ancient character, provided we ſpeak a language which has ſome affinity to that whoſe character we preſerve; and laſtly, that this language, dead as it is, may however ſubſiſt in the eccleſiaſtical offices, in the prayers, and even in an infinite number of terms written in the language of commerce and converſation. On this ſuppoſition, which is really the caſe of the Jews at preſent, in reſpect of the Hebrew, the difficulty of reading the Hebrew without points is vaſtly leſs than might be imagined. We certainly know that many Jews, who are far from underſtanding this language to perfection, yet can read Hebrew without points, and write it too. This proves ſufficiently, whatever may be ſaid to the contrary, that they might have done well enough without points, for ſeveral ages, and that we alſo might do well enough without them. Add to this, that the Hebrew tongue is not abſolutely deſtitute of vowels; it has three or four, viz. א Aleph, י Jod, ו Vau, and ע Hain; ה He and ח Cheth, are aſpirations. Theſe letters, and theſe aſpirations, are found throughout the text. One vowel alone is ſufficient for reading a whole word. To judge of the force of theſe reaſons, it is neceſſary to underſtand the language thoroughly.

The fourth proof relating to the authority of theſe pointed vowels, has but an indirect glance at their antiquity; and it is eaſy to retort the argument againſt thoſe who uſe it, by applying it to the Greek and Latin tongues, which have always always written their vowels. Without diſturbing the vowels, cannot one often take the ſame paſſage in ten different ſenſes? and this without changing any thing in the words, accents, or punctuation, only in the order and ſtructure [or, emphaſis] of the words; Can this be ſaid to give up the ſacred text to uncertain readings, and to arbitrary explications? Is there any language in the world, in which one does not often happen on equivocal expreſſions, amphibologies, and uncertainties, and this notwithſtanding points, accents, and vowels? I own that the Hebrew without points is more ſubject to this than ſome other languages are; but tradition, good ſenſe, the coherence of the diſcourſe, cuſtom, ſupply rules to correct theſe pretended inconveniencies.

N. B. What would be the conſequences, if we were always obliged ſervilely to follow the punctuation of the Maſſorites? How many paſſages have been happily reſtored, or explained, by having recourſe to ancient verſions, and by quitting the manner of reading aſſigned by the Maſſorites?

POLYGAMY. Polygamy was tolerated among the Hebrews, and Patriarchs. We do not ſee it eſtabliſhed by any law, and the Scripture, which tranſmits to us the name of the firſt bigamous perſon, and of his two wives, Gen. iv. 19. ſeems to inſinuate, that he was afraid of the conſequences. As if Lamech would comfort his wives, who were terrified at the irregularity of his polygamy, by ſaying, "this is not a crime that deſerves death: compare my action to that of Cain, and then conclude, that if the murderer of Cain ſhould deſerve puniſhment, how much more ſhall he deſerve it who murders Lamech?'

The Rabbins maintain, that polygamy was in uſe from the very beginning of the world, and that before the deluge every man had two wives. Tertullian, exhort. ad caſtit. cap. 5. & de monogam, cap. 5. on the contrary, thinks, that Lamech was the firſt who tranſgreſſed the eſtabliſhed order of God, by marrying two wives, and that polygamy commenced from a man who was accurſed. He ſays, the bad example of this man had conſequences, which continued down to the total ſubverſion of the Jewiſh nation, and that before the deluge nobody imitated Lamech. St. Jerom, lib. i. cont. Jovin. & Ep. ix. ad Salvian & Ep. xi. ad Agerach. ſays, that Lamech, who was an homicide and a bloody-minded perſon, was the firſt who divided one fleſh to two wives, and that the flood expiated his parricide and his polygamy together. (He ſuppoſes Lamech to have killed Cain.)

The laws of Moſes plainly ſuppoſe this cuſtom; yet condemn it not. The Rabbins allow the king to have 18 wives, after the example of Rehoboam, king of Judah. They allow the Iſraelites to marry as many as they can maintain. Notwithſtanding all this, examples of polygamy among private perſons were uncommon. The wiſer men eaſily ſaw the inconveniencies that attended this irregularity. But inſtead of wives they took concubines. There is this difference between a wife and a concubine, according to the Rabbins; that a wife was married by contract, and had her dowry; whereas a concubine was taken without contract, and lived in a ſtate of ſubmiſſion and dependance, under the matron of the family, as Hagar in reſpect of Sarah; and the children of the concubines had no ſhare in the inheritance.

The Saviour of the world reſtored marriage to its primitive and lawful condition, by revoking the permiſſion of polygamy and divorce. He allows a Chriſtian to have but one wife, according to thoſe words of the Creator: God created them male and female, wherefore a man ſhall cleave unto his wife, and they two ſhall be but one fleſh.

Polygamy is not allowed the Jews at preſent, neither in the Eaſt or in the Weſt. The emperors Theodoſius, Arcadius, and Honorius, forbid it them by their decrees, Anno 393. The Mahometans, who allow themſelves this liberty, will not, however, allow it to the Jews in their dominions. The Samaritans, who are extremely devoted to the laws of Moſes, marry but one wife, and make it a crime in the Jews, that they ſecretly practiſe polygamy in the Eaſt.

Polygamy is divided into ſimultaneous and ſucceſſive. The firſt is, when a man has more than one wife at a time. This is condemned by both canon and civil law. Succeſſive polygamy is, when a man has ſeveral wives one after another, each of which he marries after the deceaſe of the preceding wife. This is allowed in the church, though with a good deal of regret; the fathers and councils having often teſtified, that they did not approve of ſecond marriages.

POLYGLOTT. This word literally ſignifies a variety of languages, and this name is given to bibles publiſhed in ſeveral languages, or at leaſt in three, of which the texts are ranged in different columns. Some of theſe Polyglotts contain all the books of the bible, others contain but a part. Theſe following are the principal Polyglotts.

A. D.

1517. The bible of Francis Ximenes of Ciſneros, cardinal of the order of St. Francis; in four languages, Hebrew, Chaldee, Greek, and Latin.

1518.

A. D.

1518. The bible of Juſtiniani, biſhop of Nebio, of the order of St. Dominic, in five languages; in Hebrew, Chaldee, Greek, Latin, and Arabic. Only the pſalter was printed.

1546. John Potken, provoſt of the collegiate church of St. George at Cologn, cauſed the pſalter to be printed in four languages, Hebrew, Greek, Chaldee, or rather Ethiopic, and Latin.

1546. The Jews of Conſtantinople cauſed to be printed in that city, the Pentateuch in Hebrew, Chaldee, Perſian, and Arabic, with the commentaries of Solomon Jarchi.

1547. The ſame Jews cauſed alſo to be printed at Conſtantinople, the Pentateuch, in four languages; Hebrew, Chaldee, vulgar Greek, and Spaniſh.

1565. John Draconitis, of Carloſtad in Franconia, made an edition of the pſalter, the Proverbs of Solomon, and the prophets Micah and Joel in five languages: Hebrew, Chaldee, Greek, Latin, and German. The death of the author prevented the compleating of this work.

1572. Benedictus Arias Montanus had the chief care of the edition of the Polyglott bible performed by Chriſtopher Plantin, by order of Philip II. king of Spain. This bible is in eight volumes, in Hebrew, Chaldee, Greek, and Latin, with the Syriac verſion of the New Teſtament. It is properly but a copy of that of Cardinal Ximenes.

1586. There appeared at Heidelberg, an edition of the books of the Old Teſtament in Hebrew and Greek, with two Latin verſions; one of St. Jerom, and the other of Santes Pagninus, ranged in four columns, at the bottom of which were notes aſcribed to Vatablus. Hence it obtained the name of the Polyglott Bible of Vatablus.

1596. David Wolder, a Lutheran miniſter at Hamburgh, cauſed to be printed by James Lucias, a bible in three languages; Greek, Latin, and German.

1599. Elias Hutter, a German, printed ſeveral Polyglotts. The firſt is a bible in ſix languages, printed at Nuremberg. There was only printed the Pentateuch, the books of Joſhua, Judges, and Ruth. In Hebrew, Chaldee, Greek, Latin, and the German of Luther; the ſixth language varied according to what nation the copies were deſigned for. Some had the Sclavonian verſion of the edition of Wittemberg; others the French of Geneva; others the Italian alſo of Geneva; others the Saxon verſion, from the German of Luther.

A. D.

This author alſo gave the pſalter and the New Teſtament, in Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and German. But his chief work is the New Teſtament in twelve languages, Syriac, Greek, Hebrew, Italian, Spaniſh, French, Latin, German, Bohemian, Engliſh, Daniſh, and Poliſh. This Polyglott was printed at Nuremberg, in two volumes, folio; and in four volumes, quarto.

1645. The bible of M. le Jay in ſeven languages, was printed at Paris by Anthony Vitre. It contains the Hebrew, Samaritan, Chaldee, Greek, Syriac, Latin, and Arabic. He followed the Greek verſion printed at Antwerp, alſo the Chaldee, and Latin. Complaint has been made of its incorrectneſs.

1657. No ſooner did the Polyglott of le Jay appear in England, but the learned of this nation undertook to give a new edition of it more correct, more extenſive, and more perfect. They accompliſhed this deſign, and produced a new Polyglott in five volumes, with Prolegomena, and ſeveral other treatiſes in the firſt tome, ſeveral new Oriental verſions in the fourth and fifth, and a very large collection of various readings in the ſixth. Brian Walton was the undertaker of this edition. Hence this bible has the name of Walton's Polyglott. [This is eſteemed the moſt correct of any: and has made a noble addition to the materials for ſtudying Holy Scripture. The learned are daily augmenting this aſſiſtance by collections of ancient verſions, and their various readings: which may be eſteemed as ſo many Polyglotts.]

POMGRANATE. The pomgranate is a kind of apple, covered without with a reddiſh rind, and red within, which opens length-ways, and ſhews red grains within, full of juice like wine, with little kernels. God directed Moſes, to put embroidered pomgranates, with golden bells between them, at the bottom of the high prieſt's blue robe or ephod, Exod. xxviii. 33. Pomgranates being very common in Paleſtine, and being a very beautiful fruit, the Scriptures often make uſe of ſimilitudes taken from them.

Of the pomgranate tree, malus punica, or malo-granatum, there are two ſorts, wild and domeſtic. The cultivated pomgranate tree has ſeveral ſmall angular boughs, armed with prickles, and covered with a reddiſh bark. Its leaves are ſmall, like thoſe of myrrh, but not ſo ſharp, of a green colour, drawing towards red. Its bloſſom is large, beautiful, of a red colour inclining to purple, compoſed of ſeveral ſtalks in the form of a roſe, in the hollow of the cup. This cup is oblong, hard, purple, having a figure ſomething like that of a bell. This garden pomgranate tree ſometimes bears double flowers, and then it has no fruit.

The wild pomgranate tree is a ſhrub like the former, but is more rude and thorny. Its bloſſoms are called balauſts by the apothecaries. They are aſtringent, and very good in a dyſentery, diarrhœa, and lientery.

We are aſſured, that in Peru there have been ſeen granates as large as a barrel; that the Spaniards, by way of curioſity, carry them in the proceſſion of the ſacrament. The Muſſulmen ſpeaking of the holy land, ſay, that five men could hardly carry a grape of this country, and that five perſons might hide themſelves in one ſhell of their pomgranates. This is hyperbolical enough!

POMPEY. Cneius Pompeius, ſurnamed the Great, one of the moſt celebrated captains of the Roman commonwealth. His name is not found in Scripture, but Joſephus ſpeaks of him often: nor can we be diſpenſed with from mentioning his behaviour toward the nation of the Jews. Having finiſhed the war againſt Tigranes, A. M. 3938, Joſeph. de Bello, lib. i. cap. 5. Antiq. lib. xiv. cap. 4. Pompey the next year, ante A. D. 65, ſent Scaurus into Judea, who arriving at Damaſcus, and being informed of the troubles in Judea, occaſioned by the two brothers Hircanus and Ariſtobulus; he came thither in great haſte, thinking to make great advantage of their diviſions. No ſooner had he entered this province, but he received ambaſſadors from each of them, deſiring his friendſhip and protection. But Ariſtobulus having preſented him with three hundred talents, he declared for him, and ſent word to Hyrcanus and Aretas, who kept Ariſtobulus beſieged in Jeruſalem, that if they did not deſiſt from this undertaking, he ſhould uſe them as enemies to the Romans. So that Ariſtobulus was thus delivered from his danger.

Some time afterwards Pompey himſelf came to Damaſcus; Hyrcanus and Antipater waited on him, and complained of the proceedings of Scaurus, who had ſuffered himſelf to be corrupted by Ariſtobulus's money; and they intreated Pompey to fix Hyrcanus on the throne of Judea, which belonged to him by birth. The beginning of the next year, Pompey having again heard the mutual complaints of Hyrcanus and Ariſtobulus, and alſo the Jews, who complained againſt them both, he ſent them back in peace, ſaying, he would ſoon come into Judea, and then he would decide their controverſy. But Ariſtobulus withdrawing himſelf, inſtead of ſtaying for Pompey's determination, fortified himſelf, and put himſelf into a poſture of oppoſing him, if he ſhould pretend to dethrone him.

After Pompey had finiſhed his war againſt Mithridates, he marched into Judea, where Hyrcanus and Ariſtobulus came before him, and pleaded their cauſes, each maintaining his ſeveral pretenſions in his preſence. Pompey having ordered Ariſtobulus to ſurrender his fortreſſes into his hands; he obeyed, though not without difficulty, and at the ſame time withdrew to Jeruſalem, to prepare for the event. Pompey gave him no time to fortify himſelf, but followed him cloſely; and when he came near the city, Ariſtobulus fearing to engage in a war againſt the Romans, came out to meet him, promiſed to put the city into his hands, with a great ſum of money, and beſought him not to come to an open breach. Pompey forgave him, ſent Gabinius to receive the money, and to take poſſeſſion of the city. But Ariſtobulus's ſoldiers ſhut the gates againſt him, ſo that he was forced to return without performing his commiſſion.

This procedure provoked Pompey, who thereupon ſecured Ariſtobulus, and kept him in bonds; and then marched againſt Jeruſalem. He firſt made propoſals of peace, but finding the beſieged rejected them, he began the ſiege of the city. He encamped on the north ſide of the temple, which was the weakeſt part of the city. The Roman ſoldiery being uſed to labour and fatigues, ſoon raiſed terraſſes whereon to place their machines, and to batter the walls. But the Jews defended themſelves with ſo much courage, and made ſo many ſallies againſt the beſiegers, that if the ſabbath-day had not interrupted their oppoſition, the Romans could not have compleated their approaches. The Romans therefore perceiving that on this day they made no attacks, but contented themſelves with being on the defenſive, they made no attack againſt them, but only carried on their works on that day.

When their works were finiſhed, they began to batter the towers and walls of the temple with machines brought from Tyre. One thing occaſioned great admiration in Pompey, that during the whole ſiege, as if they had been in profound peace, the Jews did not forbear to offer, morning and evening, their accuſtomed ſacrifices to God, not ſuffering any proſpect of danger to interrupt them. The third month of the ſiege the breach being practicable, the Romans in great numbers poured into the temple, where they made a dreadful ſlaughter of the prieſts, and of all thoſe who had taken refuge there. Cornelius Fauſtus, the ſon of Sylla, firſt entered the breach. This was the firſt year of the hundred and ſeventy-ninth Olympiad, a day of faſting among the Jews, in memory of the volume of Jeremiah, burnt by king Jehoiakim, the twenty-eighth day of Caſleu, the third month of the civil year, (November, and December,) A. M. 3941, ante A. D. 63.

Pompey entered the temple, and ſaw ſuch things as were not allowed to be ſeen, but by the prieſts alone. In the inner part of the temple he found the golden table, the candleſtick, the veſſels and cenſers, and a great quantity of incenſe. There was about two thouſand talents of ſilver in the treaſuries of the temple. But he meddled with nothing; and when he had ordered to clear the temple of the dead bodies, the day following he cauſed ſacrifices to be offered to God. After this he reſtored Hyrcanus to the high prieſthood, and government of his nation; but he forbad him to wear the diadem, or to aſſume the title of king. Ariſtobulus he kept in bonds, and carried him to Rome with two of his daughters, and all his ſons. Conſult Joſephus Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 8. and Uſher on A. M. 3941. The reſt of the life of Pompey has no relation to our deſign. When this great man was conquered by Julius Cæſar at Pharſalia, he came into Egypt, where he was baſely put to death by the officers of the young Ptolemy, the laſt king of Egypt, A. M. 3956, ante A. D. 48.

PONTICUS, Ποντικὸς, of the province of Pontus, Acts xviii. 2.

PONTIUS, Πόντιος, from the Greek πόντος, marine, or belonging to the ſea. Vide PILATE.

PONTUS, Πόντος, the ſea; from πόντος. In Geneſis xiv. 1. St. Jerome has tranſlated אלסר Elaſar, by pontus: but Elaſar may ſignify, God that takes away, or that withdraws; from כור ſur, that withdraws or ſeparates himſelf, and אל el, God.

PONTUS. The province of Pontus, in Aſia minor, has the Euxine Sea north, Cappadocia ſouth, Paphlagonia and Galatia eaſt, and the Leſſer Armenia weſt. It is thought St. Peter preached in Pontus, becauſe he addreſſes his firſt epiſtle to the faithful of this province, and of the neighbouring provinces.

POOR. This word often denotes the humble, afflicted, mean in his own eyes, low in the eyes of God. Not ſo much a man deſtitute of the good things of the earth, as a man ſenſible of his ſpiritual miſery and indigence, who applies for ſuccour to the mercy of God. In this ſenſe the greateſt and richeſt men of the world are level with the pooreſt, in the eyes of God.

In Exodus, xxiii. 3. Moſes forbids the judges to countenance a poor man in his cauſe: or, Levit. xix. 15. Thou ſhalt not reſpect the perſon of the poor, nor honour the perſon of the mighty; but in righteouſneſs ſhalt thou judge thy neighbour. In a word, judge without reſpect of perſons; have only truth and juſtice before your eyes; conſider that you ſtand in the place of God on the earth.

One of the characters of the Meſſiah was, to judge the poor, Pſal. lxxii. 2, 4. and to preach the goſpel to them, Iſa. xi. 4. Matt. xi. 5. Jeſus Chriſt choſe to himſelf diſciples that were poor, and the greater part of the firſt believers were really poor men, as we may ſee in eccleſiaſtical hiſtory.

Solomon ſays, Prov. xxii. 2. The rich and poor meet together; they are like each other in one thing;—God created them both; and both riches and poverty are of his beſtowing. He ſays, Prov. xxix. 13. The poor and deceitful man meet together, or the debtor and creditor: i. e. they belong to God, and each is in the hands of his providence: wherefore the rich ſhould not be exalted, nor the poor be diſcouraged; both are equal in the eyes of God.

Amos viii. 6. reproaches the Iſraelites with having ſold the poor for a contemptible price; as for ſhoes and ſandals. Probably the rich actually thus ſold their poor debtors, for things of no value.

St. James ſeems to carry the obligation, of not reſpecting perſons, ſo far, as to allow no mark of diſtinction to perſons in power, or raiſed to dignity, in the public aſſemblies of religion. James ii. 1. My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Lord of glory, with reſpect of perſons. For if there come into your aſſembly, a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in alſo a poor man in vile raiment; and ye have reſpect to him that weareth the gay cloathing, and ſay unto him, Sit thou here in a good place, and ſay to the poor, Stand thou there, or ſit here under my foot-ſtool: are ye not then partial in your ſelves, and are become judges of evil thoughts? But all this ought to be underſtood rather of an inward preference, and of the ſentiments of the heart, than of external marks of reſpect. It is never allowed a Chriſtian to prefer a rich man before a poor one, only becauſe he is rich, and to think better of him, to judge him more worthy of eſteem and conſideration, rather than he who has not the ſame advantages of the goods of fortune. Vide FRAGMENT, No. CXCIV. page 192.

The poor are often put for the meaner people; for the loweſt condition of life, without conſidering whether they have accommodations ſuitable to their ſtate.

Poverty, in the Old Teſtament, was conſidered by the Jews as a great evil, and a puniſhment from God. Job ſpeaks of it as of a priſon, and a ſtate of bondage. Job xxxvi. 8. And Iſaiah, xlviii. 10. ſpeaks of it as of a furnace or crucible, wherein wherein metals are purified. God tried Job and Tobit by poverty; they belonged to the new covenant; they knew the value of ſuffering, of humiliation, of indigence. They knew how to make a right uſe of them, and to turn them to their own advantage. They were already poor in ſpirit, in the diſpoſition of their hearts, before God made them ſuffer actual poverty. See POVERTY.

PORATHA, פורתא, Φοραδαθὰ, fruitful; from פרה parah. This word is Perſian or Mediſh.

PORATHA, a ſon of Haman, Eſth. ix. 8.

PORTERS of the temple. The Levites diſcharged the office of porters of the temple both day and night, and had the care of the treaſures and offerings. This office of porter was in ſome ſort military; as it were, ſoldiers of the guard to the Lord. See LEVITE.

PORTIUS, Πόρτιος, calf; from the Greek πορταξ.

PORTIUS FESTUS; vide FESTUS PORTIUS.

POSSESSION of the devil. Poſſeſſion and obſeſſion differ in this, in obſeſſion the devil acts outwardly, he haunts the ſubject of his temptations externally, whereas in poſſeſſion he acts internally.

Examples of poſſeſſion are common, eſpecially in the New Teſtament. Jeſus Chriſt and his apoſtles cured great numbers of poſſeſſed perſons. Eccleſiaſtical hiſtorians furniſh many other inſtances. But as it has been found by many examples, that credulity has been impoſed on, by fictitious obſeſſions and poſſeſſions; ſome have maintained, that all theſe obſeſſions were diſeaſes of the mind, and the effects of diſtempered imagination: that perſons ſometimes thought themſelves really poſſeſſed; that others feigned themſelves to be ſo, in order to carry on ſome deſigns; in a word, that there never were any real poſſeſſions or obſeſſions. The moſt plauſible arguments for this opinion are ſuch as follow:

The devil cannot naturally act on our bodies. He is of a ſpiritual nature, and by his will only cannot move our limbs, nor actuate our fluids, or organs. If he had naturally this power, the world would be full of people poſſeſſed or obſeſſed; he would be always exerting his hatred againſt man, and would exerciſe his power and authority to the utmoſt. How many men ſhould we daily ſee poſſeſſed, agitated, tormented, choaked, ſtrangled, thrown from precipices, drowned, burnt, if the devil had this power! If it be ſaid that God moderates this power, that he reſtrains the devil, and does not allow him to exerciſe his malice againſt ſinners and wicked men; do not we ſee on the contrary, that he often poſſeſſes or obſeſſes very harmleſs perſons? We know what ſufferings he inflicted on Job; we ſee children poſſeſſed, and other perſons, whoſe lives ſeem to have been exempt from any great crimes or diſorders.

Why do we ſee men and women poſſeſſed, only at certain times, and in certain countries? There are whole nations, where the thing is not ſo much as known? How is it that they are only ſeen in countries where the people are generally ſuperſtitious, and in perſons who are of a weak underſtanding, and of a melancholly temper? If we examine thoſe men and women, who either are or have been poſſeſſed, we ſhall find none but ſuch as have ſome of theſe infirmities.

If we ſuppoſe the devil to ſuſpend the operations of the ſoul of the party poſſeſſed, and to uſurp the office of the ſoul himſelf; or even that ſeveral devils agitate and poſſeſs the ſame demoniac, the difficulty becomes much greater. What conception can we have of a ſoul, that no longer acts in the body which it animates, and which ſurrenders up itſelf, as we may call it, to the devil? How can all theſe evil ſpirits combine and concur to govern the ſame man? If all this can be done without a miracle, what proof can there be of miracles? May it not be ſaid, that all ſuch things as we call miracles, are but operations of the devil? And if a miracle be required, that a man ſhould be poſſeſſed by the devil, it would make God the author of, or at leaſt a co-operator with the devil in, his obſeſſions and poſſeſſions of men.

We have ſo many examples of natural things, which notwithſtanding appear ſupernatural, that there is room to imagine, what are called poſſeſſions of the devil, may be of this kind. Many people have fancied themſelves to be transformed into wolves, or oxen; to be made of glaſs or butter; to become kings or princes: no one in this caſe has recourſe to the devil, or to a miracle, to explain the phænomenon. They tell us roundly, that it is a diſorder of the brain, a diſeaſe of the mind or imagination, cauſed by ſuch or ſuch diſtemperatures of the body. Nobody has recourſe to exorciſms, or to prieſts, for a cure. They apply to phyſicians, to bodily remedies, to methods of curing the imagination of the patient, by giving it another turn. Would it not be the ſame with ſuch as are poſſeſſed? Would they not obtain a cure by natural remedies, by purging them, cooling them, deceiving them dextrouſly, and making them imagine that the devil has forſaken them and fled away? There have been remarkable experiments of this kind; but if we ſhould relate them, the favourers of poſſeſſions would acknowledge, that theſe people were not really poſſeſſed, and will admit that there has been much deluſion in this matter; yet they ſtill maintain, that among the great number of demoniacs, it cannot be denied, but there muſt have have been ſome who were really poſſeſſed. The others maintain, that there never were any ſuch, and that whatever has happened to thoſe who were reputed to be poſſeſſed, might conveniently be explained by natural means, without recourſe to the devil. This is the whole knot of this diſpute.

The defenders of poſſeſſion by the devil obſerve, that if this were only an illuſion, Jeſus Chriſt, and his apoſtles, and the whole church, would be in an error, and muſt wilfully involve us in one too, by ſpeaking, acting, and praying, as if there were real poſſeſſions. Our Saviour ſpeaks to, and commands the devils, who actuated the poſſeſſed; which devils anſwered and obeyed, and gave proofs of their preſence by tormenting thoſe miſerable creatures, whom they were obliged to quit. They caſt them into violent convulſions, throw them on the ground, leave them for dead, take poſſeſſion of hogs, and hurry thoſe animals into the ſea. Can this be called deluſion? Jeſus Chriſt alledges as a proof of his miſſion, that the devils are caſt out; he promiſes his apoſtles the ſame power that he himſelf exerciſed againſt thoſe wicked ſpirits. Can all this be nothing but chimera?

It is allowed, that there are ſeveral tokens of poſſeſſion which are equivocal and fallible, but there are others which are indubitable. A perſon may counterfeit a demoniac, and imitate the actions, words, motions, contortions, cries, howlings, and convulſions of one poſſeſſed. Some efforts, that ſeem to be ſupernatural, may be effects of heated imagination, melancholy blood, or trick, and contrivance. But, if a perſon ſuddenly ſhould ſpeak and underſtand languages he never learned, talk of ſublime matters he never ſtudied, or diſcover things ſecret and unknown: ſhould he lift up himſelf in the air without viſible aſſiſtance, act and ſpeak in a manner very diſtant from his natural temper and condition: if all this ſhould happen without any inducement from intereſt, paſſion, or any other natural motive: if all theſe circumſtances, or the greater part of them, ſhould concur in the ſame poſſeſſion, can there be any room to ſuſpect that it is not a real one? There have been poſſeſſions in which all theſe circumſtances have concurred. There have therefore been real ones, but eſpecially thoſe which the goſpel declares as ſuch. God was pleaſed to permit, that in our Saviour's time there ſhould be many ſuch in Iſrael, to furniſh him with occaſions of ſignalizing his power, and to ſupply us with further and ſignal proofs of his miſſion and divinity. Though we muſt own, that true poſſeſſions of the devil are very rare, and very difficult to be aſcertained, yet it cannot be allowed that they are miraculous. They do not happen without the permiſſion of God, but they are neither contrary, nor ſuperior, to the laws of nature. Nobody thinks he has recourſe to a miracle, when he ſays, a good angel inſpires him with good thoughts, or prompts him to avoid a danger. It is ſuppoſed in like manner, that the devil may tempt us to evil, may excite irregular impreſſions in our bodies, or may raiſe tempeſts. Scripture imputes to evil angels the death of the firſt-born of Egypt, and the deſtruction of Sennacherib's army: it imputes to good angels the raining of fire, by which Sodom and Gomorrah were conſumed. Theſe events are miraculous in ſome of their circumſtances, but not in all. God only ſuffers the demons to act; they then only exerciſe a power that is natural to them, which was before ſuſpended and reſtrained by the power of God. Men generally conclude too haſtily concerning the power of a ſpirit, which they know ſo little of. Vide ADDITIONS to the article ANGEL.

POSIDONIUS, Ποσειδώνιος, who gives to drink; from πόσις, drink, and διδώμι, I give.

POSSIDONIUS, or Poſidonius; ſent by Nicanor to Judas Maccabeus, to treat of peace, 2 Macc. xiv. 19.

POSTS. This name is given to meſſengers or regulated couriers, appointed to carry with expedition, diſpatches of princes, or letters of private perſons. Lewis Horninck has written a very accurate treatiſe, on the origin of poſts. He makes four kinds of them, thoſe who go on horſe-back, by water, in a chariot or chaiſe, or thoſe who travel on foot. We may alſo refer to the article of poſts, the manner of conveying intelligence by beacons, or ſignals, ſet at ſeveral diſtances on the tops of mountains. So, Iſaiah ſays, v. 26. xi. 10. 12. that the Lord ſhall ſet up a ſignal among the nations, to gather together the ſcattered children of Iſrael, and to bring them back into their own country, from the four corners of the earth. He ſays, chap. xiii. 2. that ſignals ſhall aſſemble the army of Darius the Mede. And chap. xviii. 3. All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, ſee ye, when he lifteth up an enſign on the mountains, and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye. Theſe ſignals were ſet up on the tops of very high trees or maſts. Till ye be left as a beacon [or maſt] upon the top of a mountain, and as an enſign on an hill. See Iſaiah xxxiii. 23. xlix. 22. lxii. 10. Jerem. iv. 6. i. 2. li. 12, 27. [This will remind the reader of the modern TELEGRAPHS: but theſe differ, inaſmuch as they tranſmit words and letters, by ſignals.]

It is thought the uſe of poſts was derived from the Perſians.

Perſians. Diodorus Siculus, lib. 19. obſerves, that the kings of Perſia, to receive intelligence of what paſſed in all the provinces of their vaſt dominions, placed centinels on eminences, at convenient diſtances, where towers were built. Theſe centinels gave notice of public occurrences from one to another, with a very loud and ſhrill voice, by which mean news was tranſmitted from one extremity of the kingdom to another with great expedition.

But as this could not be practiſed except in the caſe of general news, which it was expedient the whole nation ſhould know, Cyrus, as Xenophon relates, Cyropæd. lib. 8. cap. 232. appointed couriers and ſtations for poſt-horſes, building on purpoſe on all the high roads, places for the reception of the couriers, where one was to deliver his pacquet to another, and ſo on. This they did night and day; no weather was to ſtop them; and, in the judgment of many, they went faſter than cranes could fly. This is what Xenophon ſays.

Herodotus, lib. 8. cap. 98. owns, that nothing ſwifter was known, for a journey by land. Xerxes, in his famous expedition againſt Greece, planted poſts from the Egean ſea to Shuſhan, or Suſa, to ſend notice thither of what might happen to his army: he placed theſe meſſengers from ſtation to ſtation, to convey his pacquets, at ſuch diſtances from each other as an horſe might eaſily travel.

We ſee couriers or poſts plainly deſcribed, Eſth. iii. 14. Ahaſuerus ſent expreſſes to all the nobles of his kingdom, by poſts. And when theſe firſt orders were to be revoked, diſpatches were ſent by the couriers; miſſæ per veredarios qui per omnes provincias diſcurrerent, Eſth. viii. 10.

The orientals impute to Darius, king of Perſia, cotemporary with Philip, king of Macedon, the invention of poſts through all the provinces of his kingdom, that he might eaſily know every thing that paſſed therein. D'Herbel. Bibliot. Orient. p. 287. col. 1. Darius Codomannus, who was conquered by Alexander the Great, had been a courier of the king, before he obtained the regal power. Plutarch. lib. de Fortun. Alex.

The Greeks borrowed the uſe of poſts from the Perſians, and, in imitation of them, called them angari. Jeſus Chriſt, Matth. v. 41. alludes to theſe. Vide ANGARI, alſo FRAGMENT, No. XXII. page 44.

Among the Romans, Auguſtus firſt ſet up public and regular poſts. They were originally young men, active and nimble, who ran from poſt to poſt, and delivered pacquets from hand to hand: but afterwards they were changed for poſt-chariots and horſes, for greater expedition: Juvenes primò modicis intervallis, deinde vehicula diſpoſuit. Sueton. in Auguſt. Adrian regulated the poſts, and diſcharged the people from their obligations of furniſhing horſes and carriages.

Procopius aſſures us, that the emperors appointed poſts on the great roads. There not fewer than five poſts a-day, and ſometimes eight: they kept forty horſes at each poſt, and as many poſt-men and riders as were neceſſary. Juſtinian diſmiſſed the poſts at ſeveral places, and particularly thoſe that went from Calcedon to Diacibiza, which is the ancient Lybiſſa, famous for Hannibal's tomb, lying in the Gulph of Nicomedia. The ſame author tells us, that Juſtinian ſet up aſs-poſts in ſeveral places of the Levant.

The uſe of poſts having declined with the empire, Charlemaign made many attempts, about A.D. 807, to reſtore them: but his undertaking was not proſecuted by his ſucceſſors. Lewis XI. is thought to have ſet up the common poſts at every two leagues, throughout France. Count Taxis firſt ſet them up in Germany at his own expence: as a recompence, the emperor Matthias, in 1616, gave him, in fee, the office of poſt-maſter general, to himſelf and his ſucceſſors, for ever. Lewis Horninck, Treatiſe of the Origin of Poſts.

As high as the ninth century there were public couriers ſet up in ſeveral places of the Ottoman empire: ſome went on foot, and others on horſeback, and carried diſpatches with wonderful diligence. There are ſome alſo among the Chineſe; but they are appointed only to carry orders from the king, and the governors of provinces, and, in a word, for public affairs, and thoſe of the greateſt conſequence. Renaudot, Notes upon the Travels of two Arabians to China, p. 193.

POTIPHAR, פוטיפר, πετεφρη, the bull of Africa; from פר par, a bull, and פוט phut, Africa; otherwiſe, according to the Syriac and Hebrew, a fat bull. An Egyptian name, not of the Hebrew.

POTIPHAR, פוטיפרע, that ſcatters, or demoliſhes the fat; from פרע parah, to deſtroy, and the Syriac word פוט phut. This is an Egyptian word, and therefore its true etymology is not in the Hebrew.

[The reader will obſerve the difference of the ſpelling in theſe two names, PUTHIPHER: PUTHIPHRO.]

POTIPHAR, or Putiphar, an officer of the court of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; General of his troops, according to the Vulgate; Chief of his butchers or cooks, according to the Hebrew. Gen. xxxvii. 36. שר הטבחים, princeps lanionum, or coquorum, or victimas jugulantium. The Hebrew alſo calls him סריס, Saris, Eunuchus: but it is very probable that this word, in this place, means only an officer of the king's court. Potiphar was married, and had children, if Aſenath, daughter of Potipherah, (Putiphro) who was given to Joſeph for a wife, were his daughter.

was

Potiphar having bought Joſeph, as a ſlave from the Midianites, who had bought him of his brethren; ſeeing all things proſper in his hands, he gave him the ſuperintendance of his whole houſe. But, ſome years after, the wife of Potiphar, taking an unlawful liking to Joſeph, and having even ſolicited him to the crime of adultery, Joſeph repulſed her. Then, her love changed into rage, ſhe accuſed him to her huſband, and Potiphar put Joſeph in bonds; where his delegate, who had, by office, the charge of the priſoners, laid this care upon Joſeph.

But God had repleniſhed Joſeph with his own ſpirit, and had given him an extraordinary talent of interpreting dreams, which, at length, made him known to Pharaoh, who appointed him ruler of all Egypt, and gave him in marriage Aſenath daughter of Potipher, or Potipherah, prieſt of Heliopolis, or On, according to the Hebrew.

Opinions are divided, whether this Potiphar be the ſame as Joſeph's maſter? The Hebrews, Origen, St. Jerom, abbot Rupert, Toſtat, and others, think he is the ſame perſon. And the Jews, cited in Origen, think it was Aſenath who informed Potiphar of the injuſtice of the accuſation her mother had formed againſt Joſeph. The quality of chief of the army of Pharaoh, or head of the cooks or butchers, or, of thoſe that ſlew the victims, (for the Hebrew may ſignify all theſe), is not incompatible with the dignity of prieſt of Heliopolis. The different ways by which the name Potiphar is written, in Geneſis, chap. xxxviii. xxxix. where the maſter of Joſeph is mentioned, and in chap. xli. wherein his father-in-law is mentioned, is ſo inconſiderable, that it hardly deſerves to be taken notice of. (פוטיפר Putiphar, chap. xxxvii. xxxix. פוטיפרע, Putiphara, chap. xli. 45.) Laſtly, Though the city of Heliopolis, wherein Potiphar was prieſt, was pretty far from Tanis, where the king of Egypt kept his court, and where was Potiphar's employment; yet it was not ſo diſtant but that theſe two employments were conſiſtent. Potiphar might divide his time between the king's ſervice and his attendance at the temple of Heliopolis, in quality of prieſt of this city; for it appears from Strabo, lib. xvi. that anciently there was a great number of prieſts in this city: their chief employment was to ſtudy philoſophy and aſtronomy, and here are ſtill to be ſeen great apartments where they reſided. Nothing in Egypt was more reſpectable than theſe prieſts, and ſeveral from among them have been exalted to the crown. Their quality of prieſts did not not exclude them either from offices at court, or in the camp. Vide ASENATH. [What if this name be a title of rank?]

POTTER. Frequent mention is made of the potter, in ſcripture. Jeremiah, xviii. 3. repreſents him to us at work, ſitting upon two ſtones. על האבנים, ſuper duos lapides. And Eccleſiaſticus, xxxviii. 29, 30. ſays, So doth the potter ſitting at his work, aud turning the wheel about with his feet; who is alway carefully ſet at his work, and maketh all his work by number: he faſhioneth the clay with his arm, and boweth down his ſtrength before his feet. Homer, quoted by Strabo, lib. vii. Geograph. ſaith, that the potter turns his wheel with his hands. And at this day there are great differences in the ſeveral manners and poſtures uſed by potters, when at work.

When God would ſhew his dominion over men, and his irreſiſtible power over their hearts, he has recourſe to the ſimilitude of a potter, who makes what he pleaſes of his clay; ſometimes a veſſel of honour, and ſometimes of diſhonour; now forming it, and then breaking it; now preſerving it, and then rejecting it. Vide Pſal. ii. 9. Ecclus. xxxiii. 13. Rom. ix. 21. Jer. xviii. 2, 3, &c.

POTTERS FIELD; the field that was bought with the money, for which Judas ſold our Saviour Chriſt, but which he brought back again to the temple. See ACELDAMA. This field is ſeen, to the ſouth of Mount Sion, about a ſtone's caſt from the pool of Siloam: it is ſurrounded by walls, in length ſeventy cubits, in breadth fifty; and is covered with a vault, with ſeven openings above, to let down the bodies which are to be buried there, and which, they ſay, are conſumed in the ſpace of twenty-four hours. They ſay the empreſs Helena cauſed the vault to be built over this field; and that ſhe loaded ſeveral ſhips with the earth of Aceldama, and ordered it to be carried to Rome, where it was laid near the Vatican, and ſtill preſerves its quality of rapidly conſuming dead bodies. This place is called the Holy Field, and ſerves as a burying-place for ſtrangers.

We cannot tell what uſe the potter could make of this field, unleſs to dry his pots in before he baked them; and the price of thirty pieces of ſilver, for which it was bought, ſhews its little eſtimation. Raban Maur is quoted, to ſhew, that Judas himſelf was the firſt who was buried in this place. [I have not found this paſſage in this author, ſays CALMET.] The Jews of Piſa, they ſay, have a burial-place like this at Rome, where the bodies are conſumed in a very ſhort time; they think the earth was brought from Jeruſalem: and they eſteem themſelves happy, as the Jews of neighbouring cities eſteem it an honour, to be buried there; and as ſome comfort to them under their misfortune, that they cannot be buried at Jeruſalem.

We read in the Miſhna, Tract. de Sanhedr. cap. vi. n. 14, 15. that they did not allow malefactors, or ſuch as were executed for crimes, to be buried in the tombs of their fathers, except their fleſh had firſt been conſumed in other places, appointed for the puniſhment of ſuch offenders. Perhaps for this reaſon, Joſeph of Arimathea begged the body of Jeſus from Pilate, that he might immediately lay him in a private ſepulchre, before he was laid in this public burying-place; where he might have been undiſtinguiſhed from common criminals. [Was not the body of Jeſus as a criminal, rather the property of the ſanhedrim, or Jewiſh government; than of Pilate, or the Roman power? If ſo, the application of the Jewiſh ſenators, Joſeph and Nicodemus, to Pilate, rather than to the ſanhedrim (or, had they applied to the ſanhedrim, and been refuſed?) deſerves notice: for the prophet had ſaid, though he was numbered with tranſgreſſors, yet he ſhould make his grave with the rich; whereas, according to the regular courſe of Jewiſh proceedings, he ſhould not have made his grave at all, but have been diſſolved into corruption without remorſe, as without diſtinction: which, alſo, had been prophetically forbid. Pſalm xvi. 10. Acts ii. 27.]

POVERTY. Voluntary poverty Jeſus Chriſt has ſanctified in his own perſon, and in that of his parents; in that of his apoſtles, and of the moſt perfect of his diſciples: but involuntary poverty, eſpecially when extreme, is a conſequence of ſin, and a puniſhment from God. Solomon beſought the Lord, to give him neither poverty nor riches, Prov. xxx. 8. he looked upon each extreme, as a dangerous rock to virtue: he aſked only what was convenient for him. Nothing is more earneſtly recommended in the ancient law, as in the new, than alms and compaſſion to the poor.

Moſes would have the poor admitted to the religious feaſts celebrated in the temple, Deut. xvi. 11, 12. and ordered, that in the fields, in the vineyards, and upon the trees, ſomething ſhould be left for them, Lev. xix. 10. & xxiii. 22. that in the ſabbatical years and the years of jubilee, all ſhould be left for the poor, the widow, and the orphan, Exod. xxiii. 11. He commanded to lend to the poor, and obſerved that the poor ſhould never be wanting in the country, but that the people ſhould always have opportunity to beſtow their alms, Deut. xv. 8, 9. That if any pledge were taken from the poor, the lender ſhall not enter the houſe to retake it by force; Deut. xxiv. 12, 14. and that, if the poor be forced to give his goods, or his cloaths, they ſhall be reſtored to him at night, that he may have wherewith to cover himſelf. Jeſus Chriſt has carried this point of the law, concerning alms-giving, to its perfection; he practiſed it himſelf, has recommended it to his diſciples, and has inſpired his ſervants with the tendereſt charity towards the poor. He adviſed thoſe who would in earneſt become his diſciples, to ſell all they had, and give to the poor, Matt. xix. 21. He gives us excellent rules for the practiſing of charity, and avoiding vain-glory and oſtentation, which otherwiſe may occaſion our loſing all the fruits of our charity. See Matt. vi. 1, 2, 3, 4.

The Jews take great care of their poor: in moſt conſiderable cities they have ſeveral eſtabliſhed ſocieties, on purpoſe for the poor. One of them, for example, receives alms for ſuch poor as are too modeſt to aſk for themſelves; another gathers for the redemption of captives; a third for providing portions for poor maidens. Beſide which, two perſons are appointed for the ordinary collection, every ſabbath-day. They go from houſe to houſe, without ſeparating, that they may not be liable to ſuſpicion of violating their truſt; and when they diſtribute what they have gathered, they call a third perſon to their aſſiſtance. Every Saturday the parnaſſim, or judges of the ſynagogue, give to each poor perſon wherewith to maintain themſelves and family the following week. [The poor Jews in London, I underſtand, complain that their rich brethren ſuffer them to periſh: perhaps, charity cannot relieve them all.]

When any one is under urgent neceſſity, exceeding their ordinary charities, the chanter paſſes through the ſynagogue, and ſays, to all who promiſe their relief, Bleſſed be ſuch an one, who gives for ſuch an occaſion. Each promiſes as he is diſpoſed; and afterwards they gather from houſe to houſe what has been promiſed; which is always ſtrictly performed. If the ſynagogue of the place is not thought ſufficient for the occaſion, they iſſue a certificate, to other ſynagogues, who receive it honourably, and who give contributions, both public and private.

It is a maxim of the Talmudiſts, that a poor man ought never to be ſent away empty-handed, even though we could afford him but a grain of wheat. Vide apud Selden. de Jure Nat. & Gent. lib. vi. cap. 6. According to them, the leaſt charitable ſhould give a tenth part of their eſtate; others as far as a fifth part. Nor is it ſufficient to relieve the poor in his preſent neceſſity, but he muſt be cloathed ſuitably to his birth and education; and muſt have a horſe and a ſlave bought for him, if he had ſuch before he fell into poverty. Thoſe who refuſe the rates they are aſſeſſed at, are are puniſhed by the judges, as they formerly were by the ſanhedrim; who condemned them to the penalty of the whip, till they had ſatisfied the demand. Maimonides ſays, that ſometimes entry was made into their houſes, and pledges were forcibly taken for ſuch alms as were due from them.

PRAYER. The prayers we direct to God, are the ordinary conveyance of the graces we receive from him. The prayers of a juſt man are of great power before God, James v. 16, 17. The ſaints both of the Old and New Teſtament prayed; Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, our great example, taught us to pray, to ſhew, that thereby we honour God, and draw on ourſelves his favours and his graces. St. Paul in moſt of his epiſtles, entreats the faithful to pray for him, or, offers to God his prayers for them.

PUBLIC PRAYER. Quite down from the firſt promulgation of the law, the Hebrew nation did not intermit public prayer in the tabernacle, or in the temple, as opportunity returned. This Public prayer conſiſted in offering the evening and morning ſacrifices, every day, with prayers by the prieſts and Levites in that holy place. Every day they offered ſacrifices, incenſe, offerings, firſt-fruits; they performed ceremonies for the redemption of the firſt born, or the purification of polſutions; in a word, the people came thither from all parts, to diſcharge their vows, and to ſatisfy their devotions, not only on great and ſolemn days, but alſo on ordinary days; but nothing of this was performed without prayer.

The Pſalmiſt, cxix. ſays, he prayed to God, or praiſed him, ſeven times a-day. And Pſalm lv. Evening and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud, and he ſhall hear my voice. Daniel, vi. 10. bent his knees three times a-day, and worſhipped the Lord, opening his windows, and turning himſelf toward Jeruſalem. The Levites appointed to guard the temple, lifted up their hands in the night-time, and encouraged one another to adore the Lord; Pſalm cxxxiv. 2. The Pſalmiſt ſays, Pſalm cxix. 62. that he aroſe in the middle of the night, to praiſe the Lord. In Nehemiah, ix. 3. we ſee four hours of prayer on a faſt day.

Some Rabbins tell us, that Abraham inſtituted morning prayer; Iſaac that at mid-day, and Jacob that at evening. Others think, that nothing was fixed relating to the hour, or the form, of prayer, until the captivity of Babylon. Before that time every one prayed as his devotion and his heart prompted him. But during the captivity, Eſdras obſerving that ſeveral Jews mingled foreign terms with their prayers, which were not ſuitable to the ſanctity of that exerciſe, he compoſed eighteen benedictions, which every Iſraelite is obliged to learn, and to repeat daily. A little before the deſtruction of the temple the rabbi Gamaliel added a nineteenth, againſt apoſtates and heretics; under theſe names, meaning the Chriſtians. Sure it is, that theſe eighteen prayers are of great antiquity; for the Miſnah in Barachot. cap. iv. § 3. ſpeaks of them as of a formula long eſtabliſhed.

The ſame Eſdras alſo fixed the time for prayer, Maimon. apud Vitring. de Syn. lib. i. part ii. cap. 12. And as they offered to God the perpetual ſacrifice in the evening and morning, he appointed two ſolemn prayers for theſe two ſeaſons. On feſtival days, and on the ſabbath, there was a ſacrifice about the middle of the day; he ordered a prayer for this time alſo: and becauſe the evening ſacrifice was conſuming in the night-time, he appointed a nocturnal prayer.

However, there are but three hours, obligatory, each day for prayer, the morning, noon, and evening. Morning prayer might be performed any time from ſun-riſing to the third hour of the day; (nine o'clock in the morning at the equinox) that in the middle of the day, from the third hour to the ſixth; (nine in the morning until noon) that in the evening from three o'clock in the afternoon until ſix in the evening, during the equinox. The prayer that was added on feſtivals was ſaid about nine o'clock, and might be compleated at noon. That on faſt days was not ſettled.

The public prayers celebrated in the ſynagogues, were performed thrice every day. The miniſter began the ſervice with a prayer called Kaduſh, becauſe therein they aſked of God to ſanctify his name, after this manner; O God, let thy name be magnified and ſanctified in the world, which thou haſt created according to thy good pleaſure. Let thy kingdom have dominion therein, let redemption flouriſh, and let the Meſſiah come ſpeedily, that thy name may be glorified, &c. This prayer paſſes for the moſt ancient the Jews have preſerved; and as it is rehearſed in the Chaldee language, it gives room to think, that it was compoſed during the Babylonian captivity, or very little after the return from that captivity. The people anſwer, Amen. It ſeems to be from hence our Saviour borrowed thoſe words in the Lord's prayer; hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come.

After this anthem, or benediction, they heretofore repeated the decalogue, which is the foundation of the Jewiſh religion. But at preſent they content themſelves with reading a paſſage out of the fifth chapter of Deuteronomy, which begins, Hear,

O Iſrael. When this leſſon is ended, as alſo the benediction that follows, the whole aſſembly ariſe, and pray ſtanding, with a low voice, the miniſter as well as the reſt. After this private prayer, every one retires three ſteps out of reſpect, and the miniſter repeats the eighteen prayers, of which the three firſt contain the praiſes of God, the twelve following regard the neceſſities of the church and of private perſons, and the three laſt contain a confeſſion of their own unworthineſs and inſufficiency. It is allowed them after the third bleſſing to reſume their places again, that is, to advance the three ſteps they had retired.

When they are come to the prayer which is called Modim, they muſt ſtoop a little. They ſit down while they repeat other prayers, ſometimes they hang down their heads, at other times they lift up their voices, according to the tenor of the prayer that is pronouncing. After ſeveral benedictions and ſeveral pſalms, they repeat the anthem, by which the office begun. Then the miniſter pronounces the benediction to the people; who withdraw, ſaying, Lord, do thou guide me in thy juſtice, and prepare the way before me, becauſe of my enemies. Such are the morning prayers.

Thoſe at noon, and at evening, are alſo performed regularly every day. The miniſter of the ſynagogue preſides therein, and the prayers, the benedictions, and the leſſons are different, yet almoſt in the ſame order. The language they uſe is the Hebrew, with ſome forms of prayer in the Chaldee. The generality of the Jews do not perfectly underſtand either of theſe languages; but from their long habit of praying in theſe tongues, and the great number of words they are acquainted with in both, they do not anſwer Amen without ſome underſtanding of what they ſay.

Every Jew is obliged to repeat three hundred benedictions each day. To theſe benedictions they muſt add certain extracts from thoſe Pſalms which are the moſt effectual for raiſing a ſpirit of piety. They chiefly ſelect the latter verſes of Pſalm cxxvi. and every one ſings them according to the cuſtom of his country. The Germans ſing them higher, and with greater vehemence than others. The Spaniards, and thoſe of the Levant, approach nearer to the Turkiſh way of ſinging; and the Italians ſing them compoſedly, and with eaſe.

When they have ſung theſe Pſalms, they read the Shema, i. e. three ſections from Deut. vi. 4, 9. xi. 19, 21. and Numb. xv. 37, 41. They are called Shema, becauſe the firſt of theſe ſections begins by the word Shema, which ſignifies, hear. Theſe are intermingled with prayers and bleſſings, which often mention the unity of God. Theſe prayers are ended by bleſſing God who redeems Iſrael; and when they pronounce theſe laſt words, they riſe up, and begin to repeat the eighteen prayers and benedictions, which Eſdras left to the great ſynagogue, as a rule and ſtandard for their prayers. When they have rehearſed theſe benedictions, they ſit down, they ſtoop with their faces to the ground, they raiſe their heads a little, and begin their private prayers. They repeat Pſalm cxlvi. and then go about their buſineſs.

Some repeat their hundred benedictions one after another, that they may be diſcharged of them, as of a taſk and labour. But the doctors condemn this cuſtom, becauſe each benediction ſhould be placed in its proper place, and connected with its proper ſubject. In the evening they begin their prayers again, nearly in the ſame form; at leaſt Maimonides tells us ſo, and he is the moſt exact of the Jewiſh authors, and the one upon whom Chriſtian writers chiefly rely.

Leo of Modena ſays, that the cuſtom of the greater part of the Jews is, to repeat the hundred benedictions with their morning prayers in the ſynagogue. For which reaſon they call theſe prayers in the morning, Meah Beracoth, i. e. the hundred benedictions. He ſays, moreover, that the Rabbins oblige the Jews to repeat bleſſings and praiſes to God, not only in their prayers, and when they receive favours from him; but alſo on unforeſeen occaſions, and at every action, whether they eat, or drink, or ſmell any ſweet ſavour; laſtly, for every precept of the law, or of the Rabbins. And this they extend to the ſight of whatever is new or extraordinary: for they have different benedictions for every thing. The particulars may be ſeen in a large treatiſe, which the Rabbins have compoſed.

In the morning when they riſe, they ſay; Bleſſed be Thou, O Lord our God, king of the world, who reſtoreſt life to the dead, who enlighteneſt the blind, and who ſpreadeſt the earth over the waters: and other things of a like kind. If they waſh their hands, according to the precept, they ſay; Bleſſed be Thou, O Lord our God, king of the world, who haſt ſanctified us by thy precepts, and haſt commanded us to waſh our hands. When they apply themſelves to ſtudy the law; Bleſſed be Thou, &c. who haſt given us the law. When they take food; Bleſſed be Thou, &c. who bringeſt bread out of the earth. When they drink; Bleſſed be Thou, &c. creator of the fruit of the vine. At eating ſuch fruits as grow upon trees; Bleſſed be Thou, &c. creator creator of the fruit of the tree. For fruits of the earth; Bleſſed be thou, &c. creator of the fruits of the earth. For good ſcents; Bleſſed be thou, &c. who haſt created ſuch a ſmell or ſcent. When they ſee a high mountain, or a wide extent of ſea; Bleſſed be Thou, &c. creator of all things at the beginning. At the commencing of ſolemn feſtivals, or when they eat, or put on any thing new; Bleſſed be Thou, &c. who haſt given us life, and haſt preſerved us to this day. If any one dies that belongs to them: Bleſſed art Thou, judge of truth.

On all occaſions, before and after every action, they repeat ſome bleſſing to God, thinking it a ſin of ingratitude, to enjoy, or uſe, any thing, without firſt acknowledging by ſome thankſgiving, that they hold it from God, who is Lord and maſter of all things. [Vide 1 Cor. x. 31.]

In the Jewiſh prayers we obſerve in general, their length, and their battology, or tedious repetitions, which Jeſus Chriſt reproves, Matth. vi. 7. When ye pray, uſe not vain repetitions as the heathen do; for they think they ſhall be heard for their much ſpeaking. Secondly, as to their poſture. They generally pray ſitting, or ſtooping with their faces toward the ground. They ſtretch out their feet and their hands, and make a loud cry. Jeſus Chriſt prayed thus in the garden of Olives. He proſtrated himſelf, and ſent forth a great cry. Who in the days of his fleſh, when he had offered up prayers and ſupplications, with ſtrong crying and tears. Heb. v. 7. Thirdly, they think that prayers ſupply the place of ſacrifices, which are ceaſed by the deſtruction of the temple and its altars; they give them the ſame name, and impute to them the ſame efficacy.

It is very likely that the prayers of the firſt Chriſtians were formed on the model of thoſe of the Jews. We have ſeen ſome traces of the firſt and chief Jewiſh benediction, in the firſt articles of the Lord's prayer. Our Saviour principally intended to oppoſe its brevity to their battology. St. Paul Epheſ. vi. 18. 1 Theſſ. v. 17. 1 Tim. ii. 8. directs, that believers ſhould pray in all places, and at all times, lifting up pure hands toward heaven, and bleſſing God for all things, whether in eating or drinking, or any other action; and that every thing be done to the glory of God. 1 Cor. x. 31. In a word, our Saviour has recommended to us, to pray without ceaſing, Luke xviii. 1. xxi. 36.

PREDESTINATION, to predeſtinate. This word is Latin, predeſtinare ſometimes ſignifies merely a deſignation, or appointment, of a particular thing to a particular uſe; or of a certain perſon to a certain office or employment. But, in divinity language, predeſtination expreſſes the deſign formed by God, from all eternity, of bringing by his grace, certain perſons to faith and ſalvation, while he leaves others to their infidelity.

Divines agree, that predeſtination to ſalvation is of mere favour. But opinions are divided concerning predeſtination: ſome regard it as merely gratuitous; others believe, that God formed his predeſtination on a view of future merits in the elect. St. Auſtin, and the moſt celebrated ſchools of the Latin church, hold predeſtination to be of mere favour. Some Greek fathers, and ſome Latin divines, adhere to predeſtination founded on foreknowledge. St. Auſtin, de Dono Perſeverantiæ, cap. 14. n. 35. ſays, predeſtination is a foreknowledge and preparation of efficacious means; in virtue of which, the elect are moſt certainly ſaved: and this great Doctor was fully perſuaded of the gratuitouſneſs of predeſtination, in its uttermoſt extent.

The ancient Hebrews were perſuaded, as well as we are, that God had foreknowledge of what each of us ſhould be, do, and become. This is included in the very notion of God, his providence, and his infinite knowledge. God ſays to Jeremiah, i. 5. Before I formed thee in the belly, I knew thee; and before thou cameſt forth out of the womb, I ſanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations. But when we endeavour to form a juſt idea of their ſyſtem of predeſtination, and how they reconciled grace and free-will, the matter is not very eaſy.

The author of the Book of Wiſdom, whom ſeveral have thought to be Philo, makes Solomon thus ſpeak; chap. viii. 19, 20. I was a witty child, and had a good ſpirit: yea, rather, being good, I came into a body undefiled. Where we ſee the ſame principles as in Philo. The apoſtles, John ix. 2. propoſed a queſtion to Jeſus Chriſt, when they ſaw a man born blind. Whether it was as a puniſhment for his own ſins, or for thoſe of his parents, that this man was born blind? They therefore had a notion, that his ſoul had a previous exiſtence, and had offended God, before it animated the preſent body.

St. Chryſoſtom, who may be conſidered as the oracle and the mouth of the Greek church, maintained, That God does not reject nor predeſtinate men on account of their paſt good or bad actions, but on fore-knowledge of their future merits or demerits: Whence is it, ſays he, (in Epiſt. ad Rom. ix. p. 325.) that Jacob is beloved, and Eſau hated? It is becauſe one is good, and the other is bad. And whence is it, that before their birth, God determined, that the elder ſhould be in ſubjection to the younger?

younger? It is becauſe God has no need to ſtay for the event of things, as we muſt do, to judge whether a man ſhall be good or bad; he ſees that even before he is born. It was by the effect of his preſcience, that he choſe Jacob and rejected Eſau. He knew before their birth what they would one day prove. When he choſe St. Matthew, there were ſeveral perſons who appeared better than he: but by his infinite penetration, he knew how to diſcover the value of that jewel, that then lay upon a dunghill.

In another place, Homil. lxxx. in Matt. xxv. he ſays, that the kingdom of heaven was prepared for the elect from the beginning of the world, and before they were born, becauſe God foreknew what they would be. And writing on thoſe words of the Pſalmiſt; Pſ. cxxxix. 2. Thou underſtandeſt my thought afar off, he thus reaſons: Some people are abſurd enough to ſay, ſuch an one is a good man, becauſe God has choſen him and loved him: and ſuch another is wicked, becauſe God hated him. But the prophet here tells us, on the contrary, that God proves us by our works. He knows whether we will be virtuous or no, even before our birth: and by that he gives us proofs of his preſcience: he confirms it by our works, for fear it ſhould be imagined, that his preſcience was the cauſe of our virtue.

The Greek fathers that came after St. Chryſoſtom have expreſſed themſelves much in the ſame manner, and the modern Greeks have followed the ſentiments of the fathers before them.

[Certainly this is a difficult ſubject: and equally certainly we may ſay, that when God propoſes an end, he alſo propoſes the means; when he appoints an effect, he alſo appoints the cauſes. Now, where is the eſſential difference, if we ſay, God foreſaw the elect would be holy, and therefore choſe them; or ſay, God choſe the elect, to make them holy? becauſe, ſince their holineſs is not from themſelves, but from him, he muſt determine to beſtow on them that which they have not of themſelves; the difference therefore is in the order only, i. e. whether God determined to elect A. B. purpoſing his holineſs, or, determined to make A. B. holy, purpoſing his election. But obſerve, that God's determination to render A. B. holy, is in fact, an election of him; an election which implies ſalvation: and ſince this principle places an election of the party previous to its effects, it ſeems to be much more convenient, to admit of a full and entire election, than of a partial and incomplete election. Eſpecially conſidering that all things are known to God, from the beginning to the end, ſo that he has no need to ſtay till a certain event has taken place before he can adjuſt the following event, but in his vaſt and extenſive and intimate foreknowledge of things, that which is to follow is no more concealed from him, than that which is to precede. And, I think, we had better, on this ſubject, endeavour to perſuade ourſelves thoroughly of the INFINITE goodneſs, wiſdom, and love of God, and bind ourſelves to ſubmit heartily to theſe attributes, and their operations, than to perplex ourſelves, and to render ourſelves unhappy about thoſe appointments whoſe general extenſion, and whoſe univerſal influence, are infinitely beyond our ken. If we, perhaps, ſee one ſingle link in the chain of the divine government, conſidered as compounded of cauſe and effect, what proportion does this bear to that infinitely prolonged concatenation, of which the divine mind only is capable of ſurveying at once both the extremes, and together with the extremes every connecting link, every acting cauſe, and every produced effect; from the moſt trivial, as we call it, to the moſt conſiderable, in our eſtimation.—I ſay in our eſtimation; becauſe there is probably no difference in the ſight of God; but, each being appointed by him, each is of equal conſequence in his appointment, and is equally valued by his infinite wiſdom.]

PRIEST, from the Greek Preſbyteros, which properly ſignifies an elder, or old man. The Hebrew word in Scripture for a prieſt, is כהן Cohen, the Greek Ἱερεὺς, Hiereus, or Πρεσβύτερος, Preſbyteros; the Latin, Sacerdos or Preſbyter. But the Latin Preſbyter, does not always ſtand for a prieſt, except in the New Teſtament.

In the Old Teſtament, the prieſthood was not annexed to a certain family, till after the promulgation of the law of Moſes. Before that time, the firſt-born of each family, the fathers, the princes, the kings were born prieſts, in their own cities, and in their own houſes. Cain and Abel, Noah, Abraham, and Job, Abimelech and Laban, Iſaac and Jacob, offered, perſonally, their own ſacrifices. In the ſolemnity of the covenant made by the Lord with his people, at the foot of mount Sinai, Moſes performed the office of mediator, and young men were choſen from among the children of Iſrael, to perform the office of prieſts. Exod. xxiv. 5, 6.

But after the Lord had choſen the tribe of Levi to ſerve him in his tabernacle, and the prieſthood was annexed to the family of Aaron, then the right of offering ſacrifices to God was reſerved to the prieſts of this family, Numb. xvi. 40. The puniſhment of Uzziah, king of Judah, 2 Chr. xxvi.

xxvi. 19. is well known, who having preſumed to offer incenſe to the Lord, was ſuddenly ſmote with a leproſy; however, it ſeems, that on certain occaſions the judges and kings of the Hebrews offered ſacrifices to the Lord, eſpecially before a conſtant place of worſhip was fixed at Jeruſalem. See 1 Sam. vii. 9. where Samuel, who was no prieſt, offered a lamb for a burnt-ſacrifice to the Lord. See alſo 1 Sam. ix. 13. where it is ſaid, that this prophet was to bleſs the offering of the people; which ſhould ſeem to be a function appropriated to the prieſts. Laſtly, 1 Sam. xvi. 5. he goes to Bethlehem, where he offers a ſacrifice at the anointing of David.

Saul himſelf offers a burnt-offering to the Lord, perhaps as being king of Iſrael, 1 Sam. xiii. 9, 10. Elijah alſo offered a burnt-offering on mount Carmel, 1 Kings xviii. 33. David himſelf ſacrificed, at leaſt the text expreſſes it ſo, at the ceremony of bringing the ark to Jeruſalem, 2 Sam. vi. 13. and at the floor of Araunah, 2 Sam. xxiv. 25. Solomon went up to the brazen altar at Gibeon, and there offered ſacrifices, 2 Chron. i. 6. I know that theſe paſſages are commonly explained, by ſuppoſing that theſe princes offered theſe ſacrifices by the hands of the prieſts; but the text by no means favours ſuch explication; and it is very natural to imagine, that in the quality of kings and heads of the people, they had the privilege of performing ſome ſacerdotal functions on certain extraordinary occaſions. So we ſee David conſulted the Lord, being cloathed with the prieſtly ephod: and on another occaſion he gave a ſolemn benediction to the people. His ſon Solomon alſo did the ſame. 1 Sam. xxiii. 9. xxx. 7. 2 Sam. vi. 14. 2 Sam. vi. 18. (vide EPHOD) 1 Kings viii. 55, 56.

The Lord having reſerved to himſelf the firſt-born of Iſrael, becauſe he had preſerved them from the hand of the deſtroying angel in Egypt, by way of exchange and compenſation, he accepted the tribe of Levi for the ſervice of his tabernacle, Numb. iii. 41. Thus the whole tribe of Levi was appointed to the ſacred miniſtry, but not all in the ſame manner: for of the three ſons of Levi, Gerſhom, Kohath, and Merari, the heads of the three great families, the Lord choſe the family of Kohath, and out of this family the houſe of Aaron, to exerciſe the functions of the prieſthood. All the reſt of the family of Kohath, even the children of Moſes, and their deſcendants, remained among the mere Levites. Vide LEVITES.

The high-prieſt was at the head of all religious affairs, and was the ordinary judge of all difficulties that belonged thereto, and even of the general juſtice and judgment of the Jewiſh nation; Deut. xvii. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. xix. 17. xxi. 5. xxxiii. 9, 10. Ezek. xliv. 24. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. x. cap. ult. & contra Appion. lib. ii. cap. 6. where this diſcipline is well explained. Selden, de Synedriis veterum Hebræorum.

The high prieſt only had the privilege of entering into the ſanctuary once a year, on the day of ſolemn expiation, to make atonement for the ſins of the whole people; Levit. xvi. 2, 3, 4, &c. See EXPIATION. He was to be born of one of his own tribe, whom his father had married a virgin; and was to be exempt from corporal defect; Levit. xxi. 13. In general, no prieſt that had any corporal defect could offer ſacrifice, or enter the holy place, to preſent the ſhew-bread. But he was to be maintained by the ſacrifices offered at the tabernacle. Levit. xxi. 21, 22, 23.

God had appropriated to the perſon of the high-prieſt the oracle of his truth; ſo that when he was habited in the proper ornaments of his dignity, and with the urim and thummim, he anſwered queſtions made to him, and God diſcovered to him ſecret and future things. He was forbid to mourn for the death of any of his relations, even for his father or mother; or to enter into any place where a dead body lay, that he might not contract uncleanneſs. He could not marry a widow, nor a woman who had been divorced, nor a harlot; but a virgin only of his own race. He was to obſerve a ſtrict continence during the whole time of his ſervice. Vide Joſeph. lib. xvii. cap. 8. de Matthia Pontifice.

The ordinary prieſts ſerved immediately at the altar, offered the ſacrifices, killed and ſkinned them, and poured their blood at the foot of the altar. They kept up a perpetual fire on the altar of burnt-ſacrifices, and in the lamps of the golden candleſtick in the ſanctuary; they kneaded the loaves of ſhew-bread, baked them, offered them on the golden altar in the ſanctuary, and changed them every ſabbath-day. Every day, night, and morning, a prieſt, appointed by caſting of lots at the beginning of the week, brought into the ſanctuary a ſmoaking cenſer of incenſe, and ſet it on the golden table, otherwiſe called the altar of perfumes.

The prieſts were not ſuffered to offer incenſe to the Lord with ſtrange fire, i. e. with any fire but what was taken from the altar of burnt-ſacrifices; Levit. x. 1, 2. God chaſtiſed Nadab and Abihu with ſeverity for having failed herein. The prieſts and Levites waited by the week, and by the quarter, in the temple. They began their week on the ſabbath, and ended it on the next ſabbath.

ſabbath. 2 Kings, xi. 5, 7. Moſes had fixed the age at which they were to enter on the ſacred miniſtry, at twenty-five or thirty years, and they were to end it at fifty; Numb. viii. 24. iv. 3. but in David's time this order was changed, and they were appointed to the ſervice of the temple at twenty years of age, [rather, the Levites] 1 Chron. xxiii. 24. 2 Chron. xxxi. 17. Ezra iii. 8. Thoſe who dedicated themſelves to perpetual ſervice in the temple, were well received, and maintained by the daily offerings. Deut. xviii. 6.

The Lord had given no lands of inheritance to the tribe of Levi, in the Land of Promiſe. He intended that they ſhould be ſupported by the tythes, the firſt-fruits, the offerings made in the temple, and by their ſhare of the ſin-offerings and thankſgiving-offerings, ſacrificed in the temple, of which certain parts were appropriated to the prieſts. In the peace-offerings the prieſts had the ſhoulder and the breaſt. Levit. vii. 33, 34. In the ſin-offerings they burnt on the altar the fat that covers the bowels, the liver, and the kidnies: the reſt belonged to the prieſt. Levit. vii. 6, 10. The ſkin or fleece of every ſacrifice alſo belonged to him; and this article alone was no mean allowance, ſays Philo, de præmiis Sacerdotum. When an Iſraelite killed any animal for his own uſe, he was to give the prieſt the ſhoulder, the ſtomach, and the jaws. Deut. xviii. 3. He had alſo a ſhare in the wool when the ſheep were ſhorne. Deut. xviii. 4. All the firſt-born, both of man and beaſt, belonged to the Lord, i. e. to his prieſts. The men were redeemed for five ſhekels. Numb. xviii. 15, 16. The firſt-born of impure animals were redeemed or exchanged, but the clean animals were not redeemed. They were ſacrificed to the Lord; their blood was ſprinkled about the altar, and the reſt belonged to the prieſt. See FIRST-BORN. The firſt-fruits of trees, i. e. thoſe of the fourth year, belonged alſo to the prieſts. Numb. xviii. 13. Lev. xix. 23, 24.

The people offered at the temple the firſt fruits of the earth; the quantity was fixed by cuſtom, to between the fortieth and the ſixtieth part. They offered alſo whatever any one had vowed to the Lord. See FIRST-FRUITS. They gave alſo to the prieſts and Levites an allowance out of their kneaded dough. They, alſo, had the tythe of the fruits of the land, and of all animals which paſſed under the ſhepherd's crook. Lev. xxvii. 31, 32. When the Levites had collected all the tythes and all the firſt-fruits, they ſet apart the tythe of this for the prieſts. Numb. xviii. 26. Thus though the prieſts had no lands or inheritances, they lived in great plenty. God alſo provided them with houſes and accommodations, by appointing forty-eight cities for their habitation. Numb. xxxv. 1, 2, 3. In the precincts of theſe cities they poſſeſſed a thouſand cubits beyond the walls. Of theſe forty-eight cities, ſix were appointed as cities of refuge, for thoſe who had committed caſual and involuntary manſlaughter. The prieſts had thirteen of theſe cities; the others belonged to the Levites. Joſh. xxi. 19. 20.

A principal employment of the prieſts, next to attending on the ſacrifices and the temple ſervice, was inſtruction of the people, and deciding of controverſies; diſtinguiſhing the ſeveral ſorts of leproſy, divorce-cauſes, the waters of jealouſy, vows, cauſes relating to the law, and uncleanneſſes: all theſe things were brought before the prieſts. For the prieſts lips ſhould keep knowledge, and they ſhould ſeek the law at his mouth: for he is the meſſenger of the Lord of hoſts; Malac. ii. 7. They publicly bleſſed the people in the name of the Lord. In time of war their duty was to carry the ark of the covenant, to conſult the Lord, to ſound the holy trumpets, and to encourage the army; "Hear, O Iſrael, you are now going to fight with your enemies, but fear not, for the Lord is in the midſt of you; he will fight for you, and defend you from all danger." Numb. x. 8, 9. Deut. xx. 2, 3, 4.

The conſecration of Aaron and of his ſons was performed by Moſes in the deſart with great ſolemnity. For the particulars of what paſſed on that occaſion vide Exod. xl. 12. Lev. viii. 1, 2, &c.

In this ceremony Moſes performed the office of conſecrating prieſt. It is doubtful, whether at every new conſecration of a high-prieſt all theſe ceremonies were repeated. It is very probable they contented themſelves with cloathing the new high-prieſt in the habit of his predeceſſor, as at the death of Aaron: Numb. xx. 25, 26. Yet ſome think they gave him unction alſo, which perhaps might be, till the Babyloniſh captivity, though there is no proof of this fact. We know that afterwards Jonathan the Aſmonean contented himſelf with putting on the high-prieſt's habit at the feaſt of tabernacles, in order to take poſſeſſion of this dignity; Macc. x. 21. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 5. and Agrippa, king of the Jews, having offered to Jonathan, ſon of Ananus, the high-prieſthood, a ſecond time, Jonathan thanked him for it, ſaying, it was enough for him to have once received the ornaments of this ſupreme dignity, which he would willingly reſign to another more worthy of it. Antiq. lib. xix. cap. 6.

As

As to the ordinary prieſts, we do not ſee any particular ceremony uſed at their conſecration; they were admitted to the exerciſe of their function by filling their hands, as Scripture ſpeaks; i. e. by making them perform the offices of their order. But when the prieſts had fallen away from the Lord, or had been long without performing their office, as happened under ſome of the later kings of Judah, as Ahaz, Ammon, and Manaſſeh, they thought it neceſſary to ſanctify anew ſuch prieſts, who had been abſent from the holy place, and who for a long time had interrupted the exerciſe of their miniſtry, like thoſe who had never yet exerciſed it; as happened under Hezekiah and Joſiah, when the number of prieſts that were ſanctified not being ſufficient for the great number of ſacrifices offered, they were forced to employ the Levites in ſleaing the ſacrifices; for the Levites were much ſooner ſanctified than the prieſts. Levitæ quippe faciliori ritu ſanctificabantur quam ſacerdotes. 2 Chron. xxix. 34. 2 Chron. xxxv. 11.

However, we muſt acknowledge our ignorance of what was done on occaſion of the conſecration, or rather ſanctification, of the prieſts. Nor is it certain whether any thing was required more than the ordinary ſanctification, i. e. the exemption from legal defilements and uncleanneſſes, which was neceſſary for approaching holy things. The Hebrew of the paſſage quoted reads only, "For the Levites were upright of heart, to ſanctify themſelves, rather than the prieſts." The Levites ſhewed more zeal and readineſs than the prieſts, to aſſiſt in this ceremony.

The Chriſtian prieſthood is the ſubſtance and the truth, of which that of the Jews was but the ſhadow and the figure. Jeſus Chriſt the everlaſting prieſt, according to the order of Melchiſedek, abides for ever, as St. Paul obſerves; whereas the prieſts, according to the order of Aaron, were mortal, and therefore could not continue long. Hebr. vii. 23, 24, &c. The conſecration given by Moſes to Aaron and his ſons, was not to be repeated to their ſucceſſors, becauſe the prieſthood was to continue in the ſame family; whereas the Chriſtian prieſthood not being continued to any particular family, muſt be conferred on each prieſt diſtinctly.

Laſtly, corporal defects, which excluded from the legal prieſthood, and from its privileges, ought in proportion to be underſtood in an exalted and ſpiritual ſenſe, in reſpect of the Chriſtian prieſthood.

The prieſthood paſſed from the family of Ithamar into that of Eleazar, according to what the Lord had declared to the high-prieſt Eli; 1 Sam. ii. 30, 31, 32, &c. But this was not done preſently. The family of Eli poſſeſſed the prieſthood long. This high-prieſt was ſucceeded by his third ſon Ahitub, or, according to others, Ahijah, to whom ſucceeded Ahimelech, ſlain by Saul, with the other prieſts at Nob. Saul then gave the high-prieſthood to Zadoc. But Abiathar, ſon of Ahimelech, having adhered to the intereſts of David, was continued in poſſeſſion of the high-prieſthood in the kingdom of Judah. So that for a good part of David's reign, the high-prieſthood was exerciſed by two high-prieſts, Zadoc and Abiathar: Zadoc of the family of Eleazar: Abiathar of the family of Ithamar. Towards the end of David's reign, Abiathar having adhered to the party of Adonijah againſt Solomon, he was diſgraced, and Zadoc alone was acknowledged as high-prieſt. He then began to exerciſe his high-prieſthood at Jeruſalem, whereas before he had only performed the functions of it on the altar of Gibeon. 1 Kings ii. 26, 27. 1 Chron. xvi. 39.

Some have pretended, that the high-prieſthood was exerciſed, even after the law, by others beſide the family of Aaron. For this are produced the examples of Moſes, Joſhua, Samuel, and Saul, who ſacrificed on ſome occaſions. Granting theſe facts, yet nobody denies, firſt, that a prophet may extraordinarily, and by a particular revelation, offer ſacrifice. Secondly, this liberty was of much greater extent before the building of the temple, than after the public worſhip of God was fixed at Jeruſalem. Thirdly, it is not certain but Joſhua, Samuel, and Saul might offer their ſacrifices by the hands of prieſts; for often the Scripture affirms that to be done by a man's ſelf, which is only done by his orders.

The Hebrew word cohen, which ſignifies prieſt, is ſometimes put for a prince. In Exod. ii. 16. it is ſaid that Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes, was prieſt, כהן, cohen, of Midian, i. e. according to ſome, prince, or governor of his city. In 2 Sam. viii. 18. it is ſaid, the ſons of David were prieſts, cohenim, i. e. princes; and conſidered in the country as prieſts. The Septuagint ſay, they were Αὐλάρχαι ἦσαν, principal courtiers; the chief of the court. The author of the firſt book of Chronicles, chap. xviii. 17. explains this, by ſaying, they were the neareſt at the king's hand. They had the chief employments at court.

80. MATTHIAS, ſon of Theophilus, made in A. M. 4068, till 4073, A. D. 70.

81. PHANNIAS, ſon of Samuel, made in A. M. 4073, A. D. 70, which is the year of the deſtruction of the temple of Jeruſalem by the Romans, and of the abolition of the Jewiſh prieſthood.

PRIESTHOOD, Sacerdotium. We may diſtinguiſh four kinds of prieſthood. 1. That of kings, princes, the head of a family, and the firſt-born. This may be called a natural prieſthood, becauſe nature and reaſon teach us, that the honour of offering ſacrifices to God ſhould belong to the greateſt in dignity.

2. The prieſthood according to the order of Melchiſedech, which does not differ from that now mentioned, but in its dignity; becauſe Melchiſedech was raiſed up of God, to repreſent the prieſthood of Jeſus Chriſt [rather, the prieſthood of Melchiſedech combined in the ſame perſon the right of the kingly and of the prieſtly offices, with that of the firſt-born, to exerciſe the prieſthood: or, he was at once king, prieſt, and prophet, i. e. teacher.]

3. The prieſthood of Aaron and his family, which ſubſiſted as long as the religion of the Jews.

4. Laſtly, the prieſthood of Jeſus Chriſt, and of the new law. See AARON and PRIEST.

As to the prieſthood of Jeſus Chriſt, it is infinitely ſuperior to all other, in its duration, its dignity, its prerogatives, its object, and its power. The prieſthood of Aaron was to end, but that of Jeſus Chriſt is everlaſting. That of Aaron was limited to his own family, was exerciſed only in the temple, and among only one people; its object was bloody ſacrifices and purifications, which were only external, and could not remit ſins; but the prieſthood of Jeſus Chriſt extends to the whole Chriſtian church, ſpread over the face of the whole earth, and among all nations of the world. The Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Hebrews ſhould be conſidered by thoſe, who would comprehend the excellence of the prieſthood of the new law, above that of the law of Moſes. Hebrews iv. 14, 15, &c. alſo chap. v. vi. vii. viii. ix. See 1 Peter ii. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.

Among all nations the prieſthood was a ſtation ſo honourable and elevated, and at the ſame time ſo commodious, that it was regarded by the people with ſome ſort of jealouſy. The Lord, to expreſs to the Hebrews what great favours he would confer on them, ſays, he would make them kings and prieſts; Exod. xix. 6. And St. Peter repeats this promiſe to Chriſtians, or rather he tells them, that they are in truth what Moſes promiſed promiſed to the Iſraelites; 1 Pet. ii. 9. See alſo Rev. i. 6.

We have enlarged on the rights, prerogatives, functions, and revenues of the prieſts of the old law, under the foregoing article. We cannot do the ſame in reſpect to the prieſts of the new law, becauſe neither Chriſt in the goſpel, nor his apoſtles in any of their writings, have ordained the ceremonies to be uſed in adminiſtration of the ſacraments, nor all the circumſtances that are to accompany them. The apoſtles left ſome things to be regulated by the wiſdom and diſcretion of the church, though they taught them to the faithful of their own times, vivâ voce.

PREPARE. Præparare, or parare, is often uſed for founding, fixing, eſtabliſhing. The Hebrew word kun, bears the ſame ſignification. Præparans montes in virtute ſua: He founds, he fixes the mountains by his power: Parata ſedes tua ex tunc: Thy ſeat, thy throne is eſtabliſhed from all eternity. Super flumina præparavit orbem terræ: He has fixed the earth upon the rivers, or upon the waters.

PRESENTATION. By this word is generally underſtood the preſentation to the Lord, by parents, of their firſt-born ſon in the temple; or, that preſentation which they made of their children, or of any other thing, which they had vowed to the Lord. Thus Samuel, the ſon of Elkanah, and of Hannah, was preſented to the Lord on two accounts, 1. as the firſt-born of Hannah; 2. as vowed by her to the Lord; 1 Sam. i. 11, &c. As the firſt-born, he might have been redeemed, and reſtored to his parents, for the ſum of five ſhekels: but having been vowed to the Lord, to be employed in his ſervice all his life, he continued at the tabernacle from the age of three years, where he performed what ſervices he was capable of.

The Holy Virgin preſented our Saviour at the temple, on the day of her purification, becauſe he was her firſt-born; and ſhe redeemed him, according to the law, for the ſum of five ſhekels; Luke ii. 22, &c. The ſame obtained as to all the firſt-born ſons in Iſrael.

Daughters were not preſented, or redeemed, although they might be firſt-born.

PRESIDENT, Præſes. This title is given generally to all who preſide over others in any affair or buſineſs: as, the chief of a band of muſic, of the affairs of a country, city, or temple. Particularly it is given to the governors of Judea, after that nation was reduced to a Roman province. Matt. xxvii. 2, 11, 14. xxvii. 14. Luke ii. 2. xx. 20. xxi. 12. Acts xxiii. 24, &c. See GOVERNOR.

PRESS, Torcular; in Hebrew גת, gath, in Greek Λῆνος. Mention is often made in Scripture of a preſs: but this word is uſed, not only for the machine by which grapes are ſqueezed, but alſo for the veſſel, or vat, whereinto the wine runs from the preſs; that in which it is received and preſerved; which, in Hebrew, is called יקב, jekeb; and in Greek, Λάκκος, or Λῆνος, laccos or lenos. Whence proceed theſe expreſſions: he digged a wine-preſs in his vineyard; your preſſes ſhall run over with wine; thy preſſes ſhall burſt out with new wine; to draw out of the preſs; Zeeb they ſlew at the wine preſs of Zeeb. It was a kind of ſubterraneous ciſtern, in which the wine was received and kept, till it was put into jars, or veſſels, of earth or wood. See Plin. lib. xiv. cap. 21. Columel. lib. xii. cap. 19. Cato, de re Ruſt. cap. 113. where they ſpeak of theſe ciſterns under ground, wherein the wine was put. Vide LAKE.

We read ſeveral titles of the Pſalms, as Pſalm viii. 1. על הגיתית. LXX. Τπὲρ τῶν ληνων. Vide & lxxx. 1. & lxxxiii. 1. pro torcularibus, "for the preſſes," [on Gittith, Eng. Tr.] which is differently explained. Some think, that theſe Pſalms are ſongs of rejoicing for the vintage, and were chiefly ſung at the feaſt of tabernacles, after the harveſt and the vintage. Others think, that gitthith, tranſlated preſſes, ſignifies an inſtrument of muſic. Ita Rab. quid. Grot. Boſuet. The fathers explain this in a ſpiritual ſenſe, of the church of Jeſus Chriſt, the myſtical vine, in which the preſs is built, according to the deſcription of our Saviour in the goſpel. Ita Euſeb. Athanaſ. Didym. Theodoret. Heſych. Nicephor. Aug. Hieronym. in Pſalmos. We think that we may tranſlate the Hebrew by, a pſalm addreſſed to the maſter of muſic, who preſided over the band of Gittites. In the temple were ſeveral bands of ſingers, of which ſome might be of the city of Gath: Gathites.

PRETORIUM. This name is given, in the goſpels, to the houſe wherein dwelt the Roman governor of Jeruſalem: Matt. xxvii. 27. Mark 15, 16. John xviii. 28, 33. Here the governor ſat in his judicial capacity, and here Jeſus Chriſt was brought before him. Notwithſtanding all the revolutions that have happened to Jeruſalem, eſpecially during the ſiege by Titus; and notwithſtanding the ruin and deſolation of the city, after it was taken by the Romans, they pretend to ſhew travellers the prætorium, or the palace of Pilate, where, afterwards (they ſay) a church was built. Vide FRAGMENT No. CXXXVII. p. 68. and the MAP of Jeruſalem.

St. Paul ſpeaks alſo of the prætorium (or palace) at Rome, wherein he gave teſtimony to Jeſus Chriſt:

Phil. i. 13. Some think, that by this name, he means the palace of the emperor Nero. Ita Chryſoſt. Theodoret. Theoph. Eſt. Eraſm. Menoch. Huber. Diſſert. in hunc locum. Others, that he means the place where the Roman prætor ſat to do juſtice, i. e. his tribunal. It is certain, the emperor's palace did not bear the name of tribunal; but St. Paul being accuſtomed to call by this name the governor's palace at Jeruſalem, might give this name to the emperor's palace at Rome. Others have maintained, that under the name of the prætorium at Rome, St. Paul would expreſs the camp of the pretorian ſoldiers, whither this apoſtle might have been carried by the ſoldier that always accompanied him, and who was faſtened to him by a chain, as the manner was among the Romans; [or, the pretorian ſoldiers viſiting their fellow ſoldier who kept Paul, might be addreſſed by Paul; and ſo be converted, or at leaſt be convinced of his innocence.]

PRIDE, is a ſin very odious to God and man, and which the Scripture condemns in a multitude of places. For, what is diſplayed in the whole ſacred hiſtory, but the pride, preſumption, and vanity of men, overthrown? What elſe, but the humility, the meekneſs, the acknowledgment of human weakneſs, exalted, ſupported, and recompenſed? God reſiſteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. A man's pride ſhall bring him low; but honour ſhall uphold the humble in ſpirit. Pride goeth before deſtruction; and a haughty ſpirit before a fall. Better is it to be of an humble ſpirit with the lowly, than to divide the ſpoil with the proud.

Pride is alſo put for the hardneſs and inſolence of a ſinner, in oppoſition to ſins of infirmity or ignorance: but the ſoul that doth aught preſumptuouſly, the ſame reproacheth the Lord; and that ſoul ſhall be cut off from among his people. Numb. xv. 30. And Deut. xvii. 12. And the man that will do preſumptuouſly, and will not hearken unto the prieſt, or unto the judge, even that man ſhall die. The Lord treated the Egyptians with rigour, becauſe they acted with pride and inſolence toward the Hebrews. Exod. xviii. 11. Job and the Pſalmiſt have diſtinguiſhed Pharaoh by the name of the Proud. Job xxvi. 12. Pſalm lxxxix. 10. Iſaiah, li. 9. uſes the ſame expreſſion, to mark the deſtruction of Pharaoh. And Ezekiel, xxxii. 12. the Chaldeans ſhall deſtroy the pride, the inſolence, the cruelty of Egypt. See Nehem. ix. 16, 29.

The Scripture often reproaches the Moabites with their pride: it points them out, under the name of children of haughtineſs, or pride; for ſo we tranſlate, Numb. xxiv. 17. And deſtroy all the children of Sheth. The Hebrew may ſignify, He ſhall deſtroy all the children of pride, or haughtineſs; which is confirmed by Jer. xlviii. 29. which alludes to this in Numbers: We have heard the pride of Moab, (he is exceeding proud), his loftineſs and his arrogancy, and his pride and the haughtineſs of his heart. Compare Numb. xxi. 28. with Jer. xlviii. 45. Heb. Alſo Iſai. xvi. 6.

The pride of Jordan, in the prophets, expreſſes the inundations of that river. Jer. xii. 5. xiii. 9. xlix. 19. Zech. xi. 3. Vide JORDAN.

The pride and the proud, ſuperbia & ſuperbus, often repreſent Babylon and the Babylonians. Iſaiah, xiii. 19. And Babylon the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees excellency, ſhall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrha. Jeremiah, l. 31. 32. ſpeaking of the king of Babylon, ſays, Behold, I am againſt thee, O thou moſt proud, ſaith the Lord of hoſts; for the day is come, the time that I will viſit thee. And the moſt proud ſhall ſtumble and fall, and none ſhall raiſe him up: and I will kindle a fire in his cities, and it ſhall devour all round about him. See Pſalm cxix. 21, 51, 69, 78, 85, 122.

PRINCE, Princeps. This name is ſometimes taken for the chief, the principal: the princes of the families, of the tribes, of the houſes of Iſrael; the princes of the Levites, of the people, of the prieſts; the princes of the ſynagogue, or aſſembly; the princes of the children of Reuben, of Judah, &c. Alſo, for the king, the ſovereign of a country, and his principal officers: the princes of the army of Pharaoh; Phichol prince of the army of Abimelech: Potiphar was prince, or chief, of the butchers, or of the guards, of the king of Egypt; and Joſeph was in priſon with the prince of the bakers, &c.

Prince of the prieſts, ſometimes expreſſes the high-prieſt actually in office, 2 Mac. iii. 4. Matt. xxvi. 57. or he who had formerly poſſeſſed this dignity. And ſometimes, he who was at the head of the prieſts, waiting in the temple, Jer. xx. i. & xxix. 25, 26, 27. 2 Chron. xxxv. 8. or an intendant of the temple, or the head of the ſacerdotal families. Whence it comes, that in the goſpel, Matt. ii. 4. & xvi. 21. & xxi. 15, 23. & paſſim. Vulgat. mention is made of the princes of the prieſts, in the plural.

Prince of the city; he had in the city the ſame authority as the intendant of the temple had in the temple: he took care of the preſervation of the peace, and good order. 2 Chron. xviii. 25. & xxxiv. 8.

Prince of the ſynagogue. In the Old Teſtament, Exod. xxxiv. 31. Numb. iv. 34. & xxxi. 13.

this term ſignifies, thoſe who preſided over the aſſemblies of the people; the chiefs of the tribes and families of Iſrael. But in the New Teſtament, the prince of the ſynagogue, is he who preſided over the religious aſſemblies held in the ſynagogue. This is he whom the Jews call naſi of the ſynagogue. He had ſeveral aſſociates, which were alſo called princes or chiefs of the ſynagogue. Luke viii. 41. Acts xiii. 15. & xviii. 17.

Prince of this world. The devil, who boaſts of having all the kingdoms of the earth at his diſpoſal. John xii. 31. & xiv. 30. & xvi. 11.

Prince of the captivity. This is the name the oriental Jews give to him, whom they acknowledge as their chief, and whom they obey, in the provinces beyond the Euphrates, under the dominion of the Perſians. See Baſnage, in his Hiſtory of the Jews, tom. ii. lib. iv. cap. 3. Vide CAPTIVITY.

There is among the Jews a ſucceſſion of the princes of the captivity; but thoſe who have enquired narrowly into it, find many errors and anachroniſms in it. Baſnage's Hiſt. of the Jews, tom. ii. lib. iv. cap. 11. They pretend, that the princes of the captivity were not eſtabliſhed in Babylonia till the beginning of the third century, in 220; that the ſucceſſion exhibited by the author of the leſſer Chronicle, Sedar-olam-Zutha, is not ſupported by the authority of any ancient author; that neither Joſephus, nor Juſtin Martyr, in his Dialogue againſt Tryphon, have known any thing of theſe pretended princes of the captivity beyond the Euphrates; and that the tradition of the ſages, on which it is founded, is of very ſlender authority in matters of hiſtory.

As to the title, prince, in Scripture, and in Jewiſh authors, it often means no more than a mere head of a family; or he who is appointed to preſide over his equals. The heads of the ſynagogues in Germany, and in ſome provinces of Italy, take the title of duke, or prince, of the Jews. This makes them nothing the greater men, nor gives them the greater liberty.

Principes exercitus, Gen. xxi. 32. ſignifies generals of an army, which might not be very numerous; or even the captains of a prince's guard. Abraham is called, by thoſe of Hebron, princeps dei, a great prince. Gen. xxiii. 6. & xl. 20. The prince of the bakers, was Pharaoh's chief baker. The princes of the families of the Levites, were the heads and chiefs of thoſe families. The prince of the prieſts, is the high-prieſt. Nicodemus is called a prince of the Jews; John iii. 1. Vulg. i. e. of great conſideration among the Jews. A prince of the Phariſees, is one diſtinguiſhed in that ſect, &c. Vide KINGS.

PRINUS, a ſort of green oak, otherwiſe called holm-oak: called green oak, becauſe it preſerves its leaves in the winter. Theſe leaves are like thoſe of laurel, but whitiſh, rough without, and ſtrongly ſerrated. One of the elders, who accuſed Suſanna, ſaid he had ſeen her with a young man under a holm-oak, ſub prino; and Daniel making an alluſion to the word prinus, anſwered him; The angel of God waiteth with the ſword to cut thee in two. Suſan. 59. Πρίσαι σε μέσον. The Greek reads priſai, which is, to ſaw. The commentators may be ſeen concerning this alluſion in the Greek, which ſeems to prove, that this part of Daniel was never written in Hebrew. Vide MASTIC, LENTISK.

PRISCA, a Latin word, ancient.

PRISCILLA, Πρίσκιλλα, from Priſca.

PRISCILLA, or Priſca; ſhe is generally called Priſcilla; yet ſhe is called Priſca, 2 Tim. iv. 19. a Chriſtian woman, well known in the Acts, and in St. Paul's epiſtles; ſometimes placed before her huſband Aquila. Vide AQUILA. Their houſe was ſo well regulated, that St. Paul calls it a church. From Epheſus they went to Rome, where they were, when St. Paul wrote his Epiſtle to the Romans, A.D. 58. He ſalutes them firſt of all, with great commendations, Rom. xvi. 5. They returned into Aſia ſome time afterwards, and St. Paul writing to Timothy, deſires him to ſalute them on his account. 2 Tim. iv. 19. A.D. 65. It is thought they died here. The Latin martyrologies obſerve their memory July 8. The Greeks celebrate the feaſt of Aquila July 14.

PROCHORUS, Πρόχορος, he that preſides over the choirs; from πρὸ, and χόρος.

PROCHORUS, or Procorus, one of the ſeven deacons. Acts vi. 5. A.D. 33 or 34. The Greeks think he was the firſt biſhop of Nicomedia. Ado ſays he ſuffered martyrdom at Antioch, Auguſt 9. after having made himſelf very famous by his miracles. We have an hiſtory of St. John the Evangeliſt, under the name of Prochorus; but it is modern.

PROCULA, or Proſcula, or Claudia Procula: this is ſaid to be the name of Pilate's wife. Vincent of Beauvais, lib. vii. cap. 41. ſpeculi hiſtoric. quotes the falſe goſpel of Nicodemus, as giving her this name of Procula: but the copy of this goſpel, printed by Fabricius, has not this name; it has only Matrona ipſius Pilati procul profita: yet Malelas, in his Chronicon, Nicephorus, lib. i. cap. 30. the falſe Lucius Dexter, call her Procula.

Some

Some of the fathers ſeem to think, that ſhe feared God, and was ſaved. Origen. in Matth. Chryſoſt. in Matth. Hilar. Can. 33. Others conclude, that ſhe embraced the faith of Jeſus Chriſt, and that ſhe was of the number of his ſaints. Menolog. Græc. apud Cornel. a Lapide. As to the dream ſhe had on account of our Saviour, ſome think it was ſuggeſted to her by the devil, who was in ſuſpence about ſomething, and was in fear of the ſubverſion of his empire. Evang. Nicod. Cyprian. ſeu alius Serm. de Paſſione. Athanaſ. tract. ad Maxim. lib. i. p. 163. Beda. Anſelm, Hiſt. Scholaſt. Others impute it to a good ſpirit. Ambroſ. lib. x. in Origen. Chryſoſt. Hieron. in Matth. Leo. Magn. Serm. xi. de Paſſione. Mald. Grot. Brug. in Matth.

PROFANE. This is ſaid of the contempt and abuſe of holy things: a man who is defiled, and touches any ſacred thing, pollutes, or profanes it. Profane perſons are not to meddle with, to ſpeak or write upon ſacred matters. A profane man, or laick, is not to touch the holy veſſels, or to be employed in divine myſteries. He who makes a jeſt of ſacred things, who profanes them by abuſe, who defiles himſelf by impure or ſhameful actions, is a profane perſon. The Scripture calls Eſau profane, becauſe he ſold his birth-right, which was conſidered as an holy thing. Heb. xii. 16. The Egyptians would not admit the Hebrews to their tables, becauſe they held them as profane. Gen. xliii. 32. The prieſts of the race of Aaron were enjoined to diſtinguiſh between ſacred and profane, between pure and defiled; Lev. x. 10. and for this reaſon the uſe of wine was forbid them in the temple, during their time of waiting. It was forbid them to keep the fleſh of the peace-offerings above two days. If they ate of it on the third day, they were puniſhed as profaners of holy things. Lev. xix. 7.

Animals that were unclean by the law, made thoſe who touched them, or ate of them, unclean, profane, and polluted. Iſaiah, lxv. 4. calls thoſe profane, who eat of the fleſh of ſwine, or who have profane broth in their pots. When the city of Jeruſalem is compared to the temple, the ſoil of this city is called profane; Ezek. xlviii. 15. i. e. appointed to common uſes, and for an habitation of laics. In 2 Mac. xii. 23. the heathen that compoſed the army of Timotheus, are called profane. St. Paul marks as profane, ſuch novel words and expreſſions as are needleſsly introduced into religion. 1 Tim. vi. 20.

To profane the temple, to profane the ſabbath, to profane the altar, are common expreſſions, to denote the violation of the repoſe of the ſabbath; the entering of foreigners into the temple; irreverences committed there; impious ſacrifices offered on the altar of the Lord.

To profane the ſtatutes, or the commandments of God, is to tranſgreſs and violate them. Pſalm lxxxix. 31.

To profane the covenant, or promiſes ſworn to by an oath, is to fruſtrate them, or not perform them. Pſalm lxxxix. 34.

To profane his race, to blemiſh the glory of it. Eccleſiaſticus, xlvii. 22. ſays, that Solomon profaned his race, becauſe by his ſins he was the occaſion, that God withheld his ſpirit of wiſdom from his ſon Rehoboam, who by his imprudence alienated the minds of Iſrael, and cauſed the revolt of the ten tribes.

To profane a vine, or a tree, is to make them common, and proper to be employed in ordinary uſes. Deut. xx. 6. What man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet eaten of it? Heb. literally, who hath not profaned it. In Leviticus, xix. 23. where Moſes paſſes a law concerning the fruit of trees newly planted, he expreſſes the impurity of the firſt-fruits by the name of circumciſion. Ye ſhall count the fruit thereof as uncircumciſed. For the three firſt years, theſe fruits were cut off as impure. The fourth year they offered what was produced, in the temple. Laſtly, in the fifth year the owner had the liberty of making uſe of the fruit as his own, which then became profane or common. Jeremiah promiſes the Iſraelites, that they ſhould return again into their own country, that they ſhould plant vineyards on the mountains of Samaria, and ſhould profane them; that is, ſhould eat of the fruit thereof. The Vulgate ſays, plantabunt plantantes, & donec tempus veniat, non vindemiabunt. They ſhould not touch thereof till the fifth year. The Hebrew ſays, plantabunt plantantes, & profanabunt. Jer. xxxi. 5. נטעים וחללו.

PROMISES. The word promiſe, in the New Teſtament, is uſually taken for promiſes formerly made by God to Abraham and the other patriarchs, to ſend them the Meſſiah. In this ſenſe St. Paul commonly uſes the word promiſe. Gal. iii. 16. Rom. iv. 13, 14, 15, & paſſim. In Acts vii. 17. the time of the promiſe, is the time of the coming of the Meſſiah. The children of the promiſe are, firſt, the Iſraelites deſcended from Iſaac, in oppoſition to the Iſhmaelites deſcended from Iſhmael and Hagar; Rom. ix. 8. Gal. iv. 28. ſecondly, the Jews converted to Chriſtianity, in oppoſition to the unbelieving Jews. Chriſtians enjoy the promiſes made to the patriarchs, from which which the unbelieving Jews have fallen. The holy ſpirit of promiſe, which Chriſtians have received, Eph. i. 13. is the Holy Ghoſt, which God has promiſed to thoſe who believe, and which is the pledge of their everlaſting happineſs. The firſt commandment to which God has annexed a promiſe, Eph. vi. 2. is that, Honour thy father and thy mother; to which God has ſubjoined this promiſe, their days ſhall be multiplied on the earth.

Promiſes in general alſo denote eternal life, which is the object of a Chriſtian's hope. Heb. xi. 16. The ancient patriarchs were heirs of the promiſes by their faith and their patience. Heb. vi. 12. All the promiſes of God are accompliſhed and fulfilled in Jeſus Chriſt. 2 Cor. i. 20.

The word promiſe is often put for a vow. If a woman makes a vow, and her huſband refuſe his conſent to it, her promiſe is void. Numb. xxx. 13. And Eccleſiaſticus, v. 5. it is much better not to vow at all, than to vow, and not keep one's promiſe.

PROOF, Trial, Temptation. God intended to prove you, to ſee if you would walk in his ways. Exod. xx. 20. After he had proved you and afflicted you, he had pity on you. Deut. viii. 16. God commands Gideon to bring his troops to a brook, that he might prove them there. Judg. vii. 4. As gold and ſilver are tried in the furnace, ſo God proves the heart. Prov. xvii. 3. The verb probo is alſo put for to know, to examine, Omnia probate, quod bonum eſt tenete. 1 Theſ. v. 21. Be renewed in ſpirit, that you may know what is the will of God, Rom. xii. 2. ut probetis quæ ſit voluntas Dei bona, &c. Probare tirones; 2 Kings xxv. 10. רב טבחים. He that exerciſes them, or that proves the young ſoldiers. The Hebrew ſays, He that is the maſter of the butchers, or of the cooks, or of the king's guard.

PROPHET, Προφητης, that foretels events; from πρό and Φῆμι.

PROPHET, from the Greek, prophetes. The Hebrews originally called them ſeers, 1 Sam. ix. 9. ראה videns: afterwards they called them nabi, נביא, propheta, from the root nibba, to foretel, to divine. Scripture often gives them the name of men of God, or of angels, or meſſengers of the Lord. The verb nibba to propheſy, in the Hebrew is of very great extent. Sometimes it ſignifies to foretel what is to come; at other times, to be inſpired, to ſpeak from God. God ſays to Moſes, Exod. vii. 1. Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy prophet; he ſhall explain thy ſentiments to the people. St. Paul in his Epiſtle to Titus, i. 12. quoting a profane poet, calls him a prophet. The Scripture often gives the name of prophet to impoſtors, who falſely boaſted of inſpiration.

As the true prophets, when tranſported by the energy of God's ſpirit, were ſometimes agitated in a violent manner; ſimilar motions were called propheſying when exhibited by perſons who were filled with a good or evil ſpirit. 1 Sam. xviii. 10. Saul being moved by an evil ſpirit propheſied in his houſe. To propheſy is alſo put for to ſing, to dance, to play on inſtruments. Thou ſhalt meet a company of prophets, ſays Samuel to Saul, coming down from the high place, with a pſaltery, and a tabret, and a pipe, and a harp before them, and they ſhall propheſy. And the ſpirit of the Lord ſhall come upon thee, and thou ſhalt propheſy with them, and ſhalt be turned into another man. 1 Sam. x. 5, 6. We read, 1 Chron. xxv. 1. that the ſons of Aſaph were appointed to propheſy upon harps.

This term is alſo uſed by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xi. 4, 5. xiv. 1, 3, 4, &c. for explaining Scripture, ſpeaking to the church in public; probably, becauſe they who exerciſed theſe functions were regarded as replete with the Holy Ghoſt. In Ecclus. xlviii. 13. this term is uſed in an extraordinary ſenſe, inſtead of ſaying, to work a miracle, to raiſe the dead. Thus it is ſaid of the bones of Eliſha, after his death his body propheſied, becauſe they reſtored a dead perſon to life, as if they had ſtill been actuated by the ſoul of the prophet. Ecclus. xlix. 15. It is ſaid, that the bones of the patriarch Joſeph propheſied alſo after his death, becauſe they were as a pledge of his promiſe made to his brethren, that they ſhould one day be delivered from their ſervitude in Egypt, and ſhould poſſeſs the land of Canaan.

The moſt uſual way by which God communicated himſelf to the prophets was inſpiration, which conſiſted in illuminating the mind of the prophet, and exciting his will to proclaim what the Lord dictated to him. In this ſenſe we acknowledge as prophets, all the authors of the canonical books of Scripture, both of the Old and New Teſtament. God alſo communicated himſelf to the prophets by dreams and nocturnal viſions. Joel, ii. 28. promiſes to the people of the Lord, that their young men ſhould ſee viſions, and their old men ſhould have prophetic dreams. St. Peter, Acts x. 11, 12. fell into an ecſtacy at noon-day, and had a revelation concerning the call of the Gentiles. The Lord appeared to Abraham, to Job, to Moſes in a cloud, and diſcovered his will to them. He often made his voice to be heard articulately. Thus he ſpoke to Moſes in the burning buſh, and on Mount Sinai, and to Samuel in the night. St. Auſtin, Aug. Præfat. in lib. xix.

contra Fauſt. acknowledges three ſorts of prophets; thoſe of the Jews, thoſe of the Gentiles, and thoſe of the Chriſtians. Thoſe of the Jews are known: thoſe of the Gentiles are their poets and their ſages; and thoſe of the Chriſtians are the apoſtles, and apoſtolical men, of whom Jeſus Chriſt has ſaid; wherefore behold, I ſend unto you prophets, and wiſe men, and ſcribes. Matt. xxiii. 34. See alſo Acts xiii. 1. Erant Antiochiæ Prophetæ & Doctores, &c.

We have in the Old Teſtament the writings of ſixteen prophets; i. e. of four greater prophets, and twelve leſſer prophets. The four greater prophets are Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. The Jews do not properly place Daniel among the prophets, becauſe (they ſay) he lived in the ſplendour of temporal dignities, and a kind of life different from other prophets. The twelve leſſer prophets are, Hoſea, Joel, Amos, Obadiah, Micah, Jonah, Nahum, Habakkuk, Zephaniah, Haggai, Zachariah, and Malachi.

CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER OF THE PROPHETS.

1. Hoſea, under Uzziah, king of Judah, who began to reign A. M. 3194; and under Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and under Jeroboam II. king of Iſrael, and his ſucceſſors, to the deſtruction of Samaria, A. M. 3283.
2. Amos, under Uzziah, A.M. 3219, and about ſix years before the death of Jeroboam II. king of Iſrael, which happened A. M. 3220.
3. Iſaiah, at the death of Uzziah, and at the beginning of the reign of Jotham, king of Judah, A.M. 3246. He continued to propheſy to the reign of Manaſſah, which began A. M. 3306.
4. Jonah, under the kings Joaſh and Jeroboam II. in the kingdom of Iſrael, about the ſame time as Hoſea, Iſaiah, and Amos. Jeroboam II. died A. M. 3220.
5. Micah, under Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah. Jotham began to reign A. M. 3235, and Hezekiah died A. M. 3306. Micah was contemporary with Iſaiah, but began later to propheſy.
6. Nahum, under the reign of Hezekiah, and after the expedition of Sennacherib, i. e. after A. M. 3291.
7. Jeremiah, in the thirteenth year of Joſiah, king of Judah, A. M. 3375. Jeremiah continued to propheſy under Shallum, Jehoiakim, Jeconiah, and Zedekiah, to the taking of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans, A. M. 3416. It is thought he died two years afterwards in Egypt, in 3418.
8. Zephaniah appeared at the beginning of the reign of Joſiah, and before the twenty-eighth year of that prince, A.M. 3381; and even before the taking of Nineveh, A. M. 3378.
9. Joel, under Joſiah, about the ſame time as Jeremiah and Zephaniah.
10. Daniel was taken into Chaldea, A. M. 3398, the fourth year of Jehoiakim, king of Judah. He propheſied at Babylon to the end of the captivity, A. M. 3468, and perhaps longer.
11. Ezekiel was carried captive to Babylon with Jeconiah, king of Judah, A. M. 3405. He began to propheſy in A. M. 3409. He continued till toward the end of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, who died A. M. 3442.
12. Habakkuk in Judea at the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, about A. M. 3394, and before the coming of Nebuchadnezzar in 3398.
13. Obadiah in Judea after the taking of Jeruſalem, A. M. 3414, and before the deſolation of Idumea, (as we believe) in 3410.
14. Haggai was brought to Jeruſalem A. M. 3414; he returned from the captivity in 3468, and propheſied the ſecond year of Darius, ſon of Hyſtaſpes, which was A. M. 3484.
15. Zachariah propheſied in Judea at the ſame time as Haggai, and he ſeems to have continued after him.
16. Malachi has no date to his prophecies. If he was the ſame as Eſdras, which is very probable, he may have propheſied under Nehemiah, who returned into Judea A. M. 3550. Vide the articles of theſe prophets. Beſide theſe, there are many whoſe names appear in Scripture, but of whom we have no writings remaining.

The propheteſſes are, 1. Miriam, ſiſter of Moſes. 2. Deborah. 3. Hannah, the mother of Samuel. 4. Abigail. 5. Huldah. 6. Eſther. 7. The midwives of Egypt, who preſerved the firſt-born of the Hebrews.

After Malachi no prophets were in Iſrael, as before; ſo that in the time of the Maccabees, 1 Macc. iv. 46. A. M. 3840, ante A. D. 164. when the altar of burnt-ſacrifices was demoliſhed, which had been prophaned by the Gentiles, the ſtones thereof were ſet aſide, till a prophet ſhould ariſe to declare what ſhould be done with them.

The prophets, according to St. Auſtin, lib. xviii. de Civit. cap. 41. were the divines, the philoſophers, the inſtructors, and the guides of the Hebrews in piety and virtue. They generally lived retired, in ſome country retreat, and in a ſort of community, where they and their diſciples were employed in prayer, in labouring with their hands, and in ſtudy. Their habitations were plain and ſimple, which they themſelves built, and cut down the wood. Yet they exerciſed no trade for gain, nor did they undertake take any work that was too laborious, or inconſiſtent with the repoſe their employment required. Thus Eliſha quitted his plough, when Elijah called him to the prophetic office, 1 Kings xix. 20. Zechariah ſays, xiii. 5. one is no prophet, but an huſbandman. Amos ſays, vii. 14. he is no prophet, but an herdſman, and a gatherer of ſycamore-fruit.

Elijah was cloathed with ſkins, and girded with a girdle of leather, 2 Kings i. 8. Iſaiah wore ſack-cloth, i. e. a coarſe rough habit, of a dark brown colour, which was the ordinary cloathing of the prophets. Zechariah ſays, xiii. 4. ſpeaking of the falſe prophets who imitated externally the true prophets of the Lord, that they ſhould not wear a rough garment to deceive. In Rev. xi. 3. the two witneſſes, thought to be Enoch and Elijah, are repreſented as cloathed in ſackcloth. Their poverty was conſpicuous in their actions. The preſents they received were only bread, fruits, and honey. The firſt fruits of the earth were given them, as being perſons that poſſeſſed nothing themſelves. The woman of Shunem, who entertained Eliſha, put into the prophet's chamber no furniture but what was plain and neceſſary. 2 Kings iv. 10. The ſame prophet refuſes the rich preſents of Naaman, and drives away from his preſence Gehazi who had received them. 2 Kings v. 26. Their frugality appears throughout their hiſtory. It is well known what is related of the wild gourds, (coloquintida) that one of the prophets cauſed to be boiled for the refreſhment of his brethren. 2 Kings iv. 38, 40. The angel gave to Elijah only bread and water for a long journey. 1 Kings xix. 6. Obadiah, the governor of Ahab's houſehold, gave nothing but bread and water to the prophets that he fed in the caves. 1 Kings xviii. 7.

The prophets were not obſervers of continency; for Samuel had children, and Iſaiah had [wives] a wife, called the propheteſs, chap. viii. 3. Hoſea, i. 2, &c. received orders to marry a concubine. But there were no women, or wives, in the ſocieties of the prophets. Neither Elijah nor Eliſha had any, that we hear of, and we ſee with what reſerve the woman who entertained Eliſha ſpoke to him; and that by the interpoſition of Gehazi. 2 Kings iv. 27. The prophets were expoſed to the railleries, the inſults, the perſecutions, the ill treatment both of kings and people, whoſe vices and irregularities they undertook to reprove. St. Paul acquaints us, that many of them died violent deaths. Heb. xi. 35, &c.

PROSELYTE, Προσήλυτος, a ſtranger, a foreigner; Heb. גר gher, a traveller, a ſtranger.

PROSELYTE, from the Greek proſelytos, Προσήλυτος. גר ger. נכר necher, which ſignifies a ſtranger, one who comes from abroad, or from another place. The Hebrew ger or necher, has the ſame ſignification. In the language of the Jews thoſe are called by this name, who come to dwell in their country, or who embrace their religion, being not Jews by birth. In the New Teſtament they are called ſometimes proſelytes, and ſometimes Gentiles, fearing God, or godly. Acts ii. 5. x. 2. 22. xiii. 16, 50.

The Hebrews diſtinguiſh two kinds of proſelytes. The firſt, proſelytes of the gate; the others, proſelytes of juſtice. The firſt dwelt in the land of Iſrael, or even out of that country, and, without obliging themſelves to circumciſion, or to any other ceremony of the law, feared and worſhipped the true God, obſerving the Noachical rules. Of this number was Naaman the Syrian, Nebuzardan, general of Nebuchadnezzar's army, Cornelius the centurion, the eunuch of queen Candace, and ſome others mentioned in the Acts.

The rabbins teach, that in order to make a proſelyte of habitation, or of the gate, he that would enter into this engagement, muſt promiſe with an oath, in the preſence of three witneſſes, to keep the ſeven precepts of the Noachidæ; i. e. according to them, that law of nature to which all the nations of the world are obliged; and the obſervation of which might bring them to eternal ſalvation. The Jews ſay, that the proſelytes of the gate have ceaſed in Iſrael, ever ſince the obſervation of the jubilee has been left off, and the tribes of Gad, of Reuben, and of Manaſſeh, on the other ſide of Jordan, were led captive by Tiglath-pileſſer. But theſe obſervations are not juſt, ſince we ſee many proſelytes in the time of Jeſus Chriſt, who reproaches the Phariſees with compaſſing ſea and land to make a proſelyte, and after this, making him a greater ſinner than he was before. Matt. xxiii. 15. And St. Luke, Acts ii. 11. ſpeaks of a great number of proſelytes, and thoſe who feared God, that were at Jeruſalem, when the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon the apoſtles. I am apt to believe, that the greater part of theſe were proſelytes of juſtice; but it cannot be denied that ſome of them might be proſelytes of the gate.

The privileges of proſelytes of the gate were, firſt, that by the obſervation of the rules of natural juſtice, and by avoiding idolatry, blaſphemy, inceſt, adultery, and murder, they might through a holy life hope for eternal life. Secondly, they might dwell in the land of Iſrael, and ſhare in the outward proſperities of it. It is ſaid they did not dwell in the cities, but only in the ſuburbs and the villages. But it is certain, that the Jews often admitted into their cities, not only pro- ſelytes of habitation, but alſo Gentiles and idolaters, as appears by the reproaches on this account, throughout the Scriptures. In the time of Solomon there were in Iſrael 153,600 of theſe proſelytes, whom this prince compelled to hew wood, to draw water, to cut ſtones, and to carry burthens for the building of the temple. 2 Chron. ii. 17, 18. Theſe proſelytes were Canaanites, who had continued in the country ever ſince Joſhua's time. Moſes forbad the Iſraelites to eat any animals that died of themſelves, or were ſtrangled, ſo that the blood remained in them; but allowed them to ſell or give ſuch animals to the ſtrangers and proſelytes. Deut. xiv. 21.

Proſelytes of juſtice, are thoſe converted to Judaiſm, who had engaged themſelves to receive circumciſion, and to obſerve the whole law of Moſes. Thus were they admitted to all the prerogatives of the people of the Lord, as well in this life as the other. The rabbins inform us, that before circumciſion was adminiſtered to them, and before they were admitted into the religion of the Hebrews, they were examined about the motives of their converſion; whether the change was voluntary, or whether it proceeded from intereſt, fear, ambition, &c. Maimonides aſſures us, that under the happy reigns of David and Solomon, they received no proſelyte of juſtice, becauſe there was reaſon to fear, that it was rather the proſperity of theſe princes, than any love to religion, that made them converts to Judaiſm. The Talmudiſts ſay, that proſelytes are, as it were, the canker and ruſt of Iſrael, and that very great caution muſt be taken not to admit them too eaſily. Vide Seld. de Syned. lib. ii. cap. 2. art. 5.

When the proſelyte was well proved and inſtructed, they gave him circumciſion; and when the wound of his circumciſion was healed, they gave him baptiſm, by plunging his whole body into a ciſtern of water, by only one immerſion. Vide Seld. de Jure Nat. & Gent. lib. ii. cap. 2, 3. This ceremony being a judicial act, was to be performed in the preſence of three judges, and could not be done on a feſtival day. The proſelyte alſo cauſed circumciſion and baptiſm to be adminiſtered to his ſlaves, under thirteen years of age. But thoſe of that age, or older, could not be compelled, but he muſt ſell them, if they were obſtinate in not embracing Judaiſm. As to female ſlaves, they were only to be baptized, if they would become converts, if not, they were to be ſold. The baptiſm that a proſelyte had once received, was never repeated, neither in the perſon of the proſelyte, though he ſhould afterwards apoſtatize, nor in that of his children, born to him after baptiſm, unleſs they were born from a pagan woman; in which caſe they were to be baptized as pagans, becauſe they followed the condition of their mother.

Boys under twelve years of age, and girls under thirteen, could not become proſelytes, till they had obtained the conſent of their parents, or in caſe of refuſal, the concurrence of the officers of juſtice. Baptiſm in reſpect of girls, had the ſame effect as circumciſion in reſpect of boys. Each of them by means of this, received (as it were) a new birth, ſo that thoſe who were their parents before, were no longer regarded as ſuch after this ceremony, and thoſe who before were ſlaves, now became free. Children born before the converſion of their father had no right to inherit. If a proſelyte died without having had children after his converſion, his eſtate belonged to the firſt occupier, and not to the public treaſury. When proſelytes became Jews, they received from heaven a new ſoul, and a new ſubſtantial form. This the rabbins teach concerning their proſelytes of juſtice.

They require three things in a complete proſelyte, baptiſm, circumciſion, and ſacrifice; but for women only baptiſm and ſacrifice. Gemar. Babylon. ad tit. Jabimoth. cap. 4. Vid. Maimon. Halac-Iſuribiah. cap. 13, 14. It is thought our Saviour alluded to the baptizing of proſelytes, when he told Nicodemus, John iii. 5, 10. that for thoſe who would obey his law, it was neceſſary they ſhould be born again. Except a man be born of water, and of the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. And when Nicodemus appeared ſurprized at this doctrine, our Saviour ſays to him, Art thou a maſter of Iſrael, and knoweſt not theſe things? As though he would inſinuate, that what he had now told him had nothing extraordinary in it, ſince the baptiſm of proſelytes was a thing practiſed every day in Iſrael.

Moſes in Deuteronomy xxiii. 1, 2, 3, &c. excludes certain perſons from the privileges of the people of Iſrael, or, as he there ſpeaks, from the congregation of the Lord; ſome for ever, others only for a certain time. All eunuchs, in whatever manner they became ſo, are excluded for ever. Baſtards, or illegitimate children, were not to be admitted till after the tenth generation. The Moabites and Ammonites were in the ſame circumſtances. He received the Egyptians and Idumeans after the ſecond generation. It was allowed theſe perſons to be converted to the Lord, and to become proſelytes, when they pleaſed. Johannes Hircanus, prince of the Jews, compelled the Idumeans to be circumciſed, and to embrace the law of Moſes; and from this time,

ſays Joſephus, they were looked upon as Jews. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 17. In A. M. 3875, ante A. D. 129. Achior, prince of the Ammonites, Judith xiv. 6. became alſo a Jew, without any other preparation than that of being inſtructed in the belief and obſervances of this religion: therefore, the power of being converted was not taken away from theſe nations; but they were not admitted to offices, or employments, to dignities and other external prerogatives of the people of God, till after a certain time, and till they had given ſufficient proofs of their perſeverance in the true religion.

The Hebrews believe, that the populace of Egypt, which followed the Iſraelites, when they left that country, Exod. xii. 38. were all converts and proſelytes of juſtice: they will have it, that Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes, had alſo embraced their religion. Exod. xviii. 10. The ſons of Jacob admitted the Shechemites for proſelytes, only requiring that they ſhould receive circumciſion. Gen. xxxiv. 14, 15. Some rabbins inform us, that in the time of Solomon they received the Gentiles to Judaiſm by baptiſm only, becauſe of the great number that then became converts. But others acquaint us, as before obſerved, that then they would admit no proſelytes in Iſrael. If he that preſented himſelf to be admitted as a convert had already been circumciſed, they contented themſelves with juſt opening the ſcar leſt after circumciſion, ſo as to draw a few drops of blood. As to the ſacrifices that the proſelyte was to offer, I obſerve, that Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes, offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings to the Lord. Exod. xviii. 12. It is ſaid, that anciently the proſelyte offered for a burnt-offering a ſacrifice of large cattle, or two turtles, or two young pigeons: but now, as for a long time, the Jews have neither temple nor altar, they do not oblige their proſelytes to offer ſacrifices. PROSEUCHE. The word Proſeuche is Greek, and ſignifies prayer. Προσευχὴ, Oratio. In the Roman Satiriſt, Juvenal, Sat. 3. v. 296.

In quâ te quæro Proſeuchâ, it is taken for the places of prayer of the Jews, and pretty near the ſame as their ſynagogues. But the ſynagogues were generally in cities, and were covered places; whereas, for the moſt part, the Proſeuches were out of the cities, on the banks of rivers, having no covering, except, perhaps, the ſhade of ſome trees, or covered galleries. In Acts xvi. 12. mention is made of the Proſeuche of Philippi in Macedonia, which was out of the city. Maimonides ſays, that the Proſeuches ought to be built in ſuch manner, that thoſe who enter them, may turn their faces toward the temple of Jeruſalem; reſpect being had to the ſituation of the place and of the city where they are. The 3d book of Maccabees, cap. ult. ſays, that the Jews of Egypt, being delivered from danger, built a Proſeuche near the city of Alexandria. Epiphanius ſays, Hæreſ. 80. that at two miles from Shechem there was a Proſeuche of the Samaritans, ſituate in a plain, built in form of a theatre, and without a roof; in which, (ſays Epiphanius) as well as in every thing elſe, they copy from the Jews. However, we muſt allow, that often Joſephus and Philo confound the Proſeuches with the ſynagogues, and that they place them in the cities. See SYNAGOGUE.

PROVERBS. The Hebrews give the name of proverbs, parables, or ſimilitudes, to moral ſentences, maxims, compariſons, or enigmas, expreſſed in a poetical, figurative, cloſe and ſententious ſtyle. The Hebrews call this kind of proverbs משלי, Miſhle. Gr. Παραβολαὶ, Parabolæ, Solomon ſays, that in his time, maxims of this ſort, were the chief ſtudy of the learned: A wiſe man will endeavour (ſays he) to underſtand a proverb, and the interpretation; the words of the wiſe, and their dark ſayings, Prov. i. 6. And Jeſus the ſon of Sirach ſays, Ecclus. xxxix. 1, 2, 3. He will keep the ſayings of the renowned men, and where ſubtil parables are, he will be there alſo: he will ſeek out the ſecrets of grave ſentences, and be converſant in dark parables. The queen of Sheba came to ſee Solomon, to prove him, and to propoſe dark riddles to him; 1 Kings, x. 1. Hiram, king of Tyre (they ſay) kept a correſpondence, by letters, with Solomon, and propoſed enigmatical queſtions to him, and explained thoſe that were propoſed to him by Solomon, Menander & Dius apud Joſeph. Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 2. The ancient ſages of Greece greatly eſteemed this kind of exerciſe. Cleobulus compoſed no leſs than three thouſand ſongs and myſterious ſayings; and Cleobulina his daughter wrote enigmatical verſes. Diogen. Laert. in Cleobul.

The PROVERBS of Solomon, are, without doubt, the moſt valuable part of his works: he tells us, they were the fruits of his moſt profound meditations, and of his moſt excellent wiſdom: Eccleſ. xii. 9. In this book we find rules for the conduct conduct of all conditions of life; for kings, courtiers, men of the world; for maſters, ſervants, fathers, mothers, children. Some have doubted whether Solomon alone was the author of this book: Grotius thinks this prince had a compilation made, for his own uſe, of whatever was extant, excellent in point of morality, from all the ancient writers of his own nation; that under Hezekiah this collection was enlarged, by adding whatever of this nature had been written ſince Solomon; Eliakim, Shebna, and Joah (ſays he) compleated this collection, 2 Kings xviii. 18. But theſe conjectures are not ſupported by any proof. The fathers and interpreters aſcribe this whole book to Solomon.

True it is, we may herein obſerve ſome differences of ſtyle and method: the nine firſt chapters, entitled The Proverbs of Solomon, are written as a continued diſcourſe, and may be conſidered as a preface. In chap. x. where we ſee the ſame title again, the ſtyle changes to ſhort ſentences, which have little connexion with each other, and which, generally, contain a kind of antitheſis. In chap. xxii. ver. 17. we find a new ſtyle, approaching nearer to that of the nine firſt chapters, to chap. xxiv. ver. 23. where is a new title, גם אלה לחכמים. to the wiſe; or, farther ſayings of the wiſe. Their ſtyle is ſhort and ſententious. Chap. xxv. we read, Theſe are alſo Proverbs of Solomon, which the men of Hezekiah, king of Judah copied out. And, doubtleſs, it was on this authority Grotius advanced, that this collection was made by Eliakim, Shebna, and Joah, famous men under the reign of Hezekiah. Chap. xxx. 1. we read, The words of Agur, the ſon of Jakeh. Laſtly, the title of chap. xxxi. and laſt, is, The words of king Lemuel.

From all which, it ſeems certain, that the book of Proverbs, is a collection of the Proverbs of Solomon, compiled by ſeveral hands: wherefore we cannot conclude from hence, that this is not the work of Solomon, for that prince being inſpired of the Holy Ghoſt, had compoſed no leſs than three-thouſand proverbs, 1 Kings iv. 32. Several perſons might make collections of them; Hezekiah, among others, as mentioned chap. xxv. Agur, Iſaiah, Eſdras might do the ſame. From theſe ſeveral collections was compoſed the work which we now have. Nothing is more reaſonable than this ſuppoſition. It is no-where ſaid, that Solomon himſelf had made a collection of proverbs and ſentences. The title, Solomon's Proverbs, rather ſhews the author, than the compiler. The Rabbins generally maintain, that king Hezekiah, obſerving the abuſe the people made of ſeveral works of Solomon, chiefly thoſe which contained the virtues of plants, and ſecrets of natural philoſophy, he ſuppreſſed ſeveral of theſe works, and only preſerved thoſe that are handed down to us. Vid. Zemach David, & Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 15. [Vide SYBIL.]

No doubt is made of the canonicalneſs of The Book of Proverbs. The Greek verſion of this book is often very different from the Hebrew, and adds many verſes not in the original. The Roman edition of the Greek tranſpoſes whole chapters. After chap. xxiv. ver. 22. it inſerts the fourteen firſt verſes of chap. xxx. Then it returns to ver. 23. and the reſt of chap. xxiv. After which it puts ver. 15. and the reſt of chap. xxx. Then chap. xxxi. and, laſtly, chap. xxv. and thoſe that follow, as far as chap. xxix. After which, is chap. xxxi. ver. 10. and the reſt, which conclude the book. Leſſer tranſpoſitions may be ſeen in the body of the book. It is not known from whence theſe irregularities have proceeded. In the ancient Latin editions we find ſeveral verſes added, which have been left out from the time of St. Jerom: yet there ſtill remain ſome.

PROVIDENCE. It is a tenet of the Chriſtian and Jewiſh religion, that God diſpoſes and governs all things by his Providence: that this Providence is eternal and infinite; that it extends over every thing, even to the hairs of our heads, to the moſt minute animals, or herbs of the field. The atheiſts, whoſe ſentiments are combated by Solomon, in his book of Eccleſiaſtes; and the Sadducees who aroſe afterwards, denied this Providence: they maintained, that we are the only cauſes of our own happineſs or misfortune, according to our good or ill uſe of our liberty.

But theſe notions are rejected by the generality of the Jews; though they do not agree among themſelves, in the manner of explaining the effects of Providence. Maimonides ſeems to think, that Providence does not act in the moving of a leaf, or in the production of a worm; but that whatever relates to the production of animals, or things of leſs importance, is by chance.

Moreover, the generality of the Jews hold, that mankind enjoy a perfect liberty as to good or evil; and that whatever happens to a man, is as a recompence for his good actions, or as a puniſhment for his bad ones.

"Say not before the angel, There is no Providence; leſt God ſhould be provoked againſt you, and deſtroy all the works of your hands." Eccleſ. v. 6. Thus ſpeaks the book of Eccleſiaſtes. Take care how you deny in ſecret the being of Providence; your angel will be a witneſs of your moſt ſecret thoughts, and God will puniſh you. The Hebrew expreſſes this; "ſay not, before the angel, angel, It is a fault of ignorance: why ſhould you expoſe yourſelf to the anger of the Lord by your words, and loſe all the labour of your hands? Vide FRAGMENT, No. CLIII, p. 131.

PROVIDEO. This word, which commonly ſignifies to provide, Deus providebit ſibi victimam, Gen. xxii. 8. is alſo uſed for, to foreſee, to ſeek, to prepare; Gen. xli. 33. Provideat Rex virum ſapientem. Elſewhere it is taken for, to be attentive, to conſider; Pſalm xvi. 8. Providebam Dominum in conſpectu meo ſemper; I had God always before my eyes. Elſewhere it is put for, to take care, to labour, Rom. xii. 17. We endeavour to do good, not only before God, but alſo before men; 2 Cor. viii. 21. Providemus bona, non ſolùm coram Deo, ſed etiam coram hominibus. Laſtly, Provideo is ſometimes put for, to foreſee, and to foretell; Gal. iii. 8. Providens autem ſpiritus ſanctus. And Acts ii. 31. David providens locutus eſt de reſurrectione Chriſti.

PSALMS, Ψάλμοι, hymns, divine ſongs; from Ψάλλω.

PSALMS. The book of, in Hebrew, Sepher Tehillim, The Book of Hymns. In the Goſpel it is named, The Book of Pſalms, The Prophet, or David, from the name of its principal author. This book is juſtly eſteemed as a kind of abridgment of the whole Scripture, ſays St. Auſtin. It is a general library, wherein we may meet with whatever is requiſite for ſalvation, ſays Caſſiodorus. The ſacred hiſtory inſtructs us, ſays St. Ambroſe, the prophecies declare future events, the reproofs reſtrain the wicked, the precepts perſuade them, but the Pſalms produce all theſe effects. Agreeableneſs and uſefulneſs are herein ſo happily mixed, that it is not eaſy to decide which is moſt prevalent. Hence proceeds that great veneration always paid to the Pſalms. It was almoſt become a general rule, that biſhops, prieſts, and all religious perſons, were to have the Pſalter by heart: the church has made it a principal part of her ſervice, and has obliged her miniſters to rehearſe ſome portion of it every day.

The Hebrews commonly divide the Pſalter into five books; and ſeveral of the fathers admit of this diviſion, and think it very ancient. Nyſſen, tract. 1. in Pſal. c. 5. Epiphanius lib. de Menſur, cap. 5. Euſeb. in Pſal. Ambroſ. & Author. Comment. in Pſalm. ſub nomine Hieron. Euſebius ſays, it may be obſerved in the Hebrew original, and in the beſt editions of the Septuagint. St. Ambroſe expreſsly refutes thoſe who rejected this diviſion, and who thought it contrary to the New Teſtament, which quotes the pſalter as a ſingle book. This laſt reaſon induced Hilarius, Jerom, and Auſtin, to give up this diviſion of the pſalter into five books, as contrary to Scripture. Modern commentators are not more unanimous than the ancients: ſome think the pſalter was diſtributed into five books by the authors who collected the Pſalms; others will have this to be much more modern, and even ſince the times of the apoſtles. This diſpute is of no great conſequence.

But what perſuades us that this diſtribution is very ancient, and even from the time of the firſt collecting the Pſalms, is, that at the end of each book we read the ſame concluſion, which ſeems to have been put there by Eſdras, or by thoſe who had the care of collecting the ſacred books after the captivity of Babylon. Vid. Muis ad Pſal. xl. This is certain, that both Jews and Chriſtians have reckoned the collection of Pſalms as one book, in their enumeration of the books of holy Scripture. The firſt book of the pſalter, according to the Hebrews, ends at our fortieth Pſalm. The ſecond at the ſeventy-firſt. The third at the eighty-eighth. The fourth at the hundred and fifth. The fifth at the hundred and fiftieth. The four firſt books conclude with theſe words, Amen, Amen. The fifth with Hallelujah.

The number of canonical Pſalms has always been fixed at one hundred and fifty; for the hundred and fifty-firſt, (in the Greek) has never been received as canonical. But though the number of the whole has been agreed on, yet there is a variety in their diſtribution. The Jews make two of the ninth, and begin their tenth at theſe words of Pſalm ix. 22. Why ſtandeſt thou afar off, O Lord? ſo that from this place to Pſalm cxiii. their citations and numbers are different from the Latin and Greek. The Proteſtant churches, and the Engliſh verſion, following this diviſion of the Hebrews, quote the Pſalms in like manner.

At Pſalm cxiii. When Iſrael went out of Egypt, they recede ſtill farther from the Latin, dividing this Pſalm into two, and beginning the cxiv. at theſe words, Not unto us, O Lord. So that Pſalm cxiv. according to the Greeks and Latins, is their cxvi. But afterwards they come nearer again, by uniting Pſalms cxiv. and cxv. ſo that they differ but by one as far as the cxlvi. And then uniting again Pſalms cxlvi. and cxlvii. they coincide, and continue to reckon with the Vulgate to the end of the Pſalter.

There is alſo ſome difference among the ancient Greek and Latin copies, about the diviſion of the firſt and ſecond Pſalm; ſome making but one of both, and others dividing them into two; as we do, at this day. It is true in general, that the diviſion, diviſion of the Pſalter is not of that antiquity as might be imagined, and that ſometimes one is obliged, in order to purſue the ſenſe of a Pſalm, to connect one with another, or to ſeparate them, as the matter requires. St. Hilary, Prolog. in Pſalm vi. & in Pſal. ii. affirms, that in his time the diſtribution of the Pſalms was not ſettled among the Hebrews, and that ſome divided them in one manner, and ſome in another. Origen makes the ſame obſervation, in Pſal. ii. Edit. Hexapl. tom. 1. p. 475, He ſays, that in the Hebrew the Pſalms are marked by 1, 2, 3, &c. and in the time of Kimchi, i. e. in the twelfth century, the matter was yet undetermined. Vide Genebrard. in Pſalm ix. 23. ſeu Pſal. x. in Hebr. & Kimchi, ibidem. Often ſeveral Pſalms have been made of what ought to have been but one, by the intention of the author.

It is a tradition among the Hebrews and Chriſtians, that Eſdras is, if not the only, yet the principal collector of the book of Pſalms. Euſebius, St. Hilary, Theodoret, the author of the Synopſis printed under the name of St. Athanaſius, venerable Bede, and ſeveral others impute this honour to him. Philaſter ſays, hæreſ. 77. that wiſe men of the Jewiſh nation having collected them together, ranged them in the order they had received from their anceſtors, who had preſerved them from the hands of their enemies. Even before the captivity there was a collection of the Pſalms of David, ſince Hezekiah, when he reſtored the worſhip of the Lord in the temple, cauſed the Pſalms of David to be ſung there, 2 Chron. xxix. 25, 26, &c. In the library that Nehemiah erected at Jeruſalem, he cauſed the Pſalms of David to be depoſited, 2 Mac. ii. 13.

Speculative men have exerciſed themſelves very much on the order and diſpoſition of the Pſalms. They have diſcovered myſtery and deſign, ſome in one manner and ſome in another. Some have thought they could obſerve a ſucceſſion of the events of the life of David. Hilar. Prolog. in Pſalm. Ambroſ. Apolog. David. cap. 8. Origen. in Epiſt ad Rom. lib. iii. cap. 3. Others the order of the ſolemnities celebrated in the temple, Euthym. Prolog. in Pſalm. St. Chryſoſtom obſerves on Pſalm li. that generally ſpeaking the firſt Pſalms are on ſubjects of ſorrow, and the latter on more joyful and comfortable ſubjects. St. Auſtin, on Pſalm cl. acknowledges, that he could not diſcover the myſtery of the diſpoſition of the Pſalms, but that it ſeems to him, that every fiftieth hath a relation to the vocation, the juſtification, and the glorification of the ſaints; ſince the fiftieth relates to repentance, the hundredth to mercy, and the hundred and fiftieth to the praiſe of God in his ſaints. But St. Jerom. on Jerem. xxv. initio. obſerves, that it is impertinent to expect in the Pſalter a chronological ſeries of Canticles, which have relation to certain events of hiſtory, ſince it is not the cuſtom of authors of lyricks to obſerve ſuch order; and indeed, a very little examination of the text and ſpirit of the Pſalms may convince us, that thoſe who undertook this collection had ſimply in view to give us theſe holy Canticles as they found them, with a religious and exact ſcrupuloſity, without either retrenching what had been already repeated, or ſupplying what might ſeem deficient, or connecting what had been ſeparated, or ſeparating what had been improperly joined.

The authority and canonicalneſs of the book of Pſalms have always been acknowledged by both Jews and Chriſtians. Philaſtius ſays, that the Nicolaites, the Gnoſticks, and the Manichees denied that David was a prophet, or that his works were effects of inſpiration. But the ſentiment of the Chriſtian church has always been, that all the hundred and fifty Pſalms contained in the Pſalter were productions written under the influences of the Holy Ghoſt.

One thing however creates a difficulty with ſome perſons of piety; that in the Pſalms we ſometimes find imprecations againſt the wicked, and the enemies of the prophet. But the fathers and interpreters commonly explain theſe paſſages, as predictions of their calamities; as if it were ſaid, that they ſhould certainly periſh, if they continued in their diſorderly courſes; or, let them periſh if they will not be converted. St. Chryſoſtom, on Pſal. cxxxvi. 11. ſays, that in theſe paſſages the Pſalmiſt does not ſo much deliver his own ſentiments, as thoſe of others. St. Athanaſius, argumento on Pſal. lxxii. maintains, that he makes theſe curſes and imprecations, not againſt his viſible enemies, but againſt his inviſible enemies.

Nothing can be a greater argument of the obſcurity of the book of Pſalms, than the great number of commentaries intended to explain them. Bocchius and Draudius have reckoned up above five hundred. Father Le Long, Bibliotheca Sacra, tom. 2. has enumerated ſix hundred and thirty, without reckoning thoſe on Scripture in general, or thoſe on a part of the Pſalms only; ſo that if we would comprehend all, it may be affirmed, that above a thouſand writers have undertaken to illuſtrate the Pſalms.

The difficulty of ſucceeding in the explication of theſe divine Canticles proceeds from ſeveral ſources. (1) the obſcurity of the Hebrew text.

(2) the nature of the ſtyle, which is very ſublime, and at the ſame time very different from our manner. (3) the abſtruſeneſs of the matter. The Hebrew of the Pſalms is more obſcure than that of other books of Scripture, as in general the ſtyle of poetry is more difficult than that of proſe. Beſides, the copyers having underſtood it leſs, and having oftener tranſcribed this book, have occaſioned many faults herein.

Having admitted the authority of the book of Pſalms, and acknowledged their authors to have been divinely inſpired; all are not agreed whether we owe them to one author or to many, or who he was (or they were) who compoſed them. Some aſſert they all belong to David; which others deny. St. Chryſoſtom, in Pſal. l. St. Ambroſe, præfat. in Pſal. i. St. Auſtin, lib. 17. cap. 14. de Civit. Theodoret, præf. in Pſal. Caſſiodorus, prolog. in Pſal. Euthymius, præf. in Pſal. Philaſtrius, hæreſ. 79. and many of the moderns, maintain, that David was the author of them all. St. Hilary, prolog. in Pſal. the author of the Synopſis aſcribed to Athanaſius, and ſeveral others, pretend the contrary. The reaſons of each opinion are to be diſcuſſed.

Thoſe who think David to have written the whole Pſalter, rely upon theſe reaſons.

1. In Scripture this holy king is deſcribed by his character of Pſalmiſt of Iſrael. 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, 2. The ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael ſaid, The Spirit of the Lord ſpake by me, &c.
2. In all the ceremonies wherein mention is made of ſingers, or of Pſalms, generally the Pſalms of David are intended. Thus at the dedication of the temple of Solomon, the Levites rehearſed the Canticles that David had compoſed. 1 Chron. xxiii. 5. When Hezekiah was about to reſtore the worſhip of the Lord in the temple, he commanded the Levites to praiſe the Lord with the words of David and of Aſaph the Seer. 2 Chron. xxix. 30. Aſaph was principal muſician in David's time, to whom this prince ſent his Canticles, to be ſet to muſick, and to be ſung by the choir over which he preſided. At the dedication of the ſecond temple, after the return from the captivity, they ſung the praiſes of the Lord in the Canticles that David had compoſed. Ezra iii. 10. Nehemiah placed the Pſalms of David in the library he founded at Jeruſalem. Nehem. xii. 35, 39. 2 Macc. ii. 13. Jeſus the ſon of Sirach commends the zeal of David, for having compoſed hymns to be ſung before the Lord. Eccluſ. xlvii. 10. In the New Teſtament our Saviour and his apoſtles always quote the Pſalms by the name of David's; and uſe them as ſuch; the Jews never contradicted them in this, though in every thing elſe they were ready enough to oppoſe them, and very glad to find objections. Nor do they only quote under his name ſuch as bear the title of David, but they cite others alſo under his name, which have no particular title; as the ſecond Pſalm quoted by St. Peter, Acts iv. 25.
3. The ancient, uniform, and conſtant uſe of the church, which gives to the Pſalter the name of the Pſalms of David, is another proof of the perſuaſion propagated from the very beginning, that this holy king and prophet was the author of theſe divine Canticles. Uſus Eccleſiæ catholicæ ſpiritus ſancti inſpiratione, generaliter & immobiliter tenet, ut quicumque eorum Pſalmorum cantandus fuerit, Lector aliud prædicare non audeat, niſi Pſalmos David, ſays Caſſiodorus. Philaſtrius has carried this matter ſo far, that he places thoſe among Hereticks, who denied that David was the author of all the Pſalms. Perez in his commentary on the Pſalms aſſerts, that Joſephus the hiſtorian, Jonathan the paraphraſt, and all the ancient Jews were perſuaded, that David compoſed the whole Pſalter; but that the Rabbins relinquiſhed this opinion, when they found themſelves preſſed hard by Origen, by paſſages quoted from this very book. But what could the Rabbins gain by denying David to have been the author of the Pſalms, ſince they acknowledged them all to have been inſpired, and to have been the work of prophets? In what remains of Origen, we cannot diſtinctly ſee his opinion on this queſtion; but Genebrard aſſures us, that the Talmudiſts and Rabbins commonly teach, that all the Pſalms are not to be aſcribed to David.

The contrary opinion has been ſupported with good arguments, and the number of thoſe who contend, that David has had partners in this honour, is not inferior to thoſe of the former opinion. St. Hilary ſays expreſly, that the Pſalms have for their authors the perſons whoſe names they bear in their titles. Abſurdam eſt Pſalmos David dicere vel nominare, cum ibi Auctores eorum ipſis inſcriptionum titulis commendantur. Hilar. Præfat. in Pſalmos, & Comment. Pſal. cxxxi. St. Jerome in his letter to Sophronius, which is a preface to the Pſalter, ſays the ſame thing; and in another place he looks on it as an error to affirm, that all the Pſalms are of David. We read in a note on the title of the firſt Pſalm, in the commentary of St. Auſtin on the Pſalter, that all the Pſalms are not David's. But the learned think, this annotation does not belong to him, and that his true ſentiments are to be found in The city of God, (lib. 17. cap. 14.) where where he evidently declares himſelf on the ſide of David, ſaying; Mihi credibilius videntur exiſtimare, qui omnes illos centum & quinquaginta Pſalmos ejus operi tribuunt.

The Greek fathers are not leſs inclined to the opinion, that ſeveral authors were concerned in compoſing the Pſalms, than the Latin fathers. St. Athanaſius diſapproves the contrary opinion. He reckons up but ſeventy-two Pſalms that belong to David, and thinks that thoſe without titles are to be aſcribed to the ſame author as the Pſalm aforegoing. In his Synopſis, if it be his work, he ſays there are Pſalms of Jeduthum, of Aſaph, of the ſons of Korah, of Haggai, of Zechariah, and of Heman: That ſome belong to all theſe authors together, as thoſe that have in the title Hallelujah: that the name of the Pſalms of David was given to the Pſalter, becauſe he was the firſt author of this kind of works, he regulated the order, the ſeaſons, and the functions of other writers, whoſe names are at the head of ſome of the Pſalms. Euſebius of Cæſarea aſcribes to David only ſeventy-two of the Pſalms. He thinks the others belong to thoſe whoſe names they bear. Euſeb. Præfat. in Pſalmos, p. 7, 8. & in Inſcript. Pſal. p. 2. & in Pſal. xli. lx. lxii. The ſons of Korah compoſed eleven, Aſaph twelve, Solomon two, Moſes one, Ethan the Ezrahite one. He deſcribes David as in the midſt of a band of inſpired muſicians, ſinging alternately as the Holy Ghoſt inſpired them, while all the reſt, and even David himſelf, continued in ſilence, contenting themſelves to anſwer in the chorus, Hallelujah.

To theſe authorities may be added an infinite number of modern authors, as the Rabbins, and many Chriſtian commentators of all communions, the greater part of which acknowledge, that in the Pſalter are many Canticles written ſince David's time, and which carry in themſelves marks of their later origin; for example, when they ſpeak of the captivity of Babylon, which happened long after David. True it is, that the titles of the Pſalms are ancient; but many of them have other names beſide that of David. We may conclude from hence, at leaſt, that at that time they were thought not to belong to David. And this argument will have more weight with them who contend, that the very titles of the Pſalms are inſpired.

The TITLES of the Pſalms, are a matter about which interpreters have much exerciſed their ſagacity, and in which we have very little light, or certainty. Some have a profound reſpect for theſe titles, and look on them as making a part of theſe divine Canticles. Others think they were added afterwards, and are of ſmall conſideration. Some imagine theſe titles to be, as it were, a key to the Pſalm, and that whoever could underſtand them well, might eaſily penetrate the ſenſe of the author. Others believe them of little importance for underſtanding the text, as having been added in after-times, and often at random. It is ſaid again by others, that even allowing theſe inſcriptions might have been uſeful for the right underſtanding of the Pſalms, yet we can derive but little uſe from them, the greater part being now ſo obſcure, that the moſt learned interpreters dare not flatter themſelves that they thoroughly underſtand them. Parum eſt damni in hujus vocis (haggittith) ignoratione, cum illa, ut & aliæ ſimiles, quæ paſſim occurrunt in titulis Pſalmorum, ad argumentum & materiam carminis, nihil prorſus pertineant, ſays De Muis, in Pſalm viii. 1. one of the moſt learned commentators on the Pſalms.

The fathers are generally agreed as to the obſcurity of theſe titles, but they have a far different opinion of their uſefulneſs. Origen delivers a notion that he had received from a Jew, about the obſcurity of the Scriptures in general, which is very appoſite to the book of Pſalms. Scripture, ſaid he, is like a vaſt and magnificent building, wherein are many apartments and chambers, every one of which has its proper key: But the key that is found at every door is not that which belongs to it. Often it is miſplaced, and the buſineſs is to find it, and to diſtinguiſh it from many others. St. Auſtin ſays, in Pſal. 139. the title declares the ſubject of the Pſalm. The title of the Pſalm and the Pſalm itſelf, are two things that ought not to be ſeparated; ſays St. Hilary, they mutually ſupport and aſſiſt each other. In Pſal. cxix. Prolog. The title is the key of the Pſalm, ſays the author of the commentary on the Pſalms, printed under the name of St. Jerom. As one cannot enter into the houſe without the key, ſo the Canticle cannot be underſtood except the title be explained.

St. Auſtin in Pſal. lxiv. goes ſtill farther, for he looks on theſe titles as inſpired. On Pſalm lxiv. whoſe title is A Song of Jeremiah and of Ezekiel, &c. he ſays, we are here to acknowledge the voice of holy inſpiration. And ſpeaking of the title of the fifty-firſt Pſalm, which is, A Pſalm of David, when Nathan the prophet came unto him, after he had gone in unto Bath-ſheba, he ſays, This is not to be found in the body of the Pſalm, but is read at length in the books of the Kings: But both of theſe are divine Scripture. Theodoret is ſtill more expreſs, for he ſays that theſe titles were added by Eſdras, under the inſpiration of the the Holy Ghoſt; and that they were read and preſerved by the Seventy, who themſelves had received inſpiration, and who would not be forward to mingle the notions of men with the words of the Holy Ghoſt. The Jews in their ſynagogues chant the titles of the Pſalms, as well as the reſt of Scripture, and the Rabbins expound them in their commentaries. The LXX. and St. Jerome have preſerved them in their tranſlations, and in the ſacred texts. The greater part both of ancients and moderns have conſidered them as a key to the Pſalms. Without them how ſhould we diſtinguiſh the authors of each Pſalm? Boſuet ſays poſitively, that they were placed at the head of the Pſalms by the inſpiration of the Holy Ghoſt, to denote the author and ſubject of each of theſe divine Canticles; and that we ought not to ſeparate the inſcriptions of the Pſalms from the body of the Scriptures, ſince they are read in a continued order, and without diſtinction, not only in the Hebrew text, but in all the verſions. For the ſame opinion, Vide Du Pin's Preface to the Pſalms.

But I think it is carrying the matter too far, to maintain that all the titles of the Pſalms are canonical and inſpired. Many catholic divines have poſitively aſſerted, that the greater part are of no uſe in explaining the Pſalm. The fathers, and among others, St. Auſtin, Hilary, Theodoret, Caſſiodorus, have acknowledged, that many of theſe titles have no relation to the body of the Pſalm, and that they contribute nothing to the ſenſe. The catholic church has never made any injunction that they ſhould be ſung in her office, nor has ever determined them to be canonical. The Septuagint, and other late Greek tranſlators, have added titles to ſome of the Pſalms which have none in the Hebrew. If the titles of the Pſalms had been eſteemed canonical, would it have been permitted to meddle with them, to alter them, to ſuppreſs them, or add to them? Which of the commentators, Jew, catholic, or proteſtant, thinks it incumbent on him to follow the title of the Pſalm in his commentary? And yet both Jews and Chriſtians receive the Pſalms as holy writ.

Therefore, in this queſtion we ſhould obſerve a due medium. 1. To treat the titles of the Pſalms with much reſpect, becauſe, doubtleſs, a great number of them are authentic. 2. To acknowledge ſuch as are derived from the firſt authors, from the ancient prophets, or, from Eſdras, to be canonical. 3. Thoſe added, either before or after Eſdras, by Jews not inſpired, or by the Greeks; alſo, thoſe that are apparently againſt hiſtory, or contrary to the ſpirit of the Pſalm, deſerve no particular conſideration. 4. The fathers themſelves, who ſeem to have thought them canonical and inſpired, muſt be underſtood to ſpeak of thoſe in the original text, written by the hand of Eſdras, or of the ancient prophets; for as to the reſt, they make no difficulty to give them up; as appears in Theodoret on ſeveral occaſions.

According to the titles of the Pſalms, in our Bibles, ſeventy-two bear the name of David; fifty are without the name of their author; but the rabbins hold, that they are to be referred to that author, whoſe name is immediately before: And this tradition of the Jews is related and received by Origen, by St. Jerom, by Euſebius, by Hilary, and Athanaſius.

Pſalms inſcribed to the ſons of Korah, are xlii, xliii, xliv, xlv, xlvi, xlvii, xlviii, xlix; alſo lxxxiv, lxxxv, lxxxvi, lxxxvii, lxxxviii.

Inſcribed to Solomon, the lxxii, and cxxvii.

Imputed to Ethan, the lxxxix.

To Jeduthun, the lxxvii.

To Moſes, the xc.

To Aſaph, the l, lxxiii, lxxiv, lxxv, lxxvi, lxxvii, lxxviii, lxxix, lxxx, lxxxi, lxxxii, lxxxiii.

Aſcribed to Adam, the xci.

To Melchiſedech, the cix.

To Jeremiah and Ezekiel, the lxiv.

To Jeremiah, the cxxxvi. Which is alſo aſcribed to David.

To Haggai and Zechariah, the cxi, and the cxlv.

Beſides the hundred and fifty Pſalms received as canonical, there is one which is not in the canon, neither in the Hebrew, the Chaldee, nor the Vulgate; but is read in the Syriac, in moſt of the Greek copies, in the Arabic, in the Anglo-Saxon verſion, in the books of prayers of the Greeks. St. Athanaſius, Euthymius, Vigilius of Thapſus, the author that interpolated the epiſtles of St. Ignatius, make mention of it, and quote it. Athanaſ. ſerm. ad Marcel. tom. 1. in Sinopſi, tom. 2. Euthym. in Pſalm. Vigil. Thapſ. lib. 1. Ep. Ignat. ad Mariam. Caſtobel. cap. 4. St. Chryſoſtom alludes to it, in his ſeventeenth homily to the people of Antioch. Its title is, A Pſalm of Thankſgiving of David, when he had overcome Goliah. It begins thus; I was the leaſt of my brethren, and the youngeſt of the houſe of my father, and I fed my father's ſheep, &c.

Pſalms of Solomon; or, The Pſalter of Solomon. See SOLOMON.

Pſalms of Degrees. This name is given to fifteen Pſalms, from the cxx. to the cxxxiv. incluſive. The Heb. ſays, A ſong of aſcents: The Chaldee, A ſong that was ſung upon the ſteps of the abyſs. This explication is taken from the tradition of the Hebrews, which relates, That when they were laying the foundations of the temple, at the return from the Babyloniſh captivity, there came out of the earth a prodigious quantity of water, that roſe to the height of fifteen cubits; and would have drowned the whole world, if Achitophel, the famous Achitophel who hanged himſelf in the time of David, about five hundred years before, had not ſtopt its progreſs, by writing the ineffable name of Jehovah on the fifteen ſteps of the temple!! To the ſame event they refer Pſalm cxxx. which is one of the Pſalms of Degrees. Junius and Tremellius tranſlate, A Song of Excellencies; or, An excellent Song: Which tranſlation is not diſapproved by De Muis, and other ſkilful interpreters. But the common tranſlation, Pſalms of Degrees, has more generally obtained.

But whence have they this denomination? Interpreters think, it was becauſe they were ſung on the fifteen ſteps of the temple. They are not agreed where theſe ſteps were. Some think they were without this holy place; others, at its entry. Others think them to be the fifteen ſteps mentioned by Joſephus, de Bello, lib. 1. cap. 14. in Græco, p. 197. to aſcend from the incloſure of the women in the great court. Laſtly; Others think they were the ſteps which aſcended from the court of the prieſts, to the porch before the holy place. But it cannot be proved, from Joſephus, or from Scripture, that the ſteps of the porch, or of the gates of the temple, or thoſe without the temple, were juſt fifteen in number. We ſee by Ezekiel xl. 22, 26, 31, 37, 49. that one had eight, and the other had ſeven ſteps. Beſides, we do not find, by any paſſage of Scripture, that the Levites ſung upon the ſteps of the temple; their place was around the altar of burnt-offerings, in the court of the prieſts.

Some have thought, that theſe were called Pſalms of Degrees, becauſe they were ſung in a gallery, which was in the court of Iſrael, where, ſometimes, the Levites read the law. Nehem. ix. 4. But we do not find, by any paſſage of Scripture, that ſingers were placed in this gallery, or that they ſang theſe Pſalms in particular. The author of the commentary on the Pſalms, printed under the name of St. Jerom, ſays, in Pſal. cxx. that in the temple there were ſeveral degrees of dignity among the prieſts and the Levites. This is true: But it is not ſaid, that theſe degrees were fifteen. There were aſſuredly four and twenty ſacerdotal families, and as many of the Levites. But what reference has this to the fifteen Pſalms of Degrees? Some rabbins, and a good number of commentators, tranſlate the Hebrew by Pſalms of Elevation; becauſe (they ſay) they were ſung with an exalted voice, or becauſe at every Pſalm the voice was raiſed.

I ſhall now produce my own hypotheſis: I tranſlate, A Song of Aſcent, i. e. of Iſrael from the captivity of Babylon. Scripture commonly applies the phraſe, to aſcend, to expreſs this return. Cyrus, in his proclamation, Ezra i. 3, 5. & ii. 2. & vii. 5, 6. ſays, Who is among you, of all his people? His God be with him, and let him go up to Jeruſalem. And a good number of perſons preſented themſelves to go up, ſays Ezra i. 11. & ii. 1. And Sheſh-bazzar brought up with them of the captivity, that were brought up from Babylon to Jeruſalem. Now theſe are the children of the province, that went up out of the captivity. Ezra vii. 6, 7, 9. This Ezra went up from Babylon. And there went up ſome of the children of Iſrael. For upon the firſt day of the firſt month was the beginning of the going up from Babylon. In Pſalm cxxii. which is one of the Pſalms of Degrees, it is ſaid, whither the tribes go up (to Jeruſalem.) Laſtly; Jeremiah, xxvii. 22. foretelling the return from the captivity, ſays, Then will I bring them up, and reſtore them to this place. Ezekiel xxxix. 2. expreſſes himſelf in the ſame manner.

Theſe expreſſions ſhew, that the Hebrews uſed the term to go up, when they ſpoke of their journeying from Babylon to Jeruſalem; Therefore, it is very natural to call thoſe Pſalms of Aſcent, which were compoſed on occaſion of their deliverance from the captivity of Babylon; whether to implore this deliverance from God, or to return thanks for it after it had taken place; and this is what is really obſerved in theſe Pſalms. They have all ſome relation to this great event. They mention it in ſeveral places; and the greater part of them cannot be otherwiſe explained.

Acroſtick Pſalms. Theſe in the Hebrew, begin each verſe, or half verſe, with a letter of the alphabet, ranged in alphabetical order. Theſe Pſalms are,

Pſalm xxv, xxxiv, xxxvii, cxi, cxii, cxix, cxlv.

PTOLEMAIS, Πτολεμαὶς, warlike; from πτόλεμος, war.

I. PTOLEMAIS, a city of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean ſea, having mount Carmel ſouth, being a conſiderable port. Its ancient Hebrew name is Accho. Judges i. 31. The river Belus or Beleus, falls into the Mediterranean near Ptolemais. See BELUS. I have not found who the the Ptolemy was, that gave name to this city. It was a Roman colony under the reign of Claudius, which there are ſeveral ancient medals that prove. The Chriſtians in the holy war, gave it the name of Akre, or of St. John of Acre. Reland. Palæſt. lib. 3. The Arabians call it Acca. This city was aſſigned by Joſhua to the tribe of Aſhur, who did not drive out the inhabitants. Judg. i. 31. Ummah, an unknown city mentioned Joſhua xix. 30. might be Accho, which the tranſcribers have changed to Ummah.

The Cruſadoes gave the name of St. John of Acre to this city, becauſe of a magnificent church, which was built there, dedicated to St. John. This city was of a triangular form, being waſhed by the ſea on the weſt and ſouth, ſurrounded by two ſtrong walls towards the land, at about fifty paces from each other, and fortified by towers at equal diſtances. On the firſt wall toward the eaſt was a tower larger and ſtronger than the reſt, called the King's Tower; at the middle angle was ſuch another tower, which was always called the curſed Tower. And it proved its right to this name; for by this the Saracens entered the city, and took it, as was obſerved at that time. This was the laſt city the Chriſtians poſſeſſed in Syria. The ſultan of Egypt, Elpy, ſurnamed Melle-meſſor, having beſieged it in 1291, with 60,000 horſe, and 100,000 foot, the knights of St. John of Jeruſalem defended it bravely; but at laſt they were forced to give ground; it was taken and almoſt deſtroyed.

II. PTOLEMAIS, or Rozetta, a city of Egypt ſixty miles eaſt of Alexandria. The Jews of Egypt being delivered from the perſecution of Philopator, aſſembled here, and built a Proſeucha, 3 Macc. vii.

PTOLEMY, Πτολεμαῖος, warrior, warlike.

PTOLEMY. All the kings of Egypt, from Ptolemy ſon of Lagus, to the conqueſt of Egypt by the Romans, bore the name of Ptolemy. That is, from A. M. 3631 to 3974, or from the death of Alexander to the death of Cleopatra ſpouſe of Mark Anthony. Vide EGYPT. Thoſe mentioned in Scripture, are,

I. PTOLEMY, ſon of Lagus, ſurnamed Soter, or Saviour. After the death of Alexander the Great, he brought the body of this prince into Egypt, to be interred at Alexandria. In the diſtribution of Alexander's conqueſts among his generals, Egypt fell to Ptolemy. He at firſt contented himſelf with the title of governor, nor took the title of king, till after the death of all of Alexander's race. Juſt. lib. 15. cap. 2. Yet he managed the minds of the people of Egypt, and of the neighbouring princes, with a view of laying a ſolid foundation for his future power. Some years after he was ſettled in Egypt, he thought of reducing Phenicia and Cœle-ſyria. At firſt he endeavoured to corrupt Laomedon, who governed thoſe provinces under Antipater and Perdiccas. But not ſucceeding, he ſent Nicanor one of his generals, into this province, who took Laomedon, and in a little time made himſelf maſter of Cœle-ſyria and Phenicia.

Ptolemy himſelf marching into Judea, entered Jeruſalem, while the Jews were under no other concern but to obſerve the ſabbath. Appian, in Syriac. ſays, That having brought the city into ſubjection, he demoliſhed its walls; and Joſephus from Ariſteas adds, Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 2. that this prince carried 100,000 Jews into Egypt, of which he incorporated about thirty thouſand, into his armies and garriſons, as knowing that the Jews were religious obſervers of their fidelity. He gave the reſt to his ſoldiers, as ſlaves. From hence proceeded that great number of Jews, afterwards found in Egypt, Libya, and the Cyreniaca.

Two years before his death, at the beginning of the thirty-ninth year of his reign, Ptolemy, Lagus, aſſociated with him in the kingdom his ſon Ptolemy Philadelphus, whom he had by Berenice. Ptolemy ſon of Lagus, died A. M. 3721, ante A. D. 283.

II. PTOLEMY PHILADELPHUS, ſon of Ptolemy Soter, was aſſociated in the kingdom from A. M. 3719. Juſtin even affirms, lib. 16. cap. 2. that his father Ptolemy intirely quitted the royal dignity to his ſon, and eſteemed it a ſufficient honour to be one of his life-guards. But other hiſtorians think, he continued to reign with Philadelphus to the year 3721, which was the year of his death, and the firſt of the ſole reign of Philadelphus. This prince was ſurnamed Philadelphus, i. e. lover of his brethren, probably by way of irony; for on ſeveral pretences, he cauſed two of his brothers to be put to death. The younger was called Argeus, and was ſon of Berenice as well as himſelf; the other was ſon of Eurydice. Pauſan. in Atticis, p. 6. He was one of the moſt powerful princes that ever reigned in Egypt. Vid. Hieron. in Dan. xi. But nothing gave a greater luſtre to his reign than his love for learning, the library founded at Alexandria, and the verſion of the Septuagint, which it is ſaid he procured to be made. Vide SEVENTY INTERPRETERS.

The ancients are unanimous in their teſtimonies, concerning the affection of Ptolemy for the ſciences, and his care to collect books, and to erect a copious library; but only the falſe Ariſteus, and and ſuch as have followed him, have affirmed that Demetrius Phalareus was his librarian. Vitruvius mentions Ariſtophanes, and Suidas ſpeaks of Zenodotus, who were library-keepers to Philadelphus, at the Alexandrian library. Diogen. Laert. in Demet. lib. 5. ſeg. 78, 79. Cicero pro Rab. &c. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 2. allows Philadelphus thirty-nine years of reign, Clemens Alexandrinus thirty-ſeven, and Ptolemy, Porphyrius, and Euſebius thirty-eight. Uſher thinks he reigned in all thirty-eight years, and about eight months. He fixes his death A. M. 3758, ante A. D. 246. He had for ſucceſſor his ſon Ptolemy ſurnamed Euergetes, or the benefactor, ſon of Arſinoe, who was daughter of Lyſimachus. Philadelphus had alſo a daughter called Berenice, whom he married to Antiochus Theus, king of Syria.

III. PTOLEMY EUERGETES, or the benefactor, ſon of Ptolemy Philadelphus, aſcended the throne A. M. 3758. His father Ptolemy Philadelphus, having a long war with Antiochus Theus, at laſt made peace with him, and gave him his daughter Berenice in marriage, while his wife Laodice was alive, by whom he had had two children. This marriage was celebrated with extraordinary magnificence, and Philadelphus gave his daughter ſo much gold and ſilver to her portion, that ſhe was thence called Phernophorus, or the dowry-bringer. See Jerom on Daniel xi. But this alliance did not prove happy. Antiochus was poiſoned by his wife Laodice, who likewiſe ordered that Berenice and her young ſon by Antiochus, ſhould be killed. Appian. Syriac. p. 130. Hieronym. in Dan. xi. In the mean time Philadelphus died, and Euergetes being informed of the danger of his ſiſter, who had taken refuge in the aſylum of Daphne, haſtened into Syria with an army to relieve her: but was too late, for Berenice and her ſon were aſſaſſinated. But ſuch a number of Syrian cities ſubmitted to Euergetes, that he found himſelf the moſt powerful king of the eaſt. Joſephus ſays, that when this prince came to Jeruſalem, he offered ſacrifices to the Lord, as a thankſgiving for his many ſucceſſes. See Dan. x. 5, 6, &c.

Euergetes did not leſs diſtinguiſh himſelf by his love of books and learned men, than his father had done. Galen Comment. 2. in Hipp. lib. 3. Epid. aſſures us, that this prince cauſed exact copies to be taken of all books which deſerved conſideration, that came to his knowledge. No ſooner did a ſhip arrive at Alexandria, but he cauſed the books therein to be brought to him, of which he took copies and returned them to the owners, placing the originals in his library. Having borrowed of the Athenians the works of Euripides, Sophocles, and Eſchylus, with a promiſe of returning them, when copies ſhould be taken of them, and for ſecurity of this, having given them a pledge of fifteen talents, (£.2,500 ſterling), he kept the originals, and ſent them back the copies very neatly and faithfully tranſcribed, with permiſſion alſo of keeping the fifteen talents, which he had pledged.

Under the reign of Euergetes, Onias II. was high-prieſt of the Jews, a man of no integrity, and who thought of nothing but heaping riches together. Vide ONIAS II.

Ptolemy Euergetes died after he had reigned twenty-five years. Tacitus ſays, Annal. lib. 6. that under his reign was ſeen in Egypt, the bird called Phœnix, which appeared in the country, accompanied by many other birds, which flocked to it, becauſe of the novelty of the ſight. Polybius lib. 2. p. 155. ſays, that Euergetes died by diſeaſe; but Juſtin, lib. 29. cap. 1. affirms he was put to death by his ſon and ſucceſſor Ptolemy Philopator.

IV. PTOLEMY PHILOPATOR, ſon of Ptolemy Euergetes, began to reign A. M. 3783, ante A. D. 221. He received the name of Philopator, or lover of his father, by way of irony, or antiphraſis, becauſe he had put his father to death, ſays Juſtin, lib. 29. cap. 1. He had alſo the name of Tryphon, or the glutton; alſo of Gallus, becauſe he carried the enſigns and the crown of ivy, like the Galli, or prieſts, of the great goddeſs; and becauſe he affected to appear crowned with ivy in the ceremonies of Bacchus. Vid. Uſſer. ad Ann. M. 3783. This prince ſpent his time in luxury, drunkenneſs, and debauchery, as if he had been a king for the ſole end of following his pleaſures.

Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, made war againſt him, and took ſeveral places in Cœle-ſyria and Paleſtine, before he would attempt to oppoſe him, leaving this matter to his generals. But the year following, Antiochus having advanced to Raphia, Ptolemy met him with a powerful army, and gave him battle. At firſt the advantage was on the ſide of Antiochus, who, beſide being a great commander, had alſo an army of excellent ſoldiers. But Arſinoe, the ſiſter and wife of king Philopator, having her hair diſhevelled, and her eyes full of tears, paſſed through the ranks of his ſoldiers, and ſo raiſed their courage and reſolution, that at laſt they obtained an intire victory. Antiochus therefore retiring with the remains of his army, all the cities of Syria and Paleſtine, that had been obliged to ſubmit to him, returned of themſelves to the obedience of of Philopator, omitting nothing that might ſhew their zeal and fidelity to his government. 3 Macc. cap. 1. Polyb. lib. 5.

The chief of the Jews alſo having ſent their deputies to him, to congratulate him, and offer him preſents, they found him inclined to come in perſon to Jeruſalem. When he came thither, he entered into the temple, admiring its beauty, magnificence, and œconomy. He deſired alſo to enter into the ſanctuary, into which no one was to enter but the high-prieſt alone, and he only once in a year. This attempt of the king, filled the whole temple with tears and lamentations, the noiſe of which ſpread into the city, and occaſioned the utmoſt conſternation. The high-prieſt Simon betaking himſelf to prayer, between the temple and the altar of burnt-ſacrifices, when he had finiſhed his prayer, Philopator found himſelf ſtruck with ſo great a terror, that he began to tremble, and could hardly ſtand on his legs; and his attendants were forced to carry him out of the temple half dead. 3 Macc. i. 11. This he afterwards revenged on the Jews in Egypt. Vide Third Book of MACCABEES.

Philopator died after he had reigned ſeventeen years, and had for his ſucceſſor Ptolemy Epiphanes. Ptolem. Canon. Clem. Alex. Strom. lib. 1. Euſeb. Porphy. A. M. 3800, ante A. D. 204.

V. PTOLEMY EPIPHANES, ſucceeded his father Ptolemy Philopator, being four years old, according to Jerom in Dan. xi. or five according to Juſtin, lib. 30. cap. 1. When Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, and Philip king of Macedon, ſaw the kingdom of Egypt in the hands of a child, they concerted ſecret meaſures to divide his territories. Antiochus attacked Cœle-ſyria and Judea, and ſoon became maſter of them. But after ſome time Ptolemy Epiphanes ſent his general Scopus thither with a good army, who retook the cities and provinces Antiochus had conquered. Scarce a year had paſſed, but Antiochus ſubdued them again. Then the Jews ſurrendered to Antiochus, and adhered firmly to his intereſts afterwards. For this reaſon on ſeveral occaſions Antiochus gave them marks of his confidence and friendſhip, by thoſe letters of which copies are preſerved in Joſephus. Diod. Sicul. lib. 15. Tit. Liv. lib. 31. Polyb. lib. 3, 16. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 12. cap. 3.

A. M. 3812, Antiochus gave his daughter Cleopatra in marriage to Ptolemy Epiphanes king of Egypt, in hopes by that means of being himſelf maſter of the dominions of this young prince. But the governors of young Epiphanes penetrating his deſign, and Cleopatra eſpouſing her huſband's intereſts rather than her father's, defeated his intentions. At laſt, Epiphanes undertaking a war againſt Seleucus king of Syria, and one of his generals having aſked him, what aſſiſtance he depended on, in accompliſhing his deſigns? Epiphanes anſwered, on no other aſſiſtance than the purſes of his friends. When this anſwer was ſpread among the people, the generals of Epiphanes began to be in pain for their wealth, thinking they were to be plundered to ſupport this war. Wherefore they prevented him by poiſon, after he had reigned twenty four years, according to Euſebius, Clemens Alexandrinus, Porphyry, and St. Jerome, in Dan. xi. He left two ſons; Ptolemy Philometor who ſucceeded him, and Ptolemy Phyſcon his younger ſon.

VI. PTOLEMY PHILOMETOR, ſon of Ptolemy Epiphanes and Cleopatra, reigned A. M. thirty-five years; from A. M. 3824 to 3859, ante A. D. 145. Judea being then not in ſubjection to the kings of Egypt, the general affairs of the Jews had but little relation to thoſe of this prince. Under the government of Philometor the temple Onion was built in Egypt, ſee ONION and ONIAS IV.

Joſephus lib. 2. cont. App. informs us, that Ptolemy Philometor and his queen Cleopatra had ſuch confidence in the Jews of Egypt, that Doſitheus and Onias, both Jews, were the generals of their armies; and that when the city of Alexandria roſe in arms, in favour of Ptolemy Phyſcon againſt Cleopatra, the Jews ſtood by her, and kept the city to its duty. But this did not happen until after the death of Philometor, as we ſhall ſee in the following article. Under the reign of Philometor aroſe in Egypt the peripatetick philoſopher Ariſtobulus, a Jew by nation, who is mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus, Strom. lib. 1. and Euſebius, Præp. lib. 3. cap. 7. lib. 8. cap. 3. who have preſerved ſome fragments of him.

About A. M. 3854, ante A. D. 150, aroſe at Alexandria, a great diſpute between the Jews and Samaritans. The Jews maintained, that the temple of Jeruſalem was the only place where God had appointed to be worſhipped, according to the law of Moſes; the Samaritans on the contrary pretended it was the temple on mount Gerizim. This controverſy was pleaded with great earneſtneſs before king Philometor and his counſellors; and each party bound themſelves by oath, to produce proofs out of their own law, and beſought the king to put to death the advocates of either party, who ſhould act contrary to this oath. The king and his council having heard both ſides, decided in favour of the Jews, and and condemned to death Sabas and Theodoſius, the advocates of the Samaritans. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 6.

Jonathan Maccabeus, who flouriſhed at this time, eſpouſed the party of Alexander Balas king of Syria, ſon-in-law to Philometor, againſt Demetrius, 1 Macc. x. 67, 69. A. M. 3858, Philometor went into Syria, on pretence of aſſiſting his ſon-in-law Alexander Balas againſt Demetrius, but really to make himſelf maſter of his dominions, and paſſed through Paleſtine. The people of Azoth ſhewed him their city and temple deſtroyed, with heaps of bones of the dead, piled up by the way-ſide, they enlarged alſo on the calamities Jonathan had made them ſuffer. But the king did not ſeem to notice it, and Jonathan joining him at Joppa, with a magnificent attendance, the king gave him a very favourable reception. Jonathan accompanied him as far as the river Eleutherus, after which he returned to Jeruſalem.

Philometor being received as a friend into all the cities of the dominions of Balas, he made his entry into Antioch, where being acknowledged as king, he placed two diadems upon his head. 1 Macc. xi. 13. Juſt. lib. 35. cap. 2. He died the year following in the hands of his phyſicians, who thought to have effected upon him the operation of the trepan, in order to cure him of a mortal wound he had received in his head, in a battle againſt Alexander Balas king of Syria.

VII. PTOLEMY PHYSCON, or Fat-guts, otherwiſe Euergetes, or the Benefactor, ſon of Ptolemy Epiphanes, and brother to Ptolemy Philopator, reigned in the whole fifty-three years, partly with his brother and partly alone, from A. M. 3859. He had great conteſts with his brother, which laſted until the death of Philometor. Cleopatra wife of that prince, was deſirous to preſerve the crown for her ſon, againſt Phyſcon, who attempted to ſeize it. Onias the Jew, founder of the temple Onion, defended the queen and the young prince. Joſeph. cont. App. lib. 2. Phyſcon at Alexandria prepared to march againſt him, and reſolved to expoſe all the Jews of Alexandria to be trod to pieces under the feet of the elephants. But God delivered the Jews. Joſephus ſays, that the elephants having been made drunk on purpoſe, turned their fury againſt their managers. Joſephus adds, that even to his time, the Jews of Alexandria yearly celebrated the day of this deliverance; but it is very probable that he has not diſtinguiſhed Phyſcon from Philopator. For we have under Philopator a hiſtory very like this. Vide MACCABEES, Book III.

Phyſcon being deſirous to terminate his differences with his ſiſter Cleopatra, the ſiſter and wife of his brother Philometor, propoſed marriage to her; which being concluded on, Phyſcon was received into Alexandria, and acknowledged king. Deſirous to ſecure the kingdom, he put the young prince, his nephew, to death, in the arms of his mother, the very day of their marriage. Juſtin. lib. 38. cap. 8. Diodor. Sicul. in Excerpt. Valeſ. This action rendered him extremely odious to the Egyptians, whom he farther provoked by all ſorts of cruelties. He divorced Cleopatra, took the daughter of this princeſs to wife after he had deflowered her, killed his own eldeſt ſon, leſt the people of Alexandria ſhould make him king in his place, put to death another of his ſons by Cleopatra, and to compleat his cruelties, he cut off his head, feet, and hands, and ſent them in a covered baſket to the queen, the mother of the young prince, as a preſent from him on her birth-day. See Juſtin. lib. 38. cap. 8. Diodor. Excerpt. Valeſ. Liv. lib. 59. Valer. Max. lib. 9. cap. 2. After all theſe inhumanities Phyſcon died in peace, after he had reigned twenty-nine years from the death of his brother. He left three ſons living. He bequeathed the government to Cleopatra his ſiſter and wife, with power to chooſe for king either of his three ſons. She firſt choſe Alexander, the youngeſt, hoping to find him the moſt obedient: But the Alexandrians obliged her to take the eldeſt, Ptolemy Lathurus, who reigned with her ten years.

VIII. PTOLEMY LATHURUS, ſon of Ptolemy Phyſcon and Cleopatra, began to reign A. M. 3888. He ſent about 6,000 men to Antiochus Cyzicenus, who aſſiſted the Samaritans, when they were beſieged by John Hyrcanus, prince and high-prieſt of the Jews. But Antiochus was obliged to retire, and the Egyptian troops were defeated or diſperſed; ſo that Hyrcanus became maſter of the city, after a year's ſiege. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 17.

Lathurus did not long enjoy the kingdom of Egypt. Cleopatra, his mother, weary of a partner in the government, animated the people of Alexandria againſt him, and compelled him to withdraw to Cyprus. While there, the inhabitants of Ptolemais deſired his aſſiſtance againſt Alexander Janneus, king of the Jews, who kept them, as it were, beſieged. Lathurus put to ſea with his army; but the people of Ptolemais altering their minds, ſent to thank him, and to prevent his coming. Yet Lathurus continued his courſe, and diſembarking his men at Sycaminum, near Ptolemais, Alexander Janneus drew off his troops, and and ſent ſecretly to Cleopatra, to deſire aſſiſtance againſt Lathurus. In the mean time, he pretended to accommodate matters with him, and offered him very advantageous propoſals.

But Lathurus perceiving that Alexander Janneus held ſecret correſpondence with his mother Cleopatra, broke with him, and did him all the miſchief he could. Entering Judea with part of his troops, while the reſt of his army lay before Ptolemais, Alexander Janneus marched againſt him with a powerful army, and gave him battle near Azoph on Jordan. The victory, for ſome time, was in ſuſpence; but at laſt Lathurus put to flight the Jewiſh army, and purſued it while his troops had ſtrength to follow and kill the fugitives. It is ſaid, 30,000 Jews fell; others ſay, 50,000.

Cleopatra, Lathurus's mother, alarmed with the progreſs of his arms in Paleſtine, ſent an army by land, and a fleet by ſea, to ſtop his career. She gave the command of her army to two Jews, Chelcias and Ananias, ſons of Onias, who founded the temple Onion in Egypt. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 18, 21. She ſent her ſon Alexander with her fleet into Phenicia, where ſeveral cities ſurrendered to him: but Ptolemais ſhut her gates againſt him. Chelcias, one of her generals, died in Cœle-ſyria. Lathurus haſted into Egypt, thinking to find it unprovided of troops; but he found more reſiſtance than he expected, and the queen his mother ſending forces againſt him, he was obliged to withdraw, and returned to Gaza, where he paſſed the winter. See CLEOPATRA IV. Ptolemy Lathurus died in A. M. 3923, ante A. D. 81, having reigned thirty-ſix years from the death of Philometer.

Other Ptolemies, kings of Egypt, having no relation to the hiſtory of the Bible, are omitted.

IX. PTOLEMY MACRON, ſon of Dorymenes, was made governor of the iſland of Cyprus by Ptolemy Philometer, king of Egypt. During the minority of this prince, he retained the whole revenues of the iſland. But as ſoon as the king came to age, he gave in his accounts, and ſent the whole ſum to him. Polyb. lib. xxvii. in Excerpt. Valeſ. Some time after, diſcontented with ſome proceedings of the king of Egypt, he withdrew his fidelity, and delivered Cyprus to Antiochus Epiphanes, king of Syria; who received him among his friends, and gave him the command of troops in Phenicia and Cœle-ſyria. We are told, 2 Mac. iv. 45, &c. that Menelaus, the uſurper of the high-prieſthood, being accuſed before Antiochus Epiphanes, A. M. 3834, and expecting to be caſt on this accuſation; he gave a bribe to Ptolemy Macron to ſtand his friend. This he did, while the king was at Tyre, and was the chief inſtrument that Menelaus, guilty as he was, was declared innocent, and his accuſers condemned to death.

After Judas Maccabeus had routed Apollonius, governor of Samaria, and Seron, governor of Seleſyria; Philip, then at Jeruſalem in behalf of king Antiochus Epiphanes, ſent to demand aſſiſtance from Ptolemy Macron. Macron ſent Nicanor and Gorgias, two experienced commanders. But Judas defeated them alſo. 1 Mac. iii. 38, &c. After the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, Ptolemy was no longer in favour. His enemies repreſented to the young Eupator, that a man who had once failed in fidelity to his prince, was never afterwards to be truſted. 2 Mac. x. 12, 13, 14. He had alſo made himſelf ſuſpected by the courtiers, becauſe, on ſeveral occaſions he had ſhewn his diſlike of their proceedings againſt the Jews. At laſt, being no longer able to bear theſe reproaches, he poiſoned himſelf. The Latin verſion of 2 Maccabees, x. 12. calls him Ptolemeus Macer; but his true name was Ptolemeus Macron. Macer in Latin ſignifies lean; but Macron in Greek ſignifies tall.

X. PTOLEMY, ſon of Abubi or Abobi, ſon-in-law of Simon Maccabeus, and governor of the caſtle of Doch or Dagon, and of the plain of Jericho. Being puffed up with pride, he pretended to the government of all Judea, and with this view formed a deſign againſt the life of Simon Maccabeus his father-in-law. 1 Macc. xvi. 11, 12, &c. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xxiii. cap. 14. 15. de bello, lib. i. cap. 2. p. 170. & 4 Macc. i. Simon was then viſiting the cities of Judea; and arriving at Jericho with his two ſons, Matthias and Judas, he went to lodge with his ſon-in-law, at the caſtle of Doch or Dagon. Ptolemy made a great entertainment for them, but in the midſt of ſupper, certain men provided for that purpoſe, entering the room, killed Simon and his two ſons, and ſome of their people. At the ſame time he ſent meſſengers to Gazara, to kill John Hyrcanus, the eldeſt ſon of Simon; and others of his people he ſent to Jeruſalem, to ſeize the city.

But John Hyrcanus was quickly advertiſed of this villany; he cauſed thoſe to be ſlain whom Ptolemy had ſent to kill him, and haſting away, came ſoon enough to Jeruſalem, to fruſtrate the deſigns of Ptolemy, againſt whom the gates were ſhut. This is related by Joſephus. The firſt book of the Maccabees does not inform us the event of this murder of Simon. But the book we quote under the name of the fourth of the Maccabees relates the hiſtory differently. Vide DOCUS.

PUAH and Shiphrah, midwives of Egypt, whom Pharaoh commanded, that when the Iſraelitiſh women were delivered, the female children ſhould be ſaved, and the males deſtroyed. Exod. i. 15, 16. Joſephus, Antiq. lib. 2. cap. 5. Carthuſ. Abul. Lyr. alii. think theſe midwives were Egyptians, but the Hebrews, St. Auſtin, and others, contend for their being Iſraelites. The rabbins pretend, that Puah was the ſame as Jocabed, the mother of Moſes and Aaron; and that Shiphrah was Miriam daughter of Jocabed, and ſiſter to Moſes and Aaron. But this is beyond all probability, though it is very likely they were Hebrews, ſince they ſhewed ſo much fear of God on this occaſion. Beſides, what likelihood is there that the Hebrews, who had ſo much averſion to the Egyptians, ſhould employ Egyptian midwives?

There were, doubtleſs, more than two midwives among the Iſraelites; but Puah and Shiphrah were the moſt eminent. Scripture ſays, Exod. i. 17, 18, 19. they did not obey the king's commands; but reſtrained by the fear of God, preſerved the male children. When Pharaoh expoſtulated with them, they anſwered, that the Hebrew women could bring forth of themſelves, without the aſſiſtance of a midwife. Literally, the Hebrew women are as wild beaſts; or, are delivered with the ſame eaſe as beaſts of the field. Others tranſlate, they are ſo ſtrong, as not to need a midwife. It is thought that they told a lye, in affirming this, for, though eaſtern women in general, are brought-to-bed with great facility; yet this could be hardly ſaid of all the Hebrew women. Remunerata eſt benevolentia, non fallacia; benignitas mentis, non iniquitas mentientis, ſays St. Auſtin. Cont. Mend. cap. xv.

Inſtead of God built them houſes; the Hebrew has only, HE built them houſes: which ſome underſtand, as if Pharaoh had built houſes on purpoſe to lodge theſe midwives, that the Hebrew women might come thither to be delivered, in preſence of officers appointed by the king. Others refer this to God, who rewarded the midwives, by a numerous poſterity. But the Hebrew ſhews, that this reſpects the Hebrews, whoſe houſes God built up, by a multitude of children. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

PUBASTHUS, פיבסת, βαβαστος, the mouth of contempt; from פה, a mouth, and בוס bus, to contemn, to tread under foot. A city. Ezek. xxx. 17.

PUBLICAN, in Greek, telones; an officer of the revenue, employed in collecting impoſitions. Among the Romans there were two ſorts of tax receivers: ſome were general receivers, who in each province had deputies, who collected the revenues of the empire, and accounted to the emperor. Theſe principals were men of great conſideration in the government; and Cicero ſays, pro Planc. that among theſe, were the flower of the Roman knights, the ornament of the city, and the ſtrength of the commonwealth. But the deputies, the under-farmers, the commiſſioners, the publicans of the lower order, were looked on as ſo many thieves and pickpockets. Theocritus being aſked, Which was the moſt cruel of all beaſts? anſwered, among the beaſts of the wilderneſs, the bear and the lion; among the beaſts of the city, the publican and the paraſite. Theocrit. apud Muſonium.

Among the Jews, the name and profeſſion of a publican was exceſſively odious. They could not, without the utmoſt reluctance, ſee publicans rigorouſly exacting tributes and impoſitions laid on them by the Romans: eſpecially the Galileans or Herodians, the diſciples of Judas the Gaulonite, ſubmitted to this with the greateſt impatience, and thought it even unlawful. Thoſe of their own nation who undertook this employ, they looked on as heathen; Let him be unto thee as an heathen man, and a publican. Matt. xviii. 17. It is even ſaid, they would not allow them to enter the temple, or ſynagogues; to partake of the public prayers, offices of judicature, or to give teſtimony in a court of juſtice. Vide Grot. ad Matt. xviii. Lightfoot, Hor. Heb. in Matt. Laſtly; we are aſſured, they would not receive their preſents at the temple, no more than the price of proſtitution, of blood, or any thing of the like nature.

There were many publicans in Judea, in the time of our Saviour. Zaccheus, probably, was one of the principal receivers, ſince he is called the chief among the publicans; Luke xix. 2. but St. Matthew was only an inferior publican. Luke v. 27. vii. 34. The Jews reproached our Saviour with being a friend of publicans and ſinners, and of eating with them. And our Saviour told the Jews, Matt. xxi. 31. that harlots and publicans ſhould be preferred before them in the kingdom of heaven. In the parable of the publican and Phariſee, who prayed prayed at the ſame time in the temple, we ſee with what humility his condition inſpired the publican. Luke xviii. 10. He keeps afar off, and, probably, dared not ſo much as enter the court of the people, &c. Zaccheus aſſures our Saviour, who had done him the honour to viſit his houſe, that he was ready to give half of his goods to the poor, and to return fourfold of whatever he had unjuſtly acquired. Luke xix. 8. The Roman laws required, that whenever any farmer was convicted of extortion, he ſhould be obliged to render four times the value of what he had extorted. L. Hoc Edicto in fine digeſt. de Publican.

Some have thought, that by the Jewiſh laws, it was forbid to pay any tribute, or to be a publican; from Deuteronomy xvii. 15. But it is certain, there were publicans, Iſraelites; ſuch were Zaccheus and St. Matthew; though their employment was very odious. The Herodians, who refuſed to pay tribute to ſtrangers, did not found their refuſal on this law; ſince the Hebrews otherwiſe explain this paſſage. The diſciples of Judas Gaulonites founded their refuſal to pay tribute, on their being the people of the Lord, and becauſe it was not permitted to a true Iſraelite to acknowledge any other ſovereign than God. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2.

PUBLIUS: chief or governor of Malta, when St. Paul was ſhipwrecked on this iſland, A. D. 60. Acts xxviii. 7, 8, 9. Publius received St. Paul and his company into his houſe very kindly, and treated them three days with great humanity. St. Paul, in acknowledgment, reſtored to health the governor's father, who was ill of a fever and bloody-flux. It is ſaid, that not only Publius the father, but the whole iſland alſo, was converted to the Chriſtian faith. Chryſoſt. Homil. 54. in Acta Apoſt. Gregor. Mag. in Job. lib. xxvii. cap. 11. & recent. plerique. Ado, with ſeveral Latin writers, affirm, that Publius was made a biſhop by this apoſtle, and ſent to preach the goſpel; that coming to Athens, he was biſhop there, and ended his life by martyrdom. But this opinion cannot be ſupported; ſince Publius, biſhop of Athens, did not ſuffer martyrdom till the time of Marcus Aurelius.

PUDENS, mentioned by St. Paul, 2 Tim. iv. 21. A. D. 65. Baronius, an. 44. ſec. 61. with others, believed, that Pudens was a Roman ſenator converted by St. Peter, with whom St. Paul abode ſome time. But there is reaſon to think, he confounds him with another Pudens, a ſenator, ſaid to be father of Praxedus and Prudentiana, in the time of pope Pius, above an hundred years afterwards. The Greeks keep the feſtival of St. Pudens, the diſciple, April 14. They put him in the liſt of the ſeventy diſciples, and ſay, that after the death of St. Paul, he was beheaded by Nero. Some think that Claudia, mentioned by St. Paul after Pudens, was his wife. The common tradition is, that St. Peter not only lodged with Pudens, but alſo there conſecrated the firſt church at Rome; ſince made that of St. Peter in Bonds.

PUHITES, פוּתי, ἀΦϑοῖ, that ſeduces; from פתה pathah: otherwiſe, mouthful; from פת path, and פתה pathah: in Chaldee, wideneſs. 1 Chron. ii. 53.

PUL, פול, bean; from פול phol: otherwiſe, deſtruction; from פלח palach, to cleave, to deſtroy. An Aſſyrian name; no etymology in the Hebrew.

PUL, or Phul, king of Aſſyria: 2 Kings xv. 19. he came into the land of Iſrael in the time of Menahem, to aſſiſt him, and confirm him in the kingdom. Hoſ. v. 13. The king of Iſrael gave him a thouſand talents of ſilver, and Pul continued in the country till it was paid. We conjecture that Pul was the father of Sardanapalus, who added the name of Pal or Pul to that of Sardan; as Merodach added the name of Baladan, and called himſelf Merodach-baladan. If this conjecture be true, Pul is the ſame as Anacindarexes, or Anabaxares, the name which profane authors give to the father of Sardanapalus. Athen. lib. vii. & xii. Dipnoſ. Strab. Suid. Arrian. Stephanus Byzantinus calls him Cyndaraxes; Julius Africanus, Acracarnes; and Euſebius, Acrazapes. Pul is properly the firſt king of Aſſyria mentioned in Scripture.

PUNISHMENTS of the Hebrews. There were ſeveral ſorts of puniſhments uſed among the Jews, which are mentioned in Scripture. As, 1. The puniſhment of the croſs. 2. Hanging, or the puniſhment of the rope. 3. Stoning. 4. Fire or burning. 5. The tympanum, or whipping. 6. Impriſonment. 7. The ſword, or beheading. 8. The precipice, or throwing down a rock. 9. Rending to pieces by thorns, or treading under the feet of animals. 10. The ſaw. 11. Stifling by being thrown down into a place full of aſhes. 12. Cutting off the hair. 13. Blinding the eyes. 14. Being ſtretched on the wooden horſe. There are others, mentioned in the Maccabees, or in the Government of Reaſon. See the various articles following.

The Rabbins tell us of many formalities which accompanied the deciſion of the judges in criminal caſes. When the matter concerned life and death, they proceeded with great deliberation. After the witneſſes had been heard, the affair was put off to the next day; the judges went home, ate but little, and drank no wine. The day following they assembled again, two by two, to examine the circumstances at more leisure: and the judgment might now be rectified, or reversed.

Sentence being confirmed and pronounced, the criminal was led to execution. A man placed at the door of the court, held a handkerchief in his hand; a little farther was a horseman, or a cryer on horseback. If any one offered himself to say any thing in favour of the condemned, the first centinel made a signal with his handkerchief, and the horseman galloped away, to have the prisoner brought back. Two of the judges went on each side of him, to hear if he had any thing farther to offer in his justification. The criminal might be brought back as often as five times, to hear those who could say any thing in his defence. If there was nothing to retard the execution of the sentence, it was published with a loud voice; such an one is abandoned, for such a crime; such and such have deposed against him: if any one have any proofs of his innocence, they may now produce them.

The Jews were of opinion, that the death of offenders, might be of great efficacy to procure their salvation, if they suffered to satisfy the justice of God, and to make atonement for their sins. They were exhorted to confess their faults, and to say, Let my death be for an expiation of all my sins. Their maxim was, he that confesses his faults, has a share in the life to come.

They gave to criminals, at their execution, wine mingled with incense, myrrh, and other strong drugs, proper to stupify the senses, and to abate the severity of pain. Solomon advises, Prov. xxxi. 6. to give wine to such as are overwhelmed with pain. And we see an instance of this, in what was offered to Jesus Christ at his passion; wine mixed with myrrh, before his crucifixion; and vinegar when he was on the cross, Matt. xxvii. 34, 48. These observations are general, and belong to all that were executed.

Hanging.

I do not observe any crime in the law, for which the guilty was condemned to be hanged. They often hung up men after their death; but I cannot see that any were hanged alive. The Jews maintain, that none but idolaters and blasphemers underwent this punishment. Achitophel hung himself. 2 Sam. xvii. 23. also Judas, Matt. xxvii. 5. Acts i. 18. Moses pronounces him accursed, that is hung upon a tree; and he would have him cut down before sun-setting, Deut. xxi. 23. Haman and all his sons were hung on an high gallows: Esth. vii. 9, 10. Pharaoh's chief baker was first beheaded, and afterwards hung on a gibbet, Gen. xli. 13. Moses ordered those princes of Israel to be hanged on gibbets, who had any share in the crime of worshipping Baal-peor. Numbers xxv. 4. Joshua hanged up the king of Ai, and he continued on the gallows until the evening, Josh. viii. 29. Another time he hung up five kings of the Canaanites, Josh. x. 26. The Philistines hung the bodies of Saul and Jonathan on the walls of Beth-shan, 2 Sam. xxi. 12, 13. Jeremiah says, Lam. v. 12. that the princes of Israel were hung up by the hand, after their death, by the Chaldeans. The soldiers of Antiochus Epiphanes hung up dead children on the necks of their mothers, who had circumcised them, 1 Macc. i. 62.

From all these examples, may be inferred, that sometimes they hung up men alive; and sometimes hung up their carcases, after they were dead.

Burning

Was very common among the Hebrews. When Judah was informed that his daughter-in-law Tamar was with child, he would have had her burnt as an adultereſs, Genesis xxxviii. 24. The law of Moses inflicts this punishment on the daughters of the priests, guilty of fornication: Lev. xxi. 9. Abraham, say some, was cast into the fire, because he would not worship the gods of the Chaldeans, Gen. xi. 31. Nehem. ix. 7. Nebuchadnezzar caused Daniel and his companions to be thrown into a burning fiery furnace, on a like occasion, Dan. iii. 6. Moses ordered him to be burnt alive, who should marry the mother and her daughter, Lev. xx. 14.

Jeremiah informs us, xxix. 22. that Nebuchadnezzar ordered Zedekiah and Ahab to be roasted in a pan, for abusing their neighbours wives. Antiochus Epiphanes exercised the same, and similar punishments against the brethren Maccabees: the author of Ecclesiasticus says, that the flesh of the wicked shall be punished by worms, and by fire; i. e. probably shall be exposed in the fields, and burnt in the valley of Hinnom: they burnt there the carcases of men, and other creatures, to prevent their stench from infecting the city; and to this Jesus Christ seems to allude, when he says, Mark ix. 43, 45, 47, that the worm of the damned dies not, and their fire is not quenched.

Some Jewish authors pretend, that he who was condemned to the fire, was not burnt in the flames: he was set up to the knees in a dunghill, his throat tied about with a large piece of cloth, which was strained by the two ends, till the sufferer was forced to open his mouth: or it was forced open by an instrument. Then they poured melted melted lead down his throat, till his bowels were conſumed. They found this ſort of puniſhment upon what is ſaid, that the fire did not conſume the bodies of the children of Aaron, Levit. x. 1, 2, 3. (This is not ſaid expreſsly in Scripture, which only takes notice, that they were carried out of the camp in their habits. This ſhews that they were not conſumed by the fire.) So that they thought it not lawful for them to conſume the bodies of their brethren. Beſides, they thought this a more merciful kind of death. The rabbi Eleazar objecting againſt this determination, and affirming that he had ſeen the body of a prieſt's daughter burnt, who had committed a crime; it was anſwered to him, that then the Sanhedrim muſt have been compoſed of ignorant people, or of Cuſhites and profane perſons, who did not underſtand the law.

Imprisonment

Was not conſidered as a puniſhment, but to ſecure the accuſed. So Joſeph detained his brother Simeon in priſon, Gen. xlii. 19. The blaſphemer that was brought to Moſes, Lev. xxiv. 12. and the man that was found gathering ſticks on the Sabbath-day, Numb. xv. 34, were put in ward till the Lord declared what kind of puniſhment they ſhould ſuffer. Jeremiah and John the Baptiſt were ſhut up in priſon, to prevent their remonſtrances to the people.

But, often, impriſonment was made a puniſhment by ſeverities. Joſeph was put into priſon, and loaded with fetters, Geneſis xxxix. 20. Samſon taken by the Philiſtines, was caſt into a dungeon, and forced to grind at the mill, Judg. xvi. 21. Heſhea, king of Iſrael, Jehoahaz, and Manaſſeh, kings of Judah, were ſhut up in priſon by their conquerors the kings of Aſſyria and Chaldea. Zedekiah underwent the ſame hardſhips; to which was added the puniſhment of loſing his eyes. Ahab, king of Iſrael, gave orders, 1 Kings xxii. 27. that the prophet Micaiah ſhould be ſhut up in priſon; that he ſhould be fed with the bread of affliction, and the water of diſtreſs, till his return from Ramoth-gilead.

Bonds, fetters, ſhackles, manacles, chains, which uſually attended impriſonment, muſt be conſidered as puniſhments, which greatly aggravated that of being kept in priſon. The ancient Hebrews had alſo a kind of yoke, framed of two pieces of wood, long, and pretty broad, in which they cut away a ſemicircle for the criminal to put his neck in. Jeremiah xxvii. 2. received an order from the Lord, to make bonds and yokes, to put them on his neck, and to ſend ſome to the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, and Tyre, to declare their approaching captivity by the king of Chaldea. They alſo uſed ſtocks, wherein were holes at ſeveral diſtances, through which they made the priſoners put their legs, at a greater or leſſer diſtance, according to the torment they meant to inflict. See Job xiii. 27. & xxxiii. 11. Prov. vii. 22. Prudentius, hymn 4. has deſcribed this puniſhment,

> Lignoque plantas inſerit,
> Divaricatis cruribus.

Precipitation.

To throw headlong into the ſea from a precipice, with a ſtone tied about the neck, was not a common puniſhment: if it has been ſometimes uſed among the Hebrews, it was in extraordinary caſes. Amaziah, king of Judah, forced ten thouſand Idumeans, whom he had taken priſoners of war, to leap from the top of a high rock, 2 Chron. xxv. 12. Some are of opinion alſo, that they precipitated from the rock of Oreb, the king of the Midianites, named Oreb, Judg. vii. 25. The Jews intended to precipitate Jeſus Chriſt from the top of their mountain, Luke iv. 29. St. James the Juſt was thrown down from the higheſt part of the temple, into the valley below. Zachariah, ſon of Baruch, was put to death in the midſt of the temple, and his body thrown into a deep place beneath the walls of that holy ſtructure, Joſeph de Bello, lib. v. cap. 1. Jeſus Chriſt mentions the puniſhment of caſting a man into the ſea, with a ſtone about his neck: Mat. xviii. 6. We are told, this was a common puniſhment among the Syrians.

Beheading.

Pharaoh's chief baker had his head cut off; after which, his body was hung on a gibbet, Gen. xl. 19. Abimelech, ſon of Gideon, cut off the heads of ſeventy ſons of Gideon, his brethren, on one ſtone, Judg. ix. 5. The people of Samaria cut off the heads of ſeventy ſons of Ahab, and ſent them in baſkets to king Jehu, 2 Kings x. 7. John the Baptiſt was beheaded in priſon, by the order of Herod, &c. &c. Mat. xiv. 8, 11.

Trampling to Death,

under thorns, under harrows, under the feet of elephants, is not known among us; but we find ſome inſtances in Scripture. When Gideon returned from purſuing the Midianites, he tore with thorns and brambles of the deſart, the chief men of the city of Succoth, who had inſulted him, Judg. viii. 16. It is thought David did ſomething like this to the Moabites, 2 Sam. viii. 2. And he ſmote Moab, and meaſured them with a line, caſting them down to the ground; even with two two lines meaſured he, to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive. What is ſaid of caſting them down to the ground, favours this explication. He made the Ammonites undergo a puniſhment that was ſtill more cruel, 2 Sam. xii. 31. he put them under ſaws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them paſs through the brick-kiln.

The harrows, or ſledges, of iron here mentioned, were machines proper for thraſhing of corn; of which there were ſeveral kinds. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XLVIII, page 83. He made them paſs under axes of iron, and through the places for making of bricks. Whether by theſe laſt words we are to underſtand furnaces in which bricks are burnt, or the place where the earth is beat and macerated, in which theſe miſerable wretches were executed; theſe puniſhments were very horrible, but were tolerated among thoſe people, who allowed themſelves the liberty of putting all to death that they took in war.

Lex nulla capto parcit, aut pœnam impedit.
SENECA, Trag. Troad.

Vide PTOLEMY PHILOPATOR, who would have trod the Jews to death by his elephants. The prophet Micah alludes to this kind of puniſhment, when he ſays, Mic. iv. 12, 13. He ſhall gather them as the ſheaves into the floor. Ariſe and threſh, O daughter of Zion, for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs braſs, and thou ſhalt beat in pieces many people. Amilcar the Carthaginian general, cauſed ſome Carthaginians and ſome ſtrangers, who had betrayed the intereſts of the republic, to be trod under foot by his elephants. Prophyr. de Abſtin. lib. 2.

LOSS OF HAIR.

To cut off the hair of guilty perſons, ſeems to be a puniſhment rather ſhameful than painful; yet it is thought, that pain was added to the diſgrace; and that they tore off the hair with violence, as if they were plucking a bird alive. This is the genuine ſignification of the Heb. אמרטם Decalvavi, depilavi, Nehem. xiii. 25. LXX. Ἐμαδάρωσα αὐτῶς. I contended with them, and ſmote certain of them, and plucked off their hair. Sometimes they put hot aſhes on the ſkin, after they had torn off the hair, to make the pain the more exquiſite. Thus they ſerved adulterers at Athens; as is obſerved by the ſcholiaſt of Ariſtophanes, in Nubibus.

This kind of puniſhment was common in Perſia. King Artaxerxes, inſtead of plucking off the hair of ſuch of his generals, who had been guilty of a fault, obliged them to lay aſide the tiara, ſays Plutarch, Apothegm. The emperor Domitian cauſed the hair and beard of the philoſopher Apollonius to be ſhaved, Philoſtrat. lib. iii. cap. 24. In France they cut off the hair of ſorcerers and magicians. This torture has often been inflicted on martyrs of the Chriſtian religion. In the impious book, compoſed by the Jews, of the life of Jeſus Chriſt, under the name of Toledoth Jeſu, they ſay their anceſtors cauſed his hair to be cut off, and afterwards his head to be rubbed with a liquor, which made him bald all his life after. It is obſerved in the book, called The Government of Reaſon, (ſometimes called the fourth book of the Maccabees,) that Antiochus Epiphanes cauſed the hair and ſkin and all, to be torn from the heads of ſome of the ſeven brethren the Maccabees. [SCALPED: as the Indians of America?]

BLINDING.

To make blind, and to pluck out the eyes, are puniſhments not common; and though Moſes appointed, that an eye ſhould be given for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth, Exodus xxi. 24. Deut. xix. 18, 19, 20. Levit. xxiv. 20. yet it is the opinion of commentators, that this was ſeldom practiſed, but that the offender was generally puniſhed by a pecuniary penalty, paid to the injured party. When the Philiſtines had ſeized Samſon, they put him in priſon, and bored out his eyes. Judg. xvi. 21. When Nahaſh king of the Ammonites made war with Jabeſh-gilead, he threatened to put out the right eyes of the people. Nebuchadnezzar took king Zedekiah, ſlew his children in his preſence, then cauſed his eyes to be put out, and afterwards had him carried to Jeruſalem in chains. 2 Kings xxv. 7. Vide FRAGMENTS, No's CLXXXIX, CXC, CXCI, CXCII.

MAIMING.

To cut off the feet and hands, was a cruelty exerciſed by Adonibezek, on ſeventy kings conquered by him, who ate like dogs under his table. Judg. i. 6, 7. But God thought fit to have him tortured after the ſame manner. David puniſhed the murderers of Iſhboſheth by the ſame means, 2 Sam. iv. 12. Antiochus Epiphanes alſo cut off the extremities of the hands and feet from the ſeven brothers Maccabees. 1 Mac. l. 4. & 2 Mac. vii. 4. When Alexander the Great came near to Perſepolis, eight hundred Greeks preſented themſelves before him, to entreat his protection and their own liberty. They had been taken captive by the kings of Perſia, and had been maimed; ſome having had their feet or hands hands cut off, others their noſes. Vide FRAGMENTS, No. CXXI. They had alſo the marks of ſlavery imprinted upon them, which were a ſort of rough characters in their ſkins, that could not be got out. Diodor. Sicul. Juſt. Quint. Curt.

THE WHEEL.

Is not known in the canonical books either of the Old or New Teſtament. But it is found in the fourth book of the Maccabees, or Government of Reaſon, cap. 9. in Græco. He ſays, that the fifth and ſixth of the brethren Maccabees were put upon the wheel. The firſt of them was dragged upon a machine, which the author calls Catapulta, upon which they tied his knees with ſtrong chains, and violently bent his back upon a wheel, ſo that he was rolled like a ſcorpion about the wheel. The ſecond was alſo brought and faſtened with violence upon the wheel, ſo that all his bones were diſlocated; then they burned his ſides and bowels with red hot irons.

I doubt not but what is here called a wheel, is nearly the ſame thing as the wooden horſe or treſſel, concerning which ſo much has been ſaid. The reader may compare what is here ſaid of the puniſhment of the wheel, with what has been ſaid of the wooden horſe, and he will find almoſt the ſame characters obſervable in both. They violently ſtretched out the criminals upon the machine, drawing their limbs with ropes or pullies; then they whipt them, diſlocated their joints, burnt their ſides, tore off their ſkin with iron pincers, kept them lying ſometimes upon their backs, ſometimes upon their bellies, ſometimes with their heads uppermoſt, ſometimes bending double, and ſometimes with their heads hanging downwards. The form of the wheel gave them opportunity of putting the miſerable ſufferers into all manner of painful poſtures. The wheel to which Ixion was faſtened according to the fable, was always turning round. Suidas ſays, that they uſed to faſten ſlaves to the wheel, and there whip them. The acts of the martyrs often tell us, that they ſtretched the bodies of theſe ſaints upon this engine, and there made them ſuffer ſeveral kinds of torture.

FIGHTING WITH WILD BEASTS.

Was a puniſhment frequent among the Romans. St. Paul ſays, that he fought with beaſts at Epheſus. 1 Cor. xv. 32. See St. PAUL. Sometimes they were expoſed to the beaſts, to be devoured by them, as St. Ignatius was to the lions; either to ſerve as ſport to them, as St. Perpetua, who was expoſed to a wild cow, being encloſed within nets, that ſhe could not make her eſcape; or, laſtly, to fight with the beaſts.

OTHER PUNISHMENTS.

Some are of opinion, that the puniſhment of impaling was not unknown to the Perſians, and that it is intimated by Ezra. Tollatum lignum de domo illius, & erigatur, & configatur in eo. Vat. Grot. Others think, the guilty perſon was to be hanged on an upright poſt, after the demolition of his houſe. Others underſtand it, that they were to be fixed to a piece of wood belonging to the houſe, and there to undergo the puniſhment of whipping. Shindler, & Lud. de Dieu, in 1 Eſdr.

Sometimes they demoliſhed the houſes of offenders, and reduced them to a common place for filth and dung. Thus the temple of Baal was treated by king Jehu. Nebuchadnezzar threatened the diviners of Chaldea, to make them undergo this puniſhment and diſgrace, if they did not declare his dream to him. Dan. ii. 9. He afterwards decreed the ſame penalty, to all ſuch, as ſhould not worſhip the God of Shadrach, Meſhech, and Abednego. Dan. iii. 29. And king Darius in the ſame manner threatened thoſe, who ſhould moleſt the Jews. Ezra vi. 11. However, there are good interpreters, who explain theſe paſſages as implying only confiſcations to the king's uſe.

PUNITES, פוני, Φουὶ, Hebrew, Phuni, that regards; from פנה panah, to behold: otherwiſe, my face, from פנים panim; countenance, or face.

PUNON, פנון, precious ſtone: otherwiſe, that beholds; perhaps from פנן pinan, angle, corner, ſecret place. It was a place where copper-mines were found.

PUNON, or Phunon, a ſtation of the Hebrews in the wilderneſs: Numb. xxxiii. 42, 43. called Phæno, Phaino, and Metallo-phænon, becauſe of its mines of metals. Euſebius in Φάνων, ſays, it was between Petra and Segor; and in Δαυδάν, he places it four miles from Dedan. St. Athanaſius, Epiſt. ad Solitarios ſays, that theſe mines of Phanos were ſo dangerous, that murtherers condemned to work there, lived but a few days. We find biſhops of Phenos in the ſubſcriptions of the councils.

It is thought to be at Punon that Moſes erected the brazen ſerpent, for the cure of the murmuring Iſraelites, who had been bit by the fiery ſerpents. Others believe this happened at the encampment of Zalmonah. Vide Numb. xxi. 7.

PUR, פור, κλῆρος, lot.

PUR, or Phur, or Purim; i. e. lots. This was a ſolemn feaſt of the Jews, inſtituted in memory of the lots caſt by Haman, the enemy of the Jews. Eſther iii. 7. Theſe lots were caſt in the the firſt month of the year, and gave the twelfth month of the ſame year, for the execution of Haman's deſign, to deſtroy all the Jews of Perſia. Thus the ſuperſtition of Haman, in crediting theſe lots, cauſed his own ruin, and the preſervation of the Jews; who had time to avert this blow, by means of Eſther. In memory of this deliverance, the Jews inſtituted a feaſt, which they named Pur or Purim. See HAMAN, ESTHER, and MORDECAI.

The word Phur or Pur is rather Perſian than Hebrew. The feaſt of lots was celebrated among the Jews in Shuſhan on the 14th, and in other parts of the Perſian empire on the 15th of Adar, which anſwers to our February. Eſther ix. 18, 19, 21. and 2 Macc. xv. 39. The Jews have exactly kept this feaſt down to our times, and theſe are the ceremonies they obſerve in it. On the eve of the feaſt, if it be a day on which they may faſt, they keep a ſtrict faſt, in memory of that kept by Eſther and Mordecai. If the day be a ſabbath, or the eve of a ſabbath, on which they never faſt, they anticipate the faſt; i. e. inſtead of faſting on the 13th of Adar, they faſt on the 11th.

On the eve of the feaſt, they give alms liberally to the poor, that theſe alſo may enjoy the feaſt of lots: And on the feaſt day they ſend a ſhare of what they have at table, to thoſe who have need. On the evening of Adar 13, when the feaſt begins, they aſſemble in the ſynagogue, and light the lamps; and as ſoon as the ſtars begin to appear, they begin to read the book of Eſther. They continue reading it throughout. There are five places in the text, wherein the reader raiſes his voice with all his might, and makes ſuch a dreadful howling, as to frighten the women and children. When he comes to the place which mentions the names of the ten ſons of Haman, he repeats them very quick without taking breath, to ſhew that theſe ten perſons were deſtroyed in a moment. Every time the name of Haman is pronounced, the children with great fury ſtrike the benches of the ſynagogues with mallets, or ſtones, and make lamentable cries. It is ſaid that heretofore they uſed to bring into the ſynagogue a great ſtone, with the name of Haman written on it, and all the while the book of Eſther was reading, they ſtruck it with other ſtones, till they had beat it to pieces.

After the reading was finiſhed, they returned into their houſes, where they made a meal rather of milk-meats than of fleſh. The day following, early in the morning, they returned to the ſynagogue, where, after they had read that paſſage of Exodus, wherein is mentioned the war of Amalek, they again read the book of Eſther with the ſame ceremonies as before. After which they return home, and make as good cheer as they can, and paſs the reſt of the day in ſports and diſſolute mirth, the men dreſſing themſelves in women's cloaths, and women in the mens', contrary to an expreſs prohibition of the law. Deut. xxii. 5. And their doctors have decided on this point, that on this day they may drink wine until they cannot diſtinguiſh between, Curſed be Haman, and Curſed be Mordecai. Heretofore they uſed to erect a gibbet, and upon it to burn a man made of ſtraw, which they called Haman. But it was thought they had an intention of inſulting the Chriſtians on the death of Chriſt, and therefore the emperors forbad them this practice, on penalty of forfeiting all their privileges. Cod. de Judæis & Cælicol. L. Jud.

The feaſt of Purim, or lots, in the manner the Jews obſerve it, has a good deal of reſemblance to the ancient Bacchanalia of the pagans. Pleaſures, diverſions, joy, good cheer, make as it were the very eſſence of it. The ſpirit of revenge which animated the Jews of Shuſhan againſt their enemies, has paſſed undiminiſhed to their poſterity; who abandon themſelves to it without meaſure and without bounds. They allow themſelves the drinking of wine to exceſs, becauſe, ſay they, it was by making king Ahaſuerus drink, that Eſther procured the deliverance of the Jews. They compel every one to be preſent at the ſynagogue, man, woman, child, and ſervant; becauſe all ſhared in the deliverance, as all were expoſed to the danger. On this day ſcholars make preſents to their maſters, heads of families to their domeſticks, the great to thoſe of mean condition. In a word, the whole day is ſpent in joyfulneſs and feaſting. As it is ſaid in the book of Eſther; That they ſhould make them days of feaſting and joy, and of ſending portions one to another, and gifts to the poor. Leo of Modena, Ceremonies of the Jews, page 3. cap. 10. Eſth. ix. 22.

This feſtival continues two days, but only the firſt is kept with ſolemnity. During theſe two days they may work or do buſineſs; yet they refrain the firſt day, though they are not obliged to it. The ſecond day they read no new leſſon in the ſynagogue, and the feaſt is not ſo great; but they, however, ſhew marks of feſtivity. When the year conſiſts of thirteen months, and there are two Adars, (See ADAR, MONTH.) they celebrate celebrate the Feaſt of Lots twice over; the grand Purim on the fourteenth of the firſt Adar, and the leſſer Purim on the fourteenth of the ſecond Adar. But this ſecond feaſt has properly nothing but the name. Baſnage, Hiſt. of the Jews, tom. 5, lib. vii. cap. 1.

On the eve of the feſtival they gather the half-ſhekel formerly paid to the temple, and which at preſent they diſtribute among ſuch as undertake a journey to Jeruſalem, whither ſeveral repair out of devotion, and where they covet to be buried; believing that all the Jews are to rendezvous there at the laſt judgment, and that they ſhall even paſs thither through the bowels of the earth.

They read the text of Eſther not out of a printed book, nor out of a folded book, but out of a roll of vellum, in the ancient manner, wrote with a particular kind of ink. After they have unrolled the volume, they make three prayers, to thank God for calling them to this ceremony, for having delivered them, and for having continued their lives to the celebration of this feſtival. On this day the reader may ſit down, whereas at other times he muſt ſtand up, while he reads the law. The reading of the book of Eſther is concluded with curſes againſt Haman and his wife Seres, with bleſſings on Mordecai and Eſther, and with praiſes to God for having preſerved his people. Reſt is obſerved very religiouſly, eſpecially the firſt day; and the Jews tell us, that a man having ſown flax on this day, not one grain of it came up.

It was the emperor Theodoſius II. who forbad the Jews to erect gibbets, to fix an image upon them, which they called Haman, and afterwards to burn them; becauſe it was not fit that in their feſtivals they ſhould inſult the myſteries of the Chriſtian religion, A. D. 408. Yet three years after, ſome Jews in the extravagance of their frolics, notwithſtanding this expreſs prohibition, faſtened a young Chriſtian to a gibbet inſtead of a Haman, whom they whipped ſo cruelly, that he died on the ſpot: in the city of Inmeſtar, in Chalcis and Syria. The Chriſtians in the country took up arms; and the Jews were puniſhed.

PURGATORY. This word is not in Scripture, neither in the Old or New Teſtament. Purgatory means that ſtate of thoſe ſouls, which having departed out of this life without expiating certain impurities that deſerve not eternal damnation, or which not having undergone the puniſhments due to their ſins, expiate them by ſuch puniſhments as God inflicts on them, before they enjoy his preſence.—[This tenet is a favorite in the Romiſh church: but at beſt is ſuggeſted by inferences, rather than founded on clear expreſſions. The paſſages uſually appealed to are, 2 Mac. xii. 43. the inſtance of Judas Maccabeus, who ſeems to offer ſacrifices for his ſlain ſoldiers: —but this is clogged with difficulties: 1. He might offer theſe ſacrifices as expiations for his army in general. 2. It cannot be ſaid theſe ſoldiers died "godly," as the text intimates. 3. The whole is rejected from canonical Scripture.]

As to the New Teſtament, Chriſt ſays, there are certain ſins that ſhall not be forgiven, neither in this world, nor in the world to come, Matt. xii. 32. Conſequently he allows, that ſome ſins may be forgiven in the other world. [But this does not prove they will be expiated in the other world: which is the intent of purgatory; they may be forgiven, i. e. pronounced pardoned, but not by procuration of the party's ſufferings.] St. Paul prays for Oneſiphorus then departed, The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day. But if prayers may be made for the dead, then there is a purgatory, and a ſtate wherein they may be benefited by our prayers. [This is a very weak argument; the phraſe "God bleſs him" ſpoken of the dead, is quite as concluſive on the ſubject: and yet this is daily uſed in the Eaſt: "the memory of the juſt is bleſſed." So among ourſelves we recollect the memory of our departed friends with affection and praiſe: and I believe nobody would ſcruple to pray for the mercy of God on any of his friends "in that day," who yet would not think of inferring a purgatory from this expreſſion.]

The Jews acknowledge a kind of purgatory, which continues for one year after the perſon is departed. During theſe firſt twelve months, the ſoul is at liberty to come upon earth, to viſit its body, and to frequent thoſe places and perſons, to which it had a particular relation during its life. They pray for the repoſe of the dead during all this time, and are perſuaded, that they adminiſter much conſolation to them by their prayers, that they procure reſt for them, and pardon of their ſins.

They call purgatory, Abraham's boſom, the treaſury of the living, the garden of Eden, and Upper Gehenna. Hell they call the Lower Gehenna. They believe that all Iſraelites have a portion in the world to come, or the ſtate of happineſs, either immediately after death, or after they have atoned for their ſins in purgatory. There are but a very ſmall number of their nation, who are great profligates, that are for ever excluded out of heaven. As for the reſt, they hold that they continue not above a year in purgatory. The ſabbath-day is a day of remiſſion to the ſouls in purgatory: they do not burn upon that day. The Jews offer up a great many prayers, and works of ſatisfaction, on the day of ſolemn expiation, for the comfort of ſuch ſouls as are in the Upper Gehenna. Leo of Modena, part 5. cap. 10. Vindet. de Vita Functorum Statu. ſect. 8. &c.

PURIFICATIONS. There were many kinds among the Hebrews, according to the ſeveral kinds of impurities contracted. See LEGAL IMPURITIES: alſo LEPROSY, GONORRHEA, DEAD BODIES, NAZARITES. When a woman was delivered of a boy, ſhe was eſteemed impure for forty days, Lev. xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. During the firſt ſeven days ſhe defiled all which ſhe touched. After this ſhe was impure thirty days, but not ſo as to hinder her from taking care of her houſhold affairs: only from the uſe and participation of holy things. If ſhe had a girl, ſhe was judged unclean for ſixty days; during the two firſt weeks of which ſhe could not touch any thing without defiling it.

When the days of her purification were ended, ſhe offered a lamb to the tabernacle, or temple, for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon, or dove, for a ſin offering. If ſhe was unable to offer a lamb, ſhe gave two doves, one for a burnt offering, the other for a ſin-offering.

Though the holy Virgin was not ſubject to the law that ſays, Mulier ſi ſuſcepto ſemine pepererit maſculum, &c. [Vide Origen. homil. 8. in Levit. Baſil. in Iſai. vii. 14. Chryſoſt. homil. in occurſ. domini. Cyrill. Alex. lib. ii. de fide ad Reginas. Procop. Theophyl. ad Luc. ii. Bern. ſerm. purific.] yet ſhe complied with it, Luke ii. 22, 23, &c. And to preſerve the memory of this, the church has inſtituted the feaſt of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, commonly called Candlemas-Day, February 2. on which thoſe of the church of Rome carry wax candles in their hands, to repreſent more ſenſibly the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, whom Simeon in his Canticle calls the light of the Gentiles, and the glory of Iſrael. But thoſe who have moſt examined into this matter think, that the true reaſon of theſe ſolemn proceſſions was, to wear out the memory of the profane ſacrifices of the Pagans in the month of February. Februa ſacra were kept in honour of Pluto, to luſtrate or purify men, fields, and cities; and that the candles uſed in this ſolemnity were inſtead of the torches carried by the Pagans in the feaſts of Lupercalia, celebrated on the fifteenth of February, in honour of Pan, wherein naked men ran through the ſtreets with lighted torches, and committed a thouſand inſolencies.

This feaſt was inſtituted by the emperor Juſtinian, about the middle of the ſixth century; and perhaps in ſome places ſooner. He fixed it to February 2. and ordained its celebration uniformly throughout the empire. This was readily followed by places not under his dominion. They called this feaſt Hypapante, which in Greek ſignifies meeting, becauſe when Jeſus Chriſt came into the temple, Simeon and Anna may be ſaid to have met him, and with him Joſeph and Mary.

In the ſame feaſt is celebrated the memory of the preſentation of Jeſus Chriſt in the temple, as the firſt-born of Mary, in obedience to the law, Exod. xiii. 13. See FIRST-BORN.

The Jews that lived at too great a diſtance from the temple, and could not reſort thither to purify themſelves from certain defilements, which were unavoidable; ſuch as pollution contracted at the burial of the dead, &c. made uſe of the aſhes of the red heifer ſacrificed for this purpoſe at Jeruſalem, and the aſhes of which were diſtributed to all Iſraelites at a diſtance. See RED HEIFER, Numb. xix. 5.

A man and woman who uſed the marriage-bed, were unclean until the evening; they waſhed their cloaths, and purified themſelves by bathing, Levit. xv. 16, 17, 18. A woman under her infirmities was unclean ſeven days; and whatever ſhe touched was defiled, &c. Levit. xx. 18. The ancient Chriſtians on many occaſions looked on theſe infirmities of women as defilements. The Turkiſh women forbear to come to worſhip while this laſts. The Indian women do not come into their houſes. Tournefort's Travels to the Levant, tom i. p. 44.

Involuntary pollutions in ſleep, were purified by bathing, Deut. xxiii. 10.

The Hebrews had an infinite number of other purifications. They did not ſo much as eat, or ſit down to table, until after they had waſhed their hands, by pouring water from their fingers ends up to their elbows. When they returned into their houſes, they uſed to waſh their hands. They alſo purified their pots and cups, their beds, and whatever elſe they made uſe of, following the traditions of their elders.

PURIM. See PUR.

PURITY; pure, and purity, are taken in Scripture, 1. For external purity; 2. For internal purity.

External purity is either in reſpect of perſons capable of partaking of holy things, and of performing the duties of civil life; or in reſpect of animals pure by the law; or in reſpect of things. Cloaths, houſes, utenſils, were capable of impurities which prevented their being uſed, but when purged from theſe impurities, they became clean, and might be uſed without ſcruple.

Things that were impure in their own nature, as carcaſes, carcaſes, and animals that died of themſelves; and ſuch as were ſo by the appointment of the law, could never become clean. But men or women rendered unclean by any tranſient inconveniencies, might recover their uſual purity, when theſe inconveniencies were paſſed, or were expiated. In reſpect of cloaths, houſes, and goods; they were purified, by water, fire, or luſtration. When perſons had contracted impurities, it was neceſſary ſometimes that they ſhould offer certain ſacrifices of expiation. But the moſt general method of purification was the bath, or the waſhing of the whole body.

Internal purity conſiſted in innocence of life, in purity of the mind and heart, in juſtice, in the exact obſervation of the law of the Lord; the only way of recovering this purity when impaired, was converſion, deteſtation of ſin, ſorrow and compunction for it. Theſe diſpoſitions, accompanied by the ſacrifices required by the law, in caſes of negligence, inadvertency, or ignorance; or even of perverſeneſs and malice; might obtain pardon, not by virtue of the external ſacrifice, but by the faith, contrition, &c. of the offerer.

Moſes is not very explicit on the means of recovering this internal purity, nor is he ſo minute and accurate on this, as on external purity; becauſe as a law-giver, his firſt and principal view was to reſtrain the hands of men, and to regulate the ſtate of his commonwealth. Not but that Moſes, and the other ſacred authors of the Old Teſtament, ſay enough to thoſe who deſire to underſtand, to prove how little they relied on outward purifications and ſacrifices, in compariſon to the inward affections of the heart, contrition, faith, and charity. St. Paul in his epiſtles, and particularly in that to the Hebrews, has admirably diſplayed this truth, telling us, that the ſacrifices and ordinances of the old law were of no virtue in themſelves, to heal the inward diſtempers of the ſoul, and to repair the outrages done to God by our ſins.

In the new law, Chriſtians are freed from the yoke of ceremonies and legal impurities, and eſteem as real defilements, none but thoſe of the ſoul. Their chief care is (i. e. ought to be) employed, in preſerving inward purity and innocence of mind, and to recover theſe by repentance, whenever they have been injured by frailty. See REPENTANCE.

PURPLE, colour of, Hebrew, ארגמן Argaman; Greek, Πορφύρος Porphyros; Latin, Purpura. The Greeks alſo uſed the word ἀμάργη Amorge, derived from the Hebrew Argaman. It is thought that the fine purple colour was firſt diſcovered by Hercules Tyrius, whoſe dog by chance having eat a ſhell-fiſh called Murex, or Purpura, and returning to his maſter with his lips tinged with a purple colour, gave occaſion to the diſcovery of this precious dye. But purple is much more ancient than Hercules, ſince we find it mentioned by Moſes in ſeveral places; [except under the name of Hercules, the Tyrians meant ſome very ancient hero, whom the Greeks afterwards confounded with others.] The colour of purple was of a very deep red, ſoft and ſhining. Pliny compares it to the colour of a roſe, approaching to black: Nigricantis roſæ colore ſublucens, Plin. lib. ix. cap. 36. or, of coagulated blood drawing toward black, the red of which has a ſoft kind of ſhining: Concreti ſanguinis nigricans aſpectu, idemque ſuſpectu refulgens, lib. ix. cap. 38. Purple was of more ſorts than one. One was deeper, drawing towards violet, mingled with a little red, which was the ground of it: the other was of a deep red, but ſhining; another more faint, pretty near our ſcarlet. They pretended that the true purple ſhould ſtrike the ſight mildly and agreeably, in a manner not ſo forcibly as the carbuncle. Aſpectu leniter blandum, neque in oculos ut carbunculi vibrat, Plin. lib. ix. cap. 41.

Moſes uſed much wool of a purple colour in the works of the tabernacle, and in the ornaments of the high-prieſt. Purple was the colour uſed by princes and great men, by way of diſtinction. Judges viii. 26. it is obſerved, that they made Gideon a preſent of the purple habit, which the kings of Midian uſed to wear. The ſpouſe of the virtuous woman was cloathed with ſilk and purple, Prov. xxxi. 22. The wicked rich man of the goſpel, was cloathed in purple and fine linen, Luke xvi. 19. We ſee by Jeremiah and Baruch, that the Babylonians put upon their idols habits of a purple and azure colour, Jerem. x. 9. Baruch, vi. 12, 71. When Daniel had explained the writing that God cauſed to appear to Belſhazzar, while at his impious feaſt in Babylon; he (Daniel) was cloathed in purple, and adorned with a chain of gold, Dan. v. 7. Alexander Balas, king of Syria, ſent to Jonathan Maccabeus, a crown of gold, and a habit of purple, allowing him to take the title of the King's Friend, 1 Macc. x. 20. Laſtly, to make the royalty of our Saviour ridiculous and contemptible, they cloathed him with a purple robe at the time of his paſſion, Mark xv. 17. Matth. xxvii. 28.

PUTEOLI Pozzolo, a city in the kingdom of Naples, eight miles from that city: here St. Paul abode ſeven days. Acts xxviii. 13.

PUTIEL, פוטיאל, God is my fatneſs; from פוט phut, and and אל el, God. This etymology is very uncertain, for this name is not Hebrew.

PUTIEL, or Phutiel, grand-father of the high-prieſt Phineas. Exod. vi. 25.

PYGARGUS, Πύγαργος. This word ſignifies *white-*RUMP. This name is given to a kind of eagle with a white tail. In Moſes, it ſignifies a four-footed animal, called in Hebrew דישון, diſhon, q. d. aſh-coloured; LXX. Πύγαργ&. The tragelaphus has a part of its back aſh-coloured; and Bellon, Ob. lib. ii. cap. 51. under this name, tragelaphus, deſcribes an animal with aſh-coloured ſpots, or ſtreaks, on its ſides. Pliny, lib. viii. cap. 53. ſpeaks of a kind of roe-buck called pygargus. Herodotus, Ælian, and Juvenal, mention it alſo. See Bochart. Animal. ſacr. p. 2. lib. iii. cap. 20. Probably this is what the Septuagint and Vulgate mean by pygargus.

PYGMIES, גמדים, Hebrew, gamadim, Ezek. xxvii. 11. Cubit-high; from גמד gamad, a cubit. The Septuagint, ſtout men, or guards; from the Greek word πυγμὴ, who fights with the fiſt: or rather, from πῆχυς, a cubit; or πυγμὴ, the meaſure from the elbow to the end of the hand.

PYGMIES. Mention is made of the pygmies in the Latin tranſlation of Ezekiel, xxvii. 11. גמדים gamadim. LXX. Φύλακες Watchmen. Theodot. Sym. Καὶ Μῆδοι Et Medi. Every one knows what the meaning of pygmies is. They were extremely little men, from whence the word pygmy comes, which ſignifies a man of the ſtature of a cubit, Quorum tota cohors cubito non altior uno.

and theſe were at continual war with the cranes, from whom they had much ado to defend themſelves. But it is believed, that theſe people never exiſted any where, but in the imagination and writings of the poets. The Hebrew word gamadim, has ſome relation to pymæi, ſince literally it may ſignify men of the ſtature of a cubit. But what ſhould pygmies do upon the walls of Tyre, in order to defend them? for there they are placed by Ezekiel, as being good warriors. The Seventy have rendered gamadim by guards, as if they had read ſomerim. Symmachus has rendered it by the Medes; as if he had read gam madai, and the Medes. The Chaldee makes it the Cappadocians. By a ſlight alteration, one might read gomarim inſtead of gamadim. But the gomarim are well known in Gen. x. 4. among the children of Japheth; and in Ezek. xxxviii. 6. where he mentions them as a very warlike people. Pliny, lib. ii. cap. 91. ſpeaks of a city of Phenicia called Gemade; unleſs there is ſome fault in the text, and inſtead of gamade ſhould be read gamale. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , on "Iſaiah, chap. xviii."

PYRAMIDS. The pyramids of Egypt are well known, by deſcriptions both ancient and modern. It is thought they were intended for tombs for the ancient kings of Egypt. Vide FRAGMENT, No. , on the Pyramids, &c.

PYRRUS, Πύῤῥος, ruddy, or red: from πύῤῥος.

PYRRHUS, father of Sopator, of the city of Berœa in Macedonia. Acts xx. 4.

PYTHON. The Grecians ſurnamed Apollo, Pythius, becauſe he killed the ſerpent Python. Ovid. Met. lib. i. v. 441. and, as Apollo was regarded as the god of divination and of oracles, thoſe who were ſuppoſed to have the gift of foretelling future events, were ſaid to be filled with the ſpirit of Python. The LXX. and Vulgate often uſe this expreſſion, to ſignify fortune-tellers, magicians, ventriloquiſts, ſuch as ſpoke out of their bellies. Among all theſe people were much knavery, imagination, and often diabolical operations. Under penalty of death God forbad his people to conſult this kind of wizards. Deut. xviii. 11. Levit. xx. 6. Saul had deſtroyed them, throughout the land of Iſrael, yet afterwards had the weakneſs to have recourſe to a ſorcereſs. 1 Sam. xxviii, 7. 8, &c. Moſes ordered thoſe to be ſtoned, who were poſſeſſed by the ſpirit of Python, or had a familiar ſpirit. Levit. xx. 27. The kings of Judah that forſook the Lord, ſuch as Manaſſeh, increaſed the number of wizards, 2 Kings xxi. 6. and the pious kings, ſuch as Joſiah, rooted them out of their country. 2 Kings xxiii. 24. St. Paul, in the city of Philippi, in Macedonia, found a pagan ſervant-maid that was poſſeſſed by a ſpirit of Python, and who brought great gain to her maſters by fortune-telling, he drove out this evil ſpirit, and delivered the maid from it; but this ſo provoked her maſters, that they raiſed a tumult againſt him on this account. Acts xvi. 16. The Hebrew Ob or Oboth, which the Vulgate tranſlates Python, ſignifies alſo a bottle of leather, wherein liquor was kept. Perhaps this name was given to wizards, becauſe when they were under their fits of enthuſiaſm, they ſwelled as big as a bottle, [Vide FRAGMENT, No. LVIII. page 107.] and their words proceeded, as it were, from the bottom of their ſtomach; whence the Latins called them ventriloqui, and the Greeks, engaſtrimythoi; i. e. people that ſpeak out of their bellies. Iſaiah xxix. 4. ſays, that Jeruſalem being afflicted and brought low, ſhall ſpeak as it were out of the hollow of the earth, as a Pythoneſs. She ſhall groan, and bring out her words, as from the bottom of a cave.

Q.

QUADRATUS. Numidius, or Caius Umidius Durmius Quadratus, was governor of Judea A. D. 51. A. D. 52 he ſuppreſſed the troubles in Judea, by putting to death ſuch of the Samaritans and Jews as had taken up arms againſt the Romans. He ſent Cumanus to Rome, with a tribune called Celer, to give account of their conduct to the emperor Claudius: alſo Jonathan ſon of Annas, Ananias the high-prieſt, and Ananus ſon of Annas; who were carried thither in chains, as being principal authors of the ſedition. Quadratus's ſucceſſor was Corbulo, whom Nero ſent A. D. 60, after the death of Quadratus. See Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xx. cap. 5. De bello, lib. ii. cap. 21. p. 795.

II. QUADRATUS. An apologiſt for the Chriſtian religion, under the emperor Adrian. Euſeb. Chronic. an. 127. Euſeb. hiſt. lib. iii. cap. 37. He had been inſtructed by the apoſtles, was a prophet, and full of the Holy Ghoſt. Many modern interpreters ſuppoſe him to be the angel of Philadelphia, whom Jeſus Chriſt addreſſes Rev. iii. 7, 8, 9. But it is not eaſy to reconcile this opinion with the chronology and hiſtory of this holy man. Euſebius ſays, he was already famous in the church, in the time of Trajan. He was of the number of thoſe apoſtolical men, who, following the zeal of their maſters, built up the church; and ſowed every where the ſeed of the word. They began by diſtributing their ſubſtance to the poor, and then went from province to province, preaching Jeſus Chriſt to them who had not heard of him. Their preaching was generally attended with miracles.

Quadratus is the firſt who compoſed an apology for the Chriſtian religion: which he preſented himſelf to Adrian, A. D. 126, according to the Chronicon of Euſebius. St. Jerom, de Vir. illuſt. calls this apology a very uſeful work, full of ſtrong reaſoning, repleniſhed with the light of faith, and worthy a diſciple of the apoſtles. This piece had power enough to extinguiſh the perſecution then raiſed againſt the church. We have only a few fragments of it. St. Jerom, Ep. 84. and the Latin martyrologies, make Quadratus biſhop of Athens, under Marcus Aurelius, and to have ſuffered martyrdom in the perſecution of thoſe times. Others think that Quadratus, biſhop of Athens, was very different from the apologiſt. See M. de Tillemont, tom. ii. Perſecution under Adrian, art. vii. p. 237. and note 7.

QUAILS. God gave quails to his people in the wilderneſs, on two occaſions. Firſt, in the wilderneſs of Sin, or Zin, a few days after they had paſſed the Red Sea. Exod. xvi. 1—23. A ſecond time, at the encampment, called in Hebrew Kibroth-hataavah, or, the graves of luſt. Numb. xi. 32. Pſal. cv. 40. Both of theſe happened in the ſpring, when the quails paſs from Aſia into Europe. Then they are found in great quantities on the coaſts of the Red Sea and the Mediterranean. God, by a wind, drove them within, and about, the camp of Iſrael; and in this the miracle conſiſts: that they were brought ſo ſeaſonably to this place, and in ſo great numbers, as to ſuffice above a million of perſons longer than a month. Exod. xvi. 13. The Hebrew word ſhalav, שלו, Chald. סליו Selau. Syr. סלוי Salvai. Arab. סלוי Salva. LXX. Ὀρτωγομήτραν Coturnix, ſignifies a quail, by the agreement of the ancient interpreters. The Chaldee, Syriac, and Arabic call them nearly by the ſame name. Yet Mr. Ludolf, in his Ethiopic Hiſtory, lib. i. cap. 13. ſec. 96. takes great pains to ſhew, that Moſes did not mean quails, but locuſts.

The following are his reaſons: he obſerves, that ſelav may derive from a root that ſignifies abundance; which agrees better with locuſts than quails. He owns, that the oriental verſions explain it by quails: but he maintains, that they did not truly underſtand the text. Porphyry, de abſtin. lib. i. cap. 55. obſerves, that an army in Africa being ready to periſh by famine, was ſeaſonably relieved by a cloud of locuſts, on which they fed. Ludolf conjectures, that a like event ſatisfied the deſires of the Iſraelites in the deſarts of Arabia. There is an almoſt incredible number of locuſts in the Eaſt; the people of Arabia live on the locuſts brought by the wind; they lay them on heaps, preſerve them in ſalt, eat of them gladly, and ſerve them up even at kings' tables. They are of an excellent taſte, very wholſome, and nouriſhing.

Sometimes the locuſts fly in the air in ſuch vaſt quantities as to darken the ſun, and to cover the harveſters as with a cloud of ill omen. Plin. lib. x. cap. 23. And when they deſcend on a country, they leave nothing untouched; they gnaw, devour, and blaſt every thing. Whole nations have been compelled to forſake their habitations, to avoid theſe troubleſome inſects.

Ludolf ſhews, that the account of Moſes is favourable to his opinion. Firſt; locuſts are good to eat, and are expreſsly allowed by the law. Secondly; the wind brought the animals, mentioned by that law-giver, into the camp: this agrees much better to locuſts than to quails. Thirdly; that they were ſcattered over the field, and covered the ground, a day's journey; that they were of the depth of a cubit; that they gathered them up on heaps; that they filled ten omers with them. Theſe expreſſions are very difficult to reconcile, on the common ſuppoſition of quails, but may be naturally underſtood of locuſts. Fourthly; theſe animals were ſpread all round the camp; or, according to the Vulgate Numb. xi. 32. they dried them all round the camp: which cannot be underſtood of quails; for they would ſoon have been full of worms, had they been thus expoſed.

But what overthrows all theſe conjectures, is, firſt, the conſent of the languages, and oriental verſions, which have underſtood quails by the name of ſelav. The LXX. Joſephus, and all commentators both ancient and modern, underſtand it ſo. Beſides, the Hebrews aſked Moſes for fleſh, being diſguſted with manna; and would they have been contented with locuſts?

Mahomet, in his Alcoran, ſpeaks of the miracle that God performed in favour of the Iſraelites, by ſending them fleſh. He makes uſe of the ſame word with Moſes. [Moſes ſays ſelav, and Mahomet ſays ſalva.] One of his interpreters, Houſſain Vaez, vide Bibl. Orient. p. 749. col. 1. ſays, that the word ſalva does not only ſignify quails, but alſo honey. Another interpreter ſays, that the word ſalva is uſually explained by ſumani, which is a word more in uſe among the Arabians, to ſignify a quail; which the Perſians alſo call ſemavah. However, adds he, this is a bird peculiar to Arabia Felix, larger than a ſparrow, and ſmaller than a pigeon, which has neither ſinews, bones, nor veins, and of which the fleſh is very agreeable. He ſays beſides, that the wind which God ſent was ſo violent, that it broke the wings of thoſe birds, and made them fall like a very thick cloud into the camp of the Iſraelites, who took them with their hands, and ate them along with the manna. What they tell us of this bird, that it has neither bones, veins, or ſinews, muſt be underſtood as an hyperbole, to expreſs its being very fat and tender, ſomething like our fig-peckers, ortolans, and reb-breaſts.

QUARREL. Solomon compares him, that, going along the ſtreets, meddles with the quarrels of people unknown, to one that will take a dog by the ears, and ſo will raſhly expoſe himſelf to be bit. This is what we may ſee any day, in public quarrels. Thoſe that endeavour to mediate a peace among perſons engaged in a controverſy; inſtead of reconciling them, do but provoke them, and irritate them ſtill more, and often meet with anger on both ſides for intermeddling. But it muſt not be concluded from hence, that we ought never to endeavour to reconcile our neighbours; yet it muſt be attempted with a great deal of prudence, caution, and charity, for fear of increaſing that evil which we undertake to appeaſe.

QUARTODECIMANS. This name was given to certain heretics, who kept Eaſter-day always on the fourteenth day of the moon, on whatſoever day it happened: whereas moſt of the churches kept it on the Sunday following the fourteenth day of the moon. The Quartodecimans were a branch of the Montaniſts and Quintilians, according to Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 50. c. 1. Yet they were not properly treated as heretics, but ſince the council of Nice, which ordained, that all the churches ſhould keep Eaſter-day on the Sunday that followed the fourteenth day of the moon. Concil. Nic. can. 21. Arab.

QUARTUS, a diſciple of the apoſtles, mentioned by St. Paul, Rom. xvi. 23. The Greeks keep his feaſt November 10, and ſay he was one of the ſeventy diſciples, and biſhop of Berythus. The Latins, as Uſuard, Ado, &c. place his feaſt November 3.

QUEEN of Heaven: this name the Hebrew idolaters gave to the moon. Jeremiah, vii. 17, &c. ſays, The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough to make cakes to the queen of heaven. And chap. xliv. ver. 16, 17, 18. the diſobedient Iſraelites tell the ſame prophet; We will certainly do whatſoever thing goeth out of our own mouth, to burn incenſe unto the queen of heaven.—But ſince we left off to burn incenſe to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been conſumed by the ſword, and by the famine. We think it to be the meni of Iſaiah, lxv. 11. But ye are they that prepare a table for that troop, and that furniſh the drink-offering unto that number. The Hebrew ſays, table for Gad, and drink-offering to meni. See MENI. We take all theſe to be the moon, Aſtarte, Trivia, Hecate, Diana, the heavenly Venus, Iſis, according to the different ſuperſtitions of the people. They placed altars to her on the plat-forms or roofs of their houſes, at the corners of the ſtreets, near their doors, and in groves. They offered cakes to her, kneaded with oil or honey, and made libations to her, with wine and other liquors. The rabbins think they printed upon theſe cakes the reſemblance of a ſtar, or half-moon.

QUESTION. Quæſtio. This word is often put for diſpute, difficulty, ſuit at law. Si quid natum fuerit quæſtionis, if any difficulty ſhould ariſe. St. Paul would have his diſciples Timothy and Titus, to avoid vain queſtions, or vain diſputes, which are only concerning genealogies, and the ſenſe of the law, becauſe this kind of queſtions is more apt to give offence than to edify. The wiſe man ſays, that he knew God created man upright; but that he has perplexed himſelf with a thouſand queſtions, and incumbered himſelf with a thouſand tireſome and intricate diſputes.

QUESTION, or puniſhment. It was a cuſtom among the Romans, to put criminals to the queſtion, by whipping them, not with rods, but with whips, or ſcourges. Some think, that the offender was ſtripped to his waiſt, and that his hands were tied to a pillar, that his back might be ſtretched out to receive the blows. Others will have it, that his hands were faſtened to a ſtake drove into the ground, of a foot and a half, or two feet high; ſo that the criminal ſtooping with his face towards the ground, might preſent his naked back to the ſoldiers. Laſtly, others are of opinion, that the ſoldiers tied him neck and heels, and held him ſtretched out upon the ground, while other ſoldiers beat him all over his body. This way of whipping is ſtill common among the orientals.

When St. Paul made an oration to the people at Jeruſalem, and related to them the manner of his converſion, they liſtened to him very attentively till he came to that part of his diſcourſe, wherein he told them that God had ſent him to preach to the Gentiles; then they raiſed their voices, and cried out, that he was not fit to live, and were going to put him to death. Lyſias the tribune gave command, that he ſhould be put to the queſtion; but when they were binding him, Paul aſked a centurion there preſent, is it lawful for you to ſcourge a Roman citizen, being uncondemned? The centurion acquainted the tribune with it, who preſently came to Paul, and aſked him, whether he was a Roman? he continued to affirm it; then thoſe that were to put him to the queſtion retired, and Lyſias cauſed him to be unbound.

QUINTILIUS VARUS. It is not poſitively known whether Quintilius Varus was governor of Syria the year of our Saviour's birth, but, however, this is the general opinion. See Note 4 of M. de Tillemont, upon J. C. tom. i. p. 447. He governed with great wiſdom and moderation to the time of the baniſhment of Archelaus, in the ſixth year of Chriſt. He ſucceeded Saturninus in the government of Syria, and was ſucceeded by Quirinius or Cyrenius. Varus preſided in the aſſembly in which Antipater, ſon of Herod, was judged. He ſupported the intereſts of Archelaus, another of Herod's ſons, before Auguſtus, to procure him the kingdom of Judea. He afterwards appeaſed the troubles raiſed in the country of Judea, by the avarice of Sabinus. Being recalled from his government of Syria, he and his whole army periſhed in Germany, in the ninth year of Jeſus Chriſt. Auguſtus tore his cloaths at this news, and let his beard and hair grow for ſeveral months; ſo much he laid this loſs to heart. Vell. Paterc. lib. ii. cap. 117. Dio. lib. v. p. 585. Sueton. lib. ii. cap. 23.

QUIRINIUS. See CYRENIUS.

QUOTIDIAN. Give us this day our daily bread, or our quotidian bread, or every day's bread. The Latin text of St. Luke reads it; panem noſtrum quotidianum. But that of St. Matthew has, panem noſtrum ſuperſubſtantialem da nobis hodie. The Greek word επιουσιος, epiouſios, made uſe of by the evangeliſts, may ſignify either ſuperſubſtantialis, or ſufficiens, or futurus, craſtinus. St. Jerom obſerves, that the Hebrew goſpel uſed by the Nazarenes, had machus, which ſignifies the next day, or the future. Give us our bread, or food neceſſary to ſuſtain us to morrow, or for for the time to come. We have recourſe to thy providence for our ſupport for the time to come. Theophylact and Suidas, give us our ſufficient bread, the nouriſhment we have need of. Epiouſios in this place, is oppoſed to περιουσιος, periouſios, ſuperfluous. Thoſe that contend for the reading which has ſuperſubſtantialem, maintain, that in this prayer Chriſtians do not aſk of God the nouriſhment of the body, but that of the ſoul, the knowledge of the will of God, his word, his grace, the holy euchariſt: whatever contributes to ſpiritual invigoration and ſupport.

R.

RAAMAH, רעמה, ραγμὰ, greatneſs, thunder; from רעם raham: otherwiſe, ſome ſort of evil, or bruiſing, or company; from רוע ruah, evil, &c. or רעה rahah, or rohe, ſociety; and the adverb מה mah; ſome ſort.

I. RAAMAH, Reema, or Regma, the fourth ſon of Cuſh, who peopled a country of Arabia, from whence they brought to Tyre, ſpices, precious ſtones, and gold. We think this country to have been in Arabia Fœlix, at the entrance into the Perſian gulph. Gen. x. 7. Ezek. xxvii. 22.

II. RAAMAH, or Raamias; returned from Babylon with Zerubbabel. Nehem. vii. 7.

RAAMIAH, רעמיה, ρεεμαὶ, thunder of the Lord; from רעם raham, thunder, and יה jah, the Lord.

RAAMSES, רעמסס, thunder; from רעם raham: otherwiſe, reproach of the moth; from ham, to reproach, and סס ſas, a moth: otherwiſe, he that deſtroys or diſſolves evil; from מסס maſas, to diſſolve, and רוע ruah, evil. This word is not Hebrew.

RAAMSES, or Rameſſes, a city built by the Hebrews, during their ſervitude in Egypt, and which probably took its name from a king of Egypt. Gen. xlvii. 11. Exod. i. 11. Its ſituation is not known. Herodotus ſpeaks of Papremiſus, in Lower Egypt, and Pliny joins together the Ramiſians and Patamians; which are probably the inhabitants of the two cities Pithom and Raamſes. He joins them to the Arabians bordering on Egypt. Herodot. lib. 2. cap. 59, 71, & 165. Plin. lib. 6. cap. 27. Vide FRAGMENT, No. p.

RAB, Rabbin, Rabban, Rabbam; a name of dignity among the Hebrews: given to maſters and doctors, to the chief of a claſs, and to the principal officers of the court of a prince: e. gr. Nebuzaradan, general of the army of king Nebuchadnezzar, is always called Rab Tabachim, רב טבחים Magiſter Laniorum, the maſter of the butchers, cooks, or guards. 2 Kings xxv. 8, 20. & paſſim. Jer. xxxix. 9, 10. & paſſim. Eſther i. 8. ſays, that Ahaſuerus appointed a Rab of his court over every table of his gueſts, to take care that nothing ſhould be wanting. Daniel i. 3. ſpeaks of Aſhpenaz the רב סריסים Rab Sariſim, i. e. Rab of the eunuchs of Nebuchadnezzar, and of the Rab of the Saganim, or chief of the governors, or peers. Dan. ii. 48. This prophet himſelf was preferred to be chief of the interpreters of dreams, or Rab of the Chartumim. Dan. v. 11. It appears that this name came originally from the Chaldees; for before the captivity, when mention is made of Judea, we do not find it uſed, but only in reference to the officers of the king of Babylon.

Rab or Rabban, properly ſignifies maſter, or one who excells in any thing; Rabbi or Rabbani, is my maſter. Rabbin is the plural. Thus Rab is of greater dignity than Rabbi, and Rabbin or Rabbim, is of greater dignity than Rab or Rabbi.

There were ſeveral gradations among the Jews before the dignity of Rabbin, as among us, before the degree of doctor. The head of a ſchool, was called Cacham, or wiſe; he who aſpired to the doctorſhip, had the name of Bachur, or Elou; he frequented the ſchool of the Chacham. When further advanced, he had the title of Cabar of the Rab, or maſter's companion. Laſtly, When further ſkilled in the knowledge of the law and traditions, he was called only Rab, or Rabin, and Morena, our maſter.

Leo of Modena ſays, Cerem. Jud. p. 2. cap. 3. that among the Jews it was a kind of ſhame, a preſumptuous piece of vanity, to be known to ſeek for the doctorſhip. There was no examination for it; but when a man was found to have ſtudied the oral law, he was ſaluted by the publick voice with the title of Cacham; or wiſe. At leaſt ſuch is the cuſtom among the eaſtern Jews; whereas in Germany and Italy, he receives this title from the moſt ancient of the Rabbins, who either by word of mouth, or writing, declares him Cabar of the Rab, companion of the Rab: or Morena, maſter.

The Cacham Rab, or maſter Rabbin, decides differences, determines things allowed or forbidden, and judges in religious, and even in civil controverſies. He celebrates marriages, and declares divorces. He preaches, if he has a talent for it, and is head of the academies. He has the head ſeat in the aſſemblies, and in the ſynagogues. He reprimands the diſobedient, and can excommunicate them; which procures him great reſpect.

In their ſchools they ſat upon raiſed chairs, and their ſcholars were ſeated at their feet. Hence it is, Acts xxii. 3. St. Paul is ſaid to have ſtudied at the feet of rabbi Gamaliel. Philo affirms, that among the Eſſenians, the children ſat in the ſchools at the feet of their maſters. Ambroſiaſter, on the firſt epiſtle to the Corinthians, informs us, that in their ſchools the Rabbins ſat in their chairs, the moſt advanced of their ſcholars ſat by them on benches, and the leaſt ſat on the ground on mats. The Jews are uſed to ſay to their children, by way of Proverb, Roll yourſelves in the duſt of your maſters feet; inſtead of ſaying, Frequent their ſchools diligently, and ſit down at their feet. Pirke Avoth. cap. 1. § 4. Very learned men think, that they never ſat down in the temple, but only in the ſynagogues. They will have it, that when our Saviour was ſitting in the midſt of doctors, it was only in a ſynagogue adjoining to the temple. See Deytin. Obſerv. tom. 3. cap. 30. Our Saviour upbraids the Rabbins and maſters of Iſrael with their vanity, and eagerneſs to have the firſt places at feaſts, and the head ſeats in the ſynagogues; alſo with their being ſaluted in the ſtreets, and deſiring to be called Rabbi, my maſter.

The ſtudies of the Rabbins are employed, either on the text of the law, or the traditions, or the Cabala; theſe three objects form ſo many different ſchools, and different ſorts of Rabbins. Thoſe who chiefly apply to the letter of Scripture, are called Caraites, q. Literaliſts. Thoſe who chiefly ſtudy the traditions and oral laws of the Talmud, are called Rabbaniſts. Thoſe who give themſelves to their ſecret and myſterious divinity, letters and numbers, are called Cabaliſts; q. Traditionaries.

Leo of Modena ſays, p. 5. cap. 1. that the Caraites keep to the Pentateuch only, rejecting the explications, paraphraſes, or conſtitutions of the Rabbins. This author adds, that they were originally Sadducees, but are reformed and meliorated; and, that they might not become odious to all ſorts of religions, they have forſaken ſuch opinions of the Sadducees as gave moſt offence, and eſpouſed ſome of the moſt ancient of the traditions. Nevertheleſs, the Rabbiniſts mortally hate the Caraites, and treat them only as Mamzerim, or baſtards. They refuſe all alliance with them, nor will they converſe with them; and though a Caraite ſhould deſire to become a Rabbiniſt, the other Jews would not receive him.

M. Simon, in his ſupplement to that paſſage of Leo of Modena now cited, believes with F. Morin, that the Caraites did not appear among the Jews until after the publication of the Talmud, i. e. about the eighth century; and that, the moſt underſtanding Jews, at that time, being deſirous to oppoſe the multitude of whimſies then current under the ſpecious name of Moſes, were called Caraites, by the defenders of thoſe traditions; inſinuating that they adhered only to the letter of Scripture. We have but few works of the Caraites. M. Simon quotes ſome in MS. It is to be wiſhed that ſome of them were printed; they would be much more uſeful than thoſe of the Rabbiniſts, wherein we find a vaſt number of trifles, vain, frivolous, and childiſh explications, founded on pretended traditions of the ancients. The Rabbins are generally very ignorant in hiſtory, chronology, philology, antiquity, and geography. They underſtand the holy language but imperfectly. They know not the true ſignification of a multitude of words in the ſacred text. They are prodigiouſly conceited about their traditions, ſo that there is very little profit in reading them; and experience ſhews, that moſt who have applied themſelves to peruſe their books, have been but little benefited by them, and have entertained a perfect contempt of their underſtanding and their works.

Beſide the names of Rab, and Rabbi, or Rabboni, which the Jewiſh doctors aſſume, they took alſo thoſe of Maran, lord; More, doctor; Cacam, ſage; Marbitz Thora, couſin to the law, becauſe the law reſted on them; Dom, or ſir. It was chiefly in Spain that they took, formerly, this laſt title, which is ſtill given to perſons of great diſtinction.

The chief function of the Rabbins is to preach in the ſynagogue, to make publick prayers there, and to interpret the law. They have the power of binding and looſing, i. e. of declaring what is forbid, and what is allowed. When the ſynagogue is poor and ſmall, there is but one Rabbin, who at the ſame time diſcharges the offices of a judge and a teacher. But when the Jews are numerous, and powerful, they appoint three paſtors, and a houſe of judgment, where all their civil affairs are determined. Then the Rabbin applies himſelf to inſtruction only, unleſs it be thought proper to call him into the council, to give his advice; in which caſe he takes the chief place.

They

They have the authority of creating new Rabbins. They pretend, that formerly every doctor had a right of giving this title to his diſciple: but that in the time of Hillel they relinquiſhed this power, to him, and reſtrained themſelves to aſking leave of the head of the captivity, at leaſt in the eaſt. At preſent they content themſelves with inſtalling the new Rabbin in an aſſembly of ſeveral doctors. Sometimes it is ſufficient for one Rabbin alone to lay on his hands, when it is difficult for ſeveral to aſſemble. In Germany they are created by word only, and often, at their creation, their power is reſtrained to certain functions, and others are excluded, E. gr. to teach the law, but not to judge; neither were they to exerciſe thoſe functions to which they were appointed, unleſs their maſter was abſent.

The Rabbins omitted nothing to procure credit, authority, and reſpect, among the people, who yet were generally inclined to deſpiſe them. They maintain, that their laws and commands were not to be tranſgreſſed, but at the hazard of the lives of the offenders. They inſtance the example of Rabbi Jochanan, who made of one of his diſciples a heap of bones, becauſe he would not believe what he taught him. They boaſt alſo, that a Rabbin cannot be damned. They prove it by Rabbin Acher, who fell into capital errors and crimes, which were enough to have plunged him into damnation. It is ſaid, he even derogated from the power of the Supreme Being, that he admitted of two principles, that he had blaſphemed the angel Metatron, that he had rode on horſeback on the ſabbath-day, that he had tore to pieces a young ſcholar, and had ſent the parts of his body to thirteen Levites. Nevertheleſs, Rabbi Meir, his diſciple, maintained, that he was not damned, but only detained in purgatory; which he proved by cauſing ſmoke to come out of his tomb on a ſabbath day. Another Rabbin cauſed this ſmoke to ceaſe, and it was concluded from thence, that he was ſaved. Excerpta Gemaræ apud Hott. p. 101, &c.

The Jews have books compoſed by their Rabbins. Theſe are written in Hebrew, though different from that of the Bible: having a great mixture of words and phraſes taken from foreign languages. When their writings are not on Bible ſubjects, they have been obliged to borrow other terms, to expreſs what they treat of; as, in aſtronomy, phyſic, theology; but their ſtyle is ſtill in imitation of ſcripture. Their manner of pronouncing Hebrew is different: the Italians pronounce it otherwiſe than the Germans, and the Germans differ from the Spaniards and the Levantines. The characters they commonly uſe in their writings are not ſo beautiful as thoſe of the Bible: they are rounder, and more of a running-hand. And he that reads and underſtands very well the Hebrew of the Bible, will neither read nor underſtand the Hebrew of the Rabbins. The writing and ſtyle of theſe doctors is a particular ſtudy.

Nine claſſes of doctors are diſtinguiſhed among the Hebrews. Abrabanel, proem. in lib. Nachalatathrooth. Morin. lib. ii. Exercit. Bibl. exercit. 2. c. 1. (1) That of Moſes, Joſhua, Eleazar, and the ſeventy elders choſen by Moſes, to aſſiſt him in the government. (2) That of the ancients, who ſucceeded Joſhua and Eleazar, comprehending, according to them, the judges, ſenators, and ſanhedrim. (3) That of the prophets. (4) The great ſynagogue, compoſed of ſix ſcore perſons, after the return from the captivity. (5) The Tanaim, mentioned in the Miſhna. (6) The Amoraim, or commentators on the Miſhna. (7) The Giouns, or eminent doctors. (8) The Seboreans, or doubters. (9) The Gaons.

We muſt not be ſurprized by the pompous titles the Hebrews give their doctors, nor by their pretended antiquity. They would be very much puzzled to prove that ſucceſſion of Rabbins they boaſt of, from Moſes to the preſent times. Abraham Ben-David, who lived at Peſcaire at the beginning of the twelfth century, has made a ſucceſſion of Rabbins from Adam down to his own time. Abrah. Ben-David, Hallevi Sepher Hakkabal. Vide Bartolocci, tom. i. p. 18. Abraham Zaccuth Iuchaſim, a Jew, expelled Spain with the other Jews, compoſed a catalogue of them from the beginning of the world to A. D. 1500. Gedaliah alſo made a traditional chain of them down to A. D. 1586, in which he lived. But there is ſo great a difference in the calculations of theſe hiſtorians, they fall into ſuch anachroniſms, they diſagree ſo much in the names of theſe doctors, that it is eaſy to ſee they have no certain principles, nor any diſtinct knowledge of what they advance.

In vain do the Rabbins boaſt of the antiquity of their ſchools, and doctors; when we ſearch into theſe things, we find nothing but confuſion and uncertainty. They ſpeak with great emphaſis of their ſchools at Japhne and Tiberias, in Paleſtine, after the deſtruction of the temple; and of thoſe of Nahardea, Pundebita, and Sora, in the eaſt. They produce liſts of doctors who have taught therein; but all theſe are ſo ill put together, that nothing can be concluded from them. They have certain books, of whoſe antiquity they very much brag; the Midraſchin, for example, or Commentaries on Scripture, which they ſay were compoſed by the Rabbins in the time of Judas the Holy, A. D. 215. Yet the Gemara is quoted therein, which was compoſed long after the Midraſchin Rabboth, or grand commentaries, imputed to Nachmanides, who lived, they ſay, at the end of the third century; and yet mention is made there of the endeavour of the emperor Julian, to rebuild the temple of Jeruſalem. The ſentences of the fathers, or Pirke Aboth, publiſhed under the name of Eleazar, who lived under Gamaliel the ſecond, is much more modern than that time, as appears in the work itſelf.

We have ſpoken of the paraphraſts Onkelos, Jonathan, Joſeph the Blind; of the Gemara, the Talmud, and the Miſna. Vide alſo Bartolocci, Bibliotheca Rabbinica; and Baſnage's Hiſt. Jews, tom. vii. lib. x. cap. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

The moſt famous Rabbins that they quote to us, are Nathan, Abenezra, Abraham Hallevi, Maimonides, or Moſes, the ſon of Maimon, Joſeph and David Kimchi, and Solomon Jarchi. But all theſe are modern. Nathan, head of the academy of Rome, who explained the terms of the Talmud, lived at the beginning of the twelfth century. Aben-ezra died A. D. 1174; his explications of ſcripture are literal and grammatical, and are in great eſteem among commentators. Abraham Hallevi was cotemporary with Aben-ezra. Maimonides was born at Corduba, A. D. 1131. His father Maimon pretended to be of the race of David. It is commonly affirmed, that Maimonides is the firſt of the doctors among the Jews who left off trifling. He is ſometimes called Moſes the Egyptian, becauſe he left Spain and went to ſettle in Egypt: he died at the beginning of the thirteenth century.

Joſeph Kimchi, who lived A. D. 1160, has compoſed commentaries on ſcripture, which are in MS. in the Vatican library; and a book againſt the Chriſtian religion. We know that he dwelt at Narbonne, but it is diſputed whether he were a Spaniard or a Frenchman. He had two ſons, David and Moſes Kimchi, both famous for learning.

David Kimchi, ſon of Joſeph Kimchi, applied himſelf much to grammar, and his works are well eſteemed. The Jews alluding to his name, which ſignifies Miller, or white with meal, ſay by way of proverb, that there is no meal without the miller (Kimchi) i. e. there is no real knowledge without Kimchi. Moſes Kimchi, his brother, compoſed a work entitled, The Garden of Pleaſure, which is in MS. in the Vatican library.

Solomon Jarchi was a native of Troy, in Champagne, but had the ſurname of Jarchi, or Jarki, i. e. Lunatic, becauſe he taught in the academy of Lunel, in Languedoc, where the Jews had an academy in the twelfth century. He chiefly applied himſelf to ſtudy the Talmud; and his commentary on the Gemara ſeemed ſo full of erudition, that he has been called the prince of commentators.

RABBAH, הרבה, ἀρεβὰ, great, or powerful; from רבב rabab, or רבה rabah: otherwiſe, contentious, or diſputative; from רוב rub.

RABBAH, or Arebba, a city, Joſhua xv. 60. Perhaps the Arba, or Hebron. St. Jerom ſpeaks of a city called Rebbo, bordering on Eleutheropolis eaſt.

RABBATH, רבת, ἄκρα ραββὰθ, great, a multitude.

RABBATH, or Rabbat-Ammon, Rabbat-Ammona, or Ammana; or Rabbath of the children of Ammon, afterwards called Philadelphia, the capital of the Ammonites, ſituated beyond Jordan. It was famous and conſiderable even in the time of Moſes, who tells us, that there was ſtill preſerved here the iron bedſtead of king Og. When David declared war againſt the Ammonites, his general Joab laid ſiege to Rabbath-Ammon, where the brave Uriah loſt his life, by a ſecret order given by this prince, that Uriah ſhould be forſaken in a place of danger. And when the city was reduced to the laſt extremity, David himſelf went thither, that he might have the honour of taking it. From this time it became ſubject to the kings of Judah. Afterwards the kings of Iſrael became maſters of it, with all the reſt of the tribes beyond Jordan.

But towards the concluſion of the kingdom of Iſrael, Tiglath-pileſer having taken away a great part of the Iſraelites from that country, the Ammonites were guilty of many cruelties againſt thoſe that remained; from whence it originated, that the prophets Jeremiah and Ezekiel pronounced very ſevere prophecies againſt Rabbath, the capital city of the Ammonites, and againſt the reſt of the country, which probably had their completion five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Antiochus the Great took the city of Rabbath-Ammon about A. M. 3786. Some time before this Ptolemy Philadelphus had given it the name of Philadelphia. Vide PHILADELPHIA.

RABBATH-MOAB, or Rabbath of the children of Moab, the capital of the Moabites, otherwiſe Rabbat-Moba, Ar, Areopolis, Ariel of Moab, Kirheres, or the city with brick walls. Jer. xlviii. 31, 36, &c. This city lay on the river Arnon, Arnon, by which it was divided; whence in the Kings it is called the two Ariels (or lions) of Moab; Ar or Arieh, ſignifying a lion. This city underwent many revolutions, and the prophets threatened it with great misfortunes. Vide AR. The Romans generally kept a garriſon at Areopolis, becauſe of the importance of this paſs over the Arnon. See the ancient Notitia, and Euſebius and Jerom on the word ARNON.

RABBI, ῥαββὶ, maſter, doctor; from רב rab.

RABBIN. See RAB.

RABBITH, רבית, multitude. See RABBOTH.

RABBITH, or Rabboth, a city of Iſſachar. Joſh. xix. 20.

RABBONI, ῥαββονὶ, a diminutive from Rabbi, Mark x. 51. [rather my maſter.]

RABBOTH, רבות, or Rabbith, multitude; from רבב rabah: otherwiſe, quarrel; from רוב rob: otherwiſe, uſury, loan; from מרבית marbith.

RAB-MAG, רב־מג, ῥαβμαγ, who overthrows or deſtroys a multitude; from מוג mug, to diſſolve, and רבב rabab, a multitude: otherwiſe, chief, or prince of diſſolution; from רב rab, maſter, and מוג mug, diſſolution: or, perhaps, chief of the magians. A Babyloniſh word.

RAB-MAG, or Reb-mag, one of the general officers of Nebuchadnezzar's army, at the taking of Jeruſalem. Jerem. xxxix. 3. A. M. 3416, ante A. D. 188. I imagine that רבמג Rab-mag ſignifies the chief of the Magi. 2 Kings xviii. 17. [As it may happen that the reader ſhould meet with the word RAB-MAG as ſignifying a Jewiſh Rabbi, we ſhall hint that it refers to Rabbi Maimonides-ben-Gerſhon, and is compoſed of the firſt letters of his name compounded into one word.]

RAB-SHAKEH, רב־שקה, cup-bearer of the prince, or chamberlain; from רב rab, maſter, and שקה ſhaka, to drink.

RAB-SHAKEH, or Rab-ſaces, i. e. the chief butler, or cup-bearer. This is a term of dignity, a title of office, and not a proper name. Rab-ſhakeh was ſent by Sennacherib, king of Aſſyria, to ſummon Hezekiah, which he did. Rab-ſhakeh ſpoke to him in a very haughty and inſolent manner, and told him in Hebrew, that he ought not to put any confidence, either in the king of Egypt, or in the Lord, who had ordered Sennacherib to march againſt Judea. See the hiſtory, 2 Kings xviii. 17.

After this Rab-ſhakeh returned to his maſter, who had quitted the ſiege of Lachiſh to meet the king of Egypt, then coming to aſſiſt Hezekiah. But in this march the deſtroying angel ſlew 185,000 of the army of Sennacherib; and he was obliged to haſten back to Nineveh, where he was ſlain by his own ſons. See HEZEKIAH and ISAIAH. Iſa. xxxvii. 36, 37, &c. 2 Kings xix. 35, 36, 37.

RAB-SARIS, רב־סריס, grand-maſter of the eunuchs; from רב rab, maſter, and סרים ſarim, eunuchs: or, gentleman of the chamber to the prince.

RAB-SARIS, or Rab-ſares, 2 Kings xviii. 17. רבסיריס Rab-ſiris, Princeps Eunuchus; chief of the eunuchs of king Sennacherib. Sent with Rab-ſhakeh and Tartan, to ſummon Hezekiah. Rab-ſaris is not a proper name, but a name of dignity, a title of office. Jer. xxxix. 3.

RACA, ῥακὰ. St. Jerom ſays, that this word takes its root from the word ריק rik, vain, trifling, without wit, brainleſs: otherwiſe, beggarly, a worthleſs fellow. It is thus tranſlated by the Vulgate, Judg. xi. 3. [vain men. Eng. Tr.]

RACA, or Racha; a Syriac word, ſignifying empty, vain, beggarly, fooliſh; and including a ſtrong idea of contempt. Jeſus Chriſt ſays, Matt. v. 22. whoever ſhall ſay to his neighbour, Raca, ſhall be condemned by the council or ſanhedrim. We read in the Hebrew, that when Jepthah was driven away by his brethren, he headed a company of worthleſs people, of Rakim, אנשים רקים LXX. Ἄνδρες κενοὶ, men of deſperate fortunes. Judg. ix. 4. xi. 3. So Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat, aſſembled a company of Rakim, beggars, ſons of Belial. 2 Chron. xiii. 7. Lightfoot aſſures us, that in the books of the Jews, the word Raca is a term of the utmoſt contempt; and is uſed to be pronounced with certain geſtures of indignation, as ſpitting, turning away the head, &c.

RACHAL, רכל, Injurious, from רכיל rakil: otherwiſe, perfumer, or trafficking; from רכל rakal.

RACHAL, a city of the tribe of Judah, whither David ſent ſome of the ſpoil taken from thoſe enemies, who had plundered Ziklag. 1 Sam. xxx. 29.

RACHEL, רחל, ſheep.

RACHEL, daughter of Laban, and ſiſter of Leah. When Jacob fled from his brother Eſau's reſentment, he arrived in Meſopotamia, near the city of Haran or Charres; finding ſome ſhepherds there, he inquired if they knew Laban the ſon of Nahor. They anſwered him, we know him well, and here is his daughter Rachel coming with the flock. Jacob introduced himſelf to her, was brought into Laban's houſe, and entertained with great civility. When he had been there about a month, Laban deſired him to propoſe ſome recompence for his ſervices. Jacob offered to ſerve him ſeven years for his younger daughter Rachel in marriage. Laban agreed agreed to this; but inſtead of Rachel, Laban impoſed her elder ſiſter Leah on Jacob.

Jacob, the next morning, made bitter complaints; Laban excuſed it; and offered, if he was willing to ſerve him another ſeven years, he ſhould have Rachel alſo. Jacob agreed, and when the week of Leah's wedding was over, he married Rachel. His affection for Rachel abated his kindneſs for Leah; but the Lord gave children to Leah, and none to Rachel. This excited Rachel's anger, and ſhe ſaid to Jacob, "give me children or elſe I die:" but, Jacob anſwered her with indignation. Rachel ſaid, take my maid Bilhah, that I may have children by her. Jacob taking Bilhah, ſhe brought forth a ſon, whom Rachel called Dan. Bilhah had another ſon the year following, whom Rachel named Naphthali.

At laſt the Lord remembered Rachel; ſhe brought forth a ſon, whom ſhe named Joſeph. Some years after, Jacob taking a reſolution to return to Canaan, Rachel, unknown to Jacob, privately took away the Teraphim, or domeſtic gods, (Vide TERAPHIM) of her father Laban. A. M. 2265, ante A. D. 1739. Gen. xxxi. Laban purſued Jacob; and charged him with this theft: Jacob wiſhed him to ſearch every tent, which he did, without finding any thing. Laban coming into Rachel's tent, ſhe hid the Teraphim under her camel's furniture, and ſat down upon it. When her father had ſearched every where in vain, ſhe ſaid, let not my lord be angry that I cannot riſe in his preſence, for the cuſtom of women is upon me. And thus ſhe evaded her father's inquiry.

When Jacob paſſed over the brook Jabok, he divided his wives and children into three companies. He put the two maids and their children firſt; Leah and her children ſecond; and laſtly, Rachel and her ſon Joſeph. This he did, that if Eſau ſhould aſſault the firſt company, the ſecond and third might eſcape; or if he ſhould not ſpare the ſecond, at leaſt, the third might avoid his fury. After he had paſſed over Jordan, as he advanced towards Hebron, and was not above a furlong—(the Hebrew reads Kiberath. See the article Kiberath-aretz.)—from Bethlehem, otherwiſe called Ephrath, Rachel was ſeized with the pains of child birth. She brought forth a ſon, whom ſhe named Ben-oni, or the ſon of my pain; but Jacob named him Benjamin, or the ſon of my right hand. Rachel died, and Jacob buried her in this place, erecting a monument, (Heb. מצבה Matzebah. LXX. Στήλην, a pillar, Hieronym. Titulum,) for her, which continued for ages.

They ſhew in Judea a monument which they call Rachel's; but it is too like the Turkiſh monuments to be ancient. It may have been renewed in latter ages. Rachel died A. M. 2265, or 2266, ante A. D. 1739.

The prophet Jeremiah, xxxi. 15. and after him St. Matthew, ii. 18. have put Rachel for the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, born from Joſeph the ſon of Rachel. In Rama (or, on the high places) was there a voice heard, lamentation and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted becauſe they are not. This prophecy was compleated when theſe two tribes were carried into captivity beyond the Euphrates. St. Matthew has accommodated this prophecy to what happened at Bethlehem, when Herod ſlew the children there. Then Rachel, who was buried there, might be ſaid to renew her cries and lamentations, for the death of ſo many infant innocents, ſacrificed to his jealouſy and cruelty!

RADDAI, רדי, ῥεδαὶ, that defends; from רדד radad, to ſtretch out: otherwiſe, that rules; from רדה radah.

RADDAI, fifth ſon of Jeſſe, and brother of David. 1 Chron. ii. 14.

RAGABA, a very ſtrong caſtle beyond Jordan. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 23. Probably Argob, mentioned in ſeveral places of the Old Teſtament. Deut. iii. 4, 13, 14. 1 Kings iv. 13. 2 Kings xv. 25. Euſebius places Argob in the canton of Geraſa, fifteen miles eaſt.

RAGAU, a large plain wherein Nebuchadnezzar, king of Nineveh, overcame Arphaxad, king of Media, in the country of Arioch, king of the Elymeans. Judith i. 5, 6. Theſe plains of Ragau are probably thoſe about Rages in Media.

RAGES, ῥάγοι, tempeſt, tumult, ſedition; from רגש ragaſh. A Mediſh word.

RAGES, or Ragæ, a city of Media, on the mountains of Ecbatana. Tob. i. 14. Tobit having depoſited ten talents with Gabael, a citizen of Rages, (or having lent it him, according to the Vulgate) ſent his ſon Tobias to fetch it. But, being obliged to ſtay at Ecbatana, to celebrate his marriage with Sara, the daughter of Raguel; Tobias deſired his companion, the angel Raphael, to go to Gabael, and bring the ten talents; which Raphael performed. Rages was a little day's journey from Ecbatana, on the ſouthern part of Media, in the mountains that divide this country from Parthia.

RAGUEL, רעואל, ſhepherd of God, or friend of God; from רעה rahah, or roheh, according to different readings: otherwiſe, rupture of God; from רוע ruah, rupture, or bruiſing, and אל el, God.

RAGUEL, otherwiſe Jethro. See JETHRO.

II. RAGUEL, father of Sara, and father-in-law to young Tobias. He dwelt in the city of Ecbatana, and was rich. Tob. vi. 11—14. Tobias coming to Ecbatana, the angel Raphael urged him to demand Sara to be his wife, becauſe he was the neareſt kinſman to Raguel, and therefore obliged to marry her, according to the law. Raguel conſented to this marriage, though not without difficulty, fearing it might happen to him, as it had happened to his daughter's ſeven former huſbands. But the Lord preſerving Tobias, Raguel kept him fifteen days, made a great feaſt, gave him half his eſtate, and ſecured the other half to him after his own death.

RAHAB, רהב, which is large and extended, or public place; from רהב rakab.

RAHAB, an hoſteſs of the city of Jericho, who received and concealed the ſpies ſent by Joſhua. The Hebrew calls her Zona. Joſh. ii. 1. אשה זונה LXX. Γυναικὸς πορνῆς, which St. Jerom and many others underſtand of a proſtitute. Others think ſhe was only an hoſteſs or inn-keeper, and that this is the true ſignification of the original word. (Ita Chald. Rabb. Lyr. Arias. Pagn. Titelman. Vide, ſi placet, Sanct. in 3 Reg. iii. 26.) Had ſhe been a woman of ill fame, would Salmon, a prince of the tribe of Judah, have taken her to wife? or could he have done it by the law? Beſides, the ſpies of Joſhua would hardly have gone to lodge with a common harlot, they who were charged with ſo nice and dangerous a commiſſion. Thoſe who maintain ſhe was an harlot pretend, that perhaps ſhe was one of thoſe women that proſtituted themſelves in honour of the pagan deities; as if this could extenuate her crime, or the ſcandal of her profeſſion, if ſhe was a public woman. [Such women are not called Zona, but Kadeſhah, in the Hebrew.]

But whatever was Rahab's profeſſion, when the ſpies were entered her houſe, notice was given to the king of Jericho, who ſent to Rahab to produce thoſe men: but ſhe hid them, and told the meſſengers, that ſuch men had been at her houſe, but when the gates of the city were ſhuting, they went out. Purſue them quickly, ſhe ſaid, and you may overtake them. They forthwith purſued them, but in vain, for they were concealed on the terrace of Rahab's houſe.

When the king's meſſengers were gone away, Rahab went up to the terrace, or roof, of her houſe, and ſaid to the ſpies, I know the Lord has delivered this country into your hands; promiſe me, now, that you will ſave the lives of me and my family, when you take this city. The ſpies promiſed her, with an oath, and bid her tie a ſcarlet ſtring to her window, that her houſe might be diſtinguiſhed when the Iſraelites ſhould enter Jericho.

Then ſhe let them down by a rope; for her houſe joined to the walls of the city; adviſing them to return by the mountains, for fear of meeting thoſe who had been ſent in queſt of them; and to continue on the mountains three days, in which time the meſſengers would return, after which they might proceed. The ſpies followed Rahab's counſel exactly, and at the end of three days arrived at Joſhua's camp, to whom they related all they had diſcovered at Jericho, and their promiſes to their benefactreſs Rahab. When Joſhua took the city, he ſent the two ſpies to the houſe of Rahab, to bring her out ſafe with all her relations. Rahab married Salmon, a prince of Judah, by whom ſhe had Boaz: from whom deſcended Obed, Jeſſe, and king David. Thus Jeſus Chriſt condeſcended to reckon this Canaanitiſh woman among his anceſtors. St. Paul magnifies the faith of Rahab. Heb. xi. 31.

RAHAB, רהב, proud; from רהב raab: otherwiſe, quarrelſome; from רוב rob.

II. RAHAB. The Pſalmiſt ſpeaks of another Rahab; Pſalm lxxxvii. 4. רהב אזכיד I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon, to them that know me. And Pſalm lxxxix. 10. Thou haſt broken Rahab in pieces, or the Egyptian. Iſaiah li. 9. and xxx. 7. uſes the ſame word Rahab to denote the deſtruction of Pharaoh and his army in the Red Sea. See alſo Job xxvi. 12. By his underſtanding he ſmiteth through the proud; Heb. Rahab. The moſt ſkilful commentators explain this of Egypt, and particularly of the Delta. This part of Egypt is ſtill called Rib or Rif, the pear, becauſe of its ſimilitude to the ſhape of this fruit. M. d'Herbelot ſays, in his Bibliotheca Orientalis, that the name Rif, is given to that part of Egypt, which begins at Cairo, and lies to the north.

St. Jerom and the ancient Greek interpreters have often tranſlated Rahab by pride, or the proud. But the fathers, and ſuch interpreters, miſunderſtood the original, as referring to Rahab, the woman of Jericho!

RAHAM, רחם, bowels, or fellow-ſuffering; from רחם racham.

RAHAM, ſon of Shema, father of Jorkoam, of the race of Caleb. 1 Chron. ii. 44.

RAIN. It ſhould ſeem by ſome expreſſions of Scripture, that the ancient Hebrews imagined rain to be derived from certain great reſervoirs above the heavens, which Moſes calls the ſuperior waters, by way of contradiſtinction from the inferior inferior waters, the ſea. Moſes ſays, that at the deluge, All the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the windows of heaven were opened. And Hoſea ſays, ii. 21. that in times of great drought the clouds cry to the Lord, beſeeching him to permit the waters which he keeps in his treaſuries and repoſitories, to fall into them and repleniſh them. In other places of Scripture, the clouds are deſcribed as great bottles, filled with waters ſupplied to them from the firmament. Even the dews themſelves are repreſented as proceeding from the ſuperior waters, His heavens ſhall drop down dew. Deut. xxxiii. 28. Job xxxvii. 11. xxxviii. 37. Pſalm xviii. 11. 2 Kings xxii. 12.

The ſacred writers often ſpeak of the rain of the former ſeaſon, and of the rain of the latter. Deut. xi. 14. I will give you the rain of your land in his due ſeaſon, the firſt rain and the latter rain. So Hoſea, vi. 3. He ſhall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and the former rain unto the earth. The Rabbins, and the generality of interpreters are of opinion, that the former rain, called in Hebrew יורה jorah, ſignifies the rain of the autumn, and that the latter rain, called in Hebrew מלקוש malkuſh, ſignifies the rain of the ſpring. The Jews began their year at autumn, which gives ſome probability to this opinion, which ſuppoſes jorah to ſignify the rain of autumn. But on the contrary, we think that jorah ſignifies the rain of ſpring, and malkuſh that of autumn. In Judea it commonly rained but in two ſeaſons, ſpring and autumn. Jorah is always put firſt, and Malkuſh afterward. The natural order is, that ſpring ſhould come before autumn. Malkuſh is derived from the verb lakaſh, which ſignifies to make a vintage, to delay, to put off, to gather in the after-marth, or the graſs that grows in the meadows in the latter ſeaſon. Beſides, malkuſh ſignifies a rain that is (as it were) earneſtly deſired by the earth, as coming after the dry ſeaſon of ſummer. Job xxix. 23. Prov. xvi. 15. Hoſ. vi. 3. Joel ii. 23. Joel ſays, He will cauſe to come down for you the rain, the former rain, jorah, and the latter rain, malkuſh, in the firſt month. But if malkuſh ſignifies the rain of autumn, it will be eaſily granted, that jorah muſt ſignify that of ſpring. The Septuagint have taken it in this ſenſe: and Heſiod has expreſſed the rain of the ſpring and autumn in words of the ſame import, as thoſe uſed by the Septuagint. Heſiod. Oper. & Dies. lib. ii. calls ὄμβρον ὤρινον, the rain of the ſpring; and ὀπώρινον ὄμβρον, the rain of autumn.

Moſes deſcribing the land of Canaan, and its advantages over Egypt, ſays, Deut. xi. 10, 11. that the land of Canaan is not like that of Egypt, where they are obliged to convey the water by artificial canals, and by great labour and induſtry, to water the fields and the gardens: whereas Paleſtine being a country of hills and valleys, is watered by rains from heaven. Whence it is that God promiſed the Iſraelites, to ſend them rain in due ſeaſon. Lev. xxvi. 3. On the other hand, Moſes threatens them, if they depart from their fidelity to God, to ſend them ſhowers of ſand and duſt. Deut. xxviii. 24. Vide FRAGMENTS, Nos. CLXXII. CLXXIII.

The Hebrews often compare ſpeech and diſcourſe to rain. Deut. xxxii. 2. Eccluſ. xxxix. 9. Job ſays, that in the time of his proſperity, he was attended to with great reſpect and eagerneſs; that his diſcourſe diſtilled like ſoft rain; Job xxix. 21, that his hearers expected it like rain, and opened their mouths, like the earth, when expecting the rains of the latter ſeaſon.

RAKEM, רקם, empty, or vain; from רק rak, or רקה rakah: otherwiſe, painting, or embroidery of ſeveral colours: or ſhadowings; from רקם rakam: or their ſpittle; from רקק rakak, ſpittle, and the pronoun מ am, theirs.

RAKEM, or Recem, ſon of Shereth. 1 Chron. vii. 16. Of the tribe of Gad, and family of Machir.

RAKKATH, רקת, ῥακκὰθ, empty, or ſpittle, or ſpit, or temple of the head; from רקק rakak, or רקה rakah.

RAKKATH, Raccath, or Reccath, a fenced city of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 35.

RAKKON, הרקון, ἡρεκκῶν, vain, void; from רקק rakak, or ריק rik: otherwiſe, mountain of lamentations and tears; from הר har, a mountain, and קון kun, to lament: otherwiſe, mountain of enjoyment; from קנה kanah, to poſſeſs, to enjoy.

RAKKON, Raccon, or Arecon, a city of Dan. Joſh. xix. 49.

RAM, רם, elevated, ſublime; from רום rum: or who rejects, or is rejected; from רמה ramah.

RAM, ſon of Hezron, and father of Aminadab, of Judah. 1 Chron. ii. 9.

II. RAM. Job xxxii. 2. Then was kindled the wrath of Elihu, the ſon of Barachel, the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram. In this place Ram is apparently put for Aram. Elihu was of the race of Buz, ſon of Nahor the Aramean, or Syrian.

RAM, or battering Ram. A well-known engine of war. Mentioned Ezekiel iv. 2. & xxi. 22. Nebuchadnezzar uſed it at the ſiege of Jeruſalem. Pliny ſays, lib. vii. cap. 56. it was invented by Epeus at the ſiege of Troy: but Vitruvius, lib. x. cap. 19. and Tertullian aſcribe this invention to the Carthaginians. Tertul. de Pallio. I believe

Ezekiel

Ezekiel is the earlieſt author that has mentioned this machine. Vide FRAGMENT, No. and plate of the "BATTERING RAM."

RAMAH, רמה, from ram.

RAMAH, or Aremah; this word ſignifies an eminence; from hence there are ſo many places in Paleſtine, named Rama, Ramath, Ramatha, Ramoth, Ramathaim, Romala, and Ramathan. Sometimes the ſame place is called Rama, Ramatha, Ramoth, and Ramathaim, all theſe words only ſignifying an eminence, or high ſituation. Sometimes Rama or Ramoth is joined to another name, to determine the place of ſuch city, or eminence. Laſtly, Ramah is ſometimes put only for a high place, and ſignifies neither city nor village. The following are the chief places mentioned in Scripture by this name.

RAMAH, a city of Benjamin, between Gaba and Bethel, toward the mountains of Ephraim, ſix miles from Jeruſalem north. Jerom places it near Gaba, ſeven miles from Jeruſalem: it was, in his time, only a ſmall village. This city ſtood on the road from Samaria to Jeruſalem; for this reaſon Baaſha, king of Iſrael, cauſed it to be fortified, to obſtruct the paſſage from the land of Judah into that of Iſrael. Joſephus calls it Ramathan. Joſh. xviii. 25. Judg. iv. 5. xix. 13. Euſeb. in locis. Hieron. in Oſee v. Idem in Sophon. i. 1 Kings xv. 17. 2 Chron. xvi. 1. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. viii. cap. 6.

I make no doubt but this is the Ramatha, or Ramathaim-zophim, the country of the prophet Samuel. 1 Sam. i. 1, 19. & ii. 11, &c. This city was on the frontiers of Ephraim and Benjamin; and frontier cities were often inhabited by both tribes. Rama, Ramath, and Ramathaim, may expreſs the ſame place. The other Ramah, or Ramula, thought to be the country of Samuel, cannot be ſo. Vide RAMAH II.

It is alſo very probable that Jeremiah ſpeaks of this Ramah, Jer. xl. 1, 2, 3. when he ſays, Nebuzaradan, who commanded the Chaldean army, having found him among the captives at Ramah, whither they had been all brought, ſet him at liberty. Of the ſame place we explain that other prophecy of Jeremiah, chap. xxxi. 15, 16, 17. wherein the Lord comforts Rachel, on account of the taking her children of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, into captivity: A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping: Rachel weeping for her children, &c. St. Matthew ii. 18. has accommodated this paſſage, to the maſſacre of the infants of Bethlehem by Herod.

II. RAMAH. Scripture often joins Ramah with Gaba, Geba, or Gibeah, as being neighbouring places. Ezra ii. 26. Nehem. vii. 30. Iſai. x. 29. Hoſea v. 8. We alſo ſee, 1 Sam. xxii. 6. that Saul, when in Gibeah, ſat under a tree at Ramah; but in this place we take Ramah only to ſignify the eminence at Gibeah.

III. RAMAH, or Ramatha, Ramola, Ramula, Ramba, Ruma, or Remphtis, a city weſt of Jeruſalem, between Lydda and Joppa, as St. Jerom, in Epitaph. Paulæ, places it; or between Joppa and Jeruſalem, as modern travellers deſcribe it. Le Bruyn, p. 251. Phocas puts it about thirty-ſix miles from Jeruſalem. Abulfeda, quoted by Reland, Palæſt. lib. iii. ſays, that this city was built by Solyman, ſon of Abdolmelic, after the deſtruction of Lydda; and Sanutus, in ſecretis fidel. crucis, ſays, that the Arabians built it near Lydda, after the Cruſadoes began in that country. M. le Bruyn deſcribes the fine reſervoirs of water to be ſeen here, and many other marks of antiquity: he ſays it is but four leagues from Jafa, or Joppa, and ſtands in a plain and even country: he ſays alſo, that Lydda is on one ſide, and about three miles from Rama.

Theſe circumſtances determine me to think that this is the place Euſebius and St. Jerom took for Arimathea, the country of Joſeph. Matt. xxvii. 57. St. Jerom places it between Lydda and Joppa: and Euſebius ſays it is in the diſtrict of Thamnis, near to Dioſpolis, otherwiſe called Lydda. This was taken from Samaria, and added to Judea: 1 Mac. xi. 34. and Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 8. But if ſo, we muſt acknowledge this city to have been very ancient, and long before our Saviour's time: conſequently, that in the time of the Cruſadoes, it was rebuilt, repaired, or fortified anew. Euſebius and ſome others ſeem to have thought, that this city is the Ramath of Samuel, or Ramathaim-zophim of the mountains of Ephraim. But this opinion cannot be ſupported. Euſeb. & Hieron. in Armathaſophim.

IV. RAMA, or Ramatha. Phocas ſays, in his Travels, that Ramah, or Armath, where Samuel was born, was about ſix miles from Jeruſalem weſt. Le Bruyn ſays, Voyage de Syrie, p. 259. that going from Ramah to Jeruſalem, he paſſed through Cobeb, Benop, Carith-leneb, Soud, Souba, and Samuel; which is a church on a hill, where, they ſay, was the city of Samuel. But this city of Samuel was north, not weſt, from Jeruſalem; in the mountains of Ephraim, and not in thoſe of Judah. See ARIMATHEA.

V. RAMA, a city of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 36. on the frontiers of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 29. St. Jerom read Horma in the Hebrew; but the Septuagint and Euſebius read Rama. The ſame Euſebius, and Cyrillus of Jeruſalem, on Zechariah, own there there was a Rama in Aſher, and another in Naphtali.

RAMATH, ראמת, raiſed, lofty. Joſh. xix. 8.

RAMATHA, רמתה, ἀραμαθαὶμ, ἀρμαθὲμ. See RAMATHAIM.

RAMATHA, and Ramathaim-zophim. See RAMA I.

RAMATHAIM, רמתים, the two Ramatha's; probably becauſe the city was divided into two parts. The city of Ramah, Samuel's birth-place, was alſo called Zophim, becauſe of a family of Levites dwelling there, who were deſcended from Zoph.

RAMATH-LEHI, רמת-לחי, ἀναίρεσις σιαγόνος, elevation of the jaw-bone; from רם ram, to lift up, and לחי lehi, or lechi, a jaw-bone. The LXX. projection of the jaw-bone; from רמה ramah, to caſt.

RAMATH-LEHI, or Ramat-lechi, the Height of the Jaw-bone, or the caſt of the Jaw-bone. The name of the place where Samſon threw the jaw-bone on the ground, with which he had beat the Philiſtines. Probably this is the Lehi, Judg. xv. 9.

RAMETH, רמת, ῥαμὲθ, lofty, ſublime. Joſh. xix. 21.

RAMESSES, or Rameſſe. Several kings of Egypt are known by this name. Syncellus reckons up ſix. Chronic. p. 101, 103.

I. RAMESSES, ſucceſſor of Uſes, who reigned twenty-nine years.

II. RAMESSE-MENES, fifteen years.

III. RAMESSE-SEOS, twenty-three years.

IV. RAMESSE-MENOS, nineteen years.

V. RAMESSE-TUBAETE, thirty-nine years.

VI. RAMESSE-VAPHRES, twenty-nine years.

All theſe princes reigned ſucceſſively; only between the ſecond and third was one called Thuſmares. Syncellus ſpeaks elſewhere of another Rameſſes, whom he places between Armais and Amenophis, kings of Egypt; and alſo of one called Rhampſis, whom he places between Kertos and Amenemes.

Manetho, apud Joſeph. cont. App. lib. i. ſpeaks of Rameſſes or Armeſſes, and of Rameſſes Miamum, predeceſſor of Amenophis. Uſher places Rameſſes, the ſucceſſor of Armais, A. M. 2426. He reigned but a year and four months; and Rameſſes Miamum ſucceeded him, A. M. 2427, and reigned ſixty-ſix years and two months. His ſucceſſor was Amenophis. Uſher thinks Rameſſes was that new king who oppreſſed the Iſraelites in Egypt, and who knew not Joſeph: Exod. i. 8. He was drowned in the Red Sea.

Marſham places this Rameſſes in the ſixteenth century of the Egyptian era; which anſwers to the reigns of Joaſh, Amaſiah, Azariah, Jothan, and Ahaz, kings of Judah. He thinks it was he who cauſed to be made the famous obeliſk mentioned by Pliny, Hermapion, and Ammianus Marcellinus, and which is before the church of the Lateran at Rome. Plin. lib. xxxvi. cap. 8. Hermap. apud Ammianum Marcel. lib. xvii. Ammian. Marcel. lib. xvii. The magnificent encomiums of this prince, inſcribed on this obeliſk in hieroglyphical characters, and the empire of the world aſcribed to him, cannot agree, according to Marſham, with any other than a ſucceſſor of Seſoſtris, whom he thinks to be much later than the time of Moſes.

Pliny ſays, lib. xxxvi. cap. 8. that Rameſſes who cauſed this great obeliſk to be made, reigned in Egypt at the time of the taking of Troy.

RAMIAH, רמיה, elevation, or ſublimity of the Lord; from רום rum, and יה jah, the Lord: otherwiſe, rejected of the Lord; from רמה to reject.

RAMIAH, or Remeia, ſon of Paroſh, a ſinger, who returned from Babylon; Ezra x. 25.

RAMLA, a city of Paleſtine, on the road from Joppa to Jeruſalem. See II. RAMAH. This city was formerly very magnificent, and ſurrounded by ſtrong walls. It is ſaid, that a houſe there, which is the ordinary reſidence of pilgrims, belonged to Nicodemus. There are ſtill remaining two fine churches, at preſent reduced to moſques; one dedicated to St. John, the other to the Holy Virgin; under the name of the forty Martyrs, whoſe bodies were brought from Sebaſte in Armenia.

RAMOTH, רמת, ῥαμὼθ, eminences, high places.

RAMOTH, a famous city in the mountains of Gilead. Often called Ramoth-gilead; ſometimes Ramoth; and ſometimes Ramath-mizpeh, or the Watch-tower. Joſh. xiii. 26. רמות המצפה. The Vulgate makes two cities of it, Ramoth and Maſphe. Joſephus calls it Ramatham, or Aramatha. This city belonged to the tribe of Gad. It was aſſigned to the Levites, and was one of the cities of refuge beyond Jordan. Deut. iv. 43. Joſh. xx. 8. and xxi. 38. It became famous during the reigns of the later kings of Iſrael, and was the occaſion of ſeveral wars between theſe princes and the kings of Damaſcus, who had conquered it, and from whom the kings of Iſrael endeavoured to regain it. 1 Kings xxii. 3, 4, &c. 2 Kings viii. 28, 29. 2 Chron. xxii. 5. Jehoram, king of Judah, was dangerouſly wounded at the ſiege of this place: and Jehu, the ſon of Nimſhi, was here anointed king of Iſrael, by a prophet ſent by Eliſha. 2 Kings ix. 1. 2, &c. Ahab, king of Iſrael, was killed in battle with the Syrians before this place. 2 Chron. xviii. 3, 4, 5, &c. Euſe- bius ſays, that Ramoth was fifteen miles from Philadelphia eaſt. St. Jerom places it in the neighbourhood of Jabok, and, conſequently, north of Philadelphia.

II. RAMOTH, ſon of Bani. Ezra x. 29.

RAPHA, רפא, relaxation: otherwiſe, phyſic. 1 Chron. vii. 25.

RAPHA, fifth ſon of Benjamin. 1 Chron. viii. 2.

II. RAPHA, or Rephaiah, ſon of Binea, of Benjamin. 1 Chron. viii. 37.

RAPHAEL, רפאל, phyſic of God; from רפא rapha, to cure, to adminiſter phyſic, and אל el, God. [qr? protector.] 1 Chron. xxvi. 7.

RAPHAEL, one of the ſeven arch-angels which are continually before the throne of God, and ready to perform his commands. The name of the angel Raphael is not found in Scripture, but only Tob. xii. 15. It is not in the New Teſtament; and, in general, the names of angels do not appear to have been known before the captivity of Babylon. Tobit the father having determined to ſend his young ſon Tobias to fetch money, from Gabael, as Tobias was ſeeking a guide to conduct him, he happily found an angel, in a human form, who offered himſelf, for a drachma a day, and his food, to conduct him ſafe to Rages, and back to Nineveh. The Vulgate makes no mention of this bargain; but the old Hebrew, Greek, and Latin texts take notice of it. The Roman drachma or denarius was about ſeven pence three farthings of our money. This guide took the name of Azarias, he ate and drank with Tobias during the journey, and did nothing that could give him any ſuſpicion of his being an angel.

They departed from Nineveh; and on the banks of the river Tigris, Tobias went to waſh his feet in the river; when a great fiſh advanced toward him, as if to devour him. But Raphael bid him to ſeize it, cut it up, and take out the heart, gall, and liver, which he was to reſerve. When near Ecbatana, Raphael ſaid to Tobias; in this city dwells one Raguel, who has an only daughter, whom you ought to marry, according to the law; for you are her neareſt kinſman, and ſhe is the only heireſs of her father. Tobias informed him, that he had heard this young woman had already had ſeven huſbands, who had all been put to death by an evil ſpirit. Raphael bid him take courage, told him, the devil could have no power over thoſe, who entered into the ſtate of matrimony in the fear of the Lord; that, beſides, he had a ſure remedy againſt evil ſpirits, in the heart of the fiſh he had about him; for he need but broil it on the fire, and they would preſently be put to flight.

They went therefore to Raguel's houſe; Tobias married Sara; and, by obſerving the direction of Raphael, was ſecured from all misfortunes. While the days of the marriage were celebrating, Tobias deſired Raphael to go to Gabael, and to receive the money. After the marriage was over, Tobias and his ſpouſe returned to his father at Nineveh. Raphael perſuaded Tobias to go before, to his father and mother, who were much grieved becauſe of his long abſence. Being arrived at Nineveh with old Tobit, who was blind, after their firſt ſalutations, Tobias, by advice of Raphael, put upon his father's eyes the gall of the fiſh he had taken; by which in half an hour's time the old man recovered his ſight.

After this, they addreſſed themſelves to Raphael, whom they ſtill took for a man, and deſired, that he would accept of half their ſubſtance, as a recompence for his great ſervices. But Raphael told them in private, that they muſt thank God the author of all their good. When you gave alms, ſaid he, and when you buried the dead, I preſented your prayers to the Lord; and becauſe you were acceptable in his eyes, he brought you into temptation in order to prove you. Now therefore the Lord has ſent me to cure you, and to deliver Sara, your ſon's wife, from the power of the devil; for I am the angel Raphael, one of the ſeven that are always before the Lord. Bleſs him therefore, and ſing his praiſes. Having ſaid this, he vaniſhed. Vide TOBIT, &c.

The name Raphael ſignifies the remedy of God, or the phyſic of God; and nothing could agree better to the part acted by the angel, than this name.

He calls himſelf Azarias, ſon of Ananias the Great; and Tobit, who knew this family, ſaid, you are of an illuſtrious race, my brother.

It has been inquired, whether in this Raphael did not tell a lye? It cannot be denied that he told an untruth, ſince certainly he was neither Azarias, nor the ſon of Ananias, nor an Iſraelite, nor a man, as he appeared to be. He ſpeaks contrary to his own thoughts, and againſt his own knowledge; he made Tobias believe what was contrary to truth. But commentators generally acquit him of lying. He was ſent of God, to conduct young Tobias, under the ſhape of a young man called Azarias; he was therefore to act and ſpeak like him, and in his name. The angels that appeared to the patriarchs, and to Moſes, ſpoke and acted as if they were God himſelf, becauſe God ſent them to repreſent his perſon. An actor who repreſents Cyrus, ſays, without lying, "I am Cyrus." Beſides, ſupernatural actions, are not ſubject to common and ordinary rules, but are of an higher order and character.

It is inquired how Raphael ate and drank? whether he did really eat and drink, or in appearance only? Some maintain that he did not drink, and Raphael ſeems expreſs for this opinion, when he ſays, it ſeemed to you that I ate and drank with you; but as for me, I am fed with inviſible food. Therefore he only ſeemed to eat, and the ſenſes of Tobias and the reſt were impoſed upon when they thought he took nouriſhment, whereas really he took none. Others pretend, that ſuch angels as have appeared to men have really eaten. Juſtin Martyr, Dialog. cum Tryphon. makes no difficulty of it, ſince in heaven the bleſſed ſpirits are fed, as he ſays, with the bread of angels, as the Scripture ſpeaks. Tertullian alſo acknowledges, that angels having appeared cloathed with natural fleſh, may alſo have eaten really and naturally. Tertul. cont. Marcion. lib. iii. cap. 9. [Vide ASMODEUS: and conſider whether, ſuppoſing the ſtory of Tobit to be founded on fact, the angels both good and bad are not figurative perſonages: whether Raphael ſignifies any thing more than the ſalutary protecting agency of divine providence, ſo diſpoſing events as to produce a happy iſſue: conſequently, no juſt inferences can be drawn from this hiſtory beyond the general notion of a ſuperintending power which employs whatever means it pleaſes to accompliſh its purpoſes; to reward piety and to puniſh profligacy: a ſentiment better illuſtrated elſewhere; in the ſacred volume.]

RAPHAIM, רפאים, giants, Deut. ii. 11. from רפה raphah: otherwiſe, phyſicians, or relaxed, or that relax, that weaken; from רפא rapha [qr? protectors.] Vide REPHAIM.

RAPHANEA, a city of Syria, between which and Arca, or Arac, a city of Judea belonging to the kingdom of Agrippa, the Sabbatical River flowed. Joſeph. de Bell. lib. vii. cap. 24. Raphanea perhaps is the Arpad of 2 Kings xviii. 34. xix. 13. Iſai. x. 9. xxxvi. 19. xxxvii. 13. Jerem. xlix. 23. See ARPAD.

RAPHIA, a famous city on the Mediterranean, between Gaza and Rhinocorura. I do not find it in the Old Teſtament, which is pretty remarkable, except it be Gath, of the Rephaim; 1 Chron. xx. 6. from whence perhaps it might be named Raphia or Rapheia. Gath could not be far from hence. Raphia is famous for the victory of Philopator, king of Egypt, over Antiochus the Great, king of Syria. 3 Macc. i. 11. Joſephus ſays, Antiq. lib. xiii. cap. 21. that Raphia was taken by Alexander Janneus, and that having been ruined in the wars, it was repaired by Gabinius. Joſephus and Polybius put Raphia as the firſt city of Syria, on the road from Egypt. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xiv, cap. 10. Joſeph. de Bello. lib. v. cap. 14. Polyb. hiſt. lib. v. Reland. Palæſt. lib. iii. p. 967. There are extant ſome ancient medals ſtruck at Raphia, and ſome biſhops of this city are found in the liſts of the eaſtern councils.

RAPHON, ῥαφὼν, phyſic, or ſuppreſſion; from רפא rapha: otherwiſe, giant; from רפה raphah: otherwiſe, ſoftneſs; from ריפון riphon.

RAPHON, a city beyond Jordan, on a brook, not far from Carnaim.

This city is hardly known, but by the victory of Judas Maccabeus over Timotheus, whoſe army was compoſed of Arabians, and what other people he could get, to the nnmber of 120,000 foot, and 2,500 horſe.

Judas had then but 6,000 effective men: Judas preſently marched to meet Timotheus, and paſſed over the brook at the head of his little army. The enemy was ſo ſurprized at this bold attempt, that they could not ſtand the aſſault, but fled with great precipitation. 1 Macc. v. 37.

RAPHU, רפוא, ῥαφὼ, cured, comforted. Numb. xiii. 9.

RAVEN, a bird of prey, in colour black: unclean by the law; Levit. xi. 15. When Noah ſent the raven out of the ark, to ſee if the waters were withdrawn from covering the earth, this bird did not return to him. Gen. viii. 6, 7.

When the prophet Elijah, by order from the Lord, retired near the brook Cherith, the Lord fed him for ſome time by means of ravens, who brought him bread and fleſh morning and evening. 1 Kings xvii. 5. את הערבים צויתי Some interpreters, inſtead of ravens, tranſlate the words Arabians, or merchants, or inhabitants of the city of Arabo, or Oreb, near to Bethſhan. Euſeb. & Hieronym. in Araba, ſeu Aravas. To ſupport theſe tranſlations it is obſerved, that the raven being an unclean bird, there is no probability that God would uſe his ſervice. Notwithſtanding, the generality of interpreters keep to the verſion of ravens. If thoſe that ſupplied Elijah with fleſh and bread had been men, why could they not alſo have ſupplied him with water, when the brook Cherith was dried up? then he need not have been forced to another retreat, with the poor widow of Sarepta. Vide FRAGMENT, No.

The raven was conſecrated to Apollo, as the god of divination. The blackneſs of the raven is proverbial. His locks are buſhy, and black as a raven. Cant. v. 11. However, white ravens are not rare in northern countries, where the ſnow lies long on the ground. The raven is long-long-lived. Pliny ſays, lib. vii. cap. 48. it lives the age of nine men; but he allows this to be a ſtory. We are aſſured, that they live ſometimes an hundred years. They feed on carrion, and eat the bodies of men hung up, or crucified:

——— Non paſces in cruce corvos, ſays Horace, Epiſt. l. 1. v. 48.

The wiſe man ſays, Prov. xxx. 17. The eye that mocketh at his father, and deſpiſeth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley ſhall pick it out, and the young eagles ſhall eat it. Zephaniah, ii. 14. ſeems to ſuggeſt, that they fed ravens at the doors of their houſes. But he rather inſinuates, that after the deſolation of the Edomites, the Moabites, and the Ammonites, the ravens [Eng. tranſl. the cormorant and the bittern] ſhall be ſeen upon their windows, and upon the doors of their ruined houſes. This bird may be taught to talk, and to imitate the human voice.

There are ſeveral kinds of ravens. Some have their bills and legs red. There is alſo a red raven, Pyrrhus corax; it is ſmaller than a crow, and about the bigneſs of a ſmall howlet. Its legs and beak are yellow, inclining towards black; and every where elſe is quite black.

The wood-raven, called by the Lorrainers, the ſea-crow, is of the bigneſs of a hen. To look on it at a diſtance, it ſeems to be black all over; but ſeen cloſe, eſpecially when the ſun ſhines on it, it appears greeniſh. Its bill is reddiſh and pretty long, its feet are very like thoſe of a hen, it feeds on worms and inſects; its legs are long and of a dark ruddy colour. It builds its neſt at the top of uninhabited towers that are going to decay.

The ſmall-raven, or night-raven, nycticorax, haunts the waters, and retires into the reeds, where in the night-time it makes a very diſagreeable noiſe, ſuch as a man when he is vomiting. It builds its neſt at the top of a tree, lays two or three eggs, and generally feeds upon fiſhes. We find in Moſes the name of a bird which is tranſlated pelican, Pſalm cii. 6. and Levit. xi. 18. which comes from a root that ſignifies to vomit, and which may be this raven. See PELICAN.

Mention is made in Scripture, of certain machines with which they demoliſhed cities, and tore up the ſtones of walls. 2 Sam. xvii. 13. Theſe machines were called ravens, [rather CROWS: as we have crows of iron] and the ancients made great uſe of them at the ſieges of cities and fortified places. Diodor. lib. xvii. Vitruv. lib. x. cap. 9. Homer Iliad. M. Vide the Plate of BATTERING RAM, and FRAGMENT, No.

RAVISH, Rapere. This word in its common ſignification imports the taking away of any thing from any one by violence. Alii rapiunt non ſua. Prov. xi. 24. It is alſo uſed for the taking away by force, (i. e. the rape of) a woman, or virgin. Sichem rapùit Dinam, & dormivit cum eâ. Gen. xxxiv. 2. And in Judges; Rapite ex iis ſinguli uxorem ſibi. Judg. xxi. 21. Saul in his anger calls Jonathan his ſon, Fili mulieris virum ultro rapientis, the ſon of a woman that raviſheth a man. 1 Sam. xx. 30. (Vulgate.)

RAZIS, ῥασὶς, ſecret; or myſtery of the Lord: or the Lord is my ſecret; from רז raz, ſecret, and יה jah, the Lord.

RAZIS, or Razias; one of the moſt conſiderable doctors at Jeruſalem, in the time of the perſecution by Antiochus Epiphanes. After the death of this prince, and of Antiochus Eupator his ſon, and under the reign of Demetrius Soter, ſon of Seleucus; 2 Macc. xiv. 37. A. M. 3843, ante A. D. 161. Alcimus, the uſurper, having bought the high-prieſthood of the Jews, of king Demetrius, was ſent into Judea, with Nicanor to ſupport him in his dignity. Razis was accuſed to Nicanor, probably as being much in the intereſt of Judas Maccabeus, and very averſe to that of Alcimus, as having no right to the high-prieſthood. Nicanor therefore ſent five hundred men to arreſt him, thinking that if he could ſucceed in bringing him over, it would make a great impreſſion on the reſt of the Jews.

When therefore Razis ſaw that the ſoldiers would break into his houſe, and put fire to it, and that he could not avoid falling into their hands; he fell upon his ſword, chooſing rather to die bravely, than to ſee himſelf in the power of wicked men, and to ſuffer indignities unbecoming his birth and quality. But in his hurry, not having wounded himſelf mortally, and ſeeing the ſoldiers enter in multitudes into his houſe, he ran to the platform of his houſe, and threw himſelf from thence into the ſtreet; yet neither did this fall entirely diſpatch him; but he drew his own bowels out of his body, and threw them with both his hands among the people, invoking the ruler of life and of the ſoul, to reſtore them again to him another day.

The Jews put Razis among their moſt illuſtrious martyrs, and pretend to prove from his example, and from thoſe of Saul and Samſon, that in certain caſes ſelf murder is not only allowed, but is laudable and meritorious. The Circonceſlians, a ſort of noted heretics of Africa, in the time of St. Auſtin, uſed the example of Razis, to juſtify themſelves in thoſe cruelties they exerciſed againſt themſelves, by throwing themſelves ſelves headlong, and putting themſelves to death in a thouſand different manners; to promote, as they pretended, the glory of God.

Nevertheleſs, St. Auſtin, Thomas Aquinas, and other caſuiſts, maintain, that the example of Razis being only related in [Apocryphal] Scripture, but not approved, nothing could be concluded from thence to juſtify the action. Is it thus the martyrs uſed to behave themſelves? true, he died bravely and heroically; but were it not better to have died humbly, patiently, and ſubmiſſively? St. Auſtin's words are; dictum eſt quod elegerit nobiliter mori. Melius vellem humiliter: ſic enim utiliter. Illis autem verbis hiſtoria gentium laudare conſuevit, ſed viros fortes hujus ſæculi, non martyres Chriſti.

REBA, or Rebe, or Reb, a prince of the Midianites, killed in the war that Moſes, by order from the Lord, waged againſt them by the hand of Phinehas, ſon of the high-prieſt Eleazar, for the puniſhment of their crime in ſeducing Iſrael. Numb. xxxi. 8.

REBEKAH, or Rebecca, daughter of Bethuel, and and wife of Iſaac. Gen. xxiv. Eliezer, the ſteward of Abraham's houſe, went to fetch a wife for Iſaac from Haram, a city of Meſopotamia, and he brought Rebecca. Rebekah lived with Iſaac twenty years, without having children: Iſaac interceded for her by his prayers; and ſhe became with child of two children; who ſtruggling together in her womb, and giving her great uneaſineſs, ſhe conſulted the Lord on this occaſion; who told her, that two nations were in her womb; and that the elder ſhould be ſubject to the younger. It is not agreed who Rebekah conſulted with: ſome will have it, that ſhe went to Shem, the ſon of Noah; others, to Melchiſedech; others, to Heber; others, to Abraham: and ſome think ſhe went to ſacrifice on mount Moria, or on the altar that Abraham had erected in the foreſt of Beer-ſheba, and that while ſhe ſlept there God revealed this to her. Petr. Comeſtr. hiſt. Scholiaſt. Diodor. & Procop. in Geneſ. Theodor. qu. 76. in Geneſ.

When Rebekah's time of delivery was come, ſhe became the mother of twins. The firſt was ruddy and hairy, and they named him Eſau. The other immediately followed, holding in his hand the heel of his brother; wherefore they called him Jacob; the Heeler. When they grew up, Eſau betook himſelf to hunting; but Jacob was a plain, unactive man, and dwelt at home in tents. Iſaac had moſt inclination for Eſau, but Jacob was the favourite of Rebekah: ſhe found means of making him obtain ſurreptitiouſly the bleſſing of his father Iſaac. See JACOB and ISAAC.

A great famine having forced Iſaac to Gerar, a city of the Philiſtines, of which Abimelech was king; when aſked, who Rebekah was? he anſwered "his ſiſter"; becauſe he feared they might put him to death, in order to poſſeſs his wife. Abimelech one day perceived him to careſs her in a manner, that better agreed with a huſband than a brother. Abimelech then ordered him to be called, and reprimanded him; and forbad any one to meddle with this man's wife, on pain of death.

Jacob, by the management of his mother Rebekah, having ſurprized his father's bleſſing, to the prejudice of his brother Eſau; Eſau threatened to be his death for it. Rebekah had notice of his deſign, and, to prevent it, adviſed Jacob to travel into Meſopotamia to his uncle Laban, and there to marry one of his daughters. She prevailed with Iſaac to conſent to this journey, inſinuating, that her life became a burden to her, on account of the daughters of Heth, whom Eſau had married; and that if Jacob ſhould alſo take a wife of this country, her life would no longer be ſupportable. Scripture makes no farther mention of Rebekah; and the year of her death is uncertain: but ſhe certainly died before Iſaac; becauſe it is ſaid, that Iſaac was put into the tomb with Rebekah his wife; which tomb was the ſame wherein Abraham and Sarah had been before buried, and where afterwards Jacob and Leah were depoſited. II. RECHAB, father of Jonadab, and of the Rechabites. It is not known in what time this Rechab Rechab lived, nor what was his original. Some will have him to proceed from the tribe of Judah. Theodoret. in 1 Paral. initio. Others think he was a prieſt, or at leaſt a Levite; Hegeſippus, apud Euſeb. lib. ii. cap. 23. hiſt. Eccleſ. becauſe it is ſaid Jeremiah, xxxv. 19. that there ſhall be always found of the deſcendants of Jonadab ſtedfaſt to the ſervice of the Lord. Some Rabbins pretend, that the Rechabites having married the daughters of the prieſts or Levites, their children were employed in the temple ſervice. Others think, that indeed they waited in the temple, but only as ſervants, like the Gibeonites and Nethinim, who were ſervants of the prieſts and Levites. Vide Joſh. ix. 27. 1 Chron. ix. 2. Ezra ii. 43, 55, 58, 70. Nehem. vii. 57, &c. We read in 1 Chron. ii. 55. that the Rechabites were originally Kenites, and that they were ſingers in the houſe of God. The Hebrew has it; porters and the obedient, that dwell under tents; theſe are thoſe that are called Kenites, who are deſcended from Hemath, chief of the houſe of Rechab.

The Kenites were not deſcended from Jacob, but from Midian, ſon of Cuſh; by Hobab, or Jethro, the father-in-law of Moſes. They entered the promiſed land with the Hebrews, and dwelt in the tribe of Judah, about the Dead-Sea. They were diſtinguiſhed from the Iſraelites by their retired ſort of life, and by their contempt of cities and houſes. Some have thought, that Hobab or Jethro was the firſt founder of the Rechabites; that Rechab was one of his names; that Jonadab, in the time of Jehu, was one of his deſcendants; that Heber the Kenite followed the cuſtoms of the Rechabites. Serrarius diſtinguiſhes the ancient Rechabites, deſcended from and inſtituted by Jethro, from the new Rechabites, of Jonadab, ſon of Rechab, who lived in the time of Jehu, king of Iſrael. Arias Montan. in Judic. i. Sanctius in Jerem. xxxv. n. 5, 6, 7. Serrar. trihæreſ. lib. iii. cap. 9. Minerval. cap. 13, 14, 15.

Scripture acquaints us, Jer. xxxv. 6, 7. that Jonadab, ſon of Rechab, who lived in the time of Jehu, king of Iſrael, laid an injunction on his poſterity, not to drink wine, not to build houſes, not to ſow grain, not to plant vineyards, to have no lands, and to dwell in tents, all their lives. Such was the inſtitution of the children of Rechab. It laid no obligation on the other Kenites, nor on the other deſcendants of Jethro. This they continued to obſerve above three hundred years; Jehu began to reign A. M. 3120, and Jehoiakim, king of Judah, was put to death A. M. 3405, ante A. D. 599. but in the laſt year of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, Nebuchadnezzar coming to beſiege Jeruſalem, the Rechabites were forced to take refuge in the city, ſtill, however, lodging in tents. During this ſiege, Jeremiah received orders from the Lord, to converſe with the diſciples of Rechab, to invite them into the temple, and to offer them wine to drink. But the Rechabites anſwered; We will drink no wine; for ſo Jonadab the ſon of Rechab our father commanded us, &c. Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, the God of Iſrael, go, and tell the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jeruſalem, will ye not receive inſtruction, to hearken unto my words? ſaith the Lord. The words of Jonadab the ſon of Rechab, that he commanded his ſons not to drink wine, are performed; yet I have ſpoken unto you, riſing early and ſpeaking, but ye hearkened not unto me. Laſtly, directing his diſcourſe to the Rechabites, he tells them; Becauſe ye have obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, Jonadab the ſon of Rechab ſhall not want a man to ſtand before me for ever.

The Rechabites were, probably, led captive, after the taking of Jeruſalem by the Chaldeans; ſince we read, in the title of Pſalm lxx. that it was ſung by the ſons of Jonadab, and by the principal captives (the title of Pſalm lxx. in the Vulgate, is, Pſalmus David, filiorum Jonadab, & priorum captivorum) which were Ezekiel and Mordecai, carried away by the Chaldeans beyond the Euphrates, after the taking of Jeruſalem under king Jehoiakim. They returned from their captivity, and ſettled in the city of Jabez beyond Jordan; as appears by 1 Chron. ii. 55. The race of the ſcribes that dwelt at Jabez, called porters, obedient, and dwelling in tents, are the Kenites, deſcended from Hemath, father of the houſe of Rechab. [Thus the author tranſlates this paſſage, which is variouſly rendered by interpreters. The Latin Vulgate has it; Cognationes quoque ſcribarum, habitantium in Jabez, canentes atque reſonantes, & in tabernaculis commorantes. Hi ſunt Cinæi, qui venerunt de calore patris domus Rechab. The Engliſh reads; and the families of the ſcribes which dwelt at Jabez; the Tirathites, the Shimeathites, and Suchathites: theſe are the Kenites that came of Hemath the father of the houſe of Rechab. The Hebrew original will admit either of theſe interpretations.] This paſſage has its difficulties: ſome think, that Jabez is not a city, but a perſon whom the Kenites acknowledged as maſter. No farther mention is made of the Kenites, in the books written after the captivity of Babylon.

Some have ſuggeſted that the Aſſideans, of the Maccabees, 1 Mac. ii. 42. & vii. 13. & 2 Macc. xiv. 6. were ſucceſſors and followers of the Rechabites.

Rechabites. Others have confounded the Rechabites with the Eſſenes. Ita ex Nilo & Suid. Serrar. trihæreſ. lib. iii. cap. 9. But certain it is, that the manner of life of the Eſſenes, which is well known, was very different from that of the Rechabites; as appears from Joſephus, Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2. e. 12. who informs us, that the Eſſenes had fields, and dwelt in houſes; but had neither wives nor children; and performed not their religious ceremonies with the other Jews at Jeruſalem: all which was contrary to the practice of the Rechabites. Hegeſippus, cited by Euſebius, lib. ii. cap. 23. relates, that as St. James was leading away to be ſtoned, a prieſt, of the race of the Rechabites, cried out to the Jews, What are you doing? The juſt man prays for you. It is certain, as we have obſerved, that the Rechabites were not prieſts: but, as they ſerved in the temple, this author might have taken them for prieſts; or he may have uſed the word prieſt in a generical ſenſe, meaning all miniſters of the Lord.

Benjaminus Tudelenſis, Itiner. p. 75, 76. ſays, that, in his travels, he ſaw a large country inhabited by the ſons of Rechab. But his whole relation hath ſo much the air of a fable, that no credit ought to be given to it.

RECHAH, Recha, or Racha. It is not known to what tribe this city belonged; or whether it was a city. See 1 Chron. iv. 12.

REDEEMER. This name is given, by way of eminence to Jeſus Chriſt the Redeemer and Saviour of the world. In the law of Moſes, Lev. xxv. 25, 47, 48. it is given to him who has the right of redemption in any inheritance, or even to a near kinſman, who may redeem it from a ſtranger, or any other Jew that had bought it. Moſes ordained, that neither eſtates in land, nor the perſons of the Hebrews, ſhould be ſold for ever; but that every one might re-enter on the poſſeſſion of his eſtate, or his liberty, in the ſabbatical year; and in the year of jubilee. But without waiting for theſe years, when any relation was rich enough, and had power to redeem the goods or liberty of his brother, the law enabled him to do it. And this it calls the right of redemption; giving alſo the name of redeemer to the relation who claimed this right. Vide Leviticus, chap. xxv. & xxvii.

We ſee an inſtance of the practice of this law, in the hiſtory of Ruth. Ruth ii. 20. & iii. 9, &c. Boaz being one of the neareſt relations of Elimelech, married Ruth the heireſs of Elimelech, and thereby re-entered into the poſſeſſion of her eſtate. Jeremiah redeemed the field of his nephew Hanameel, which was on the point of being ſold to another. Jer. xxxii. 7, 8.

He was alſo called The Redeemer of Blood [Eng. tranſl. The Revenger of Blood] Numb. xxxv. 12, 19, 21. Deut. xix. 6, 12. in Hebrew, גאל הדם Goel haddam; who had a right of taking revenge, for the blood of his murdered kinſman. To curb the reſentment of theſe avengers, or redeemers, God appointed cities of refuge throughout Iſrael. Vide FRAGMENT, No. X. p. 22.

REDEMPTION, of the firſt-born. See FIRST-BORN, or Exod. xiii. 2. 13, 29, 30. Numb. xviii. 15, 16, 17.

RED-HEIFER. The Lord ſpake unto Moſes, ſaying: "Command the children of Iſrael to bring a red-heifer, perfect and without blemiſh, which has never borne the yoke. Eleazar the highprieſt, taking it without the camp, ſhall kill it before all the people. He ſhall dip his finger in the blood of this heifer, and ſhall make aſperſions ſeven times towards the entry of the tabernacle, and ſhall burn it in the preſence of all the people, putting into the flames not only the fleſh and the hide, but alſo the blood and the excrements of the victim. Alſo, the prieſt ſhall caſt into the fire that conſumes the heifer, a bundle of cedar-wood, ſome hyſſop, and double dyed ſcarlet. Then he ſhall waſh his garments and his body, and returning into the camp, ſhall be unclean till the evening, &c. Vide Numb. xix.

Spencer, de Leg. Rit. lib. ii. cap. 15. thinks, that this ceremony was deſigned in oppoſition to the Egyptian ſuperſtitions. The Egyptians never ſacrificed cows or heifers; and the Hebrews ſeldom ſacrificed any but male animals. The Egyptians abhorred red hairs, and all animals of that colour. The Hebrews made no diſtinction in the colour of their victims, except on this occaſion. St. Jerom, Epip. 27. and others think, they ſacrificed the red-heifer yearly, and diſtributed the aſhes into the towns of Iſrael. Some rabbins maintain, that there was but one burnt from Moſes to Eſdras; and that from Eſdras to the deſtruction of the temple by the Romans, there were but ſix burnt, or nine at moſt. St. Jerom informs us, that this ceremony was always performed on the Mount of Olives, over-againſt the temple, after the ark was ſettled at Jeruſalem. The Jews ſay, that the highprieſt always offered this ſacrifice, from the firſt building of the temple.

The red-heifer offered without the camp, was a type of Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe blood purifies our conſciences from all ſin. Heb. ix. 14.

REEDS. The Vale, or Brook, of Reeds, vallis arundineti, arundineti, or the River of Kanah. Joſh. xvi. 8. & xvii. 9. נחל קנה. Was at the northern limits of the tribe of Ephraim, bordering on the tribe of Manaſſeh. The true ſituation is unknown.

REED, put into the hands of our Saviour, at his paſſion. It is thought this was a common reed or cane, given him in deriſion, inſtead of a ſceptre, as an appendage of mock-royalty.

REELAIAH, רעליה, ῥεελιας, ſurprize, or aſtoniſhment of the Lord, or the Lord that inebriates, the Lord is my drunkenneſs; from רעל rahal, aſtoniſhed, drunk, and יה jah, the Lord: otherwiſe, ſhepherd, or companion of the Lord; from רעה rahah, or roheh, according to different readings, paſtor, or companion, and the prepoſition ל l, to, and יה jah, the Lord.

REELAIAH, or Rahelaia, of the prieſts; returned to Jeruſalem with Zerubbabel. Ezr. ii. 2.

REFUGE. Cities of Refuge. To provide ſecurity for thoſe, who undeſignedly ſhould happen to kill a man, in whatever manner, the Lord commanded Moſes to appoint ſix cities of refuge, or aſyla, that whoever againſt his will ſhould have ſpilt blood, might retire thither, and have time to prepare his defence before the judges, ſo that the kinſman of the deceaſed might not purſue him thither and kill him. Exod. xx. 13. Numb. xxxv. 11, 12, 13, &c. Of theſe cities there were three on each ſide Jordan. On this ſide Jordan were Kedeſh of Naphtali, Hebron, and Shechem: beyond Jordan were Bezer, Golan, and Ramoth-Gilead. Joſh. xx. 7, 8. They ſerved not only for Hebrews, but for all ſtrangers, who might dwell in their country. The rabbins confine the name ſtrangers to proſelytes; but in this, I think, they depart from the deſign of the law. Deut. xix. 1—8. The Lord alſo commanded, that when the Hebrews ſhould multiply, and enlarge their country, they ſhould add three other cities of refuge. As this command was never fulfilled, the rabbins ſay, that the Meſſiah will accompliſh it.

Maimonides, from the traditions of the ancients, aſſures us, that all the forty-eight cities, appointed for the habitations of the prieſts and Levites, were alſo cities of refuge; and that all the difference between them was, that the ſix cities appointed by the law, were obliged to receive and lodge gratis all who ſhould fly to them; whereas the other cities might refuſe to admit ſuch as fled to them, and were not obliged to lodge them gratis. Beſides the cities of refuge, the temple, and eſpecially the altar of burnt-offerings, enjoyed the privilege of an aſylum. Philo Legat. ad Caium. The rabbins ſay, that generally the altar was only for the prieſts. Thoſe who took ſanctuary in the temple, were preſently examined by the judges; and if found guilty of murder, they were forced away even from the altar, and put to death without the temple. But if found innocent, they had a guard appointed them to conduct them ſafely to ſome city of refuge.

Theſe cities were to be of eaſy acceſs; to have good roads leading to them, and bridges whereever there was occaſion. The width of theſe roads was to be, at leaſt, thirty-two cubits, or forty-eight feet. At croſs-roads, they ſet up poſts, with inſcriptions, directing the way to the city of refuge. Every year, on the fifteenth of Adar (February) the magiſtrates of the cities inſpected the roads, to ſee that they were in good condition. The city was to be well ſupplied with water, and proviſions. It was not allowed to make any weapons there, that the relations of the deceaſed might not procure arms to gratify their revenge. Laſtly; it was neceſſary, that whoever took refuge there, ſhould underſtand a trade or calling, that he might not be chargeable. They uſed to ſend ſome prudent and moderate perſons, to meet thoſe who were purſuing their revenge for their relations, in order to diſpoſe them to clemency, and forgiveneſs, and to await the deciſion of juſtice.

Though the manſlayer had fled to the city of refuge, yet he was not thereupon exempt from the purſuit of juſtice; Numb. xxxv. 12.: an information was lodged againſt him; he was ſummoned before the judges, and the people, to prove that the murder was truly caſual, and involuntary. If found innocent, he dwelt ſafely in the city to which he had retired; if otherwiſe, he was put to death, according to the law. Scripture is not very expreſs, whether the affair was under the cognizance of the judges of the place where the murder was committed, or of the judges of the city of refuge, to which the murderer had fled; and commentators are at variance on this matter. Compare Deut. xix. 11, 12. Joſh. xx. 4, 5, 6. Numb. xxxv. 25. But it appears to us, from the paſſage of Joſhua, that the fugitive underwent two trials: firſt in the city of refuge, where the judges ſummarily examined the affair; ſecondly, in his own city, where the magiſtrates examined the cauſe more ſtrictly. If the latter judges declared him innocent, they re-conducted him under a good guard to the city of refuge.

To inſpire the greater horror, even of involuntary bloodſhed, the law puniſhed it by a kind of baniſhment; for he was obliged to dwell in this city, without going out of it, till the death of the high-prieſt: but after the high-prieſt's death, he was free to go ſafely where he pleaſed.

As to places of refuge among the Greeks and Romans, ſee ASYLUM. There was an aſylum eſtabliſhed at Athens by the Heraclidæ, in the temple of Miſericordia. Theſeus alſo built one there, in favour of ſlaves, and of the poor who ſhould fly thither, from the oppreſſion of the rich. There was one in the iſle of Calauria. The temples of Apollo at Delphos, of Juno at Samos, of Eſculapius at Delos, of Bacchus at Epheſus, and many others in Greece, had the privilege of being aſyla. Romulus gave this right to a wood adjoining to the temple of Vejovis: Virgil, Æneid. 8. v. 342. Ovid ſpeaks of a conſecrated wood near Oſtium, that enjoyed the ſame prerogative. Faſt. l. 1. St. Auſtin obſerves, de Civit. lib. i. cap. 34. that the whole city of Rome was an aſylum open to all ſtrangers. The number of theſe privileged places was grown ſo great in Greece, under the emperor Tiberius, that he was obliged to recall their licences, and to ſuppreſs them all; Sueton. in Tiberio. Tacit. Annal. lib. iii. cap. 6: but his decree was little obſerved after his death.

The right of aſylum, paſſed from the temple of Jeruſalem to the Chriſtian churches. The emperors Gratian, Valentinian, and Theodoſius the Great, condemned to baniſhment, to whipping, to the loſs of hair and beard, all who, on their own authority, ſhould take a man out of a church, who had fled thither for refuge. Cod. Juſtin. lib. ix. tit. 29. Honorius and Theodoſius the Younger ordered, that all ſuch offenders ſhould be puniſhed as if guilty of treaſon. Cod. Juſtin. lib. i. tit. 11. But afterwards they were obliged to diminiſh theſe privileges, and to exempt certain crimes from the benefit of aſylum. The emperor Juſtinian allowed, that they might take from aſylum all murderers, adulterers, raviſhers, or ſtealers of virgins. Innocent III. alſo excepts public robbers, and thoſe who ſpoil fields in the night-time. The right of aſylum ſubſiſts ſtill in Italy, and in ſome other places.

REGEM, רגם, ῥειγμα, that ſtones, or is ſtoned; from רגם ragam: otherwiſe, purple; from ארגמן argaman.

REGEM, or Regom, ſon of Jahdai. 1 Chron. ii. 47.

REGEM-MELECH, רגם-מלך, ῥογὸμ ὁ βασιλεῦς, he that ſtones the king; from רגם ragam, to ſtone, and מלך melec, a king: otherwiſe, the purple of the king, or of the council; from the Chaldean word ארגמן argaman, purple. A Mediſh word.

REGEM-MELECH, or Rogom-Melech, and Sherezer, ſent a deputation to the prieſts and prophets at Jeruſalem, to know if they were ſtill to faſt on the fifth month of the holy year, in memory of the deſtruction of the temple of Jeruſalem, which had been burnt by the Chaldeans on the tenth day of the fifth month. Zech. vii. 2, 3, 4, &c. The anſwer of Zecharich the prophet, was, that God little regarded their faſts, unleſs accompanied by juſtice and charity: but he did not anſwer directly the queſtion, concerning the faſt of the fifth month. For which reaſon they continued the obſervation of it, and ſtill continue it.

Who were Regem-Melech and Sherezer? Some think they were Babylonian proſelytes, fearing God, and officers of the king, who conformed to the religious obſervances of the Jews of their country. Ita Hebræi tempore D. Hieronym. ad Zech. vii. Theodoret conjectures they were chief of the Cuſhites in Paleſtine, or of ſome other people come into this country. Grotius, Sanctius, Menochius, think they were chiefs of the Jews dwelling at a diſtance from Jeruſalem: and indeed there is great probability that this deputation came from beyond the Euphrates. Could the Jews of Paleſtine be ignorant of what was obſerved in the country where they lived; they, who every year went up thrice to Jeruſalem?

REGENERATION, is uſed in two ſenſes, by the ſacred authors of the New Teſtament: 1ſt, for that ſpiritual birth received from grace; 2dly, for that new life we expect at the reſurrection.

By the tranſgreſſion of Adam, we are born children of wrath, according to St. Paul: Epheſ. ii. 3. To eraſe this original blemiſh, we muſt receive a new birth by grace, which may make us children of God. St. John mentions it in ſeveral places: in the beginning of his goſpel, John i. 12, 13. he ſays, that all who believe in Jeſus Chriſt, become children of God; not by the will of the fleſh, nor by the will of man, but by a new birth from God. And our Saviour, ſpeaking to Nicodemus, John iii. 3, 4, 5. ſays, Verily, verily, except a man be born again, he cannot ſee the kingdom of God. Except a man be born of water, and of the ſpirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.

The apoſtle St. Peter ſays in like manner, 1 Peter i. 3. that God has regenerated us; i. e. has given us a new birth, by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, which gives us a lively hope of an incorruptible and eternal inheritance. And St. Paul, writing to Titus, iii. 5. ſays, our Saviour has procured ſalvation for us—not by works of righteouſneſs, righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy he ſaved us by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghoſt. And St. John, 1 Epiſt. iii. 9. Whoever is born of God, doth not commit ſin; for his ſeed remaineth in him: and he cannot ſin, becauſe he is born of God. This is the new birth, or regeneration, which comes from God, and is exactly deſcribed, with its effects; which are, to preſerve us from ſin.

The ſecond acceptation of the term regeneration, reſpects a future new birth into another life, for eternity. The firſt regeneration renders us children of God, and gives us a claim to eternal life; as the inheritance of the regenerate. But the ſecond regeneration, the reſurrection, puts us in poſſeſſion of this inheritance: And Jeſus ſaid unto them, verily I ſay unto you, that ye which have followed me in the regeneration, when the ſon of man ſhall ſit in the throne of his glory, ye alſo ſhall ſit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Iſrael. Matt. xix. 28.

REHABIAH, רחביהו, breadth, or extent, or place of the Lord; from רחב rachab, breadth, &c. and יה jah, the Lord: or God is my extent, he hath ſet me at liberty.

REHABIA, Rahabia, or Rohobia, eldeſt ſon of Eliezer, and grandſon of Moſes, 1 Chron. xxiii. 17. & xxvi. 25. He and his brethren were Levites, and treaſurers of the temple.

REHOB, רחב, breadth, ſpace, or extent; from רחב rachab.

REHOB, or Rohob, father of Hadazezer, king of Syria, of Zobah. 2 Sam. viii. 3.

REHOB, a city of Aſher, Joſh. xix. 28. given for a dwelling to the Levites of the family of Gerſhom. 1 Chron. vi. 75. & Joſh. xxi. 31. This city was in Syria, on the road to Hamath, Numb. xiii. 21. & 2 Sam. x. 6, 8. and, probably, between Libanus and Antilibanus. The city of Laiſh, or Dan, was ſituate in the canton of Rehob, or, as the Hebrews call it, Rechob. Judges xviii. 28. רחב Rechob.

REHOB, an Iſraelite who returned from Babylon. Nehem. x. 11.

REHOBOAM, רחבעם, ſon of Solomon, 1 Kings xi. 43. Who ſets the people at liberty; from רחב rachab, to ſet at liberty: otherwiſe, ſpace of the people; from rachab: otherwiſe, that lets the people breathe or blow; from רוח ruach, to breathe, and עם am, the people.

REHOBOAM, or Roboam, ſon and ſucceſſor of Solomon: born of Naamah, an Ammoniteſs; 1 Kings xiv. 20, 21. He was forty-one years old when he began to reign; conſequently, he was born in the firſt year of his father's reign. Vide FRAGMENT, No. XLV. He began to reign A. M. 3029, ante A. D. 975. His father Solomon was eighteen, or nineteen, years old when Rehoboam was born. This prince reigned ſeventeen years at Jeruſalem, and died A. M. 3046, ante A. D. 958.

After the death of Solomon, Rehoboam came to Shechem, where all Iſrael was aſſembled. Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat, who had headed a ſedition againſt Solomon, and had been forced to take refuge in Egypt, when he heard of Solomon's death, returned into Judea, and was at the aſſembly of the people at Shechem. The Iſraelites would have made terms with Rehoboam, and ſaid to him, "Diminiſh the weight of your father's yoke, and we will ſerve you, as we have ſerved your father." This propoſal makes it plain, that the ſucceſſion to the kingdom was not then fully eſtabliſhed in the houſe of David. Rehoboam poſtponed his anſwer for three days. In the interim he adviſed with the ancient counſellors, of his father's council, who repreſented to him, that by an obliging anſwer, he would fix the people in his intereſt for ever. But Rehoboam choſe rather to follow the advice of his young counſellors, and anſwered the people roughly; which he had ſoon reaſon to repent of; for the multitude began to cry out, "What part have we in David? what intereſt have we in the ſon of David? To your tents, O Iſrael; David, look to your own houſe." The tribes of Judah and Benjamin continued faithful to king Rehoboam; but the other ten tribes acknowledged Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat. Whence originated the kingdom of Iſrael.

Rehoboam being come to Jeruſalem, aſſembled the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, to the number of 180,000 men, to reduce the revolted ten tribes. But the prophet Shemaiah forbad the expedition. Then Rehoboam, continuing at Jeruſalem, began to apply himſelf to the ſtrengthening of his kingdom againſt Jeroboam, he fortified and ſtored, &c. ſeveral cities; as Bethlehem, Etam, Tekoa, Beth-zur, Shoco, Adullam, Gath, Mareſhah, Ziph, Adoraim, Lachiſh, Azekah, Zorah, Aijalon, Hebron.

The number of his ſubjects was conſiderably encreaſed by the prieſts and Levites, from the cities and territories of Jeroboam, who, ſeeing that king had aboliſhed the [eſtabliſhed] worſhip of the Lord, and made prieſts for his golden calves, they withdrew into the land of Judah and Benjamin, that they might attend their functions in the temple at Jeruſalem. But Rehoboam and his people did not continue faithful to the Lord above three years. After this ſhort ſpace of time, Judah alſo did evil before the Lord, and provoked him by their wickedneſs, more than their fathers had done: and, in ſhort, they committed all the wickedneſs and abominations that had been committed by the Canaanites, whom the Lord had driven out.

Rehoboam married eighteen wives, and had ſixty concubines; by theſe he had twenty-eight ſons, and ſixty daughters. In the fifth year of Rehoboam, God ſent againſt Judah Shiſhak (or Seſac), king of Egypt, who took away all the treaſure of the houſe of the Lord, the king's treaſures, the golden bucklers made by king Solomon, and who laid waſte the whole country. 2 Chron. xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. 1 Kings xiv. 25. The prophet Shemaiah went to attend Rehoboam, and the princes of Judah that were with him in Jeruſalem, and ſaid to them from the Lord; "you have forſaken me, and I, in my turn, have forſaken you, and delivered you into the hands of Shiſhak." The princes being convinced of the juſtice of theſe reproaches, humbled themſelves; and God ſaid to Shemaiah, that he would not utterly abandon them, but only make them ſenſible of the difference, between ſerving the Lord, and being ſubject to a foreign power.

After the departure of Shiſhak, Rehoboam cauſed brazen bucklers to be made, in the room of thoſe of gold, which the king of Egypt had taken away; and when he went to the temple, his guards carried theſe brazen bucklers before him. The hiſtory of Rehoboam had been written at length, by the prophets Shemaiah and Iddo; but theſe accounts are not come to our hands; nor any particulars of thoſe conſtant wars which were between Rehoboam and Jeroboam. Rehoboam died after a reign of ſeventeen years, was buried in the city of David, and left his ſon Abijah his ſucceſſor.

Scripture ſpeaks of this prince in a manner not at all to his honour. Jeſus, the ſon of Sirach, ſays of Rehoboam, after he had ſpoke of Solomon, Ecclus. xlvii. 23. Thus reſted Solomon with his fathers, and of his ſeed he left behind him Roboam, even the fooliſhneſs of the people, and one that had no underſtanding, who turned away the people through his counſel. Abijah, the ſon of Rehoboam, ſpeaking of his father, ſays, he was an ignorant prince, unſkilled in the art of government, a weak man, and without courage. 2 Chron. xiii. 7. Vulg. Porro Roboam erat rudis, & corde pavido, nec potuit reſiſtere eis. Laſtly, Solomon ſeems to have had this ſon, his ſucceſſor, before his eyes, when he ſaid, Eccles. ii. 18, 19. Yea, I hated all my labour which I had taken under the ſun, becauſe I ſhould leave it unto the man that ſhould be after me: and who knoweth whether he ſhall be a wiſe man or a fool? Yet ſhall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have ſhewed myſelf wiſe under the ſun. This is alſo vanity.

REHOBOTH, רחבות, ſpaces, or places; from רחב rachab. Vulgate, Gen. x. 11. the places of the city, the ſignification put for the name; the Septuagint tranſlate, the city of Rehoboth, ῥώβαθ πόλις.

REHOBOTH, or Rohoboth, a river of Idumea. Saul or Shaul, a deſcendant of Eſau, who reigned in Idumea, was a native of the country bordering on the river Rehoboth. Gen. xxxvi. 37. 1 Chron. i. 48.

REHSA, ῥεσα, will; from רצה ratſah: otherwiſe, courſe; from רוץ rutz.

REHSA, or Reſa, ſon of Zorobabel, and father of Joanna. One of the anceſtors of our Saviour. Luke iii. 27.

REHUM, רחום, merciful, compaſſionate, or friendly, according to the Syriac.

REHUM, or Rheum, a Levite, ſon of Bani; he returned from Babylon with Zorobabel. Ezra ii. 2. Nehem. iii. 17. xii. 3.

REHUM the Chancellor, or Reum-beltheem. Ezra iv. 8, 9, 17, 23. See BELTHEUM.

REI, רעי, ὁι ἑταῖροί ῥησὶ, my ſhepherd, my companion, my friend; from רעה raha, or rohe, according to ſeveral readings: otherwiſe, my evil, or my breaking; from רוע rohah, and the pronoun י i, my.

REI. St. Jerom has underſtood this word, 1 Kings i. 8. as ſignifying ſome general of the troops, or chief officer of the houſe of David. Semei, & Rei, & robur exercitus David, non erat cum Adonia. The Septuagint have taken it in the ſame ſenſe. [Our Engliſh tranſlation reads, But Zadok the prieſt, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and Nathan the prophet, and Shimei, and Rei, and the mighty men which belonged to David, were not with Adonijah.] The author of the Hebrew traditions on the books of Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles, will have Shimei to be the Nebat, father to Jeroboam, and governor to Solomon; and Rei the Ira, the Jairite, a chief ruler about David, 2 Sam. xx. 26. The Hebrew may be thus tranſlated: Shimei and Rei, or Shomei and Roei may be the hearers and ſeers, i. e. the public, all Iſrael, or thoſe who acted with circumſpection, and knew the intentions of the king. Or laſtly, the prophets and their diſciples, the ſeers and their auditors. Some Greek copies read, Shimei and his companions or friends. 1 Kings i. 8. שמעי ודואי or שמעי ודעי LXX. Καὶ Σεμεῖ καὶ ῥησὶ, fortè ρεόι. Edit. Complut. & Antwerp. & Paris. Καὶ Σεμεῖ καὶ ὁι ἑταῖροι αὐτε̃.

REINS, or kidneys. The Hebrews aſcribe to the reins, or kidneys, knowledge, joy, pain, pleaſure, hence in Scripture it is ſo often ſaid, that God ſearches the heart and the reins. Elſewhere the Scripture imputes to the reins love and the fountain of generation. 1 Kings viii. 19. Filius tuus qui egredietur de renibus tuis. God upbraids the Jews with having him enough in their mouths, but not in their reins, and in their hearts. Jer. xii. 2.

In trouble and in fear the reins are diſturbed and tremble. They faint away. Defectio in cunctis renibus. Nahum ii. 10. They are relaxed, and let the water paſs from them. Dan. v. 6. Compages renum ejus ſolvebantur. Ezek. xxix. 7. Diſſolviſti omnes renes eorum. The Pſalmiſt ſays, that his reins have encouraged and excited him to praiſe the Lord. Pſalm xvi. 7. Jeremiah ſays, Lam. iii. 13. that the Lord has ſent the daughters of his quiver into his reins; i. e. he has pierced me with his arrows; he hath exhauſted his whole quiver upon me: the daughters of the quiver are a poetical expreſſion for arrows. Metaphorically it is ſaid, Deut. xxxii. 14. the fat of the reins of wheat, to ſignify the fineſt flour; the Vulgate tranſlates, medulla tritici, the marrow of wheat.

REKEM, רקם, void, or vain; from רק rac, or רקה racah: otherwiſe, painting, or embroidery of ſeveral colours: or ſhades; from רקם racam: or their ſpittle; from רקק racac, ſpittle, and the pronoun מ am, theirs.

REKEM, or Recem, a prince of Midian, ſlain by Phineas, ſon of the high-prieſt Eleazar, for the abomination of Baal-peor. Numb. xxxi. 8.

II. REKEM, ſon of Hebron, and brother of Corah. 1 Chron. ii. 43.

III. REKEM, a city of Benjamin. Joſh. xviii. 27.

IV. REKEM, otherwiſe Petra, the metropolis of Arabia Petra. See PETRA.

RELIGION. The Latin word religio, is taken in three ſenſes in Holy Scripture. Firſt, for the external and ceremonial worſhip of the Jewiſh religion. Hæc eſt religio phaſæ. Exod. xii. 43. This is the ceremony, or ſervice, of the paſſover. Quæ eſt iſta religio? What is the meaning of this ceremony, or ſervice? After the death of Haman, many embraced the religion of the Jews. Plures eorum religioni & cæremoniis jungerentur.

Secondly, for the true religion, the beſt manner of ſerving and honouring God. True religion and undefiled before God, even the Father, is to viſit the fatherleſs and widow, &c. James i. 27. St. Paul ſays, that he had lived in the ſect of the Phariſees, which was regarded as the moſt perfect of the religion of the Jews.

Thirdly, religion in Scripture, as well as in profane authors, is often put for ſuperſtition. Do not imitate thoſe who affect to humble themſelves before the angels, and to pay them a ſuperſtitious worſhip. Nemo vos ſeducat, volens in humilitate & religione angelorum, &c. Vide SUPERSTITION.

REMALIAH, רמליהו, the elevation of the Lord; from רטם ramam, elevated, and יה jah, the Lord: otherwiſe, who is rejected of the Lord; from רטה ramah, to caſt, and the prepoſition ל l, and יה jah, the Lord.

REMALIAH, or Romelia, father of Pekah, king of Iſrael. 2 Kings xv. 25.

REMEMBRANCE, or Memory. God requires, that we ſhould keep his commandments in remembrance. He tells Moſes, Exod. xvii. 14. that he will utterly put out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven; i. e. he will deſtroy him ſo entirely, that no farther mention ſhall be made of him, as a people. He ſays, Pſalm xxxiv. 16. that the face of the Lord is againſt them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth. And Pſalm ix. 6. thou haſt deſtroyed cities, their memorial is periſhed with them. On the contrary, God has promiſed to the righteous and juſt, that their memory ſhall be bleſſed, and ſhall never periſh.

REMETH, רמת, high, lofty.

REMETH, or Ramath, or Beer-remeth, or South-ramath. All theſe words ſignify the ſame place; i. e. a city of Simeon, in the ſouthern part of that tribe. Joſh. xix. 8, 21. 1 Sam. xxx. 27.

II. REMETH, a city of Iſſachar. Joſh. xix. 21. Called Ramoth, 1 Chron. vi. 73. very likely the ſame as Jerimoth, Joſh. xxi. 29. It was aſſigned to the Levites. [Jarmath. Eng. tranſl.]

REMISSION, is ſometimes taken for the year of jubilee, or the ſabbatical year, in which the ſlaves were ſet at liberty, and in which every one returned into his own inheritance. Lev. xxv. 10. Num. xxxvi. 4. Deut. xv. 1, 2, 3, &c. Remiſſion is alſo uſed for pardon of ſin. Our Saviour ſays, that John did baptize in the wilderneſs, and preach the baptiſm of repentance, for the remiſſion of ſins. Mark i. 4. Luke iii. 3. And it is ſaid, that the blood of Jeſus Chriſt was ſhed for us, to procure remiſſion of our ſins. Epheſ. i. 7. Col. i. 14. Matt. xxvi. 28, &c.

REMMON, רמון, greatneſs, elevation; from רמם ramam: otherwiſe, a granate-tree; from רמן rimmon.

REMMON, or Rimmon; this word may be taken generally for any eminence. Alſo a city in the tribe of Simeon, Joſh. xix. 7. probably that aſcribed to Judah, Joſh. xv. 32. Nehem. xi. 29. alſo called Remmus. Euſebius in Remmon, places places it ſouth of Judah, ſixteen miles from Eleutheropolis, ſouth. Several cities of Judah were yielded to Simeon. Probably this city is mentioned Zech. xiv. 10. From Geba to Rimmon, ſouth of Jeruſalem.

II. REMMON, a village fifteen miles from Jeruſalem north, Euſeb. in Remmon.

III. REMMON, Adad-Remmon, or Maximinianopolis. See ADAD-REMMON.

REMMON-METHOAR, Anthar, or Amtar. Joſh. xix. 13. Some make but one city of this, it is plain they were two. Joſh. xix. 7. See Remmon of Simeon.

REMMON-PARES, רמן־פרץ, diviſion of the granate, or the granate-tree of diviſion; from פרץ paratz, to break, to divide, and רמן rimmon, a granate.

REMPHAN, כיון, ῥεμφᾶ, an idol, according to the Septuagint. Vulgate, the ſtar of your god. Hebrew Chiun, (ſo Aquila and Symmachus read it) pedeſtal, ſupport, preparation. St. Stephen, Acts vii. 43. read Remphan.

REMPHAN, or Rephan. Amos upbraids the Hebrews with having carried, during their wanderings in the wilderneſs, the tabernacle of their Moloch, the image of their idol, and the ſtar of their god. כיון Kiun. Amos v. 26. LXX. Τὸ ἄστρον τοῦ Θεοῦ ὑμῶν Ῥαιφάν. [Eng. tranſ. But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and Chiun, your images, the ſtar of your god, which ye made to yourſelves.] Vide FRAGMENT, No. CCXIII. p. 52. Stephen, Acts vii. 43. quoting this paſſage, according to the LXX. ſays, Ye took up the tabernacle of Moloch, and the ſtar of your god Remphan. This laſt word has occaſioned many conjectures. Grotius on Amos v. thinks it to have been the ſame deity as Rimmon. The U vowel having been changed into the V conſonant, and inſtead of Remuan they have read Remvan. The LXX. read Remman inſtead of Remmon, 2 Kings, v. 18. This Remvan, according to him, is the planet Saturn. Others derive Rephan from the Hebrew word Rapha, to be negligent, ſoft, or ſlothful; becauſe Saturn is the ſloweſt or moſt ſlothful of the planets. Capellus and Hammond, on Acts vii. 43. think Remphan to be the name of a king of Egypt, who was deified by his people. Diodorus Siculus ſays, lib. i. p. 39. that king Remphis ſucceeded Proteus; but does not ſay that he had been deified; and ſpeaks of him as very unworthy of divine honours.

Louis de Dieu thinks, that Rephan is an Egyptian term, which in that language ſignified Saturn. In a Coptic alphabet ſent from Rome to Scaliger, the planet Saturn is called Rephan. The Arabic word Reph, ſignifies voracity, a quality agreeing to Saturn, who, according to the fable, devoured his own children. Voſſius, de origin. Idololat. lib. ii. cap. 23. believes Rephan, or, as Amos has it, Chiun or Chevan, was the moon. Thoſe that reject Rephan, and keep to the Hebrew of Amos, maintain, that Chiun or Chevan ſignifies Saturn. Vide Abenezra. Kimchi, Lud. de Dieu, Grot. Caſtell. Lexicon. Pokoc. fol. ult. The Arabians, Syrians, and Perſians, thus call that falſe deity. Others have thought, that Rephan, of the LXX. is a mere fault of the tranſcribers, who taking a K for a P, inſtead of ΚΕΦΑΝ have read ΡΕΦΑΝ. Druſ. Mercer. Vitringa. Livell.

REMPHTIS, a city of Paleſtine, the Rama or Ruma, near Lydda. Euſeb. in Ruma.

REPAST, or food placed on the tombs of the dead. Cœna mortui. Baruch vi. 31. mentions it in theſe words. "The Pagans howl in the preſence of their gods, as in the repaſt made for the dead." He ſpeaks of certain ſolemnities, wherein the idolaters made great lamentations: as, in the feaſts of Adonis. Repaſts for the dead, are diſtinguiſhed into two kinds: one made in the houſe of the deceaſed, at the return of the mourners from the grave. To this were invited his kindred and friends; where they did not fail to expreſs their grief by cries and lamentations. The other kind was made on the tomb of the dead, where was provided a repaſt for the wandering ſoul, and they believed that the goddeſs Trivia, who preſided over ſtreets and highways, repaired thither in the night time. But in truth the beggars and the poor, in the darkneſs of night, carried away what was left upon the tomb.

> Eſt honor & tumulis animas placare paternas,
> Parvaque in extructas munera ferre pyras.
>
> OVID. FAST.

Sometimes, however, the relations made a ſmall repaſt upon the tomb of the deceaſed. Ad ſepulchrum antiquo more ſilicernium confecimus, id eſt, περιδεῖπνον, quo pranſi diſcedentes dicimus alius alii Vale. Nonnius Marcell. ex Varrone.

The cuſtom of ſetting food on the ſepulchres of the dead, was common among the Hebrews. Tobit thus adviſes his ſon; pour out thy bread on the burial of the juſt, but give nothing to the wicked, Tob. iv. 17. And Jeſus the ſon of Sirach, Ecclus xxx. 18. affirms, that delicates poured upon a mouth ſhut up, are as meſſes of meat ſet upon a grave: utterly loſt as to any benefit! And Ecclus. vii. 33. A gift hath grace in the ſight of every man living, and for the dead detain it not.

This cuſtom was almoſt univerſal. We find it among the Greeks, the Romans, and almoſt all the Eaſt. It ſtill obtains in Syria, in Babylonia, and in China. St. Auſtin, Ep. 22, 29. obſerves, that in his time, in Africa, they laid victuals upon upon the tombs of the martyrs, and in church-yards. This at firſt was done very innocently, but afterwards it degenerated into an abuſe; and was with difficulty ſuppreſſed. St. Monica being at Milan, had a mind according to cuſtom, to offer bread and wine to the memory of the martyrs; but the porter would not open the door to her, becauſe St. Ambroſe had forbid him. Aug. Confeſſ. lib. vi. cap. 2.

The repaſt made in the houſe of the deceaſed among the Jews, was of two kinds. One was during the time of the mourning; this was conſidered as unclean, becauſe thoſe who partook of it were unclean, as having aſſiſted at the obſequies of the dead. Hoſea ſays, ix. 4. Their ſacrifices ſhall be unto them as the bread of mourners; all that eat thereof ſhall be polluted. In the form that the Iſraelites uſed, when they offered their firſt-fruits, they addreſſed God, ſaying, "O Lord, I have not neglected thy ordinances; I have not uſed theſe things while I was in mourning; nor at the funerals of the dead." God would not permit Ezekiel to mourn for his wife, Ezek. xxiv. 17. Cover not thy lips, and eat not the bread of men. And Jeremiah xvi. 7. Neither ſhall men give them the cup of conſolation, to drink for their father, or for their mother.

Other repaſts made in the time of mourning, were given after the funeral. Joſephus de Bello, lib. ii. cap. 1. relates, that Archelaus treated the whole people in a magnificent manner, after he had compleated the ſeven days mourning for the king his father. He adds, that it was the cuſtom of his nation to make great feaſts for the relations, which could not be done without injury to many families, by ſuch large expences. St. Paulina commends Pammachius, for having made a great feaſt for the poor, in the baſilicon of St. Peter, on the day of the funeral of his wife Paulina. Paulin. illuſtrat. p. 29, 30.

REPENTANCE, Pœnitentia; in Greek, Metanoia. This word is generally taken for that contrition, compunction, regret, or ſorrow which ariſes in us, after having done ſomething contrary to our duty; joined to a ſincere reſolution of avoiding the like in future. It is alſo taken for the works of penitence; faſting, weeping, alms, and works of ſatisfaction: [i. e. retribution.]

There is a falſe repentance, as that of Antiochus Epiphanes, of Judas Iſcariot, of Pharaoh, of Saul, of Ahab. Judas wanted confidence in the mercy of God, and therefore fell into deſpair. Antiochus had no ſincere contrition. Pharaoh and Saul were terrified, but not moved by a true repentance; they continued hardened, and changed neither their minds nor their manners. Ahab was indeed touched, but he wanted perſeverance in rectitude.

In Leviticus v. 5. Vulg. it is ſaid, that he that ſhall acknowledge his ſin, ſhall repent of it, and ſhall offer the ſacrifices appointed: agat pœnitentiam pro peccato, & offerat, &c. But the original ſays, that he that ſhall have ſinned, that ſhall have acknowledged his fault, and confeſſed it, ſhall offer the victims preſcribed by the law. It does not expreſsly mention repentance; but enjoins acknowledgment, and confeſſion of the fault, and then to offer the ſacrifices of expiation. This is certainly to repent of it.

Judges xxi. 6, 15. the children of Iſrael repent, and ſorrow concerning the loſs of a tribe of their brethren: i. e. they repent at having puſhed the war too far againſt that tribe. They afterwards conſider of means to repair the loſs.

Samuel ſays to Saul, 1 Sam. xv. 29. The ſtrength of Iſrael will not lye, nor repent, for he is not a man that he ſhould repent. He will not change his reſolution, as men make reſolutions, and then repent of them, and perform them not. He has paſſed his ſentence againſt you, and will not annul it.

St. Paul ſays in the ſame ſenſe, the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. God does not revoke his favours; he never forſakes us firſt: never changes his mind. Non deſerit, niſi deſeratur.

The Book of Wiſdom v. 3. repreſents the wicked in another life, as repenting and bewailing: ſeized with compunction and deſpair, at ſeeing good men in honour, while they themſelves are in trouble. We know that in another life, repentance and remorſe are uſeleſs. [Vide the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. Luke xvi .24.]

The ſame author ſays, Wiſd. xii. 10, 19. that when God ſhewed his judgments againſt the Canaanites, and chaſtiſed them by degrees, he gave them time for repentance. Partibus judicans dabat locum pœnitentia. He ſays the ſame thing ſpeaking of the Hebrews and the children of God, meaning, that the ſeverity of God againſt the elect, as well as againſt the reprobate, purpoſes to reform them, and to bring them to repent of their faults.

The ſacred writers often repreſent God as a king, moved with regret, or repentance, or relenting, for having ſuffered, or having reſolved on, certain things: ſo, Moſes ſays, Gen. vi. 6, 7. God repented that he had made man, ſeeing the wickedneſs of his actions had proceeded to ſuch extremity. So 1 Sam. xv. 11. that God repented of having made Saul king: not as if God had conceived any regret at what he had done, or that he repents of having taken a falſe ſtep, as a man does when he perceives he has committed an error. God is not capable of repentance in this ſenſe. But ſometimes he changes his conduct toward thoſe who are unfaithful to him, and after having treated them with diſregarded mercy, he corrects them with deſerved ſeverity. God is ſaid to repent of the evil he was about to inflict, when moved with compaſſion toward the miſerable, or, intreated by their prayers, or, diſarmed by their repentance, he remits the puniſhment of their ſins; and does not execute his threatenings againſt them. Thus it is ſaid, Pſal. cvi. 45. That he repented according to the multitude of his mercies, and that he cauſed his people to find favour in the eyes of thoſe, to whom he had given them up into bondage. And, Jeremiah xviii. 8. the Lord declares, that if his people repent of their evil doings, he will alſo repent of the evil which he deſigned to inflict on them: i. e. he would treat them favourably: but on the contrary, if his people would not obey his commands, he would repent of the good he intended them.

The baptiſm of repentance, is that which John the Baptiſt preached to the Jews, when he baptized them in Jordan, and exhorted them to bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, Mark i. 4. Luke iii. 3. Matth. iii. 11. His baptiſm did not remit ſins, but it prepared ſinners to receive the pardon of them from our Saviour.

The repentance of the Ninevites is celebrated even in the Goſpel, Luke xi. 32. Jeſus Chriſt tells the Jews, that the Ninevites would riſe up in judgment againſt them, becauſe they repented at the preaching of Jonah; whereas the Jews would not be converted at the preaching of Jeſus Chriſt, who was ſo far ſuperior to Jonah.

REPHAH, רפא. See Raphah.

REPHAH, or Rapha, ſon of Beriah, and grandſon of Ephraim. 1 Chron. vii. 25.

II. REPHAH, or Arapha, father of the ancient giants of Paleſtine; from whom they were called Rephaim or Raphaim. 1 Chr. xx. 4. Gen. xiv. 5.

REPHAIAH, רפיה, medicine, or freedom of the Lord, or God is my phyſic; from רפא rapha, medicine, and יה jah, the Lord.

REPHAIM, רפאים. See RAPHAIM.

REPHAIM, or Raphaim, ancient giants of Canaan. There were ſeveral families of them in this country. It is commonly thought, they deſcended from one called Rephah or Rapha; but others imagine that the word Rephaim properly ſignified giants, in the ancient language of this people. There were Rephaim beyond Jordan, at Aſhteroth Karnaim, in the time of Abraham, Gen. xiv. 5. Alſo ſome of them in the time of Moſes. Og king of Baſhan was of the poſterity of the Rephaim. In the time of Joſhua there were ſome of their deſcendants in the land of Canaan. Joſh. xii. 4. xvii. 15. Laſtly, we hear of them in David's time, in the city of Gath, 1 Chron. xx. 4, 5, 6. The giants Goliath, Sippai, Lahmi, and others, were remains of the Rephaim. Their magnitude and ſtrength are well known in Scripture. Vide GIANTS.

The Valley of the Rephaim or giants, was famous in Joſhua's time, and alſo in David's. Joſh. xv. 8. xviii. 16. 2 Sam. v. 18, 22. 1 Chron. xi. 15. xiv. 9. It is mentioned likewiſe Iſaiah xvii. 5. It is alſo called in Greek, the valley of the Titans; Vulgate, the valley of the giants, 2 Sam. xxiii. 13. Joſhua places the valley of Rephaim as one limit of the portion of Judah. It was near Jeruſalem, and it may be doubted whether it belonged to Judah or to Benjamin, becauſe of the proximity of theſe two tribes. Euſebius places it in Benjamin; but Joſhua xviii. 16. and thoſe paſſages of the books of Samuel where it is mentioned, hint that it belonged to Judah, and was ſouth or weſt of Jeruſalem.

REPHIDIM, רפידים, beds, or places of reſt; from רפד raphad.

REPHIDIM, or Raphidim, a ſtation or encampment of Iſrael in the deſart, Exod. xvii. 1. Departing from the wilderneſs of Sin, they came to Rephidim, where the people wanted water; they began therefore to murmur againſt Moſes, ſaying, Why have you brought us out of Egypt, to kill us with thirſt in this deſart? Moſes then cried to the Lord, and God returned him this anſwer; Take the people to the rock of Horeb, with the elders: I ſhall be there on the rock before you; you ſhall ſtrike it with your rod, and water ſhall guſh out, that the people may drink. This Moſes did. The place was called Temptation, becauſe of the complaints of Iſrael, who there tempted the Lord, ſaying, Is the Lord among us, or not?

Rephidim could not be far from Horeb, becauſe God ordered Moſes to go from thence to the rock of Horeb, to give the people water. And this ſame water ſerved the Iſraelites, not only in the encampment of Rephidim, and in that of Mount Sinai, but alſo in other encampments, perhaps as far as Cadeſh-barnea. St. Paul ſays, 1 Cor. x. 4. that this rock followed them in their journey; and that it was a figure, or type, of Jeſus Chriſt. For they drank of that ſpiritual rock that followed them, and that rock was Chriſt. Whether the the ſtream of water followed them, or, they followed the courſe of the water; or, they always carried off this water with them, as Ælian ſays var. hiſt. lib. xii. cap. 40. the water of Choaſpes always followed the king of Perſia, i. e. it was always carried after him, becauſe he would drink no other. Or, laſtly, whether the rock of Horeb might not be drawn upon a carriage, in the manner of a great tun always full, and always open to whoever had inclination to drink. [This hypotheſis is embraced by the Rabbins, and by ſome of the ancient fathers.]

This miracle at Rephidim happened A. M. 2513, in the ſecond month after the departure from Egypt.

At this encampment of Rephidim, Joſhua obtained a famous victory againſt the Amalekites, while Moſes lifted up his hands toward heaven, Exod. xvii. 8, 9, 10.

REPRESENTATION. The law of God forbad repreſentations of men, beaſts, ſtars, &c. formed in order to pay them worſhip; whether in relievo, or emboſſed; in painting; or ſculpture, in wood, ſtone, plaſter, copper, gold or ſilver, &c. Exod. xx. 3, 4. But the beſt interpreters notice, that this general prohibition muſt be limited agreeably to Leviticus xxvi. 1. where the ſame prohibition is repeated with the addition, ut adoretis ea: to worſhip them. We know that Moſes himſelf made cherubim, on the ark; that Solomon alſo made ſeveral cherubim in the ſanctuary; and brazen bulls to ſupport the Brazen Sea. Therefore, where there was no fear of idolatry, there God did not forbid the bare making of images or repreſentations.

The Hebrew word פסל Peſel, Exodus xx. 3, 4. Vulgate, Sculptile, i. e. a graven image, the Septuagint tranſlate by Εἰδῶλον, alias Γλύπτον, Idolum, a vain repreſentation: and Onkelos, by Zelum, an image, a picture. By this word we may underſtand all kind of figures in relief; and under the word תמונה כל LXX. Πᾶν ὁμοίωμα, omnem ſimilitudinem, (Vulgate) all kinds of repreſentations, whether in painting, embroidery, tapeſtry, enamel, engraving, &c.

REPROACH. Is uſed in two ſenſes, (1) for the diſgrace or confuſion that any one ſuffers in himſelf, (2) for that which he cauſes in another.

Among the Hebrews, to be uncircumciſed was a reproach: and when Joſhua circumciſed thoſe born in the wilderneſs, he tells them, I have rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you. Joſh. v. 9. Barrenneſs was a reproach: Rachel on the birth of a ſecond ſon, ſays, The Lord has taken away my reproach, Gen. xxx. 23. Iſaiah ſays, iv. 1. that the time ſhall come when men ſhall be ſo ſcarce in Iſrael, that ſeven women ſhall lay hold of one man, and ſhall ſay to him, "We aſk you nothing for our maintenance, only deliver us from the reproach of ſterility and a ſingle life: Take us to wives," &c. The Lord ſtruck the Philiſtines with a ſhameful malady in ano, and thereby loaded them with an eternal reproach. Pſalm lxxviii. 66.

Servitude, ſlavery, poverty, ſubjection to enemies, extraordinary diſeaſes, as the leproſy, &c. were reckoned reproaches, becauſe they were ſuppoſed to be the effect of cowardice, or idleneſs, or bad management; or to be corrections ſent from God, to puniſh injuſtice and impiety. God in many places threatens his people, to make them a reproach and a proverb; which has been fulfilled in numerous inſtances, by the ſervitudes with which they have been overwhelmed, and by the misfortunes which have happened to them. The Pſalmiſt often complains, that God had made him a reproach to thoſe who were about him; who inſulted over his misfortunes, and diſgraces.

Not to take up a reproach againſt his neighbour, Pſal. xv. 3. is not to liſten to ſlanders and calumnies brought againſt him. David took away the reproach from Iſrael, by ſlaying Goliah. 1 Sam. xvii. 26. Ecclus xlvii. 4. Jeremiah ſays, I was aſhamed, yea even confounded, becauſe I did bear the reproach of my youth. Jerem. xxxi. 19. Thou haſt brought the ſhame of my youthful faults upon me; thou haſt ſhewed me the horror of them, and haſt made me bear the pain and confuſion ariſing from them. And Iſaiah liv. 4. Thou ſhalt forget the ſhame of thy youth, and ſhalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more. He ſpeaks to the tribe of Judah, after the return from the captivity, Thou ſhalt no longer remember the reproach thou haſt ſuffered among foreign nations.

[REPROBATION, is equivalent to REJECTION: rejection always implies a cauſe—"reprobate ſilver ſhall men call them, inſomuch that the Lord hath rejected them." Jerem. vi. 30. i. e. they are baſe metal, counterfeit coin. Where ALL are equally unworthy, if SOME be preferred to honour, the reſt may be ſaid, in a ſenſe, to be reprobated, i. e. left where they were; their condition is not worſe, but it is not improved: nevertheleſs, thoſe only can be ſaid to be rejected, who have been offered, either by themſelves, or by others: God never rejects any who offer themſelves, but, thoſe who by continuing in ſin, reject the offered mercy of God, reprobate themſelves; they ſay unto God, "Depart from us, for we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways."]

REPTILES; Reptilia; Gr. Ερπετον; Heb. רמשים Ramiſim. Animals that have no feet, or ſuch ſhort ones, that they ſeem to creep, or crawl, on the ground. Serpents, worms, locuſts, caterpillars, are taken for reptiles. The Hebrews put fiſhes alſo among reptiles, [they having no feet] whatever be their nature, or ſhape, Gen. i. 21. Levit. xi. 46. Pſalm lxix. 34, &c. This name is ſometimes alſo extended to ſuch land animals, as are not of the nature of the great beaſts for ſervice, nor of the larger wild beaſts. In a word, to creep upon the earth, is ſometimes uſed for moving, or going to and fro, as all four-footed creatures do.

REPUDIATION, or divorce. The law of Moſes allowed polygamy and divorce among the Hebrews. Vide DIVORCE.

RESEN, רסן, a bridle, or bit.

RESEN, a city of Aſſyria, built by Aſſhur, between Nineveh and Calah, Gen. x. 12. on the river Chaboras in Meſopotamia: we read of a famous city called Reſine, or Reſaine. There are alſo extant medals ſtruck in this city. See Cellar. Aſiæ, lib. iii. cap. 15.

RESEPH, רצף, ῥασὲφ, bed, or extenſion, or cole, or fiery ſtone; from רצף ratzaph. 2 Kings xix. 12.

RESEPH, רשף, ῥησὰ, burning arrow; from רשף reſheph: otherwiſe, a bird, or the devil; from יערף ſaraph, a ſerpent.

RESHEPH, or Reſeph, ſon of Rephah, a grandſon of Sarah, the daughter of Ephraim, 1 Chron. vii. 25. The text ſeems to ſay, that Reſheph was the immediate ſon of Sarah.

RESPECT of perſons. God appointed, that the judges ſhould pronounce ſentence without reſpect of perſons; Lev. xix. 15. Deut. xvi. 17, 19. That they ſhould conſider neither the poor, nor the rich, the weak, nor the powerful; but ſhould attend only to truth and juſtice. God has no reſpect of perſons. And the Jews complimented our Saviour, that he told the truth, without reſpect of perſons, without fear; Matt. xxii. 16. St. Jude, ver. 16. inſtead of the phraſe, to have reſpect of perſons, uſes this, to admire perſons. Iſaiah lays it down as one diſtinguiſhing mark of the Meſſiah, that he ſhould have no reſpect of perſons, Iſai. xxxii. 25.

RESSA, a pretty famous city of Arabia Petrea: probably, the Riſſah, an encampment of Iſrael in the deſart. Joſephus de Bello, lib. i. cap. 12. mentions the caſtle of Reſſa in Idumea: and St. Jerom, in the Life of St. Hilarion, ſays, that ſaint converted the whole city of Reſſa, ſituate between Cadeſh and Gaza. Perhaps this is the Lariſſa, mentioned by William of Tyre, lib. xi. ad finem. and Ariſchi, an epiſcopal city in the deſart of the children of Iſrael. Renaudot, Liturg. Oriental. tom. i. p. 448. Guliel. Tyr. el Ariſch is a maritime city on the way to Egypt.

REST, or Repoſe. This was enjoined the Iſraelites on the Sabbath day, for the glory of God; in that he reſted after the ſix days of creation. See SABBATH.

Reſt alſo ſignifies a fixed, and ſecure habitation. You ſhall go before your brethren, until the Lord ſhall give reſt to your brethren, as well as to you, in the land which they are going to make a conqueſt of, Deut. iii. 20. And Deut. xii. 9. For ye are not as yet come to the reſt, and to the inheritance, which the Lord your God giveth you. You are not as yet ſettled in that land which you are to poſſeſs. And Naomi ſays to Ruth, my daughter, ſhall I not ſeek reſt for thee, that it may be well with thee? Ruth iii. 1. I ſhall endeavour to procure you a ſettlement. David ſpeaking of the ark of the covenant, which till his time had no fixed place of ſettlement; ſays, Ariſe, O Lord, into thy reſt, thou and the ark of thy ſtrength, Pſal. cxxxii. 8. And Eccleſiaſticus xxxvi. 15. O be merciful unto Jeruſalem, thy holy city, the place of thy reſt.

In a moral and ſpiritual ſenſe, reſt denotes the fixed and permanent ſtate of repoſe enjoyed by the bleſſed in heaven.

St. Paul makes an application of what is ſaid of the ſettlement of the Iſraelites in the Land of Promiſe, to the reſt of the ſaints in heaven. I ſware to them in my wrath, that they ſhould not enter into my reſt, i. e. into the land of Canaan, Pſal. xcv. 11. Therefore, ſays St. Paul, Heb. iii. 17, 18, 19. iv. 1, 2, 3. as they could not enter therein by reaſon of their unbelief, let us be afraid of imitating their example: for we cannot enter but by faith, &c.

RESTITUTION. Natural juſtice requires, that we ſhould repair whatever injuries we have done to our neighbour, whether in his perſon, eſtate, or reputation. The law of Moſes preſcribed, Exod. xxi. 23, 24, 25. Levit. xxiv. 20. Deut. xix. 21. life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, ſtripe for ſtripe. Alſo, that they ſhould render five oxen for one ox, and four ſheep for one ſheep: Exod. xxii. 1, 2, 3, &c. that the thief ſhould be ſold, to make reſtitution for his theft: that if he was poſſeſſed of any beaſt of ſervice, as an ox, or an aſs, or even a ſheep, he ſhould reſtore it two-fold: that whoever ſhould damage the field of another, ſhould repair the damage, according to an eſtimation. He who, by ignorance, ſhould omit to give to the temple what was appointed by the law, for example, example, in the tythes or firſt-fruits, was obliged to reſtore it to the prieſts, and to add a fifth part beſide; over-and above which, he was obliged to offer a ram, for his expiation. Nehemiah prevailed with all thoſe Iſraelites to make reſtitution, who had taken intereſt of their brethren, Nehem. v. 10, 11. I pray you let us leave off this uſury. Reſtore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houſes, alſo the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and of the oyl, that ye exact of them.

Zaccheus, Luke xix. 8. promiſes a four-fold reſtitution, to all from whom he had extorted, in his office as a publican. The Roman laws condemned to a four-fold reſtitution all who were convicted of extortion, or fraud. Zaccheus here condemns himſelf, and impoſes that penalty on himſelf: to which he adds the half of his goods; which was what the law did not require.

He who had killed a labouring beaſt, or any other beaſt, as an ox, was to render another for it, or the value of it, Lev. xxiv. 18, 21.

The Jews expected Elias, who was to reſtore all things: Mat. xvii. 11. This is an alluſion to Mal. iv. 5, 6. Behold, I will ſend you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he ſhall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, leſt I come and ſmite the earth with a curſe. Alſo St. Peter, Acts iii. 21. calls the laſt day, the day of reſtitution of all things. At the end of the world Jeſus Chriſt will unite the church with the ſynagogue, the Jew with the Chriſtian, the Chriſtian with the Gentile: then all things will be reſtored to a perfect union, and there will be but one ſhepherd and one flock.

RESURRECTION. The belief of a reſurrection from the dead, is an article of religion common to Jew and Chriſtian: it is expreſsly taught both in the Old and New Teſtament. I do not ſpeak of that miraculous reſurrection, which conſiſts in reviving for a time, to die again afterwards; as Elijah, Eliſha, Jeſus Chriſt, and his apoſtles, raiſed ſome from the dead; but I mean a general reſurrection of the dead, which will take place at the end of the world, and which will be followed by an immortality either of happineſs or of miſery. So the Pſalmiſt ſays, xvi. 10. For thou wilt not leave my ſoul in hell, (in the grave) neither wilt thou ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption. Job xix. 25, 26, 27. For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he ſhall ſtand in the latter day upon the earth. And though after my ſkin, worms deſtroy this body, yet in my fleſh I ſhall ſee God: whom I ſhall ſee for myſelf, and mine eyes ſhall behold, and not another; though my reins be conſumed within me. Ezekiel alſo, in his viſion of a great quantity of bones in a large field, which, at the breath of the Spirit of the Lord, began to unite, to be covered with fleſh, nerves, and ſkin, and at laſt to revive; has left us a proof and an aſſurance of a general reſurrection, Ezekiel xxxvii. 1, 2, 3, &c. See alſo Iſaiah xxvi. 19.

The Book of Wiſdom, chap. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. & iv. 15. ſpeaks of it in a very lively manner, that the ſouls of good men, and ſuch as ſuffer perſecution in this world, ſhall receive a recompence in the day of viſitation: for thus he calls the reſurrection. In the Maccabees we ſee the ſame truth maintained ſtill more expreſsly. One of the ſeven brethren, who ſuffered death under Antiochus Epiphanes, tells that tyrant, Thou, like a fury, takeſt us out of this preſent life; but the king of the world ſhall raiſe us up, who have died for his laws, unto everlaſting life. Their mother encouraged them, by the ſame hope of the reſurrection: and they were ſo intirely perſuaded of it, that they deſpiſed death, tortures, and all the menaces of the king, 2 Mac. vii. 9, 14, 23, 29. Heb. xi. 35.

When our Saviour appeared in Judea, the reſurrection from the dead was received as a principal article of religion, by the whole Jewiſh nation, except the Sadducees, who denied it. The Jews then tolerated them; and ſome of them held principal employments in the republic, Acts v. 17. Joſeph. Antiq. lib. xviii. cap. 2, but at this day they look on them as heretics, Epicureans, and deny them a ſhare in the life to come. Our Saviour, in his Goſpel, has effectually confuted the error of the Sadducees: he has promiſed his faithful ſervants, a complete ſtate of happineſs, after the general reſurrection. He aroſe himſelf from the dead, to give us, in his own perſon, a proof, a pledge, a pattern of our future reſurrection. St. Paul, in almoſt all his epiſtles, ſpeaks of a general reſurrection; refutes thoſe who denied or oppoſed it; proves it to thoſe who had difficulties about it; in ſome degree explains the myſtery, the manner, and ſeveral circumſtances of it: ſays, that to deny the reſurrection of the dead, is the ſame as to deny our Saviour's reſurrection: and that, if we were not to riſe again from the dead, we ſhould be of all men the moſt miſerable. 1 Cor. xv. 13, 15, 16, 17, 19.

Some Jews teach, that all men ſhall not riſe again, but only Iſraelites; but others are of opinion, that all men ſhall riſe again. Some among them maintain, that when men are once raiſed again, they ſhall be no more ſubject to death. But others think they ſhall die again, and that their ſouls alone ſhall enjoy everlaſting happineſs. See Manaſſeh-ben-Iſrael, on the Reſurrection of the Dead: book III.

Leo of Modena, in part iv. chap. xi. of The Ceremonies of the Jews, expreſſes himſelf thus: "There are Jews who think, with Pythagoras, that ſouls paſs from one body to another; this they call Gilgul, or circulation. They endeavour to ſupport their opinion from ſeveral paſſages of Scripture, taken chiefly out of Eccleſiaſtes and Job. But this notion is not univerſal; and whether it be embraced or rejected, it makes no ſchiſm, or hereſy, among them. As to the reſurrection of the dead, it is one of their thirteen articles of faith, that at the end of the world, all the dead ſhall ariſe; and that God ſhall ſummon all mankind to his general judgment, whether in or out of the body: according to that of Daniel; and many of them that ſleep in the duſt of the earth ſhall awake, ſome to everlaſting life, and ſome to ſhame and everlaſting contempt, Dan. xii. 2.

It is alſo a common opinion among the Jews, that at leaſt all the Iſraelites ſhall ariſe in the land of Iſrael, Bereſhith Rabba, ſect. 96, from hence proceeds their ardent deſire to be buried in that country. They believe, thoſe who have this advantage, will ariſe before all others, to enjoy the happineſs of ſeeing the kingdom of the Meſſiah. But then, what ſhall become of the juſt who have died and are buried out of the land of Iſrael? They anſwer, that God will open them paſſages in the earth, and ſubterraneous conveyances, through which they ſhall roll into this country; and when they are come thither, God will give them the breath of life, and they ſhall revive. They think it was for this, that Jacob and Joſeph deſired to have their bodies carried into the land of Canaan. And we read in ſome of the books of the Rabbins, that often they carried the bodies of certain Jews, of more than ordinary devotion, from very diſtant countries, to be interred in the land of Iſrael. [We have lately heard of the ſame in Britain.]

We have alſo ſeen, in the Chriſtian church, a variety of opinions concerning the reſurrection of the dead. Several of the ancient fathers acknowledged a two-fold reſurrection. Firſt, that which is to precede the Meſſiah's reign of a thouſand years upon earth. Secondly, that which is to follow the reign of a thouſand years, and to begin the reign of the ſaints in a ſtate of everlaſting happineſs. This ſentiment theſe fathers had borrowed from the Jews; it is found clear enough in the ſecond book of Eſdras, iv. 35. & vi. 18, &c. in the Teſtament of the twelve patriarchs; and in ſeveral of the Rabbins.

The ancient philoſophers who believed the immortality of the ſoul, admitted alſo of a reſurrection: whether they had received this opinion from the Eaſtern people, among whom they had travelled; or whether they inferred a reſurrection, from the immortality of the ſoul, as a neceſſary conſequence; perſuading themſelves, that a ſoul could not long continue, without being united to a body. But this reſurrection ſome explained after one manner, and others after another. Pythagoras, who firſt introduced the ſentiment of the ſoul's immortality among the Greeks, acknowledged a metempſychoſis, or a tranſmigration of the ſoul out of one body into another. Thales, apud Ariſt. 13. de Animâ, cap. 6. and Democritus, apud Theopomp. Philippic. VIII. apud. Laert. in proem. held alſo a kind of reſurrection: but the manner in which they explained it, is not known. Plato, in Politico. vide Aug. lib. xiii. de Civit. cap. 19. & lib. xxii. cap. 12. was pretty much of Pythagoras's opinion: he maintained, that ſouls which had already animated bodies, paſſed from them into a ſtate of liberty, from whence they afterwards returned to animate other bodies.

This doctrine of Plato was eſpouſed by the Phariſees among the Jews. Vide Joſeph. de Bell. Jud. lib. iii. cap. 14. & alibi. and by Philo, de Gigantib. p. 222, 223. & de Confuſ. Lingu. p. 270. It appears alſo from the Goſpel, John ix. 2. Mat. xvi. 14. that many of the Jews admitted of a kind of metempſychoſis. But we find from the Book of Wiſdom, iii. 6, 13. & iv. 15. and the Maccabees, 2 Mac. vii. 9, 14, 23, 29. that the generality of the nation held the reſurrection, much as we do now. Jeſus Chriſt, in his Goſpel, ſuppoſes this doctrine, and teaches it without any contradiction, except from the Sadducees. The apoſtles urged it likewiſe: and, notwithſtanding the attempts of ſome heretics, who oppoſed it, the Catholic church has conſtantly embraced it, as a fundamental article of Chriſtianity.

But many opinions have been tolerated in the church, concerning the time, the manner, and other circumſtances of this reſurrection. When the apoſtles aſked of Chriſt, when the end of the world ſhould happen, and his coming? He only informs them, that the laſt day will come as a thief in the night, and ſhall ſurprize mankind, when they leaſt expect it, Mark xiii. 32. Matt. xxiv. 43, 44. St. Paul ſays, 1 Theſſ. v. 2, 3, 4, that at that time many ſhall paſs from life to death, and from death to the reſurrection, with ſuch ſuch rapidity, that in the twinkling of an eye they ſhall be changed, and their bodies ſhall be inveſted with incorruptibility and immortality.

Some Greek fathers, and ſome Rabbins believe, that thoſe who ſhall then be found alive, ſhall not die, but undergo that happy change, of paſſing inſtantly from life to immortality. Vid. Chryſoſt. Theodoret. Theophylact. in 1 Cor. xv. 51. Tertull. de Reſurrect. cap. 41. Hieronym. ad Marcellam. But the opinion ſeems to be more general, that all men ſhall ſuffer the ſentence pronounced againſt the children of Adam: it is appointed for all men once to die; and after death, judgment. Heb. ix. 27.

St. Jerom aſſures us, in Matt. xxvi. 6. that the tradition of the Jews is, that the dead ſhall riſe in the night-time, or at break of day (the ſame time as Jeſus Chriſt came out of his tomb.) This tradition hath paſſed from the ſynagogue to the church, as may be ſeen by Lactantius, Inſtitut. Epitome, & lib. vii. de divin. præm. cap. 19. by St. Chryſoſtom, in Matth. xxv. and by ſuch Greek writers as generally follow him. This tradition is founded on thoſe words of St. Peter; the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, 2 Pet. iii. 10. And upon thoſe of Jeſus Chriſt, in the parable of the ten virgins; at midnight there was a cry made, behold, the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him, Matth. xxv. 6. Prudentius, hymn cathemer. thinks that the world will end, and, conſequently, the reſurrection commence, in the morning. Thomas Aquinas, Toſtatus, and Suarez, on the contrary, are of opinion, that it will be performed at mid-day. St. Paul informs us, 1 Cor. xv. 52, 53, that it will begin at the firſt ſound of the trumpet. To reconcile this variety of opinions, about a matter of more curioſity than conſequence, why may we not ſay, that the general reſurrection will happen at all theſe times at once? For in different places of the earth all theſe times muſt coincide, and muſt be, at one and the ſame time.

Thoſe, among the Jews, who admit a tranſmigration of ſouls, are perplexed about the manner of the reſurrection. For how can the ſoul re-animate all the bodies which it has inhabited? If it can animate but one of them, what muſt become of the reſt? Muſt it have its own choice, and return to that it likes beſt? Some think it muſt re-animate its firſt body; others, its laſt; and that the other bodies will remain in the duſt, as barren trees are deſerted. I ſhould rather conclude, that almoſt all who held the metempſychoſis, did not admit of a general reſurrection; and that this revolution, or ſucceſſive paſſage of the ſame ſoul through ſeveral bodies, was what they underſtood by a reſurrection. This I take to have been the notion of thoſe Phariſees mentioned by Joſephus.

It is inquired, what will be the nature of bodies when raiſed, what their ſtature, their age, their ſex? Jeſus Chriſt tells us, Matt. xxii. 30. that after the reſurrection men ſhall be as the angels of God; i. e. according to the fathers, they ſhall be immortal, incorruptible, tranſparent, light, luminous, and, in ſome ſort, ſpiritual, yet without quitting the qualities of bodies, as we find our Saviour's body, after his reſurrection, was tangible, and had fleſh and bones, Luke xxiv. 39. But Jeſus Chriſt laid aſide the brightneſs of the glory of his body, and did not ſuffer it to ſhew itſelf to his diſciples; whereas, the glorious and bright emanations from the bodies of the bleſſed, ſhall ſhine as the ſun, as our Saviour expreſſes it, Matth. xiii. 43.

Some ancient Hebrew doctors, Bereſchith Rabba, Paraſch. 95. Gemar. Sanhedrin. and Jalkut Rabati. maintain, that men ſhall riſe of the ſame ſtature, with the ſame qualities, and the ſame corporal defects they had in their life-time. That the blind ſhall ariſe blind, the lame, lame, and ſo on. They confirm this conjecture by the appearance of Samuel, to the witch of Endor, in the ſame ſhape he had upon earth; and by Eccleſiaſtes i. 4. One generation paſſeth away, and another generation cometh. Some Chriſtians in St. Auſtin's time maintained the ſame opinion, which they founded on Jeſus Chriſt's appearance after his reſurrection, with all the marks of his wounds. But the holy father hath confuted this ſentiment; and undertakes to ſhew, that if our Saviour preſerved the marks of his wounds, it was by an effect of his power, and to convince the very eyes of his diſciples. See alſo what he ſays, Enchirid. de Fide, Spe, & Charitate, cap. 9.

The reſurrection of infants is attended with great difficulties. If they are to ariſe little, weak, and ſuch as they quitted this world; of what uſe can their reſurrection be to them? And if they are to ariſe full grown, comely, in mature age, they will not be the ſame as they were, and this will not properly be a reſurrection. St. Auſtin will not venture to determine whether children will ariſe ſmall or great, but he rather inclines to that opinion, which ſuppoſes them to ariſe in a perfect age. Vide Aug. ſerm. 242. c. 3. & Epiſt. 167. nov. edit. And ſpeaking of the reſurrection of children ſtill-born, he ſays, that the reſurrection will give them all the perfection they would have had, if they had had time to grow up; and that it would ſecure them from all ſuch imperfections, as they might have have contracted had they lived longer. Enchirid. de Fide, Spe, & Charit. cap. 85, & lib. xxii. de Civit. cap. 13. Many, both ancients and moderns have thought, that men will ariſe at the age at which Jeſus Chriſt died, i. e. about the age of thirty-three or thirty-five years. So that both old and young will all appear to be about that age, to fulfil thoſe words of St. Paul; Epheſ. iv. 13. Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulneſs of Chriſt. Vide Aug. lib. xxii. de Civit. cap. 15. Hieronym. Epitaph. Paulæ, cap. 12. Anſelm. ſeu D. Thom. & Eſt. in Epheſ. iv. 13. But the more judicious explain St. Paul, as meaning the progreſs of the faithful in faith and virtue, till they arrive at Chriſtian perfection.

Many ancients, as Origen, in Matth. xxiii. 30. Hilar. & Hieron. in eund. loc. Athanat. ſerm. 3. contra Arian. Baſil. ſeu alius in Pſal. cxiv. alii apud Aug. lib. xxii. de Civit. cap. 17. doubted, whether women are to riſe in their proper ſex. They grounded their doubts on thoſe words of Jeſus Chriſt, Matt. xxii. 30. In the reſurrection they neither marry, nor are given in marriage; but are as the angels of God in heaven. And on what is ſaid by St. Paul, Rom. viii. 29. to be conformed to the image of his ſon: adding, that according to Moſes, man alone was created out of the earth, and woman was taken out of man, as an acceſſory. To this it is anſwered, that if diſtinction of ſex be unneceſſary after the reſurrection, it will be equally unneceſſary to men as to women: that woman is not leſs perfect in her kind than man; that the manner in which Eve was formed, is in ſome ſort more advantageous to the ſex, than the creation of man. He was created immediately from the earth, but ſhe from him. Laſtly, the ſex of the woman is no defect or imperfection, but an appointment of nature.

Resurrection of the ſaints, from their ſepulchres at the time of our Saviour's death; and who, after his reſurrection came into the holy city, and appeared to many, Matt. xxvii. 51, 52, 53. This ſubject deſerves a few words. The names of thoſe who aroſe on this occaſion are unknown. Some will have them to have been all the moſt ancient fathers and patriarchs: others, that they were the moſt modern ones, and ſuch as were beſt known to the Jews then living. Others, that this favour was granted only to thoſe buried at Jeruſalem, or thereabouts: [which ſeems to be the moſt probable opinion.]
